The 504 sessions were made on his fabled visit to New Orleans – where he even spent time in jail for breaking immigration laws – and finds the young cornetist sitting in with various local players. These tracks were lost for years and this is a first appearance for most of them. There's vitality and panache to the playing, with Colyer's deliberately primitive lead firmed up by the sheer force of his obsessions.

Sound quality is as bad on the other 504, two evenings' worth of music from Emile Barnes's house on La Harpe Street. Colyer plays well with some of his spiritual forebears but it's hard to hear what's going on much of the time.

The two Lake records are an important document for British jazz, if only for the musicians involved: Barber, whose subsequent disagreements with the trumpeter led him to assume command of a different edition of the band; Bilk, whose erratic clarinet had yet to acquire its distinctive glow; Sunshine, who stayed with Barber and became a star; and Donegan, who epitomized skiffle. If the music is comparatively stilted, its formal strictness pays off in a terse delivery. Vintage was mostly recorded in Copenhagen and while the sound is a bit on-and-off, the original line-up is full of energy and the leader's own brand of bravado.

 The Lost 1954 Royal Festival Hall Tapes Upbeat URCD 198 Colyer; Chris Barber (tb, b, v); Monty Sunshine (cl); Bruce Turner (as); Johnny Parker (p); Lonnie Donegan (bj, g, v); Jim Bray (b, sou); Ron Bowden (d); Bill Colyer (wbd). 4/54.

This was a significant discovery but musically it isn't that momentous, just snippets of ragtime and the first stirrings of skiffle and mainly interesting for the combination of Colyer, Barber, Sunshine and the rest before they went their separate ways. Turner sits in on 'Black And Tan Fantasy' and Parker on 'Good Morning, Blues', though one imagines the leader wasn't all that pleased.

 Captured Moments Upbeat URCD 165 Colyer, Mac Duncan (tb); Ian Wheeler (cl); Peter Hunck, Diz Disley (bj); Dick Smith, Mookie Herman (b); Stan Greig (d, p); Bill Colyer (wbd). 3/55.

 Sensation! Lake LACD 1 Colyer; Mac Duncan (tb); Ian Wheeler (cl); Ray Foxley (p); Johnny Bastable (bj); Dick Smith, Ron Ward (b); Stan Greig, Colin Bowden (d). 4/55–5/59.

 Marching Back To New Orleans Lake LACD 21 As above, except add Sunny Murray, Bob Wallis (t), Mick Clift (tb), Dave Keir (as), Derek Easton (ts), Maurice Benn (tba), Neil Millet, Stan Greig (d). 4/55–9/57.

(*) The Classic Years: Volumes 1 & 2 Upbeat URCD 186 / 189 As for Sensation!, except omit Smith, Greig. 5/57.

 Up Jumped The Devil Upbeat URCD 114 As above, except add Ray Foxley (p). 57–58.

 The Famous Manchester Free Trade Hall Concert 1957 504 CD51/2 As above, except add George Lewis (cl). 4/57.

 Serenading Auntie Upbeat URCD 111 As above, except add Graham Stewart (tb); Sammy Rimington (cl); Dick Smith (b); Bill Colyer (wbd). 6/55–8/60.

Colyer worked hard at his subject and as the '50s progressed his music became a genre unto itself. The most useful reissues include Lonesome Road, Marching Back and Sensation!, effectively an alternative live version of Colyer Plays Standards, although much of the material – 'Underneath the Bamboo Tree' and 'Bluebells Goodbye' – would hardly be classed as standards in most band-books. The Sensation! date also yielded the first seven tracks on Marching, but the latter also includes the entire date by the Omega Brass Band, with Colyer trying his hand at an 'authentic' New Orleans parade band: shambling, stentorian, it's a bizarre sound and surprisingly close to the real thing. Typically, Colyer refused to pick obvious tunes and chose instead 'Isle Of Capri', 'Tiger Rag' and 'Gettysburg March', which occasionally rise in a near-hysterical crescendo. Sensation! collects various single and EP tracks, including four from the sought-after They All Played Ragtime EP, which in some ways was Colyer's most distinctive achievement, with such rarities as 'Kinklets' (played by Bunk Johnson at his final session), 'Fig Leaf Rag' and what might be the first jazz version of 'The Entertainer', many years before Joshua Rifkin and The Sting. This is an ensemble music. Colyer was a reluctant soloist, and though Wheeler and Duncan are lively, they struggle a bit when left on their own. Colyer's steady but unflashy lead, and the four-square but oddly hypnotic beat of the rhythm section (using a banjo to the end), still manage to add their own character.

Captured Moments is mostly from an NDR radio broadcast and benefits from the clear, if slightly thin, sound. All of Colyer's lugubrious announcements are left intact (he also patronized what was even then a knowledgeable crowd). There are five further tracks from a Düsseldorf bar. The Classic Years includes a set from Eel Pie Island, and the band sound is better on home turf. Mostly familiar material, but this was a purple patch and the playing is consistently good.

Up Jumped The Devil documents various live sessions at Studio 51. This was one of the best Colyer bands, and though the sound is rather muffled, their hard-won vitality breaks through to surprising effect. They manage to sustain 'Milneburg Joys' for chorus after chorus and, as sometimes happens in this kind of jazz, the sheer determination of the music becomes hypnotic. The concert tour with Lewis was another legendary moment, and 504's documentation of their Manchester show, spread across two CDs, reeks of authenticity. The enthusiasm of the audience is infectious and Lewis himself responds with his best form, even on chestnuts he'd played countless times.

Serenading Auntie splices together material from five different BBC dates (radio and TV) over a five-year period. Some of the music seems a bit thin, as if they were cutting tunes short, but on the ragtime material particularly the spirit abides and there is one of Colyer's most wistful vocals on 'In The Evening'. One session drifts off-station but the rest is all right.

CORE COLLECTION

(*) Club Session With Colyer

Lake LACD 6 Colyer; Mac Duncan (tb); Ian Wheeler (cl); Johnny Bastable (bj); Ron Ward (b); Colin Bowden (d). 10–11/56.

The essential Colyer record and certainly his most famous single album, this live set from the Railway Hotel, West Hampstead (rather than Studio 51), catches the band at its most persuasive. The playing isn't noticeably superior to other dates – consistency was the man's long suit, after all – but in its balance of blues, gospel and standards, its driving rhythms and clipped solos, it is as close to perfect as Colyer would get at a recording.

(*) Colyer Plays Standards Lake LACD 144 As above, except add Ray Foxley (p). 8/58.

 In The Sweet Bye And Bye Upbeat URCD 167 As above. 8/58.

 Live At The 51 Club – 1960 Dine-A-Mite DJCD 003 As above, except omit Duncan, Wheeler; add Graham Stewart (tb); Sammy Rimington (cl). 7/60.

Call it Studio 51 or 51 Club, Colyer's Great Newport Street residency is one of the things that inscribed him in trad history, and these further survivals from their numberless nights there will delight Colyer collectors; the less committed may wonder what all the fuss is about. The Plays Standards set documents the great Colyer line-up. Foxley's arrival may have compromised the purism, but he's a terrific improviser and steadies the ensembles as well. The earlier group is probably the best ever, but the brasher, lippier sound of the 1960 set may appeal more to some, with the 18-year-old Rimington already in hot form. Even if sound quality isn't great, all these are packed with atmosphere.

(*) This Is The Blues Lake LACD 188 Colyer; Graham Stewart, Geoff Cole (tb); Sammy Rimington (cl); Little Brother Montgomery (p, v); Johnny Bastable (bj); Ron Ward (b); Colin Bowden, Pete Ridge (d). 12/60–11/61.

(*) This Is Jazz: Volumes 1 & 2 Lake LACD 201 2CD As above, except add Mac Duncan (tb); Ian Wheeler (cl); Ray Foxley (p). 9/59–11/61.

A Dennis Preston production, the all-blues programme has been handsomely remastered and makes a strong claim on even Colyer sceptics. A new line-up was finding its feet and Rimington's tone needed oiling, but the music is played with fine dedication and everything sounds unexpectedly fresh. A bonus track features an overawed Colyer in duet with Little Brother Montgomery on 'Buddy Bolden's Blues'. The other set completes the reissue of Colyer's Lansdowne recordings, bringing together both LPs and some single and EP tracks; so both front lines in one package.

(*) Colyer's Pleasure Lake LACD 34 Colyer; Geoff Cole (tb); Sammy Rimington (cl); Johnny Bastable (bj); Ron Ward (b); Pete Ridge (d). 62–63.

 Memories: The Allan Gilmour Tapes Lake LACD 256 As above. 63.

 The Real Ken Colyer Cadillac SGC 77 As above, except add Pat Hawes (p, v). 2/64.

 On Tour GHB BCD 16 As above, except omit Ward, Ridge; add Bill Cole (b); Brian Hetherington (d). 65.

 Out Of Nowhere Lake LACD 101 As above, except add Richard Simmons (p). 4/66.

The band never sounded better than on Colyer's Pleasure, with the leader and Rimington loud and clear on an excellent set-list; 'Dardanella' is a classic performance. The original LP (once issued on the old budget label Society) is augmented by five previously unissued acetates by the same band.

The important-sounding Allan Gilmour Tapes were also made in a pub back, at the Dancing Slipper in Nottingham, and are of good amateur quality. The set-list is absolutely as you'd expect – 'Kinklets', 'Milneburg Blues', 'When I Leave The World Behind' – and played with rowdy dexterity by the band. On Tour finds them with a new rhythm section in front of a small but keen audience in Malmö. A more interesting programme here – 'Minstrel Man', 'Hilarity Rag', 'Swipesy Cakewalk', 'Ghost Soldier' – and the band sound in fine shape, although Hetherington's drumming is on the brash side. Another surviving amateur tape: Colyer's fans have always been a diligent crowd.

Out Of Nowhere reissues an obscure 1966 LP, with six previously unissued tracks, recorded in an empty pub in Chadwell Heath. The one stand-out is 'Darkness On The Delta', which gets a rock-steady treatment. Not a bad one. The Real was once issued on Doug Dobell's 77 label, but now has seven extra tracks. Rimington's in top gear.

 Boston Church Service GHB BCD 351 Colyer; Barry Palser (tb); Sammy Rimington (cl); Ray Smith (p); Pete Morcom (bj); Alan Jones (b); Colin Bowden (d). 6/72.

 Very Very Live At The 100 Club Upbeat URCD 130 Colyer; Keith Avison (tb); Sammy Rimington (cl); Ron Weatherburn (p); John Griffith (bj); Annie Hawkins (b); Colin Bowden (d). 6/72.

(*) A Boston Concert Upbeat URCD 167 Colyer; Barry Palser (tb); Sammy Rimington (cl, as); Ray Smith (p); Pete Morcom (bj); Alan Jones (b); Colin Bowden (d). 6/72.

 Once More For Auntie Upbeat URCD 137 Colyer; Sonny Morris (t); Len Baldwin (tb); John Wurr, Gerry Turnham, Monty Sunshine (cl); John R. T. Davies (as, bs, tb); Ray Smith, Pat Hawes (p); Stu Morrison, Bill Stotesbury, Ben Marshall (bj); Mickey Ashman, Arthur Bird, Julian Davis (b); Colin Bowden, Paul Rosenberg (d). 8/72–3/75.

 Won't You Come Along With Me Ken Colyer Trust KCT5CD Colyer; Dale Vickers (tb); Chris Blount (cl); Pete Trevor (p); John Bly, Dave Brennan (bj); Harry Slater (b); Mike Ellis (d). 10/73–12/77.

Colyer disbanded his regular group in 1971, partly owing to illness, and these are mementoes of the motley situations he found himself in after that. Ironically, once he started downsizing his gig diary, the tapers came out in force, as if anxious to catch every last moment. Boston Church Service (Lincolnshire, not Massachusetts) is one of the most interesting latter-day discs; the band play mostly sacred tunes and they are blessed by an unexpectedly fine concert sound. Colyer played with Blount's pro-am group many times in the early to mid-'70s and Won't You Come Along With Me is a collection of scraps from various surviving live tapes. Much of the playing is pretty shambolic but there are some queerly affecting moments, such as Ken's wistful singing on 'Basin Street Blues' and the East Midlands atmosphere which seems to permeate tracks cut in Derby, Ilkeston and Fadler Gate pubs. The 100 Club date has plenty of atmosphere and Colyer and Rimington play soundly, but Avison's grotesque trombone doesn't help and the sound is pretty scruffy. Urgent Request is from a date in Derby where Ken sat in with Blount's band; it goes off well enough, if unmemorably.

Mike Pointon must be pulling our legs when he claims in the Boston Concert notes that Colyer's music 'is as controversial today … as it ever was during his lifetime'. That aside, the band were in good spirits at the Montmartre Club, although Rimington and the rhythm section carry most of it.

The main interest of the further BBC sessions comes in the five titles by the re-formed (for the occasion) Crane River Jazz Band, featuring Colyer and Morris as a two-horn front line, Sunshine, Davies, Hawes and the rest. Unfortunately, this comes in the poorest sound of the three sessions for some reason, but their assault on King Oliver's 'Wa Wa Wa' (a bit modern for Ken!) has plenty of go in it. The two earlier dates are more routine, although the material suggests how big Ken's book had grown over the years.

 Ken Colyer In Holland Music Mecca 1032 Colyer; Cor Fabrie (tb); Butch Thompson (cl); Jos Koster (bj); Ad van Beerendonk (b); Emiel Leybaert (d). 11/76.

This teams Colyer with the long-established Storyville Jazzband, who sound rather better than he does; much of his trumpet-playing of this period gets by on irascibility alone.

(*) Jazz At The Strathallen Raymer Sound RSCD778 Colyer; Len Baldwin (tb); Gerry Turnham (cl); Ray Smith (p); Bill Stotesbury (bj); Arthur Bird (b); Paul Rosenberg (d). 1/78.

 Winter Wonderland GHB BCD 435 Colyer; Dave Vickers (tb); Chris Blount (cl); Ray Smith (p); Dave Brennan (bj); Harry Slater (b); Paul Rosenberg (d). 12/79.

And still they keep coming. The Strathallen line-up wasn't all that good, with some decrepit-sounding trombone from Baldwin, but the music's cheerful enough and there's an interesting choice of material in Sam Morgan's 'Short Dress Gal'. Winter Wonderland has better playing all round, although some tunes do ramble on – the title-song goes over the ten-minute mark and for some reason Colyer sings the entire lyric twice over.

 Blame It On The Blues /  Wrap Your Troubles In Dreams Azure AZ CD 33 / 34 Colyer; Jean-François Bonnel (cl); Paul Sealey (bj, g); Ken Ames (b). 1/85.
* Too Busy CMJ 008 Colyer; Les Hanscombe (tb); Dave Bailey (cl); Tim Phillips (bj); Keith Donald (b); John Petters (d). 2/85.
() Together Again Lake LACD 53 Colyer; Les Hanscombe (tb); Acker Bilk (cl); Pat Hawes (p); Brian Mitchell (bj); Julian Davies (b); Pete Lay (d). 7/85.

Colyer's last recordings are a mix of sad decline and a reflective, almost introspective approach, as he adapted his music to his circumstances. There's no better example than Blame It On The Blues, a gentle, airy quartet working patiently through ten favourites at London's Pizza Express. Bonnel is deferential and the sound is lovely. Wrap Your Troubles In Dreams is a second helping from the same occasion; just as good. Colyer's playing on the closing 'Trouble In Mind' is about as emotional as he ever allowed it to get, a poignant valediction.

Too Busy is missable, a gingerly sit-in with the Petters group. They play fine, but Ken is unexceptional. He's also, alas, the weak link on Together Again, a surprise reunion with Bilk at Pizza Express. Hawes has a bad time with the awful 'old' PE piano and Colyer's leads are shaky; the stars are for Acker, returning to some heartland repertoire and proving himself one of our best jazzmen.

In the end, and for all the devoted work of the Colyer Trust and a legacy band, the musical legacy speaks for itself: raw, obdurate, rearguardish, a triumph of stamina over style, but strangely impressive for all that.

Also, in brief:

 Just About As Good As It Gets Smith & Co 1141 2CD. 50–56.
Excellent coverage of early material.

 In Germany 1955: Captured Moments Upbeat 165. 55.
Jazz and skiffle from previously unissued NDR broadcasts.

* The Decca Skiffle Sessions Lake LACD 07. 6/54–11/57.
A heartfelt but bizarre collection with machine-like guitar-playing and only redeemed by Alexis Korner's blues playing.

() When I Leave The World Behind Lake LACD 19. 3/63.
A great version of J. C. Higginbotham's 'Give Me Your Telephone Number', but if only the rest were up to that standard.

() Wandering Lake LACD 68. 7/65.
Enigmatic skiffle. Hard to rate.

 Live At The York Art Centre Upbeat 210. 72.
Another recently rediscovered tape.

() More Of Ken Colyer And His Hand-Picked Jazzmen Ken Colyer Trust KCT3CD. 1/72.
... plus many other reissues and compilations on Lake, Upbeat and others.

Company

IMPROVISATION

Organized in London by Derek Bailey from 1977 to the mid-'90s: a pool of improvisers working in ad hoc repertory over a week.

(*) Company 5 Incus CD 41 Derek Bailey (g); Wadada Leo Smith (t, f); Anthony Braxton (ss, as, f, cl); Evan Parker (ss, ts); Tristan Honsinger (clo); Maarten Altena (b). 5/77.

 Company 6 & 7 Incus CD 07 As above, except add Lol Coxhill (ss); Steve Beresford (p, g). 5/77.

 Epiphany Incus CD 42/43 Bailey; Ursula Oppens, Keith Tippett (p); Fred Frith (g, elec); Phil Wachsmann (vn, elec); Anne Le Baron (hp); Moto Yoshizawa (b); Akio Suzuki (perc, glass hca). 6/7/82.

 Once Incus CD04 Bailey; Lee Konitz (as, ss); Richard Teitelbaum (ky); Carlos Zingaro (vn); Tristan Honsinger (clo); Barre Phillips (b); Steve Noble (perc, bugle). 5/87.

 Company 91 Incus CD 16 / 17 / 18 Bailey; Yves Robert (tb); John Zorn (as); Buckethead (g); Alexander Balanescu (vn); Paul Rogers (b); Paul Lovens (perc); Pat Thomas (elec, ky); Vanessa Mackness (v). 91.

 Company In Marseille Incus CD 44/45 2CD Bailey; Rhodri Davies (hp); Mark Wastell (clo); Simon H. Fell (b); Will Gaines (tap dancing). 97.

What is remarkable about the above records (and the vanished LPs taped at other Company events) is how compellingly listenable they remain long after the occasion of their performance is past. The music is, of course, difficult to categorize and, given that the context is not just an existential one but very various in personnel, almost completely resistant to generalization.

The 1977 event was interesting in that it helped underline differences of philosophy between visiting American musicians, whose background still seemed to be jazz, and Europeans, who seemed to have transcended or set aside any last vestiges of bebop language; Braxton in particular sounds awkward, though both Lacy and, much later in Company's history, Konitz managed to assimilate their dry approaches to Bailey's unswerving philosophy of freedom. As so often at these events, it is the smaller and least obvious combinations that stick in the mind; Honsinger's duo with Smith (who of all the Americans sounds most comfortable and challenged) is a tiny masterpiece on 6 & 7.

In 1982, Bailey had begun to feel that some of Company's conceptual arteries were already hardening, and he assembled musicians some of whom had never improvised before. It was a typically fascinating event, but the surviving discs feel a little dry and time-locked. Once restores a degree of delight and danger, with Konitz demonstrating a wry mastery and subtle humour as well as formidable improvising skills. The 1991 gathering is remembered with special clarity and affection and amply merits such full coverage. As always, the line-up included players not usually associated with free music; it begins, appropriately, with the classically trained Mackness and violinist Balanescu, who having got the remaining starch out of his instrument simply goes for it; his duo with Bailey on the second disc is equally good. One of the oddities of the year was the inclusion of heavy-metal guitarist Buckethead; the trio on volume 2 which features him with Zorn and Thomas was one of the high-points of the week, though the chemistry didn't work quite so well when the guitarist joined Balanescu and Rogers at the end of the same disc. Generally speaking, musical relationships are expected to evolve over time; here, on the evidence of the Friday and Saturday record, they seem to have unravelled – a lower rating for it, though as a package the fourth star is thoroughly merited.

The Marseille set is often very quiet (an approach favoured by Davies and Wastell) but has the incongruous bonus of Gaines, a favourite duo partner of Bailey's. It's not bad, though by this stage Bailey had wearied of the concept. There is presumably much more material in his archive, but no sign as yet of it, or any of the LPs, being (re)issued.

Eddie Condon (1905–73)

GUITAR

Born in Indiana, he became the quintessential Chicago jazzman despite spending little time there and being virtually inaudible on many of his own records. Ringleader of a gang of young white players in the '20s, he arrived in NY in 1928 and hustled his way to prominence, forming famous associations with the Commodore label, Nick's club and eventually his own place on West Third Street.

[illegible]

 Eddie Condon 1927–1938
Classics 742 Condon; Jimmy McPartland, Bobby Hackett (c); Max Kaminsky, Leonard Davis (t); George Brunies, Floyd O'Brien, Jack Teagarden (tb); Mezz Mezzrow, Frank Teschemacher, Pee Wee Russell (cl); Bud Freeman, Happy Caldwell (ts); Alex Hill, Jess Stacy, Joe Sullivan (p); Jim Lannigan, Artie Bernstein, Artie Shapiro, Art Miller (b); George Wettling, Gene Krupa, Johnny Powell, George Stafford, Big Sid Catlett (d). 12/27–4/38.

Condon was the focus of Chicago jazz from the '20s to the '40s, garnering a personal reputation that far exceeds his actual musical significance. He is now best seen as a catalyst, a man who made things happen and in the process significantly heightened the profile of Dixieland jazz in America. He was rarely anything other than a straightforward rhythm guitarist, generally avoiding solos, but he had a clear sense of role and frequently laid out to give the piano-player more room. His chords have a melancholy ring but are always played dead centre.

The Classics discs offer an overview of a career that didn't get seriously under way on record until the '40s. The five '20s dates here are key staging-posts in the evolution of Chicago jazz, starting with the four classic titles cut by the McKenzie–Condon Chicagoans in 1927, in which McPartland and the ill-fated Teschemacher made up a superbly vibrant front line. Two 1928 sessions feature top-notch early Teagarden, and the 1933 band date includes the original versions of Freeman's famous turn on 'The Eel'. It then goes quiet until the first sessions for Commodore in 1938, the start of another classic Condon era.

 Eddie Condon 1938–1940 Classics 759 As above, except omit McPartland, Davis, O'Brien, Teschemacher, Caldwell, Hill, Lannigan, Bernstein, Miller, Krupa, Powell, Stafford, Catlett; add Muggsy Spanier (c); Marty Marsala (t); Miff Mole, Vernon Brown (tb); Brad Gowans (vtb); Joe Bushkin, Fats Waller (p); Clyde Newcombe (b); Lionel Hampton, Dave Tough (d). 4/38–11/40.

(*) Eddie Condon 1942–1943 Classics 772 As above, except omit Spanier, Marsala, Mole, Brown, Waller, Newcombe, Hackett, Hampton, Tough, Teagarden; add Yank Lawson (t); Benny Morton (tb); Gene Schroeder (p); Al Morgan, Bob Casey (b); Tony Sbarbaro (d). 1/42 – 12/43.

(*) Eddie Condon 1944–1946 Classics 1033 Condon; Bobby Hackett, Wild Bill Davison (c), Hot Lips Page (t, v); Sterling Bose, Billy Butterfield, Max Kaminsky, Yank Lawson (t); Lou McGarity, Miff Mole, Jack Teagarden, Fred Ohms (tb); Brad Gowans (vtb); Pee Wee Russell, Edmond Hall, Tony Parenti (cl); Joe Dixon (cl, bs); Bud Freeman (ts); Ernie Caceres (bs); Gene Schroeder, Joe Bushkin, Jess Stacy, James P. Johnson (p); Bob Casey, Bob Haggart, Sid Weiss, Jack Lesberg (b); Dave Tough, Joe Grauso, George Wettling, Johnny Blowers (d); Lee Wiley, Bubbles Sublett (v). 3/44–7/46.

Here are most of the Condon stalwarts playing to three-minute 78 r.p.m. length, tucking small, gem-like solos into otherwise powerhouse ensembles – the rhythm sections are always good – and making all the choruses count. They may have had dubious reputations off the stand – the leader was said to have achieved perfect equilibrium: half-man, half-alcohol – but Condon's men were disciplined about their kind of jazz. Classics 1033 features three V-Disc titles (Page sings 'Uncle Sam's Blues' on one of them), but the sessions otherwise originate from Decca. The mysterious Bubbles Sublett sings on 'Atlanta Blues' (which is misnumbered on the sleeve).

The Commodore dates take up most of the next two Classics CDs. Relaxed but smart, graceful and hot at the same time, Condon's various bands made eloquent jazz out of what were rapidly becoming Dixieland warhorses. The four-part version of 'A Good Man Is Hard To Find' from 1940 is a little masterpiece, but almost anything from these sessions has its memorable moments, and players like Kaminsky, Brunies and Bushkin never found a better working context. Commodore's own sound quality could vary from session to session and that's compounded here.

(*) The Town Hall Concerts: Volumes 1–11 Jazzology JCD 1001/2–1021/23: all 2CD; Volume 11 3CD As above, except add Wingy Manone (t); Bill Harris, Tommy Dorsey, Vernon Brown (tb); Jimmy Dorsey, Hank D'Amico (cl); Sidney Bechet (ss); Willie 'The Lion' Smith, Norma Teagarden, Cliff Jackson (p); Johnny Williams (b); Joe Grauso, Cozy Cole, Rolo Layon, Danny Alvin (d); Red McKenzie, Harry 'The Hipster' Gibson (v). 6/44–4/45.

Condon's Town Hall concerts became a radio institution during the last two years of the war and this superb edition (discs all available separately) puts together all 46 of them. Each of these packages contains four half-hour shows, compered with genial bonhomie and irascibility by Condon himself. He credits every player, sets the beat up for every number, kids around at the expense of most of the others (but especially the benighted Pee Wee Russell) and makes sure that proper standards of Dixieland are maintained at all times. Choosing among the discs is difficult, since all are patchy, all troubled by uneven sound, and each falls back on routine rather than inspiration here and there. The general standard remains impressively high, though, despite the showbiz feel. The second volume has a tribute to Waller, the third to Bix. If Russell is consistently the star player, there are also precious glimpses of men who would seldom make much more music in the studios: Spanier, Mole, Marsala, Manone. Volume 7, which features Jack and Norma Teagarden as guest stars, is a very good one and perhaps the best to sample. Volume 10 brings in regular guest Sidney Bechet, who usually gets a feature to himself; it also has the coup of both Dorsey brothers on one record. Volume 11 is extended to take in two try-out shows for Chesterfield sponsorship which ultimately never happened.

 Eddie Condon 1947–1950 Classics 1177 Condon; Wild Bill Davison (c); Bobby Hackett, Max Kaminsky, Yank Lawson, Johnny Windhurst (t); Jack Teagarden, Cutty Cutshall (tb, v); Will Bradley (tb); Dick Cary (ahn); Peanuts Hucko (cl, ts); Pee Wee Russell, Edmond Hall (cl); Ernie Caceres (bs); Gene Schroeder (p, cel); Joe Bushkin, Ralph Sutton (p); Jack Lesberg, Bill Goodall (b); George Wettling, Johnny Blowers, Big Sid Catlett, Buzzy Drootin (d); Jimmy Atkins, Peggy Ann Ellis (v). 8/47–10/50.

There's a single date for Atlantic, made in 1949, but otherwise these were all made for Decca. The first six tracks feature Teagarden vocals and range from the feeble 'Tulip Time In Holland' to a great here's-the-band routine 'We Called It Music'. Any gathering of Condon tracks is going to offer a striking variety of styles, even within his own conventions, and here there's the ferocious Davison, the elegant Hackett and the contrasting clarinet styles of Russell, Hucko and Hall. There are rag features for Sutton (on what sounds like a tack piano), Atkins sings the rarely heard lyrics to both 'At The Jazz Band Ball' and 'Jazz Me Blues' and Peggy Ann Ellis croons 'Black Bottom'. Some of the later pieces have a more commercial bent, and sound like Dixieland routine, but it remains an engaging set. Some hiss on the Atlantics.

 Dr. Jazz: Volume 1 – Eddie Condon With Johnny Windhurst Storyville STCD 6041 Johnny Windhurst (t); Cutty Cutshall (tb); Edmond Hall (cl); Gene Schroeder (p); Bob Casey, Bill Goodall (b); Cliff Leeman, Buzzy Drootin, Monk Herbert (d). 1–6/52.

 Dr. Jazz: Volume 8 – Eddie Condon With Johnny Windhurst No. 2 Storyville STCD 6048 As above, except omit Goodall, Herbert; add Condon. 1–5/52.

 Dr. Jazz: Volume 5 – Eddie Condon With Wild Bill Davison Storyville STCD 6045 As above, except omit Windhurst; add Wild Bill Davison (c); Ralph Sutton (p); Bill Goodall (b); Don Lamond, George Wettling (d). 12/51–3/52.

Radio broadcasts from Eddie's club; the sound is occasionally scruffy, but decent enough. The main point of the first two discs is to hear the seldom-recorded Windhurst, whose blend of Armstrong and Hackett gave his playing a lovely dancing quality that still manages to power a front line. Obvious material, but worth a listen; as is the disc with Davison, though given his ubiquitous discography, this scarcely goes down as essential. Eddie doesn't play on the first, but turns up here and there on the others.

(*) Jam Session Coast-To-Coast / Jammin' At Condon's Collectables COL 7526 Condon; Wild Bill Davison (c); Billy Butterfield (t); Cutty Cutshall, Lou McGarity (tb); Dick Cary (ahn); Ed Hall, Peanuts Hucko (cl); Bud Freeman (ts); Gene Schroeder (p); Walter Page, Al Hall (b); Cliff Leeman (d). 11/53–7/54.

 Bixieland / Treasury Of Jazz Collectables COL 7517 As above, except omit McGarity; add Bobby Hackett (c); Pee Wee Russell (cl); George Wettling (d). 4/55–1/56.

Condon kept on into the LP era. The classic here is Bixieland, a rare example of a Condon concept album. The cornet role is shared between Davison and Hackett, and both acquit themselves admirably, in part because they see no need to imitate Bix on tunes associated with him. The Treasury sessions bring Russell back into the fold, and he is outstanding on 'Three-Two-One Blues' in clean sound, making this a Condon classic.

The other pair isn't far behind. Jam Session is nicely informal, but the band are on their toes. Jammin' doubles the normal size of the group, with twice as many horns, and 'How Come You Do Me Like You Do' comes in at 13 minutes. Great stuff, and all indefinably Condonian in spirit.

Also, in brief:

 Chicago Style ASV AJA 5192. 27–40.

Straightforward survey of early years in good sound.

() The Alternative Takes: Volume 1 – 1929–40 / ... Volume 2 – 1940–1944 Neatwork 104 / 113. 29–40, 40–44.

Inevitably, given Condon's resistance to soloing, there isn't much variation in his playing, but there is interesting material here for serious students.

() Eddie Condon In Japan Chiaroscuro CRD 154. 50s.

Poorly balanced and makeshift but with Buck Clayton (t), Vic Dickenson (ts), Bud Freeman (ts) and Pee Wee Russell (cl) all on board.

 Eddie Condon 1951–1953 Classics 1354. 12/51–11/53.

Mostly from the Savoy Ringside At Condon's, which tried to re-create a night at the club, complete with dubbed-in applause.

 Midnight In Moscow / The Roaring Twenties Collectables COL 7517. 6/57, 1/62.

Good stuff with Wild Bill Davison (t), Vic Dickenson (tb) and Bob Wilber (cl) on the first of these, but the second is a curious travelogue; not very Condonian at all.

Conference Call

GROUP

A proper working band, whose recorded legacy is grievously underrated.

 Final Answer Soul Note 121391 Gebhard Ullman (reeds); Michael Jefry Stevens (p); Joe Fonda (b); Matt Wilson (d). 5/00.

 Variations On A Master Plan Leo CDLR 371 As above, except omit Wilson; add Han Bennink (d). 3/01.

 Spirals: The Berlin Concert 482 Music 1028 As above, except omit Bennink; add George Schuller (d). 3/03.

This is that rather anomalous thing, an avant-garde supergroup, but one that has shown considerable fertility and adventure. Though Ullmann's richly nuanced reed-lines are perhaps the most prominent component, it is the polystylistic piano-playing of Stevens that is the group's mainstay. On the debut disc, his two compositions (the others all have writing credits, too) are the most important tracks and also the most indicative of group strengths; 'Liquid Cage' and 'Could This Be A Polka?' both derive largely from his intensely rhythmic and harmonically probing structures. Fonda's 'You're There, I Am Here' is more open-ended, while Wilson's writing on the reprised 'Final Answer' is perhaps the closest to orthodox jazz language.

Variations is a live set and the most satisfying disc of the three. The actual variations at the heart of it are based on Debussy. There's a tiny fragment of Nino Rota, and a lovely, but all too brief 'Song For My Mother', which takes Stevens's strong but non-obvious Horace (Song For My Father) influence and creates a tiny masterpiece from it. Bennink is more capricious than Wilson, but he also breaks up still further the old front line/rhythm distinction so is ideally suited to this situation. Ullmann plays magnificently on it and elsewhere, his tenor sound rich but bracing, his bass clarinet on the Debussy more 'proper' but still evocative.

Spirals is almost as good, but one gets a sense that the individual members are more insistent on being treated as such this time rather than as members of a collective. 'Dreierlei' returns from the first record, but not as good. There's a break for an attack on the Iraq war and new drummer Schuller (generously represented as a writer) doesn't really impress on his solo spots.

Chris Connor (born 1929)

VOICE

Born in Kansas, she started out with Claude Thornhill, then joined Stan Kenton in 1952, thereafter working as a soloist, quietly in the '60s and '70s, more prominently again in the '80s.

(*) Her Complete Bethlehem Recordings Fresh Sound FSRCD 454 2CD Connor; Sy Oliver Orchestra; Ellis Larkins Trio; Vinnie Burke Quartet; Ralph Sharon Quintet. 12/53–4/55.
Four early LPs on two CDs and immaculate singing from the Kenton discovery. 'Try A Little Tenderness' with Larkins, 'Lush Life' with Burke (both disc one) and 'Blame It On My Youth' with Sharon (disc two) are outstanding, but the tall, blonde singer couldn't put a foot wrong and on almost every cut she stamps a firmly romantic authority. Crisp accompaniment suits her. Without a big band, the emphasis falls on the lyric and it sounds as if she means every word.

[illegible]

* Chris Connor
Atlantic 7567 80769 Connor; Nick Travis (t); Sam Marowitz, Ray Beckenstein (as); Zoot Sims (ts); Danny Bank (bs); John Lewis, Moe Wechsler (p); Barry Galbraith (g); Oscar Pettiford, Milt Hinton (b); Connie Kay, Osie Johnson (d). 1–2/56.
The cool vocalist par excellence, and Connor's records for Bethlehem and Atlantic showcased the ex-Kenton singer in a way that led to some definitive interpretations: here 'Ev'ry Time', 'It's All Right With Me', 'I Wonder What Became Of Me' and several more are unlikely to be bettered. She has remained something of a cult figure, beatified by Ran Blake and other musicians, but in her prime she sold records to a wide audience and several of her Atlantics were considerable hits; this was revived as part of the label's 50th-anniversary programme. Four tracks with the quartet of Lewis, Galbraith, Pettiford and Kay (who should have been recorded on their own as well) are a marvel, as is 'When The Wind Was Green'. Her open vowel sounds have an oddly yearning quality, which is heightened by the way she can sing low notes very softly, yet make them emphatic.

(*) Chris Connor / He Loves Me, He Loves Me Not Collectables COL 6239 As above, except add Ralph Burns Orchestra. 56.
This couples the first two Atlantics in an attractive pairing, though the stereo mix is rather glaring on the first disc and there seems to be an unwonted amount of echo on some tracks. For some unexplained reason, they also leave off two tracks from the debut (including the sublime 'When The Wind Was Green') and substitute two alternatives. Still, it's good to have all of the fine He Loves Me in one place, with its outstanding versions of 'Angel Eyes' and 'About The Blues'.

(*) I Miss You So / Witchcraft Collectables Col 6814 Connor; orchestras led by Ray Ellis, Richard Wess. 7/56–9/59.
Connor cut a third LP in 1956, mostly ballads and mostly given an MOR treatment, although the singing remains superbly involving. Witchcraft is in more of a high-stepping vein, courtesy of Richard Wess's bouncy charts, but there are some very good songs, which Connor does well: 'Baltimore Oriole', 'Like A Woman' and an excellent 'Lady Sings The Blues'.

* Sings The George Gershwin Almanac Of Song Atlantic 2-601 2CD Connor; Joe Newman, Doc Severinsen (t); Eddie Bert, Jimmy Cleveland, Jim Thompson, Warren Covington (tb); Sam Most, Peanuts Hucko (cl); Herbie Mann (f); Eddie Wasserman, Al Cohn (ts); Danny Bank (bs); Ralph Sharon, Stan Free, Hank Jones (p); Barry Galbraith, Joe Puma, Mundell Lowe (g); Milt Jackson (vib); Wendell Marshall, Milt Hinton, Oscar Pettiford, Vinnie Burke (b); Osie Johnson, Ed Shaughnessy, Ronnie Free (d); Johnny Rodriguez (perc). 7/57.

(*) Chris Craft Atlantic 81227 65942 Connor; Bobby Jaspar (f); Al Epstein (cor, bcl); Stan Free (p); Mundell Lowe (g); Percy Heath, George Duvivier (b); Ed Shaughnessy (d). 58.
Connor's Gershwin collection is almost as comprehensive as Ella's, in the company of seven different instrumental groups. Trifles such as 'Bla Bla Bla' or 'I Can't Be Bothered Now' are graced with thoughtful readings, the swingers dispatched unhurriedly, the ballads lingered over; despite the size of the project, there's no sense of routine. A much-neglected record, Chris Craft is, in comparison, a much slighter record, with perfunctory small-group charts by Free, though some of these interpretations are classic Connor: hard to think of superior versions of 'Moonlight In Vermont' (where she handles the key change exquisitely) and 'Here Lies Love'.

 Two's Company Roulette 37201 Connor; Maynard Ferguson, Chet Ferretti, Rolf Ericson, Bill Berry (t); Ray Winslow, Kenny Rupp (tb); Lanny Morgan (as, f); Joe Farrell (ts, ss, cl); Willie Maiden (ts); Frank Hittner (bs); Jaki Byard (p); John Neves (b); Rufus Jones (d). 61.
One of two records Connor made with the Maynard Ferguson orchestra. There are haunting versions of Alec Wilder's 'Where Do You Go' and 'The Wind', but some of the swingers go off the scale in the Ferguson manner, and 'Guess Who I Saw Today' belongs to Nancy Wilson.

(*) 'S Wonderful Blue Moon BMCD 3074 Connor; Ronnie Ball, Dick Johnson (p); Mundell Lowe (g); Richard Davis, Don Prell (b); Ed Shaughnessy, Paul Togava (d). 63.
Authentic, lived-in, smart and subtly ironic, Connor's singing of the period had lost some of the ironic dimensions of her earlier, supposedly cooler work. Here, like her model Anita O'Day, she inhabits the songs – including 'Ten Cents A Dance', 'I Concentrate On You' and a gloriously not-sure ''S Wonderful' with absolute assurance. Terrific jazz singing by any measure.

 Sweet And Swinging Audiophile 208 Connor; Jerry Dodgion (as, f); Mike Abene (b); Michael Moore (b); Ronnie Bedford (d). 1 & 2/78.
Chris hadn't made a jazz record in a decade and a half when this came out on Progressive. It's a strongly conceived set, with a couple of tiny tracks – 'Things Are Swingin'' and 'The Sweetest Sounds' – dropped in among the more-developed numbers to show just how much Chris could pack into the smallest space and with no show of effort. It may not be her greatest effort but 'Where Flamingos Fly' and 'I Wish You Love' are bold conceptions and the band, Abene especially, are highly responsive to her.

 The London Connection Audiophile 246 Connor; Alan Barnes (as); Duncan Lamont (ts); Robert Kaye (p); Spike Heatley (b); Terry Jenkins (d). 9/90.
Barnes and Lamont aren't quite Konitz and Marsh but they manage to turn down the heat enough to make this one sing in Chris's familiar cool ambience. The material is straightforward standards fare, the band sound comfortable with their charts and Connor sings with an untroubled authority that doesn't either disguise or play up her years.

 Everything I Love High Note HCD 7108 Connor; Joe Magnarelli (t); Andy Snitzer (sax); David Matthews (p); Roger Blanc (g); Chip Jackson (b); Terry Silverlight (d). 4/02.
The best of the latter-day records (see below), though not by much, this has a mature, smoky, faintly chastened quality that roughens up the cool singing of earlier years and adds a touch of humour and untroubled authority. 'Sentimental Journey' and a retread of 'Baltimore Oriole' are the key performances.

Also, in brief:

 A Portrait Of Chris Collectors Choice 236. 12/60–1/61.
A nicely rounded collection of songs that help to redefine cool jazz singing.

 At The Village Gate Roulette 8142. 63.
With Mundell Lowe (g), Ronnie Ball (p), Richard Davis (b); Ed Shaughnessy (d). Lovely.

 Haunted Heart / (*) I Walk With Music High Note HCD 7079 / 7095. 3/01; 5/02.
A new century, sympathetic arrangements from Michael Abene (p) and nice work from Ingrid Jensen (t); the first is an eerie record when the pace is appropriately slow, edgy when it gets faster, the second a shakier edifice altogether.

Contemporary Bebop Quintet

GROUP

Emerged out of Christer Boustedt's group when that fine saxophonist died in 1986. Sparsely recorded since, but an impressive touring record includes an emotional return home for South African-born drummer Matthews.

 Circles & Triplets / (*) Acceptance Dragon DRCD 230 / 299 Bosse Broberg (t); Stefan Isaksson (sax); Åke Johansson (p); Ivar Lindell (b); Gilbert Matthews (d). 1/89; 7/96.
The band name – often shortened to the more gnomic CBQ – might lead you to suspect a nostalgia-fuelled outfit cranking out endless Bird'n'Diz impressions. In reality, CBQ play their own brand of contemporary bebop, with much of the writing down to blind pianist Johansson, who's relatively undiscovered outside Sweden but a gentle giant at home. Some of his lines, like 'Waiting', which closes Circles & Triplets, sound as if they might have been lifted from some forgotten Prestige session of the '50s, but the horns have a markedly individual accent, almost folkish in some registers, and the rhythm section takes a strong flavouring from Matthews's tight but flexible percussion. Isaksson writes strongly as well and there are a couple of Monk tunes in the middle of the set just to clarify the lineage.

Acceptance isn't as strong a record, though the rating above is on the niggardly side in order to steer you to the first one, which is worth an hour of anyone's time.

Contemporary Jazz Quartet / Quintet

GROUP

Forward-looking Scandinavian outfit who smartly recruited one of the giants of the '60s new wave.

(*) Action Action Steeplechase SCCD 36029/30 2CD Hugh Steinmetz (t); Franz Beckerlee (as); Niels Harrit (ts); Steffen Andersen (b); Bo Thrige Andersen, Sunny Murray (d). 64, 67.
Two long out-of-print Debut LPs. Like a lot of the more experimental Scandinavian stuff of the time, there's perhaps too much freedom and insufficient foundation in the basic languages of blues and swing, but, to be fair, Murray doesn't bring as much of those distinctively American values as you might expect. He's splashy and in places quite haphazard on the earlier quartet set, though his playing on 'Action (i)' is exceptional. Steinmetz was the driving force musically, but these are all gifted players and it's fascinating to hear music as adventurous as this coming out of Copenhagen.

Convergence

GROUP

Denver-based outfit, who've been getting together since 1991.

 Hometown / (*) Modern Man Capri 74052 / 74061 Greg Gisbert (t); Mark Patterson (tb on Modern Man only); John Gunther (ss, ts, cl); Eric Gunnison (p); Mark Simon (b); Paul Romaine (d). 2/02.
Convergence had been around for a decade before the first of these was recorded, so the group sound is already well attested, with Gunther more than holding his own against the more widely travelled Gisbert. The idiom is attractive post-bop, with a few more obviously contemporary adventures. The second record is superior in that Patterson, also a good writer ('Harmony Peace' and 'Thad's All'), seems to round out the harmonic picture nicely. Gisbert's 'Modern Man' and Gunnison's 'Tynerisms' complete a sense that the group are trying to create a miniaturized history of recent jazz from the (admittedly elevated) purview of Denver. It just about works.

Junior Cook (1934–92)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Florida-born, he started out with Dizzy Gillespie; joined Horace Silver in 1958 and stayed with front-line partner Blue Mitchell until 1969. Now undervalued.

 The Place To Be Steeplechase SCCD 31240 Cook; Mickey Tucker (p); Wayne Dockery (b); Leroy Williams (d). 11/88.
 On A Misty Night Steeplechase SCCD 31266 As above, except omit Dockery; add Walter Booker (b). 6/89.
 You Leave Me Breathless Steeplechase SCCD 31304 Cook; Valery Ponomarev (t); Mickey Tucker (p); John Webber (b); Joe Farnsworth (d). 12/91.
Cook's recorded work revealed a tenorman of staunch loyalty to the hard-bop language and, though he never quite broke through to the front rank, he left many inventive solos on record. As a leader, he was less successful, and these are all that remain.

After years of underachieving, he found a berth at Steeplechase, where a comfortable house sound and familiar menus have made plenty of disenfranchised musicians feel at home. Cook's records for the company worked out rather well, though none enjoys classic status. If dependability was his strong suit, he nevertheless manages to find enough ear-catching ideas to give his up-tempo workouts an edge of involvement which grants even something as simple as 'Cedar's Blues', on The Place To Be, a tough credibility. His powers were already in decline to some extent, but that tends to lend such a professional player a further challenge: how does he deal with it? Cook's answer seems to be to shy away from over-familiar material and to turn to more timbral variation than he would have bothered with as a younger man. On A Misty Night is marked by a considered choice of themes – 'By Myself', 'Make The Girl Love Me', 'My Sweet Pumpkin' – and the leader's thoughts on the title-tune, once associated with Coltrane, stake his place in the grand tenor lineage.

You Leave Me Breathless was his last date, made a few months before his death, and though there is some rambling – a few solos have one chorus too many – Cook's playing has a candid, clear-eyed quality. Ponomarev is rather ordinary, but all three discs are greatly assisted by the sympathetic and often driving presence of Tucker.

Jackie Coon

FLUGELHORN, VOICE

The Nebraskan's a rare traditionalist exponent of the bigger horn.

 Back In His Own Backyard Arbors ARCD 19109 Coon; Rick Fay (ss, ts, cl); Johnny Varro (p); Eddie Erickson (g, bj); David Stone (b); Gene Estes (d). 2/91.
 Jazzin' With Jackie Arbors ARCD 19110 Coon; Rick Fay (ss, ts, cl); Johnny Varro (p); Eddie Erickson (g, bjo, v); David Stone (b); Gene Estes (d). 2/92.

* The Joys Of New Orleans Arbors ARCD 19119 Coon; Tom Gekler (tb, v); Rick Fay (ts, cl); Bob Molinelli (p, perc); John Loupe (b); Matt Perrine (sous); Richard Taylor (d); others. 2/93.

 Softly Arbors ARCD 19162 Coon; John Allred, Dan Barrett (tb); Rick Fay (ts); Johnny Varro (p); Bob Haggart (b); Ed Metz Jr (d). 11/95.
Amiable Dixieland from a player whose characteristic sound is an improbable halfway house between Ruby Braff and Chuck Mangione; some have suggested Bobby Hackett as a more realistic ancestor. The first date is as fresh as a Nebraska spring: decent, uncomplicated mainstream-with-heart. The band on Jazzin' brims with personality, and not least the outsize personality of 'Fast' Eddie Erickson (aka 'The Singing Moustache'), a California stalwart. It's a lovely programme: 'When I Grow Too Old To Dream', 'Me And My Shadow' and 'The White Cliffs of Dover' conjure up a more innocent world.

Coon likes to keep the dynamics refreshingly soft, which the third disc makes explicit, and sometimes too much so: it's all just too sun-kissed for tetchiness. Allred's guest spots stir things up a bit. Rick Fay, who passed away after these sessions, is consistently a revelation. There's a slightly more modern feel to the album, and hints of Miles on 'Autumn Leaves' and 'You Took Advantage Of Me', but for the most part this is easygoing entertainment, inauthentic as hell, but hard to dislike.

We are normally as incorruptible as Robespierre when it comes to assigning stars, but when it comes to the middle record, unreleased until 2005, we can make an exception. Proceeds go towards relief for musicians who lost their livelihoods in the wake of Hurricane Katrina, which laid waste to much of the cradle of jazz. It's pretty typical stuff, with the addition of a marching band. 'Joe Avery's Place' gets an interesting treatment and 'Jambalaya' (with the full marching complement) tastes like cajun food, or fusion-cajun food given Coon's cool approach.

Bob Cooper (1925–93)

TENOR SAXOPHONE, OBOE

One of the major West Coast saxophonists of the '50s, he played with Stan Kenton (and married Kenton singer June Christy), and worked with Shorty Rogers, Howard Rumsey and Bud Shank. A consummate professional.

 Group Activity Fresh Sound FSRCD 2239 Cooper; Stu Williamson (t, vtb); Bob Enevoldsen (vtb, ts, bcl); John Graas (frhn); Bud Shank (as, ts, bs); Jimmy Giuffre (cl, ts, bs); Claude Williamson (p); Howard Roberts (g); Joe Mondragon, Curtis Counce, Max Bennett (b); Shelly Manne (d). 54 OR 55.
 Coop! The Music Of Bob Cooper Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 161 Cooper; Conte Candoli, Pete Candoli, Don Fagerquist (t); Frank Rosolino, John Halliburton (tb); Lou Levy (p); Victor Feldman (vib); Max Bennett (b); Mel Lewis (d). 8/57.
Because he spent most of his career in sections and as arranger, Cooper's light is dimmer than that of most West Coast players of his day. His flute and oboe sessions with Bud Shank are out of print, the early stuff on Fresh Sound is more interesting for the other horns involved, but Coop!, made for Contemporary, displays a light, appealing tenor style and arrangements which match rather than surpass Coastal conventions.

 For All We Know Fresh Sound FSRCD 167 Cooper; Lou Levy (p); Monty Budwig (b); Ralph Penland (d). 8/90.
 The Bob Cooper–Conte Candoli Quintet VSOP 93 Cooper; Conte Candoli (t); Ross Tompkins (p); John Leitham (b); Paul Kreibich (d). 6/93.
Cooper made sporadic returns to the studio in the '90s but remained a guileful player, his tone deceptively languid; when the tempo picks up, his mastery asserts itself and he gets the same kind of even-handed swing as Zoot or Al. The wistful For All We Know is an honest studio farewell; typically thoughtful preparation by Cooper and Levy, on good and unhackneyed standards and with quartet arrangements that make the most of the various combinations of players. Coop worked until he died, and the VSOP live album was done just weeks before his passing, recorded at Newport Beach and a vigorous set of old pro's bebop, longish solos for all hands, and good humour and skill throughout.

Also, in brief:

 Milano Blues Fresh Sound FSRCD 179. 3–4/57.
Two European dates, from Italy and Holland. Bob sounds over-relaxed on the former. A couple of inconsequential oboe features laid on for the locals.

Lindsay Cooper (born 1951)

REEDS, OTHER INSTRUMENTS

A multi-instrumentalist, composer and political activist whose recorded legacy touches many styles.

 Sahara Dust Intakt CD 029 Cooper; Paul Jayasinha (t, clo); Elvira Plenar (p); Dean Brodrick (acc, ky); Robyn Schulkowsky (perc); Phil Minton (v). 8/92.
Cooper would be interesting even if only as a multi-instrumentalist who's given bassoon and sopranino saxophone a viable place in contemporary jazz and improvisation. She's very much more than a player of exotica, however. Indeed, her work is unusually grounded in political realities. Written during the Gulf War and in collaboration with Australian singer and lyricist Robyn Archer, Sahara Dust is about the shrinking of the world – we can all waken to find Sahara dust on our doorsteps, blown by the wind – as both an erosion of the private and a challenge to our wider consciousness of world events. As ever, she deploys an extraordinary ensemble, with Minton (wonderful with Cooper and Alfred 23 Harth on the collaborative State Of Volgograd disc issued in 1994 by FMP) in gloriously unsettling form, Jayasinha and Plenar producing a rich palette between them and Schulkowsky endlessly inventive. A beautiful, and important, record.

Sheila Cooper

ALTO SAXOPHONE, VOICE

Canadian-born, NY-based. A singing saxophone-player; an improvising singer.

 Since You Were Mine Panorama 850012 Cooper; Renee Rosnes (p); Scott Colley (b); Billy Drummond (d). N.D.
 While The World Is In Slumber Panorama 76714523 Cooper; John Hart (g); Chris Berger (b); Marcello Pellitteri (d). N.D.
 Songs Of Love And Longing Candid CCD 79849 Cooper; Fritz Pauer (p). 07.

In an overcrowded market, Cooper goes for robust swing and relatively unfamiliar fare. How many contemporary players take on Ellington's little-known 'Tulip Or Turnip' (on While The World), or take pains to give 'If I Only Had A Brain' (Since You Were Mine) such a refreshing interpretation? The voice isn't fantastic, pouty when it could do with being more resonant, but she swings like mad and while some of the world-weary stuff ('100 Easy Ways To Lose A Man' and 'The Thrill is Gone'; one on each) doesn't quite have the necessary weight, musically they're thrilling. The duos with Pauer are perhaps best of all, pushing the voice out into new territory and calling on a lot more from the saxophone than she needs to deliver with the likes of Rosnes, Hart and Colley behind her. One to watch.

Keith Copeland (born 1947)

DRUMS

Son of trumpeter Ray, he has played pro since the age of 15. Also works as an educator in Germany, the US and Ireland.

 The Irish Connection /  Round Trip /  Live In Limerick Steeplechase SCCD 31469 / 31425 / 31469 Copeland; Tommy Halferty (g); Ronan Guilfoyle (b). 95; 9/96–2/97; 2/98.

Halferty's thick tone and juicy blend of bebop lines and fat, resonant chords tend to dominate the first two records, though Copeland and Guilfoyle are no slouches and the resultant trio music has plenty of grip. Highlights are a somewhat Latinized 'You Don't Know What Love Is' and a very gritty blues called 'Minor Infringement', both on the second record. The trio repeats the 'You Don't Know ...' arrangement on the live disc – another rare example of Steeplechase recording in Ireland! – and the sound is looser and funkier, though a whit less focused than in the studio. Scofield's 'Chariots' is a neat sublimation of the master's style by Halferty.

Marc Copland (born 1948)

PIANO, KEYBOARDS

He arrived in NY in the early '70s, spent a period with Chico Hamilton and has recorded steadily as leader.

(*) Paradiso Soul Note 121283 Copland; Gary Peacock (b); Billy Hart (d). 4/95.
(*) Between The Lines Steeplechase SCCD 31488 Copland; Tim Hagans (t). 4/00.
 That's For Sure Challenge CHR 70098 Copland; Kenny Wheeler (t, flhn); John Abercrombie (g). 10/00.

Copland has been recording prolifically since the turn of the millennium though with no obvious millennial zeal. He's a patient craftsman. The earlier Savoy albums are out of circulation at the moment, which makes the duo Never At All (see below) and Paradiso the earliest survivals. The trio disc is richly melodic, with glorious harmonic support from the bassist; the piano voice is hard to pin down, but Copland consistently gets away from the usual Bill Evans comparison and doesn't fall easily into the Chick-and-Keith bag either. A subtly distinctive voice.

With Abercrombie (a Hamilton bandmate) and Wheeler, he taps a rich vein of lyricism. The opening 'When We Met' is intoxicatingly fine, the harmonic material throwing out hooks which hang in the memory. Apart from 'How Deep Is The Ocean?', the rest is originals, played by the three composers with absolute finesse, Abercrombie introducing notes of intensity just when you think it might get too sweet and nice. Wheeler may have done one chamber-jazz situation too many; we've heard some of these solos before.

The duos with Hagans are much more interesting. The material is great for a start, with 'Canteloupe Island', 'Nefertiti', 'When Will The Blues Leave' and Thad Jones's 'Three In One' all in the programme. Hagans is a clever fellow and pushes Copland all the way without shedding a grain of lyrical intent.

* Haunted Heart And Other Ballads hatOLOGY 524 Copland; Drew Gress (b); Jochen Rueckert (d). 01.
 And ... hatOLOGY 593 As above, except add Michael Brecker (ts); John Abercrombie (g). 6/02.

There's a Coltrane twist to the ballads record, with 'My Favorite Things' (reprised twice later) followed by 'Crescent', as well as a new take on Copland's own 'Dark Territory' and a version of Sting's 'When We Dance'. So it's eclectic enough. The trio's great, with Gress very much in the Peacock line. Brecker is a surprise addition, his muscular style a seemingly unlikely ingredient, though in the end he only plays on two tunes. It's all a bit becalmed otherwise.

(*) Lunar hatOLOGY 583 Copland; David Liebman (ss, ts); Mike McGurk (b); Tony Martucci (d). 10/01.

The leadership is shared with Liebman and their originals carry much of the day, though Werner Uehlinger's request that they start with Jimmy Giuffre's 'Cry, Want' was a brilliant notion. Copland's 'All That's Left' brings on an exceptionally fine group performance and for once the fade device suggests elusiveness rather than bafflement over an ending. Liebman's reading of 'Naima' is delicate and very affecting.

(*) Double Play Steeplechase SCCD 31509 Copland; Vic Juris (g). 3/01.
 What It Says Sketch SKE 333040 Copland; Gary Peacock (b). 9/02.
() Round And Round / () Night Call Nagel Heyer 2035 / 2048 Copland; Greg Osby (as). 11/02; 11/03.

More duos. With Peacock, he's coolly accomplished, but the record feels very limited in range, lacking dynamism, variety and juice, although each piece is an effective pastel. The others work to a similar agenda, yet feel entirely different. With Juris, the pianist manages to evoke some mind-reading act, the pair moving so cleverly and gracefully in tandem that the toughness of the improvising (as on 'Stella By Starlight') is all but concealed by the melodious nature of the playing. The guitarist takes equal honours on a detailed but warmly played set.

With Osby, it's less about simpatico than a mildly confrontational situation. The saxophonist's astringent outlook is somewhat at odds with Copland's softer lyricism; in turn, though, Copland is less lush than on some of his dialogues. The melodiousness is rich, concentrated and wasteless. A second encounter says nothing new about the relationship, just a different lot of leaves from the same tree, or a discussion between articulate gentlemen, eloquently laid out.

* Time Within Time hatOLOGY Copland (p solo). 7/04.
It's become a habit at hat HUT to essay several versions of one theme; here, on his best solo showing ever, Copland gives us Bernstein's 'Some Other Time' in C major (twice, beginning and end), D flat major and G major. That in itself tells you nothing much about the song, but each of these approaches brings out some fresh expressive nuance. The rest of the record, originals and standards, proceeds the same way, though for our money Marc's done all he can with 'Footprints' and might well want to give the same circle-of-fifths treatment to one of his own themes: 'Pirouette', say, or 'River's Run', both exquisitely played here but still withholding something.

 Both/And Nagel Heyer 2067 Copland; Randy Brecker (t); Ed Howard (b); Victor Lewis (d). 11/04.
The trumpeter gets shared billing on this. It's nothing like as compelling a set as the duos with Hagans, and largely because the rhythm section turns it into a relatively conventional horn/rhythm set. 'I Loves You Porgy' is a favourite of both, but 'The Sidewinder' was a wonderfully unlikely choice. Otherwise, it's dominated by Copland originals, which Randy despatches with ease but not much commitment.

(*) Modinha – NY Trio Recordings: Volume 1 Pirouet 3018 Copland; Gary Peacock (b); Bill Stewart (d). 06.
We suffer from 'volume 2' syndrome when faced with something like this. Is the second set going to be even better – for this is terrific – or just a disappointing makeweight? The relationship with Peacock has been fruitful and lasting, and on 'Rain' and 'Slap Happy' Copland seems to have been pushed to some of his most emphatic, even vociferous, playing on record. The later standards are more anonymous, but the set as a whole (or half) is enough to confirm Copland as one of the most significant keyboard improvisers of his day. Why, as he turns 60, isn't he more widely acknowledged?

Also, in brief:

 Never At All Future Music FMR CD05 28193. 2/92.
Spontaneous duos with old friend Stan Sulzmann (ss, as, f).

* Poetic Motion Sketch SKE 333020. 10/01.
Excess reverence is the problem on this solo recital, but 'Spartacus Love Theme' comes across well in this style.

 Brand New Challenge CHR 70122. 10/04.
With John Abercrombie (g) and Kenny Wheeler (t, flhn) again, and pretty much as above.

 Some Love Songs Pirouet 3015. 1/05.
A perfunctory title is reflected in the content as well, though a return to 'Spartacus Love Theme' works well, as does 'Footprints' (a love song?).

* No Choice Minium 004. 06.
Piano duets with Bill Carrothers. Two of the most interesting players of the time in one studio. Intriguing, even if they sometimes cancel one another out.

Laurent Coq

PIANO

French-born and now divides his time between Paris and New York.

 Like A Tree In The City Cristal 1117 Coq; Jerome Sabbagh (ts); Brandon Owens (b); Damion Reid (d). 3/03.
 Live @ Le Duc des Lombards /  The Thing To Share Cristal 1131 / 1137 Coq; Olivier Zanot (as); David El-Malek (ts); Laurence Allison (v on Thing only). 05; 06.
He's an engaging fellow, is Coq, but though quite widely recorded isn't generally known outside his two bases. The first of these is a more conventional group situation, but it's the so-called (and quite appropriately called) Blowing Trio that marks him out as an individual performer and writer. Sabbagh is an excellent horn foil, but the combination of Zanot and the mercurial El-Malek makes these discs exciting from start to finish, even if the intervention of Allison is hardly called for.

Jon Corbett

TRUMPET, VALVE TROMBONE

A British improviser whose long experience on the free scene has yielded few recordings.

* Another Fine Mess Slam 217 Corbett; Steve Done (g). 12/94.
These nine improvised duets establish a further unique corner in British free music. Persistently quiet, often almost subliminal, Corbett's phrasing is an unbroken line of broken pieces; he hardly ever plays a sustained note. Done's guitar part is similarly restrained, with the electric-instrument player quieter than most acoustic ones. He seems to draw on jazz and rock vocabularies without plumping for a 'style'. The resulting music is calmly satisfying and the humour, 'Waltz For Debris' and 'Square Midnight' (valve trombone on the latter) spot-on.

Chick Corea (born 1941)

PIANO, KEYBOARDS, COMPOSER

Massachusetts-born, but with a Latin background, which has tinged a body of music that has embraced fusion, Bartók-influenced composition and free jazz. A consummately expressive player with a complex intellectual stance.

* Tones For Joan's Bones Atlantic 75352 Corea; Stuart Blumberg, Woody Shaw (t); Joe Farrell (ts, f); Steve Swallow (b); Joe Chambers (d). 11–12/66.
 Inner Space Atlantic 305 As above, except add Hubert Laws (f); Ron Carter (b); Grady Tate (d). 66.
Corea is a pianist and composer of remarkable range and energy, combining a free-ish jazz idiom with a heavy Latin component and an interest in more formal structures. His stated ambition is to assimilate the 'dancing' qualities of jazz and folk musics to the more disciplined structures of classical music. He has written a half-dozen classic melodies, notably the much-covered 'La Fiesta', 'Return To Forever' and 'Tones For Joan's Bones'.

Given that he had already been playing for 20 years, there is no reason to regard Tones as the work of a prodigy. Under no particular pressure to record as a leader, he approached the first session, produced by Herbie Mann, with a very relaxed attitude.

That is evident in every track. The title-piece is a jazz classic and the opening 'Litha' deserves to be better known. Corea's classical interests are evident in the brief 'Trio For Flute, Bassoon And Piano', which is very different from the extended hard-bop idiom of the rest of the set. Chick already sounds very much his own man and in possession of every resource that he was to exploit in future years. The writing is crisp and assured, with a gutsy swing. Tunes like 'Sundance', 'Converge' and 'The Brain' are embryonic Corea, but far from undeveloped. The band is brilliantly coloured, deep blues and shouting reds, and the remainder of the rhythm section as effective as any on the scene. Inner Space merely compiles Tones with some Hubert Laws material featuring Chick from the same period.

* The Complete 'Is' Sessions Blue Note 40532 2CD Corea; Woody Shaw (t); Bennie Maupin (ts); Hubert Laws (f, perc); Dave Holland (b); Jack DeJohnette (d); Horace Arnold (d, perc). 5/69.
 Converge West Wind 2116 As above. 6/69.
Corea was working with Miles Davis and was shortly to take part in the In A Silent Way and Bitches Brew sessions when these remarkable recordings were made in May 1969. They are the work of a developing and diversifying composer. The opening 'It', a duet with flautist Laws, is almost a classical étude, tinged with Debussyan harmonies. The track that follows could hardly be more different. 'The Brain' is sturdy hard bop that features Bennie Maupin's underrated tenor saxophone-playing. (And if that 'underrated' sounds pro forma, it's worth noting that his name was omitted from the original LPs of Is and Sundance.)

There are alternate takes of six tracks. 'Sundance' itself is a superb idea, graced by Shaw playing muted and somewhat Miles-like. 'Song Of The Wind' is also known as 'Waltz For Bill Evans', elegant and free-flowing, very much better on the issued take than the alternate. 'This' has Chick on Fender Rhodes; DeJohnette in fine form here and elsewhere. The only non-Corea piece is by another Miles recruit, Dave Holland, who brought in the testing 'Jamala'.

The title-piece picks up some of the energy of Chick's free-jazz work with Circle and with Anthony Braxton. While 'It' is pseudo-classical, 'Is' is a free-form piece that seems to manoeuvre round certain ambiguous modalities, but allows the musicians to float clear of chords or melody. An interesting exercise, but quite dull after the opening few minutes.

The live versions on Converge, recorded a month later, are mostly strong though the sound isn't wonderful. The opening 'Fiesta' is perhaps the best thing on the set, and again Maupin shows what an underrated player he is.

(*) Piano Improvisations Vols. 1 & 2 ECM 811979-2 / 829190-2 Corea (p solo). 4/71.
(*) Children's Songs ECM 815680-2 Corea; Ida Kavafian (vn); Fred Sherry (clo). 7/83.
Valid as the comparison with Jarrett is, there is a world of difference between the miniatures on Piano Improvisations and Jarrett's hugely rambling excursions. Corea is superficially less demanding, but he still repays detailed attention. If his taste was to lapse in the following years, he was surely never more decorously apt than in these 1971 sessions, which after getting on for 40 years are still wearing well. Children's Songs is a much less compelling set, but the Bartókian miniatures have proved durable in the wider jazz repertory.

* Now He Sings, Now He Sobs Blue Note 38265 Corea; Miroslav Vitous (b); Roy Haynes (d). 3/68.
* The Song Of Singing Blue Note 84353 Corea; Dave Holland (b); Barry Altschul (d). 4/70.
 A.R.C. ECM 833678-2 Corea; Dave Holland (b); Barry Altschul (d). 1/71.
The trios offer the best internal evidence of Corea's musical and philosophical trajectory. Sings/Sobs is a fine, solid jazz set with some intelligently handled standard material, but at this point Chick was dabbling in free music and much of the material sounds collectively improvised.

A bare three years later, Corea, falling under the influence of Scientology, was playing altogether more experimentally, with a searching, restless quality that he lost in later years. The Song Of Singing, probably the best of the trio records, is marked by fine melodic invention and sophisticated group interplay, very much a trio performance, not just Corea plus rhythm. The two 'Ballads', are credited to all three musicians and presumably improvised over predetermined structures; one wonders how many were left on the editing-room floor. Corea's two compositions, 'Rhymes' and 'Flesh', are slightly vapid but sharpen up on familiarity. 'Nefertiti' is a modern jazz classic, a wonderfully bare version here.

A.R.C. isn't entirely successful, but the quality of Holland and Altschul renders it a credible essay that Corea was never fully to develop. He left the demanding Circle later in 1971, convinced that the music was losing touch with its audience. This is the beginning of the pianist's awkward populism, which was to lead him to a commercially successful but artistically questionable crossover style.

* Return To Forever / * Light As A Feather ECM 811978-2 / Verve 557115-2 2CD Corea; Joe Farrell (ss, f); Stanley Clarke (b); Airto Moreira (d, perc); Flora Purim (v, perc). 2/72; 10/72.
Thistledown it may be, but Light As A Feather is a perennial favourite. Repackaged with extra tracks from the sessions, including several versions of 'What Games Shall We Play?', it is still Chick's most engagingly approachable record. The leader bounces joyously and unselfconsciously throughout, transforming relatively simple themes like '500 Miles High', 'Captain Marvel' and the ubiquitous 'Children's Song' into grand dancing processions. The earlier record is in some respects better still, more improvisational in cast but still constructed around song forms. Purim's voice was never better, and Clarke keeps his lead-guitarist ambitions to himself for the present. Moreira is rarely heard on a regular drum kit, delivering an unconventional pulse and tilt and playing a particularly strong role on 'Return To Forever' and on the long, buoyant 'Sometime Ago/La Fiesta'.

 Hymn Of The Seventh Galaxy Polydor 825 336 Corea; Bill Connors (g); Stanley Clarke (b); Lenny White (d, perc). 8/73.
(*) Where Have I Known You Before Polydor 825206 Corea; Al DiMeola (g); Stanley Clarke (b); Lenny White (d, perc). 7–8/74.
(*) Return To The Seventh Galaxy Verve 533108-2 2CD As for Return to Forever, Light As A Feather, Hymn Of The Seventh Galaxy, Where Have I Known You Before, except add Steve Gadd (d); Mingo Lewis (perc). 10/72–3/75.
 The Best Of Return To Forever Columbia CK 36359 As for the above, except add Jim Pugh (tb); Gayle Moran (v). 72–75.
The following year, Corea formed an electric group called Return To Forever. Not to be confused with the group that made the ECM record; only Clarke remains. There's something very '70s about Hymn Of The Seventh Galaxy and Where Have I Known You Before. Compared to the Mahavishnu Orchestra, Return To Forever was more of a dance group, and the very buoyancy of the music often glossed over its subtleties. Though both records sound dated, even despite careful remastering, they retain much of the freshness and energy of the earlier; acoustic band, and the quasi-mystical titles are ignorable.

The best of the material, plus some tapes from Chick's personal archive, are included on the two-CD Verve set, a more than adequate souvenir of the group. 'Hymn Of The Seventh Galaxy', 'Captain Señor Mouse' and 'Theme To The Mothership' are all there, as well as '500 Miles High', 'Captain Marvel' and 'Light As A Feather' from the earlier group. The bonus is three tracks from a live radio broadcast from Quiet Village, Long Island, including a long version of 'Spain'.

The material on disc two, which includes two tracks from the 1975 No Mystery, documents the decline and end of what was undeniably a highly inventive band. The Columbia 'best of' is a rock-orientated survey.

() The Leprechaun /  My Spanish Heart / (*) The Mad Hatter Polydor/Verve 519798-2 / Polydor 2669034 2CD / Verve 519799-2 Corea; various personnels similar to albums above. 75, 10/76, 78.

 Friends Polydor 849 071 Corea; Joe Farrell (ts, ss, f); Eddie Gomez (b); Steve Gadd (d). 78.

The Leprechaun was so intent on being charming that it ended up deeply charmless. It marked some sort of a return to acoustic jazz, though Corea himself lined up a bank of then state-of-the-art, now rather creaky-sounding, keyboards. He added horns, a few strings, and tied himself up in a drab fantasy realm. It all muffled the characteristic Bartókian melodies which had emerged from time to time in his work, centrally in the Children's Songs (two of which also appear on Friends). The Mad Hatter was in the same dismal vein, with horns and strings clogging up some of the most promising material. The one bright spot is Joe Farrell's part on 'Humpty Dumpty', a typically elegant and feeling tenor break.

Friends was the one with the embarrassing Smurfs cover. Perversely, it's better than the two previous items. The long 'Smaba Song' and the title-track are close to vintage, and Farrell and Gomez give the session a considerable boost. Corea was still publicly thanking L. Ron Hubbard for his 'continual inspiration'.

My Spanish Heart was a rare instance of Corea working with a large band. It gives every impression of having been got up for the tourists, an ersatz Latin concoction full of strained enthusiasm.

* Corea Hancock Polydor 835360 Corea; Herbie Hancock (p). 2/78.

 Crystal Silence / (*) In Concert, Zurich, October 28, 1979 ECM 831331-2 / 821415-2 2CD Corea; Gary Burton (vib). 10/79.

Interesting duo performances of Chick's 'La Fiesta' and Herbie's 'Maiden Voyage' on Corea Hancock, but by no means a compelling album. Crystal Silence is more substantial than it initially sounds and the music holds up well on the subsequent concert performance, which for a time was a worthwhile substitute. 'Señor Mouse' and 'Crystal Silence' reappear from the studio disc and there is a fine Bud Powell tribute that is well worth the admission price.

 Tap Step Stretch GRS 00092 Corea; Allen Vizzutti (t, flhn); Joe Henderson (ts); Joe Farrell (ts, ss); Hubert Laws (f, picc); Bunny Brunel, Stanley Clarke, Jamie Faunt (b); Tommy Brechtlein (d); Don Alias, Airto Moreira, Laudir Oliveira (perc); Nani Villa Brunel, Shelby Flint, Flora Purim, Gayle Moran (v). 12/79, 1/80.

The Stretch Collector series was planned as a way of releasing previously unheard or unavailable Corea material, partly, one assumes, to offset bootleg issues. The material on Tap Step is much of a muchness; a heavy emphasis on electric piano, synth and clavinet, a fondness for rock settings, Latin percussion and, here and there, voices. Only on 'Grandpa Blues' with Brunel on fretless bass and Clarke on his piccolo bass is there anything that really grabs the attention. The few glimpses of Joe Farrell are welcome as always, and Joe Henderson, who in these years was quite close to Corea, contributes a typically unstuffy and intelligent part to 'Flamenco'.

 Three Quartets Stretch GRS 00032 Corea; Michael Brecker (ts); Eddie Gomez (b); Steve Gadd (d). 1 & 2/81.

The Three Quartets were structured jazz compositions with a wide range of classical influences, and they see Corea exploring some of the territory Bill Evans left uncolonized when he died prematurely the year before. 'Quartet No. 2' is the only one broken down into parts – dedications, respectively, to Duke Ellington and John Coltrane – and it is harmonically the most varied. The other two are unmistakable Corea, mixing funky lines with a floating, very classical sound which the Bösendorfer grand richly accentuates.

After the main session ended, the band filled in studio time with a few untried originals and a run-through of Charlie Parker's 'Confirmation'. Though they don't quite fit in with the three main LP items, they contain some of the leader's best playing on the record. Brecker was far from a tyro, but here still sounds engagingly unformed, adventurous and forceful.

(*) Live In Montreux Stretch GRS 00122 Corea; Joe Henderson (ts); Gary Peacock (b); Roy Haynes (d). 81.

A supergroup encounter introduced with due sense of occasion by Montreux organizer Claude Nobs, who just about gets off-stage quick enough before the fireworks begin. Though things like 'Folk Song' and 'Psalm' are not in themselves demanding, the standard of musicianship required to last in this company is awesome. On 'Hairy Canary', the group jostles amicably. The main weight falls to the two tracks already mentioned, an extended improvisation on 'Trinkle Tinkle', a version of Chick's 'Quintet No. 2' and Peacock's 'Up, Up, And ...' Even though he's sometimes indistinct, Henderson remains the key to the whole proceedings, an improviser of undimmed resource and patience.

() The Chick Corea Elektric Band GRP 059 535 2 Corea; Scott Henderson, Carlos Rios (g); John Patitucci (b); Dave Weckl (d, perc). 86.

 Inside Out / (*) Beneath The Mask GRP 059 6012 / 059 649 2 As above, except omit Henderson, Rios; add Eric Marienthal (sax); Frank Gambale (g). 90.

() Eye Of The Beholder GRP 059 564 2 Corea; Eric Marienthal (sax); John Novello (syn); Frank Gambale (g); John Patitucci (b); Dave Weckl (d). 88.

() Paint The World GRP 059 741 2 Corea; Eric Marienthal (sax); Mike Miller (g); Jimmy Earl (b); Gary Novak (d). 93.

We've never been convinced by the Elektric Band, but given Chick's almost incurable inventiveness there is always something to ponder and enjoy. The first album is disconcertingly crude, but with the introduction of Marienthal the textures are softened and there are several moments even sceptical visitors would be happy to revisit. Paint The World was credited to Elektric Band II; the formula is very much the same.

 Akoustic Band /  Alive GRP 059 582 2 / 059 627 2 Corea; John Patitucci (b); Dave Weckl (d). 89; 91.

From the very first notes of 'My One And Only Love' and 'Bessie's Blues' on the first of these, Corea is unmistakable. For better or worse, he still has perhaps the most distinctive stylistic signature in contemporary jazz piano. Here, then, the promised Akoustic Band and a mainly standards set. Compared to what Keith Jarrett has done with similar repertoire, the thinness of Corea's conception becomes clearer. Akoustic Band has its moments, mostly on original material, and Alive is an uncomplicated, entertaining set; the pianos both sound first-rate and the production is spot-on.

(*) Expressions GRP 900732 Corea (p solo). 93.
Significant on two counts: the first solo record for some time, and a very welcome return to standards. Corea includes only two of his own compositions (a wonderful reading of 'Armando's Rhumba'), but he scans the history of modern piano jazz with a typically eclectic range of vision. The second original is a 'Blues For Art' and the whole session is dedicated to Tatum. There are tunes by Strayhorn, Monk and Bud Powell, but in each case it's the Tatum strand that is most evident. It's beautifully put together (Corea is listed as both producer and 'recordist') with a full, old-fashioned sound.

(*) Time Warp Stretch GRS 00152 Corea; Bob Berg (ts, ss); John Patitucci (b); Gary Novak (d). 4/95.
A quasi-narrative suite with a sci-fi storyline, bog-standard stuff: purplish glows, names with too few vowels, unbidden transitions from place to place, a little philosophy and dogma ... and yet, one of the best and straightest Corea albums for some time. There is little obvious musical connection between the numbers, nor need there be, but Corea has woven the whole package into a suite with interpolated cadenzas from saxophone – bridging 'The Wish' and 'Terrain', his own intro to 'New Life', by far the most important track on the disc – and Patitucci's fine intro to 'Discovery'.

'New Life' is as boldly optimistic and as quietly chastened as anything since The Song Of Singing. This one has the feel of a trio performance with Berg superadded, mostly effectively, though it jars in places. The mystery – other than what exactly is going on in the story of Arndok – is why Corea should have felt drawn to a drummer as leaden as Novak. But for him, and a few raw edges elsewhere, this would be up with Corea's very best.

(*) Remembering Bud Powell Stretch SCD 9012 Corea; Wallace Roney (t); Kenny Garrett (as); Joshua Redman (ts); Christian McBride (b); Roy Haynes (d). 96.
It may seem surprising that Corea should have put together such a substantial line-up for a tribute to Powell, when a basic piano trio might have been a more authentic option. In the event, Remembering is a small triumph, an understated and affectionate album that gives a clear impression of its subject – as understood by a follower – but without succumbing to sycophancy. Apart from a specially written tribute, all the tracks are credited to Powell. There is a superb quintet version of the brooding, problematic 'Glass Enclosure', a brisk, almost antagonistic version of 'Oblivion', and more thoughtful renditions of 'Tempus Fugit' and 'I'll Keep Loving You'. Corea's touch is exquisite and one has the sense that he has steeped himself in the literature before tackling the session.

(*) Native Sense: The New Duets Stretch SCD 9014 Corea; Gary Burton (vib). 97.
An old but seemingly inexhaustible partnership, this latter-day set is more robustly recorded than previous encounters, with a plain, unadorned sound that does neither man any harm. It's quite a long record and, aside from a couple of brief 'Bagatelles' and a short, delightful 'Armando's Rhumba', the tracks are played out at length, with plenty of time and space to exchange ideas. The two outstanding performances are the harmonically mischievous 'No Mystery' and the more free-floating 'Rhumbata', a joyous dance theme.

* Origin: Live At The Blue Note Stretch 9018 Corea; Steve Davis (tb); Steve Wilson (ss, as, f, cl); Bob Sheppard (ss, ts, bcl, f); Avishai Cohen (b); Adam Cruz (d). 1/98.
(*) A Week At The Blue Note Stretch 9020 6CD As above. 1/98.
Anything Miles and Keith Jarrett can do ... To deal with business matters first, the material on these CDs was all recorded during a residency at the Blue Note club in New York. The single album is not a sampler or taster; none of the tracks are reduplicated on the complete set. Taped over three nights at the very start of the year, the sets have pretty much the same configuration. The joy is in hearing how Chick and the horns approach them differently set to set.

The single disc showcased what was obviously an important new band for Corea, one that offered him a chance to experiment with complex voicings but also still swing like crazy. The closing version of the Van Heusen classic 'It Could Happen To You' is magnificent and far ahead of the single version on the boxed set, and there are stunning versions of originals like 'Dreamless', 'Molecules' and 'Soul Mates'. We can't but conclude that the very best material was selected for the original release and that the rest was expected to gain in force by sheer bulk and repetition. To be clear, there are three versions of 'Bewitched, Bothered And Bewildered', two of 'Molecules' and 'Sifu', three of the blues 'Matrix', and five of the brief 'Say It Again', which comes in two parts. A Week also includes three Monk tunes and Charlie Parker's 'Bird Feathers'. Some of the themes are quite ragged and 'Molecules' in particular doesn't quite come off, though it does point to a growing Ellington influence on Chick's thinking. We say plump for the single album, and if you're lucky enough to find the Japanese release, you should find an extra version of 'Sifu', run down at home with just the trio.

(*) Change Stretch 9023 As above, except omit Cruz; add Jeff Ballard (d). 98.
Having debuted Origin on the Blue Note sets, Corea took the slightly altered line-up into the studio for a relaxed, swinging set that seems to restore the Latin emphasis. 'Little Flamenco' is a joyous thing, with fine flute-work from Wilson and authentic handclaps from the drummer. 'Early Afternoon Blues' might almost be Horace Silver, and there are a couple of moments when Chick seems to namecheck Dr Funk. 'Armando's Tango' is now almost a repertory piece, but it has rarely sounded as fresh and alert, and 'Awakening', which closes the set, is as near as you'll get to a career summation in six and a quarter elegant minutes. The only surprise of the set, apart from Cohen's lovely original 'Lylah', is Chick's recorded debut on marimba on 'Wigwam'. He plays with mallets like he plays with his fingers, but the extra percussive edge is delightful and sets the tone for a fresh, inventive record.

 Solo Piano – Originals /  Solo Piano – Standards Stretch 9028 / 9029 Corea (p solo). 11/99.
By this stage of a distinguished career, there is an air of monumentality about almost everything Corea issues. This, following the release of his classical Concerto, is no exception: two discs containing exactly (or very nearly) what the titles suggest. The opening set is a mostly brisk career survey, taking in such hits as 'Armando's Rhumba', 'Brasilia' and the ubiquitous 'Spain', but also including a long improvisation on 'Children's Song #12' and arrangements of two Scriabin preludes. Chick also invites audience members to throw him titles and then delivers four brief, clever improvisations – 'The Chase', 'The Falcon', 'Swedish Landscape' and 'April Snow' – which serve as a reminder of what a quick-witted instant composer he can be.

The Scriabin pieces apart, it's a fairly predictable roster. The Standards volume quickly turns into a tribute to Thelonious Monk, represented by four tracks; two more are by Bud Powell, so bop repertory features more strongly than one might have expected. Chick is recognizable in every phrase, but there is something slightly distanced about the playing; in retrospect, his attack on Originals isn't quite as committed as it might be, leaving one with the impression that these two discs were cut rather with the market in mind than as documentations of vivid performance.

(*) Past, Present & Futures Stretch 9035 Corea; Avishai Cohen (b); Jeff Ballard (d). 4/01.

This is much more like the real thing, a genuinely creative and thoughtful Corea album that unites the best of his old experimentalism with the structural grandeur of recent years. Apart from 'Jitterburg Waltz', all the material is original and yet it nods insistently in the direction of Chick's peers. 'Fingerprints', for instance, is both nominally and harmonically a gesture towards Wayne Shorter's classic, and the astonishing climax of 'Life Line' is a summation of much of the harmonic language of recent jazz. 'Dignity', 'Anna's Tango' and 'The Chelsea Shuffle' are all outstanding concepts and the trio plays instinctively and with great control on each of them, allowing the emotion to come through without sacrificing the pace or the structure of the theme. Cohen is in astonishing form, creating unexpected multi-metres which will have ordinary fans and bass-players alike scrolling back to check out his technique. Ballard is more passive and supportive, but he is the ideal man for this trio, and a far cry from some of the bashers Chick has employed in the recent past. A great return to form.

 Rendezvous In New York Stretch 038 023 2 2CD Corea; Terence Blanchard (t); Steve Davis (tb); Steve Wilson (ss, as); Michael Brecker, Tim Garland, Joshua Redman (ts); Gonzalo Rubalcaba (p); Avishai Cohen, Eddie Gomez, Christian McBride, John Patitucci, Miroslav Vitous (b); Jeff Ballard, Steve Gadd, Roy Haynes, Dave Weckl (d); Bobby McFerrin (v). 9/01.

Chick celebrated 60 years young with a special event at the Blue Note in New York that reunited him with some of the musicians who have played a role in his extraordinary career. There are nine different bands and pairings represented here, and thus nine different aspects of his playing personality. It all begins joyously enough with three duets with Bobby McFerrin, who kicks straight into 'Armando's Blues', followed by a fine version of 'Blue Monk' and an astonishing medley of 'Concierto De Aranjuez' and Chick's own 'Spain'. Even if it was rehearsed, it sounds totally spontaneous and utterly wonderful.

What follows is more sombre – 'Matrix' from the Now He Sings, Now He Sobs trio of Miroslav Vitous and Roy Haynes, ten minutes of restlessly exploratory piano trio. The Remembering Bud Powell band does its stuff on 'Glass Enclosure' and 'Tempus Fugit' before Chick and Gary Burton renew their acquaintance on 'Crystal Silence'. The Akoustic Band and Origin are both strongly featured on disc two, as is the New Trio with Avishai Cohen and Jeff Ballard and the Three Quartets band with Mike Brecker, Eddie Gomez and Steve Gadd. The real highpoint of the second disc, though, is a wonderful second read of 'Concierto De Aranjuez' with fellow pianist Gonzalo Rubalcaba; breathtaking.

 To The Stars Stretch 9043 Corea; Steve Wilson (ss, as); Eric Marienthal (ts); Frank Gambale (g); John Patitucci (b); Dave Weckl (d); Pernell Saturnino (perc); Gayle Moran Corea (v). 8/04.

Some lively guest contributions notwithstanding, this is a pretty routine outing for the Elektric Band, woven round a loose Scientological fantasy which doesn't lend much coherence to these mostly quite lightweight compositions. Though the playing is of a high order, particularly from Patitucci, the overall conception is set in stone.

 The Enchantment Concord 30253 / Universal 1004 Corea; Béla Fleck (bjo). 5/07.

If this seems an unlikely pairing, Corea and Fleck have built up quite a rapport over the last few years. The opening 'Senorita' has them weaving lines together so closely that one quickly loses any sense of what instruments are being played. There is a delightful cover of one of the 'Children's Songs' later, and a number of tunes by Fleck, including the delightful 'Waltse For Abby'. Corea's signature devices, little embellishments at the beginning of a phrase, certain suspended harmonies, actually work particularly well in this context and on a longish version of 'Brazil' (the only repertory piece) the duo really catches fire.

Also, in brief:

 Works /  :rarum: Selected Recordings ECM 825426-2 / 066 578 2. 71–83; 72–81.

Works is a well-selected sample of the pianist's decade-plus with ECM. It's now been superseded by the first volume of a promised two in the :rarum series from ECM, which are selected by the artists themselves, in Chick's case from a few favourite associations.

() Touchstone Stretch 00042. 82.

A haphazard sample of styles, propped up with nutty mythology.

 Trio Music / (*) Trio Music, Live In Europe ECM 827702-2 2CD / 827769-2. 11/81; 9/84.

Miroslav Vitous (b) and Roy Haynes (d) are both superbly gifted trio players, but they take no discernible chances, and the results are leaden.

 Lyric Suite For Sextet ECM 815274-2. 9/82.

Recalls Ravel more readily than Alban Berg. Delicate, attractive music, sensibly limited in scope, firmly and beautifully executed.

* Voyage /  Septet ECM 823468-2/827258-2. 7/84; 7 & 10/84.

Voyage is a flimsy confection, a duet with flautist Steve Kujala. They're augmented by strings and french horn for Septet. Po-faced and slight.

 The Ultimate Adventure Stretch 9045. 2/06.

Ultimate adventure? More of a dull sight-seeing trip, with L. Ron Hubbard as guide.

Rich Corpolongo

ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, CLARINET

Homebody Chicagoan, rarely heard outside the city.

 Just Found Joy Delmark DE 489 Corpolongo; Larry Luchowski (p); Jeff Czech (vn); Erich Hochberg (b); Mike Raynor (d); Paul Wertico (perc). 7/95.

(*) Smiles Delmark DE 502 As above, except omit Czech, Wertico. 7/97.
Rick played bebop with Herbie Hancock in college and studied with Joe Daley and there's certainly something of his teacher's exuberant style in his music; also a little of Eric Dolphy, whose 'Straight Up And Down' is recalled in the staggers of the title-piece. Corpolongo is a mercurial player, almost overreaching himself in the speed circles of 'Time Impulse', but he likes the clarinet a lot and gets out some interesting solos on that. Basically a quartet, with Czech and Wertico only on the final two tracks, it's a rough, likeable testament to a local hero.

Flip over from the beaming group photo and Smiles comes in with some alarming track-titles: 'Experiment', 'Tone Row', 'Expressivo'. It's a lot more approachable than that might suggest, and even if there is a bit of 'advanced' writing, it's certainly not of an off-putting sort. In fact, a really cracking modern jazz record, packed with blues feeling and some great playing from the leader.

Larry Coryell (born 1943)

GUITAR

Raised in Galveston, Texas, he played in Mike Mandel's group before joining Chico Hamilton and Gary Burton, where his Hendrix-influenced rock-tinged sound came to wide notice. In the '70s, he formed the jazz-rock group Eleventh House. More recently, he has moved between pure-bop, fusion and Latin styles, limpidly delivered but with real power.

 Coryell Universe 21 Coryell; Jim Pepper (ts, f); Mike Mandel (p, ky); Melvin Bronson, Ron Carter, Chuck Rainey (b); Bernard Purdie (d). 69.
Coryell played with Sonny Sharrock on Herbie Mann's Memphis Underground and understood that the excitements of rock could be married with the subtleties and intellectual sophistication of jazz. Coryell is an early foray, but all the lineaments are present. Tracks like 'Sex' and 'Morning Sickness' are less provocative than their titles suggest and the guitarist's musicianship is exemplary, but it's 'The Jam With Albert' that reveals the scope of the talent: still raw, but bursting with energy.

 Lady Coryell Vanguard VCD 6509 Coryell; Jimmy Garrison, Miroslav Vitous (b); Elvin Jones, Bob Moses (d). 69.

(*) Spaces Vanguard 79345 Coryell; Michael Lawrence (t); Chick Corea (p, ky); John McLaughlin (g); Miroslav Vitous (b); Billy Cobham (d). 7/70.

 Live At The Village Gate Universe 22 Coryell; Melvin Bronson (b); Harry Wilkinson (d); Julie Coryell (v). 1/71.

 At Montreux Vanguard 79410 Coryell; Michael Lawrence (t); Mike Mandel (ky); Danny Trifan (b); Alphonse Mouzon (d, perc). 7/74.
As a hero of the fusion movement, Coryell sometimes sailed too close to actual rock and roll. Live At The Village Gate was recorded very soon after Hendrix's death and it shows. Larry was an unapologetic disciple and this is an exciting record, marred by a waffly version of the Jack Bruce song 'Can You Follow?', and a drab vocal from Julie on 'Beyond These Chilling Winds'.

Though some Coryell records of the period are crudely disappointing, the celebrated Spaces still delivers handsomely, a floaty, meditative disc with a solid core of invention and some formidable interaction between the two guitarists. Working with Coryell brings out the best in McLaughlin. The stereo separation is drastic by later standards, but it contributes to the nostalgic appeal. The inclusion of Scott LaFaro's 'Gloria's Step' and René Thomas's 'René's Theme' helped cement 'proper' jazz credentials.

Lady Coryell is again closer to rock. The title-track, dedicated to Julie, is a fusion classic and has rather eclipsed the rest of a fine and thoughtful album. 'You Don't Know What Love Is' is a token standard.

* The Restful Mind Universe 33 Coryell; Ralph Towner (g); Glen Moore (b); Collin Walcott (perc). 74.
This triumphantly avoids the usual pitfalls of jazz-meets-classical crossover projects. Ravel's 'Pavane For A Dead Princess' (a misleading translation, by the way) represents Coryell at his thoughtful best. The real pay-off comes in two pieces after Robert de Visée, both of them originally written for the theorbo. These are magnificently crafted and paced, especially the opening 'Menuet'. The Coryell originals are all equally well adapted to the setting, which saw the guitarist in the company of three quarters of fellow Vanguard act Oregon. Towner is an excellent partner, and a very different kind of guitarist from John McLaughlin. Oregon were determinedly acoustic, but Larry employs synth effects and some measure of amplification as well as his beautifully toned Lo Prinzi guitar. 'Ann Arbor', 'Song For Jim Webb' and the title-piece all manage to avoid New Age drabness.

 Twin House ACT 9202 Coryell; Philip Catherine (g); Joachim Kühn (p). 76, 77.
Indifferently recorded in London and Hamburg, these are mainly guitar duets, with just one opening for Kühn. Coryell leads off a great version of 'The Train And The River', and there's a companionable 'Nuages'; the rest is original material. The two guitars could do with narrowing in the mix, but otherwise the blend is good.

 A Quiet Day In Spring Steeplechase SCCD 31187 Coryell; Michal Urbaniak (vn); Jesper Lundgaard (b). 11/83.
The Polish-born violinist has had a fairly up-and-down career and can sound sentimental in more intimate settings. However, Coryell gets him going on tunes like his own 'Polish Reggae' and two lovely waltzes, on which he combines delicate open-string passages with rich, triple-stopped chords that conjure up the Polish Romantic composers. Coryell takes a back seat where necessary, as on the violinist's feature, 'Stuff's Stuff', but is at his expressive best on 'Rue Gregoire Du Tour', picking out soft, sustained variations on the melody.

 Dragon Gate Shanachie 97005 Coryell; Stefan Grossman (g). 89.
Coryell credits Ellis Marsalis with the revelation that allowed him to play Coltrane's 'Giant Steps' as a solo guitar piece: recast it in waltz time, slow it down, and the changes make sense. Coryell also pays tribute to other influences; his version of Wes Montgomery's 'West Coast Blues' has to be heard in that light. Coryell plays alone, overdubbed and in duet with Grossman. Beautifully textured, well paced, but perhaps a little too technical for the casual listener.

 Shining Hour Savoy 17281 Coryell; Kenny Barron (p); Buster Williams (b); Marvin Smitty Smith (d). 10/89.
Originally on Muse, then 32, this one leads a charmed life. As the line-up suggests, Coryell was rebranding himself as a mainstream player and for the most part he convinces. The tunes are nearly all standards, with 'Nefertiti' and 'The Sorcerer' the most ambitious picks. There's a Brian Torff composition as well, and just one piece by Coryell, who plays with deftness and some fire in front of a cracking section.

(*) Twelve Frets To One Octave Shanachie 97015 Coryell (g solo). 91.

From raw, rootsy blues to the sober, classical shapes of 'Bartók Eleven' to the lovely lilt of 'Transparence': Coryell has it all taped. His single-note runs are fleet and dexterous, his chording has harmonic mass, and his rhythms and counter-rhythms frequently create the impression that more than one musician must be involved.

(*) Monk, Trane, Miles & Me High Note HCD 7028 Coryell; Willie Williams (ts); John Hicks (p); Santi Debriano (b); Yoron Israel (d). 5/98.

Coryell has retained a devotion to bop, and this tough, funky album is a testament to his ongoing engagement with modern jazz and its great masters. Larry kicks off with two brisk standards, 'Star Eyes' and 'Alone Together', and starts to engage with his ancestors in an interpretation of Monk's 'Trinkle Tinkle'. Coltrane is represented by 'Naima', obvious fare for the guitarist, but also the more aggressive 'Up Against The Wall'. Miles is limited to a rather dull version of 'All Blues', while 'me' is represented in two originals, a generic blues and a nice idea in three-quarter time. The most effective composition and performance of the set is down to bassist Santi Debriano; 'Patience' is a moody waltz and Larry admits that he had to go back to the Van Gelder studio to re-record his part and master the slashing chords the bassist had written for him.

 Cause & Effect Tone Center 40022 Coryell; Tom Coster (org, ky); Victor Wooten (b); Steve Smith (d). 8/98.

Coster and Smith are veterans of Carlos Santana's jazz-oriented band. The session consisted largely of open-ended jams, created with a freshness that couldn't have been guaranteed had Coryell insisted on recording old tunes from the Eleventh House days. Coryell's 'Bubba' is greasy funk and the finale, 'Wes And Jimi', a heartfelt tribute to two profound influences. The obvious source for all this is Tony Williams's Lifetime. Pure nostalgia for those who remember the first incarnation; a treat even for those who don't.

 The Coryells Chesky 192 Coryell; Julian Coryell (g); Murali Coryell (g, v); Brian Torff (b); Alphonse Mouzon (perc). 8/99.

Larry and Julie were long-time collaborators, but this disc features a new generation of Coryells, the first time that fellow guitarists Julian and Murali have joined dad on record; 'Low-Lee-Tah' was written before they were born. The best interaction between the three comes on Larry's classic 'Transparence' and on Julian's 'Sink Or Swim'. Murali additionally sings on a couple of cuts and Julian has a couple of numbers to himself, accompanied only by Torff, whose touch is impeccable. Mouzon sticks to hand drums throughout, occasionally recalling his role in Eleventh House, but consistently fresh and inventive.

(*) Inner Urge High Note 7064 Coryell; Don Sickler (t); John Hicks (p); Santi Debriano (b); Yoron Israel (d). 2/00.

Coryell continues to reposition himself as a jazz guitarist with this powerful set of repertory tunes. Unusually, he only programmes two originals, 'Allegra's Ballerina Song' and 'Turkish Coffee', preferring to work imaginative variations on a range of relatively unfamiliar material. 'Dolphin Dance' and 'In A Sentimental Mood' are familiar enough, but who else has had the vision to programme Harold Land's 'Compulsion' and 'Terrain' and who else is exploring Ray Bryant's 'Tonk'? The real pay-off, though, is a cracking interpretation of Joe Henderson's 'Inner Urge'.

Hicks loves this format. Debriano is a firm presence, working in and around Coryell's lower tones with instinctive ease. Sickler also produces and Rudy Van Gelder gives Inner Urge its clear, flattering sound.

 Count's Jam Band Reunion Tone Center 4015 Coryell; Steve Marcus (ss); Kai Eckhardt (b); Steve Smith (d). 12/00.

The title refers to a fusion outfit Coryell and Steve 'The Count' Marcus ran in the '60s known as Count's Rock Band. The reconvened group, with new rhythm section, tackles the old favourite 'Scotland' as a way of getting things going again but then dips into a sequence of fairly loose ideas, like 'Reunion' and 'Jammin' With The Count', which were obviously run up for the gig, though they also tackle a curious version of 'Rhapsody In Blue' and a couple of more thoughtful pieces. There's a nice duo as well.

 Cedars Of Avalon High Note 7093 Coryell; Cedar Walton (p); Buster Williams (b); Billy Drummond (d). 12/01.

There probably isn't a better jazz rhythm section around: 'Bemsha Swing', 'What's New' and even 'Limehouse Blues', understood from the foundations up and then enhanced. Walton and Williams both play like composers; even their seemingly off-the-cuff drop-ins are fresh melodic ideas. Which isn't to deny Coryell his due of praise. The company would be flattering to anyone, but the guitarist is in superb form. The fusion player of past years is still evident from time to time, as when he flips the switch for his solo on the Monk tune, but Coryell has moved on.

 The Power Trio: Live In Chicago High Note 7109 Coryell; Larry Gray (b); Paul Wertico (d). 02.

A subtle power trio, if such a thing exists. The opening 'Autumn Leaves' is breathtakingly bold, starting in fast bop mode and quickly going outside. 'Star Eyes' is handled somewhat the same way. Coryell only includes one original but programmes some challenging fare, from George Harrison's 'Something', which the audience may or may not have recognized, to 'Bags' Groove', which ends the set on a high. The sound isn't great and Gray and Wertico are not of the leader's quality, but the ideas are strong and their relative simplicity of accompaniment is a strength.

() Electric / () Traffic Chesky 308 / 322 Coryell; Victor Bailey (b); Lenny White (d). 04; 4/06.

And then, as if to show that he's not merely content to play the role of neo-conservative jazzer, Coryell programmes Led Zeppelin's 'Black Dog', James Brown's 'Sex Machine' and an old Cream favourite, 'Born Under A Bad Sign' on the first of these and subjects them all to the same no-choke, full-on treatment. Very effective it is, too; not least because Bailey and White are such veterans of this approach. Lenny's work has its strong admirers, but compared to, say, Billy Cobham, he has remained under the radar as far as jazz listeners are concerned for much of the last 20 years. Electric confirms his quality. It also proves that Larry hasn't put away his old pedals and hasn't had his guitars doctored so the dials don't go up past six. There are also excellent versions of Miles's 'So What' and Wayne Shorter's 'Footprints'. The inclusion of Hendrix's 'Manic Depression' on the second volume might prompt worries that Coryell is merely retreading old material; in fact, it's a fresh and vivid account, and following his own 'Judith Loves Jazz' a sign that he's still playing at the peak of his powers.

Also, in brief:

 Barefoot Boy /  The Real Great Escape One Way 71001 / Vanguard VSD 79329. 71, 73.
Barefoot Boy set the pattern for some time thereafter. Steve Marcus (ss, ts) is back, but the key element is Roy Haynes (d), who blazes through the set. Escape is the major disappointment of the early batch, a noisy, macho mess.

 The Essential Larry Coryell / (*) Improvisations: The Best Of The Vanguard Years /  Basics Vanguard VCD 79575/6 2CD / 79614/5 2CD / Universe 20. 68–75, 68–75, 68–69.
These pretty much cover the waterfront in terms of the Vanguard years. Improvisations is longer and more detailed, superseding The Essential. Only Coryell collectors will be interested in these skimpy studio off-cuts on Basics.

 Birdfingers Universe 55. 69–90.
The cover has the younger Coryell in rock-star mode, though still toting a jazzman's guitar. There you have the delightful paradox of the career that's sketched out on this odd compilation.

(*) Planet End Vanguard VCD 79367. 75.
The last album for Vanguard is little more than a series of sloppy, contract-fulfilling jams. Larry Young's 'Tyrone' stands out.

(*) Back Together Again Wounded Bird 8220. 7–8/77.
Disappointing reunion with Alphonse Mouzon (d) after the demise of Eleventh House. Philip Catherine (g) and John Lee (b) also figure prominently but to little effect.

 Joy Spring: The Swinging Side Of Larry Coryell Savoy 17568. 1/85–10/89.
Culled from Coryell's deleted Muses, this brings together some of the best material, though it overlaps with the reissued Shining Hour.

 Live From Bahia Membran 205710. 92.
A regularly repackaged Latin set, originally on CTI; also features Billy Cobham (d) and Dori Caymmi (v).

 Sketches Of Coryell Shanachie 5024. 96.
This mixed and patchy album includes Stevie Wonder's 'I Am Singing' and 'Concierto De Aranjuez'. Too much self-conscious 'eclecticism'.

 Spaces Revisited Shanachie 5033. 2/97.
Biréli Lagrène (g) stood in for McLaughlin, Richard Bona (b) for Vitous, but Billy Cobham (d) is still there, now subtler and more inflected. 'Variations On Pork Pie Hat' illustrates the passage of time well.

 Private Concert / (*) New High Acoustic Music 1159 / High Note 7052. 4 & 10/99.
Both solo recitals: the first is probably too intimate to communicate strongly, but New High is crackling jazz guitar.

(*) Tricycles Favored Nations 7020. 04.
Working with a former Pat Metheny rhythm section, Coryell turns in a strong jazz set that revisits older material: 'Dragon Gate' and 'Spaces Revisited' are both terrific.

 Laid Back & Blues: Live At The Sky Church In Seattle Rhombus 7066. 05.
Nice, intimate quartet date with a good 'Dragon Gate'. Tracey Piergross pops up for a so-so vocal.

The Cosmosamatics

GROUP

Fiery modern jazz group co-founded by long-term associates Sonny Simmons and Michael Marcus.

 The Cosmosamatics Boxholder BXH 022. Sonny Simmons (as, eng hn); Michael Marcus (ss, straight ts, bcl, f); James Carter (bsx); Karen Borca (bsn); William Parker (b); Jay Rosen (d); Samir Chatterjee (tabla). 2/01.

(*) The Cosmosamatics II Boxholder BXH 030 Sonny Simmons (as, eng hn); Michael Marcus (ss, straight ts, bcl, f); Curtis Lundy (b); Jay Rosen (d). 8/01.

(*) Live At Banlieues Bleues Bleu Regard 1963 Sonny Simmons (as); Michael Marcus (bs, saxello); Tarus Mateen (b); Andrew Cyrille (d). 3/03.

 Magnitudes Soul Note 121443 Sonny Simmons (as); Michael Marcus (bs saxello, bcl); Tarus Mateen (b); Jay Rosen (d). 3/03.

* Three Boxholder BXH 041 Sonny Simmons (as, eng hn); Michael Marcus (bs, saxello); Jay Rosen (d). 1/02, 7/03.

 Reeds & Birds Not Two NW 757 Sonny Simmons (as, eng hn, v); Michael Marcus (ts, saxello, bcl); Clifford Barbaro, Jay Rosen (d). 4 & 9/04.

(*) Zetrons Not Two NW 764 Sonny Simmons (as, eng hn); Michael Marcus (ts, bcl); Masa Kamaguchi (b); Jay Rosen (d). 11/04.

Simmons, Marcus and drummer Charles Moffett made two records, Transcendence and Judgement Day, for CIMP in the spring of 1996 (bassist Steve Neil also played on the latter) and decided to formalize the association by forming Cosmosamatics. They returned to the trio format in 2004 with the third of the eponymous Boxholder sets, and it must be said that this brand of fiery blues-improv probably works best with a limited personnel, not least because it throws into focus the two front-men's array of horns. Marcus is a well-regarded multi-instrumentalist, who has also dabbled with manzello and stritch, and adds baritone on the live date and Three, but it's Simmons who generally takes the initiative.

The first album kicks off strongly with 'Quasar' (which gets a long reading on the French recording), and Parker immediately opens up his familiar vein of aural astonishment. Simmons plays with the same intensity as on his early ESP recording, but now with a bleakly funky edge. 'Mingus Mangus' brings in Carter's booming bass sax (he also appears on 'New Line Groove'), but Borca's contribution to the date is less effective, Simmons's own commitment to double-reed instruments notwithstanding, though she and Chatterjee add some nice textures to 'Beyond The Inner East'.

The sequel is dominated by the spirit of Eric Dolphy, who's arguably Simmons's biggest single influence. One track is a tribute, but again the lead-off number, 'Fusionanatomy', which sounds like a Dolphy version of a Charlie Parker blues contrefact, is the strongest statement. Lundy's a very different proposition to William Parker, but he has a singing tone that blends nicely with the sourness of the horns, especially on 'Cosmic Curtis'.

Rosen was a very logical successor to Charles Moffett but the inclusion of Cyrille on the live date obviously adds a special dimension and the drummer's own closing 'Aubade' is a highlight, albeit the shortest cut of the session. The Soul Note date is a slight disappointment, but fans of this sound will still lap it up.

The later trio is a cracker, with Rosen doing a lot to fill in the ground round Simmons's glorious alto and cor anglais, Marcus's baritone and saxello. It's a big sound, more spacious in the absence of a bass-player and other horns, but with a lot of depth and the same basic commitment to the blues. Simmons's 'Tonal Magnitudes', 'Bring On The Funk' and 'Avant-Garde Destruct' give some indication of how many bases this group is trying to touch. Marcus is perhaps more single-minded as a writer, but his 'Futura', 'Cool Burn', '12 Seasons Of Love' and 'Requiem For Anne Frank' are all delightfully varied ideas. They even do a version of 'Round Midnight', dominated by Simmons and unrelievedly stark in conception.

Released on a small Polish label, Reeds & Birds brings together a 25-minute live take of 'Avant-Garde Destruct', which is also available in alternate takes on Magnitudes, with a studio set recorded in New York City and with Barbaro depping on drums. Even with changes in personnel, this is now so clearly a working group that the basic sound is always very consistent. Barbaro does change the rules slightly, though, and often unexpectedly drifts off the more obviously avant-ish Rosen's rugged grooves. An interesting variation.

Zetrons again catches the group live in Europe, first at the Bimhuis in Amsterdam with Kamaguchi on bass and a set consisting of 'Mingus Mangus' and a lovely short version of Dolphy's blues line 'Serene'. From the same Eastern European tour, '12 Seasons Of Love' comes, appropriately, from a night in Vienna, while a set in Krakow yields some fascinating new stuff from Marcus, including 'Dance Of The Zetrons' and the lovely 'Harmonious Beautious' (sic). A substantial discography now from a group that may have started on an ad hoc basis.

Eddie Costa (1930–62)

VIBES, PIANO

Seemed bound for stardom at the turn of the '60s, but it was all halted by a fatal car accident.

(*) Trio Complete Recordings Lone Hill Jazz LHJ 10201 Costa; Vinnie Burke, Wendell Marshall (b); Nick Stabulas, Paul Motian (d). 2/56–2/59.
(*) Eddie Costa & Sal Salvador Quartet Complete Studio Recordings Lone Hill LHR 10171 2CD Costa; Eddie Bert (tb); Frank Socolow (as, ts); Sal Salvador (g); Kenny O'Brien, Jimmy Gannon, George Roumanis, Frank Dallas, Bill Crow, Bill Takas (b); Joe Morello, Ronnie Free, Jimmy Campbell (d). 7/54–6/57.
 The Eddie Costa Quintet VSOP 7 Costa; Art Farmer (t); Phil Woods (as); Teddy Kotick (b); Paul Motian (d). 7/57.
 Guys And Dolls Like Vibes Verve 549366 Costa; Bill Evans (p); Wendell Marshall (b); Paul Motian (d). 1/58.

The legacy is very small. The pair of trio dates on Lone Hill were originally made for Josie and Dot; labels, not ladies. The earlier consists mostly of straightforward standards treatments, but there are some more-interesting things: 'Pile Driver' is a Costa original. The second date has a lengthy version of Gigi Gryce's 'The House of Blue Lights', which was the original title of the album, and this is an adventurous and surprising session, Costa's strange, percussive style, utilizing locked-hands ideas and unexpected intervals, given full rein. He plays vibes on just a single track of the earlier set. Sound on the first date is pretty dusty, but the second (an early appearance for Motian) is better.

The quartet sessions were mostly released under Salvador's name and Sal takes the more prominent role. Costa gets an opportunity to show off his prowess on vibes as well as piano and there are charts by Manny Albam and Bill Holman; Salvador and Costa also took part in a Frank Socolow session, included here. The guitarist is clean-lined and precise, a foil for Costa's less-predictable manoeuvres, and the music has a swinging, sometimes headlong quality.

The quintet disc (originally for Mode) is excellent, with a couple of Woods tunes, one by Farmer and a nice reading of Brubeck's 'In Your Own Sweet Way'. The Verve is a typical Broadway-goes-jazz concept, and the stellar line-up (they were pretty unknown at the time of the original Coral LP release) will raise a browser's eyebrows. Evans is still in his tough, boppish salad days, and when paired with Costa's equally brisk and searching solos the six Guys and Dolls themes come in for productive scrutiny. Hopefully some copies are still around.

Johnny Costa (1922–96)

PIANO

A brilliant natural talent who devoted much of his career to television work.

 Classic Costa / * Flying Fingers Chiaroscuro 205 / 217 Costa (p solo). 4/90–2/91; 4/90–3/92.
 A Portrait Of George Gershwin /  Dream: Plays Johnny Mercer Chiaroscuro 335 / 341 Costa (p solo). 10/93; 3/95.

An engaging rather than innovative player, Costa turns out attractive standards performances by the yard. He dropped out of regular jazz playing for a slot on a kids' TV programme Mr Rogers' Neighborhood. No one can say the loss to jazz piano was grievous, but these later sets, mostly recorded in the years before Costa's death from leukaemia, are always bright and attractive, the medleys on the Gershwin disc are dazzlingly accomplished and the two originals tucked away at the end of Flying Fingers suggest there was a clever composer there as well. A Jazzspeak interview on the Gershwin disc offers some illuminating ideas on Costa's craft.

Louis Cottrell (1911–78)

CLARINET

A student of Lorenzo Tio and Barney Bigard, he started out with the Young Tuxedo Band while still in his teens, playing the old-fashioned French Albert system clarinet.

 The Louis Cottrell Trio Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1836 Cottrell; Emanuel Sayles (g); McNeal Breaux, Alcide 'Slow Drag' Pavageau (b). 1/61.

One of the least-known albums in Riverside's New Orleans: The Living Legends series featured this charming trio music. Cottrell's style has none of George Lewis's harshness: he preferred the soft tone and modest vibrato that typified the elegant Tio style. Louis never had a better showcase than this one, with the spirited strum of Sayles and the no-frills line of Breaux (Pavageau appears on one track only). There are flaws in the phrasing, but on things like 'Rose Room' the purling variations have surprising intensity.

Dunstan Coulber

CLARINET, TENOR SAXOPHONE

Perrier Award winner in 2000 but slow progress since.

 Standards For A New Century Nagel Heyer NH CD 081 Coulber; John Pearce (p); Nik Preston (b); Steve Brown (d). 9/01.

 I'll Be Around Nagel Heyer NH CD 093 As above, except omit Brown; add Clark Tracey (d). 11/03.
Critics go through contortions at the sound of a young man playing in the idiom of a past era or decade. They did the same when Scott Hamilton came along. Coulber isn't quite of that calibre (though on tenor he somewhat resembles Scott) and the debut release promises more than it delivers. What you get is crisp, deliberately old-fashioned jazz clarinet and swing tenor ranging across a predictable roster of standards. No Radiohead, no Nick Drake, no Joni Mitchell, which'll gladden the hearts of purists, but has Dunstan not warmed to anything since the era of Harry Barris, Porter, Duke and Rodgers & Hart?

Album two continues with the same brief, and a similar result. It would take a churl not to enjoy it and there are definite gains, more invention, more maturity, perhaps.

Curtis Counce (1926–63)

DOUBLE BASS

A short-lived but influential figure who moved out of Kansas after experience with one of the last territory bands to join the best of the West Coast boppers in LA. Superficially reminiscent of Red Mitchell and Monty Budwig, but with a big, swinging delivery that suited solo exposure.

 You Get More Bounce / (*) Landslide /  Carl's Blues Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 159 / 606 / 423 Counce; Jack Sheldon, Gerald Wilson (t); Harold Land (ts); Carl Perkins (p); Frank Butler (d). 10/56; 4/57; 8/57.

 Sonority Contemporary C7655 As above. 1/58.

(*) Exploring The Future Boplicity CD 7 Counce; Rolf Ericson (t); Harold Land (ts); Elmo Hope (p); Frank Butler (d). 58.

(*) The Complete Studio Recordings: The Master Takes Gambit 69258 2CD As above. 10/56–1/58.

Counce's late-'50s quintet was one of the more resilient bands working on the West Coast at the time. The Gambit set pretty much rounds up the whole discography, but doesn't include any of the material on Exploring, which was made slightly later for Dootone. A pity, because it's perhaps the best of the bassist's records, but Landslide (Counce always like to namecheck his solo stars) is a fine one too, showcasing Land's beefy tenor and Sheldon's very underrated playing. Perkins, remembered best for his strange, crab-wise technique, was probably on better form with this band than anywhere else on record, but the real star – acknowledged on 'The Butler Did It' from Carl's Blues and 'A Drum Conversation' from Sonority – is the percussionist, who shared Counce's instinctive swing. He is also the dedicatee of 'A Fifth For Frank' (the harmonic interval? a bottle of hooch?) on Landslide. Ironically, Counce's own strongest moments as soloist come on 'A Night In Tunisia' and 'How Long Has This Been Going On?' from the grab-bag Sonority.

The last of his records was a considerable rarity before this valuable reissue, which makes something of a rather shaky mix. It's hard bop without the strut and the sneer, just laid-back, swinging music played to challenging charts, mostly by Hope. The pianist's 'Race For Space' and 'Countdown' are as advanced as the titles suggest, and unlike most of the bands around who used the metaphor to suggest how up-to-the-moment they were (obsession with space travel wasn't limited to Sun Ra and the Arkestra), this group did manage to make a flagging idiom sound fresh.

This premature career coda (Counce died suddenly of a heart attack five years later) is worth hearing, but thanks to Gambit a new generation of listeners can make contact with a group that had drifted to the margins of jazz history.

Jacques Coursil

TRUMPET

An important figure of the '60s avant-garde, recently come to light again.

 Way Ahead Sunspots 535 Coursil; Arthur Jones (as); Beb Guerin (b); Claude Delcloo (d). 69.
Somewhat different in cast to the majority of free-jazz free-for-alls of the time, Coursil's small group takes an almost deliberate line on some of the material, and provides a stunning reading of Bill Dixon's 'Paper'. Jones isn't a particularly charismatic improviser, with a sound reminiscent of Marion Brown and Noah Howard, but he provides an ideal foil here and often adds a harmonic bottom that Guerin is sometimes too over-busy to deliver. A worthwhile historical item.

 Mimimal Brass Tzadik 8016 Coursil (t solo). 4/05.
Organized as three 'fanfares for a poet', these improvisations have a wonderful, ringing authority, a sense of some long-buried sense of mission coming overground again. It's always easy to over-dramatize the creative return – after nearly 30 years of studio silence – of a once-important figure. Coursil comes back a new man, declamatory, lyrical, fresh-toned and in every way marvellous. Younger players – Douglas, Evans, Dorner – have been doing fresh and very different things with the trumpet. Here's someone who remembers the days when Lester Bowie and Leo Smith provided the dominant sound.

* Clameurs Sunnyside 3073 Coursil; Alexander Bernard (b); Mino Cinelu (perc); voices. 7 & 8/06.
An intense and often very moving sequence, inspired by Frantz Fanon and other spokesmen for négritude and anti-colonialism. If some of the rhetoric seems to belong to a past age, Coursil has kept faith with this philosophy and with a distinctive approach to brass improvisation for many decades. A demanding record, but emotionally rather than technically.

Sylvie Courvoisier (born 1968)

PIANO

Born and educated in Switzerland; a virtuoso player with an impressive range of improvising associations.

 Deux Pianos Intakt 064 Courvoisier; Jacques Demierre (p). 2/99.
There's nothing much here to get a purchase on, with only half a dozen of the tracks exceeding three minutes. Unfortunately, when we do get a longer duo improvisation, as on 'Ecorce', the results are somewhat repetitive. The two pianists almost too deliberately exploit their differences of approach, though these tend to vary from one track to the other, so there are no politically incorrect conclusions to be drawn about 'femininity' and 'attack'. Beautiful in places, but hardly compelling.

 Passaggio Intakt 075 Courvoisier; Joëlle Léandre (b); Susie Ibarra (d). 02.

No one will mistake this for the Cecil Taylor trio, though not because the music lacks force and emphasis. The live material from the Taktlos festival is particularly confrontational, but after a while Ibarra's tumultuous sound seems to dissolve into an undifferentiated mass of sound, which tends to neutralize the detail and singing exchanges between Courvoisier and the magnificent Léandre. Like much of the pianist's work to date, this is great in small doses, but fails to sustain interest as a whole.

(*) Abaton ECM 0677252 Courvoisier; Mark Feldman (vn); Erik Friedlander (clo). 9/02.

This is strictly credited to Abaton, the group, but it ranks as Courvoisier's best appearance on record. She has four long compositions on the first disc, somewhat classical in character and played with correctness and feeling by the trio. The second disc is a set of again short group improvisations, though intriguingly all of these sound like miniature Courvoisier ideas. Friedlander and Feldman are formidable playing partners, but they sound like sidemen for much of the way here, testimony to the sheer force of Sylvie's imagination.

 Lonelyville Intakt CD 120 Courvoisier; Mark Feldman (vn); Vincent Courtois (clo); Gerald Cleaver (d); Ikue Mori (elec). 4/06.

The personnel is very similar to that of Abaton, but there are new dimensions to the sound and the playing here. Courvoisier is almost reminiscent of the queenly Irène Schweizer in places, playing with flowing authority and tough grace. Feldman is simply magnificent and Courtois manages to sustain an independent role within the ensemble, often creating some of the most interesting effects. Mori sometimes flounders for ideas of substance but she's very much part of the sound-world.

 Signs And Epigrams Tzadik 8033 Courvoisier (p solo). 4/07.

There's real thought in the playing. Though the formula is pretty much as before, with more emphasis on organically hewn fragments of sound rather than long harmonic exercises, the shapes and textures are more convincing, the piano has real character and while the idiom won't strike all as belonging even close to jazz, the basic spirit is there.

Also, in brief:

 Birds Of A Feather Unit 4102. 97.

Prepared piano duets with percussionist Mark Nauseef, who also processes the sound. Intriguing but hard work over the distance.

Stanley Cowell (born 1941)

PIANO

He saw Tatum at the age of six and was hooked. An apprenticeship with Roland Kirk, but his dark, complex style was shaped in association with Charles Tolliver, with whom he formed the Strata East label.

 Sienna Steeplechase SCCD 31253 Cowell; Ron McClure (b); Keith Copeland (d). 7/89.

The style is a sombre, muscular hybrid of Bud Powell, Monk and Tatum and bridges the pianism of bebop with elements of '60s free. For too long, Cowell's recorded output was restricted to work as a jobbing sideman on the Galaxy label. Even now, a substantial proportion of his work as leader is out of print.

This, however, is perhaps his finest moment on record, a tightly marshalled, endlessly inventive session that ushered in a period of intense activity in the studios. The two opening tracks, 'Cal Massey' and the gentle ballad 'I Think It's Time To Say Goodbye', take the measure of Cowell's broad expressive range. Copeland seems out of place on the slower tracks, a couple of which might better have been done as duos with McClure, but his abrupt unison accents on 'Evidence' are startlingly effective: quite the best version of Monk's tune since the master's own. A long 'I Concentrate On You' adds nothing much to the hundreds that have gone before, waffling round the chords almost distractedly, but with the title-track, one of a cycle of 'Sienna'-related compositions, and the closing 'Dis Place' Cowell lets loose his remarkable harmonic and rhythmic intelligence. Great things followed through the rest of 1989 and 1990, for DIW and Concord, in the main, but mostly these have slipped out of view.

(*) Departure No. 2 Steeplechase SCCD 31275 Cowell; Walter Booker (b); Billy Higgins (d). 10/90.

 Games /  Bright Passion / (*) Live Steeplechase SCCD 31293 / 31328 / 31359 Cowell; Cheyney Thomas (b); Wardell Thomas (d). 8/91; 4/93; 4/93.

As so often, Steeplechase provided a berth for a disenfranchised American master. Turning 50, Cowell was acquiring a new creative momentum and Departure has a jagged, almost pugnacious quality. 'Photon In The Paper World' (reappearing from 1969) and 'Splintered Ice' combine technical mastery with genuine expressiveness. 'Four Harmonizations Of The Blues' is almost as mechanical as it sounds, but clever and sharply achieved, with many of Cowell's characteristic false symmetries and weird harmonic regressions: tiresome only when pushed too far.

The later dates are hampered by a less-experienced and below-par rhythm section, though both these records stand the test of time surprisingly well. On Games Cowell plays with huge authority, though often without much reference to his colleagues, driving the rhythms and abruptly redirecting the music. There are majestic episodes on 'From The Rivers of Our Father', but they fail to add up to anything larger. 'Sienna: Welcome To The New World' is perfunctory and bland, and the new material fails to get things moving.

The trio is tighter and more responsive on the second set and the group's in great heart at the Jazzhus in Copenhagen. Even if the piano isn't of studio quality on the live date, the playing is terrific. Cowell sticks mainly to standards and jazz tunes, opening with 'Anthropology' and closing with 'In Walked Bud', but mostly staying away from bebop in between. The three originals, 'Bright Passion', 'Brilliant Circles' and a longer 'Prayer for Peace', are great and the set's produced with a sure touch.

 Angel Eyes Steeplechase SCCD 31339 Cowell (p solo). 4/93.

A solid hour of flawless piano jazz. From the opening, Coltrane-tinged 'The Night Has A Thousand Eyes' to the small group of more demanding originals at the close – 'Akua', 'The Ladder', 'Abscretion' – Cowell grips with his singular harmonic inventiveness. The house piano at Steeplechase hasn't a majestic sound – more workmanlike – but it's responsive enough for Stanley to weave a subtly inflected spell. Even John Lennon's 'Imagine' convinces.

(*) Mandara Blossoms Steeplechase SCCD 331386 Cowell; Billy Pierce (ts); Jeff Halsey (b); Ralph Peterson (d); Karen Francis (v). 11/95.

Debby Randolph's lyric to 'Equipoise' sounds as if it has always been there and Karen Francis's rich voice lifts the song up out of the ordinary. With the strongly vocalized Pierce on the session, this has a rich choral feel that at first does not suggest a Cowell set. He writes his own lyrics for 'This Life' (the best of the bunch) and for the brief, watercolour title-track, which is built on an attractive falling figure. Randolph and John Scott are responsible for the remaining words. Somehow, the whole package doesn't quite cohere and significantly the best (and longest) track is Strayhorn's 'Daydream', complete with extra verse, and it succeeds largely because it does pitch Karen and Stanley against each other, with saxophone coming in at exactly the right juncture.

Also, in brief:

(*) Setup Steeplechase SCCD 31349. 10/93.
With Eddie Henderson (t), Dick Griffin (tb) and Rick Margitza (ts), a rousingly upbeat situation for the sometimes fustian Cowell.

(*) Hear Me One Steeplechase SCCD 31407. 10/96.
Bebop, Monk, 'Photon In A [sic] Paper World' and unexpectedly good alto from Bruce Williams.

 Death Is The Communion 3D 1086. 07.
Cowell has released very little since the mid- to late '90s but on Japanese labels, who've also helped reintroduce things like 1973's Musa Ancestral Streams. The old stuff's great, of course, but this one's a reminder that Stanley is still a creative giant.

Anthony Cox

DOUBLE BASS

Busy section man who's found time to make a couple of studio forays on his own account.

 That And This Sketch 333029 Cox (b solo). 02.
Solo bass records take a bit of absorbing, especially at CD length, but Cox is such an inventive fellow that these unaccompanied pieces have all the necessary qualities: light and shade, incident and colouration, time and local detail. Not to every taste, one must assume, but well worth sampling.

Norrie Cox (1932–2007)

CLARINET

Formed the San Jacinto Jazz Band at home in England, but moved to the US in 1966 and with Charlie DeVore founded the New Orleans Stompers.

 Move The Body Over /  Dance Hall Days /  Live At Illiana Delmark DE 231 / 236 / 241 Cox; Charlie DeVore (c); Jim Klippert (tb); Butch Thompson (p); Mike Carroll (g, bj); Bill Evans (b); Donald 'Doggie' Berg (d). 00–02.
Engagingly authentic Dixieland from Cox's loyal cohort of fellow traditionalists. The leader's own style was an amalgam of Johnny Dodds and George Lewis, the former mercifully predominating. Thompson, best known for his appearances on A Prairie Home Companion, is always a bonus, but there's not a foot put wrong anywhere on these. Not worth analysing them in any detail. They're there to be enjoyed.

Also, in brief:

(*) Let Me Hear Them Feet GHB 239. 06.
A slightly disappointing outing from the old crew. Age is beginning to tell and Norrie wasn't long for this world.

Lol Coxhill (born 1932)

SOPRANO, TENOR AND SOPRANINO SAXOPHONES

Deeply rooted in jazz, but ranging over free music and other forms. A vastly talented soprano specialist with a tone that ranges from hard-edged to achingly sweet.

 Spectral Soprano: Solo And Group Improvisations, 1954–1999 Emanem 4204 2CD Coxhill; very large collective personnel. 54–99.

(*) Ear Of Beholder See For Miles SEECD 414 Coxhill; Burton Greene, Jasper Van't Hof (p); Pierre Courbois (d); David Bedford (p, v); various walk-ons, environments. 7/70, 1/71.

 Toverbal Sweet ... Plus See For Miles SEECD 480 Coxhill; Jasper Van't Hof (p); Pierre Courbois (d). 72.
There is no one quite like Lol Coxhill. The only musician one might feasibly liken him to is Lee Konitz: prolific, endlessly inventive, deceptively dry-toned. Spectral Soprano is a wonderful primer, a grab-bag of early material onward. As such, it doesn't have much structure or principle of order, but it dramatizes his personal take on both jazz and free music. An early recording – made at a lo-fi 3¾ i.p.s – has him running the changes on 'Autumn In New York' and already demonstrating his preference for melody over mere harmonic variation. There are cuts featuring the young saxophonist, still then basically a Pres-influenced tenor man, with Tony Knight's Chessmen, who toured with visiting American R&B artists; there are solo performances from throughout his career, most notably 'Magic Buffalo', which has him ranging between tenor, soprano and piano; and there are duos and group pieces, with Steve Miller, bassist John Edwards, with the so-called Melody Four (a trio, naturally) and with the London Improvisers Orchestra. A predictably eclectic dramatis personae includes alto saxophonist Bruce Turner, 'the Dirty Bopper', Lu Edmonds of punk band the Damned and poet Bob Cobbing. Lol also checks the acoustics of a Danish swimming pool with a slide saxophone. As a compilation, it isn't faultless and there are some frankly bad recordings included, but it builds a picture of a protean genius; Lol's spoof saxophone tuition tape at the start of CD2 is a delight.

It has been said that Coxhill is not so much an improviser as an instant composer. This is only half true, for his grasp of vertical harmony is impeccable, as can be heard on 'Lover Man', included on Ear. His great strength is a busker's ability to turn out simple, effective tunes, seemingly by the yard. Ear Of Beholder was recorded for BBC DJ John Peel's Dandelion label. It consists of a few studio tracks, some festival material – like the tenor 'Deviation Dance', on which the sound is pushed through a Gibson Maestro – and some tunes busked out on London streets; the opening 'Hungerford' was recorded on a pedestrian bridge across the Thames where Lol used to have a regular pitch. A double LP has been compressed on to a single CD with the omission of just one track. The long 'Rasa Moods' with Van't Hof, Courbois and Greene was recorded in Utrecht; grim sound, fascinating music, with some effective use of the Maestro again. A whimsical grab-bag (there's even a track of kids singing 'I Am The Walrus'), very much in the spirit of Peel's own wayward enthusiasms, it doesn't wear particularly well and will be of most interest to those who've lost their (now very tradeable) vinyl.

Toverbal Sweet is more consistent. A club recording, it represents a mid-ground between jazz and free music all three were exploring in their different ways at the time. Van't Hof uses both electric and acoustic piano, but much of the action comes from Courbois's expanded kit.

* The Story So Far ... Oh, Really? Cuneiform RUNE 253/254 2CD Coxhill; Steve Miller (p); Kevin Ayers, Phil Miller (g); Roy Babbington, Richard Sinclair, Archie Leggett (b); Pip Pyle (d); Laurie Allan (d, perc); Robert Wyatt (perc, v). 73, 74.

These two treasured British albums, now available together, range from Canterbury whimsy to the beginnings of electronica, free jazz and elements of surreal bebop, but they're distinguished by some deceptively fine Coxhill saxophone. 'Wimbledon Baths' has him overdubbed, but apart from the strange sound-collage of 'Maggots' much of this is placed pretty 'straight'. Miller is perhaps incidental to our concerns here, but his work deserves this fresh – and now posthumous – airing.

* Coxhill On Ogun Ogun OGCD 008 Coxhill; Michael Garrick (electric p); Veryan Weston (p); Ken Shaw, Richard Wright (g); Dave Green, Paul Mitchell-Davidson (b); Colin Wood (clo); John Mitchell (perc). 77–78.

Glorious. Bringing together two of Lol's best records, The Joy Of Paranoia and Diverse, from the later '70s, this is the place to start if you've never encountered him before. Joy began with a live group improvisation recorded in Yorkshire; 'The Wakefield Capers' is the perfect illustration of Lol's ability to play free forms with all the sweetness of a Johnny Hodges and little of fellow soprano specialist Steve Lacy's acidulous attack. Accompanied by the three guitars of 'Paws For Thought' – with Mitchell-Davidson on a wibbly bass – he weaves two long, thoughtful solos full of long, bent notes, sliding intervals and little melodic ideas which seem to rise up out of nowhere. 'The Cluck Variations' is a collaboration with pianist Weston, quite formally cast but full of anarchic invention. 'The Joy Of Paranoia Waltz' should be played at all wedding receptions just at the moment when new in-laws start to eye one another across the dance floor; it uses inventive overdubs on a simple riff. The clinching joy of the 1978 album for us, though, was the pair of standards, 'Lover Man' and 'Perdido', played as duets with Michael Garrick on electric piano. These offer further strong evidence of Lol's gifts as a standards player. The Tizol tune is a revelation, reinvented wholesale.

Diverse appeals, but it is a strong and inventive set consisting of one solo piece and a quartet. 'Diver' is a duet with a loose floorboard at Seven Dials in London; the quartet consists of cello, bass and percussion.

 Termite One Bruce's Fingers 32 Coxhill; Paul Rutherford (tb); George Haslam (bs); Simon H. Fell (b); Paul Hession (d). 89.

Recorded at the Termite Festival in 1989 and only released on the bassist's own label a decade later. The combination of Coxhill, Haslam and the peerless Rutherford is intoxicating, but the presence of a rhythm section somehow seems to constrain the music.

(*) Three Blokes FMP CD 63 Coxhill; Steve Lacy, Evan Parker (ss). 94.

Stylistically Coxhill is very different from either fellow Briton Evan Parker or Steve Lacy, the other main soprano specialists. His first influence seems to have been Charlie Parker, though he had a solo apprenticeship in R&B groups as well. He plays a curious part in these solos, duos and trios, rationalizing, normalizing, finding a middle ground and occasionally injecting a moment of gruff humour into some fairly dry and dour proceedings.

(*) Boundless Emanem 4021 Coxhill; Veryan Weston (p). 1/98.

They recorded before, in 1978, with a superb performance on Lol's The Joy Of Paranoia. Like Lol, Weston is a brilliant miniaturist, and the combination of the two is exquisite. Not that many of these 15 tracks are particularly short. The longest are over six minutes and are developed in the saxophonist's familiar, jazz-based style. Weston is no less lateral a thinker, but his sources are very different, and part of the joy of the session is the combination of two seemingly unlike personalities finding areas of common concern.

 Alone And Together Emanem 4034 Coxhill; Stevie Wishart (vn, hurdy-gurdy); Marcio Mattos (clo, elec). 10/91–5/99.

The big difference here is that for the first four tracks Lol doubles on the toughest of all the saxophones; 'A Rare Sopranino Solo' confirms that it holds no terrors, but it's not the easiest of listens. Three of the four are duets with Wishart, who brings along her hurdy-gurdy as well, creating a witch's kettle of bagpipe drones. The duet with Mattos is characteristically thoughtful and again constructed over a drone background, this time using live and gently responsive electronics. The remainder of the set consists of a delightful 20-minute solo soprano recital at the Queen Elizabeth Hall.

(*) More Together Than Alone Emanem 4136 Coxhill; Henry Lowther (t); Pat Thomas (ky, samplers); John Russell (g); Hugh Davies (invented instruments). 7/00–2/05.

A delightful grab-bag of Lol in improvisational mode, one duet each with the four additional players, but right at the heart of the set a long solo performance recorded at the Vortex on 4 July 2000. A couple of times, it sounds as if the saxophonist might be referencing 'The Star Spangled Banner', but that might be wishful thinking.

It's always good to be reminded of Lowther's ongoing interest in free playing. There is enough of a 'jazz' feel in what they do together to differentiate it from the rest; nudged, restless figures, bluesy tones, a hint of counterpoint, a few high, bugling calls from the trumpeter. Russell is in exceptional form, while Thomas continues to astound with a vision that seems to depend on no one and nothing but his own remarkable resources. And there's a reminder of the late, lamented Hugh Davies, an utterly unique presence.

* Worms Organising Archdukes Emanem 4074 Coxhill; Veryan Weston (p, org). 01, 02.

Lol and Veryan Weston have been playing partners for a quarter of a century, and it shows. These are riveting duo performances, full of surprise and tender beauty. The curious title comes from the provenance of the recordings, the Worm in Rotterdam and the Archiduc, a new music venue in Brussels; the 'organising' part is a chamber organ interlude recorded at the Red Rose in London.

'The Second Duet Of Worms' features some of Coxhill's best playing on record, an expressive, jazzy introduction that builds into something genuinely capacious. Weston's piano style is best characterized as romantic and though these titles are almost always added after the fact, he must have been aware of the historical resonance of an 'Archduke Duo'. Both these pieces are virtuosic, with Coxhill exploring the upper range of his saxophone and his repertoire of multiphonic effects.

 Out To Launch Emanem 4086 Coxhill (ss solo) and with: Ian Smith (t); Paul Rutherford (tb); Neil Metcalfe (f); Alex Ward (cl); Veryan Weston (p); Lu Edmonds (amplified bass bj); Olly Blanchflower (b); Steve Noble (perc); Michael Kosmides (theremins); Knut Aufermann, Steve Beresford, Pat Thomas (elec). 10/01, 3 & 4/02.

The title is label boss Martin Davidson's joke, a reference to what he claims is his least favourite Eric Dolphy album. Most of the music is solo performance, recorded in Chicago and London, but with the addition of a group improvisation with members of the London Improvisers Orchestra who had convened to play a special launch concert for Lol's Spectral Soprano retrospective. The CD had to be delayed but the gig went ahead; hence, Unlaunched Orchestra. It seems Coxhill was unwilling to start the music himself, which explains a degree of hilarity at the start of the piece, which is the shortest and least appealing element of another very strong record. The longest track is the Chicago set, named 'Music For Feathery Fronds'. It's a virtuosic performance, full of jazz references and extended technique on the saxophone. The two other improvisations, 'Relaunch One And Two', are denser and darker in mood, but no less effective.

Also, in brief:

 Digswell Duets Emanem 4052. 5/78.
Fascinating playing and sound-processing, involving Lol, Veryan Weston (p) and Simon Emmerson (elec), recorded at Digswell House in Welwyn Garden City.

 Slow Music Voiceprint VPCD 160. 4–5/80.
Duos with guitarist/electronics man Morgan Fisher.

 Solos East/West Slam CD 308. 90, 95.
Lol and George Haslam don't actually play together, so the title is strictly accurate. The baritonist comes to free jazz from an interest in West Coast cool, but never sounds like a Mulligan acolyte. Lol is much more of a vertical improviser, albeit one who is highly sensitive to melody as well as harmonics.

 Mouth Fragile Noise CD 01FN52. N.D.
Sixteen challenging improvisations with Mick Walter (ts) in strange but effective packaging.

 Milwaukee 2002 Emanem 4097. 4/02.
No clear leader on these solos, duos, one trio involving Lol, Paul Rutherford (tb), Torsten Müller (b).

 This That & The Other Loose Torque LTCD003. 9/03.
Intriguing trio improvs with fellow saxophonist Frode Gjerstad and Nick Stephens (b).

Dylan Cramer

ALTO SAXOPHONE

Fine young Canadian altoist who unfashionably but impressively claims Sonny Criss as his main influence.

 All Night Long /  Bumpin' on Sunset Nagel Heyer 73 / 90 Cramer; Ron Johnston (p); Steve Holy (b); John Nolan (d). 10/98; 12/02.
We feel there's more than a touch of Oliver Nelson about Cramer's playing (an impression supported by the inclusion of 'Stolen Moments' here), but the vibrato is certainly reminiscent of later Criss, as is the easy ravelling/unravelling of boppish but not pseudo-bop lines. 'Lover Man' is the closest Cramer comes to copping Bird licks, and it isn't that close. 'Estate' and Wes Montgomery's 'Bumpin'' are great tracks, individual, lyrical and somehow carefree. Nice support from the band on the Nagel Heyer reissue from the defunct Casa label.

The Wes Montgomery tune pops up again on the second disc but in the midst of a weirdly eclectic set of tunes. There's the love theme from Blade Runner, a Carlos Santana song, and Ennio Morricone's theme from A Fistful of Dollars. Add to that, though, 'Until The Real Thing Comes Along' and Carl Perkins's 'Groove Yard' and you have a set that's bound to intrigue. The playing doesn't always quite match up and there are places where Cramer seems to be struggling to make 'jazz' out of these materials. Mostly, though, he succeeds.

Crane River Jazz Band

GROUP

One of the seminal British traditional groups; founded in 1949 by Ken and Bill Colyer and run from 1951 to 1957 by Sonny Morris.

 The Crane River Jazz Band Cadillac SGCV/MEL CD 202 Ken Colyer (c, t, g, v); Sonny Morris (c); John R. T. Davies (tb, org, g); Ray Orpwood (tb); Monty Sunshine (cl); Pat Hawes (p, wbd, v); John Shipcott (p); Ben Marshall (bj); Julian Davies (b); Ron Bowden, Cyril Louth, George Hopkinson, John Westwood (d); Bill Colyer (perc). 50–53.
 Vintage Crane River Jazz Band 1950–1952 Lake LACD 182 As above, except omit Louth, Westwood; add Phil Dearne (p); Les Page (bj); Denny Coffee, Stan Pearcy (b); Pete Appleby (d). 50–53.
The first track on the Cadillac set, 'Muddy Old River' with Ken and John R. T. Davies on guitars, sounds as ancient and mysterious as a Ma Rainey discovery and in a way the whole CD offers that experience, eavesdropping the primal stirrings of British traditional jazz. The material is an eccentric mix of ragtime, blues, music hall songs, New Orleans staples and Creole melodies, all of it played by impressionable young postwar Londoners. The sound is appropriately dusty but conjures up the Metro Club and various exotic Home Counties locations. Much of the first half of the Lake set is practice sessions from 1950, revealing that, however earnest they were, they weren't quite there yet. The later music is a bit more fluent, although it's Ken Colyer (shortly to depart) whom one waits to hear.

Hank Crawford (born 1934)

ALTO AND BARITONE SAXOPHONES

Born in Memphis. He toured with Ray Charles and recorded for Atlantic. Spent some time in commercial music.

 More Soul Atlantic 8122 73709 Crawford; Phillip Guilbeau (t); John Hunt (t, flhn); David Newman (ts); Leroy Cooper (bs); Edgar Willis (b); Milt Turner (d). 3/61.
 Midnight Ramble Milestone MCD 9112 Crawford; Waymon Reed, Charlie Miller (t); Dick Griffin (tb); David 'Fathead' Newman (ts); Howard Johnson (bs); Dr John (ky); Calvin Newborn (g); Charles Greene (b); Bernard Purdie (d). 11/82.
 Night Beat Milestone MCD 9168 Crawford; Lew Soloff, Alan Rubin (t); David 'Fathead' Newman (ts, f); Howard Johnson (bs); Dr John (ky); Melvin Sparks (g); Wilbur Bascomb (b); Bernard Purdie (d). 9–10/88.
Crawford says that he tries 'to keep the melody so far in front that you can almost sing along', and that irresistibly vocal style lends his simple approach to the alto a deep-rooted conviction. His best records are swinging parties built on the blues, southern R&B and enough bebop to keep a more hardened jazz listener satisfied.

More Soul is a vintage Atlantic, actually his first as leader, and minus a piano he gets the horns to act as harmonic carpet. The result is sonorous and churchy in the Brother Ray mould (it's basically the Charles unit), with Hank and Fathead taking the solo honours. Following a long spell at Atlantic, he renewed his career at Milestone, where he was provided with consistently sympathetic settings that ended up sounding too consistent; there's not much to choose between any of them, above or below, though Dr John's presence usually guarantees quality.

 South-Central Milestone MCD 9201 Crawford; Stan Hope, Dr John (p); Gloria Coleman (org); Melvin Sparks (g); Peter Martin Weiss, Wilbur Bascomb (b); Grady Tate, Bernard Purdie (d). 2/90–8/92.
'Splanky' rollicks along, though here and elsewhere in the period Crawford sounds as though he's starting to take things easy, leaving Dr John and Gloria Coleman to stoke up the fires a bit.

(*) Heart And Soul Rhino/Atlantic R2 71673 2CD As above albums, plus additional personnel. 7/58–5/92.
A handsome package that gives us something close to the definitive Crawford retrospective. It starts, fittingly, with the Ray Charles band at Newport, but the key early tracks on disc one are those from the More Soul, Soul Clinic and From The Heart albums. The Atlantic material works to a grand formula, but a formula none the less, and it palls a little over two long CDs. After a few Creed Taylor rhapsodies from the '70s, the second disc turns to the Milestone albums. Tracks with B. B. King and Etta James restore to Crawford his righteous role as a signifying sideman and pretty much close the circle on this middleweight's gratifying career.

Also, in brief:

 It's A Funky Thing To Do Collectables 6597. 70.
The final date for Atlantic, and signs that the formula was tired.

() Indigo Blue /  Mr Chips / () Soul Survivors / () Steppin' Up / () On The Blue Side Milestone MCD 9119 / 9149 / 9142 / 9153 / 9177. 83–89.
Also-rans from the '80s sequence.

 Groove Master Milestone MCD 9182. 2–3/90.
Turn-of-the-'90s session with some enlivening Dr John keyboards.

(*) Portrait /  Tight Milestone MCD 9192 / 9529. 90; 4–5/96.
Nine-to-five playing from Mr Dependable.

() Road Tested / () After Dark /  Crunch Time Milestone MCD 9274 / 9279 / 9287. 7/97; 2/98; 11/98.
The old firm of Crawford and Jimmy McGriff (org) share the billing.

 The World Of Hank Crawford Milestone MCD 9304. 2/00.
Aridly professional in some regards, but it beats any smooth jazz on the scene right now.

Marilyn Crispell (born 1947)

PIANO

Classically trained, but turned on to modern jazz by John Coltrane and subsequently joined Anthony Braxton in another classic quartet. Her improvisations are always densely detailed and powerfully emoted.

 Live In Berlin Black Saint 120069 Crispell; Billy Bang (vn); Peter Kowald (b); John Betsch (d). 11/82.
Crispell holds up strongly in rugged company on this early set from the Total Music Meeting. The set is dominated by a huge piece, 'ABC', dedicated to Anthony Braxton. Her background in classical, particularly Baroque, music is still clearly audible in oblique contrapuntal passages and wild, seamless fugues. The two string-players seem worlds apart and don't interact very effectively.

* Selected Works: 1983–1986, Solo Duo Quartet Leo Golden Years of New Jazz 11 2CD Crispell; Didier Petit (clo); Marcio Mattos (b); Doug James, Yoval Mincemacher (d, perc). 83–86.
This brings together the solo LP Rhythms Hung In Undrawn Sky, the duo set with Doug James And Your Ivory Voice Sings, and a somewhat less satisfactory album of quartet improvisations with strings and percussion. The first two records sound as fresh and compelling as ever. Crispell's supposed Taylor influence is never as evident as often suggested, and the solo record is much more obviously influenced by Coltrane's piled harmonies and increasingly inventive rhythmic language. The duo with the relatively unknown James has renewed vigour on CD, though the quartet tracks with Petit and Mincemacher don't convince.

* For Coltrane Leo CDLR 195 Crispell (p solo). 7/87.
Solo performances by Crispell are dramatic, harmonically tense and wholly absorbing. The first of these was a remarkable concert given in London in the summer of 1987, when Crispell supported Alice Coltrane with a solo set dedicated to Alice's late husband. Opening with a torrid 'Dear Lord' and closing with the billowing 'After The Rain', she improvised a series of 'collages' in memory of the great saxophonist; also included, a piece called 'Coltrane Time', derived from rhythmic cells on which the saxophonist had been experimenting before his death.

* Gaia Leo Records LR 152 Crispell; Reggie Workman (b); Doug James (d, perc). 3/87.
Gaia is one of the finest composition/improvisation records of the '80s, a hymn to the planet that is neither mawkish nor sentimental, but tough-minded, coherent and entire. Spared conventional rhythm-section duties, Workman and James combine extremely well, producing both a dense ripieno for Crispell's dramatic concertante effects and a powerful drama of their own.

* Labyrinths Victo 6 Crispell (p solo). 10/87.
'Au Chanteur Qui Danse' is a long improvisation dedicated to Cecil Taylor. It's neither homage nor pastiche, but a very personal improvisation which uses some of Taylor's familiar dancing rhythms, firecracker phrasing and dervish concentration. Also included are two Coltrane themes, 'Lazy Bird' and 'After The Rain', which was one of her signature pieces at this period. Brief as the former is, it underlines an instinctive understanding of jazz harmony and song form; Crispell rarely excavates material like this for its purely technical dimensions. What she creates here is logically formed, expressively coherent and quietly perfect. Recorded live in Quebec during the annual Festival de Musique Actuelle.

 Live In Zurich Leo LRCD 122 Crispell; Reggie Workman (b); Paul Motian (d). 4/89.
It's interesting to compare Motian's role here with his work behind Geri Allen and Charlie Haden. He seems busier than usual, louder and more emphatic, except when the spotlight falls on him, as it does on the second long improvisation, and he reverts to a more familiar articulation. There are moments of clutter on this set, taken from a European tour, but also signs that Crispell had found a group that allowed her to extend her rhythmic ideas. Signing off with Coltrane's 'Dear Lord' was a familiar enough tactic by this stage, but listen to how she relocates the piece by subtly distorting its metre.

 Overlapping Hands: Eight Segments FMP CD30 Crispell; Irène Schweizer (p). 90.
There are moments when this sounds like a single musical imagination, so close is the understanding between the two women. Schweizer's sound is obviously more European; Crispell draws deeper on an American tradition and constantly refers to tonal centres that her collaborator wants to push away to the very boundaries of the music. The recording is near perfect; the music is a joy.

 Circles Victo 12 Crispell; Oliver Lake (ss, as); Peter Buettner (ts); Reggie Workman (b); Gerry Hemingway (d). 10/90.
Four long compositions which move into free territory before revealing their structure. Unusual at this period to hear Crispell work with horns and unfortunately she sounds a little overpowered by them: this partly because of the live mix, which is hopeless, but one also senses a certain desire to keep out of the front line and concentrate on shaping the inner contours of quite turbulent music, as she does on the very long opening 'Rituel'; something similar happens on 'Chant' and 'Circles', which are better proportioned. The chemistry with Workman and Hemingway is fresh and fissile, but Lake and Buettner seem detached.

 Band On The Wall Matchless MRCD 25 Crispell; Eddie Prévost (d, perc). 5/94.
(*) Destiny Okkadisk OD 12003 Crispell; Fred Anderson (ts); Hamid Drake (d, perc). 8/94.
Recorded live during the Women of New Music festival in Chicago, the Okkadisk set is marred only by having the piano mixed down too low and occasionally swamped by saxophone and percussion. Otherwise it finds her in thoroughly sympathetic company. Anderson's diction is Coltrane-influenced but generously varied and thoroughly personalized. As with Braxton and Prévost, this seems like a relationship written in the stars, and it allows them to build up whole areas of interaction in which the exchange of ideas is almost too fast to follow. Drake provides sterling accompaniment and often takes the initiative in breaking up Crispell's long, suspended lines.

The Matchless disc was also recorded live, at the Manchester venue. It's a fiery, sometimes almost violent performance in which ideas are run together with a challenging insouciance. Extravagant as she often is, Crispell has rarely sounded so unfettered; oddly, perhaps, because Prévost is a highly disciplined drummer and one of the most swinging in a free idiom. One oddity of the set is the inclusion of the Denny Zeitlin composition, 'Quiet Now', towards the end.

 Nothing Ever Was, Anyway ECM 537222-2 2CD Crispell; Gary Peacock (b); Paul Motian (d). 96.
Crispell included Annette Peacock's 'Gesture Without Plot' on each of the two sets documented above, and this exquisitely recorded tribute marks a more extended engagement with the composer. There are moments when the Peacock–Motian partnership is almost too strong-voiced and runs some risk of overpowering the piano, which occupies a now familiar spectrum of dynamics. Crispell has seldom played as elegantly and with such control. To miss this one would be to overlook a contemporary masterpiece.

 Red /  Blue Black Saint 120199 / 120230 Crispell; Stefano Maltese (reeds); Gioconda Cilio (v) (on Blue only). 9/99.
Despite a superficial resemblance, the clarinettist is rhythmically much less open than Anthony Braxton. Most of these pieces find Crispell playing second fiddle and sounding unusually dry. Technically, the standard of performance is very high, but there is little of her usual passionate commitment, and when she does cut loose on Red the effect is strained. Cilio joins the duo for a couple of pieces at the end of Blue, both of them excellent.

 Amaryllis ECM 013400-2 Crispell; Gary Peacock (b); Paul Motian (d). 2/00.
Crispell and her colleagues play some old compositions alongside trio improvisations. Motian's 'Conception Vessel' has the hallmarks of a modern classic, but it is Crispell's brief, intense 'Rounds' which defines a lovely set, intense and languid by turns and full of wonderful invention. The piano tone is gorgeous and Peacock is playing with a fuller voice than ever.

 The Storyteller ECM 038119-2 Crispell; Mark Helias (b); Paul Motian (d). 2/93.
Increasingly concerned with tempered form, this is at first hearing an unfamiliar Crispell. Not until 'Cosmology 2', almost at the end of the set, do we hear the expected torrents of sound. Cleverly, she has also selected some other older themes of Paul Motian's, including 'Flight Of Bluejay' and the title-piece, as a tribute to his still-underrated compositional skill. There are two versions of his 'Cosmology', fascinatingly varied in pace and dynamic. His Monk-like approach has rarely been better served. Helias also contributes two items, 'Harmonic Line' and 'Limbo', which show how utterly musical he is. As ever, the group sound is perfectly balanced, but Helias plays a very different role to Gary Peacock previously, cleaving closer to the harmonic centres and keeping step with Motian's quiet urgency.

Also, in brief:

 Spring Tour 1994 Alice ALCD 13. 3/94.
The season seems completely apposite for music as fresh and affirmative as this; with Anders Jormin (b) and Raymond Strid (d).

 MGM Trio Ramboy 9. 94–95.
Named after their initials: Marilyn, Gerry Hemingway (d) and label-owner Michael Moore (cl, as), whose compositions dominate. Crispell steals the set on 'Temperamental Annie' and 'The Pound Fell Down'.

 Dark Night, And Luminous Musica Secreta 7. 98.
A piano duo with Catalan improviser Agustí Fernández. The sound isn't very good and the two pianos are often muddled.

Sonny Criss (1927–77)

ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Born in Memphis, he played in R&B bands before recording as a bebop leader. Latterly worked in rehabilitating young offenders but became afflicted by depression and took his own life.

 California Boppin' Fresh Sound FSR CD 156 Criss; Al Killian, Howard McGhee (t); Teddy Edwards, Wardell Gray (ts); Charles Fox, Russ Freeman, Hampton Hawes, Michael 'Dodo' Marmarosa (p); Barney Kessel (g); Harry Babasin, Red Callender, Addison Farmer (b); Tim Kennedy, Jackie Mills, Roy Porter (d). 4, 6, 7 & 10/47.

(*) Sonny Criss Quartet, 1949–1957 Fresh Sound FSRCD 64 Criss; Hampton Hawes (p); Iggy Shevack, Buddy Woodson (b); Chuck Thompson (d). 9/49, 11/57.

Criss was perhaps a little too tightly wrapped for the destiny that seemed to await him. Though it was the altogether more robust Sonny Stitt to whom Charlie Parker promised 'the keys of the Kingdom', it was Criss out on the West Coast who inherited most of the ambiguities of Parker's legacy. The earliest of the material is derivative but provides several excellent opportunities to hear Criss's pure, urgent tone and delivery; he comes in behind Wardell Gray on 'Groovin' High' almost impatiently, with a little flurry of notes, before stretching out and shaping those distinctive wailing passages and held notes. The June 1947 material, with the rhythm section that backed Parker at the Hi-De-Ho in Los Angeles earlier that year (Hawes, Farmer, Porter), is probably the best on the disc, with a particularly fine version of 'The Man I Love' that also features Teddy Edwards and Howard McGhee. Two long jam sessions have lots of episodic interest but are marred by Al Killian's dreary high-note work.

Hawes is on hand for both the sessions on the other Fresh Sound, playing a little neatly on the 1949 tracks, which have a brittle politeness suggestive of buried tensions in the studio, but opening out majestically on the two standards which start the November 1957 session. On 'Willow Weep For Me', Criss delivers a gently sorrowful solo, spoken with manly regret and without a wasted gesture. Hawes matches him, and bassist Woodson – an unremarked player – comes in with a fluent statement of his own. In this still small discography, this has to be considered a significant release.

(*) Intermission Riff Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 961-2 Criss; Joe Newman (t); Bennie Green (tb); Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis (ts); Bobby Tucker (p); Tommy Potter (b); Kenny Clarke (d). 10/51.

 The Lost Recordings Lone Hill Jazz 10106 As above, except add Ole Hansen (tb); Kenny Drew (p); Phil Leshin (b); Buddy Rich (d). 11/58.

These tapes were hidden away from 1951 until 1987. Criss's talent had been spotted early on and, when still in his teens, he was asked to tour with Norman Granz's Jazz At The Philharmonic. This was a return fixture and any hint of diffidence or uncertainty has long since evaporated. Still flaunting his Parker influence with superb insouciance, Criss shapes some breathtaking solos, notably on 'Perdido', which rubberstamps his bebop visa, though 'Body And Soul' has him doff his cap to Benny Carter and Johnny Hodges, too. Davis, Green and a splendid rhythm section come through superbly.

Lone Hill put as generous a construction on 'lost' as they do on 'complete' elsewhere. This is the same stuff as on Intermission Riff, with just the addition of a couple of extra tracks, recorded at Birdland in 1958 and previously issued on Buddy Rich's The Cinch.

 The Complete Imperial Sessions Blue Note 24564 2CD Criss; Sonny Clark, Kenny Drew (p); Barney Kessel (g); Larry Bunker (vib); Leroy Vinnegar, Buddy Clark, Bill Woodson (b); Larance Marable, Chuck Thompson (d). 2 & 8/56.

This plain and unvarnished compilation brings together the three records Criss made for Imperial: Jazz USA, Go Man and Plays Cole Porter. The last of the group is a perfect illustration of what Harold Bloom calls the anxiety of influence, a session reeking of the late Charlie Parker's influence, precisely because it attempts to throw off Bird's manner. 'I Get A Kick Out Of You', right at the end, balances respect and a declaration of independence just about perfectly.

The other material is very strong, with Sonny playing workaday themes with a relaxed authority that he was rarely to equal again. His rhythmic and harmonic mannerisms are occasionally evident and sometimes intrusive, but this is probably a set best sampled track by track rather than heard continuously. Every expense has been spared in the remastering, and the sound comes across raw, fresh and authentic.

 Sonny Criss Quartet Featuring Wynton Kelly Fresh Sound FSRCD 318 Criss; Ole Hansen (tb); Wynton Kelly (p); Bob Cranshaw (b); Walter Perkins (d). 1/59.

Kelly (identified on the original Peacock release as 'Joe Scott') isn't really featured at all on this pick-up session recorded in Chicago while Criss and trombonist Hansen were touring with Buddy Rich's band. The playing is workmanlike and none too enterprising, though Sonny gets in some very elegant solos, using Hansen as his foil whenever the temperature goes up. Sets like this were bread and butter to a player of Criss's character, and here he shows what a pro he was, ever ready to rise to a modest challenge.

(*) This Is Criss! / * Portrait Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 430 / 655 Criss; Walter Davis (p); Paul Chambers (b); Alan Dawson (d). 10/66; 3/67.

These are two of the best Criss albums currently available. His ability to invest banal tunes with real feeling is evident on 'Sunrise, Sunset', a tune from Fiddler on the Roof given a brief but intense reading on This Is Criss!. Criss does something similar, though at greater length, to 'Days Of Wine And Roses', adjusting his timbre subtly throughout the opening choruses.

'Wee' on Portrait takes him back to bop days, an astonishing performance that manages to skate over a lack of solid ideas with sheer virtuosity. 'Smile' bears comparison with Jackie McLean's readings, but the real stand-out tracks are 'On A Clear Day', which is hugely emotional, and 'God Bless The Child'. The CD also offers a dreary bonus 'Love For Sale'. The band is good and Davis (who wrote 'Greasy' on This Is Criss! and 'A Million Or More Times' on Portrait) is the mainstay.

[illegible]

* Sonny's Dream

Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 707-2 Criss; Conte Candoli (t); Dick Nash (tb); Ray Draper (tba); David Sherr (as); Teddy Edwards (ts); Pete Christlieb (bs); Tommy Flanagan (p); Al McKibbon (b); Everett Brown Jr (d). 68.

Subtitled Birth Of The New Cool, this features six Horace Tapscott compositions and arrangements. Though he has only recently begun to receive wider recognition, Tapscott has had an enormous influence on the West Coast, and this was a rare chance for Criss to play in front of a carefully orchestrated mid-size band.

'Sonny's Dream' is an astonishing opener, with luminous solos from both Criss and Tommy Flanagan. Criss switches to soprano for the brief 'Ballad For Samuel', dedicated to a respected teacher, but profoundly marked by Coltrane. Tapscott's inventiveness and political sensibilities are equally engaged on 'Daughter Of Cochise' (an unusually relaxed solo from Criss) and 'Black Apostles', originally dedicated to Arthur Blythe but transformed into a ferocious lament for the three martyrs of the black liberationist movement.

A remarkable album that lapses only to the extent that the band is sometimes reduced to providing highly coloured backdrops for Tapscott's American history lessons and Criss's soloing.

 Up, Up And Away Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 982-2 Criss; Cedar Walton (p); Tal Farlow (g); Bob Cranshaw (b); Lenny McBrowne (d). 8/67.

 Rockin' In Rhythm Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1022-2 Criss; Walter Davis, Eddie Green (p); Paul Chambers, Bob Cranshaw (b); Alan Dawson (d). 7/68.

Like many jazz players of the time, Criss felt he had to respond to the challenge of pop. 'Up, Up And Away' was a gift for his soaring, risky, joyous tone, and the partnership with Farlow gives the material a taut, swinging excitement. Cedar Walton is disappointing by his own high standard and marks time when he's not soloing. 'Scrapple From The Apple' plights Sonny's troth to bebop afresh, though by this point in the story it's clear that he's aware the chapter is over.

Rockin' In Rhythm returns to pop rather more circumspectly. 'Misty Roses' is delightful and 'Eleanor Rigby' preserves much of that song's melancholy poetry. The real bonus on this CD reissue, though, is a previously unissued 'All The Things You Are', with Walter Davis in exceptional form. Two lovely, undemanding records.

(*) I'll Catch The Sun! Prestige PR 7628 Criss; Hampton Hawes (p); Monty Budwig (b); Shelly Manne (d). 1/69.

A comeback for Criss, and a reunion with Hawes. The material is vile, but players like these made a living out of turning sows' ears into silken purses, and both 'California Dreaming' and 'Cry Me A River' have a genuine depth of focus. Criss sounds composed and confident in this company, and solos with impressive logic and considerable emotion.

(*) CrissCraft Savoy Jazz 17246 Criss; Dolo Coker (p); Ray Crawford (g); Larry Gales (b); Jimmy Smith (d). 2/75.

(*) Saturday Morning Prevue 7 Criss; Barry Harris (p); Leroy Vinnegar (b); Lenny McBrowne (d). 3/75.

Sonny still has a vigorous attack and muscular tone in later years, and the Horace Tapscott material on CrissCraft is challenging enough for anyone. 'The Isle Of Celia' gets a long and detailed reading, and Sonny's solo space is packed with ideas. He's less emphatic as the album goes on and the closing title-piece is filler. Originally on Muse. Saturday Morning was made for Xanadu exactly a week later. It's a much simpler blowing session, with versions of 'Angel Eyes' and 'Until The Real Thing Comes Along' instead of those intriguing Tapscott charts, but Sonny plays great and seems to relish the tilting drive of Vinnegar's walk and Harris's boppish chording.

Also, in brief:

 Mr Blues Pour Flirter Verve 549231. 4/63.

Misses the near-contemporary track which gives the session its title, but this Jazz In Paris reissue adds some nice standards performances to the Criss list.

 The Beat Goes On! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1051. 1/68.

Still boppish, but pushing for something more rhythmically relaxed. With Cedar Walton (p), Bob Cranshaw (b) and Alan Dawson (d).

* Live In Italy Fresh Sound FSRCD 337. 1/74.

Like many boppers, Cross still got a house in Europe even after audiences had dried up at home. With Georges Arvanitas (p) and a French rhythm section.

(*) A Proper Introduction To Sonny Criss: Young Sonny Proper 2005. 6/47–9/52.

Good single-disc selection from the early years.

John Critchinson (born 1934)

PIANO

Raised in the West Country and forever associated with Ronnie Scott.

 First Moves Jazz House JHCD 52 Critchinson; Art Themen (ts); Dave Green (b); Dave Barry (d). 4/96.

 Where's The Tune, Johnny? Trio Records TR 570 Critchinson (p solo). 04.

* Remove All Covers 33 Records 33JAZZ160 Critchinson; Dave Green (b); Tristan Maillot (d). 07.

Apparently, bandleader Den Coles used to shout 'Where's the tune?' every time John Critchinson dived into another improvisation. The solo album pretty much answers the question by concentrating doggedly on melody, 16 of them and mostly unfamiliar: 'I'll Go My Way By Myself' is less well-known than 'Alone Together'; likewise, Ray Noble's 'I Hadn't Anyone Till You' can't have had as many airings as 'Cherokee'. Other stuff – 'Lullaby Of The Leaves', 'I Concentrate On You' – does figure in most band-books, but that doesn't diminish the unaffected artistry of Critchinson's approach, though it's hard to pin down his keyboard style, which now has more of him than of any obvious 'influence'.

The quartet date with Themen is a beauty. Recorded live at Scott's, it's a solid club set that kicks off with a pungent take on the Rollins title-tune, with nice versions of 'Soul Eyes', 'Insensatez' and Cedar Walton's 'Firm Roots'. The only original is a straightforward blowing theme. A strong professional record.

The trio with Green and Maillot is a delight. The bassist could prop up the Leaning Tower of Pisa, but when he works with a piano-player of Critchinson's sureness, he's freed to play those deceptively relaxed melodic figures and counter-melodies, and it's gorgeous.

Also, in brief:

 Ronnie Remembered Jazzizit JITC0525. 02.

Critch, Pat Crumly (sax) and others pay tribute to the Sage of Frith St.

John Crocker

CLARINET, ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, VOICE

Stylish Chris Barber alumnus, who works in an unfussy traditional-mainstream idiom.

(*) Fine & Dandy Lake LACD 154 Crocker; Chris Barber (tb); Roger Munns (p); Paul Sealy (g); Vic Pitt (b); Colin Miller, Pete York (d). 83.

 Easy Living / * All Of Me Timeless 561 / 585 Crocker; Roger Munns (p); Vic Pitt (b); Jimmy Tagford (d). 89; 4/93.

There's nothing problematic about Crocker's music. He plays mostly standards, and with more attention to melody than to harmonic complexities. That said, though, it's surprising that he's not better known or more critically lauded than someone like Tony Coe. Neither the clarinet nor the tenor saxophone sound is quite as unctuously beautiful, but Crocker knows how to shape a solo, he is adventurous enough to include a spot of bebop here and there ('Billie's Bounce' on the first of these is particularly good), and there is much to enjoy on all three. A shame there aren't more to report.

Tony Crombie (1925–99)

DRUMS, PIANO, VIBES

Similar East End Jewish background to Ronnie Scott, with whom he went on to work. Co-founded the legendary Club Eleven and later worked with Victor Feldman; much film and television work, but also had a rock band called The Rockets.

* Jazz At The Flamingo Jasmine 518 Crombie; Ronnie Scott, Tubby Hayes (ts); Terry Shannon (p); Lenny Bush (b). 7/56.
 Jazz Inc. – Swinging Music In The Modern Manner Jasmine 612 Crombie; Leon Calvert, Les Condon (t); Al Newman (as, cl); Bobby Wellins (ts); Harry Klein (bs); Stan Tracey (p); Kenny Napper (b). 1/60.

Miles Davis recorded Crombie's 'So Near, So Far' in 1963 and granted Tony a supporting role in the jazz pantheon. So laid back as to be almost horizontal, he none the less laid down a penetrating groove for the bands he led, also showing a fine melodic touch that reflected his piano- and vibes-playing. The material from the Flamingo is probably already valued by Tubbs admirers, but it's Crombie's three themes (and notably the closing 'Laker's Day') which stand out even ahead of the bop of 'A Night In Tunisia' and a fine 'Stars Fell On Alabama'. Some great British names on Swinging Music as well. Crombie arranges with the skill that brought him success on the screen. Not much sign yet of the skill that allowed him to meld modern jazz and pop forms, but it's there in spirit – hence the wryly ironic title.

Also, in brief:

 The Man From Interpol Harkit 8144. 59.

Mostly short cues from the television series, but the theme is terrific and this set the pattern for a lot of subsequent jazz-themed screen music.

 Sweet, Wide & Blue / Twelve Favourite Film Themes Dutton Vocalion CDLK 4291. 60.

Two great old Decca recordings, lovingly restored; great music, too.

(*) A Tribute Ember 11. VARIOUS DATES.

They cheekily squeezed Miles Davis's name in between Harry Klein's and Jimmy Deuchar's on the cover, because, of course, 'So Near, So Far' is included as a bonus. Lots of good stuff from Crombie outfits, too, and a must for collectors of the period.

Claes Crona

PIANO

Elegant Swedish stylist who runs a notably democratic trio.

 Crown Jewels Dragon DRCD 345 Crona; Hans Backenroth (b); Pétur 'Island' Östlund (d). 2/99.
 Winter Wonderland Dragon DRCD 359 As above, except add Jan Allan (t). 8/00.
(*) Didima Dragon DRCD 388 Crona; Jörgen Smeby (b); Pétur 'Island' Östlund (d). 03.

These are all emphatically trio records, rather than merely piano-plus-rhythm. Crona has a delightful touch and a real flair for unhackneyed harmonic improvisation that rarely strays too far from the source melody but doesn't leave it untouched or unimproved. Östlund is a big personality, reminiscent in touch of Ed Thigpen and so ideally suited to this kind of situation. The middle record is a Christmas compendium, thoroughly engaging, but the best of the three is Didima, whose title-tune, dedicated to Crona's mother-in-law, is perhaps his most effective composition. All will delight, though.

Hal Crook

TROMBONE, ELECTRONICS

A fascinating stylist who's embraced various ways of processing his horn sound.

 Only Human RAM 4506 Crook; Bob Lockwood (b); Bob Gullotti (d). 93.
(*) Hero Worship RAM 4531 Crook; Mick Goodrick (g); Paul Motian (d). 3/96.

Crook's approach to electronic manipulation has some limitations, notably on the harmonic side, but it does create an impressive sound, and on Hero Worship he combines some fine original writing, including the title-piece, along with material as diverse as Steve Swallow's 'Falling Grace' (perhaps brought in by the excellent Goodrick), 'My Funny Valentine' and 'You Do Something To Me'. For much of the length, Crook is outplayed by his sidemen; Motian is in staggeringly good form, subtle and deft, controlled and passionate; Goodrick remains one of the most influential contemporary exponents of his instrument. The higher rating is largely for them.

The earlier disc, picked up by Ram from a smaller label, is inevitably more conservative, but it has some interesting aspects and a similar blend of 'out' originals with more familiar repertory themes. Not as compelling as Hero Worship but definitely worth sampling.

Connie Crothers (born 1941)

PIANO

A former student of Tristano who keeps the flame flickering.

(*) Perception Steeplechase SCCD 31022 Crothers; Joe Solomon (b); Roger Mancuso (d). 74.
 Swish New Artists NA1001 Crothers; Max Roach (d). N.D.
 Concert At Cooper Union New Artists NA1002 Crothers (p solo). 1/84.
 Duo Dimension New Artists NA1003 Crothers; Richard Tabnik (as). 85.

Though deeply enough immersed in Tristano language and lore to seem a mere epigone, Crothers has attempted to extend the legacy beyond copyism. The Steeplechase is a tentative step in that direction, though with a preponderance of literal translations of themes like the title-track. The sequence for New Artists is much more interesting. The improvised duos with Roach find her far from overwhelmed by her illustrious partner, while the solo record is an open-handed display of thoughtful virtuosity. The duets with the inevitably Konitz-like Tabnik run along probing paths. Crothers plays evenly and with the long, steady, deliberate lines of the style, but her dynamics offer unexpected contrasts and her chording can build to unexpected intensity.

(*) Love Energy /  In Motion New Artists NA1005 / 1013 Crothers; Lenny Popkin (ts); Cameron Brown (b); Carol Tristano (d). 4/88; 11/89.

() New York Night / () Jazz Spring New Artists NA1008 / 1017 As above. 12/89; 3/93.

This excellent but little-known quartet has done valuable work in exploring the Tristano repertory. Popkin builds on Warne Marsh's grey, scratch tone with fretful cadences of his own, Carol Tristano secures a quietly propulsive swing and Brown's unobtrusively forceful lines eliminate any sense that the music could grow static, either rhythmically or harmonically. Crothers plays for the band yet manages to make her best improvisations distinctive and freely developed, while still minding the essential logic of the form. This is tough, serious jazz, albeit a little self-regarding in its selflessness.

 Music From Everyday Life New Artists NA1025 Crothers (p solo). 3/93–6/96.

Patchworked from three years' work, this is deliberately unglamorous jazz that turns completely away from the ego-driven expressiveness of most solo work. 'Good Morning Heartache' is spare and intense, 'Star Eyes' cut entirely adrift from its body. The improvisation on a Bartók folk dance is a charmer, though, and the miniature 'Be', which starts the disc, is a near-perfect improvised composition.

 Ontology New Artists NA 1035 Crothers; Richard Tabnik (as); Sean Smith (b); Roger Mancuso (d). 12/98–4/99.
() Music Is A Place / () Live At Outpost Performance Space New Artists NA 1043 / 1041 As above, except omit Smith; add Ratzo Harris (b). 9/05; 11/05.

Crothers and her group play as intensely and unbendingly as ever. 'My Shining Hour' is witheringly taken apart and 'Come Rain Or Come Shine' is only marginally less startling, given the quiescent tempo. Smith and Mancuso play more pushily than any of the previous rhythm teams and the title-piece, with its rolling thunder of chords from the piano, is almost Tayloresque in its delivery. Tabnik's return shows his curious range of tones getting even more freakish. For music usually classified as cool, it's extraordinarily harsh at times.

Six years on, little has changed, aside from the bassist. With tracks such as 'Lennie's Dream', 'Bird's Word' and 'Warne Marsh', the focus only intensifies, the music searching for some kind of essence. The more recent follows the same pattern with 'You're The One' and 'New York City In The Blue Hour' acidly etched and devoid of sentimentality. Released out of chronological order for some reason; there's nothing to choose between them.

Also, in brief:

() Deep Into The Center New Artists NA 1020. 12/93–12/94.
Informal duos with Roger Mancuso (d). Hard work.

(*) Session New Artists NA1027. 96.
The quartet again, but with Rich Califano (b) in for Brown. Almost Zen in the music's purity of conception.

Pat Crumly

ALTO, TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, FLUTE

A British stalwart, who's worked in pop and blues but espouses his own brand of world jazz.

 Flamingo Spotlite SPJ CD 550 Crumly; Guy Barker (t); Richard Edwards (tb); John Pearce (p); Phil Lee (g); Simon Woolf (b); Simon Morton (d); Bosco D'Oliveira (perc). 8/93.
 Weaver Of Dreams 33 Jazz 086 Crumly; Nick Weldon (p); Tim Wells (b); Mark Fletcher (d). 3/03.

Flamingo is probably the strongest Crumly record currently available. Almost inevitably, though, it's Barker who plays the most interesting music, consistently upstaging the leader. Weaver of Dreams is fine, too. Pat picks up the tenor for 'Anthropology' and varies his timbre across a set of mostly standards, although there's a nicely wistful dedication to Spike Robinson. The rhythm section wants to make a mark and Weldon gets usefully restless with the chords.

Also, in brief:

(*) Third World Sketches Spotlite SPJ CD 431. 5/84.
Well-intentioned but shoddy world-music crossover.

() Behind the Mask Spotlite SPJ CD 549. 1/92.
OK, but blighted by the strangest, echoey sound-mix.

The (Jazz) Crusaders

GROUP

Came together at high school in Houston, recorded for Pacific in the '60s with a soulful variation on West Coast jazz and then made a series of successful soul-funk-jazz discs in the '70s.

 Chile Con Soul Pacific Jazz 90957 Wayne Henderson (tb); Wilton Felder (ts); Hubert Laws (f); Joe Sample (ky); Clare Fischer (org); Al McKibbon (b); Stix Hooper (d); Carlos Vidal, Hungaria 'Carmelo' Garcia (perc). 7/65.
 Live At The Lighthouse '66 Pacific Jazz 605435 Wayne Henderson (tb); Wilton Felder (ts); Joe Sample (ky); Stix Hooper (d). 1/66.
 The Festival Album Pacific Jazz 605435 As above, except add Jimmy Bond, Herbie Lewis, Buster Williams (b). 7/66–7/68.
(*) Lighthouse '68 Pacific Jazz 76851 As above, except omit Bond, Lewis. 11/67.

The familiar line-up – Henderson, Felder, Sample, Hooper – remained in place from the start, despite individual projects, falling-outs and reshuffles. The Crusaders offer a solidly funky combo music which might almost have been programmed by a computer. It hinges on Sample's bar-room piano, Felder's and Henderson's uncomplicated horn-lines, and Hooper's accurate but curiously undynamic drumming. No less and seldom any more.

Of some 15 albums made for Pacific between 1961 and 1969, the availability rate has improved somewhat. Chile Con Soul features an augmented line-up to beef up the chilli. Though it sits awkwardly between the group's usual soul-bop and the prevailing appetite for a garnish of Latin rhythms, it isn't bad, just untypical.

The live date from Hermosa Beach in 1966 offers what is presumably a pretty faithful version of what the band sounded like in concert around this time: slick, capable and unshakeably jazz-centred, doing versions of 'Round Midnight', Trane's 'Some Other Blues', 'Milestones' and 'You Don't Know What Love Is', alongside the originals. These include Sample's 'Blues Up Tight', Felder's 'Miss It', Henderson's 'Scratch' and Vinnegar's rootsier 'Doin' That Thing'. Festival Album put together their sets from both Newport and Pacific in 1966, with an extra 20 minutes from a 1968 show at Shelly's Manne Hole.

The Lighthouse was a regular live gig for the band, and the 1968 set made there was one of their best for the label. Buster

Williams added compositional as well as bass weight, and the group's signature version of 'Eleanor Rigby' holds up well.

 Crusaders 1 Blue Thumb 7350 As above, except omit Williams; add Arthur Adams, Larry Carlton, David T. Walker (g); Chuck Rainey (b). 71.

 The Second Crusade Blue Thumb As above, except omit Rainey. 73.

* Scratch GRP 050115 As above, except add Larry Carlton (g); Max Bennett (b). 74.

(*) Southern Comfort GRP 6016 As above, except omit Bennett. 74.

(*) Those Southern Knights GRP 050117 As above. 76.

* Street Life MCA 101815 As above, except omit Henderson, Carlton; add Oscar Brashear, Robert O. Bryant (t); Garnett Brown (tb); Maurice Spears (btb); Jerome Richardson (as); Robert Bryant Jr (ts); Bill Green (bs); Arthur Adams, Billy Rogers, Roland Bautista, Barry Finnerty, Paul Jackson, David T. Walker (g); Alphonso Johnson, James Jamerson (b); Randy Crawford (v). 79.

* Live In Japan GRP 059746 Wilton Felder (ts); Joe Sample (ky); Barry Finnerty, Roland Bautista (g); Alphonso Johnson (b); Stix Hooper (d); Rafael Cruz (perc). 81.

After a decade as The Jazz Crusaders, they dropped the unmarketable element and went on to fresh success. The addition of outside players (guitarists and bassists mostly) seldom disrupted the basic formula: Carlton was a de facto 'fifth Crusader' for many years; Felder provided bass when there was no specialist on hand. At the same time Sample began dabbling in electronic keyboards, notably synthesizers. The two Blue Thumb discs are funky and polished and still hint at jazz exploration under the smooth exterior. The live Scratch is fine, while Southern Comfort and Those Southern Knights are both workmanlike studio artefacts, showing how pop-funk-jazz could still be based around creative playing. Street Life, spotlit by Randy Crawford's vocal, was their commercial breakthrough but largely their undoing as a close-knit ensemble. The big-band arrangement and drafting of a raft of guitarists to replace Carlton gnawed through the group's hard-won independence, and despite a few remaining sparks, as on the Japanese album, their music drifts towards a lite-soul feel. Recent years have seen the legend tarnished with litigious uproar, and Sample's departure robbed the group of its compositional backbone. A sad end.

Alexis Cuadrado

BASS

An already mature player, writer and bandleader with a touch of Mingus in the mix.

* Metro Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 111 Cuadrado; Kris Bauman (as, cl); Pete Rende (p, g); Steve Cardenas (g); Mark Ferber (d). 5/01.

(*) Visual Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 182 As above, except omit Rende; add Alan Ferber (tb); John Ellis (ss, ts, bcl, f). 1/04.

Cuadrado plays and leads with authority. The reworked 'Night in Tunisia' changes ('Nit') that open Metro suggest a musician well-steeped in the tradition, while 'Round Mingus' later unashamedly borrows from an equally distinguished source. Cuadrado pitches it in an awkward, asymmetrical metre, which calls on the band to display some mettle. Bauman is excellent and the keyboard/guitar axis is required to do some work while the bassist is featured. The only oddity is the closing 'Nana-Blues Grotesque', a piece of mock-Frisell country which doesn't come off.

The follow-up features a new and settled sextet. Cardenas takes the harmony role with great authority and this is a group that sounds right without keyboards, leaving Cuadrado himself a lot of space for harmonic investigation. The writing is as good as before, though less obviously derivative; there's also a fine version of a Victor Jara song.

Ronnie Cuber (born 1941)

BARITONE, ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, FLUTE

The Brooklynite turned to baritone in 1959 and subsequently worked with Maynard Ferguson, Woody Herman and many others.

 Cubism Fresh Sound FSRCD 188 Cuber; Joe Locke (vib, ky); Bobby Broom (g); Michael Formanek (b); Ben Perowsky (d); Carlos Patato Valdes (perc). 12/91.

 Airplay Steeplechase SCCD 31309 Cuber; Geoff Keezer (p); Chip Jackson (b); Ben Perowsky (d). 4/92.

(*) The Scene Is Clean Milestone MCD 9218 Cuber; Lawrence Feldman (f); Geoff Keezer (ky); Joey DeFrancesco (org); George Wadenius (g); Tom Barney, Reggie Washington (b); Victor Jones (d); Manolo Badrena, Milton Cardona (perc). 12/93.

 In A New York Minute Steeplechase SCCD 31372 Cuber; Kenny Drew Jr (p); Andy McKee (b); Adam Cruz (d). 4/95.

 NY Cats Steeplechase SCCD 31394 Cuber; Ryan Kisor (t); Michael Weiss (p); Andy McKee (b); Tony Reedus (d). 3/96.

Cuber has played on many sessions, but not many as a leader. He gets a light, limber feel out of the baritone when he wants to, though he can also make it sound gruff and monstrous. His odd adaptability to Latin rhythms means that his own discs usually have a few traces of Brazilian bop about them. Cubism is directed towards a 'lite' kind of jazz-funk, but Locke's typically shrewd playing and a few worthwhile licks from the valuable Broom lift it. For all the ironic title, Airplay puts Cuber back into hard bop with Keezer's fine work as his line to earth. Most of the tunes work an old-fashioned groove, but the baritone work is as forthright and full-bodied as ever. The Scene Is Clean is another blend of styles: a Dameron title-tune, modal jazz ('Song For Pharoah') and the winsome 'Flamingo' are more traditionally sewn, but the bristling Latin tunes again carry an infectious spirit and it's obvious that the leader feels right at home, with just a few touches of tenor and alto for variety. Drew's an elegant foil on In A New York Minute. Cuber brought five originals to the date and the playing is felicitous, though it runs out of steam towards the end. NY Cats is something of a misfire, despite the promising line-up and some pleasing tunes. The band sounds loose, Reedus is all over the place, and for once the Steeplechase sound is unpleasing.

Bill Cunliffe (born 1956)

PIANO

Born in Massachusetts, but latterly based on the West Coast. Won the Thelonious Monk Competition in 1989.

 Bill Plays Bud Naxos 86024 Cunliffe; Ralph Moore (ts); Dave Carpenter (b); Joe LaBarbera (d); Papo Rodriguez (perc). 10/96.

Early sightings of Cunliffe with the Clayton–Hamilton Orchestra suggested a competent, unspectacular player. As leader, he's more emphatic and brings an authentic flavour to these more- and less-familiar Bud Powell themes. His phrasing on 'Comin' Up' can't be faulted: terse, slightly off-centre and robustly percussive. '52nd St Theme' and 'Un Poco Loco' are substantially rethought, and he digs out a couple of rarities: 'Willowgrove', an effusive bop-blues, and the strange 'Dusk At Saudi', which seems to be a version of 'Midnight Sun'. The set's nicely framed by Cunliffe's own 'Melancolia' and a closing essay on 'Glass Enclosure'. Moore's contribution is limited to two cuts, but he finds things to say in that hard-to-place economical delivery which like the leader's style seems to have skipped the Coltrane–Tyner generation entirely.

 How My Heart Sings Torii 2 Cunliffe; Bobby Shew (t, flhn); Justin Ray (flhn); Bruce Paulson (tb); Bob Sheppard (ss, as, ts, cl, f, af); Jeff D'Angelo (b); Joe LaBarbera (d). 03.
 It's About Love Torii 3 Cunliffe; Gary Foster (as); Jeff D'Angelo (b); Tim Pleasant (d). 03.
 Imaginación Torii 5 Cunliffe; Kyle Palmer, Bobby Shew (t); Bruce Paulson, Arturo Velasco (tb); Bob Sheppard (ts, f); Rene Camacho (b); Ramon Banda (d, perc); Jose de Leon, Jose 'Papo' Rodriguez (perc). 5/05.
Earlier in his recording career, Cunliffe took on the Paul Simon songbook. On How My Heart Sings, he turns his attention to Earl Zindars, who apart from the title-track and a couple of Bill Evans references isn't widely recognized. It's an attractive enough set, unspectacular in Cunliffe's now familiar way, but packed with authoritative bop-influenced playing. The group's attractive, too, though with greatest emphasis on timbral variety rather than harmonic or rhythmic drive.

Reed Kotler is even more obscure, a Bay Area composer whose work suggests various antecedents but never settles into a particularly memorable style. Cunliffe and co-leader Foster do manage to find enough improvisational weight in things like 'Nine Steps' and 'Where Do I Go From Here?' to give the session presence, but it's an enigmatic set for the most part.

Imaginación's an attractive Latin tentet date, squeezing in another Kotler theme, Steely Dan's 'Do It Again', and a further mix of standards and Cunliffe originals. It's all professionally and quite effectively done, but it's hard to make a case for a record like this in such a crowded market.

Ted Curson (born 1935)

TRUMPET, POCKET–TRUMPET

Moved from Philadelphia to NY and played with Charles Mingus in 1959–60. Co-led a small group with Bill Barron before moving to Europe in the late '60s.

 Plays Fire Down Below Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1744 Curson; Gildo Mahones (p); George Tucker (b); Roy Haynes (d); Montego Joe (perc). 12/62.
(*) Tears For Dolphy DA Black Lion BLCD 760190 Curson; Bill Barron (ts, cl); Herb Bushler (b); Dick Berk (d). 8/64.
 Pop Wine Futura 26 Curson; Georges Arvanitas (p); Jacky Sampson (b); Charles Saudrais (d). 71.
 Travelling On Evidence ECD 22182 Curson; Mark Gross (ss, as, f); Misako Kano (p); Ray Drummond (b); Sylvia Cuenca (d); Everald Brown, Guilherme Franco, Ricky 'Bongo' James, David Williams (perc). 6/96.
(*) In Paris: Live At The Sunside Blue Marge 1009 2CD Curson; Pierrick Pedron (as); Guillaume Naturel (f); Alain Jean-Marie (p); Gilles Natural (b); Philippe Soirat (d); Julie Saury (perc); Daiva Starinskaite, Evrim Ozsuca, Sylvia Howard, Ferhat Ox, Jaanika Ventsel (v). 06.
Variable fortunes on record for a significant innovator, who came to prominence with Mingus, wrote the beautiful 'Tears For Dolphy', and then spent much of his career in Europe. On piccolo trumpet, Curson occasionally resembles Rex Stewart, though he's closer to Fats Navarro on the concert horn. Fire Down Below is a reasonable representation of his pungent approach, but it's not the most compelling of records.

Tears For Dolphy was recorded a month or so after the death of its dedicatee, and there is a raw sorrow in the title-tune that was less evident in later versions. Barron provides solid support and chips in with four strong charts, including the Dolphyish '7/4 Funny Time' and 'Desolation'. The rhythm section is very solid, but it's Curson's high, slightly old-fashioned sound on the small trumpet that commands attention. 'Searchin' For The Blues' is the other highlight.

Fortunately, there's more stuff around now than for some time. Pop Wine was also made in Europe, with the Arvanitas trio. Some of the stuff is familiar, with long versions of 'Quartier Latin' and 'L.S.D. Takes A Holiday', plus a reprise of 'Lonely One', for Booker Ervin. Sampson is in terrific form and keeps the metres springy and alert. The Evidence CD retreads 'Tears For Dolphy' as well as a tribute to another Mingus alumnus, Booker Ervin. There are nice versions of 'Watermelon Man' and 'When The Saints' (not often tackled by modernist players) and another half-dozen Curson originals.

'Woody'N'You' and 'Tin Tin Deo' on the Marge set suggest a certain Gillespie influence, which actually becomes more evident as Curson's powers decline. He builds in a new vocal version of 'Tears For Dolphy', but it's unsatisfactory. 'Milestones' and 'Confirmation' are more to the point and there are excellent reads of 'Canteloupe Island' and 'Georgia On My Mind'. Nice support from the band and a pleasing appearance for Curson enthusiasts, who've more to cheer about these days.

Also, in brief:

* The New Thing And The Blue Thing Koch CD 8531. 65.
Difficult to find now, but a valuable account of the group with Bill Barron (t) and Georges Arvanitas (p), plus the familiar rhythm section from Tears. Excellent playing and true sound.

Andrew Cyrille (born 1939)

DRUMS

Born in Brooklyn, he played with leaders from Nellie Lutcher to Roland Kirk before starring in Cecil Taylor's trio, mid-'60s to 1975.

(*) Metamusicians' Stomp /  Special People Black Saint 120025 / Soul Note 121012 Cyrille; Ted Daniel (t, flhn, wood f); David S. Ware (ts, f); Nick DiGeronimo (b). 9/78; 10/80.
* Nuba Black Saint 120030 Cyrille; Jimmy Lyons (as); Jeanne Lee (v). 6/79.
* The Navigator Soul Note 121062-2 Cyrille; Ted Daniel (t, flhn); Sonelius Smith (p); Nick DiGeronimo (b). 9/82.
An intuitively musical percussionist, Cyrille is one of the few solo performers on his instrument worth listening to. That said, he's also a formidable group leader. Something of Cecil Taylor's turbulent language creeps into Nuba, which also features Taylor's loyal saxophonist Jimmy Lyons. Including a setting from Lee's The Valley Of Astonishment And Bewilderment, this highly lyrical album is almost a miniature opera, developing the ideas on Cyrille's astonishing solo record What About? (Affinity), which finds him vocalizing the pain and frustration of the black experience in America. Lyons's calm and stoical approach is the perfect conduit for this music.

Metamusicians' Stomp, The Navigator and Special People feature the group Andrew calls Maono, part of his search for a new African idiom in jazz. On The Navigator each of the players introduces a section, adding compass bearings to a collective navigation back to the source. As with many of Cyrille's records, it asserts the jazz tradition by seeming to shed it, layer by layer.

* Ode To The Living Tree Evidence ECD 22185 Cyrille; Oliver Lake (as); David Murray (ts, bcl); Steve Adegoke Colson (p); Fred Hopkins (b). 12/94.

The result of a fascinating trip to West Africa and apparently the first American jazz session ever to be recorded in Dakar, Senegal. Perhaps in tribute to John Coltrane's record named after that place, the main event is a reading of two movements of 'A Love Supreme', followed by a flowing 'Mr P.C.'. There are compositions by Colson and Murray as well, but what one hears here is a group consciousness at work, flowing, evolving, immensely responsive. A wonderful record.

(*) The X-Man Soul Note 121262 Cyrille; James Newton (f); Alix 'Tit' Pascal (g); Anthony Cox (b). 5/93.

* Good To Go, With A Tribute To Bu Soul Note 121292 Cyrille; James Newton (f); Lisle Atkinson (b). 10/95.

Flute and guitar add a fascinating dimension to X-Man. Newton's 'E-Squat' is a strong, clearly stated idea from a player who seems to understand Cyrille's intentions from the bottom up and the drummer responds with some of his simplest and least-cluttered playing on record. 'Simple Melody' is extraordinary, something out of a far-off place that yet seems as familiar and immediate as a favourite standard. Atkinson had alternated with DiGeronimo in Maono and he's a welcome addition to the later trio. The set is bracketed by Cyrille's brilliant impersonation of Art Blakey. They and the title-piece are essays in freedom and responsiveness. The surprises are a version of John Carter's 'Enter From The East', a reading of Andrew Hill's 'Nicodemus' with Atkinson touching in the chords, John B. Gordon's 'Aftermath' and, more surprising yet, a standard, 'The Inch Worm'.

Also, in brief:

 Duo Palindrome: Volumes 1 & 2 Intakt CD 088 / 089. 02.

Duos with Anthony Braxton (sax). Not quite on a par with the saxophonists' encounters with Max Roach, but very much in that class. Cyrille's duo with Irène Schweizer on the same label is worth checking out; see her entry.

 C/D/E Jazz Magnet 2007. 3/01.

Collaborative trio with Mark Dresser (b) and Marty Ehrlich (reeds), but with Cyrille very much the guiding spirit.

Carsten Daerr (born 1975)

PIANO, MELODICA

One of the leaders of a German scene that eschews self-conscious modernism in favour of toughly disciplined jazz.

 Berlin Calling ACT 96562 Daerr; Ritsche Koch (t); Daniel Erdmann (sax); Ronny Graupe (g); Oliver Potratz (b); Sebastian Merk (d). 9/06.

Daerr's playing and writing won't scare the horses. He favours a terse approach to composition, which draws on orthodox harmony, modality and passages which seem bi-tonal, but all interspersed with solid grooves and areas of freedom. The slightly older Erdmann is listed as co-leader on this and contributes some interesting ideas, though so do Potratz and Graupe. The first few tracks are frustratingly short, truncated rather than fully developed; typically, one wants to hear them live and at greater length. But then, perversely, 'Maurice Wilson's Ever Ever Wrest' (one of three Potratz compositions) outstays its welcome considerably. So, good music, but not a well-conceived album. Just one standard in 'Alabama Song', and a couple more repertory pieces might well have helped provide balance to a strong but shapeless disc.

Daniele D'Agaro (born 1958)

TENOR SAXOPHONE, BASS CLARINET

Italian reedman resident in the Netherlands who mixes traditional jazz standards with taut originals.

(*) Strandjutters hatOLOGY 590 D'Agaro; Ernest Glerum (b); Han Bennink (d). 6/02.

 Chicago Overtones hatOLOGY 613 D'Agaro; Jeb Bishop (tb); Kent Kessler (b); Robert Barry (d). 2/04.

D'Agaro has still to break through to wider recognition. He's neither dry nor abstract, though, and very approachable. The pieces on Strandjutters are mostly around the six-minute mark, concentrating on melody, for which he has a definite if perverse talent. The title-piece is definitive of the style and also of its limitations; what might have been profound ends up crabby and cross-grained. The exception, in terms of length and harmonics, is 'Old Folks', which comes in at nearly ten minutes. It's material that suits Bennink very well indeed, but it's the strong-toned Glerum who is the star of this intriguing but tentative set.

There's a refreshing bustle to the opening of the second album, recorded in the Windy City with a fine American band. 'Chicago Beer Coaster' is delightful, but D'Agaro finds himself eclipsed by Bishop's long, nicely formed solo. The ensembles are tight and the empathy pays off in the collectively improvised 'Dog Nose In The Kitchen' later. For the second track, D'Agaro switches to clarinet and a more abstract sound, but immediately reminds us that free isn't his only idiom with a lovely, albeit oddly pitched reading of Duke's 'Sweet Zurzday'; a nice shuffle rhythm from Barry. Duke's represented again with 'Melancholia' and there are compositions by Curtis Clark and Leadbelly, as well as a delightful traditional tune, 'L'Ago Freschio'. Streets ahead of the first album and probably no accident that the streets in question are on the shores of Lake Michigan.

Roland Dahinden (born 1962)

TROMBONE

Swiss-born classical player also working in an improvisational vein.

 Naima Mode 62 Dahinden; Anthony Braxton (ss, as); Joe Fonda (b); Art Fuller (d). 96.

(*) Anthony Braxton (+Duke Ellington): Concept Of Freedom hatOLOGY 614 Dahinden; Hildegard Kleeb (p); Dimitris Polisoidis (vn); Robert Höldrich (elec). 05.

Dahinden, with and without Hildegard Kleeb, is an experienced performer of new music, and a thoughtful one having studied with Vinko Globokar and undertaken advanced research in the UK. The striking thing about Concept Of Freedom is how imaginatively the trombonist has taken and absorbed elements of Braxton's Ghost Trance Music and extended the concept in new directions. In this, he develops on the relationship already established on Naima, where, in addition to the Coltrane theme, there is a long Braxton theme as well as two Dahinden originals. What's doubly clever about the music on Concept Of Freedom, played with genuine mutual understanding, is the way elements of Duke Ellington's 'Second Sacred Concert' are absorbed, in the Braxtonian manner, into a strong reading of 'Composition No. 257'. Impressive stuff.

Carsten Dahl (born 1967)

PIANO, ORGAN

The Dane puts a contemporary spin on bebop piano.

 Will You Make My Soup Hot And Silver /  Message From Bud Storyville STCD 4205 / 4232 Dahl; Lennart Ginman (b); Frands Rifbjerg (d). 12/96; 12/98.

From the brisk momentum of 'Autumn Leaves' onwards on the first disc, it's clear that Dahl is minded to take an unhackneyed path through this set of often very familiar material: 'Giant Steps', 'Take Five', 'Caravan' and others. He plays several pieces associated with Miles Davis and not one of them is quite what you'd expect. 'Freddie Freeloader' is done over a choppy, bustling rhythm, 'I Thought About You' is unrecognizably slow and distant. He frequently has his section set up a groove of some sort while he lays elliptical comments over the top; melodies are left alone or reharmonized. It keeps you listening in a whatever-next? way, although sometimes the approach is unconvincingly cute.

Carsten says that the title-piece of Message From Bud came to him in a dream in which he was drinking with Bud Powell and the music sounds like clever Powell repro. There's also a Garnesque twist to the two-fisted way he swings some of the standards. 'Blue In Green' is effective because he doesn't sound like Bill Evans.

 Jazzpar 2000 Quintet Storyville STCD 4248 Dahl; Jörg Huke (tb); Tony Coe (ss, ts, cl); Lars Danielsson (clo, b); Aage Tanggaard (d). 3/00.

Dahl was the Danish prizewinner in the annual Jazzpar competition and as usual played a series of concerts with a group of his choosing. Although the six tunes included here suffer from solo longueurs, there's a nice piquancy about the pairing of Coe and Huke, whose playing has a broadband technique without resorting to flamboyance. Danielsson brings along his cello. The concerts were not so much a celebration as a thoughtful, self-effacing feature for the leader's writing. 'Crazy Folks' sews together folk themes from England, Sweden, Germany and Denmark, a nod to each man's roots.

(*) Moon Water Stunt STUCD 3132 Dahl; Arild Andersen (b); Patrice Héral (d). 3/03.

There are four group improvisations here, two of them significantly called 'Ecouter Et Jouer', and one of those weighing in at a quarter of an hour. Given the title, it's hardly surprising to find three elegant and responsive players resisting the urge to rush ahead with their own ideas but pausing to listen to contexts and other dialogues before making a contribution. As ever, some of Dahl's work sounds faintly arch and knowing, but he's in classy company and exposed enough for any lameness to be ruthlessly exposed.

Also, in brief:

() Solo Piano / (*) The Butterfly Dream /  Copenhagen Aarhus Stunt STUCD 03022 / Storyville STCD 4243 / Edge 476302. 8/96–1/03; 2–10/99; 8/04.

A lot of material spread across these two, but much of it self-indulgent and increasingly marred by Jarrett-like singalongs.

Renato D'Aiello

ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES

Based in the UK since 1999, the gifted Italian saxophonist has a highly distinctive and evolved approach.

 Introducing Renato D'Aiello Spotlite SPJ CD 570 D'Aiello; Mark Bassey (tb); Gary Husband (p); Phil Lee (g); Nicola Muresu (b); Sebastiaan de Krom (d). 5/01.

(*) Sintetico 33 Records 33JAZZ151 D'Aiello; Andrea Pozza (p); Nicola Muresu (b); Keith Copeland (d). 06.

The debut title may be modest but D'Aiello plays with substance and complete authority. He has a fine ballad touch, something of a shibboleth for saxophone-players, and in the Euro All-Stars has a band that provides him with all the support he'll ever need. The basic idiom is classic Blue Note 'hard bop' with a few contemporary inflections. Since there's no overt folk material to suggest a provenance, you might well be listening to a senior American. Lee, as always, does a sterling job and our own quibble would be the relative positioning of the horns in the stereo mix.

The 33 record features another fine European group. Pozza is a gifted Genoese who has seen service with Enrico Rava and others. It's a more effective unit without a second horn (not at all to discredit Bassey's contribution) and Copeland and Muresu keep things tight but not restrictive. Recommended.

Albert Dailey (1939–84)

PIANO

Born and classically trained in Baltimore, he worked with Mingus, Getz and others but recorded little on his own account.

 That Old Feeling Steeplechase SCCD31107 Dailey; Buster Williams (b); Billy Hart (d). 7/78.

Albert's sole surviving record is ample cause to wonder why he isn't better known. Working with blue-chip sidemen obviously makes a difference, but his solos are elegant and thoughtful in a market where dexterity and fulsomeness are often preferred. There is nothing filigree about Dailey's ballad playing, but his quiet modulations and intricate passage work are maybe too abstract for some listeners. The long title-track and 'Yesterdays' are the best things, though Dailey also offers a brief, fresh interpretation of 'Loverman' and the Beatles' 'Michelle'.

Laila Dalseth (born 1940)

VOICE

Highly experienced Norwegian singer, who started out young and has worked with many famous Americans. Married to Totti Bergh.

 Daydreams Gemini GMCD 86 Dalseth; Totti Bergh (ts); Per Husby (p); Louis Stewart (g); Terje Venaas (b); Ole Jacob Hansen (d). 8/84.

 Travelling Light Gemini GMCD 54 Dalseth; Al Cohn (ts); Egil Kapstad (p); Terje Venaas (b); Ole Jacob Hansen (d). 8/86.

 The Judge And I Gemini GMCD 63 Dalseth; Derek Smith (p); Bucky Pizzarelli (g); Milt Hinton (b); Bobby Rosengarden (d). 91.

 A Woman's Intuition Gemini GMCD 87 Dalseth; Totti Bergh (ts); Anders Sponberg (cl, f); Egil Kapstad (p); Philip Catherine (g); Bjørn Alterhaug (b); Tom Olstad (d); strings. 1/95.

(*) Listen Here! Gemini GMCD 108 Dalseth; Totti Bergh (ts); Dave Frishberg (p, v); Jon Gordon (p); Jay Leonhart (b); Dennis Mackrel (d). 99.

She has a fine, mature voice that has gained both in depth of expression and, more unusually, in technical dexterity as the years have gone by. Her partnership with Bergh has long been a fruitful one and their shared restraint is a virtue rather than a shortcoming on a body of material that is mostly standards-based and familiar. Unlike Karen Krog, she is not a powerful improviser but delivers songs with a refined sense of structure and logic that often allows the members of her band to take the more prominent role. Stewart and Catherine are both strongly featured on Daydreams and A Woman's Intuition. The session with Cohn must have been a mixed delight and frustration to Bergh, whose Zoot Sims influence would have found a worthy context but who was dropped after the concert at which Al first played with Laila. Hard to pick out a single record (apart from the fine compilation below) that sums up Dalseth's talent. Listen Here! is a strong, swinging set and the album with Hinton has some interesting aspects, not least the bassist's rich sound and vibrant personality up against Dalseth's huskier and more reserved approach. A Woman's Intuition is clotted by the strings. Good things on all of these, though, and Laila should be sampled by everyone who enjoys fine jazz singing.

Also, in brief:

(*) One Of A Kind Gemini GMCD 106 2CD. 75–99.

A two-and-a-half-decade survey that includes much of the best of her work. An ideal set for more casual listeners.

Meredith d'Ambrosio

VOICE, PIANO

A Bostonian, married to pianist Eddie Higgins, whose speciality is melding a standard with newly composed melodic and lyrical variations.

 Lost In His Arms Sunnyside SSCD 1081 d'Ambrosio; Ray Santini (p); Norman Coles (g); Chris Rathbun (b). 7–10/78.

 Another Time Sunnyside SSCD 1017 d'Ambrosio (v, p solo). 2/81.

(*) Little Jazz Bird Sunnyside SSCD 1040 d'Ambrosio; Phil Woods (cl, as); Hank Jones (p); Steve Gilmore (b); Bill Goodwin (d). 3/82.

* It's Your Dance Sunnyside SSCD 1011 d'Ambrosio; Harold Danko (p); Kevin Eubanks (g). 3/85.

(*) South To A Warmer Place Sunnyside SSCD 1039 d'Ambrosio; Lou Colombo (t); Eddie Higgins (p); Don Coffman (b); Danny Barger (d). 2/89.

(*) Love Is Not A Game Sunnyside SSCD 1051 d'Ambrosio; Eddie Higgins (p); Rufus Reid (b); Keith Copeland (d). 12/90.

 Shadowland Sunnyside SSCD 1060 d'Ambrosio; Ron Kozak (f, bcl); Blair Tindall (eng hn, ob); Eddie Higgins (p); Johnny Frigo (vn); Erik Friedlander (clo); Jay Leonhart (b); Ben Riley (d). 7/92.

D'Ambrosio once turned down an offer to join John Coltrane on a tour of Japan. Her modesty is reflected in a soft, almost evanescent delivery, but her choice of songs is so creative and the treatments so consistently refined that the records are unexpectedly absorbing. Another Time is a private session and its bare-bones approach is perhaps a little too austere. Lost In His Arms unfolds at a steady, thoughtful pace. Despite an eccentric studio production by Rudy Van Gelder, Little Jazz Bird is ingeniously programmed to accommodate Woods and the string quartet, and the songs include Dave Frishberg, Gene Lees, Loonis McGloohan and two exceptional pieces by Deborah Henson-Conant, 'How Is Your Wife?' and 'When The End Comes'.

An exceptional series for Sunnyside – how many artists are so consistently favoured by one label? – continues with It's Your Dance, perhaps her most fully realized record; Eubanks has never played better and Meredith maintains a supernal glow. Almost all the songs are unusual, from her own lyrics to 'Giant Steps' and Brubeck's 'Strange Meadowlark', Al Cohn's 'The Underdog' and the title-song's reworking of John Carisi's 'Israel'. The voice is too small for jazz virtuosity, but she achieves a different authenticity through economies of scale.

South To A Warmer Place continues the fine run. Colombo plays a Bobby Hackett role, and since many of the songs are familiar, this might be a good place to start. Love Is Not A Game has some memorable treatments: J. J. Johnson's 'Lament', Denny Zeitlin's 'Quiet Now'. On 'Oh Look At Me Now', she extends the song into a coda which has her composing new lyrics for a variation on the tune, and that approach is carried over into five of the twelve tunes on Shadowland, though with mixed success. She still sounds at her best on the introspective material. Higgins provides sympathetic piano throughout, though her own playing isn't negligible.

 Because Of Spring Sunnyside SSCD 1069 d'Ambrosio; Eddie Higgins (p); George Mraz (b); Jeff Hirshfield (d). 9/94.

 Silent Passion Sunnyside SSCD 1075 d'Ambrosio; Gene Bertoncini (g). 1/96.

 Echo Of A Kiss Sunnyside SSCD 1078 d'Ambrosio; Mike Renzi (p); Jay Leonhart (b); Terry Clarke (d). 8/97.

Because Of Spring continues her songs-out-of-other-songs method on four tracks and her strong suit continues to be her song selection: 'Moon Dreams' and 'Through A Long And Sleepless Night' were two good ideas, though they sometimes teeter towards some quiet margin. Silent Passion reduces the cast to two, with d'Ambrosio on piano duty, and it's a degree more intense and involving, with Bertoncini making elegant work out of his dialogue and the singer a shade more assertive. Echo Of A Kiss tries her out with a new line-up, although she's settled so deeply into her meditative groove that there is some danger she's going to make the same record each time with slowly diminishing returns. It doesn't happen, fortunately.

(*) Love Is For The Birds Sunnyside SSCD 1101 d'Ambrosio; Don Sickler (t, flhn); John Allred (tb); Bob Kindred (ts, f); Lee Musiker (p); Jay Leonhart (b); Joe Ascione (d). 1/01.
Another wonderful setting for d'Ambrosio. Here, alternating a trio and a sextet arranged by Sickler, she tackles material by Kenny Dorham, Harold Land, Clifford Brown ('Daahoud') and others, with a lovely pay-off in the original 'Frishberg And Dorough', which pays tribute to two admired predecessors and sources. Quietly majestic.

 Wishing On The Moon Sunnyside SSCD 1159 d'Ambrosio; Don Sickler (t, flhn); Cecilia Coleman (p); Tim Givens (b); Vince Cherico (d). 7/04.
These ten songs are delivered with the unadorned purity of great narrative prose. There's something almost epic in Meredith's version of 'Wishing On The Moon' and her original conceptions have the same quality, albeit with a wry, but never winsome, quality. The arrangements are impeccable and the mood effortlessly sustained throughout. Highly recommended.

Also, in brief:

() The Cove Sunnyside SSCD 1028. N.D.
With Lee Konitz (as) and Fred Hersch (p), but too composed and sleepy.

() Sleep Warm Sunnyside SSCD 1063. 2/91.
A lovely set of modern and old-fashioned lullabies.

 Out Of Nowhere Sunnyside SSCD 1085. 8/98.
A Blossom Dearie cover suggests another lineage, or parallel course. Unusual, understated love songs, exquisitely done.

Tadd Dameron (1917–65)

COMPOSER, BANDLEADER, PIANO

Born in Cleveland, he began writing arrangements in his late teens and worked with Harlan Leonard from 1939. Soon got caught up in bop and led small groups with Fats Navarro and Miles Davis. Drug and legal problems effectively ended his career.

(*) Fontainebleau Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 055 Dameron; Kenny Dorham (t); Henry Coker (tb); Sahib Shihab (as); Joe Alexander (ts); Cecil Payne (bs); John Simmons (b); Shadow Wilson (d). 3/56.
 Mating Call Prestige PRCD 212 Dameron; John Coltrane (ts); John Simmons (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 11/56.
He's remembered now for a couple of repertory compositions – 'Lady Bird', 'Hot House' – and not much else. Dameron was an underrated performer who stands at the fulcrum of modern jazz, midway between swing and bop. Combining the broad-brush arrangements of the big band and the new advanced harmonic language, his own recordings are difficult to date blind and a tune like 'On A Misty Night' seems to capture the evanescence that surrounds the man and the music.

The discography is spotty. Records with Fats Navarro are usually covered under the trumpeter's name and Mating Call is often reviewed as a John Coltrane album, but it's the pianist who's in the driving seat, subtly directing the ensemble. Fontainebleau dates from Dameron's last full year of freedom before the prison sentence that took him out of the jazz stream effectively for good. The title-piece is wholly written out, with no scope for improvising, but there is plenty of individual work elsewhere, notably from Dorham. Never a distinctive soloist, Dameron prefers to work within his own lush chord progressions.

Also, in brief:

() The Magic Touch Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 143. 2–4/62.
Revisits to 'Fontainebleau' and 'On A Misty Night', but the big-band treatments sound perfunctory and Dameron seems to have lost interest in his own music.

Franco D'Andrea (born 1941)

PIANO, KEYBOARDS

Worked on radio in Rome in the early '60s and dabbled in free jazz before turning to a more conservative bop style.

 Chromatic Phrygian yvp 3057 D'Andrea; Stephan Schertler (b); Billy Elgart (d). 10/89.
D'Andrea is dismayingly prolific, but given that most of his work is on the erratically distributed Philology, there is little that is securely available outside Italy. This is his best record. Elgart's way of swinging the music is a marvel; he fills up every space without getting in anyone's way and has all kinds of business to offer without seeming to overplay. It is a pity that most of the material is either original composition or freely improvised; one would like to hear this group attack more repertory material, as they do so well on 'This Can't Be Love', full of shadows and sudden lights.

 3 Lines Philology 77-2 D'Andrea (overdubbed p solo). 3/96.
(*) Jobim /  Ballads And Rituals Philology 125.2 / 127.2 D'Andrea; Andrea Ayace Ayassot (as); Aldo Mella (b); Alex Rolle (d). 1/97.
The first of these is an exercise in overdubbing, meant to evoke Bill Evans's Conversations With Myself. It feels like an album out of time; Evans made his enlightened experiment in a pre-digital age and D'Andrea's constructions say little that he might not have said with a single piano track. That said, the best tracks are clever and judicious. The homage, if such it is, to Jobim is fair enough, but the butterfly delicacy of the composer's best melodies is taken to the cleaners by this group, which reconvenes for Ballads And Rituals and immediately launches into all sorts of interesting rhythms, like the clump of 'Dancing Colors', which suggests a curious dub-like atmosphere. Ayassot is a difficult player to warm to, often at odds with D'Andrea's romantic bent.

(*) Solo 1–8 Philology 401.2–408.2 D'Andrea (p solo). 4/01.
The first of a number of similarly epic series for Philology. Invited by Paolo Piangarelli to set down eight solo albums, D'Andrea themed his performances somewhat – individual discs are called Standards, Abstractions, Woods (after whom Philology is named), Gato (Barbieri was an associate in the free-jazz days), Duke, Valzer Opera Natale, Napoli, Classic Jazz – but one immediately feels that while these performances are individually interesting, D'Andrea wouldn't be the first choice of performer for much of this material. Also, it sounds an exhausting business; it's certainly tiring to play through.

(*) Magicians At Work Philology 214.2 D'Andrea; Renato Sellani (p). 5/02.
An extended and delightful game of cat and mouse, played by two old foxes. When the idea was put to Sellani, he remarked, 'I hope that Franco will not fire on the Red Cross'; he needn't have worried. Sample 'There Is No Greater Love', where the two pianists send out all sorts of smoke signals and teasing leads; ten minutes' worth.

There have been many more D'Andrea records since, but few have come our way and few will be widely available.

Also, in brief:

() Enrosadira Red RR 123243. 91.
Disappointing electronic duets with percussionist Luis Agudo.

 Round Riff & More Philology 241.2. 5/02.
Piano in the middle and a bass in each channel, more of an extended novelty.

Dorothy Dandridge (1923–65)

VOICE

Better known as an actress and the first African-American woman to be nominated for an Oscar, she was also a fine singer.

 Smooth Operator Verve 547514 Dandridge; Oscar Peterson (p, cel); Herb Ellis (g); Ray Brown (b); Alvin Stoller (d, perc). 1/58–2/61.
If she remained an actress who sang rather than a genuine hyphenate, that may be exactly the point. Listen to how she delivers the tiny, reworded 'I've Grown Accustomed To Your Face' and how she gives 'Body And Soul' a deeply convincing pitch and intensity. The accompaniments, by an extended Peterson trio, are always of interest and it's remarkable that little of this material (just one single's worth, in fact) had been released before.

Putney Dandridge (1902–46)

PIANO, VOCAL

A vaudeville artist, he enjoyed a very brief jazz career.

(*) Putney Dandridge 1935–1936 Classics 846 Dandridge; Henry 'Red' Allen, Richard Clarke, Shirley Clay (t); Buster Bailey (cl, as); Tom Mace, Gene Sedric (cl, ts); Chu Berry, Kenneth Hollon, Johnny Russell (ts); Harry Grey, Teddy Wilson (p); Arnold Adams, Dave Barbour, Clarence Holiday, Nappy Lamare (g); Artie Bernstein, Ernest 'Bass' Hill, John Kirby, Grachan Moncur (b); Bill Beason, Cozy Cole, Walter Johnson, Manzie Johnson (d). 3/35–3/36.

 Putney Dandridge 1936 Classics 869 Dandridge; Henry 'Red' Allen, Doc Cheatham, Wallace Jones, Bobby Stark (t); Tom Mace (cl); Joe Marsala (cl, as); Charles Frazier, Teddy McRae (ts); Clyde Hart, Roger 'Ram' Ramirez, James Sherman, Teddy Wilson (p); Arnold Adams, Eddie Condon, Allan Reuss, John Trueheart (g); Ernest 'Bass' Hill, John Kirby, Wilson Myers, Mack Walker (b); Big Sid Catlett, Cozy Cole, Slick Jones (d). 6–12/36.
Dandridge cut his first sides for Vocalion in March 1935 and stopped recording for good with the last of these sessions, taped with Cheatham, Wilson and Catlett on 10 December 1936. Not quite a mainstream jazz singer, he should have been able to dicker a natural vaudevillean's facility with a lyric into a sustainable career. There are music hall escapades on things like 'Nagasaki' (complete with prewar stage Japanese), but these groups are full of great players and Berry's break on 'Chasing Shadows' and 'I'm In The Mood For Love' with Allen (as 'Gabriel') are all to be treasured. The 1936 dates drift ever further into novelty, but back-to-back readings of 'These Foolish Things' and 'Cross Patch' are touched by something deeper and lasting.

Dave D'Angelo

ALTO SAXOPHONE

Ambitious composer/bandleader whose Section 8 majors on reeds and complex but unforbidding charts.

 In A Minute Double-Time DTCD 160 D'Angelo; Steve Marcus (ss, ts); Walt Weiskopf (ts); Joel Weiskopf, Tardo Hammer (p); Phil Palombi (b); Steve Davis (d). 3/99.
This is very clever music, from which all pointless 'cleverness' has been carefully stripped. The songs are all sharp and to the point, and if they call for strong ensemble work rather more than prolonged soloing, that's all to the good. D'Angelo doesn't strike one as a particularly exciting soloist, and alongside Marcus and the reed-playing Weiskopf he has his work cut out. On his own 'Vitamin C' and 'In A Minute', he has a bit more space, but the best of the arrangements here are Oliver Nelson's 'Six And Four', a nice 'Lazy Afternoon' (the longest cut, appropriately) and 'All My Tomorrows'.

Eddie Daniels (born 1941)

CLARINET, BASS CLARINET, TENOR SAXOPHONE, FLUTE, ALTO FLUTE

Daniels studied at Brooklyn College, joined the Thad Jones–Mel Lewis Orchestra, staying for six years, then freelanced and led his own record dates as a leader. He is a rare example of a post-bop musician specializing in clarinet.

 First Prize! Original Jazz Classics OJC 771 Daniels; Roland Hanna (p); Richard Davis (b); Mel Lewis (d). 9/66.
Daniels was allegedly once told by Tony Scott to stick to the tenor saxophone, advice he subsequently ignored, as his many clarinet records bear witness. Even on tenor, though, he wasn't terribly exciting in the early days, lots of technique with not much narrative. Five tracks here on sax, three on clarinet, and not much to suggest that there might be a long career ahead for the 25-year-old.

 Blue Bossa Candid CCD 71002 Daniels; Bucky Pizzarelli (g). 12/72, 1/73.
The intimate format exposes a certain lack of substance, but there is plenty of strong playing on both clarinet and bass clarinet. Pizzarelli is all grace and sophistication, and manages to find a jazz route through the Chopin and Ibert pieces. The CD reissue has a couple of alternate takes, but they add very little of substance to a decent, middle-order record.

 Real Time Chesky 118 Daniels; Chuck Loeb (g); Ned Mann (b); Adam Nussbaum (d). 5/94.
Made 20 years after the previous item (he wasn't idle in the meantime, but they're deleted), this doesn't add much in terms either of technique, which was pretty much evolved by his mid-20s, or of expression, which remains pretty one-dimensional. There are decent versions of Pettiford's 'Tricotism' and of a couple of originals, 'Blue Bolero' and a tribute to the late Joe Farrell. However, the standards are played with a sloppy insouciance that isn't so much relaxed and laid-back as plain lazy.

 Beautiful Love Shanachie 5029 Daniels; Ron Odrich (bcl); Lawrence Feldman (af); Bob James (p); Chuck Loeb (g); David Finck, Tim LeFebvre (b); Wolfgang Haffner (d); David Charles (perc). 10/96.

Daniels's move from GRP depleted his catalogue considerably. No dramatic new departures here. The arrangements of Bach, Satie and Rachmaninov on Beautiful Love are about as innovative as one would expect, and the presence of mood-jazz supremo Bob James underlines the conception. Very pretty, and about as substantial as marshmallow.

 Mean What You Say Ipo1009 Daniels; Hank Jones (p); Richard Davis (b); Kenny Washington (d). 5/05.

* Homecoming: Live At The Iridium Ipo 1012 Daniels (cl, ts); Joe Locke (vib); Tom Ranier (p); Dave Finck (b); Joe LaBarbera (d). 10/06.

At last, an Eddie Daniels record to get excited about. The model here is the Modern Jazz Quartet, obviously, which is why John Lewis's 'Django' occupies such a central place on disc one, and Roger Kellaway's 'Déjà Vu MJQ' on the second. The intention at this return to New York – Eddie now lives in Santa Fe – was to mix up tenor burners, like the opening 'Falling In Love With Love', and more thoughtful clarinet pieces. The Rodgers and Hart theme is taken at a pretty furious pace, with Ranier and Finck strongly in line behind. The pianist's 'Resolution' comes second, an unfamiliar theme with a lot of harmonic interest and the perfect springboard for a first clarinet statement. Locke could and probably would play in his sleep to a room full of tailor's dummies rather than not play at all. There's a joyous abandon to his soloing and his tight mallet work suggests a still-evolving technique that really does now bear comparison with Milt Jackson.

The choice of material is generally bold, with themes by Gordon Goodwin and Mike Patterson alongside 'Warm Valley' and a smattering of Daniels originals. At nearly a quarter of an hour, 'Django' is quietly majestic, played as a classical étude in the opening measures before opening out into that easy, flâneur swing Daniels does so well. A joy from start to finish.

Also, in brief:

(*) The Five Seasons Shanachie 5017. 8/95.

Despite the presence of Alan Broadbent (p) and Peter Erskine (d), this orchestral reading of Vivaldi pops is very dull fare indeed.

(*) Swing Low Sweet Clarinet Shanachie 5073. 11/99.

With the Frankfurt Radio Big Band. Some nice things, but shameful the way 'Stardust' is clobbered.

(*) Crossing The Line Summit 1022. 9/04.

Another jazz/classical crossover, with some emphasis on the work of the relatively little-known 19th-century composer Amilcare Ponchielli.

Lars Danielsson (born 1958)

BASS, CELLO, GUITAR, KEYBOARDS

Prominent Swedish sideman in early '80s now also in demand as producer.

(*) New Hands / * Poems / (*) Far North /  Live At Visiones Dragon DRCD 125 / 209 / Curling Legs 13 / Dragon DRCD 309 Danielsson; David Liebman (ss); Bobo Stenson (p); Goran Klinghagen (g, ky on New Hands only); Jon Christensen (d). 12/85; 4/91; 2/94; 3/96.

This is a fine group and the equal of any of Liebman's records with Quest. The bassist's six compositions on the first of these discs range from a mysterious electronic lament on 'Chrass' to the memorable ballads 'It's Your Choice' and 'Johan', the former featuring a bass solo of astonishing virtuosity. Stenson and Christensen live up to their repuations and Liebman's work is typically broad in its sympathies.

Poems was recorded after a brief 'reunion' tour. The saxophonist contributes the funky, brittle 'Little Peanut' and two other tunes, while the bassist turns in some of his best writing for the haunting 'Crystalline' and 'Suite'. But it's the interaction of four master musicians which engenders the magic here and on the live souvenir. The Curling Legs disc doesn't enjoy quite such generous sound or secure mastering, but the blurrier quality doesn't do anyone any harm except the leader, whose bass features seem more recessed. It's still an astonishingly good group.

(*) Pasodoble ACT 9458 Danielsson; Leszek Mozdzer (p, cel, hrm). 12/06–1/07.

Comparisons between labels may be odious, but this is the kind of set one might expect from ECM rather than ACT. It's very fine, immaculately and expertly produced by Lars Nilsson. Folkish melodies, lots of airy space and low light, but also rigorous improvisation. It's pretty much a collaborative set, but Danielsson's more dramatic writing wins the day and his cello double is a valuable resort, more effectively deployed than Mozdzer's other keyboards.

Also, in brief:

 European Voices Dragon DRCD 268 2CD. 12/93.

Various groupings and boiled down from seven hours of music, but it feels like a project more important to the maker than to his audience.

() Libera Me / (*) Mélange Bleu ACT 9800 / 9604. 1/03–5/04; 9/06.

An all-star cast – Nils Petter Molvaer (t), Dave Liebman (d), Jon Christensen (d), Danish Radio Symphony Orchestra – but the result on the first is a very expensive dud and on the second an only slight improvement.

Harold Danko (born 1947)

PIANO

A thoughtful veteran, who doesn't hog the spotlight, but delivers consistently intelligent records.

 Next Age Steeplechase SCCD 31350 Danko; Rich Perry (ts); Scott Colley (b); Jeff Hirshfield (d). 10/93.

Steeplechase producer Nils Winther has an intuitive feel for piano-players and he gives Harold a well-rounded, spacious sound that enhances his increasingly positive and resonant playing. This was a return fixture for a group who had recorded under saxophonist Perry's leadership some weeks before. 'Next Age' is optimistically dedicated to Bill Clinton, and the saxophone part is soft and yielding enough to have been performed by the original Pres. Perry sounds perfectly in keeping on 'For Bud', but is less appropriate on the more adventurous contrafacts like 'Gregarious Solitude' and 'Silk Lady'. There is another tribute to Edison Machado in 'Subindo' – rising, ascending – which is paired with another, originally 'straight' concert piece called 'Luz Caverna'.

* After The Rain Steeplechase SCCD 31356 Danko (p solo). 8/94.

Where Tommy Flanagan treated a similar date as an occasion for fulsomely abstract meditations on Coltrane material, Danko approaches it both more modestly and more radically. He tackles no fewer than 14 Coltrane compositions, ranging from 'After The Rain', 'Lonnie's Lament' and 'Syeeda's Song Flute' to less obvious material like 'Dahomey Dance', 'Mr Day' and 'Straight Street'. What is remarkable is that Danko makes these tunes sound ideally suited to the piano, and also utterly his own. Though clearly intended as a homage, there is no obstacle to wholesale reinvention, and Danko recasts 'Mr Sims' and 'Wise One' with a free hand. The sound is well suited to the material, open but not too cavernous.

 New Autumn / * Tidal Breeze / (*) The Feeling Of Jazz Steeplechase SCCD 31377 / 31411 / 31392 Danko; Rich Perry (ts); Scott Colley (b); Jeff Hirshfield (d). 4/95; 4/95, 10/96; 3/96.

Perry's bleached tone isn't to all tastes, and here he sounds best on the Ellington and Strayhorn tribute Feeling, though this is the record on which Danko cedes more of the foreground to his colleagues. The originals on New Autumn and Tidal Breeze, both of them all-Danko sets, are more and more idiosyncratic. Just one track from April 1995 turns up on the later record, but it ('Personal Cornucopia') is so good that one can't quite understand why it wasn't included in the original set. Danko writes with a dark and sometimes impenetrable authority. On the most recent album he reprises 'Wayne Shorter' and follows it with 'McCoy's Passion', two numbers which underscore two of the most obvious influences on his playing and writing style. 'Pastoral Landing' on the same record is a fascinatingly extended workout, and one minor quibble regarding this body of work as a whole is that Danko seldom takes the option to stretch out and really develop ideas.

That is what he allows himself to do on the Ellington album, just seven numbers which consist of compositions of Ellington, Strayhorn and one ('Big Nick') by John Coltrane. These are the same tunes and in the same sequence as on Duke's 1962 encounter with the saxophonist for Impulse!

(*) Stable Mates /  Nightscapes Steeplechase SCCD 31451 / 31490 Danko; Rich Perry (ts); Scott Colley (b); Jeff Hirshfield (d). 4/97; 00.

(*) Prestigious Steeplechase SCCD 31508 As above, except omit Colley; add Dave Ballou (t); Michael Formanek (b). 3/01.

Stable Mates is an essay on jazz composition from (roughly) the period 1956–66, with Gillespie, Heath, Hancock, Mulligan, Feldman, Mingus, Golson, Miles Davis and Thad Jones all covered. As ever, there's an interesting tension between Perry's softly insinuating solos and Danko's more dramatic reinvention of the material. As a sample, follow the opening minutes of Corea's 'Windows', which feels like a direct tussle between piano and tenor for the upper hand – though in the end realization dawns that Danko was being supportive all along (a fascinating parallel world to that of the Getz–Corea original). 'Dolphin Dance', another tune Getz favoured, gets a lovely reading, and 'Nostalgia In Times Square' does the cerebral blues rather well.

Nightscapes is a series of original nocturnes which earn a mark for being interesting rather than fully engaging, and it suggests that the quartet does best when they're working in a repertorial role – which is immediately reconvened with Prestigious, a homage to Eric Dolphy's composing. Ballou and Perry are hardly the likeliest first choices to cover Booker Little and Eric Dolphy, but their remoteness from plagiarism works in the record's favour, and these are very much group performances, the result of hours of study by Danko on material which even now has rarely been sighted in the modern idiom. 'Serene', 'Miss Ann' and 'Les' are entirely recast without obliterating Dolphy's various matrices.

() Fantasy Exit / () Trilix /  Hinesight Steeplechase SCCD 31530 / 31551 / 31568 Danko; Michael Formanek (b); Jeff Hirshfield (d). 3/02; 4/03; 04.

Given the huge contemporary lumber-room of piano trio records, setting down more does seem like a show of risk-taking. Where the first two sets both score is in the kind of connoisseurship which has often served pianists well at Steeplechase: Danko assumes his audience to be knowledgeable and literate, and he chooses material by Jaki Byard, Randy Weston, Tony Williams and Freddie Redd, among others, while using only two originals of his own. Fittingly enough for an experienced educator, this has an air of masterclass about it. Fortunately, Formanek (who dominates Duke Jordan's 'Flight To Jordan' at the start of Trilix) and the supremely dependable Hirshfield play as full partners, helping to draw both discs out of the merely competent category. Danko's never going to win awards for exciting records; these graceful, tough entries are much more his style.

Hinesight is devoted to the music of Earl 'Fatha' Hines, and delightful it is. Danko gives full weight to each of a dozen songs, putting special emphasis on 'Congaine', 'Ann, Wonderful One' and the superb 'Stowaway'. These, however, are only the highlights in a fine and even set from a well-established trio.

(*) Oatts & Perry Steeplechase SCCD 31588 Danko; Dick Oatts (as); Rich Perry (ts); Michael Formanek (b); Jeff Hirshfield (d). 4/05.

They might sound like polar explorers, but Oatts and Perry were star turns in the Jones–Lewis big band during Danko's sojourn there and he apparently vowed to get them together on a small-group date some day. It was long postponed, but things turn out well. They include a few things from Thad's hand – 'Evol Deklaw Ni', 'Unit 7' and 'Don't Get Sassy' – but the set kicks off with a delightfully fresh 'Softly, As In A Morning Sunrise' and a rare cover of Coltrane's 'Like Sonny'. Horace Silver's 'Peace' is a high point, a beautifully judged performance with hidden muscle; the sinews are more obvious when he closes with Monk later. Indeed, that's the overall impression here: tender and tough. Solos are generously distributed and both the guests make hay with the pin-sharp arrangements and accompaniments.

* Time Remembered Steeplechase SCCD 31612 Danko; Michael Formanek (b); Jeff Hirshfield (d). 1/06.

Comparisons with Bill Evans are now fully justified, and Danko may intuit that, kicking off this glorious trio set with the Evans tune that (adapted) gives the album its title. He also romps through 'All Or Nothing At All', the now de rigueur Thad Jones tunes (two this time), another Monk tune ('Bye-Ya' finishes the set) and a bunch of originals, including 'Unknowable Capers #1/#2', which were apparently written for students.

We thought Colley might be missed, but Formanek's more singing tone and punchier delivery has added a new dimension. Wonderful.

Also, in brief:

 Three Of Four Steeplechase SCCD 31444. 4/97.

Another nice but in no way extraordinary set with Scott Colley (b) and Jeff Hirshfield (d).

(*) This Isn't Maybe Steeplechase SCCD 31471. 7/98.
Typical of Danko to create this solo tribute to Chet Baker without 'My Funny Valentine'. Not an obvious or conventional gesture on the whole album, which breathes with the trumpeter's spirit, but in dialogue with an admirer who clearly learnt much from it.

Alec Dankworth

DOUBLE BASS

Son of John and Cleo Laine, brother of Jacqui, and a quietly authoritative figure on the British scene.

 If You're Passing By Candid CCD 79773 Dankworth; Julian Argüelles (sax); Phil Robson (g). 9/02.
An intriguingly configured trio that delivers more than the personnel and instrumentation would suggest. Dankworth's solid presence is the heart of the record, leaving some of the more incendiary stuff to Argüelles and relying on Robson, an underrated performer, to give it all shape and coherence. There's not too much unsupported soloing, and the real aim here seems to be a unified ensemble sound. Opening with Abdullah Ibrahim's 'Msundza' offers some earnest of an energetic date, but for the most part it's quite thoughtful. Brubeck's 'The Duke' and Troup's 'The Meaning Of The Blues' are interesting inclusions, but Alec's own writing, logical, uncluttered and unpretentious, is what gives a fine set its character.

Jacqui Dankworth

VOICES

Daughter of Cleo Laine and John Dankworth; also an accomplished songwriter and actress. Formerly fronted Field Of Blue.

 For All We Know Black Box BBJ0312 Dankworth; James Pearson (p). 7/00.

(*) As The Sun Shines Down On Me Candid CCD 79753 Dankworth; Mike Outram (g, thumb p); Alec Dankworth, Tim Harries (b); Roy Dodds (d); Martin Brunsden (musical saw). 02.

* Detour Ahead Candid CCD 79796 As above, except omit Harries, Brunsden. 4/04.

Why's she not better known? Perhaps the family connection works against her, in critical terms. Whatever, she's a class act. For All We Know was a strong development from her work with Field Of Blue. Her mostly standards performance on the first Candid is the best thing yet, ably supported by brother Alec and the underrated Roy Dodds. Jacqui is sharp enough to include James Taylor, Stevie Wonder, Joni Mitchell and Bob Dylan amongst the show-tunes, though it's the latter ('You Must Believe In Spring', 'Teach Me Tonight' and 'In A Sentimental Mood') that clinch her jazz credentials. The album starts on an unusual note with a surreal 'Blue Moon', featuring Mike Outram on thumb piano (used again on Joni's 'Man From Mars') and Martin Brunsden's musical saw. Detour Ahead is also a cracker. There's not a dead spot on it. She breathes new life into 'On The Street Where You Live', sounds revelatory on 'Not Like This' as well (Al Jarreau should hang up his gloves), and handles the contemporary stuff, like Paul Simon's 'Train In The Distance', with flair and intelligence.

Also, in brief:

 Five Housman Settings Spotlite SPJCD 559. 5/96.
A bold choice of material, but with some standards thrown in, this suggests that Jacqui is capable of the same stylistic range as her mother.

John Dankworth (born 1927)

ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, CLARINET

One of the bop pioneers at Club Eleven in the later '40s, his Dankworth Seven and big bands were important in the '50s and '60s; the orchestra played Newport in 1959. He worked extensively in film and became a force in music education from his and Cleo Laine's base at Wavendon.

 Moon Valley Audio B ABCD 7 Dankworth; John Horler (p); Malcolm Creese (b); Allan Ganley (d). 2/98.

 JD5 /  In A Mellow Tone Q-Note QNT 10101 / 1019. 12/02–2/03; 5/05. Dankworth; Mark Nightingale (tb); John Horler (p); Alec Dankworth (b); Allan Ganley (d).
Still mysteriously neglected in British reissue programmes, with the orchestral stuff all in limbo. Having his own label should improve matters, but he probably doesn't have the time to devote to it.

Moon Valley is a pleasing quartet date for Malcolm Creese's label; given just a single day in the studio, it has a casual feel, but John's title-piece is a lovely melody in three and 'Spooks', done on clarinet, is a typical JD lark. The tone has dried out a little and 'Son Of Sparky', which reappears on the own-label follow-up, reinforcing its retread feel, almost goes wrong, but not quite. Nightingale helps out with extra horn on JD5, but it's still a bit perfunctory. The same group delivers a nicely respectful Ellington tribute, but again there's a feeling of not much preparation and over-familiar arrangements.

 About 42 Years On Avid 919 Dankworth; Danny Moss (ts); John Horler, Dave Lee (p); Dave Green, Danny Moss Jr (b); Allan Ganley (d). 11/06.
There's a story behind this one. Dankworth and Moss did, indeed, work together 'about' 42 years ago in the Dankworth Big Band and hadn't done since, largely because Danny has been living in Western Australia. The tenor has recently been ill and had to undergo expensive cancer therapy, which was underwritten by some friendly testimonials from fellow players. Dankworth took part in one of these and agreed to make a studio record in addition. Like most recent forays, it was recorded quickly and without much preparation, but what's immediately striking, quite apart from Moss's indomitable spirit, is how fresh and forceful Dankworth sounds in what against all expectation turns out to be a challenging blowing date.

Also, in brief:

 Spread A Little Happiness Avid Entertainment 854 2CD. 4/49–12/55.
John and Cleo in the early days. An ideal catch-up.

Alec and John Dankworth Generation Band

GROUP

An occasional project featuring the father-and-son team which is a central dynasty in British modern jazz.

 Nebuchadnezzar Jazz House JHCD 029 Guy Barker, Gerard Presencer, John Barclay (t, flhn); Mark Nightingale (tb); Keith Riby (frhn); John Dankworth (ss, as, Cmel, f); Andy Panayi (as, f); Tim Garland (ss, ts, f); Jimmy Hastings (bs, cl, f); Robin Aspland (p); John Parricelli (g); Christian Garrick (vn); Dave Powell (tba); Alec Dankworth (b); Ralph Salmins (d). 10/93.

 Rhythm Changes Jazz House JHCD 043 As above, except omit Barclay, Riby, Garrick; add Noel Langley (t, flhn), Dave Laurence (frhn), Stuart Hall (vn, g). 7/95.

The family firm in fine fettle. John Dankworth's representation on CD is disappointingly thin at present, considering his stature in postwar British jazz, but at least these two absorbing discs of big-band music – where he shares leadership duties with son Alec – are readily available. Nebuchadnezzar, recorded in a single day at the Ronnie Scott Club (though not in front of an audience), packs a dozen scores by various hands into its duration. The results are somewhat mixed, but the successes – Alec's take on 'Ida Lupino', Andy Panayi's treatment of 'Black Narcissus' and John's waltz-time blues, 'Nebuchadnezzar' – are performed with great panache and attention to dynamics: the band is often at its best when playing on the softest tones. Rhythm Changes was cut during a 'proper' set at the club (and a fine sound engineer Chris Lewis secured, too), and is inevitably more shouting – but better played all round. 'I Got Rheumatics' is a flag-waver in which the obvious prototype gets a glittering respray; 'Around The Track' is another refined show of dynamics; and throughout, as with the earlier disc, one is struck by the band's notably adept use of the sonorities of the brass section, with the tuba parts a crucial note of individuality. The soloists are a stellar lot in British terms, but the band's the thing.

Stefano D'Anna (born 1959)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Sicilian contemporary in a 'classic' post-bop idiom.

* Leapin' In Splasc(h) H 374 D'Anna; Enzo Pietropaoli (b); Fabrizio Sferra (d). 12/91.

 Quattroquinti Splasc(h) H 643 D'Anna; Stefano Bollani (p); Lello Pareti (b); Walter Paoli (d). 5/97.

 Carousel Splasc(h) H 666 D'Anna; Fabio Zeppetella (g); Pietro Ciancaglini (b); Roberto Gatto (d). 2/98.

(*) Runa Splasc(h) H 912 D'Anna; Pietro Ciancaglini (b); Mimmo Cafiero (d). 3/03.

D'Anna says that he admires the 'sculpture-like clarity' of Sonny Rollins's improvising, and his own playing strives for the same. Despite the influence, though, he goes to great lengths to avoid modern saxophone cliché: few double-time passages or tonal distortions, an evenness to the line which gives the solos an irresistible flow and a steely quality that never compromises his lyricism. The seven compositions on Leapin' In all differ from one another and the three standards are scrupulously remodelled: 'I've Grown Accustomed To Her Face' is strikingly different from the Rollins version, 'Be-Bop' is fantastically fast and biting, and 'Body And Soul', done as a duo for tenor and uncredited soprano (D'Anna overdubbed?), refers to the melody hardly at all in a stunning representation reminiscent of Konitz and Marsh.

Quattroquinti and Carousel feel like a disappointment after their predecessor, but they are bad. The biting energy has given way to a more considered delivery, less evidently on the first of the pair, and Zeppetella takes up plenty of space on the second. D'Anna does all the writing himself and there are no familiar tunes to anchor things. Runa marks a return to form. With Cafiero powerful at the kit, the music is excitable, but tempered by D'Anna's rigour. Several of the originals refer to his native Palermo, though there's little to suggest Sicilian folk music. 'I Should Care' and ''S Wonderful' are wonderfully hard-bitten ballad readings.

Joe Darensbourg (1906–85)

CLARINET

Raised in Baton Rouge, he studied with Alphonse Picou and then moved to California and the north-west.

 1957 Live American Music AMCD 103 Darensbourg; His Dixie Flyers. 57.

 Barrelhousin' With Joe GHB 90 Darensbourg; Ernie Carson (c); Charlie Bornemann (tb); Ralph Godwin (p); Bill Rutan (bj); Hal Smith (d). 72.

He was never prominently featured as a leader, so these are rare survivals. The earlier disc comes from a busy period when Joe had struck out on his own from the Kid Ory outfit and was recording for Lark and Dixieland Jubilee, so the band, anonymous as it is, sounds well played-in and up for it. Barrelhousin' has some good-natured playing by a later group, and both Carson and Bornemann come across as accomplished soloists. Joe's own style, with its slap-tonguing ('Yellow Dog Blues') and broad vibrato, won't be accused of undue sophistication, but it's effective and enjoyable.

Jeff Darrohn

SOPRANO, ALTO, TENOR AND BARITONE SAXOPHONES

Virginia-born, he grew up near Philadelphia and in 2004 moved to London. Leader of the six-horn SAXON band and a featured soloist in a wide range of large and small ensembles.

 T Bird '60 Jazzed Media 104 Darrohn; Bob Apgar (bs); Dave Posmontier (p); Craig Thomas (b); Tony Vigilante (d). 06.

Here's a man so infatuated with the sound of a saxophone section that he took all the parts himself. Apart from a guest spot by baritonist Apgar (another fine big-band player), everything here is overdubbed by Darrohn on all four of his horns. You wouldn't know it. There's a headlong dash to the playing – only 'Velvet Blue' is anything like the pace of a ballad – and real character to the different horn voicings. 'Something Unknown' is his 'Enigma Variations', though Darrohn generously drops in a quote from 'Take The "A" Train' to confirm its lineage. He solos with intelligence and vigour, and while one would like to hear him play in a more measured style on occasion, the experience of this debut disc is similar to being driven at speed in a vintage T-Bird.

Julian Dash (1916–74)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

A fine section player with the Erskine Hawkins orchestra, he had a brief solo career when the band downsized. Composer of 'Tuxedo Junction'.

 The Complete Recordings 1950–1953 Blue Moon BMCD 1050 Dash; various personnels. 50–53.

 A Portrait Of Julian Dash Master Jazz MJR 8106 Dash; Cliff Smalls (p); Jimmy Shirley (g); Milt Hinton (b); George Foster (d). 70.

There's nothing revelatory in these sessions, but Dash had a certain elegance of approach, even when the material was quite crude, and there are a few interesting names dotted about in the otherwise anonymous personnels. Though mainly for specialist buyers, these are agreeable enough for a more casual listener. Presumably 'Tuxedo Junction' kept him in suits.

D.A.T.A.

GROUP

Inventive ensemble with potential longevity.

 Now Processing Slam CD 271 Tris Harris (ss, as, p, syn); Alan Eason (g); Andy McFarlane (vn); Dave Hayley (d, perc). 05.

The name, of course, derives from their first names rather than from any doctrinaire commitment to information theory. In fact, D.A.T.A. go about their business with the unfussy good humour you'd expect of four South London guys. It's not hit-and-hope stuff, though, or the improv equivalent of a Sunday pub band. There's real discipline and a barely tapped fund of ideas. Harris is an impressively adaptable player, but it's McFarlane, a more than competent stylist in other forms as well, who gives the group its distinctive cast. Hayley has touches of the estimable Steve Harris about him, though more in manner than the fine detail of technique, while Eason makes tough playing seem almost laid-back and relaxed. Impressive.

Carlo Actis Dato (born 1952)

REEDS

Co-founder of Italian post-bop pioneers Art Studio. Now has his own Actis Band.

(*) Ankara Twist Splasc(h) H 302 Dato; Piero Ponzo (cl, bcl, as, bs, f); Enrico Fazio (b); Fiorenzo Sordini (d). 10/89.

(*) Dune Splasc(h) H 354 Dato; Laura Culver (ss, clo, berim); Alex Rolle (xy, perc); Massimo Barbiero (d, mar). 2/91.

Dato's most at home on baritone and bass clarinet, a volatile and unpredictable player with a compensating instinct for timing and the structure of a solo. He writes themes that suggest some bridging-point between jazz, Balkan and other folk musics. Ankara Twist features a long-standing quartet: brief tracks with a programmatic feel, but played with verve. Rolle and Barbiero join in the fun on Dune as the quartet takes some aspects of 'world music' to the cleaners: march and tango rhythms mischievously undercut by Carlo's bawling improvisations – a brutal baritone assault on 'Ketchup' – and Laura's deadpan drones on the cello.

 Urartu Leo CD LR 220 Dato (bs, bcl, ts solo). 3/94.

Dato's first solo set is a typically mercurial and imaginative effort. He caricatures his reeds and loves to make excessive, elaborate noise with them, using circular breathing, slap-tonguing and whatever else he can think of. Most of the pieces seem like lightning sketches, and once he's finished with the idea, it's done. He also plays a couple of standards, but they come out rather cold.

(*) Blue Cairo Splasc(h) 454 As for Ankara Twist. 7/95.

Back with the original quartet, Dato picks up where he left off – a personal synthesis of musics that look mostly East, this time to Kathmandu (where an element of 'A Night In Nepal' was recorded), Egypt and other points unspecified, just marketplace overtones and snake-charmer solos. This is funny, sentimental music that can shock with a heartbreaking melody or a burst of anger. For all its globalism, it's quite one-dimensionally simple in feel, but vibrantly alive.

* Delhi Mambo yvp 3065 As for Ankara Twist. 2/98.

On holiday from Splasc(h) for a moment, Dato and the quartet dash off their best record. 'Et Voilà' introduces the band one at a time, before their footsteps are heard beating a hasty retreat. But they come back for another hour or so of music, full of Eastern promise though the travelogue elements have fused into a collective spirit that somehow renders distances irrelevant. Be it bossa, bop or something heard in the local café, they're at home with it all.

(*) Wake Up With The Birds Leo CD LR 285 Dato; Kazutoki Umezu (ss, as, cl, bcl). 11/98.

(*) Paella & Norimaki Splasc(h) 730-2 Dato; Enzo Rocco (g). 7/00.

Dato and Umezu make a tremendous sound together. The opening ten minutes of 'Mad Chickens' is a great display of barking sonority. They're not really screamers; the interplay's more about running loops around each other, whether on groaning bass clarinets or swooning saxes. Very romantic. The return match with Rocco features their – yum! yum! – recipe for paella in the sleeve-notes. While you're making that, Enzo and Carlo supply another hour of sparky and sometimes mournful duets in a broad gallery of styles which sometimes ('Habablanca') reaches a serene plateau inscribed with only a few notes.

(*) The Moonwalker Leo CD LR 311 Dato (bs, ts, bcl solo). N.D.

The second solo disc for Leo is great fun. Anyone else would be described as 'angry' or 'passionate', but Carlo always seems to offer the listener a wink that it all shouldn't be taken too seriously. Again the solos are brief and to the point, and there are field recordings interspersed between them – schoolchildren singing, a disgruntled fellow speaking on Malian radio ...

 Tomorrow Night Gig Leo CD LR 332 Dato; Keisuke Ohta (vn); Yasuhiko Tachibana (b). 4/01.

Not strictly the saxophonist's gig – it's credited to TAO, after their initials – this one can safely be overlooked. Dato plays almost tongue-in-cheek and there is too much clowningly over-the-top stuff from the others. There are points of calm, but the music fails to reach even a brutal quietus.

 Don Quijote Splasc(h) 769.2 Dato; Massimo Rossi (ss, as); Antonio Fontana (g, marranzano); Federico Marchesano (b); Dario Bruna (d). 9/01.

(*) Istanbul Rap yvp 3112 As for Ankara Twist. 10/02.

The Actis Band and the quartet may have very different personnel, but the results aren't so dissimilar. The band is noisier, perhaps a shade more anarchic; the quartet is jazzier, perhaps a shade more showbiz. Both flirty with silliness, only to have Dato or one of his trusted gangs turn everything right with a spot-on solo or heartbreaking melody. Istanbul Rap is the keeper of the two.

 Garibaldi /  Allende Leo CD LR 365 / 462 As for Don Quijote, except omit Fontana; add Karsten Lipp (g on Allende only). 7/02; 5/05.
The Actis Band out in honour of two more folk heroes and in its rockiest incarnations yet. Fontana's guitar, then Lipp's on the sequel, suddenly seem like the key element and Dato's own role is proportionately less. Even so, he has the gift of delivering a killer contribution in just a few notes, so one simply waits for his next appearance and the time goes by happily, even if the political subtexts fail to be any more than that.

(*) Swingin' Hanoi! Splasc(h) 907.2 Dato; Piero Ponzo (cl, as, picc); Enrico Fazio (b); Fiorenzo Sordini (d). 1/03.

(*) On Tour Live 2004 Splasc(h) H 541/2.2 2CD Dato; Massimo Rossi (ss, as); Karsten Lipp (g); Federico Marchesano (b); Dario Bruna (d). 3/04.
The quartet and the Actis Band in typically high-spirited form. If Dato sometimes seems to sustain his music via bravado and a nutty chopsmanship, he refuses to be boring and amazingly there's little sense that the groups are simply repeating themselves. Folkish dance rhythms propel much of Swingin' Hanoi, but the fine intensity of the tenor-playing on 'La Montagne Pelée' shows that, for all the fun he has, the leader is serious about his playing. The Actis Band has a new member in Lipp, a rockier and more effects-driven player than Fontana, and he puts a harder spin on things. Two packed sets recorded before a Swiss audience, who seem polite rather than enraptured.

 Avanti Popolo! Splasc(h) 966 CD/CD-ROM Dato; Luca Calabrese, Marco Rigoletti (t); Gianpiero Malfatto (tb, tba); Beppe Di Filippo, Piero Ponzo, Pino Romeo (sax); Enrico Fazio (b); Fiorenzo Sordini (d); Ferdinanco Despaigne (perc). 05.
Familiar quartet names lurking in the personnel give the game away. This isn't so much a big-band project as a much-augmented quartet. Ponzo has helped rework some familiar themes, including 'Oltremare', which comes across here almost bitter in quality, and 'Melanconico Cha-Cha', which prompts one of Dato's most unfettered solos ever. The mood here is somewhat reminiscent of a Willem Breuker Kollektief record, though Dato's own voice immediately distinguishes it. Not his best record, but a vivid one, and the enhanced CD has some fine live material, which humanizes it nicely.

 Zhon-Guo – Cina! Leo CD LR 497 As for Garibaldi, Allende. 6/07.
Actis Band records have an air of familiarity now that will either intrigue and reassure or put you off. Difficult to tell with this one, which is very slick and exciting, but the closest thing to generic Carlo has ever released. 'Fela' and 'Ataturk' (the man's addicted to hero-worship) bracket the set nicely and the group has real empathy but where's it going next?

Also, in brief:

(*) Pasodoble Splasc(h) 642. 6/97.
With guitarist Enzo Rocco. May they have this dance?

 Son Para El Che Splasc(h) 675. 10/97.
A new group but familiar agenda, and if the purpose really is a tribute to Guevara, it goes by the most roundabout route.

 Ginosa Jungle / (*) Fes Motuno Splasc(h) 710 / yvp 3081. 4/98; 1/00.
Given how vivid they are in the studio, there's no special frisson to a live date by the quartet and even some frustration: why's the audience laughing? They're back in the studio for Fes Motuno; better.

() USA Tour / April 2001 / Live /  American Tour Splasc(h) 520.2 / 534.2. 4/01; 2/02.
Two different visits. The first disc is a glorified bootleg: mostly free solos with guest spots from the locals, only in unglorious lo-fi. The second is more like the thing, demonstrating that for all his skill as a soloist, Dato likes company best.

() Folklore Imaginario Leo CD LR 437. 3/04.
A disappointing duet with Baldo Martinez (b); both men overplaying in an exposed situation.

Jeremy Davenport (born 1970)

TRUMPET, VOCALS

Raised in St Louis, then studied at the Manhattan School of Music and with Ellis and Wynton Marsalis. Perhaps as a consequence, he's now based in New Orleans. Singing has largely overtaken horn.

 Jeremy Davenport Telarc 83376 Davenport; Peter Martin, Glenn Patscha (p); Neil Caine, Christopher Thomas (b); Martin Butler, Shannon Powell (d). 96.

 Maybe In A Dream Telarc 83409 Davenport; Glenn Patscha (p); Peter Washington (b); Gregory Hutchinson (d); Diana Krall (v). 3/97.
Being groomed as the new Chet Baker is a more than slightly ironic fate. In practice, Davenport sounds more like Pops on trumpet and more like Harry Connick Jr when he sings. The originals on the debut album are risible, but there's some very nicely judged horn and the overall effect is promising. (It's tempting to note that 'Celestine' did the hair and stylings – very much that kind of career launch.)

The second disc is more settled and the group sounds supportive and aware, particularly the veteran Washington. The title-track is an original, and while the lyrics are still relatively banal, they're better blended with the music than anything on the first outing. 'What Ever Happened' is another, though you'll swear it's a standard. 'Moonglow' is very attractive and Krall has a nice cameo on 'Let's Leave'. He may yet end up acting rather than either singing or playing, but let's hope we hear more of that old-style trumpet.

(*) Live At The Bistro AAM Recordings 4464 Davenport; Thadeus Richard (p); David Pulphus (b); Troy Davis (d). 6/03.
Since the turn of the millennium, Davenport has been a regular at the Ritz Carlton in the French Quarter of New Orleans, but this catches him back home in St Louis, with a strong supporting group and sounding very mature and confident. 'St Louis Blues' is a gift, of course, and he takes full advantage of it, a nicely salacious reading that has the crowd in the palm of his hand right at the end. It takes a bit of warming up (the set, rather than the crowd), but this is the best thing from Davenport yet, an easy-swinging entertainment package that isn't short on musicianship.

Kenny Davern (1935–2006)

CLARINET

Began playing in NY traditional jazz circles in the '50s and known as a sideman until his association with Bob Wilber in Soprano Summit. Has investigated the avant-garde, but remains true to old loyalties.

 A Night With Eddie Condon Arbors ARCD 19238 Davern; Bernie Privin (t); Lou McGarity (tb); Dill Jones (p); Eddie Condon (g); Jack Lesberg (b); Cliff Leeman (d). 4/71.

Davern had claims to being the major clarinettist in jazz, having forsaken the soprano saxophone ('I play soprano once a year and it takes only a few moments to confirm that I made the right decision'). Not exactly pre-history for Davern, but this rowdy tape of a gig at Syracuse by a latter-day Condon gang is his earliest featured set at present. A slight speed wobble here and there isn't too intrusive. It's a moot point whether this is a vintage Condon group, but the playing is very strong – if Privin overchalks it at times, Davern and McGarity are both splendid – and the bandleading style is unique: he even brings Jones up short for starting 'Rosetta' too quickly.

 Live In Concert 1974 Arbors ARCD 19267 Davern; Pee Wee Erwin, Bernie Privin (t); Ed Hubble (tb); Johnny Mince (cl, ss); Dick Hyman (p); Major Holley (b); Cliff Leeman (d). 12/74.

This traditional supergroup was assembled by Erwin for a short tour of Europe after a Dorsey band visit. Davern is presented here as the starring name and so it proves. He's in immaculate form, talkative, edgy, effortless by turns. The Kings Of Jazz marquee is perfectly justified, but the tapes are hardly of regal quality and it's sometimes an uncomfortable record to listen to at any volume.

 The Hot Three Jazzology JCD 167 Davern; Art Hodes (p); Don DeMichael (b). 79.

Caught live at St John's University, this is a modestly thrilling encounter with the great Chicagoan, who's in peppery form. The sound isn't particularly good, but the playing makes up for it in every way.

(*) Stretchin' Out Jazzology JCD 187 Davern; Dick Wellstood (p); Chuck Riggs (d). 12/83.

(*) Playing For Kicks Jazzology JCD 197 Davern; Martin Litton (p); John Petters (d). 11/85.

These offer one of the best showcases for Davern's garrulous playing, Stretchin' Out with a mellifluous and perfectly paced 'The Man I Love' and proceeding through five more standards with unflagging inventiveness. Wellstood is a superb partner, harrying and supporting in equal measure and the only drawback is Riggs, who's too loud in the mix and superfluous anyway. On the other one, Litton isn't remotely up to Wellstood's standard, but it's another great set, with the ancient ('Willie The Weeper') and the comparatively modern ('Lullaby Of The Leaves') both on the agenda.

 The Last Reunion Jazzology 352 / Upbeat 135 Davern; Art Hodes (p); Colin Bowden (d). 5/88.

Though it sounds elegiac, Hodes had another five years' playing left in him and Kenny went on for another two decades. It was their last public meeting, though, so the title's strictly correct. Unlike some drummers who've played with Davern in similar contexts, Bowden more than earns his keep and his credit. He's unobtrusive, nudgingly insistent without being aggressive and often very subtle. 'Exactly Like You' and a long 'After You've Gone' are the standout tracks. We've seen copies of the Upbeat issue of this still around; same music.

 East Side, West Side Arbors ARCD 19137 Davern; Dan Barrett (c, tb); Joel Helleny (tb); Bucky Pizzarelli (g); Bob Haggart (b); Tony DeNicola (d). 6/94.

 Kenny Davern & The Rhythm Men Arbors ARCD 19147 As above, except omit Barrett, Helleny; add John Bunch (p). 6/95.

* Breezin' Along Arbors ARCD 19170 Davern; Bucky Pizzarelli, Howard Alden (g); Greg Cohen (b); Tony DeNicola (d). 6/96.

Barrett's a valuable front-line partner and he's missed on the Rhythm Men date: he plays cornet for the most part, but oils his slide for a duet with Helleny on 'Sidewalks Of New York'. Davern seems in good spirits on both sessions and the section fits like an old shoe. Breezin' Along is a peach, though. Pizzarelli and Alden make a great team, driving the fast numbers and softly suggesting the harmonic detail in the slower ones. Davern measures the material with an almost insouciant virtuosity: two Beiderbecke chestnuts, 'Since My Best Girl Turned Me Down' and 'Jazz Me Blues', are super, but 'Baby, Won't You Please Come Home' is Kenny at his peak.

(*) Spanish Eyes Chiaroscuro CD(D) 344 Davern; Phil Woods (as); Flip Phillips (ts); Derek Smith (p); Howard Alden (g); Milt Hinton (b); Joe Ascione (d). 11/95.

Nothing else at the 1995 Floating Jazz Festival can have outswung or outsmoked this. Davern's at the top of his game – his 'Elsa's Dream' solo is both far out and inside – and Flip, as ever, defied Father Time. The rhythm section is completely in the groove, with Alden a man for all seasons, and, to cap it all, Phil Woods strolls in for a final 'Lover Come Back To Me'. Any vagaries in the sound are minor.

 Smiles Arbors ARCD 19207 As Breezin' Along. 98.

 The Jazz KENnection Arbors ARCD 19246 Davern; Ken Peplowski (cl, as); John Bunch (p); Howard Alden (g); Greg Cohen (b); Tony DeNicola (d). 10/00.

 At The Mill Hill Playhouse /  In Concert At The Outpost Performance Space Arbors ARCD 19296 / 19315 Davern; James Chirillo (g); Greg Cohen (b); Tony DeNicola (d). 5/03; 12/04.

In Ira Gitler's words, 'easy listening jazz from the Irish-Jewish soul of a story-telling reedsman'. The reunion of the Breezin' Along group isn't as consistently fine as its predecessor. The choice of tunes is less interesting and Davern sounds less involved. But these are still great performances, and Alden and Pizzarelli make a great team. The meeting with Peplowski is a bit disappointing: Cohen and DeNicola could have given them more lift. They're a bit backward again on the live date – and you can imagine Davern's comments on appearing in a 'performance space' – but they're perversely excellent on the Mill Hill date. The middle section of this – 'My Gal Sal', 'It's Tight Like That', 'Wabash Blues', 'Wild Man Blues', and that's the order we'd recommend – is as good as anything Davern recorded in later years. The very tight setting, with just guitar for chords, allows Kenny to fly free and he does with obvious relish. There are a couple of signs of haste, or poor articulation, on the faster numbers, but these wouldn't attract notice on a live date and they don't get in the way.

 Dialogues Arbors ARCD 19317 Davern; Ken Peplowski (cl); Howard Alden, James Chirillo (g); Nicki Parrott (b); Tony DeNicola (d). 10/05.

 Nobody Else But Kenny Sackville SKCD 3069 Davern; David Boeddinghaus (b); Trevor Richards (d). 3/06.

These were posthumous releases and are among the very last things Kenny made. He was living in the south-west, where he died nine months after the final Sackville date here. It's a fine set, but it's clear that it isn't the Davern of old. Boeddinghaus takes a solo 'Beale Street Blues', apparently to give the boss a break after their clarinet/piano duet on 'Pretty Baby', and while they come back together beautifully on 'There Is No Greater Love', you do feel they're nursing him along to some degree. Recorded a few months earlier, the old Kennection sounds better this time out, though that view may be coloured by sentiment. Peps is in great form, and seems even here ready to take on the master's mantle. Even so, he doesn't quite have the older man's guile and wry intelligence and it ends up pretty much honours even. Chirillo doesn't sound as convincing working with Alden as he does on his own; Alden sounds less comfortable than he is with Pizzarelli. That apart, it's a great send-off.

Also, in brief:

 Never In A Million Years Challenge CHR 70019. 1/84.
Davern and Dick Wellstood (p) at Mill Hill Playhouse. Doesn't need anyone or anything else.

 This Old Gang Of Ours Upbeat 138. 12/85, 2/86.
Cracking stuff with the cream of British trad players, and it's Humphrey Lyttelton (t) who steals the honours. Plus two tracks from a roughly contemporary Humph date, without Kenny.

Lowell Davidson (1941–90)

PIANO

Studied biochemistry at Harvard, but moved to NY and played with Ornette Coleman and briefly as drummer with the New York Art Quartet. Injured in a lab accident, which also affected him psychologically.

(*) Lowell Davidson Trio ESP 1012 Davidson; Gary Peacock (b); Milford Graves (d). 65.
He only ever made one recording, and it's a disgrace, technically shoddy and with almost no bass presence. However, Davidson's music is fascinating. It's immediately different from what's considered to be the dominant Cecil Taylor school. Instead, Davidson nudges at small areas of sound, moving them around his keyboard until he has built up edifices of surprising complexity. Graves is a brilliant partner, the acme of free-jazz drumming; one has to assume that Peacock is doing something interesting as well, but it's inaudible. This remains a curiosity and a fascinating might-have-been.

Anthony Davis (born 1951)

PIANO

Classically trained and also renowned as a composer of new music, he worked with Leo Smith in the '70s and recorded extensively on his own account.

 Of Blues And Dreams Sackville SKCD2 3020 Davis; Leroy Jenkins (vn); Abdul Wadud (clo); Pheeroan akLaff (d). 7/78.
If this looks like a classical trio with drums, that's pretty much in line with Davis's other, arguably main, line of enquiry. This comes in Sackville's Creative Improvised Music Classics series. It's some way short of classic status and one wonders how much improvisation is at stake in it. The central event is a three-part 'Suite For Another World', which unfortunately lives up to its title too well: curiously evanescent and fleeting. Jenkins keeps things raw on the other pieces, but he seems disengaged and Davis's correct pianism doesn't generate much excitement. Music that's easier to admire than to like.

Bob Davis

PIANO

Emerged on the little-trumpeted Minneapolis scene and worked away there in relative obscurity.

 Jazz In Orbit / Jazz From The North Coast Fresh Sound FSRCD 1624 Davis; Dave Karr (ts, bs, f); Bob Crea (ts); Stu Anderson, Johnny Frigo (b); Bill Blakkestad (d). 57, 58.
No one ever talks about the North Coast sound. In reality, it's pretty much like the West Coast sound, only colder. These were recorded for Zephyr and Stephany, and they're an ideal representation of Davis's impressive but slightly forbidding technique. His main influence hailed from just over the Great Lakes, but in addition to Oscar Peterson there was a touch of Bud Powell in his make-up, though Bud Powell without the demons. These aren't terrific bands, but Davis himself is worth listening to, and his originals – 'Goose' and 'River Road' from North Coast, the fine 'Adam's Evening' and the title-track of Orbit (everyone was writing 'space' and 'orbit' themes in 1958) – are worth preserving.

Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis (1922–86)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Born in NY. He made his name with Cootie Williams, before joining Basie from 1952 on and off until 1960. Frequently paired with Shirley Scott or Johnny Griffin in the '60s, he spent seven further years with Basie before working mainly as a solo. Died unexpectedly in Las Vegas.

(*) Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis 1946–1947 Classics 1012 Davis; Fats Navarro (t); Sadik Hakim, Al Haig, Johnny Acea (p); Bill De Arango, John Collins, Huey Long (g); Gene Ramey (b); Denzil Best, Butch Ballard (d). 5/46–4/47.
 Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis 1948–1952 Classics 1382 Davis; Shad Collins (t); Rudy Williams (as); Charles 'Lefty' Edwards (ts); Dave McRae (bs); John Acea, Kenny Kersey, Wynton Kelly (p); Bill Doggett (org, p); Billy Taylor (org); Al Casey, Freddie Green (g); Gene Ramey, John Simmons, Frank Skeete, Oscar Pettiford (b); Shadow Wilson, Butch Ballard, Lee Abrams, Jo Jones (d); Chicago Carl Davis (v). 48–52.
These are almost prehistory for the Davis most familiar to LP collectors. The most important tracks are the eight sides for Savoy, with Fats Navarro, by Eddie Davis And His Be Boppers. Davis straddles bop and swing in his phrasing, but with his swallowed notes, sandpapery tone and sudden shrieks, he's already a genre unto himself. Navarro is not quite the budding genius he would shortly become, but he's budding nevertheless, and this is exciting music. The rest of the disc is made up of sessions for Haven, Apollo, Lenox and three tracks which later turned up on a Plymouth LP. Some of the material is obscure enough to have unidentified personnels, and recording quality is relatively indifferent; but Davis barrels through with the boldness that would characterize his career.

Classics 1382 is a bit more rough-and-ready, though there's still much to savour. The first session includes a rambunctious 'Happy Birthday', the next features Dionysian vocals by 'King Karl' Davis, and the third has the most lascivious song imaginable in 'Mountain Oysters'. Four titles with Domino with an unknown band include the improbable but high-temperature 'Lock Goes Latin', before a label switch to Royal Roost and two 1952 sessions with Bill Doggett and Billy Taylor that presage Jaws's organ combo recordings for Prestige.

 Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis 1953–1955 Classics 1443 Davis; Eddie Bonnemere (p); Doc Bagby (org); Clifford Bush (g); John Simmons (b); Charlie Rice (d); unidentified percussion. 53–4/55.
Bridging the gap between the early R&B stuff and the Roulette and Prestige sessions, this has Davis recording for Royal Roost and King, working first with a bop rhythm section on the early cuts but then returning to a rootsier feel with the underrated Bagby on the 1955 cuts. There is some great playing here, especially Bagby's 'Hay Ride', even if the settings are outwardly unpromising.

 Trio Featuring Shirley Scott Lone Hill Jazz LHJ 10135 Davis; Shirley Scott (org); George Duvivier (b); Arthur Edgehill (d). 3–5/58.
(*) The Cookbook Vols. 1–3 Original Jazz Classics OJC 652 / 653 / 756 As above, except add Jerome Richardson (ts, f). 6/58; 12/58; 12/58.
 Jaws With Shirley Scott Original Jazz Classics OJC 218 As above, except omit Richardson. 9/58.
 Smokin' Original Jazz Classics OJC 705 As above, except add Jerome Richardson (ts, f). 9–12/58.
 Jaws In Orbit Original Jazz Classics 322 As above, except omit Richardson; add Steve Pulliam (tb). 5/59.
 Bacalao Original Jazz Classics OJC 1090 As above, except omit Pulliam; add Ray Barretto, Luis Perez (perc). 12/59.
 Gentle Jaws Prestige PRCD-24160-2 As above, except omit Barretto, Perez; add Red Garland (p); Sam Jones (b); Art Taylor (d). 60.
In the LP era, Davis became one of the most honest, no-nonsense soloists in the music. He hardly changed his methods from one date to another. His apprenticeship in New York big bands in the '40s led him towards rhythm and blues rather than bebop, but it was as either a section soloist with Basie or a jazz combo leader that Jaws functioned best. His sound was, on reflection, a surprisingly complex matter. Unlike many of the players working in the organ combo format, his phrasing had an elongated quality that he broke up with matter-of-fact brusqueness: as if he was masking emotion with a temperament that told him to get on with it.

He spent the late '50s leading a settled group. The Lone Hill reissue consists of their two albums for Roulette which preceded the Prestige dates; the tracks are shorter and Jaws gets off the leash less, but they're enjoyable enough. The records are formulaic – blustering solos over bluesy organ riffs – but endowed with spirit and good when taken one at a time. All three Cookbook albums are entertaining displays of good-natured fisticuffs, with the food theme followed through in all the titles ('The Chef', 'Skillet', 'In The Kitchen' and so on) and Jaws taking the roof off with 'Have Horn, Will Blow' on the first disc. Richardson's flute is a needless cooling-off device. Bacalao adds a little Latin bustle, courtesy of Barretto and Perez, but mostly it's good business as usual with Jaws and Shirley. Gentle Jaws, if that title doesn't sound like a contradiction, puts together a couple of small-hours sessions where the man hustles unsentimentally through a selection of top-notch ballads.

[illegible]

* Very Saxy
Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 458 Davis; Coleman Hawkins, Arnett Cobb, Buddy Tate (ts); Shirley Scott (org); George Duvivier (b); Arthur Edgehill (d). 4/59.
Prestige called in three other tenors on the books to sit in with the Davis–Scott combo, and the results were barnstorming. The programme is all simple blues, but the flat-out exuberance of the playing is exhilarating, particularly in the excellent remastered sound. As competitive as it might appear, nobody is bested, and the clout of Davis and Cobb is matched by the suaver Tate and the grandiloquent Hawkins. Their 'Lester Leaps In' is a peerless display of saxophone sound.

(*) Trane Whistle Original Jazz Classics OJC 429 Davis; Clark Terry, Richard Williams, Bob Bryant (t); Melba Liston, Jimmy Cleveland (tb); Jerome Richardson, Oliver Nelson, Eric Dolphy, George Barrow, Bob Ashton (reeds); Richard Wyands (p); Wendell Marshall (b); Roy Haynes (d). 9/60.
 Streetlights Prestige PRCD 24150-2 Davis; Don Patterson (org); George Duvivier (b); Paul Weedon, Billy James (d). 11/62.
Though the Oliver Nelson charts on Trane Whistle are perhaps too functional to make the record a classic, Lockjaw's blowing has knock-out power. An Ernie Wilkins arrangement of 'You Are Too Beautiful' shows off his skills with a ballad, too. Streetlights puts him back in the organ combo setting with the more 'modern' style of Patterson. Nobody puts himself out, and the tunes are mostly obvious, but the playing is hard to fault.

* The Tenor Scene / (*) Live At Minton's Original Jazz Classics OJC 940 / Prestige 24206 Davis; Johnny Griffin (ts); Junior Mance (p); Larry Gales (b); Ben Riley (d). 1/61.
(*) Blues Up And Down Milestone 47084 As above, except add Lloyd Mayers (p). 11/60–6/61.
Griff and Lock were a righteous team. The important thing was that neither man approached their collaboration as a mere blowing situation: Davis remembers that they rehearsed regularly and never let the set-list atrophy. Both The Tenor Scene and Live At Minton's emanate from the same marathon session at Minton's in 1961 (originally spread across four separate LPs). The Tenor Scene is nothing fancy, but the playing has whipcrack impact, the rhythm section are right on top of it, and the light work made of a difficult tune such as 'Straight No Chaser' shows how masterful these tenormen were. A classic jazz record. We slightly prefer it to Live At Minton's, which is more focused around Monk and bebop material. Blues Up And Down couples two studio dates, the LP of the same title and the slightly earlier Griff And Lock (Mayers replaces Mance on the later session). They're a shade cooler in the studio, but it's still a piquant match.

(*) Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis With Michel Attenoux Storyville STCD 5009 Davis; Patrick Artero (t); Claude Gousset (tb); Michel Attenoux (as); Gabriel Garvanoff (p); Jean-Pierre Mulot (b); Teddy Martin (d). 7/75.
(*) Leapin' On Lenox Black & Blue 926.2 Davis; Eddie 'Cleanhead' Vinson (as); Milt Buckner (p); Bill Doggett (org); Jimmy Leary, Milt Hinton (b); Gus Johnson, J. C. Heard (d). 7/74–7/78.
(*) Swingin' Till The Girls Come Home Steeplechase SCCD 31058 Davis; Thomas Clausen (p); Bo Stief (b); Alex Riel (d). 3/76.

 Straight Ahead Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 629-2 Davis; Tommy Flanagan (p); Keter Betts (b); Bobby Durham (d). 5/76.
 Light and Lovely Black & Blue 883 Davis; Harry Edison (t); Gerry Wiggins (p); Major Holley (b); Oliver Jackson (d). 2/77.
 Montreux '77 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 384 Davis; Oscar Peterson (p); Ray Brown (b); Jimmie Smith (d). 7/77.
Davis went the journeyman route of wandering freelance through the '70s and '80s. The earlier Black & Blue disc is a superior repackaging of two sessions, one with Buckner, a shorter one with Vinson and Doggett. The first is more like straight-ahead, the second has something of a soul-jazz feel, with Vinson wailing in on 'Double Eddie', but they make a fine match and it's a pleasure to hear Buckner get some individual space. The 1977 date for the French label is a small gem, packed with unexpected material like Sacha Distel's 'The Good Life' and a brilliant reading of 'Land Of Dreams'. The real stars at Montreux are Peterson and Brown, whose hard clarity creates a formidable platform, though Davis himself sounds below par, his solos overwrought.

The pick of the rest is the Storyville session with a team of French mainstreamers. Impromptu as the session was – Davis simply harmonized his parts with Attenoux on the scores – it's played with enormous gusto, the horns matching Jaws in their surly attack, and rollicking events like Neal Hefti's 'Midnite Blue' get a good thrashing. Yet there are three terrific ballad solos by the tenorman on 'Moonlight In Vermont', 'What's New?' and 'Lush Life'. Excellent sound. The Steeplechase set is more ordinary, and even the OJC disc with Flanagan rarely gets above professional expertise.

 Jazz At The Philharmonic 1983 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 859 Davis; Harry Edison (t); Al Grey (tb); Art Hillery (p, org); John Heard (b); Roy McCurdy (d). 12/82.
The dating of the album is unclear; nor does it have anything to do with Norman Granz's JATP. Nevertheless, it's great stuff with some familiar but inventive soloing from all the principals. Hillery is a revelation, and the recording quality is crisp and clean.

 All Of Me Steeplechase SCCD 31181 Davis; Kenny Drew (p); Jesper Lundgaard (b); Svend-Erik Nørregaard (d). 8/83.
 Eddie Lockjaw Davis Quartet Storyville STCD 6311 Davis; Niels Steen (p); Jesper Lundgaard (b); Ed Thigpen (d). 85.
Davis was still a commanding player up until his unexpected death in 1986. His recording regimen was a casual one, and his later discs have a pot-luck quality, but the leader himself secures an unusual level of commitment: all his records manage to be recommendable for his own tenor-playing. The Steeplechase date is accomplished and genial and was thought for some time to be Jaws's last recording. The other appeared only in 2000.

Also, in brief:

(*) Straight Blues Prestige 11014-2. 12/58–5/76.
An enjoyable compilation of some of Jaws's bluesiest moments from his Prestige years. Not a second wasted.

 Goin' To The Meetin' Prestige 24259. 4/60, 5/62.
Coupled with Misty, this feels like a potboiler. The tracks on the later session (with Horace Parlan (p)) are over too fast, but the session with Shirley Scott (v) heats up nicely.

(*) Afro-Jaws Original Jazz Classics OJC 403. 5/61
Stuck in front of brass and percussion to no very telling effect.

 Jawbreakers Original Jazz Classics 487. 4/62.
With Sweets Edison (t) on hand and a set of blowing themes, what could go wrong?

 Lock, The Fox / The Fox And The Hounds Collectables COL-2182. 6–11/66.
Previously reissued as Save Your Love For Me on Bluebird. Some good grooves for Jaws although the big-band set is curtly tailored.

 Oh, Gee: Live In Manchester, 1967 Jasmine 629. 3 & 4/67.
In Blighty with the Pat Smythe Trio and Harold McNair (as). Generously proportioned and not badly recorded.

 Love Calls BMG International 37530. 8/67.
Intriguing encounter between Jaws and Paul Gonsalves (ts). Might be hard to track down.

(*) Jaws Strikes Again Black & Blue 101. 1/76.
The least appealing of the French sessions.

Jesse Davis (born 1965)

ALTO SAXOPHONE

A New Orleans man, he studied with Ellis Marsalis and then moved north. Basically a hard-bop player, whose influences are clear: Cannonball, Sonny Stitt, Phil Woods.

 Second Nature Concord CCD 4883 Davis; Massimo Faraò (p); Aldo Zunino (b); Massimo Dall'omo (d). 6/99.
(*) The Set-Up AllTribe ATR0725 Davis; Peter Bernstein (g); Ray Drummond (b); Donald Edwards (d). 2/02.
Davis was, along with Scott Hamilton, one of Concord founder Carl Jefferson's most prescient signings. Since 1991, the albums came around once a year and they bespeak a steadily maturing player. All but one of them are now deleted. Fortunately, it's good. The pianist is credited with a couple of compositions – 'Marta's Samba' and 'Tommaso' – and comps extremely well. His soloing is brisk, melodic and uncomplicated. Davis sounds good in this company, putting together beautifully inflected solos out of a comparatively small range of material. That approach becomes even more obvious on the AllTribe disc, made after a short break from recording. Jackie McLean's 'Little Melonae' has rarely sounded better, and if Davis employs more vibrato on his ballad solos, it never sounds mawkish or mannered. He's also open-eared enough to include some more rugged ideas, like the closing 'Circus', which sounds like he's been listening to early Ornette. Using a guitarist gives him a broader and more relaxed harmonic foundation; big Ray Drummond fills in any gaps and solos with authority and Edwards offers full measure, too.

Kris Davis

PIANO

A talented Canadian who moved to NY in 2001.

 Life Span Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 178 Davis; Russ Johnson (t, flhn); Tony Malaby (ss, ts, cl, bcl); Eivind Opsvik (b); Jeff Davis (d). 03.
(*) The Slightest Shift Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 256 As above, except omit Johnson. 10/05.
Here's the work of a fine writer, who's not always best served by her sidemen, and who probably needs the hand of a strong producer. The basic material on Life Span is fascinating, but it's telling that the most compelling track, 'Nein', is just two minutes in length and a workout for the pianist over a repetitive ostinato, rather than 'Endless' and 'The Epic', which close the album on an extended longueur. Perhaps Kris didn't communicate her ideas fully enough to the group. These aren't blowing themes, or rather the two latterly mentioned are and are less successful for it. Davis's strong suit is musical structures of a certain deceptive delicacy, as on 'Travel Far' and 'Agyrha', which demand a certain control and reticence from the players. This is neither a sexist nor a belittling comment (female = delicate) but a recognition that her strengths lie at some remove from the ego-driven expressionism that still determines most jazz performance.

The lesson seems largely learned on the second record, which belongs firmly to the group. Ironically, in setting aside his other horns and concentrating on tenor, Malaby is more securely anchored in Davis's conception. Opsvik and husband Jeff Davis, who were guilty of pushing things along too much on the first date, are more restrained here and seem to offer a clearer sense of how Davis is trying to put together a music that avoids the usual harmonic and structural clichés. 'Jack's Song' somewhat resembles an early Keith Jarrett composition, though ironically the parallel is reinforced by Jeff's Motian-like touch rather than the piano part. 'Once' is tough and tender by turns, with something of Stanley Cowell about it. This time the durations are just right, with only the final (title-)track getting stretched, by which time most listeners will be converts.

Miles Davis (1926–91)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN, ORGAN

He grew up in comfortable circumstances in Alton, Illinois, then went to New York to study and to follow in the footsteps of Charlie Parker. Played bop with mixed results, then began to experiment with Gerry Mulligan and others, using cooler modalities and larger groups. He met Gil Evans, who arranged some of his greatest big-band recordings. In the mid-'50s the trumpeter formed a quintet and recorded classic discs for Prestige, culminating in Kind Of Blue. A film project led him in a new direction and ultimately to the deceptively casual studio jams which producer Teo Macero transformed into releasable albums. In the mid-'70s, ill-health, disenchantment and legal scrapes led him to withdraw from music-making for a time, returning to public activity in 1981. Late years brought superstardom and a new hip audience.

 Complete Savoy And Dial Recordings Definitive 11158 Davis; Dizzy Gillespie (t); J. J. Johnson (tb); Charlie Parker (as); Lucky Thompson (ts); Duke Jordan, John Lewis, Dodo Marmarosa, Bud Powell (p); Arv Garrison (g); Vic McMillan, Tommy Potter, Curley Russell (b); Roy Porter, Max Roach (d). 45, 46.

The history of jazz could just about be told in the life-stories and work of Louis Armstrong, Duke Ellington, Charlie Parker and Miles Davis. In some regards, Miles is the most complex and problematic of the four: attracting adulation and disdain in equal measure; endlessly changing yet never sounding like anyone other than himself; endlessly experimenting yet innately hostile to the self-conscious experimentalism of the avant-garde; an enigma wrapped up in a conundrum, expressed in music of dark anger, joyous abandon and fragile purity. Even after he had scoured his speaking voice down to its famous husky growl, his trumpet-playing was pristine.

Miles was not a virtuoso trumpeter. Even so, the early bebop sets suggest that he knew his way round the complex harmonics and rapid metres of the time and could hold his own in demanding company. Reattributing this early material to Miles might seem sharp practice, but some of these dates were nominally his.

* The Complete Birth Of The Cool / (*) Cool Boppin' Blue Note 94550 / Fresh Sound FSCD 1008 Davis; Kai Winding, J. J. Johnson (tb); Junior Collins, Gunther Schuller, Sandy Siegelstein (frhn); John Barber (tba); Lee Konitz (as); Gerry Mulligan (bs); Al Haig, John Lewis (p); Nelson Boyd, Al McKibbon, Joe Shulman (b); Kenny Clarke, Max Roach (d); Kenny Hagood (v); Mike Zwerin (tb); Sahib Shihab (as); Benjamin Lundy (ts); Cecil Payne (bs); Tadd Dameron (p); John Collins (g); Carlos Vidal (perc). 9/48–3/50; 9/48–2/49.

After Miles's death, Gerry Mulligan went on record, without rancour but with unmistakable emphasis, to claim at least joint authorship of these astonishing performances. Whoever was the main creative force, Miles was the enabler, bringing together like-minded players in New York City, and, though the results (recorded at three sessions over the span of a year) were a commercial failure, these pioneering efforts by arrangers Mulligan, Gil Evans and John Carisi are allusive, magical scores that channelled the irresistible energy of bebop into suprising textures and piquant settings for improvisation.

Davis and Konitz play as if in sight of some new musical world. One can almost share in their delight and surprise as unexpected harmonic fragrances waft off the landscape in front of them. Airshot material by a different line-up has been available as The Real Birth Of The Cool on Bandstand. This was taped before the now-classic studio sessions and shows the same music – 'Jeru', 'Budo', 'Godchild' – in evolution rather than finished and definitive. Nine of the same tracks appear on Cool Boppin', which is valuable for some great early solos by the leader. The sound, recorded at the Royal Roost club, is no better than average, but there is sufficient of interest in the performances to make it a worthwhile buy, and there is some fine material under Tadd Dameron's leadership on the same disc, including some glorious moments when Davis lifts Dameron's wonky lyricism to new heights. The Complete brings together all the available material from this historic experiment, beautifully remastered and nicely packaged.

 Quintet With Lee Konitz; Sextet With Jackie McLean Fresh Sound FSCD 1000 Davis; Don Elliott (mel, vib); Lee Konitz, Jackie McLean (as); Gil Coggins, John Lewis (p); Connie Henry, Curley Russell (b); Connie Kay, Max Roach (d); Kenny Hagood (v). 9/48–5/52.

These sessions, which straddle the Birth Of The Cool period, are a useful guide to what else Miles was doing at the time. The 1948 session finds him in company with Konitz on four titles, most of them unwontedly upbeat and ebullient. The only change of pace is for 'You Go To My Head', which is kept to a lugubrious meander for the benefit of Kenny Hagood. Rare to hear Miles going for high notes with quite this enthusiasm, though absolutely no mistaking, even at this early date, the sinuous grace of Konitz's improvising.

The sextet date is cluttered and somewhat regressive in idiom, with less sign of the Davis of the future, more of the querulous bopper he was leaving behind. Also airshot recordings, these share the technical limitations of the quintet date, but more damagingly, since it's much harder to pick out the detail. Miles is soloing confidently. His own 'Out Of The Blue' is confident, clean-limbed and strong, and McLean is beginning to sound like a star in the making.

() Miles Davis With Horns Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 053 Davis; Bennie Green, Sonny Truitt (tb); Al Cohn, Sonny Rollins, Zoot Sims (ts); John Lewis (p); Leonard Gaskin, Percy Heath (b); Kenny Clarke, Roy Haynes (d). 1/51–2/53.

 Dig Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 005 Davis; Jackie McLean (as); Sonny Rollins (ts); Walter Bishop Jr (p); Tommy Potter (b); Art Blakey (d). 10/51.

It would be some while before Miles repaid Prestige's confidence with a completely authoritative and satisfying record. The earlier set is dreary and ill-defined, and though Miles solos with great confidence on 'My Old Flame' and 'Blueing', there isn't much else. Dig is questionable on technical grounds, losing players as forceful as Potter and Blakey in a disagreeable mix. 'Conception' appears in a less than challenging form, and there's a bland read of 'It's Only A Paper Moon'.

 Miles Davis: Volume 1 / (*) ... Volume 2 Blue Note 32610 / 32611 Davis; J. J. Johnson (tb); Jackie McLean (as); Jimmy Heath (ts); Gil Coggins, Horace Silver (p); Percy Heath, Oscar Pettiford (b); Art Blakey, Kenny Clarke (d). 5/52–3/54.

 The Best Of Miles Davis Blue Note 7982872 As above and Capitol sessions, except add Julian 'Cannonball' Adderley (as); Hank Jones (p); Sam Jones (b). 1/49–3/58.

These are inconsistent records, but they are also the first tokens of a genuinely personal vision and a solo style that could never be mistaken for anyone else. Although still addicted to heroin when the first two sessions were made, and with his professional life in some disarray, Davis was beginning to move beyond the confines of small-group bebop and explore the more expansive musical language he had sketched in with the Birth Of The Cool ensemble. Nothing quite as ambitious here; but definite signs, even in these rather brief and pithy tracks, that he has changed gear. The music is intense yet restrained, cool yet plangent. The first date seems comparatively hurried, but the second, with fine compositions from Johnson, Heath and Bud Powell, is indispensable. The third features Davis with rhythm, and as sole horn it properly includes some very strong playing, with fast, eventful solos on 'Take Off' and 'The Leap', as well as an idiosyncratic reading of Monk's 'Well, You Needn't'.

The jumbled sequencing of the original LPs has been corrected on CD; the first and third sessions are complete on the first volume and the second is on Volume 2. Remastering has perked up the rhythm section no end, but otherwise there is no appreciable gain. The Best Of collection covers the Blue Note albums, Birth Of The Cool and 20 minutes of material from Cannonball Adderley's 1958 Somethin' Else.

 Birdland 1951 Blue Note 4177 Davis; J. J. Johnson (tb); Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis, Sonny Rollins, Big Nick Nicholas (ts); Kenny Drew, Billy Taylor (p); Charles Mingus, Tommy Potter (b); Art Blakey (d). 2, 6 & 9/51.

 Complete Birdland Performances Definitive 11165 As above except add Jackie McLean (as); Connie Henry (b). 51, 52.

Genuine Miles rarities are now genuinely rare, with so much rehash and repackaging, so these live dates were doubly welcome, especially given that the February 1951 cuts haven't been issued before. The sound is uniformly awful, but no worse than other honoured texts, and Miles is audible throughout, often sounding perfunctory, but capable of delivering moments of great beauty, as he does on the second of two versions of 'Half Nelson' and an inspired 'Tempus Fugit'. The Definitive set introduces McLean in an early appearance but fine form.

 Complete Sessions Jazz Factory JFCD 22583 Davis; Jimmy Forrest (ts); Charles Fox (p); John Hixon (b); Oscar Oldham (d); unknown (perc). 52.

In the early '50s, Miles was scuffling. Back home in St Louis for a spell, he sat in with homeboy Forrest (composer of 'Night Train') at the Barrelhouse Club. Against all expectation, given Miles's health and their stylistic differences, these are thoroughly enjoyable and vital sessions. 'All The Things You Are' and 'What's New' are fine performances, and well recorded, but it's the bop stalwarts like 'A Night In Tunisia' which attract the most notice, solid and dependable performances which flatter Forrest somewhat and show Miles in a pretty fair light.

 Collectors' Items Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 071 Davis; Charlie Parker, Sonny Rollins (ts); Walter Bishop Jr, Tommy Flanagan (p); Paul Chambers, Percy Heath (b); Philly Joe Jones, Art Taylor (d). 1/53–3/56.

(*) At Last! Miles Davis And the Lighthouse All Stars Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 480 Davis; Chet Baker, Rolf Ericson (t); Bud Shank (as); Bob Cooper (ts); Russ Freeman, Lorraine Geller (p); Howard Rumsey (b); Max Roach (d). 9/53.

The 1953 session with Parker on tenor is a curio and it makes an odd makeweight for the accompanying later quintet with Rollins, which includes a skilful solo by the saxophonist on 'Vierd Blues' and a fine investigation of Brubeck's 'In Your Own Sweet Way' by Davis. The live jam session recorded at the Lighthouse is best forgotten. Miles's desultory playing was hardly worth preserving on ponderous versions of 'Infinity Promenade' and 'Round Midnight'. Interesting, though, to hear him in company with 'the white Miles Davis'.

 Blue Haze Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 093 Davis; Dave Schildkraut (as); John Lewis, Charles Mingus, Horace Silver (p); Percy Heath (b); Art Blakey, Kenny Clarke, Max Roach (d). 5/53–4/54.

 Walkin' Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 213 Davis; J. J. Johnson (tb); Dave Schildkraut (as); Lucky Thompson (ts); Horace Silver (p); Percy Heath (b); Kenny Clarke (d). 4/54.

(*) Bags' Groove Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 245 Davis; Sonny Rollins (ts); Milt Jackson (vib); Thelonious Monk, Horace Silver (p); Percy Heath (b); Kenny Clarke (d). 6/54, 12/54.

 Miles Davis And The Modern Jazz Giants Original Jazz Classics OJC 347 Davis; John Coltrane (ts); Milt Jackson (vib); Red Garland, Thelonious Monk (p); Paul Chambers, Percy Heath (b); Kenny Clarke, Philly Joe Jones (d). 12/54–10/56.

Things are beginning to take shape. Though none of these dates is by itself a classic, an impression is beginning to consolidate of a formidable artist with the capacity to reinvent his language wholesale, but with an eye to a tradition. The Blue Haze set is split between a merely good quartet date from 1953 and three excellent tracks from the following March, by the same quartet that cut the final date for Blue Note. The little-known Schildkraut name makes a positive contribution to a single track from the April 1954 session, which is more fully covered on Walkin'.

Here and on Bags' Groove Davis hits his stride at last. The earlier session includes two clear-cut masterpieces in the title-track and 'Blue'N'Boogie'; the solos are diamond-sharp, absolutely without fat or verbiage, and elegantly executed. Most of Bags' Groove features a quintet with Rollins, a group which produced fine if slightly less than exalted music. It's marked out as the first occasion – and 'Oleo' the first track – on which he used the Harmon mute which was to define his sound in future years. Two compelling takes of the title-track round out a solid performance; these actually come from a Christmas Eve 1954 date which is otherwise contained in And The Modern Jazz Giants and documents the only documented encounter between Davis, Monk and Jackson. The clash between the vibist's typically fleet lines and the different kinds of astringency represented by Monk and Davis made for a tense and compelling situation. This disc is, in turn, completed by a very fine 'Round Midnight' by the quintet with John Coltrane.

() The Musings Of Miles Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 004 Davis; Red Garland (p); Oscar Pettiford (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 6/55.

 Blue Moods Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 043 Davis; Britt Woodman (tb); Teddy Charles (vib); Charles Mingus (b); Elvin Jones (d). 7/55.

(*) Quintet/Sextet Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 012 Davis; Jackie McLean (as); Milt Jackson (vib); Ray Bryant (p); Percy Heath (b); Art Taylor (d). 8/55.

Davis's final quartet session prior to the formation of his famous quintet is very lacklustre. Jones and Pettiford were allegedly 'exhausted' and Pettiford was drunk. Miles is left to hold the music together, playing rather grimly.

The brief Blue Moods session, though poor value on a single disc, is interesting for an instrumentation he never used again. The outstanding track is a deeply melancholy version of 'Nature Boy' that points forward to the forlorn poetry of future years. 'Alone Together', 'There's No You' and 'Easy Living' complete a very attractive session. Given how much padding has gone on elsewhere, it's strange that nothing could have been found to add a bit of value to this one.

The August 1955 session marks a farewell to Davis's most carefree music, with four pacey and involving workouts on mainly blues material – a mere half-hour of music, though. McLean plays on 'Dr Jackle' and 'Minor March', and these are all the better for his brash, blustery presence.

 Miles / * Relaxin' / (*) Workin' / * Steamin' / * Cookin' Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 006 / 190 / 296 2 / 391 2 / 128 2 Davis; John Coltrane (ts); Red Garland (p); Paul Chambers (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 11/55; 5/56–10/56; 5/56–10/56; 5/56–10/56; 11/55, 10/56.

 The Complete Prestige Recordings (1951–1956) Prestige 8PCD 012 2 8CD As for Prestige recordings above. 51–56.

Great music is sometimes made in inauspicious circumstances. Miles's 1956 quintet cut these records to round out a contract before moving on to Columbia, and yet they represent a purple patch; uneven in inspiration, at their greatest they bespeak an extraordinary sense of spontaneity, and a brilliant assemblage of players in creative flux. The greatest contrast, much discussed, is between Davis, spare, introverted, guileful, and the leonine, blistering Coltrane. But equally telling are the members of the rhythm section, who contrive to create a different climate behind each soloist and sustain the logical flow of the tunes. Recorded at just a handful of marathon sessions, each record has its special rewards: a slow, pierced 'My Funny Valentine' on Cookin', the supple swing of 'I Could Write A Book' and revitalized bebop of 'Woody'N'You' from Relaxin', a haunted version of 'It Never Entered My Mind' on Workin'. It would be possible to throw up another half-dozen contenders, and everyone will have particular favourites. One further unlikely contender is 'Surrey With The Fringe On Top' and the following track, the bebop classic 'Salt Peanuts', on Steamin'.

The exhaustive Prestige box preserves material from much earlier in the trumpeter's association with the label, but there is much to be said for sampling all these records in something close to their original form. Rudy Van Gelder's splendid engineering and Bob Weinstock's production have ensured that the music has survived in excellent condition, and the CD reissues sound well enough.

 Round About Midnight Columbia CK 85201 As above. 10/55–9/56.

Released on the new label but recorded for the old, this inevitably sounds like a footnote. The material is fine but somehow fails to cast quite the consistent spell which the Prestige sessions do.

 Miles Ahead Columbia CK 65121 Davis; John Carisi, Bernie Glow, Taft Jordan, Louis Mucci, Ernie Royal (t); Joe Bennett, Jimmy Cleveland, Frank Rehak (tb); Tom Mitchell (btb); Tony Miranda, Willie Ruff (frhn); Lee Konitz (as); Sid Cooper, Romeo Penque (woodwinds); Danny Bank (bcl); Paul Chambers (b); Art Taylor (d); Gil Evans (cond). 5/57.

Miles had worked with Gil Evans before, but this first full-length collaboration highlighted their like-mindedness and an illuminating reciprocity of vision. Curiously, given the reputation that these records have garnered, they aren't always well played, with fluffs aplenty and shaky ensembles, though this first outing is pristine compared to the passage-work on Porgy And Bess, later. Miles Ahead was rightly identified as a concerto for Miles. Recorded over four sessions in May 1957, it has great internal consistency. It no longer makes much sense to talk about 'tracks', for the internal subdivisions here are effectively moments in a long, continuous work. Even so, certain things do stand out: 'The Maids Of Cadiz', 'My Ship', the title-track and a lovely version of Ahmad Jamal's 'New Rhumba'. Frailties of performance apart, Evans gave the music a great depth of focus, doubling up bass-lines and creating distance and tension between upper and lower lines in a way that was to affect Miles for the rest of his career. Though it is far from being expressively one-dimensional – there are moments of playful humour – the pervading tone is a melancholy lyricism. This was the first time Miles recorded with flugelhorn; every trumpeter subsequently copied him, though he himself seldom repeated the experiment. The flugelhorn's sound isn't so very different from his trumpet soloing, though palpably softer-edged. Though he plays open all the time, as he was to do again on Milestones, some of the burnish seems to be lost. A quiet masterpiece, all the same.

 L'Ascenseur Pour L'Échafaud /  Amsterdam Concert 1957 Fontana 836305 / Lone Hill LHJ 10141 Davis; Barney Wilen (ts); René Urtreger (p); Pierre Michelot (b); Kenny Clarke (d). 12/57.

L'Ascenseur is one of the most discussed items in the entire canon, strangely enough, given that it was written as soundtrack music. It did, though, provide Miles with his first real compositional challenge, something more than blowing themes, and it helped steer him in the direction of the abstract, themeless experiments of the following decade. Interesting as it is on record, the music makes complete sense only when combined with the images of Louis Malle's bleak thriller, ostensibly a murder story, but actually about the claustrophobic impact of social technology. Most of the fragments are slow and moody, though inevitably there is a motorway number. So successful was Miles's scoring that he effectively redraws the movie's inner landscape, accentuating its psychological elements and philosophical reserve. The other players do well, with Wilen particularly prominent.

The same group played in Amsterdam three days later. In contrast to the abstractions of the film date, it's a fairly routine bop gig, with nice versions of 'Woody'N'You', 'Well You Needn't', 'Bags' Groove' and 'Lady Bird', the material chosen presumably to accommodate the Europeans. The sound isn't great.

[illegible]

 Milestones
Columbia CK 85203 Davis; Julian 'Cannonball' Adderley (as); John Coltrane (ts); Red Garland (p); Paul Chambers (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 4/58.

In April 1958, Miles hadn't recorded a small-group date for more than a year. A lot of thinking, woodshedding, a lot of hard conceptual work had been done in the interim. On Milestones the trumpeter is certainly still working out ideas that were adumbrated on L'Ascenseur, but there is no sense whatever that this is anything other than a completely achieved and accomplished performance. There are no standards, and all the material is challenging, sometimes simply by suspending conventional harmony and by constraining complex ideas within a deceptively simple 4/4. One of the profound differences between Miles and the saxophonists is that, while they tend to play on the beat, he is almost always across it. Adderley isn't always right for the music, and he sounds awkward and shuffling on 'Sid's Ahead', one of the album's truly great tracks. Standing alongside two of the greatest soloists in the music, then and ever, one understands his slight discomfiture. He is much more to the fore on 'Straight, No Chaser', but again it is Miles's solo which commands attention, actually quoting 'When The Saints Go Marching In' without obvious irony, a gesture that confounds all those who accused him of being a scorched-earth modernist with no interest in the past. If 'Sid's Ahead' is brooding and mournful, then 'Milestones' itself, on which he returns briefly to flugelhorn, is sharply ambiguous in its dancing exuberance, a truly startling performance.

(*) Miles And Coltrane Columbia 460824 Davis; John Coltrane (ts); Julian 'Cannonball' Adderley (as); Bill Evans, Red Garland (p); Paul Chambers (b); Jimmy Cobb, Philly Joe Jones (d). 10/55–7/58.
(*) '58 Miles Columbia CK 47835 As above, except omit Garland, Jones. 58.
 Miles Davis & Thelonious Monk: Live At Newport 1958 & 1963 Columbia/Legacy C2K 53585 2CD As above, except add Charlie Rouse (ts); Pee Wee Russell (cl); Thelonious Monk (p); Butch Warren (b); Frankie Dunlop (d). 7/58, 7/63.

The historic Newport Festival appearance of July 1958 didn't feature Miles and Monk playing together, unfortunately. Miles and Coltrane are playing brilliantly throughout, with the saxophonist firing on all cylinders, and sounding lighter-hearted than he often does, on 'Ah-Leu-Cha' and 'Bye Bye Blackbird'. Once again, the contrast with Miles's spare and angular approach is very striking. The 1958 compilation brings together material that was formerly issued on Black Giants and Jazz At The Plaza. 'Oleo' and 'My Funny Valentine' were the best things on that fine set. Miles And Coltrane is filled out by two much earlier items, 'Little Melonae' and 'Budo', from 1955.

 Porgy And Bess Columbia CK 65141 Davis; John Coles, Bernie Glow, Louis Mucci, Ernie Royal (t); Joseph Bennett, Jimmy Cleveland, Richard Hixon, Frank Rehak (tb); Willie Ruff, Gunther Schuller, Julius Watkins (frhn); Bill Barber (tba); Julian 'Cannonball' Adderley, Danny Bank (as); Phil Bodner, Romeo Penque, Jerome Richardson (f); Paul Chambers (b); Jimmy Cobb, Philly Joe Jones (d). 7–8/58.

In his biography, Ian Carr very accurately attributes the difference between this album and the similarly constituted Miles Ahead to Miles's own role as preacher, engaged in a call-and-response dialogue with the congregation/ensemble. While 'Summertime' and 'It Ain't Necessarily So' are straightforward solo features, albeit very remarkable ones, 'Prayer' is an astounding tour de force, harmonically suspended, and with Miles's most extraordinary recorded solo to date punctuated by screams and shouts, whether of affirmation or suffering it isn't always easy to judge. Miles was not in good physical condition during the making of the record, which perhaps explains the twisting intensity, the bent notes and slurs which seem to express some inner pain. It is less easy in the circumstances to explain the simple grandeur of 'The Buzzard Song' or indeed of the two solos mentioned above; 'Summertime' has an aura of calm that was seldom again to enter into his playing. Though the ensemble work has some shortcomings, these are as nothing compared to the sheer quality of the music.

 Jazz At The Plaza Vol. 1 Columbia CK 85245 Davis; Julian 'Cannonball' Adderley (as); John Coltrane (ts); Bill Evans (p); Paul Chambers (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 9/58.

Only released as late as 1973, this one has struggled to maintain profile among the superb sessions that surround it. It owes its reputation largely and properly to its status as a dry run for the Kind Of Blue sessions that were to follow not much later, but the sound quality is very poor and the provenance is compromised, a company party that was never meant to be released as a record. Probably the stand-out track recorded at the New York City hotel is 'My Funny Valentine', which features just Miles and rhythm. Adderley sits out 'If I Were A Bell'; but this isn't one of Trane's better nights, and the interplay between the two giants isn't as earth-shaking as one by now (selfishly) feels it ought to be.

[illegible]

♛  Kind Of Blue
Columbia CK 64935 Davis; Julian 'Cannonball' Adderley (as); John Coltrane (ts); Bill Evans, Wynton Kelly (p); Paul Chambers (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 3–4/59.

There is no other jazz record with quite the reputation of Kind Of Blue, and modern sampling has now delivered up what must be considered the definitive version. The key presence may be that of Evans (Wynton Kelly plays only on the blues, 'Freddie Freeloader') and it is his allusive, almost impressionistic accompaniments which provide the ideal platform for the spacious solos created by the horns. This was the first widely acknowledged 'modal jazz' date, and it is interesting how thoroughly it has now been absorbed into mainstream language. Tension is consistently established within the ensembles, only for Davis and Coltrane especially to resolve it in songful, declamatory solos. The steady mid-tempos and the now familiar plaintive voicings on 'So What' and 'All Blues' reinforce the weightless, haunting qualities Miles was bringing to his music. If you have anything approximating to a jazz collection, you will already have this record; even so, you may want to consider investing in this impeccable version.

(*) Sketches Of Spain Columbia CK 65142 Davis; John Coles, Bernie Glow, Taft Jordan, Louis Mucci, Ernie Royal (t); Dick Hixon, Frank Rehak (tb); John Barrows, Jimmy Buffington, Earl Chapin, Tony Miranda, Joe Singer (frhn); Bill Barber (tba); Albert Block, Eddie Caine, Harold Feldman, Romeo Penque (woodwinds); Jack Knitzer (bsn); Danny Bank (bcl); Janet Putnam (hp); Paul Chambers (b); Jimmy Cobb, Elvin Jones (d). 11/59–3/60.

Though it has moments of luminous beauty, it's hard to escape the feeling that this is a record which has acquired a mystique over and above its musical virtues. Despite far more time in the studios than on the earlier collaborations with Gil Evans, the whole is poorly focused, with the ambitious 'Concierto De Aranjuez' sometimes sounding like inflated light music, with only Miles's occasional intensities driving energy into the whole.

The dialogue between trumpet and ensemble on 'Solea' is the best sequence on the session, raising the improvisational stakes more than a little. Although the trumpeter is giving of his best throughout, the sometimes haphazard percussion tracks and muzzy ensembles suggest a harbinger of some of the trance music Miles would later delve into in the '70s.

(*) Miles Davis In Stockholm Complete /  In Copenhagen 1960 Dragon DRCD 228 4CD / Gambit 2034 2CD Davis; John Coltrane (ts); Sonny Stitt (as, ts); Wynton Kelly (p); Paul Chambers (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 3 & 10/60; 3/60.

A number of live recordings exist from this period, away from Miles's officially sanctioned releases, and the material on Dragon – excellently recorded by Swedish Radio – affords valuable glimpses of two European sojourns in 1960. The concert with Coltrane (which includes a six-minute interview with the saxophonist) suggests a battle of giants: Trane piles in with all his most abandoned lines, while Davis remains – especially in a nearly anguished 'All Blues' – almost aloof. The rhythm section play with impervious jauntiness, and it adds up to a tremendous concert recording. The concert with Stitt is only slightly less effective. Stitt, admittedly, wrestles with no dark demons, but his plangency and itch to play are scarcely less powerful than Coltrane's, and his switching between alto and tenor offers more light and shade. Davis is again bitingly inventive, even on routine material.

The Tivoli material is less engaging, not least because the Stockholm dates were so well documented, but it fills in yet another part of the picture.

 The Manchester Concert Lone Hill Jazz LHJ 1012 2CD Davis; Sonny Stitt (as, ts); Wynton Kelly (p); Paul Chambers (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 9/60.

Previously available as Free Trade Hall, this isn't one of the great nights from the 1960 tour, though the recording is of decent quality and it's interesting to hear how well Stitt fits into the concept on 'Four', 'Walkin'', 'All Of You' and 'Well You Needn't'.

 Some Day My Prince Will Come Columbia 466312 Davis; John Coltrane, Hank Mobley (ts); Wynton Kelly (p); Paul Chambers (b); Jimmy Cobb, Philly Joe Jones (d). 3/61.

() In Person – Friday Night At The Blackhawk: Volume 1 / () In Person – Saturday Night At The Blackhawk: Volume 2 / * In Person – Friday And Saturday Night At The Blackhawk – Complete Columbia 87097 2CD / 87100 2CD / 87106 4CD As above, except omit Coltrane, Jones. 4/61.

In April 1961, Miles Davis was just a few weeks short of his 35th birthday. That spring was to be an odd mix of fresh starts and deceptively routine business for the trumpeter. The following month, Miles was on stage with Gil Evans's big band at Carnegie Hall and recorded what would become the third of his albums to reach the pop charts. He had, though, already made a studio album with a new quintet. Coltrane's 'guest' appearance on the somewhat lethargic Some Day My Prince Will Come is astonishing; he plays two solos, on the title-track and on 'Teo', which put everything else in the shade.

Release of the album was delayed and it wasn't until the following spring that Someday My Prince Will Come started selling briskly. By then, though, it had been overtaken by something new for Miles, the release of a first official live album. It was taped on 21 and 22 April at the Blackhawk club in San Francisco, a decision that turned two ordinary evenings at work into a document. Like many a historical text before it, In Person ... At The Blackhawk was left full of lacunae and inconsistencies. Different release versions featured different songs; bootlegs circulated with incorrect titles; collectors were obliged to make do with Japanese liner-notes. Now, though, after more than 40 years, it is possible to hear all the music played on those two spring nights, spread over four CDs.

The perfectionist Miles had hitherto resisted making a club recording, but in several respects this was a period of new initiatives for the trumpeter. He had recently ended a fruitful but often troubled working relationship with Coltrane, whose permanent successor was the funky hard-bop tenor Hank Mobley. Despite an impressive pedigree of Blue Note releases, and despite the obvious attraction to Miles of a terser and more succinct approach, Mobley was a surprising choice.

It was, however, consistent with other changes in the band. Miles had also replaced his pianist, Bill Evans, with the 30-year-old Jamaica-born Wynton Kelly, a rhythmic, blues-based player who worked in sharp contrast to Evans's thoughtful lyricism and who could be expected to fit in with the new saxophonist's hybrid tough-tender sound. The other members of the rhythm section had been on the bestselling Kind Of Blue date a couple of years before. Even so, the overall sound of the group had changed significantly and in a way that challenges the consensus view of Miles's development in the '60s.

'Change' is one of the weasel words that have stalked Davis's reputation. 'Transitional' is as far as most critics are prepared to go and 'transitional' In Person ... At The Blackhawk has remained for much of its erratic existence. The April 1961 sessions were among the least-studied in the trumpeter's canon. To some degree, their neglect is due to that shaky release history. Compared to the dates recorded with a different band four years later at the Plugged Nickel in Chicago and released on no fewer than seven CDs, this seems a relatively modest package. Or at least it did until Sony released these complete versions of both dates with no fewer than 13 previously unreleased performances, including an entire late set from the Saturday night. The new edition is slightly awkward in that, in order to preserve the integrity of each set, it places the first and third from the Friday night on one CD and the second on disc two.

Modest as they seem, these are revelatory recordings and they prompt a reassessment of Miles's mid-career. With supreme irony, almost the first thing one hears at the start of the first Friday night is Miles fluffing his intro to a bebop classic, Sonny Rollins's 'Oleo'. He makes up for it immediately and delivers a blazing solo. The opening set is dominated by a reading of the staple 'No Blues', which comes in at more than 17 minutes. Here again both Miles and Hank Mobley are in their element, but it also becomes clear that the key to this band is the pianist. Kelly has extraordinary hand speed, even greater quickness of thought and exactly the kind of spatial awareness Miles must have looked for in an accompanist. His fast, bluesy piano-runs anticipate the horns, support them and pick up their cues almost telepathically. Kelly almost never cuts across the front line or plays a facile or merely workmanlike phrase: it all counts.

After a long and fiery interpretation of Cole Porter's 'All Of You', the second set continues with another of the previously unreleased tracks, a theme previously known as 'Teo', but here entitled 'Neo'. How new it is in this interpretation is hard to gauge. It is not so much reharmonized as industrially strengthened. Kelly puts unbreakable spider-wires across the chords, Cobb and Chambers rev up the pulse and Miles fires off elaborate strings of notes. It's a tune that turns up again on the Saturday night, along with versions of 'No Blues', 'If I Were A Bell', 'On Green Dolphin Street', 'I Thought About You' and the little set-closer, 'Love, I've Found You', which functions much like 'The Theme' and rounds things off. After his uneasy pick-up, Miles doesn't choose to revisit 'Oleo' but starts off at more familiar velocity with the release version of 'If I Were A Bell'. The contrast between the two versions of the Frank Loesser tune would be hard to exaggerate. Whereas on Friday, starting off the third set, the trumpeter attacks the tune as if it were an air-raid warning, on Saturday he takes it with a much easier swing and bounce and relies on Kelly to fill in the harmony. He's back on the attack for an unbelievably fast version of 'So What', which almost doubles the tempo of the version on Kind Of Blue. Kelly's open chords leave the field wide open for both Davis and Mobley.

Richard Carpenter's 'Walkin'' had been the centrepiece of the previous night's second set, despite being marred by articulation problems and a couple of missed cues. The Saturday version is more than a tour de force performance. In twelve minutes, Miles deconstructs the tune. Five minutes in, he remakes it again as Kelly and Mobley join him in new harmonic territory. The intensity of Miles's playing is remarkable. His solo is rich, maximal and far from introverted; he sounds almost malevolently focused..

There is nothing else quite as good on any of the four CDs. From a historical point of view, the inclusion of a complete late set from the Saturday night – 'I Thought About You', 'Someday My Prince Will Come' and a double-time 'Softly, As In A Morning Sunrise' – is very important, not least because it confirms the unexpectedly hard-swinging nature of this line-up. Leaving aside a few bad cues, miscounts (on Miles's part, largely) and a foreshortened 'Autumn Leaves', which starts a little late because the tape machine wasn't switched on, it is hard to see why all of this material has not been released sooner. Even fans who have spent years with the original Blackhawk releases will find these tracks thought-provoking. However much he may have spoken about change, Miles Davis's career was remarkably of a piece. Bebop and the blues are the two main influences on the Blackhawk line-up, and though he later rarely referenced bop, the blues remained central to his vision, even if they moved well below the radar. These are among Miles's purest jazz performances, a vantage from which to look back and forward.

* The Complete Columbia Recordings: Miles Davis With John Coltrane, 1955–1961 /  The Best Of Miles Davis And John Coltrane: 1955–1961 Columbia 65833 6CD / Columbia Legacy 61090
As for Round About Midnight, Milestones, Kind Of Blue, Some Day My Prince Will Come. 55–61.

Miles's rate of progress from the cautious modal idiom of Round About Midnight to the majestic credo of Kind Of Blue is one of the great evolutions in jazz. It doesn't represent any great epiphany, analogous to those which were supposed to herald the coming of bebop; nor does it correspond to any great spiritual reawakening. It is, much more impressively, the result of steady and concentrated application to the transformation of American song.

What makes this set valuable to collectors is the inclusion of 18 unreleased alternatives from the period. As ever, though, our recommendation is that you experience these albums in their released forms, certainly before closing with the complexities of issued and rejected takes. The albums are here intact in any case, with the exception of Someday My Prince Will Come and the original order is easy enough to programme.

The sampler includes just one alternative take of 'Straight, No Chaser' and is otherwise a very predictable and unexceptionable mix of release material. The narrative is inevitably sketchier, but one can still hear the evolution of Miles's group through this critical half-decade.

(*) Miles Davis At Carnegie Hall 1961 Columbia CK 65027 2CD
Davis; Johnny Coles, Bernie Glow, Louis Mucci, Ernie Royal (t); Dick Hixon, Jimmy Knepper, Frank Rehak (tb); Paul Ingraham, Bob Swisshelm, Julius Watkins (frhn); Bill Barber (tba); Hank Mobley (ts); Danny Bank, Eddie Caine, Romeo Penque, Jerome Richardson, Bob Tricarico (reeds, woodwinds); Wynton Kelly (p); Paul Chambers (b); Janet Putnam (hp); Bobby Rosengarden (perc). 5/61.

Davis's Carnegie Hall concert of 1961 set the seal on his emergence as a jazz superstar over the preceding five years. Split between music by the quintet and Gil Evans's arrangements of some of the material from their albums together, the night was distinguished by the leader's own playing, executed with more incisiveness on the Evans material than on the studio versions. 'Teo' and 'No Blues' include compelling solos, as alert and packed with attitude as anything he was to do throughout his career. On the down side, Mobley is still no match for the departed Coltrane, and 'Concierto De Aranjuez' is not dignified by the setting. Time was when this material was rather scattered. One quickly gets used to having it properly marshalled, and it is difficult to get past the sheer grandeur of the conception. Even in 1961, at what must be considered the peak of his career, no jazz musician could possibly have expected a setting as sumptuous as Gil gives him.

(*) Quiet Nights Columbia CK 65293 Davis; large ensemble, similar to records above. 7, 8 & 11/62.

Miles was furious when this was released, accusing Teo Macero of working behind his back. It is pretty thin stuff, anonymous, big-band arrangements with just one small-group track, 'Summer Night', recorded in Los Angeles with the Seven Steps To Heaven sextet. Some of the tunes, 'Corcovado' and 'Slow Samba' in particular, are very beautiful, but it's hard to get the notion of easy listening out of one's head.

 Seven Steps To Heaven Columbia 466970 Davis; George Coleman (ts); Victor Feldman, Herbie Hancock (p); Ron Carter (b); Frank Butler, Tony Williams (d). 4 & 5/63.

Two oddities on this: Miles playing with a West Coast band and including such classic jazz pieces as 'Basin Street Blues' and 'Baby, Won't You Please Come Home'. The later session unveiled his new group, with Herbie Hancock and the very young Tony Williams. They sound relatively sure-footed on 'Seven Steps' and Hancock certainly understands the need for subtler harmonic – or, rather, chromatic – shading in the music. As so predictably often with Miles, it's possible to hear in this record the seeds of change, but it's an album that is much more illuminating retrospectively, once Miles's later and more revolutionary work has been absorbed.

* Miles In Antibes Columbia 462960 Davis; George Coleman (ts); Herbie Hancock (p); Ron Carter, Richard Davis (b); Tony Williams (d). 6/63, 5/66.

(*) My Funny Valentine / * The Complete Concert, 1964 Columbia 471276 / 471246 2CD As above, except omit Richard Davis. 2/64.

Coleman is the unsung hero of the Davis discography. His scouring, muscular style is very different from that of Coltrane:

less intense, more straightforward and yet not without subtlety. In Antibes is a very fine concert set, recorded just weeks after this band had been formed. 'Autumn Leaves' is sleek, tough and unsentimental, but not unfeeling, and powered by the young prodigy at the drumkit. All of the music is unpredictable and exciting, unpredictable largely because familiar material is shone through a prism that mixes abstraction with a genuine delight in melody.

Recorded at the Philharmonic Hall in the Lincoln Center, My Funny Valentine has a moody and elegiac quality which Miles attributed to President Kennedy's death the previous November. The group plays with almost ritual stateliness, and there is a plangent, wounded quality to the trumpet sound. The double-CD set brings together My Funny Valentine with Four & More.

(*) Miles In Berlin Columbia CK 62976 As above, except omit Coleman; add Wayne Shorter (ts). 9/64.

Wayne Shorter's arrival stabilized the new group, since Shorter was a major composer as well as soloist. Although the set in Berlin is the standard one of 'So What' and so on, the pungency of Davis's solos is matched by a new depth of interplay with the rhythm section, as well as by Shorter's phenomenally harsh-sounding parts. The highlight is a superbly intense reading of 'Autumn Leaves'. There is a huge amount of bootleg material from this period but this is how the group should be heard.

* E.S.P. / * Miles Smiles / () Sorcerer / () Nefertiti Columbia 467899 / CK 65683 / CK 65680 / CK 65681 As above. 1/65; 10/66; 5/67; 6–7/67.

 Miles In The Sky Columbia CK 65684 As above, except add George Benson (g). 1 & 5/68.

 Filles De Kilimanjaro Columbia CK 46116 As above, except omit Benson; add Chick Corea (ky), Dave Holland (b). 6–9/68.

This has always been an enigmatic period in Miles's career, a band and a set of relationships which didn't so much develop as go through a looping sequence of self-discoveries and estrangements. The leader himself often sounds almost disengaged from the music, perhaps even alienated from it, though one always senses him there, listening. Miles Smiles opens up areas that were to be his main performing territory for the next few years, arguably for the rest of his career. The synthesis of complete abstraction with more or less straightforward blues playing (Shorter's 'Footprints') was to sustain him right through the darkness of the '70s bands to the later period when 'New Blues' became a staple of his programmes. After Smiles, E.S.P. is probably the best album, with seven excellent original themes and the players building a huge creative tension between Shorter's oblique, churning solos and the leader's private musings, and within a rhythm section that is bursting to fly free while still playing time. Miles returns to his old tactic with Coltrane of paring away steadily, often sitting out for long periods or not soloing at all. It is simply that with Shorter he has a saxophonist who is capable of matching that enigmatic stance, rather than rushing off on his own. He does not solo on 'Nefertiti', on which the horns simply pace away over Williams's boiling rhythm. The album which bears its name is cool and strong, again largely owing to the writing. As on its predecessor, Miles cedes compositional duties to Shorter and only starts writing again with Miles In The Sky, which is ironically the weakest of the bunch. It is also unmistakably a transitional work, and the arrival of Corea and Holland for two tracks on Filles De Kilimanjaro points forward to the next phase in this extraordinary story. As always, though, Miles is looking back as well as forward. The standard treatments on the live albums, things like an exhaustive 'Stella By Starlight' and (what almost counts as a standard) 'All Blues', are occasionally rambling but always have something of importance to register, no matter when and in what mood one hears them.

♛ * The Complete Live At The Plugged Nickel / (*) Highlights From The Plugged Nickel Columbia CXK 66955 7CD / Columbia CK 67377 Davis; Wayne Shorter (ts); Herbie Hancock (p); Ron Carter (b); Tony Williams (d). 12/65.

The Rosetta Stone of modern jazz: a monumental document written in five subtly and sometimes starkly different dialects but within which much of the music of the post-bop period has been defined and demarcated. When future histories of the music are written – and it would be possible to write a convincing version of the story from 1945 to 1990 merely by reference to Miles's part in it – these sessions will be adduced as a turning-point. Arguably Miles's best-ever group – dispute it if you will – working its way out of one phase and into another in which time and harmony, melody and dynamics, were radically rethought. The improvisations here would have been inconceivable a mere couple of years earlier; they don't so much float on the chords as react against them like phosphorus. Three years later, they fed directly into Miles's electric revolution.

To set the time and place, these were recorded (officially, by Columbia engineers) at the Plugged Nickel Club in Chicago. Though the Blackhawk sessions are better than most, the registration here is superb, not much different from what one would hope for in a studio. At first glance, one might wonder whether so repetitive a documentation would be worth either the cash or the patience. The short answer is an emphatic yes and unambiguously so, because here it is possible to observe at the closest quarters Miles and his musicians working through their ideas set by set in ways that make the named material, the songs, more or less irrelevant. Even when it is clear he is working from 'Stella By Starlight' or 'My Funny Valentine', Miles is moving out into areas of harmonic/melodic invention and performance dynamics which were unprecedented in the music, and doing so within the concentrated span of two nights at the club.

Unlike the two original LPs, on which Columbia had forgivably presumed to deliver up the 'best' of the sessions, it is now possible to hear Carter clearly. His role is absolutely crucial and there are times when one can almost visualize Miles flicking from one solid outcrop to another like a caddis fly. Hancock occasionally sounds diffident and detached, and he is the only one of the group who resorts to repeated licks as the sets progress. He may have been tired, but he may also, as McCoy Tyner was to do at almost exactly the same time, have realized that he was to some extent external to the real drama of this extraordinary music. The sampler album is a perfectly decent representation of the whole, but will do no more than whet an appetite for the complete run of these historic recordings.

 Circle In The Round Columbia C2K 46862 Davis; as for records above. 10/55–1/70.

An interesting compilation of out-takes from Davis's Columbia albums over a 25-year period. The long title-track is an attempt at a mesmerizing mood-piece, which works for some of the time but fades in and out of focus. Earlier pieces with the great quintet are more vital and include a marvellous 'Love For Sale' from 1958. The CD omits some of the music from the original double-LP.

♛ * Miles Davis And Gil Evans: The Complete Columbia Studio Sessions Columbia CXK 67397 6CD As for Columbia recordings above, except add Dick Leith (btb); Bill Hinshaw, Art Maebe, Richard Perissi (frhn); Buddy Collette, Paul Horn (f); Gene Cipriano (ob); Fred Dutton (bsn); Herbie Hancock (p); Ron Carter (b); Tony Williams (d). 57–68.

Wonderful and inevitably expensive. Most of the material has been around for a long time, but there is a mass of studio interaction, alternative takes and two previously unreleased suites, The Time Of The Barracudas and Falling Water, both retrospectively titled, but from 1963 and 1968 respectively. The figures speak for themselves: six hours of music on 116 selections, all of them remixed from the original masters using super-bit sampling.

[illegible]

* In A Silent Way

Columbia 450982 Davis; Wayne Shorter (ts); Chick Corea (p); Joe Zawinul (p, org); John McLaughlin (g); Dave Holland (b); Tony Williams (d). 2/69.

 The Complete In A Silent Way Sessions

Columbia Legacy 65632 3CD As above, except add Joe Chambers, Jack DeJohnette (d); Teo Macero (perc). 69.

As an artefact, In A Silent Way is already a long way even from the increasingly abstract work of the previous couple of years. It was in every sense a collage using 'found objects', put together with a view to the minimum detail and coloration required to make an impact. Two of the 'objects' were McLaughlin, recruited on the nod and apparently unheard by the trumpeter, and Zawinul, whose 'In A Silent Way' became a centrepiece of the album. Three electric instruments give the band a sound completely unlike the previous incarnation, though it is clear that there are very significant continuities between this record and Miles Smiles or E.S.P., and these should not be overlooked. In order to bring the performances up to LP length, Teo Macero stitched repeats of certain passages back into the fabric of the music, giving it continuity and a certain hypnotic circularity. Once again, a practical contingency (Miles was apparently happy with the short chunks that had been recorded) resulted in a new creative development, no less significant than Charles Mingus's overdubbing on The Black Saint And The Sinner Lady. Even if one had no inkling of what had gone before, In A Silent Way is a very beautiful album, touching and centred. The title-piece and 'Shhh/Peaceful' are among the most atmospheric recordings in modern jazz.

The Complete In A Silent Way Sessions were expected to yield a new vision of the work in progress. In the event, they're interesting but enigmatic. To stumble over a conclusion, hearing the raw material in its entirety makes one thankful for the genius of Miles and Teo Macero in seeing what was essential in these extraordinary recordings and what was of less significance. There is nothing here that improves on the released version. Some of the material, like 'Mademoiselle Mabry', 'Frelon Brun' and 'Dual Mr Anthony Tillman', was used to pad out Filles De Kilimanjaro and Water Babies; more found its way onto Circle In The Round. The brooding minor-key 'It's About That Time' was to become known as an anchor for important live sets by the 'lost' Davis band.

The real interest lies in the alternative takes of the title-piece and of 'Shhh/Peaceful'. These are good enough, though one cannot quibble with the decision as to issued takes. The album versions are supplemented on disc three by 'The Ghetto Walk', a genuine rarity and perhaps the only thing on the set that in any way significantly alters one's view of Miles at this period. In many ways it presages the trumpeter's return to the blues towards the end of his life. Yet this amazing track, which features sterling work from McLaughlin and Shorter as well as from the leader, is ample confirmation that Miles was never far from the blues.

Miles carved out this masterpiece from the most obdurate of material. The albums he created and curated with Macero's help are timeless. Insights into their genesis are fascinating but ultimately unnecessary. You'll listen to In A Silent Way a hundred times; you might listen to these tracks thrice, and then only to wonder how the miracle was achieved.

* Bitches Brew /  The Complete Bitches Brew Sessions

Columbia 460602 2CD / Columbia C4K 65570 4CD Davis; Wayne Shorter (ts); Bennie Maupin (bcl); Chick Corea, Larry Young, Joe Zawinul (p); John McLaughlin (g); Harvey Brooks, Dave Holland (b); Charles Alias, Jack DeJohnette, Lenny White (d); Jim Riley (perc). 8/69.

Much less beautiful than In A Silent Way and far more unremittingly abstract, this is one of the most remarkable creative statements of the last half-century, in any artistic form. It is also profoundly flawed, a gigantic torso of burstingly noisy music that absolutely refuses to resolve itself under any recognized guise. There are stories (authenticated by Teo Macero) that the recordings were made after an enormous dust-up between producer and star. Certainly Miles plays with a dour aggression but also, on 'Sanctuary', with a certain vulnerability which surfaced only occasionally during his later career. Though there had been experiments before with tape editing, Bitches Brew was made in an unprecedented way. Basically, the tapes were set to roll and the musicians improvised in the studio, creating a huge body of music which would later be assembled by Miles and Macero. There being no question of alternative or rejected 'takes', the complete sessions contain a huge body of music not used and unrelated to anything on the now repackaged and remastered release edition.

Listening to the complete sessions again underlines Miles's and Macero's intuitiveness and craft. Far from augmenting the reputation of the album, the full picture tends to deplete it. Individually, there are some lovely themes, like the Latin 'Yaphet' and 'Corrado' on disc two, but most of the unused material, like 'Trevere' on the next disc, is extremely tentative and lacks focus and engagement. The most significant change in personnel from previous bands was the replacement of Williams and his very linear approach with the more sculptural DeJohnette. The rhythms are immediately more shifting and uncertain, matching the complete polytonality of much of the music. It is rarely possible to decide what key the pieces are in, once they are under way, and there is never much consistency between the key of a 'solo', if such they are, and what the rest of the band is about. The electric keyboards (with Young drafted in to play his distinctive clusters) create a shimmer out of which Miles stabs out some of his most maximal trumpet-playing on record, hordes of ideas packed together into a relatively small space on 'Miles Runs The Voodoo Down' and 'Bitches Brew'. Zawinul and McLaughlin don't play on every track, but the naming of a piece after the guitarist suggests how important he became to this sound.

(*) Big Fun Columbia CK 63973 2CD Davis; Carlos Garnett, Steve Grossman, Wayne Shorter (ss); Bennie Maupin (bcl); Chick Corea, Herbie Hancock, Lonnie Liston Smith (p); Joe Zawinul (p, org); John McLaughlin (g); Khalil Balakrishna, Bihari Sharma (sitar, tambura); Harvey Brooks, Ron Carter, Michael Henderson, Dave Holland (b); Billy Cobham, Jack DeJohnette, Al Foster (d); Airto Moreira (perc). 11/69–6/72.

Recorded during what was perhaps the most intensely productive period of his life, this wasn't released until four years after the earliest of the sessions, by which time Miles had declared himself bored with the music. The period after Bitches Brew wasn't so much a time of consolidation as one of further exploration and redefinition. This is a less powerful set than its predecessor, lacking its sudden, alienating wallop. The key elements are in place: a distorted, almost pain-racked trumpet, the dissonant bleat of soprano saxophone, electric keyboards, thumping, funk-laden bass and a great slew of percussion. The medley of 'Great Expectations'/'Muhler Laranja' is titanic, a slab of electric sound. 'Go Ahead John' is again focused on the guitarist. 'Ife' is an African tapestry, brightly coloured but also dark and dangerous.

* Jack Johnson Columbia 471003 Davis; Steve Grossman (ss); Herbie Hancock (ky); John McLaughlin (g); Michael Henderson (b); Billy Cobham (d); Brock Peters (v). 1 & 11/70.

* The Complete Jack Johnson Sessions Columbia 86359 5CD As above, except add Wayne Shorter (ss); Bennie Maupin (bcl); Chick Corea, Keith Jarrett (ky); Herbie Hancock (org); Sonny Sharrock (g); Ron Carter, Dave Holland, Gene Perla (b); Jack DeJohnette (d); Airto Moreira (perc); Hermeto Pascoal (v, d). 2, 3, 5 & 6/70.

This to a large extent resolves some of the unfinished business of Bitches Brew. The picture changed sharply in 2003 with the release of The Complete Jack Johnson Sessions, an exhaustive documentation of how an apparently minor soundtrack project led to one of Miles's most dramatic stylistic and demographic shifts, a moment in his career where his and his audience's understanding of 'jazz' was robustly challenged. By 1970, conscious that studio-confected rock was fast encroaching on his audience, Miles was already dabbling in the same technique while attempting to remain an improviser. The making of A Tribute To Jack Johnson was the key text in that effort. It's an album that has often been overlooked in the Miles Davis canon. Even the recording company paid it scant attention, putting their marketing effort squarely behind the next set, Miles Davis At Fillmore: Live At The Fillmore East.

At the end of the decade, he was reaching out to a new audience and reaching out with a very new sound. On 6 and 7 March 1970, Miles and what has been called the 'lost quintet' appeared at Bill Graham's New York rock barn on the same bill as Neil Young and Crazy Horse and the Steve Miller Band. On those nights, they played material mainly from In A Silent Way and Bitches Brew. During the days, though, something new was being run down at Columbia's Studio B on West 52nd Street. In 1970, however, he was experimenting as well with newcomers. Soprano saxophonist Steve Grossman was just 19, while electric bassist Michael Henderson, recruited from Stevie Wonder's group, was also still a teenager. These were the Young Turks who would help steer the next revolution in Miles Davis's music.

During that spring, Miles's basic group consisted of Grossman (who replaced Wayne Shorter), pianist Chick Corea, English bassist Dave Holland, drummer Jack DeJohnette and percussionist Airto Moreira. Over the course of four months, though, Miles would draft in other players, many of them already veterans of the Bitches Brew sessions. Though McLaughlin was not a charter member of the working group, his guitar, often distorted, is the driving force on many of these wild, open-ended improvisations.

Henderson's almost simplistically locked-in bass was another signature sound, anchoring the funky, day-glo ostinati that Miles now wanted as backgrounds for his increasingly free improvisations. The dense keyboard textures and multiple percussion of Bitches Brew now gave way to something leaner, darker and faster on its feet.

Unlike the Malle film, the 1970 project was on a subject very close to Miles's heart, William Cayton's documentary on the life of boxer Jack Johnson, who won the world heavyweight title in controversial circumstances in 1908 and lost it again equally controversially seven years later. Johnson's flamboyance, conspicuous success and clashes with the white establishment seemed to prefigure Miles's own. The trumpeter also liked to hang out in boxing gyms and spar, helping to build the image of a sharply combative little cat always ready to fight his corner. Many of the tracks are named after great boxers: 'Ali', 'Duran', 'Archie Moore'.

The original Tribute To Jack Johnson released in February 1971 consisted of just two LP-side pieces, 'Yesternow' and 'Right Off', assembled after the fact by Teo Macero, but the basic performances remain surprisingly intact. At the 7 April session 'Right Off' began as a vague studio jam. McLaughlin started to play a shuffle vamp in E. Henderson and Cobham picked up on it and started to play. Herbie Hancock had been passing and was drafted in on organ. After a few minutes, the red light was on, and Miles was in the studio playing some of the fiercest trumpet of his career.

The issued 'Right Off' consisted of edits from three takes of the theme recorded that day, together with an unaccompanied trumpet solo Miles had taped for Macero in November 1969. These takes are now available in full. 'Yesternow' was compiled in a similar way, using takes of 'Willie Nelson' recorded back in February with a different band. This line-up included Corea on electric piano, Maupin on bass clarinet and a second guitarist, the heavily echoplexed Sharrock. Again, Macero reverted to the 1969 solo trumpet tape and to an orchestral accompaniment underneath actor Brock Peters's narration. It's a less sheerly surprising track, but no less powerful than 'Right Off' and driven by the same visceral intensity. Its motor is a 12-minute bass riff pinched directly from James Brown and Sly Stone.

The archaeology of these sessions will occupy Miles Davis fans for years. Owners of the appropriate software will be able to follow Macero's processes for themselves and reassemble the original release version. Others will trace the appearance of material from February to June 1970 on a string of later releases and compilations, including Live-Evil, Big Fun, Get Up With It and even the afterthought Directions. Columbia clearly felt no sense of urgency about the set, moving swiftly on to the release of two live albums, Black Beauty and Miles Davis At Fillmore, which symbolized Miles's rock revolution by being recorded at Bill Graham's legendary West and East rock venues. The label also downgraded the special nature of A Tribute To Jack Johnson by reissuing the second run without the original graphic of the boxer in his roadster surrounded by gals but with a photo of the white-vested Miles in that familiar, soon-to-be-branded pose.

(*) Live At The Fillmore East, March 6 1970: It's About That Time Columbia/Legacy C2K 85191 2CD Davis; Wayne Shorter (ss, ts); Chick Corea (p); Dave Holland (b); Jack DeJohnette (d); Airto Moreira (perc). 3/70.

This is an important Miles issue, and it is an issue, not a re-release. Bootleg copies of this extraordinary concert have been around for some time and Columbia have wisely followed their unedited, as-it-happened approach. Historically the 6/3/70 gig was critical because it documents Miles's electric concept live for the first time and also catches one of the last handful of gigs by a classic line-up. The occasion was curious in that the Davis group was warming up for Neil Young and Crazy Horse and for the Steve Miller Band, so the audience was certainly youthful, rock-orientated; if they knew Miles at all, it was either from recent things like In A Silent Way or perhaps Kind of Blue.

From the very beginning of 'Directions', which kicks off the first set, Miles is stabbing out notes with fire and purpose and his trumpet-playing through the evening is exemplary. Both sets also end with 'It's About That Time', and here Miles goes into overdrive, pushing incredibly hard. First time out, he segues into 'The Theme', as it can't ever have been heard before; for the second set, the subsidiary theme is 'Willie Nelson'. Both feature 'Spanish Key', given a harder and more antagonistic reading the second time. Otherwise, the sets differ. The remaining element at first house is 'Masqualero', which seems to bridge old-style Miles to the new, rock version. Later in the evening, he moves to new material: 'Miles Runs The Voodoo Down' and 'Bitches Brew'.

The main action falls between Davis and Corea, with the trumpeter constantly attempting to trump Chick's harmonic shifts. The addition of Airto Moreira on percussion broadens the rhythmic language considerably and creates a wonderfully open metre. Shorter would very soon head off to form the central axis of Weather Report, reverting to a quiet and introspective style that is the antithesis of his burning intensity here.

 Live–Evil Columbia C2K 65135 2CD Davis; Gary Bartz (as, ss); Steve Grossman (ss); John McLaughlin (g); Chick Corea, Herbie Hancock, Joe Zawinul (p); Keith Jarrett (p, org); Ron Carter, Michael Henderson, Dave Holland (b); Khalil Balakrishna (sitar); Billy Cobham, Jack DeJohnette (d); Airto Moreira (perc); Hermeto Pascoal (p, v); Conrad Roberts (v). 2, 6 & 12/70.

There was the slim, centred aesthete called Miles Davis, and there was the dark monster from the id called Selim Sivad, presiding deity of this boilingly intense, unremitting record. 'What I Say', which dominates the latter part of the first disc, is perhaps the most extreme performance Miles was ever to record, one of four tracks on this double set recorded at the Cellar Door in Washington, DC. Some have suggested that the presence of McLaughlin had a negative impact. Certainly the studio tracks without the Englishman's presence have a very different feel, a quieter and more centred sound on 'Selim' and 'Nem Um Talvez' (albeit both very brief) which makes one wonder if this is the case. Davis looks for a dense, almost sculptural sound in which layers of keyboard clusters generate a shifting, swampy undertow, difficult to penetrate, hard to resist. Abdul Mati's disturbing, surreal cover-art contributes more than a little to the impact of this record, its juxtaposition of affirmative beauty and perverse ugliness. Not many records of the time remain so compulsively disturbing, and so unexpectedly beautiful.

(*) Black Beauty C2K 65138 2CD Davis; Steve Grossman (ss); Chick Corea (p); Dave Holland (b); Jack DeJohnette (d); Airto Moreira (perc). 4/70.

(*) At Fillmore C2K 65139 2CD As above, except add Keith Jarrett (org). 6/70.

These two sets, from the Fillmores West and East respectively, extended the Bitches Brew formula: churning rhythm, staccato trumpet stabs, swirling harmonic colours and splashes. The material is repetitive, the treatments constantly shifting. 'Bitches Brew', 'Sanctuary', 'It's About That Time' and, less expectedly, the standard 'I Fall In Love Too Easily' appear several times across both albums. The big difference is the recruitment of Jarrett as an organist between April and June, a richness of texture that enhances the music enormously, though in every other respect the West Coast date is better.

 Live At Cellar Door Columbia/Legacy 7423 81695 6CD Davis; Gary Bartz (ss, as); Keith Jarrett (p); John McLaughlin (g); Michael Henderson (b); Jack DeJohnette (d); Airto Moreira (perc). 12/70.

Some of the 18 December material, very severely edited, found its way onto Live–Evil. However, this issue elevates the Cellar Door dates in Washington DC almost to the level of the Blackhawk and Plugged Nickel sessions of previous years, and once again points up the yawning gulf that seemed to exist between Miles's live work with the band and the potted, album-length versions issued subsequently. It's dark, roiling stuff and the addition of McLaughlin to the basic sextet for the final night of three gave the sound extra urgency and thickness. However, it's the earlier nights, officially available here for the first time, which spark the most interest. 'Yesternow' is a much more focused version than the original, and 'Inamorata/Funky Tonk' sounds lean and dangerous. For some reason, Moreira isn't audible on the first night, though all sessionographies suggest that he was ever-present; one has to assume he missed the 16 December gig.

The new material again provides an insight into how the band evolved in real time. Henderson occasionally sounds impatient or careless, hurrying his normally motoric rhythm in places, while Jarrett seems increasingly detached as the three nights progress, not necessarily losing touch with the rest of the band but seeming to follow his own agenda. Bartz is bluesy and raw, often more effective on his alto. Miles has the wah-wah switched on for relatively long stretches and the yawing, vertiginous sound disguises how subtly some of his solos are constructed. It's one of the miracles of his playing at this period that he never goes entirely 'outside', even as he dispenses with bar-line and conventional theme-and-solo structure.

(*) Get Up With It Columbia C2K 63970 2CD Davis; Sonny Fortune (as, f); Carlos Garnett, John Stubblefield (as); Steve Grossman (ss); David Liebman (f); Wally Chambers (hca); Cedric Lawson (p, org); Herbie Hancock, Keith Jarrett (ky); Pete Cosey, Cornell Dupree, Dominique Gaumont, Reggie Lucas, John McLaughlin (g); Khalil Balakrishna (sitar); Michael Henderson (b); Billy Cobham, Al Foster, Bernard Purdie (d); Airto Moreira, Mtume, Badal Roy (perc); additional brass and rhythm arrangements by Wade Jarcus and Billy Jackson. 70–74.

Miles's first attempt to make Ellington dance with Stockhausen. Dedicated to the recently deceased Duke and dominated by a huge, mournful tribute, Get Up With It is more coherent than its immediate predecessors and very much more challenging than its marginal reputation would suggest. Recorded over a period of four years, it traces Miles's growing interest in a whole range of apparently irreconcilable musics. In his ghosted autobiography, he explains his attachment to Sly Stone's technologized Afro-funk on the one hand and Stockhausen's brooding music-as-process on the other. What united the two, beyond an obvious conclusion that pieces no longer needed to end or be resolved, was the idea that instrumental sound could be transformed or mutated almost infinitely and that the interest of a performance could be relocated from harmonic 'changes' and settled on the manipulation of sound-textures over a moving carpet of rhythm. Since Bitches Brew, and very noticeably on an album like Jack Johnson, Miles had been willing to consider the studio and the editing suite a further instrumental resource. With Get Up With It and the two live albums that follow, Miles went a step further, putting together bands that created similar phases and process-dominated 'improvisations' in real time.

There is a conventional wisdom that Miles's trumpet-playing was at a low ebb during this period: health problems are adduced to shore up the myth of a tortured genius robbed of his truest talent, clutching at even the most minimal musical opportunities. Even those who had heard the mid-'70s albums, which acquired an added mystique by being the last before Miles's five-year 'retirement', were apt to say that he 'no longer played trumpet'. Though distorted by wah-wah pedals and constantly treading water in its own echo, Miles's horn was still doing precisely what the music required of it; the same applied to his resort to organ ('Rated X') and piano ('Calypso Frelimo'). The poorer tracks ('Maishya' and 'Red China Blues') give only a misleading representation of how finely balanced Miles's radical populism actually was; a live version of 'Maishya' from the infamous Osaka gig is altogether tougher. The essence of the 'new' Miles is to be found on the Duke composition, 'He Loved Him Madly', a swarthy theme that sounds spontaneously developed, only gradually establishing a common pulse and tone-centre but replete with subliminal references to Ellington's work. 'Honky Tonk', by contrast, is an actual throwback to the style and personnel of Jack Johnson. Though put together piecemeal and with Miles apparently willing to let Macero edit greater or lesser chunks out of extended performances, Get Up With It is of considerable historical importance, looking forward not just to the apocalyptic live performances of 1975 but to the more polished pop-jazz of the comeback years.

(*) On The Corner Columbia CK 63980 Davis; Teo Macero (as); David Liebman, Carlos Garnett (ts); Chick Corea, Herbie Hancock, Harold I. Williams (ky); David Creamer, John McLaughlin (g); Collin Walcott (sitar); Michael Henderson (b); Badal Roy (tabla); Jack DeJohnette (d); William W. Hart (d, perc); Don Alias, Mtume (perc). 72.

 The Complete On The Corner Sessions Sony/Legacy 66231 6CD As for On The Corner, Get Up With It, Big Fun. 3/72–5/75.

On The Corner featured the notorious Corky McCoy cover, featuring Miles's new constituency of latter-day zoot-suiters, Afros, gays, steatopygous chicks in hot-pants, and Willie The Pimp lookalikes. The trumpet has a flex and plug. The wah-wah pedal remains firmly depressed throughout. The critics hated it. Mostly they were right. On The Corner is unrelieved, chugging funk, and one has to dig a little bit for the experimental subtleties that lie in Miles's most unpromising records. Where electronics gave him a sinister, underground sound at the apocalyptic Osaka concert documented on Agharta and Pangaea, here the sound is tinny and unfocused. The supporting cast is also questionable. Garnett was to have something of a solo career on the back of his association with the great man, but he never convinces in this company. Expect no profound epiphany from the now de rigueur complete set, either, though perversely some of these materials make for better listening than the released album and the updated sound has an attractive depth of focus. There is a huge body of material here, spread over 31 tracks, of durations that vary from less than three minutes (brief takes of 'Holly-Wuud' and 'Big Fun') to more than half an hour ('He Loved Him Madly', 'Calypso Frelimo'). The total impact is considerable, to the point of being overwhelming, and whatever arguments might be adduced as to the actual generic status of this music, its remoteness from what Miles did before and since is actually somewhat exaggerated. Though solos have pretty much been left behind (they were, remember, still very much the basis of Bitches Brew and Jack Johnson) and while the beat is mostly motoric and unrelieved, the music is still identifiably Miles's even if its components have been variously crunched ('theme-and-solo') and stretched to infinity ('rhythm'). Conventional harmony has been suspended, but melodies are easily discernible and, without either counter-revisionism or special pleading, it's easy enough to make a case for this music as belonging to the mainstream rather than standing as an aberration.

 In Concert: Live At Philharmonic Hall Columbia/Legacy 65174 Davis; Carlos Garnett (as, ts); Cedric Lawson (syn, ky); Reggie Lucas (g); Khalil Balakrishna (sitar); Michael Henderson (b); Al Foster (d); James Mtume Heath, Badal Roy (perc). 72.

The Philharmonic Hall set is the obvious companion piece to On The Corner. By this stage, Miles has more or less completely abandoned the concept of themes-and-solos and clearly differentiated instruments or instrumental groups in favour of a thick, percussion-heavy substrate through which Miles's trumpet surges like a sand-worm. Acoustically, it's a mess. Michael Henderson's bass saws around out of control, and the addition of sitar and tabla adds a thickness to the mix that some will find deeply unpalatable. 'Rated X' is already way out in rock territory, but it's the transformation of the theme from Jack Johnson that most clearly signals the distance Miles has come over that short time.

(*) Dark Magus Columbia C2K 65137 2CD Davis; David Liebman (ts, ss); Azar Lawrence (ts); Peter Cosey, Dominique Gaumont, Reggie Lucas (g); Michael Henderson (b); Al Foster (d); Mtume (perc). 3/74.

Recorded in Carnegie Hall – but very different from 13 years earlier. This was a further variation. Out the electric sitar, in a third guitarist, out every last vestige of the cool poet who had recorded In A Silent Way, and in the dark abstractionist who was to turn in Agharta and Pangaea, both recorded and released in Japan a year later. Dark Magus is divided into four parts, thematically non-identical but so closely related that they sound, and should sound, like aspects of some great granitic slab. Nothing to separate 'Moja', 'Wili', 'Tatu' and 'Nne' but shadings and striations of sound and, as one gets to know these recordings better, one becomes almost fixated on the tiniest inflexions.

* Agharta / (*) Pangaea Columbia 467897 2CD / 467087 2CD Davis; Sonny Fortune (as, ss, f); Pete Cosey (g, syn, perc); Reggie Lucas (g); Michael Henderson (b); Al Foster (d); Mtume (perc). 2/75.

It bears repeating: Miles's trumpet-playing on these bruising, unconscionable records is of the highest and most adventurous order, not the desperate posturing of a sick and cynical man. The use of a wah-wah pedal is often fantastically subtle, creating surges and ebbs in a harmonically static line, allowing Miles to build huge melismatic variations on the line. The problem with these dates isn't the trumpeter but the band: Fortune gets the point, but doesn't have to do much; Henderson tends to plod, even within his technically limited role; and the two guitarists go off on long, rock-god solos that are almost laughably tame and blustery when set alongside Miles's knife-fighter attacks.

A re-run 'Maishya' and a long edit from the Jack Johnson theme retrospectively clinch the experiments of Live–Evil and Get Up With It. The idiom incorporates Stockhausen's conception of a 'world music' that moves like creeping tectonic plates ('Pangaea' and 'Gondwana' are the names palaeo-geographers give to the primeval super-continents) to Afro-American popular forms, though it's clear that Sly Stone has been left as far behind as bebop. 'Gondwana' is the most coherent performance on either album. It opens on Fortune's delicate flute and proceeds trance-like, with Miles's central trumpet episode bracketed by shimmering organ outlines and sullen, percussive stabs. Key centres are only notional and deceptive; most of the rhythmic activity takes place along a single axis, but with considerable variation in the intensity and coloration of the pulse; the 'solos' are continuous and inseparable from the main thrust of the music. Although admittedly problematic and unsoftened by time, these no longer seem quite as forbidding on first appearance.

(*) The Man With The Horn Columbia 468701 Davis; Bill Evans (ss); Barry Finnerty (g); Rod Hill (g, v, ky); Robert Irving III (p, ky); Felton Crews, Marcus Miller (b); Al Foster, Vince Mendoza (d); Sammy Figueroa (perc). 81.

 We Want Miles Columbia 469402 Davis; Bill Evans (ss); Mike Stern (g); Marcus Miller (b); Al Foster (d); Mino Cinelu (perc). 6 & 7/81.

 Star People Columbia 25395 As above, except add John Scofield (g); Tom Barney (b). 83.

This is perhaps the period in Miles's career that most urgently requires reassessment. He had been ill and out of circulation and these are not classic records, but in retrospect they sound unexpectedly closer in spirit to the Miles of 1960 than to the Miles of 1970. Selim Sivad has been exorcised and, though at moments his remnant sounds like a mere husk, there is a lot going on even in Miles's foreshortened, almost minimal statements. 'Back Street Betty' sounds as if it might have been around for more than a decade, and the cheeky 'Jean-Pierre' which accompanies it on The Man With The Horn was to become a concert staple in these years, reappearing on the live We Want Miles. In addition, and rarely for this period, a standard, too, a feeling interpretation of 'My Man's Gone Now'.

Though never a big critical or commercial success, Star People stands out in this period as one of the first unambiguous signs that Miles was trying to re-inscribe himself in a jazz tradition. Punctuated by prerecorded organ interludes, it mixes swing-era choruses over Motown riffs, dark blues shapes and passages that seem to hark all the way back to Buddy Bolden.

(*) Decoy Columbia 468702 Davis; Branford Marsalis (ss); John Scofield (g); Darryl Jones (b); Robert Irving III (syn); Al Foster (d); Mino Cinelu (perc). 84.

A rare dud. Decoy was recorded in Canada, where Davis had sensationally snubbed the trumpet star of the new generation, Wynton Marsalis. Miles's curiously ambivalent attitude to saxophonists is underlined by the underuse of the elder Marsalis brother. The sound is hard, brittle and unlovely, and there are passages when almost anyone might be playing, or even no one, so programmed and preset is the sound. One has to listen long and hard for brief glimpses of what had made Miles great, and when they come they are lost in a featureless neon landscape.

(*) You're Under Arrest Columbia 468703 Davis; Bob Berg (ss); Robert Irving III (ky); John McLaughlin, John Scofield (g); Darryl Jones (b); Al Foster (d); Steve Thornton (perc); Marek Olko, Sting (v). 85.

The final studio release with Columbia has acquired classic status on the strength of his loveliest latter-day transformations of pop material. His version of Cyndi Lauper's 'Time After Time', a medium-tempo waltz, is straightforwardly lovely, etched in melting top notes and passionate sours; but the finest performance on the record is the version of Michael Jackson's 'Human Nature'. The title-track is set up with some engaging 'read him his rights' / 'you got one phone call' nonsense from the guest vocalists and there's some steaming funk on 'Katia'. McLaughlin and Scofield vie for attention, but the dominant sound is the solid whoomph of Darryl 'The Munch' Jones's thumb-slap bass. A hugely entertaining record and a happier end to the long, tempestuous association with Columbia than Decoy would have been.

* Aura Columbia CK 63962 Davis; Palle Mikkelborg (t); large orchestra. 85.

Miles's first big-band record since the Gil Evans projects of the later '50s. In 1984 he had been awarded the prestigious Sonning Prize by the Danish government, an accolade normally accorded only to 'straight' composers. In recognition, and as a personal tribute to the influence of Miles's music, Palle Mikkelborg composed 'Aura' and persuaded the trumpeter to appear as soloist. CBS promptly sat on it for three years. A suite of eight 'colour poems' with an introduction and wonderful variation on 'Red', the piece is built up out of a ten-tone scale – stated by John McLaughlin in a brief 'Intro' – derived from the letters of Miles's name. This in turn yields a chord and a basic theme, which is then transformed by all the usual processes of serial composition, inversion, retrograde inversion and so on, and also by Miles's familiar colouristic alchemy. Miles's inclusion clearly lent the music a considerable fillip and some much-needed critical cachet, and Mikkelborg might just as readily have taken the lead role himself. It is, though, marvellous to have Miles ranged against a large group again, and Mikkelborg's arrangements (particularly on 'Green', which is an explicit attempt to recapture his classic sound) are clearly influenced by Gil Evans's grouping of instruments and interest in pitching top and bottom lines against one another in unusual sonorities.

Miles's duet with Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen on 'Green' is one of the finest moments on the record, spacious and delicately executed. He's almost as good on 'Orange', which makes specific references to the Bitches Brew period, and on the two versions of 'Red'/'Electric Red', where he tries out the theme a second time, muted, and moves outside the structure entirely to lay bright watercolour washes over the insistent riff. Mikkelborg's intention seems to have been to inscribe Davis yet more firmly into the history of American music. The solitary musings of 'White' are repeated with Mikkelborg's carefully stacked horns on 'Yellow' (which also restates the M.I.L.E.S. D.A.V.I.S. row) drawing the trumpeter into the musical community that he helped to create. There are more or less explicit references to such touchstones as Kind Of Blue and Sketches Of Spain. There are also plenty of generic references: hints of bebop harmony, subtle modes and, on 'Blue', reggae. The closing 'Violet' is a blues, an idiom to which Miles returned more and more frequently in his last years. It's also, though, a tribute to two former Sonning winners, Igor Stravinsky and Olivier Messiaen. Unique among the later records, and all the more precious for it, Aura has an unexpected power to move.

 Tutu Warner Brothers 925 490 Davis; George Duke, (p, ky); Adam Holzman, Bernard Wright (ky); Michal Urbaniak (vn); Marcus Miller (b, ky); Omar Hakim (d, perc); Paulinho Da Costa, Steve Reid (perc). 86.

(*) Amandla Warner Brothers 925 873 Davis; Kenny Garrett (as); Rick Margitza (ts); Jean-Paul Bourelly, Michael Landau, Foley McCreary, Billy Spaceman Watson (g); Joe Sample (p); Joey DeFrancesco, George Duke (ky); Marcus Miller (ky, b, etc.); Al Foster, Omar Hakim, Ricky Wellman (d); Don Alias, John Bigham, Mino Cinelu, Paulinho Da Costa, Bashiri Johnson (perc). 89.

The first post-CBS records were an uneasy blend of exquisite trumpet miniaturism and drab cop-show funk, put together with a high production gloss that camouflaged a lack of real musical substance. Though he was acutely sensitive to any perceived put-down by middle-class whites, little was known about Miles's specific political beliefs at this or any previous time. The Jack Johnson tribute was as close as he came to an explicit statement of solidarity. Talking to a French interviewer, he said that naming albums for Bishop Desmond Tutu and after the African National Congress rallying cry – 'Amandla' – was the only contribution he felt he could make to the liberation struggle in South Africa; Miles also namechecks Mandela on 'Full Nelson', though this is also a reference to his own earlier 'Half Nelson' and simultaneously signals a reawakening interest in blues and bop harmonies which was to occupy him for much of the rest of his life.

The horn sounds as deceptively fragile as ever, but it's made to dance in front of shifting sonic backdrops, put together in a cut-and-paste way that succeeds very much better on Amandla than on the earlier set. 'Big Time' and 'Jilli' have a hectic, thudding energy, while at the other end of the spectrum Miles's dedication to the late 'Mr Pastorius' catches him in convincingly lyrical form. There's no mistaking the ultimate provenance of Marcus Miller's vivid techno-arranging. In particular, his use of synthesized percussion on 'Hannibal' recalls 'La Nevada' on Gil Evans's Out Of The Cool.

 Doo-Bop Warner Brothers 7599 26938 Davis; Easy Mo Bee, J. R., A. B. Money (v); other personnel unspecified. 91.

Almost the end. Perhaps inevitably, it isn't of earth-shaking significance but, equally predictably, it finds Miles taking another ostensibly rejuvenating stylistic turn. Unfortunately, Easy Mo Bee's doo-wop/rap stylings are so soft-centred and so lyrically banal as to deny 'The Doo-Bop' and almost anything else on the record any real credibility. Neither 'Blow' nor the 'posthumous' 'Fantasy', compiled after Miles's death, offer much in the way of succour. It seems that Miles brought in material recorded in the late '80s and known as the RubberBand session, so this final set might be likened to the grab-bag approach of Get Up With It. Miles plays well and with surprising aggression in places, but the backgrounds are uniformly trite and the samples (from Kool & The Gang, James Brown, Donald Byrd's 'Street Lady', Gene Ammons's 'Jungle Strut', among others) are used with an almost perverse lack of imagination. As a farewell to the studio, it's a severe disappointment.

 Miles Davis & Quincy Jones Live At Montreux /  Montreux Highlights Warner Brothers 45221 / Warners 46324 Davis; Miles Evans, Lew Soloff (t); Benny Bailey, John D'Earth, Wallace Roney, Ack Van Rooyen, Marvin Stamm, Jack Walrath (t, flhn); Roland Dahinden, Conrad Herwig, Tom Malone (tb); Dave Bargeron, Earl McIntyre (tb, euph); Dave Taylor (btb); Alex Brofsky, John Clark, Claudio Pontiggia, Tom Varner (frhn); Howard Johnson (tba, bs); Sal Giorgianni (as); Bob Malach (ts, f, cl); Larry Schneider (ts, ob, f, cl); Jerry Bergonzi (ts); Alex Weber (cl); Christian Gavillet, Roger Rosenberg (bcl, bs); Xavier Duss, Judith Wenziker (ob); Reiner Erb, Christian Rabe (bsn); Xenia Schindler (hp); George Gruntz, Dave Seghezzo, Tilman Zahn (p); Delmar Brown, Gil Goldstein (ky); Carlos Benavent, Mike Richmond (b); Kenwood Dennard, Grady Tate (d). 7/91.

His last bow. Miles and Quincy had never worked together. For years the trumpeter had refused to retread his great material. Presto! The ultimate wish-list booking for a 25th anniversary event, something that would galvanize Montreux like nothing else. It was clear that Miles was ailing at the time, and his solos often find him out of breath and lacking in any real physical or creative stamina. The arrangements are grandly overdone, but there's no mistaking the rapturous nature of the reception from the Montreux crowd. It was a career retrospective up to Sketches Of Spain. After 'Boplicity' from Birth Of The Cool, the band launches into medleys from Miles Ahead and Porgy And Bess. It doesn't take long to recognize that Quincy Jones is no Gil Evans, and, with no one around to give the music a more delicate and nuanced spin, the huge George Gruntz Concert Jazz Band play with the dead-centredness of a studio outfit. Jones hails Miles Davis as a 'great painter' and that is exactly what he was. He left some masterpieces, some puzzling abstracts, and a pile of fascinating sketches. The Leonardo of our time.

Also, in brief:

* The Essential Miles Davis Columbia Legacy 85475 2CD. 45–85.

All the way from Bird's 'Now's The Time' to Marcus Miller's 'Portia'. We are apt to be cynical and dismissive of compilations, but this one is exemplary.

 Young Miles Properbox 1017 4CD. 45–49.

Packaging and documentation are average, and the flat transfers dim the wattage on Miles's work with Charlie Parker.

(*) Complete Vocalists Sessions Definitive 11160. 45–60.

Rubberlegs Williams to Sarah Vaughan notwithstanding, one doesn't think of Miles as a singers' player; repackaging for repackaging's sake.

 Conception Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1726 2. 3/51.

Intended as a limited-edition album, this remains overlooked. The arrangements are too big and fussy to suit Miles, Stan Getz and Lee Konitz (sax) and there's no real element of surprise.

 Young Miles /  Enigma: A Proper Introduction Properbox 17 / Proper 2011. 45–51, 51–53.

Creak! Grind! The merchandising machine demands a sacrifice.

 Complete All Star Studio Recordings /  Complete Birdland Recordings Definitive 11237 / 11165. 51–53.

Definitive do a decent enough job with these, and they may appeal to newcomers without any early Miles, but they're pretty ephemeral as artefacts.

 Plays For Lovers Prestige 6019. 53–56.

Not such a crass idea, given the quality of the music on display here. Miles's ballad playing, punctuated with space and silence, was already a miracle.

(*) Hi-Hat All Stars Fresh Sound FSRCD 13. 55.

Eavesdroppings from the bootleg capital of America. Miles is in a different musical realm from his colleagues, so of documentary interest only.

 Bluing: Miles Plays The Blues Prestige 11004. MID-'50S.

Arguably, he never stopped, so again this doesn't really answer any particular need.

* Sketches Of Spain / Kind Of Blue / In A Silent Way Sony 65604. 59–69.

Imagine the thrill of hearing 'Concierto De Aranjuez', 'Freddie Freeloader' and 'In a Silent Way' for the very first time. Great price, too.

 Live in Den Haag /  Live in Zurich Lone Hill 10206 / Gambit 2031. 3/60.

More from a richly documented tour. Episodically interesting, particularly the Hague appearance; Miles and Trane get their wires crossed in the Swiss air.

* The Complete Miles At Montreux /  Highlights From Complete Miles Davis At Montreux Columbia 86824 19CD / WEA International 89895. 73–91.

Unquestionably magnificent, but given the price tag and a 24-hour day, not many will feel able to invest? Highlights is a reasonable sampling with the emphasis very much on recent things.

 Live Around The World WEA 73612. 88–91.

A bid to persuade fans to trade in their privately recorded concert C-90s in favour of the official souvenir. Some great stuff: too much Foley, too many keyboards, but lots of good Garrett and some sagely beautiful trumpet.

* Panthalassa /  Panthalassa: The Remixes Columbia CK 67909 / 69897. 69–74, 97; 98–99.

Assembled by Bill Laswell and subsequently remixed from the music of the electric period, this has great, but obviously controversial, merits. Is it a Miles record? Arguably, if Bitches Brew is, this is, with Laswell in the Macero role. On that basis, a remarkable achievement.

N. Glenn Davis

DRUMS

Studied with Alan Dawson at Berklee, but now again based in his native Cleveland.

 A Different View Jazzed Media 1028 Davis; Dave Sterner (ss, as); Larry Porter (p); Dallas Colley (b). 12/06.

If these are local guys trying to make an impact beyond Cleveland, good luck to them. This is a highly accomplished debut, all original material (one track is by the pianist), and played with the kind of easy confidence that only comes from regular gigging together. 'The Happy People' is a catchy opener, bright and propulsive. 'Distant Celebration' is one of a couple of Latin-tinged numbers; the other, 'Bright Roads' showcases Sterner's soprano. And Porter's 'Eadie Is A Lady', dedicated to his late mother, is an exquisite ballad. As a calling card, this couldn't be bettered; as a listening experience, though, it doesn't quite have enough individuality and presence, but probably enough to get non-Ohio promoters interested.

Richard Davis (born 1930)

DOUBLE BASS

Played in Chicago classical orchestras and with Ahmad Jamal before freelancing in NY from 1960. Associated with Eric Dolphy and Sarah Vaughan and had a long stint in the Jones–Lewis band. A distinguished educator.

(*) One For Frederick Hep CD 2047 Davis; Cecil Bridgewater (t); Ricky Ford (ts); Sir Roland Hanna (p); Frederick Waits (d). 7/89.

 Live At Sweet Basil Evidence ECD 22103 As above, except omit Waits; add Ronnie Burrage (d). 8/90, 5/91.

Stravinsky's favourite bass-player, Davis draws somewhat on the example of fellow Chicagoan Wilbur Ware, bringing considerable rhythmic virtuosity and a tremendous range of pitches and timbre, both arco and plucked. He's right at the heart of these sessions, with what was his regular group of the time, belying its casual 'with friends' branding. The Hep date is dedicated to the drummer, who died some four months after the recording. Waits's introduction to 'City Bound' (and to the album) is very strong, and he turns in a fine accelerated solo on 'Brownie Speaks'. Davis himself is all calm and assurance. He's more exciting on the live date, sweeping through the opening 'Dealin'' and finding some interesting orchestral textures during Grofe's 'On The Trail'. Bridgewater and Ford are crisp and responsive, but it's when the focus is on the trio that this is most effective.

 The Bassist: Homage To Diversity Palmetto 2071 Davis; John Hicks (p). 5/01.

This mixes gospel, blues and jazz with a gentle confidence on both parts. Davis's unaccompanied 'Go Down, Moses' and recitation on 'C. C. Rider' are interesting accents, but the real meat of the record is to be found in the duets with Hicks. 'Come Sunday', 'A Flower Is A Lovesome Thing' and 'Skylark' are well-chosen and warmly played. 'Diverse' he may be, but always rooted in a highly individual creativity.

Also, in brief:

 Total Package Marge 22. 97.

Larger than usual group, with Dave Liebman and Charles Owens (sax), George Cables (p) on hand.

Steve Davis (born 1967)

TROMBONE

Began on trumpet but switched to trombone and studied at Hartford with Jackie McLean. The last-ever recruit to The Jazz Messengers in 1989. Since then, a regular face in post-bop.

 The Jaunt Criss Cross 1113 Davis; Mike DiRubbo (as); Eric Alexander (ts); Bruce Barth (p); Ugonna Okegwo (b); Eric McPherson (d). 6/95.

 Dig Deep Criss Cross 1136 Davis; Jim Rotondi (t, flhn); Eric Alexander (ts); David Hazeltine (p); Nat Reeves (b); Joe Farnsworth (d). 12/96.

(*) Crossfire Criss Cross 1152 Davis; Mike DiRubbo (as); Eric Alexander (ts); Harold Mabern (p); Nat Reeves (b); Joe Farnsworth (d). 12/97.

(*) Vibe Up! Criss Cross 1178 Davis; Mike DiRubbo (as); David Hazeltine (p); Peter Bernstein (g); Steve Nelson (vib); Peter Washington (b); Joe Farnsworth (d). 12/98.

Davis is an adept, articulate player, always indebted to his work with Jackie McLean and Art Blakey. He doesn't overplay, but he's generous with his lines and even when at his most intense always plays for the band. The albums are conventional but full and satisfying. Crossfire is our favourite of the Criss Crosses: Davis makes full use of the front line in the classic Messengers manner; there are a couple of terrific blowouts in 'From The Inside Out' and 'Cousin Mary', and the songful treatment of 'Old Folks' is very appealing. Both The Jaunt and Dig Deep are tough and enjoyable, if thinner with the kind of moments which really pick up such dates and make the listener want to cling on. Alexander, as usual, is a force for good.

Vibe Up! was nearly there, but didn't deliver a killer punch. Nelson brings a bright edge to the accompaniments, soloing with crisp authority. Davis takes credit for most of the writing, and they're songs that suit the trombone, if not exactly stretching his technique. He includes some nice unexpected items, with a delightful version of Thad Jones's 'The Summary' and a lyrical, but not saccharine, 'Somewhere'. DiRubbo shows up for three of the songs, but mostly it's Davis on his own out front.

 Systems Blue Criss Cross 1218 Davis; Mike DiRubbo (as); David Hazeltine (p); Peter Washington (b); Joe Farnsworth (d). 5/01.

 Meant To Be Criss Cross 1248 Davis; Jimmy Greene (ss, ts); Xavier Davis (p); Dwayne Burno (b); Nasheet Waits (d). 12/03.

A familiar line-up on Systems Blue. Davis gets a lovely tone on 'A Nightingale Sang In Berkeley Square'. The two originals, 'Spirit Waltz' and the title-track, are both attractive themes, the former nicely extended. DiRubbo only plays on two numbers, but brings a nice harmonic feel to proceedings.

By contrast, Meant To Be is all Davis originals and brings some sign that his thinking may be evolving beyond the retro modal style of previous albums. All except the closing 'Blues Across The World' are substantial ideas; 'Angelina' is delightful and 'As Fate Would Have It' is wry and ironic.

(*) Alone Together Mapleshade 10832 Davis; Larry Willis (p); Nat Reeves (b); Eric McPherson (d). 8/04.

The opening 'Milestones' is a further reminder how important Miles was to this Davis's musical development. It kicks off a very elegant set, hugely enhanced by the still undervalued Willis, who contributes a beautiful original 'The Day You Said Goodbye'. As solo horn, Steve takes time and gives himself space. 'The Surrey With The Fringe On Top' is exquisite and there's more oblique fare in 'United', now the Wayne Shorter composition most covered by contemporary players. 'Alone Together' is rather dull, but 'Upper Manhattan Medical Group' and 'My Foolish Heart' more than make up for it and the closing read of J. J. Johnson's 'Short Cake' is perfection.

* Update Criss Cross 1282 Davis; Roy Hargrove (t); Anthony Wonsey (p); Peter Bernstein (g); Nat Reeves (d). 12/05.

While not exactly a huge leap, Update sounds like aspects of the technique have been subtly tweaked. Right from the off, Shorter's 'Marie Antoinette', Davis seems to be adding harmonics, embellishing the basic line, taking chances with his trajectory through the song. When he plays with Hargrove, as on Jackie McLean's 'Bird Lives', there's an itchy excitement. The set includes a second Shorter line in 'Wildflower' and ends with a version of Ray Drummond's seldom-covered 'Leanin' and Preenin'' that could be off a late-'50s Prestige date.

Also, in brief:

(*) Portrait In Sound Stretch 9027-2. 3–4/00.

Davis is mostly the sole horn again, and interacts well with Steve Nelson (vib). Brad Mehldau (p) is in for a couple of pieces with a different section.

Walter Davis Jr (1932–90)

PIANO

Grew up in Virginia and joined Babs Gonzales in Three Bips And A Bop, before becoming a player in the bebop revolution, working with Bird and Max Roach. In and out of the music (he even worked as a tailor for a while), he never really built on a spectacular start.

 Davis Cup Blue Note 92766 Davis; Donald Byrd (t); Jackie McLean (as); Sam Jones (b); Art Taylor (d). 8/59.

He didn't make too many records of his own and none of them are stone classics, but Davis is more than a footnote. The Blue Note is a rich, accomplished date, all based on original material. Byrd is in striking form, as is McLean, but catch Davis's own solos on the opening ''Smake It' and (still more) on 'Loodle-Lot' for a glimpse of how he could squeeze complex ideas into the basic metre, and add countermelodies and secondary themes, which, taken in sum, rendered the crude 'hard bop' label difficult to sustain. Incredibly, he didn't record as leader again until 1977, when Denon briefly took him up.

 In Walked Thelonious Mapleshade 56312 Davis (p solo). 87.

(*) Scorpio Rising Steeplechase SCCD31255 Davis; Santi Debriano (b); Ralph Peterson (d). 7/89.

Davis held a mystical belief that Monk and Bud Powell visited him in spirit and coloured his playing. Tinged it may be, but what is striking about his solo performances of stalwarts like 'Ruby, My Dear' and 'Crepuscule With Nellie' (and also some of the more difficult stuff) is that they are more thoroughly personalized than most pianists dare. 'Round Midnight' is played twice, with subtle structural changes and none of the usual late-night fuzz.

The trio record is interesting for the insight it offers into Davis the composer. Obviously defined by bop, he stretches the harmonic language back and forward, touching base with swing and the blues as well as pushing on into new territory on 'Four Hundred Years Ago Tomorrow' and the title-track. He gives complex ideas the rawness of a blues, and develops simple motifs with an almost symphonic development. A seriously neglected figure.

Wild Bill Davis (1918–95)

ORGAN, PIANO

Studied music in Texas and joined the Louis Jordan band in 1945, before switching to the electric organ and doing freelance arranging. A pioneer of R&B organ and a fine soloist.

() In The Groove! / () In the Mellow Tone Fresh Sound FSR-CD 308 / 309 Davis; George Clarke (ts); Bill Jennings (g); Grady Tate (d). 59–60.

 Live In Chateauneuf Du Pape /  Alright, OK, You Win Black & Blue 968/910 Davis; Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis (ts); Billy Butler (g); Oliver Jackson (d). 1/76.

 Out Of Nowhere Black & Blue 193 Davis; Harold Ashby (ts). 2/91.

The Fresh Sounds are fair representations of the kind of music Davis was making at the time, small-combo tracks which are more like instrumental pop than anything with much jazz in it – the occasional solo, but mostly simple renditions of familiar tunes from 'Satin Doll' on down. Despite the titles of this pair, which are drawn from the same sessions, each is a mixture of up-tempo and ballad set pieces.

The Black & Blue sets have a bit more muscle, largely thanks to Jaws's fiery soloing, but Davis also shows his mettle. 'Lester Leaps In' on the live album is particularly good, but there's a nice 'On Green Dolphin Street' on the studio record from Paris, with some interesting alternate takes. The record with Ashby scores for Harold's urbane soloing, very different in temper to Davis's but perfectly suited to the circumspect later style. Davis's most worthwhile records remain the deleted albums he cut with Johnny Hodges in the '60s.

Also, in brief:

 April In Paris, Volume 1 /  Syncopated Clock, Volume 2 Ocium OCM 0046/7. 50–53, 72 & 52–55, 72.
Some nice stuff on these as well, with Duke and Louis Jordan on the first, Floyd Smith (g) and Chris Columbus (d) on the other.

Xavier Davis (born 1971)

PIANO

Born in Grand Rapids, Michigan. He studied trombone but ended up on piano and was one of the last to work with Betty Carter; also a regular, with bassist brother Quincy, in the Tom Harrell group.

 Innocence Of Youth Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 128 Davis; Brandon Owens (b); E. J. Strickland (d). 7/01.
A briskly delivered set, some attractive compositions (though Harrell's 'Bell' has more going on in it than most of the other tunes put together) and some quirky ideas: 'Milk With A Koolaid Chaser' is a curious not-blues. Davis seems at his best when the tempo is easy; some tunes intensify too fast and end up sounding like Tyner pastiche. 'Milestones' (the John Lewis one) is turned out with altered chords. Owens shines in his solos. A strong effort overall.

Wild Bill Davison (1906–90)

CORNET

Worked in Ohio, Chicago and Milwaukee before arriving in NY in 1941, where he joined the Condon circle. Freelanced from 1960.

 This Is Jazz Jazzology JCD 42 Davison; Jimmy Archey (tb); Albert Nicholas, Edmond Hall (cl); Ralph Sutton, James P. Johnson (p); Danny Barker (g); George 'Pops' Foster (b); Baby Dodds (d). 47.
 Showcase Jazzology JCD Davison; Jimmy Archey (tb); Garvin Bushell (cl, bsn); Ralph Sutton (p); Sid Weiss (b); Morey Feld (d); Classic Jazz Collegium Orchestra. 47, 76.
Born in Defiance, Ohio, Wild Bill looked to have slung the town sign round his neck. Early dates show that he was both at home and slightly uncomfortable as a Condonite. For the moment, the collected Commodores have been deleted, but there's more early stuff on this, typical, This Is Jazz fare, with a good workmanlike band (Sutton is the star) and a frowsy Davison vocal on 'Ghost Of A Chance'.

Showcase is an odd one, with six romantic cuts featuring the 1947 band in markedly laid-back form (Bushell even blows his bassoon on 'Yesterdays' to elegiac effect) sitting alongside a series of recordings from 30 years later with a fine Czech ensemble. Interesting to compare Bill's sound and solo approach. His articulation was still standing up well, but there's an almost cynical, throwaway cast to his later choruses, though to be fair the earlier material is unwontedly naked and open-hearted.

 Tie A Yellow Ribbon 'Round The Old Oak Tree Jazzology JCD 251 Davison; Will Alger (tb); Jack Maheu (cl); Bob D'Imperio (p); Barney Mallon (b); Danny D'Imperio (d). 53.
Originally made for Fat Cat's Jazz, this found Bill working with yet another 'local' band, in this case Maheu's group from Rochester, NY. It's of interest that drummer Danny D'Imperio, later a fine hard-bopper, is featured here with his father. The title-tune was a nicely reworked pop song and there's a moving 'Blues For Eddie Condon', who'd died not long before. Good sound for the time.

(*) Live! 1955 Miami Beach Storyville STCD 6065 Davison; Pee Wee Russell (cl); Lou McGarity (tb); Gene Schroeder (p); Walter Page (b); George Wettling (d). 11/55.
Bill's the featured soloist on this Condon All-Stars date from Florida, sounding superb on 'If I Had You', a string of blues classics and a ballad medley that comes far too high up the running order for maximum effect. Nice, quirky playing from Russell and delightful exchanges with McGarity as well.

 Pretty Wild / With Strings Attached Arbors ARCD 19175 Davison; Cutty Cutshall (tb); Bob Wilber (cl); Gene Schroeder (p); Art Ryerson, Barry Galbraith (g); Frank Carroll, Jack Lesberg (b); Bobby Rosengarden, Don Lamond (d); strings. 2/56–1/57.
Davison and strings was an improbable combination, explored by George Avakian when these dates were done for Columbia (when Hacket was blowing prettily on Jackie Gleason albums, which might explain it). The material is all romantic standards except for the unlikely 'Wild Man Blues'; an entertaining, if low-voltage, diversion in the Davison discography.

(*) Wild Bill Davison & His Jazzologists Jazzology JCD 2 Davison; Lou McGarity (tb); Tony Parenti (cl); Hank Duncan (p); George 'Pops' Foster (b); Zutty Singleton (d). N.D.
 After Hours Jazzology JCD 22 Davison; Kenny Davern (cl); Charlie Queener (p); George Wettling (d). 66.
(*) 'S Wonderful Jazzology JCD 181 Davison; Vic Dickenson (tb), Buster Bailey (cl), Dick Wellstood (p), Willie Wayman (b), Cliff Leeman (d). N.D.
Davison took every chance he had to make records, and the big run of Jazzology discs is inevitably mixed. McGarity and Parenti are admirable players and they make up a very good front line with Bill; as righteous Dixieland goes, this is arguably the best record of the bunch. The After Hours date came about when Bill drove by a gig when Wettling was in charge, sat in, taped it and counted his royalties. The footwork with Davern is rather good.

'S Wonderful featured a superior group: Davison and Dickenson make a dream front line, the snarling bite of the one with the droll, loping gait of the other, and if neither is at his best, it's a tonic after the playing on some of the other Jazzologies.

 Swinging Wild Jazzology JCD 219 Davison; Bert Murray (tb); Bruce Turner (cl, as); Ronnie Gleves (p, vib); Dave Murphy (b); Tony Allen (d). c. 66.
(*) With Freddy Randall Jazzology JCD 160 As above, except omit Murray, Murphy; add Freddy Randall (t), George Chisholm (tb), Lennie Felix (p), Dave Markee (b). c. 66.
 Memories Jazzology JCD 201 Davison; Alex Welsh (t); Roy Williams (tb); John Barnes (cl, ts, bs); Fred Hunt (p); Jim Douglas (g); Ron Mathewson (b); Lennie Hastings (d). 12/66.
Davison liked British company and these dates are a congenial setting for him. Swinging Wild was cut live at the Dancing Slipper in Nottingham, and though the sound is dusty, the playing has plenty of vinegar. Better, though, is the meeting with Randall's band. Interesting to hear Freddy alongside one of his great influences and, although he defers to Bill most of the way, they have a great scrap over 'Royal Garden Blues'. Chisholm, in excellent fettle, is another bonus. The final four tracks are from an unidentified gig by a similar line-up. Memories sets Bill up with the Welsh band in Deansgate. Nothing immortal, but Barnes and Williams are always worth waiting for, and Davison obviously found the occasion to his liking.

 Just A Gig Jazzology JCD 191 Davison; Slide Harris (tb); Tom Gwaltney (cl); John Eaton (p); Van Perry (b); Tom Martin (d); Fat Cat Johnson McRee (v). 11/73.

The title may reveal more than intended, because Bill would roll up pretty much anywhere he could play and was keen to record as often as there was a tape to hand. This comes from the Manassas Jazz Festival and there's perhaps a bit more urgency and concentration than usual, though his own contribution is slightly muted in places, with hints of tiredness towards the end of choruses that start out more optimistically than they finish. Gwaltney solos very effectively.

 Wild Bill In New Orleans Jazzology JCD 170 Davison; George Basso (tb); Noel Kalet (ss); David Paquette (p); Ed Garland (b); Bob Bequillard (d). 4/75.

... and working with another pick-up band, who show him lots of respect, though Garland was presumably old enough to count as the senior man on the night. As often, nothing to write home about, just a solid hour of Dixieland jazz, with some spirited solos from Bill and a couple of nice interventions from the two reedmen.

 But Beautiful Storyville STCD 8233 Davison; Per Carsten Petersen (as); Jesper Thilo (ts, cl); Uffe Karskov, Steen Vig (ts); Flemming Madsen (bs); Niels Jørgen Steen , Torben Munk (g); Hugo Rasmussen (b); Ove Rex (d). 2/74.

 Wild Bill In Denmark: Volumes 1 & 2 /  With Papa Bue Storyville STCD 5523 / 5524 / 5526 Davison; Ole Stolle (t on Volume 1 only); Arne Bue Jensen (tb); Jørgen Svare (cl); Bent Jaedig (ts); Jørn Jensen (p); Lars Blach (g); Jens Sølund (b); Knud Ryskov Madsen (d). 2/74–1/77; 2/74–1/75; 5/75–1/77.

Storyville unearthed all manner of Davison material. He was frequent visitor to Copenhagen, playing with Fessor Lindgreen, Bue Jensen and others. He sounds more at home here than with many home-grown Dixielanders, perhaps because he could set aside any hit of rivalry. The material is absolutely predictable, the playing mostly boisterous; Bill stands his ground stolidy and fires off solos the way a slightly drunk guy tells jokes at a still-to-warm-up party.

 Sweet And Lovely Storyville STCD 4060 Davison; strings. 8/76.

The sound of a man cheerfully spitting on an expensive, immaculately woven carpet. The strings sound blissful, notwithstanding. This, indeed, is jazz.

(*) Together Again! Storyville STCD 8216 Davison; Ole 'Fessor' Lindgreen (tb); Jesper Thilo (cl, ss, ts); Ralph Sutton (p); Lars Blach (g); Hugo Rasmussen (b); Svend Erik Nørregaard (d). 5/77.

This was something of a disappointment: Bill sounds out of sorts, the material is too sloppy for his tastes and Sutton is poorly recorded. Still, a few good blasts in the locker and four alternative takes as a bonus.

 Solo Flight Jazzology JCD 114 Davison; Paul Sealey, Denny Wright (g); Harvey Weston (b). 10/81.

In London. The group makes so much reverberant noise that Davison sometimes struggles to make himself heard. It's worth the effort, though, since despite some fluffs he battles on with the kind of fierce licks that, rasp by rasp, made up an unrepeatable jazz persona.

 Coalition Jazzology JCD 221 Davison; Campbell Burnal (tb); Dave Bailey (cl); Art Hodes (p); Keith Donald (b); John Peters (d). 5/89.

Very near the end of his life, Bill sounds small-voiced and short of breath but indomitable as ever. 'Oh, Lady Be Good', 'When It's Sleepy Time Down South' and 'Hindustan' are all nicely extended, with Hodes pounding away like a youngster; he was a year older than Bill, but had perhaps better legs and kept playing a bit longer.

Also, in brief:

(*) Rompin' And Stompin' Jazzology JCD 14. 10/64.
Hired-gun session with Detroit Dixielanders.

 Fidgety Feet Jazzology JCD231. c.66.
Another attractive encounter with the Welsh band.

(*) Jazz On A Saturday Afternoon: Volumes 1 & 2 Jazzology JCD 37 / 38. 6/70.
Not very exciting; an Atlanta group provides backing.

 Lady Of The Evening Jazzology JCD 143. 65–81.
Hodge-podge of one 1971 session and out-takes from other dates over a 15-year period.

(*) With Fessor's Big City Jazz Band Storyville STCD 5525. 12/73–12/78.
With Ole 'Fessor' Lindgreen (tb) and on some tracks Ralph Sutton (p), but mostly very ordinary.

Ernest Dawkins (born 1953)

ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES

A member of AACM, Dawkins was a childhood neighbour of Anthony Braxton and shares aspects of his multi-instrumentalism. Dawkins's New Horizons Ensemble follows a path between post-bop and free music.

 South Side Street Songs Silkheart 132 Dawkins; Ameen A. C. Muhammad (t); Steve Berry (tb); Jeff Parker (g); Yosef Ben Israel (b); Avreeayl Ra (d). 5/94.

 Chicago Now – Thirty Years Of Great Black Music Silkheart 140 As above, except omit Ra; add Reggie Nicholson (d). 97.

 Jo'burg Jump Delmark DG 524 As for South Side Street Songs. 97.

* Cape Town Shuffle Delmark DG 545 As above, except add Khari B (v). 8/02.

The influence of the Art Ensemble of Chicago weighs heavily on the first of Dawkins's New Horizons Ensemble records. There are two tributes to bassist Malachi Favors, but the most arresting moment is the long opening track, 'Whence To Whither', which gets the album off to a start that promises without ever quite delivering. 'Just Is Me' lacks fire and coherence and the record peters out prematurely.

The second album is also patchy, but the addition of Nicholson adds to the overall mix and Dawkins himself seems more contained. The group's basic schooling in the blues comes out on 'Improvisation No. 2', but here and there Dawkins's imperfect pitching and articulation become an issue.

The longer cuts on Jo'burg Jump, 'The Gist of It', 'Shorter Suite' and the title-track, are the most successful representation of the Ensemble's increasingly confident balance of freedom and structure. 'Transcension' may well be intended as a reference to

John Coltrane, but it benefits from a further generation of radical ideas.

The African connection is even more evident on Cape Town Shuffle, a live recording taped at Hothouse. It kicks off in strident vein with a powerful tenor solo from Dawkins over an intriguing Senegalese rhythm known as 'wango'. 'Third Line And The Cape Town Shuffle' is a joyous, defiant processional that might have come from the pen of Abdullah Ibrahim. Ernest then pays tribute to another source figure, the Eric Dolphy of Mingus band days, in a piece called 'Dolphy And The Monk Dance'. The saxophonist's hand-over to Muhammad is (literally) breathtaking, as exciting a passage as this group has ever delivered. The only quibble is directed at Khari B's drab rap on 'Jazz To Hip Hop'.

 Mean Ameen /  The Messenger Delmark DE559 / DE570 Dawkins; Maurice Brown (t); Steve Berry (tb); Darius Savage (b); Isaiah Spencer (d). 4/04; 7/05.

Ameen Muhammad was only 48 when he died in 2003. One feels the loss here, not so much because there's a mourning cadence to the 2004 album, but because the trumpeter's replacement lacks his raw energy and ability to work inside and out with equal aplomb. It's mostly upbeat, rambunctious stuff with lots of cheering and go-man-go shouts, but the ballad 'Jeff To The Left', written by occasional member guitarist Jeff Parker, is delicious and 'Buster And The Search For The Human Genome' starts with similar gentleness. 'Haiti' is the high-spot, a potted cultural and musical history that leans heavily on Spencer. If the album's not quite up to previous offerings, the cover portrait of the missing Muhammad goes some way to explaining why.

The Messenger was taped live at the Velvet Lounge. It's dominated by 'Mean Ameen', the title-track and Muhammad's 'Lookin' For Ninny', which serves as a coda and as a reminder of how much the departed trumpeter meant to Dawkins and the Ensemble. Like some Art Ensemble records, the impression is of cheerful mayhem, interspersed with enigmatic ideas. This, though, is very much an individual's group rather than a strict collective. 'Toucouleur' is a fine context for Dawkins's wailing sound, but the backgrounds are indistinct and often uncommunicative.

Charene Dawn

VOICE

Originally from Chicago, and a rising star.

 Dark Angel Sirocco Jazz 1020 Dawn; Bob Berg (ss, ts); Grégoire Maret (hca); Henry Hey (p); Paul Bollenback (g); Joe Locke (vib); Avishai Cohen (b); Billy Kilson (d). 10/02.

Starting with a Minnie Riperton song doesn't rule her out of the jazz browsers any more, not least because she finishes with 'Goodbye, Pork Pie Hat' and drops in 'Smile' and 'All Or Nothing At All' along the way. Her voice is brooding and slightly sombre, but there's a strong element of Abbey Lincoln in the delivery and it's this that gives even the most unpromising of these songs (Phoebe Snow, for instance) real weight and danger. The late Bob Berg turns in some excellent solos, playing with real fire and certainly not holding back just because it's a singer's date. Maret shows up for a nice spot on 'Love Is'.

Terry Day

VARIOUS INSTRUMENTS

Veteran of the People Band and Alterations and an undersung hero of the British improvisation scene.

 Interruptions Emanem 4125 Day; Davey Payne (ts); Peter Cusack (g). 78–81.

(*) 2006 Duos Emanem 4137 Day; John Russell (g); Rhodri Davies (hp); Charlotte Hug (vla, v); Hannah Marshall (clo); Phil Minton (v). 4–9/06.

A delightful imp of the perverse, Day plays saxophones, flutes, cello, pipes, percussion, and a Waivisz crackle box on the early set of improvisations gathered as Interruptions. Payne and Cusack only appear on two tracks, so the vast bulk of material here is solo or overdubbed. What is striking is how rich the recordings sound, even when the sound quality is less than wonderful. Ill-health curtailed Day's activities in the '80s, which was a sad loss to a scene that badly needed colour and light to temper the (self-)seriousness of much British improv. Consequently, it was great to see him return to duties in 2006 with a set of briskly unidiomatic duos that major on his bamboo pipes-playing and on new and older improvising relationships. The album doesn't hang together any better than the previous one, but the sound is unique and lovely, and a warm welcome back to action.

Johnny De Droit (1892–1986)

CORNET

One of the few local New Orleans musicians who managed to get on record in the '20s.

 Johnny De Droit And The New Orleans Jazz Orchestra / The Arcadian Serenaders Retrieval RTR 79029 De Droit; Sterling Bose, Wingy Manone (c); Russ Papalia, Avery Loposer, Ellis Stratakos (tb); Rudolph Levy (as); Eddie Powers (ts); Henry Raymond (cl); Cliff Holman (cl, as); Frank Cuny, Johnny Riddick, Frank Froeba (p); George Potter, Slim Leftwich, Bob Marvin (bj); Paul De Droit, Felix Guarino (d). 3/24–10/25.

Retrieval have done their usual exemplary job in restoring these rare sides, cut by a team from the General Phonograph Corporation on a field visit. De Droit was clearly the star player of a decent local outfit, dominating a driving performance of 'The Swing' and playing muted horn in the Oliver fashion for most of the time. Levy's alto is a circus novelty. The remaining material is given over to 14 titles by the Original Crescent City Jazzers, renamed after their residency at the Arcadia Ballroom in St Louis. Bose takes the main honours, though Manone spells him for four titles. The later tracks are less wild, as if St Louis had tamed them somewhat. Fascinating history.

Wilbur De Paris (1900–73)

TROMBONE, VALVE TROMBONE

He worked for Armstrong and Ellington, but led bands from the mid-'40s.

 Marchin' And Swingin' / At Symphony Hall Collectables COL-CD-6600 2CD De Paris; Sidney De Paris (c, v); Omer Simeon (cl); Don Kirkpatrick, Sonny White (p); Eddie Gibbs, Lee Blair (bj); Bennie Moten, Harold Jackson (b); Wilbert Kirk (d, hca); Freddie Moore (d). 9/52–10/56.

(*) Uproarious Twenties In Dixieland / Rampart Street Ramblers / New New Orleans Jazz Collectables COL-CD-6614 2CD As above, except add Doc Cheatham (t); George Foster (d). 9/52–4/55.

 New Orleans Blues / Plays Cole Porter Collectables COL-CD-6400 As above, except omit Foster, Kirkpatrick, Gibbs, Jackson, Moore; add Shep Shepard (bj); Hayes Alvis (b); Jimmy Witherspoon (v). 57–58.

(*) Plays Something Old New Gay Blue / That's A Plenty Collectables COL-CD-6601 As above, except omit Shepard, Moten, Witherspoon; add John Smith (g). 58–59.

(*) The Wild Jazz Age / On The Riviera Collectables COL-CD-6602 As above, except omit Simeon; add Garvin Bushell (cl, bsn, picc); Louis Bacon (v). 60.

 Over And Over Again / World's Greatest Jazz Band Live At Roosevelt Grill Collectables COL-CD6622 2CD As above, except omit Bacon. 61.

De Paris ran a revival band with a difference. Since he and brother Sidney had been in the music first time around, and were not beholden to so-called New Orleans 'purism', he took an unusually free-spirited approach to what was basically revivalist repertoire. The music on these discs includes such ancient steeds as 'Hindustan', 'Colonel Bogey', 'In A Persian Market' and 'Twelfth Street Rag', but De Paris and his men took care to play them their way. There are numerous interesting touches and unexpected twists in the delivery. The front line is outstanding: Wilbur himself was no great shakes on either the slide or the valve trombone, but Sidney and Cheatham made up an impeccable brass one-two, Simeon was still in fine fettle, and Bushell, when he arrived in Simeon's place, also brought in bassoon and piccolo. The band was at Jimmy Ryan's in New York throughout the time they were making these records, so it was a tough and professional outfit. Atlantic gave them a clean studio mix, and although the rhythm playing is sometimes ordinary, they're never tired.

Their entire output is neatly set down across these six releases. Hard to pick the outstanding release, but perhaps the two best ones are The Wild Jazz Age/On The Riviera (the latter a live show from the 1960 Antibes Festival) and Plays Something Old New Gay Blue/That's A Plenty, which has some of the most enterprising material. The Symphony Hall show is not quite so good, and the 'blues' set with guest Jimmy Witherspoon is a bit one-dimensional. Collectables present all the music in attractive packages and with full documentation.

Michel de Villers (born 1926)

ALTO AND BARITONE SAXOPHONES

A stalwart of the Paris scene, he played with Django after the war and was a competent collaborator for hosts of visiting Americans – Buck Clayton, Bill Coleman, Lucky Thompson – as well as his countrymen. Dropped out of music for a time but was playing again in the '80s.

 Danse À Saint-Germain-des-Prés Emarcy 9842049 de Villers; Ivan Jullien (t); Claude Gousset (tb); Gerard Badini (ts, cl); Claude Bolling (p); Michel Gaudry (b). 58, 3/61.

 Line For Lions RDC 40026 de Villers; Roger Guerin (t); Maurice Meunier (cl); André Persiani (p); André Condouant (g); Pierre Michelot, Luigi Trussardi (b); Christian Garros, Roger Paraboschi (d). 84.

De Villers started out playing mostly alto (and some clarinet) but later on moved to baritone. He's arguably more distinctive on the latter, but his free approach to rhythm – and sometimes harmony as well – is very distinctive. Somehow it all seems to make sense in the end. De Villers had the ability to wander off but still appear back on the right beat and chord when it counted. Some of the earlier stuff on the Jazz In Paris set is original, including the curiously named 'Veal Isn't Good For Leony' and the lovely 'Symphonie D'Un Soir', but titles like 'Fumée Aux Yeux' won't fool anyone, even if the changes are varied, and 'Topsy' is a staple. Nice recording, and the whole project was co-ordinated by Boris Vian, one of the great European spokesmen for jazz, so well worth sampling.

As for the later album, Mulligan fans can relax: 'Line For Lyons' is correctly spelt in the body of the record. It's a brisk, relaxed session, with long, free-blowing versions of 'Bags' Groove', a great opener, and the Mulligan tune. A flurry of originals (from Meunier, Condouant, Michelot and Guerin) towards the end of the date, but for the most part an eclectic mix of standard fare, including a great version of Franz Lehár's romantic 'Dein ist mein ganzes Herz'.

Elton Dean (1945–2006)

ALTO SAXOPHONE, SAXELLO

Began with blues bands and then with Soft Machine, 1968–72, since when he has led various bands of his own and had particular associations with pianists Keith Tippett and Howard Riley. A great inside-to-outside player with a passionate sound.

 Just Us Cuneiform RUNE 103 Dean; Marc Charig (c); Nick Evans (tb); Mike Ratledge (p, org); Roy Babbington, Jeff Green, Neville Whitehead (b); Phil Howard, Louis Moholo (d). 71, 72.

He gifted his name to early blues associate Elton John and took his inspiration from the saxophone heavyweights like Trane and Joe Henderson. Along the way, assisted by a vintage King saxello, a sort of curvy soprano, he has created a sound all his own, tight-toned and highly expressive.

Revived by the splendid Cuneiform, the debut album was recorded while Dean was still with Soft Machine, and made largely with fellow Softs. 'Ooglenovastrome' recalls bop nonsense like 'Klactoveesedstene' and the track, running at more than 15 minutes, comes across like fierce post-bop. The washes of electric piano are reminiscent of Miles's contemporary electric experiments, and there is a hint of new fusion in pieces like 'Neo-Caliban Grides' and 'Part: The Last'. Charig's cornet clinches the lineage.

 Ninesense – Live At The BBC Hux 046 Dean; Harry Beckett, Marc Charig, Mongezi Feza (t); Nick Evans, Radu Malfatti, Paul Neiman (tb); Alan Skidmore (ss, ts); Keith Tippett (p); Harry Miller (b); Louis Moholo (d). 5/75, 3/78.

Tapes from the BBC's flagship Jazz In Britain. This valuable and intermittently exciting release catches the group at the beginning of its career, with the ill-fated Feza in the line-up, and at the end, when Beckett had replaced Mongs (who died later in 1975) and Evans was in for Neiman. The format is self-explanatory, three pairs of horns and a rhythm section dominated by Tippett's romantic piano and Moholo's committed drumming. The music ranges from edgy bop to more romantic charts like 'Sweet Francesca'. Feza is the star of the opening 'Dance', which shows how swinging and funky an outfit this was in its early days. The first Ninesense album was still some time off but the May 1975 session gels wonderfully.

The later session is dominated by the extraordinary 'Nicra', for the trombonists (the title was used for their own group project). 'Seven For Me' is Dean's own best spot, though Beckett runs him close, as does the late Harry Miller, whose bass-playing is richly rhythmic. These will be nostalgic sounds for anyone who loves British jazz of the period.

(*) The Vortex Tapes Slam CD 203 Dean; Nick Evans (tb); Simon Picard, Jerry Underwood, Trevor Watts (sax); Howard Riley, Keith Tippett (p); Marcio Mattos, Paul Rogers (b); Tony Levin, Louis Moholo, Nigel Morris, Mark Sanders (d). 9/90.
 All The Tradition Slam 201 Dean; Howard Riley (p); Paul Rogers (b); Mark Sanders (d). 90.

The Vortex sessions come from a short season of improvisational encounters at the north London club and they're distinguished for bringing together younger and less well-documented players with veterans like Tippett, Moholo, Rogers and Riley. They are the real stars, not to diminish the achievement of the less-experienced men. Dean often programmed repertory material and there's an excellent version of Trane's 'Crescent' here. More unexpectedly, he takes a group of free-jazz players through the changes of 'Darn That Dream' and rounds out the set with 'I Remember Clifford'. His own playing is lyrical and strong, while Riley, effectively co-leader, is quietly magisterial. Rogers makes the bass sing and Sanders plays with great, if sometimes wilful, invention.

(*) Silent Knowledge Cuneiform RUNE 83 Dean; Paul Dunmall (ts); Sofia Domancich (p); Paul Rogers (b); Tony Levin (d). 6/95.

The personnel has a familiar and unfamiliar cast, with most of the members of Mujician present, but with Keith Tippett represented by the superficially very similar Domancich, who has a rich, romantic sound. As nominal leader, Dean very often leads off ideas; he seems less comfortable with complete freedom than these other players and one suspects the pianist relishes structure, too. 'Gualchos' has Elton in full Trane mode, but his ballad solo on 'First In The Wagon' is an unexpected delight.

* Rumours Of An Incident Slam SLAMCD 223 Dean; Roswell Rudd (tb); Alex Maguire (p); Marcio Mattos (b); Mark Sanders (d). 10/96.
 Bladik Cuneiform RUNE 92 Dean; Roswell Rudd (tb); Paul Dunmall (ts); Keith Tippett (p); Paul Rogers (b); Tony Levin (d). 10/96.

Dean had met the great Roswell Rudd almost 20 years before in Carla Bley's touring band and had maintained some contact since, even though Rudd was no longer working very regularly. These encounters were recorded, two days apart, during Rudd's trip to London in the autumn of 1996. Two very different-sounding bands, and if we give the nod to the live Slam session, it's simply because the less-familiar rhythm section has a fascination all its own. Maguire and Mattos establish an immediate rapport, and drummer Sanders is in magnificent form. The disc documents the beginning of the first set (nothing tentative there) and the end of the last, by which time things are beginning to unravel a little.

It's a shame Dean sounds so much less assured two days later for the studio session. The middle track of three, of dramatically increasing length, is called 'Too Suchmuchness', and it's tempting to say that this is exactly the problem with the set. There a certain marking of time and the constituent elements don't entirely cohere.

* Newsense Slam CD 229 Dean; Jim Dvorak (t); Roswell Rudd, Paul Rutherford, Annie Whitehead (tb); Alex Maguire (p); Marcio Mattos (clo); Roberto Bellatalla (b); Mark Sanders (d). 11/97.

The title also refers back to Dean's superb '70s group Ninesense. The new outfit is further fruit of Dean's association with Roswell Rudd. The brass are excellent, with American-born Dvorak more than holding his own against the trombones. The paired bass and cello is very effective with Mattos's wailing, mystical sound pushed well to the fore. He and Dean are the two most provocative and moving voices in the ensemble. Dean has rarely sounded as exuberant and joyous, and the improvised 'Snap, Crackle And Pop' with Rudd and Whitehead is a delight from start to finish.

* Into The Nierika Slam 201 Dean; Roberto Bellatalla (b); Mark Sanders (d). 98.

Dean in full cry on a free date. The trio setting is an ideal context for the saxophonist, who develops intriguingly folkish ideas (reminiscent of early Amalgam themes) over three long tracks. The opening 'Following Through' is spell-binding, reflecting the visionary quality hinted at in the title; 'Nierika' appears to refer to some kind of wormhole between ordinary and heightened reality. The saxello gives the music a mysterious and evanescent quality, which Bellatalla and Sanders both reflect.

 QED Blueprint 274 Dean; Jim Dvorak (t); Paul Dunmall, Simon Picard, Jason Yarde (ts); Alex Maguire (org); Roberto Bellatalla, Paul Rogers (b); Tony Bianco, Mark Sanders (d). 1/00.
 Moorsong Cuneiform 143 Dean; Alex Maguire (org); Mark Hewins (g); Fred T. Baker (b); Liam Genockey, Mark Sanders (d). 01.

These records present Dean in a number of working contexts, more and less successful. QED introduces fine pianist Maguire on Hammond organ. Teamed with free-jazz drummer Bianco on 'Hammond X', the trio makes a stirring and evocative sound. The influence seems to be American, but the off-kilter rhythms and lyrical passages unmistakably suggest a British group and Dean's use of electric piano will recall his time with Soft Machine. The same trio closes out the record with a less-successful piece, 'New Roads'.

Maguire is also on hand for a drummerless trio with bassist Bellatalla, but Roberto is upstaged by Paul Rogers in his 'Sheepdogs' duet with Elton, brief but highly effective. Dunmall, Picard and Yarde join the leader on an iffy saxophone quartet and there is a fine, if somewhat predictable, quintet with Dvorak and Evans. An agreeable album but packed with tracks that suggest either dead ends, like the all-saxophone group, or else directions that need deeper exploration, as in the duet with Rogers.

Moorsong is an equally bitty but interesting album that features three separate groups. The quartet with Baker, Genockey and the formidable Maguire (on organ again) is the most compelling. 'Bedrock Ruse' and 'Baker's Treat' (the latter a feature for Fred T.) are unexpectedly funky and might remind some listeners of Trevor Watts's later, more rhythmic projects, except that the Hammond sound consistently conjures up American comparisons. Certainly don't expect anyone not attuned to Dean's alto and saxello sound to pick up the provenance straight away.

The other effective group is a collaboration with guitarist Hewins, a regular Dean colleague, and drummer Sanders, who plays kettle drums at the climax of 'Soldering On', a chillingly beautiful sound.

 The Unbelievable Truth MoonJune 9 Dean; Jean-Paul Estievenart (t); Fred Delplancq (ts); Michel Delville (g); Damien Polard (b); Laurent Delchambre (d). 10/05.

Dean was already presumably in poor health when he played this gig in Paris with members of The Wrong Object. There's no sign of failing powers. His playing on the opening ‘Seven For Lee’ (there are two more Dean compositions, three by Delville and one meaningless group thrash) and his distinctive alto and saxello sound is still robust. There are indications that a couple of later tunes might have been cut short, including the closing ‘Basho Variations’, but that might be down to festival scheduling rather than fatigue. Delville’s themes aren’t much, and so in love with concepts like ‘Cunnimingus Redux’ that the basics aren’t attended to; but Dean sails through it, somewhat elder-statesmanlike.

Also, in brief:

 El Skid Voiceprint 230. 77.
Co-led by fellow saxophonist Alan Skidmore, but Dean’s two compositions dominate the record. Where Skidmore seems to want to blow fiercely, Dean takes time and space to make the whole group sing.

 Unlimited Saxophone Company Ogun OGCD 002. 89.
With Trevor Watts, Paul Dunmall and Simon Picard (sax), plus Paul Rogers (b) and Tony Levin (d). Less than the sum of the parts.

() Bar Torque Moonjune 101. 01.
Three long duos with guitarist Mark Hewins recorded at the Jazz Café in London but a bit of a slog on record.

() Sea Of Infinity Hux 50. 04.
With Mark Hewins (g) and others again, but without the storytelling drama Dean can usually bring to a session.

(*) Avant Hux 63. 4/04.
Richly textured duo improvisations with Sophia Domancich (p), who works a good deal inside the sound-box, but to great effect.

Kevin Dean (born 1954)

TRUMPET

Vigorous hard-bopper, who’s professor of jazz studies at McGill University in Canada.

 Kevin’s Heaven Double-Time DTRCD 103 Dean; Hank Marr (org); Jeff Clayton (g); Jim Rupp (d). 6/95.
Heaven features a relatively unusual instrumentation, but the thoughtful Dean makes the most of it, leading a wonderful long improvisation on ‘Ill Wind’, deconstructing ‘You Are My Sunshine’ to an almost unconscionable degree and subtly introducing his own lovely ‘Retournez S. V. P.’ in the middle of the set. Cleverly conceived and executed, with sterling support from all hands.

 Venous Lake Gemini GMCD 096 Dean; Louis Stewart (g); Neil Swainson (b). 96.
An elegantly conceived and executed set that brings together three of the most sophisticated mainstream players around. Dean’s more lyrical side is engaged here, and with Stewart and Swainson creating rich and shifting harmonic environment he’s able to shape some impressively intelligent solos as well as lending support to a unique trio sound.

Also, in brief:

 You’ll Always Need Friends Gemini GMCD 094. 96.
Project led by Dean and dedicated to the music of Norwegian saxophonist Alf Kjellman.

Blossom Dearie (born 1926)

VOICE

Grew up in the Catskills, and moved to NY as a vocalist/pianist, but made her break in Paris, where she was spotted by Norman Granz. A great, if low-key, trouper.

 Blossom Dearie /  Give Him The Ooh-La-La Verve 827743 / 51767 Dearie; Herb Ellis (g); Ray Brown (b); Jo Jones (d). 9/56, 4/59; 9/57.
The debut for Norman Granz’s label isn’t a splashy showcase but a subtly nuanced jazz vocal album that puts Blossom’s fine piano-playing squarely in the spotlight. The voice won’t appeal to everyone, but we’ve always questioned the ‘little girl’ label. It’s not a big instrument, for sure, but it has unquestionable authority from ‘’Deed I Do’ onward, and the French songs she picked up while in Paris give it an intriguingly different context, ‘Tout Doucement’ in particular. The reissue includes three later recordings, including a bouncy ‘Johnny One Note’. Three separate takes of ‘Give Him The Ooh-La-La’ on the CD reissue of the second disc might seem like overkill and the listener certainly needs to work a bit to appreciate the differences, but it’s another thoroughly enjoyable date with an elegant group.

(*) Once Upon A Summertime Verve 827757 Dearie; Mundell Lowe (g); Ray Brown (b); Ed Thigpen (d). 9/58.
This is even more low-key than the first record, but the subtlety of Dearie’s delivery on the tiny ‘Down With Love’ should be enough to convert all but the most tin-eared to her virtues. Again, the songs are short with no obvious improvisational sophistication. It’s all in the telling of these coolly romantic tales. ‘Teach Me Tonight’ and the closing ‘Love Is Here To Stay’ are the other outstanding cuts.

(*) My Gentleman Friend Verve 519905 Dearie; Kenny Burrell (g); Ray Brown (b); Ed Thigpen (d). 5/59.
Often regarded as a low point in her Verve discography, this one scores high with us precisely because the material is less familiar than on some others. Opening with ‘Little Jazz Bird’ was a perfect coup and the French songs, always part of her repertory, occupy a larger than usual place on this one, with ‘Chez Moi’ and ‘Boum’ given particularly nice readings. The closing version of ‘Someone To Watch Over Me’ is a rare extended performance of this period.

(*) May I Come In? Capitol 95449 Dearie; unidentified orchestra. 2/64.
A completely beguiling sound, with every song on the set despatched in double-quick time. The supposedly ‘small’ voice is perfectly weighted against the orchestra, notably on things like ‘I Wish You Love’ and the title-song, in such a way that it actually has considerable presence and authority.

(*) Live In London: Volume 2 /  Blossom Time At Ronnie Scott’s Harkit 8066 / Verve Redial 627202 Dearie; Jeff Clyne (b); Johnny Butts (d). 2/66; 66.
 Live In London Harkit 8055 Dearie; Freddy Logan (b); Allan Ganley (d). 7/66.
Blossom came to live in London in the mid-’60s and they loved her. Beatlemania was making things tough for jazz singers, and she seemed to be the rearguard. Ronnie Scott’s became her home turf and the crowd there gave her the warmest welcomes of her career. The earliest of these three sets was issued last, only rediscovered quite recently. It’s probably the best of the bunch, with Clyne and Butts providing a relaxed but testing accompaniment to some interesting material, including ‘When The World

Was Young' and 'Mad About The Boy', which became a bit arch and knowing as it settled into the regular routine. The other versions of these aren't nearly as good. She doesn't always manage the transition between comic and more expressive songs very well and the interaction with the crowd, fun as it is, probably doesn't help. There would be no reason for anyone other than a serious or well-heeled fan (which would include Michael Parkinson) to want all of these. (There's also a useful 15-minute interview between Blossom and Les Tomkins at the end of Volume 2, which adds to its value.)

 Winchester In Apple Blossom Time Mastermix 8 / Vivid Sound 6234 Dearie (p, v solo). 79.
Apart from the title-track, which opens the record, and the elegiac 'Summer Is Gone', this isn't quite as gently bucolic and sunlit as it might seem. 'The Jazz Musician' and 'Love Is An Elusive Celebration' hint at other agenda and, unsupported by other instruments, the voice sounds pleasingly wayward and fey. An album to get lost in, though expect some sombre moments, too.

(*) Tweedledum & Tweedledee Mastermix 101 Dearie; Mike Renzi (p, ky, arr); Tom Spahn (syn); Jay Berliner (g); Jay Leonhart (b); Brian Brake (d); Grady Tate (d, v); Walter Anastacio (perc). 91.
Whatever the shortcomings of Russell Garcia's orchestrations, back in the Verve days, they were preferable to Renzi's tinny electronic arrangements. There are lovely things here, at least one of them courtesy of the urbane Grady Tate, but it's not an appealing record for any but settled Dearie fans. Like its predecessor, originally released on her Daffodil imprint.

Also, in brief:

 Sings Comden And Green Verve 589102. 4/59.
A typical Verve 'songbook' project, this only comes alive when Kenny Burrell (g) comes in for some of the later songs.

 Sings Broadway Hit Songs Verve 268702. 2/60.
She's cast as a 'soubrette' for this and hampered by some overweight Russell Garcia arrangements.

 Verve Jazz Masters 51 Verve 529906. 9/56–2/60.
No surprises and a useful catch-up if you don't want the individual CDs.

 Blossom's Planet Master Mix 121. 89.
An elegant latter-day set, with superior versions of 'Bluesette', 'The Ladies Who Lunch' and Jobim's 'Wave'.

(*) Blossom's Own Treasures Master Mix 001 2CD. 73, 90s.
A valuable compilation of her own compositions and collaborations.

(*) Diva Verve 065334. 9/56–3/66.
A splendid introduction, with most of the classic performances. Horrible cover.

John D'earth (born 1950)

TRUMPET

A New Englander, who's featured in some interesting groups but had few occasions to record on his own account.

 Restoration Comedy Double Time DTCD 176 D'earth; Jerry Bergonzi (ts); Mulgrew Miller (p); Mike Richmond (b); Howard Curtis (d). 5/00.
He must have heard this before and groaned every time, but there's no dearth of ideas from this intriguing stylist, who really ought to be more widely exposed. There's a hint of the blues in the title-tune, and the penultimate track, coming immediately before 'Punch Line', is a bop-based vehicle that smacks of one of Charlie Parker's obscurer themes. D'earth and his fine group sustain a difficult-to-swing metre all the way through 'Ooboo Way' and pare back the detail for 'Everyday Tune', which gets the section working hard. 'There Will Never Be Another You' is the only standard, unfussy, strong and somehow stoical. A terrific record from an artist deserving recognition.

Santi Debriano

DOUBLE BASS

Of Panamanian extraction, the son of pianist Alphonso Debriano, he is a first-call bassist on the NY scene with a vividly melodic style.

 Soldiers of Fortune Evidence ECD 22172 Debriano; John Purcell (reeds); Kenny Werner (p); Joe Locke (vib); David Fiuczynski (g); Ronnie Burrage (d). 7/89.
Originally released on Freelance in France, Debriano's debut as leader is a bold mix of contemporary jazz with more fusion-oriented things that push him into Stanley Clarke territory without any of Stan's more foolish grandstanding. It's a beautifully balanced record with a nice internal logic that makes it seem entirely of a piece even though the idiom does shift from track to track.

* Panamaniacs Evidence ECD 22195 Debriano; David Sanchez (ts); David Kikoski (p); Tommy Campbell (d); Mino Cinelu (perc). 4/93.
This knocks most 'Latin jazz' into a cocked hat. Debriano has an insider's knowledge of a whole spectrum of Central and South American styles and rhythms and he deploys them here with typical aplomb. Sanchez is the ideal sparring partner, but it's Tommy Campbell's loose-wristed attack that impresses on every track. 'Broken Wing' was apparently written for the maestro Astor Piazzolla. It's certainly worthy of the great man.

 Circlechant High Note HCD 7016 Debriano; Miri Ben-Ari (vn); Helio Alves (p); Horacio 'El Negro' Hernandez (d); Waltinho Anastácio (perc). 3/98.
This gets better with every hearing. The presence of Ben-Ari makes sure that the music never sounds secure in any stylistic pigeonhole. The violinist has a unique delivery that should be exploited more often, and when Debriano is juxtaposing Prince's 'Kiss' alongside Duke Pearson's 'Is That So?' alongside 'Isfahan' and some excellent originals, the level of interest remains consistently high. Very different to its predecessors, this inaugurated an important project for Debriano.

 Artistic Licence Savant 2037 As above, except add Abraham Burton (ts), Helio Alves (p). 11/00.
Another fine record from Debriano who seems unable to put a foot wrong on his own dates. The interplay between Ben-Ari and the others is highly impressive, particularly given the unfamiliarity of his instrument and his particular sound in this context. Debriano remains the man to watch.

The Dedication Orchestra

GROUP

In the spirit of the original Blue Notes from South Africa.

(*) Spirits Rejoice Ogun OGCD 101 Guy Barker, Harry Beckett, Kenny Wheeler (t); Claude Deppa, Jim Dvorak (t, v); Dave Amis, Malcolm Griffiths, Radu Malfatti, Paul Rutherford (tb); Dave Powell (tba); Django Bates (eng hn); Neil Metcalfe (f); Lol Coxhill (ss, ts); Ray Warleigh (as, f); Elton Dean (as); Evan Parker, Alan Skidmore (ts); Chris Biscoe (bs); Keith Tippett (p); Paul Rogers (b); Louis Moholo (d, v). 1/92.

 Ixesha (Time) Ogun OGCD 102/103 2CD Similar to above, except omit Barker, Malfatti, Bates, Warleigh, Skidmore; add Ian Hamer, Pat Higgs, Henry Lowther (t); Mark Charig (c, thn); Roland Bates (tb); Andy Grappy (tba); Mike Williams (as); Sean Bergin (ts, as). 1/94.

On New Year's Day 1992, a stellar orchestra piled into the 100 Club in London to commemorate the achievement of the legendary Blue Notes and to launch the Spirits Rejoice Trust, a fund to help develop and support young talent in South Africa. Two days later, the orchestra reconvened in a London studio and recorded a set every bit as beautiful and scorching as the club version. Arrangements were by Keith Tippett (a lovely job of Harry Miller's 'Dancing Demon'), Kenny Wheeler (Dudu Pukwana's 'B My Dear'), Eddie Parker, John Warren, Jim Dvorak, Django Bates and Radu Malfatti. Outstanding among the soloists were Beckett on Pukwana's 'Hug Pine', Dvorak on his arrangement of Mongezi Feza's 'Sonia' and Evan Parker and Tippett on Chris McGregor's 'Andromeda'. Beautiful crisp sound, courtesy of Steve Beresford and Evan Parker, on a record that marries nostalgia with future hope.

Two years later, a slightly different orchestra reconvened in the same spirit. Nothing quite on a par with the original, but Johnny Dyani's 'Wish You Sunshine' and McGregor's 'The Serpent's Kindly Eye' (arranged by Alex Maguire and John Warren respectively) are excellent. The only quibble relates to the soloing, which has a Buggins's turn feel to it. The best of them are terrific, of course, but this is a long record and needed a more relaxed approach.

Barrett Deems (1914–98)

DRUMS

Best known for playing with Louis Armstrong's All-Stars and subsequently with Jack Teagarden. These weren't his natural turf, though.

 Deemus Delmark DE492 Deems; Chuck Hedges (cl); Steve Behr (p); Don DeMichael (vib); Bob Roberts, John Defauw (g); Wilson McKindra (b). 4/78.

A fine, swinging set from Deems's band, though the highlights are almost all thanks to Hedges, who is in terrific form on most of these cuts. It's a busy mix, with piano, vibes, lead and rhythm guitar, and Barrett's busy kit-work – always reminiscent of Buddy Rich and the root of a manufactured reputation as the 'world's fastest drummer' – but the recording is clear and spacious so the components all make sense. 'Get Happy' is the ideal sign-off.

 How'd You Like It So Far? Delmark DE472 Deems; John Bailey, Peter Elliman, Brad Goode, Michael McLaughlin, Chuck Parrish (t); Lorin Binford, Audrey Morrison, Scott Roberts (tb); Craig Kaucher (btb); Rich Corpolongo, Jane Johnson (as, f); Barry Winograd (bs); Mike Levin, Tim McNamara (reeds); Duane Thamm (vib); Robert Curtis (g); Wilson McKindra (b). 3/94.

 Groovin' Hard Lydia 505 Deems; John Chudoba, Pete Ellman, Manny Lopez, Chuck Parrish (t); Lorin Binford, Tim Coffman, Craig Kaucher, Audrey Morrison (tb); Andy Farber, Jane Johnson (as); Frank Catalano, Brian Watson (ts); Brian Patti (bs); Rob Curtis (g); Geoffrey Lowe (b); Eddie Harrison (v). 1/98.

Deems was 80 when the first of these tight, hard-driving big-band sets was recorded, 85 when his final disc was cut. What can you say? At an age when most guys are forgetting to zip themselves up, he sounds as tight and alert as ever. The first one's a curious beast, exciting but without much personality, probably too disciplined and well-organized to be truly effective. There's not much sense of the soloists, who get very little space indeed, and it all tends to fly by. Krupa's 'Drum Boogie' is an obvious spot for the leader, though ironically it's 'Speak Low' and 'Time After Time' that bring out the wily best in him. Groovin' Hard somewhat confirms that impression, though one feels the band do get a more prominent role here, individually, and Deems himself isn't quite as securely in charge of the engine room as before. But who'd be surprised about that? This was released posthumously; Barrett passed away in September 1998.

Deep Blue Organ Trio

GROUP

Three Chicagoans who made a go of it backing visiting stars as well as on their own account.

(*) Deep Blue Bruise /  Goin' To Town: Live At The Green Mill /  Folk Music Delmark DE556 CD/DVD / Origin 82489 Chris Foreman (org); Bobby Broom (g); Greg Rockingham (d). 4/04; 5/05; 5/07.

This is a clever concept, an old-fashioned organ trio that does what the old-fashioned trios did and keep up with modern pop sounds. Which is why you find Prince's 'Raspberry Beret' on the first record, alongside the Doors' 'Light My Fire' and a few venerable standards, including 'Willow, Weep For Me' and 'Polka Dots And Moonbeams'. And just to show that it isn't all fake-book stuff, the title-track is a Broom original. All three play with straightforward commitment and for the group. There's not much room for grandstanding, though leader Foreman probably gets more than his share of space. Broom claims a credit on the live record as well, the unassuming 'No Hype Blues', which is about as factory-standard and workware as any of this music gets. The rest is jaunty and alert, and the long versions of 'Once I Loved' and 'The Way You Look Tonight' are both superb. '12th Of Never' is the pop theme. The recent one is probably the only slight disappointment of the three, but only because the concept is not so well established and because the mostly hard-bop programme – Lee Morgan, Vic Feldman, Hank Mobley, with just the Beatles' 'She's Leaving Home' standing in for 'contemporary' music – does sound a bit worn and shop-soiled, however vigorously they tackle these themes.

Joey DeFrancesco (born 1971)

ORGAN, PIANO, SYNTHESIZER, VOCAL

Son of a distinguished Hammond-player, he grew up in Philly and starred in the 1987 Thelonious Monk Contest.

 All In The Family High Note HCD 7021 DeFrancesco; Bootsie Barnes, Houston Person (ts); Papa John DeFrancesco (org); Melvin Sparks (g); Byron Landham (d). 8/97.

(*) Goodfellas Concord CCD 4845 DeFrancesco; Frank Vignola (g); Joe Ascione (d). 3/98.

 The Champ High Note HCD 7032 DeFrancesco; Randy Johnston (g); Billy Hart (d). 5/98.

Though he's a versatile fellow, organ is DeFrancesco's speciality; he uses a modified C-3. The albums tend to be cheerful, excitable affairs, entertaining enough, but hardly core-curriculum items. The meeting with his dad has its moments, but it's a very unkempt recording by Rudy Van Gelder's usual standards. The Champ benefits from Johnston's supercharged solos and Joey works up the appropriate heads of steam on a straightforward homage to Jimmy Smith. The most characterful of the three is Goodfellas, from its great cover photo inwards. It celebrates Italian-American pop with such pasta-sauce-stirrers as 'Volare', 'All The Way' and 'Fly Me To The Moon', as well as Monk's 'Evidence'. This is a good little band, three wise guys with a nice mix of boisterousness and sensitivity.

 Incredible! Concord CCD 4890 DeFrancesco; Jimmy Smith (org); Paul Bollenback, Phil Upchurch (g); Byron Landham, Frank Wilson (d). 10/99.

A meeting between Joey and Jimmy was inevitable, although the old maestro and the young one share the keyboard duties only on two medleys, with Joey on his own for the other four tracks. Smith gives the pretender a bit of a lesson on 'Yesterdays' (the intro is classic Jimmy) and 'The Reverend', which gets away from both of them a bit.

 Plays Sinatra His Way High Note HCD 7105 DeFrancesco; Houston Person (org); Melvin Sparks (g); Byron Landham (d). 8/98.

 The Philadelphia Connection: A Tribute To Don Patterson High Note HCD 7050 DeFrancesco; Paul Bollenback (g); Byron Landham (d). 8/98.

 Ballads And Blues Concord CCD 2108 DeFrancesco; Gary Bartz (as); Papa John DeFrancesco (org); Pat Martino, Paul Bollenback, John DeFrancesco (g); Byron Landham (d). 00.

Joey's High Note and Concord releases had to compete, though the Sinatra set lay on the shelves for five years before release, as did the Patterson tribute, perhaps because Joey had contractual issues. The band is a mismatch for a Sinatra project: Sparks is a blues player, and while Joey likes the high-stepping Frank, he's less happy with the balladeer, which in turn is more Houston's style. It's OK. As is the Philly disc. With just the trio, DeFrancesco relaxes a bit, and perhaps too much on the bouncier themes, allowing his very facility to trip him up.

Ballads And Blues sounds more like what the High Note band should have been doing. Joey keeps it in the family, but it's Bartz and Martino who supply the real muscle, and here and elsewhere there's a puzzling lack of individual touch; does he make too many records?

(*) Falling In Love Again Concord CCD 2160 DeFrancesco; Red Holloway, Ralph Moore (ts); Ron Eschete, Pat Martino, Kevin Eubanks (g); Jeff Hamilton, Byron Landham (d); Ramon Banda (perc); Joe Doggs (v). 5/02.

This one smacked a little of gimmickry, given that Doggs is actor Joe Pesci and that the label sent out early promos complete with dog biscuit to go with the bassett hound cover. Joe's a very decent singer, though, and there are class players on the strength. Martino's solo on 'All Or Nothing At All' is completely class, while Holloway does something remarkable on 'But Not For Me'. It still doesn't quite hang together as a record, but Joey plays with more heart here than on many recent discs.

 Legacy Concord CCD 2229 DeFrancesco; James Moody (ts); Jimmy Smith (org); Paul Bollenback (g); Tony Banda (b); Steve Ferrone (d); Ramon Banda, Joey de Leon (perc). 8/04.

Jimmy is still capable of knocking the youngster round the head, and though they find a bit more common ground on this one, it's very much the veteran's date, with Moody coming in on 'Jones'n For Elvin' and clinching it for the old guys. Joey's never had a better sound than on this one, which is beautifully recorded, with space round everything and no clutter in the percussion. 'Off The Top', 'St Thomas' and (unexpectedly) 'Corcovado (Quiet Nights)' are the picks.

* Organic Vibes Concord CCD 2306 DeFrancesco; Ron Blake, George Coleman (ts); Jake Langley (g); Bobby Hutcherson (vib); Byron Landham (d). 8/05.

And then suddenly the youngster doesn't sound like a flash kid any more but a genuinely mature stylist. To be fair, working with Hutcherson (magnificent on his own 'Little B's Poem') and the endlessly inventive Coleman is a plus in itself, but DeFrancesco sounds poised and thoughtful on the slower tunes here, and while his technique is as sure and impressive as ever, he's prepared to do more in the service of the tune. 'I Thought About You' is stunning and played out at appropriate length.

 Live: The Authorized Bootleg Concord CCD 30123 DeFrancesco; George Coleman (ts); Jake Langley (g); Byron Landham (d); Colleen McNab (v). 06.

The 'authorized bootleg' thing is another pretty meaningless stunt. This may have been taken off the desk, but so are dozens of club dates. This was taped at Yoshi's in Oakland, and if it shows off Joey's skills with the regular group it also shows off the mastery of big George, who enters with a stunning interpretation of 'Cherokee' and keeps the pressure up throughout. Lee Morgan's 'Ceora' is almost as good.

Also, in brief:

 The Champ: Round 2 Concord CCD 7061. 5/98.

Even with Paul Bollenback (g) and Byron Landham (d), this is a fairly tame affair. TKO.

 Singin' And Swingin' Concord CCD 4861. 1/99.

'The concept was Sinatra with the Basie band, flat-out', the notes say, and while it's not that good, it's not bad either. Vocals, big band, strings.

 The Baddest B-3 Burner In The Business Silverwolf 1084. 8/07.

A respectable recent set, but well short of his best form.

Papa John DeFrancesco

ORGAN

Played in various swing reed sections before switching to organ. His career revived in the wake of son Joey's success.

 Hip Cake Walk High Note HNCD DeFrancesco; Joey DeFrancesco (t); Bootsie Barnes (ts); Melvin Sparks (g); Glenn Ferracone, Byron Landham (d); Kevin Jones (perc). 6/00.

Take away the Larry Young-inspired modal stuff that is part of Joey's idiom and there's not much to pick between father and son. Like his dad, the kid also plays horn and so he's on hand as a sideman on these. It's not sophisticated music, but one senses that Papa John might have made a more interesting foil for Jimmy Smith than Joey did. Barnes does some interesting stuff on Hip Cake Walk, though most of it is greasy funk.

 Desert Heat Savant 2075 DeFrancesco; Joey DeFrancesco (ky); Tony Banda (b); Ramon Banda (perc). 2/06.
A rather good father-and-son encounter. The title offers up an obvious put-down: there is more heat than light, but it's exciting stuff, even when they rouse up every cliché going on 'House Of The Rising Sun', though even here they manage to retrieve something fresh from it all.

Also, in brief:

 Jumpin' / (*) Walkin' Uptown Savant 2046 / 2060. 6/02; 03–04.
Mostly blues, mostly unhurried. The family connection is on hand again, but Tim Warfield (ts) guests on the second.

Buddy DeFranco (born 1923)

CLARINET

Played swing alto and clarinet in the '40s, then in small groups in the next decade. Led a Glenn Miller ghost band for a time and taught, only returning to regular recording when past 60.

 1949–52 Studio Performances Hep CD 77 DeFranco; various large studio personnels. 4/49–3/52.
 Mr Clarinet Verve 847408 DeFranco; Kenny Drew (p); Milt Hinton (b); Art Blakey (d). 4/53.
Nobody has seriously challenged DeFranco's status as the greatest post-swing clarinettist, although the instrument's desertion by reed-players has tended to disenfranchise its few exponents. DeFranco's incredibly smooth phrasing and seemingly effortless command are unfailingly impressive but the challenge of translating this (some would say cold and unfeeling) virtuosity into a relevant post-bop environment hasn't been easy and he has relatively few records to show for literally decades of fine work.

The Hep compilation reissues big-band work and a handful of small-group sides. The orchestra music seems like a throwback to the swing methods of Shaw and Goodman, although using the George Russell score 'A Bird In Igor's Yard' was forward-looking enough to hint at the satisfactions of the small-group music. Early records with Sonny Clark remain in limbo and some excellent Verve material is no longer available in a Mosaic edition. Mr Clarinet has at least returned in Verve's LPR discs in an 'LP sleeve'. The material isn't much more than three standards and some blues and Drew is relatively uninteresting (certainly compared to Clark), but it's attractive for the clarinet-playing alone.

(*) Wholly Cats: Complete Plays Benny Goodman And Artie Shaw Sessions, Volumes 1–2 Lone Hill Jazz LHJ10282 / 10281 DeFranco; Don Fagerquist, Ray Linn (t); Georgie Auld (ts); Victor Feldman (vib); Carl Perkins (p); Barney Kessel, Howard Roberts (g); Leroy Vinnegar, Joe Mondragon (b); Stan Levey, Milt Holland (d). 9/57.
An obvious enough idea. DeFranco drew a good deal from both Benny and Artie, so the influence was obvious. These 1957 sessions, though, afforded him the opportunity to make 'Air Mail Special', say, or 'Indian Love Call' his own, giving those venerable themes and others a modernist spin. The sessions were recorded two days apart, with octet (Goodman) and sextet (Shaw) respectively, and the smaller, drier-sounding group suits its material well, while Auld and Feldman cut loose a little more on their date.

 Free Fall Candid CHCD 71008 DeFranco; Victor Feldman (p); John Chiodini (g); Victor Sproles (b); Joe Cocuzzo (d). 7/74.
 Gone With The Wind Storyville STCD 8220 DeFranco; Willie Pickens (p); Todd Coolman (b); Jerry Coleman (d). 77.
 Mr Lucky Original Jazz Classics OJC 938 DeFranco; Albert Dailey (p); Joe Cohn (g); George Duvivier (b); Ronnie Bedford (d). 82.
 Hark Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 867 DeFranco; Oscar Peterson (p); Joe Pass (g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Martin Drew (d). 4/85.
 Holiday For Swing Contemporary 14047 DeFranco; Terry Gibbs (vib); John Campbell (p); Todd Coolman (b); Gerry Gibbs (d). 8/88.
(*) Like Someone In Love Progressive PCD 7014 DeFranco; Derek Smith (p); Tal Farlow (g); George Duvivier (b); Ronnie Bedford (d). 3/89.
DeFranco issued little in the '60s and '70s, but Free Fall offers a glimpse. It's nice to be reminded of Feldman's pianism and there is a great workout on the title-track, but a few modish touches date the music. Gone With The Wind catches Buddy on the hoof in Chicago with a local rhythm section and it has its moments, but this is obviously just another gig. Pablo took DeFranco on board for a while in the '80s. Hark and Mr Lucky are spit-polished recitals which earn their stars for the clarinettist's impeccable delivery and musical rigour, though neither is particularly exciting. The association with the exuberant Gibbs offers a better focus, and though there are better things available under the vibist's name, Holiday For Swing bounces through a well-chosen programme in which DeFranco creates some febrile improvisations.

Like Someone In Love is, by a squeak, the best of the studio dates from the period. The rhythm section is guided by the effortless Duivivier and, with Farlow at his most beguiling in a guest role, DeFranco sounds relaxed. The fast pieces show the expected flair, but it's the honeyed interpretation of the title-tune and 'How Long Has This Been Going On?' which impress the most.

(*) You Must Believe In Swing Concord CCD 4756 DeFranco; Dave McKenna (p). 10/96.
(*) Do Nothing Till You Hear From Us! Concord CCD 4851 As above, except add Joe Cohn (g). 7/98.
Concord threw a line to players of DeFranco's sensibilities. Inevitably, some have been deleted but the one to get is the magisterial encounter with McKenna, as full-blooded as ever at the keyboard and musician enough to have Buddy working at his top level. 'Poor Butterfly', 'The Song Is You' and 'Invitation' are worth the admission price alone. DeFranco sounds immortal on the return match, with Cohn sitting in. There's no diminishment in the technique and Buddy even brought in a couple of originals. Cohn's a bystander, essentially, but his chording adds an extra layer of rhythmic propulsion which adds to the swing.

 Cookin' The Books Arbors ARCD 19298 DeFranco; Ray Kennedy (p); John Pizzarelli (g, v); Martin Pizzarelli (b); Butch Miles (d). 6/03.
Buddy's as spry as ever as he hits 80. The material's obvious, but these guys know every song in the book and they basically just dig in and blow, everything reaching a hot climax with 'Scrapple From The Apple'. Miles is show-offy and a bit excessive in places, but the Pizzarelli trio does a great job.

Also, in brief:

 The Buenos Aires Concerts Hep CD 2014. 11/80.
Lively music, and Buddy takes some chances.

Eli Degibri

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Israeli-born, he studied at Berklee and has toured with Herbie Hancock.

 In The Beginning Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 170
Degibri; Aaron Goldberg (p); Kurt Rosenwinkel (g); Ben Street (b); Jeff Ballard (d). 1/03.

(*) Emotionally Available Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 262
Degibri; Aaron Goldberg (p); Ben Street (b); Jeff Ballard (d); Zé Mauricio (pandeiro). 10/05.

Degibri's a strong, slightly aloof player who sometimes sounds as if he's talking to himself, and his difficulty on the debut is that he's surrounded himself with outstanding players. On 'Shoohoo', the band really starts to burn during a solo by that fine individualist Rosenwinkel, only for the temperature to drop when the saxophonist takes centre stage. All bar two pieces are by the leader, who mostly writes slow, effortful melodies. Even on 'Cherokee', he plods.

That's perhaps why he tackles 'Giant Steps' on the second record. It makes a point, though hardly a worthwhile one given the number of Berklee guys out there who can do those changes in their sleep. The originals are better, though: more straightforward and unfussy, and in 'Big Fish' and 'Mika' (the latter features Mauricio) he has solid working themes that should form the basis of a decent live set.

Jack DeJohnette (born 1942)

DRUMS, PIANO, KEYBOARDS, MELODICA

Studied piano in Chicago and kept pace on drums too. Joined Charles Lloyd in 1966 and was with Miles Davis, 1969–71; since then has basically freelanced at the highest levels, including Jarrett's Standards Trio, and led his own diverse groups.

 The DeJohnette Complex Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 617
DeJohnette; Bennie Maupin (ts); Stanley Cowell (p); Eddie Gomez, Miroslav Vitous (b); Roy Haynes (d). 12/68.

What sets this extraordinary musician apart from the common run isn't the sheer bulk of his output but its vivid musicality. Everything he does is marked with intelligence, controlled fire and an enviable instinct for both texture and form. This early album was recorded a mere month after his first studio date with Miles Davis, for whom he played on Bitches Brew, having played with Coltrane and Jackie McLean. It's a fine band he's assembled, fairly conventional in emphasis, but with Cowell and Vitous the maverick component. DeJohnette reverted to piano for the first day's session. On the second, he turns to the kit, showing a cymbal technique that owes something to Tony Williams, but much more to earlier masters like Philly Joe. Not a classic album, but an impressive start.

 Pictures ECM 519284-2 DeJohnette; John Abercrombie (g). 2/76.

DeJohnette was a logical signing to ECM. Stablemate Abercrombie was a highly effective partner, and the duos are more satisfying than the solo performances with piano, organ and drums. The guitarist is light, fleet and subtle, spinning off lines that are both lyrical and tightly woven, even when moving with deliberation. DeJohnette was still wrestling with a tension between his own sterling musicianship and regular, possibly overwhelming, work as a sideman. Whether he has ever entirely solved this remains unclear – he resents being described as a 'drummer' and declares himself to be a 'complete musician' – but on this record the two seem in comfortable proximity.

(*) Special Edition ECM 827694-2 DeJohnette; David Murray (ts, bcl); Arthur Blythe (as); Peter Warren (b, clo). 3/79.

(*) Tin Can Alley ECM 517754-2 DeJohnette; Chico Freeman (ts, f, bcl); John Purcell (as, bs, f); Peter Warren (b, clo).

 Album Album ECM 823467-2 DeJohnette; David Murray (ts); John Purcell (as, ss); Howard Johnson (tba); Rufus Reid (b). 84.

DeJohnette never established a clear market identity for his music. Band and album names (and there was even one called Untitled) were almost deliberately flat and uninflected, perverse when he was trying to create a new group approach, defined by relatively unfamiliar instrumentation – tuba, piccolo, alto clarinet – and complex charts. Though Purcell's multi-instrumentalism is equally impressive, Murray, wonderful on the original Special Edition, was just coming into his own, and Arthur Blythe is playing out of his skin. One of the least known of DeJohnette's albums, Tin Can Alley is one of the best, with an increasingly rock- and funk-coloured approach balancing Purcell's rather more abstract styling and Warren's imaginative, off-line patterns and rich timbre. DeJohnette's solo spot – a peril of drummer-led albums – is the vivid 'Gri Gri Man'.

(*) Dancing With Nature Spirits ECM 531024-2 DeJohnette; Steve Gorn (ss, cl, f); Michael Cain (p, ky). 5/95.

The big gap in the discography is explained by the deletion of several records for Impulse! and Blue Note, none of which lasted long in the catalogues. Instead, Jack went back to ECM. So much potential for mistiness here, elegantly avoided by DeJohnette's beautifully modulated new trio. Judicious use of keyboards and Gorn's horns (including the rich tone of a Bansuri flute) gives the group a generous range of sounds, and all three contribute themes. Gorn's main input is 'Anatolia', the most self-consciously 'ethnic' piece in the set; Cain's 'Emanations' is, as it sounds, more abstract, but the main bulk of the record is taken up with two long, largely improvised pieces. The title-track is richly textured and surprisingly logical in its development, not at all impressionistic; 'Healing Song For Mother Earth' is a little longer, and feels more so, tailing off into reworked ideas.

* Oneness ECM 537343-2 DeJohnette; Jerome Harris (g); Michael Cain (p); Don Alias (perc). 1/97.

An unexpected sound-world for DeJohnette, partly a return to the early ECM days but also striking out into new territory. Cain seems an increasingly significant component, and on the two collectively composed tracks, 'Free Above Sea' and 'From The Heart', he becomes the dominant voice. DeJohnette and Alias share the opening 'Welcome Blessing', a brief, delightful introduction to an album that manages to plug into something profound and stay with it from start to finish. The closing track is almost half an hour long, seguing from a collective improvisation into DeJohnette's 'C.M.A.' and rounding out the set with a flash of passion and fire sometimes missing from his music. Our only hesitation concerns the atmospheric 'Priestesses Of The Mist', who outstay their welcome by a few minutes. It's now several years since Jack's recorded a new set of his own, and the time has surely come for another.

Also, in brief:

 Sorcery Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1838-2. 3–5/74.
Dominated by 'Reverend King Suite', this is an awkwardly paced album that never quite makes sense as a totality.

 New Directions ECM 829374-2. 6/78.
With Lester Bowie (t), John Abercrombie (g) and Eddie Gomez (b), but the supergroup line-up doesn't add up to a great record.

 Music From The Hearts Of The Masters Golden Beams 1112. 4/05.
An impressive partnership with kora-player Foday Musa Suso, but somewhat remote from jazz concerns.

* Music In The Key Of OM Golden Beams 1111. 4/05.
Intended as an aid to meditation, but more likely to prompt an anxiety attack. Voted best New Age album at the Grammys.

 Peace Time Kindred Rhythm 1139. 10/06.
In a similar vein.

Benoît Delbecq (born 1966)

PIANO

Paris-born, conservatory-trained, but a bold improviser, too.

 Pursuit Songlines 1529 Delbecq; François Houle , Michael Moore (cl); Jean-Jacques Avenel (b); Steve Argüelles (d). 99.
 Dice Thrown Songlines 1538 Delbecq; François Houle (cl). 5/01.

Moody, sometimes unnerving music with the relatively unusual effect of two clarinets in a modern setting. Argüelles steers the rhythm expertly and Delbecq plays to the settings rather than as an obvious lead voice. He's more in evidence on the duo record and on the opening 'Shaw' immediately establishes a tough, ostinato approach that dissipates any 'classical' impression. Houle plays more lightly and lyrically on this one, which is more song-based and less impressionistic than Pursuit.

 Nu-Turn Songlines 1543 Delbecq (p solo). 12/01.
There are prepared-piano passages on Dice Thrown, but they have a more obvious structural impact on this solo recital. Delbecq presents many of these as if they were classical études, but his hard rhythmic drive on many of these cuts keeps the energy and the improvisational edge impressively high.

(*) Phonetics Songlines 1552 Delbecq; Oene van Geel (vla); Mark Helias (b); Emile Biayenda (d). 11/03.
There's something not quite right here, not just because it feels more of a chamber music project, but because the balance of voices isn't working. Houle would have been perfect in this context and one misses that mercurial imagination.

Mário Delgado

GUITAR

A boisterous new voice on the Portuguese label.

(*) Filactera Clean Feed CF004 Delgado; Claus Nymark (tb); Andrzej Olejniczak (as, ts); Carlos Barretto (b); Alexandre Frazão (d). 1/02.
Clean Feed invested a lot, creatively speaking, in this and it pays off handsomely. Delgado comes across like Bill Frisell's badly behaved Latin cousin and his delivery on 'I'm A Poor Lonesome Cowboy', 'Gatos E Corvos (Fritz The Cat)' and 'Blues Dos Freak Brothers' helps nail down, or rather cut loose, the album's cartoonish post-bop. Nymark is an important lead voice most of the way through and the saxophonist burns through a couple of important solos. Sharp writing from Delgado and terrific playing from all concerned.

Tobias Delius

TENOR SAXOPHONE, CLARINET

Idiosyncratic Dutch stylist who combines mainstream jazz and free. Member of the ICP Orchestra.

* The Heron ICP 033 Delius; Tristan Honsinger (clo); Joe Williamson (b); Han Bennink (d). 7/97.
(*) Toby's Mloby ICP 034 As above. 9/99.
* Pelikanismus ICP 039 As above. 4/01.
 The Flying Deer Spool SPL 119 Delius; Wilbert de Joode (b); Dylan van der Schyff (d). 4/01.
(*) Apa Ini Data 033 Delius; Hilary Jeffery (tb); Wilbert de Joode (b); Serigne C. M. Gueye (perc). 11/02.

Delius plays in a tough but lyrical modern idiom that has some affinity with adventurous jazz tenorists like Joe Henderson and Sonny Rollins but with a strong admixture of free jazz. Pelikanismus is probably the place to start. 'Back Horse – Chives' is probably the best illustration of the quartet's ability to merge quite unrelated ideas. Other pieces are much shorter and there is ample opportunity to sample all four members featured, and Honsinger in particular.

The Heron catches the group at an early stage and its flowing live format gives an excellent impression of how these highly sophisticated improvisers work through a loose roster of ideas, and in the process create music that has strong structural values as well as considerable improvisational sophistication. Bennink is a veteran of this idiom, infallibly swinging, but able to use abstract accents to dramatic effect. With Williamson keeping things well founded, Honsinger acts as second horn as well as harmonist. The second record brings the suite/collage approach on a step. With three great writers in the group, ideas come in from all angles, and seemingly in real time. Live recording suggests that the group works quite spontaneously, moving from one idea to the next as new contexts suggest themselves.

Delius has some contact with the scene in Canada, but The Flying Deer with Canadian-based Williamson and van der Schyff was recorded in Amsterdam, again live. Though it doesn't evolve quite like the quartet suites, it's still a cracking set with strong clarinet from Delius and very impressive melodic work from de Joode. The bassist is in excellent form on Apa Ini; 'Pok' brings the set to a hugely satisfying climax. Delius cedes place to the trombonist surprisingly often, but maintains his own characterful approach even when playing quietly and behind the main action.

Christopher Dell (born 1965)

VIBRAPHONE, MARIMBA

Studied, in the late '80s, at conservatories in Holland and the US and was subsequently associate professor of music at Darmstadt. Has played with Lee Konitz, Albert Mangelsdorff, Kenny Wheeler and Bob Brookmeyer, among others.

(*) Dancers On A Plane Konnex 5080 Dell; Heinz Sauer (ts); Stephan Schmolck (b). 97.
 Future Of The Smallest Form Jazz4ever J4E 4754 Dell; Christian Ramond (b); Felix Astor (d, perc). 11–12/00.
(*) The World We Knew ACT 9449 2 Dell; Christof Lauer (ts); Carsten Daerr (p); Ladi Geisler (g); Olivier Potratz (b); Eric Schaefer (d). 5/06.

Dell is a composer somewhat in the Anthony Braxton mould (some of his titles on Dancers even resemble the American's) in that his work seems to rely on the careful layering of repetitive ground elements, across which improvised lines weave with curiously orderly 'freedom'. His own quietly limpid but propulsive approach is seemingly influenced by Victor Feldman and very different to the more familiar approaches of Gary Burton or Bobby Hutcherson, let alone Khan Jamal.

There is a hint of cool atonality in the approach as well, though Dell's interest in rhythmic matrices dispels any impression of conservatory music. Future Of The Smallest Form is collectively attributed to D.R.A., a group name derived from 'dynamic related action'. The pieces are mostly miniature in form, but by no means sketch-like, and as on the later Konnex disc the bassist is put in the position of providing a rhythmic and tonal centre over which the other voices improvise. Interestingly, when there is a saxophonist on hand, and Dell seems to favour hard-edged voices who can work comfortably in the altissimo range, the vibist keeps somewhat to the background.

The ACT disc (with Lauer in a similar role to Sauer on its predecessor) is, believe it or not, a tribute to big-band composer Bert Kaempfert, whose 'Strangers In The Night' and 'Spanish Eyes' are both given gloomy readings. The remaining material is unlikely to be familiar to any but easy-listening devotees, so the strangeness of these interpretations is not so marked. Lest anyone think that Dell's tongue is in his cheek, the presence on the session of the late Kaempfert's (he died in 1980) original guitarist, Ladi Geisler, suggests that The World We Knew is intended as a straight homage.

There are a couple of earlier records on Bellaphon which are worth tracking down, Other Voices, Other Rooms most particularly.

Elaine Delmar

VOICE

The daughter of Leslie 'Jiver' Hutchinson, and a veteran of the British scene, active in jazz and pop since the late '50s.

 Sneaking Up On You Dutton Vocalion CDSML 8437 Delmar; unidentified personnel. 68.
 'S Wonderful Jazz House JHCD407 Delmar; Duncan Lamont (ts, f); Brian Dee (p); Mario Castronari (b); Bobby Worth (d). 1/92.
 But Beautiful Jazz House JHCD067 Delmar; Duncan Lamont (ts, f); Brian Dee (p). 01.
(*) Ev'rything I Love /  Strike Up The Band Joy EDCH002/003 Delmar; Brian Dee (p); Jim Mullen (g); Alec Dankworth (b); Allan Ganley (d). 3/05; 06.

Delmar has made many records which could stand reissue – her fine Alec Wilder collection made for Columbia in the '60s, for one, but it's good to have the nicely paced and varied Columbia date from 1968 back in catalogue. The 1992 Ronnie Scott's gig is a lovely souvenir, and Delmar's nicely judged set of standards, with a Dori Caymmi song in as a surprise fillip, is completely satisfying. The material on the other Jazz House disc is equally good, if less adventurous, with Dee masterful in support. The new releases on her own label are a delight. The songs on the first are all Cole Porter; perhaps too many familiar ones, but she brings a freshness and an ardour to the material which saves it from routine. Her voice is still in great nick: searching, spotlit high notes blend with the gorgeous cello-like tone of her middle-to-lower register, and she paces herself through a line and a lyric with perfect grace and with blue-chip support from the band which extends to the second, Gershwin date as well.

Also, in brief:

 Nobody Else But Me Spotlite SPJCD 563. 97.
Another fine British group in support: Phil Lee (g) and Dick Pearce (flhn) star; 'Once Upon A Summertime' is the key track.

Delta Jazz Band

GROUP

Founded by British trad veteran Sonny Morris, and still working.

 Delta Bravo Lake LACD 196 Tony O'Sullivan (t, v); Roy Maskell (tb); Terry Giles (cl, as); Chris Satterly (p, v); Andy Maynard (bj, g); John Sirett (b); Colin Bowden (d). 11/03.

O'Sullivan's gentle lead is a worthy substitute for the departed Morris. The wild card is pianist Satterly, who is apt to go completely crackers in some of his solos, and whose singing is dispensable; Sirett and Bowden are calmness personified.

Jacques Demierre

PIANO

An improviser with a classical tinge, in the European way.

* Brainforest Intakt CD107 Demierre; Barry Guy (b); Lucas Niggli (d). 11/04.

The trio had been working together for some time before this was recorded, in Uster and Cologne, and the evolving empathy shows. Guy is the fulcrum of the music, as he so often is in these situations, playing a full-toned line that always implies order without insisting on it. The title comes from an installation (and associated cover art) by Gerda Steiner and Georg Lenzlinger. Guy often makes reference to visual arts in his work and Demierre, previously known for his work with Sylvie Courvoisier, is seemingly like-minded, but equally resistant to being dubbed either an impressionist or an expressionist, and still less an abstractionist or conceptualist. This is full-blown and confident self-portraiture, undriven by ego and resolutely to the point; a marvellous piano trio record that deftly escapes that overbooked category.

Matt Dennis (born 1914)

PIANO, VOCAL

Brilliant songwriter, author of 'Will You Still Be Mine?', 'Violets For Your Furs', 'The Night We Called It A Day' and others.

 Live In Hollywood Fresh Sound FSRCD 385 Dennis; Bill Pittman (g); Gene Englund, Ray Leatherwood (b); Mark Bennett, Alvin Stoller (d); Virginia Maxey (v). 54, 55.

The earliest of these were recorded at the Tally-Ho in Hollywood in 1954, with the remainder, originally released as Dennis Anyone, from the Encore a year later. Though he isn't really an improvising singer, these peerless songs (and almost all the hits are represented) have played a lasting part in jazz ever since and Matt deserves his moment in the spotlight.

Claude Deppa

TRUMPET

South African-born, but now a UK stalwart.

 Toi Toi Jika JK008 Deppa; Fayyaz Virji (tb); Tony Kofi (as, bs); Greg Bonnie (sax); Brian Abrahams, Paul Weinreb (p); Kari Bannerman (g); Sam Djengue (b); Francis Fuster (perc); others. 03.

Deppa has a late starter's idiosyncrasy of technique. His section work is occasionally flawed, but he brings an excitement to his solo spots that is carried over into this debut disc as leader. The music ranges between swinging township rhythms and a freer approach. 'That Fela' pays tribute to Fela Kuti; 'Mrs' has a more sober and reflective quality; but the whole set is strong and distinctive.

Dena DeRose

VOICE, PIANO

DeRose has been in the music for many years but only recently began leading records of her own. Originally a pianist, surgery on her hands brought on the 'discovery' of her singing voice, and she now performs in both capacities.

 Another World Sharp Nine 1016 DeRose; Ingrid Jensen (t, flhn); Steve Davis (tb); Steve Wilson (ss, as); Dwayne Burno (b); Mark Taylor (d); Daniel Sadownick (perc). 12/98.

(*) I Can See Clearly Now Sharp Nine 1018 DeRose; Jim Rotondi (t); Joel Frahm (ss, ts); Joe Locke (vib); Dwayne Burno (b); Mark Taylor, Matt Wilson (d). 4/00.

(*) Love's Holiday Sharp Nine 1024 DeRose; Tony Kadleck (t, flhn); Jim Rotondi, Brian Lynch (t); Steve Davis (tb); Sara Della Posta (frhn); Bill Charlap (p); Joe Locke (vib); Peter Washington (b); Matt Wilson (d). 2/02.

(*) A Walk In The Park MaxJazz MXJ 502 DeRose; Martin Wind (b); Matt Wilson (d). 04.

(*) Live At Jazz Standard: Volume 1 MaxJazz MXJ 140504 As above, except add Joel Frahm (ts). 3/07.

DeRose is much more than a singer working standards with a few piano licks in her closet. While she has the grace to give herself comparatively modest keyboard space, it's always shrewd and skilful. And duly modest: on a grooving workout such as 'Detour Ahead' from I Can See Clearly Now it feels like a band record which happens to have some vocals on it. There are occasional instrumental tracks, and she writes serviceable originals too. She has a very clear voice, rather 'correct' pronunciation and a lack of mannerism which is anti-seductive yet oddly appealing. The first record has a few less-successful pieces, but the next two are varied and thoroughly enjoyable, with inventive charts and some outstanding solo work by Locke, Lynch and Frahm, while Charlap assists on a version of 'The Nearness Of You' which has a luscious restraint. The label switch to MaxJazz has been positive. The singing is a shade more inventive, particularly in her occasional scat outing, and the playing has the same assurance. The Jazz Standard material is first class, with 'Speak Low' delivered almost briskly, and even hoary stuff like 'Alone Together', 'On Green Dolphin Street' and 'Lover' refreshed and alert. Who else might have taken on 'A Table Set For Solitude', though? Frahm pops in for 'I Fall In Love Too Easily', which sets her up for the peppy climax of 'Lover', done with an unexpected stride feel.

Also, in brief:

 Introducing Dena DeRose Sharp Nine 1009. 5/96.

OK start, but better was to come.

Paul Desmond (1924–77)

ALTO SAXOPHONE

His glowing tone and melodic ease are almost definitive of the cool saxophone. Such was the Californian's importance to long-time boss Dave Brubeck, for whom Desmond wrote 'Take Five', that there was an agreement Desmond would never record with another piano player.

 Complete Jazz At Storyville Definitive DRCD1129 Desmond; Dave Brubeck (p); Fred Dutton, Wyatt Ruther (b); Herb Barman, Lloyd Davis (d). 8 & 11/51, 9 & 10/52.

 Quintet / Quartet Featuring Don Elliott Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 712 Desmond; Don Elliott (t, mellophone); Dave Van Kriedt (ts); Jack Weeks, Barney Kessel (g); Norman Bates, Bob Bates (b); Joe Chevrolet, Joe Dodge (d); Bill Bates Singers. 2/56, 57.

Jazz history has overstated Desmond's significance in making Dave Brubeck a star. The saxophonist's flowing lines are unmistakable, but Brubeck gave him a winning context, never bettered. The first of these records is by Dave's group, remarketed to give Desmond the starring role. The music is at its most adventurous, with some complex chording from Brubeck and some of the saxophonist's most extreme playing. Desmond's own-name outings were, by verbal agreement with Brubeck, always made without piano. There are hints on the sessions with Don Elliott of Gerry Mulligan's pianoless quartets, but with an edgy quality underneath the cool front.

 First Place Again! Gambit 69217 Desmond; Jim Hall (g); Percy Heath (b); Connie Kay (d). 9/59.

Desmond's first date with Hall has some fine playing from both. The title apparently refers to his habit of winning Downbeat readers' polls on an annual basis at this period and there is a breezy arrogance to the playing which is infectious and attractive. The opening 'I Get A Kick Out Of You' is superb saxophone-playing, ably supported by the guitarist. This material was also released as East Of The Sun.

 Desmond Blue RCA Victor 7432 137751 Desmond; Tony Miranda, Albert Richman (frhn); Phil Bodner, Robert Doty, George Marge, Romeo Penque, Stan Webb (reeds); Jim Hall (g); Gloria Agostini, Gene Bianco (hp); Gene Cherico, Milt Hinton (b); Connie Kay, Osie Johnson, Bobby Thomas (d); strings. 9 & 10/61, 3/62.

(*) Glad To Be Unhappy RCA Victor 7432 131311 Desmond; Jim Hall (g); Gene Cherico, Gene Wright (b); Connie Kay (d). 6/63–9/64.

* Two Of A Mind RCA Victor 7432 125764 Desmond; Gerry Mulligan (bs); John Beal, John Benjamin, Wendell Marshall (b); Connie Kay, Mel Lewis (d). 6–8/62.
 Take Ten RCA Victor 7432 125760 Desmond; Jim Hall (g); Gene Cherico, Gene Wright (b); Connie Kay (d). 6/63.
* Easy Living RCA Victor 7432 131393 As above, except add Percy Heath (b). 6/63–6/65.
 Bossa Antigua RCA Victor 7432 122110 As above, except omit Cherico, Heath. 7–9/64.

Desmond's recordings for RCA Victor are the pinnacle of his career, consistent and richly inflected. It is difficult in all conscience to make distinctions between these sessions. Desmond's tone and quiet, lyrical delivery almost never vary from date to date. Occasionally, he will throw in a discordant interval or roughen up his timbre to add a measure of drama. It is astonishing, listening to this music in bulk, to discover how modern, even avant-garde, it is in impact. For all Anthony Braxton's insistence on Desmond as a primary influence, no one has ever quite taken the point at face value. These extraordinary sides point up how immensely thoughtful Desmond was, and how brimming with harmonic intelligence.

 From The Hot Afternoon Verve 543487-2 Desmond; Irwin Markowitz, Marvin Stamm (t, flhn); Paul Faulise (btb); Jimmy Buffington (frhn); Phil Bodner, George Marge (as, cl, ob); Don Hammond, Hubert Laws (f, af); Stan Webb (f, af, perc); Pat Rebillot (ky); Dorio Ferreira, Edú Lobo (g); Ron Carter (b); Airto Moreira (d, perc); Jack Jennings (perc); Wanda De Sah (v); strings. 6–8/69.

One of the few occasions when Desmond seemed in some peril of bowing to market pressure and making a pop album. At first hearing, this resembles the bouncy Latin style Charles Lloyd was making a commercial success around the same time. The obvious difference is Paul himself. Not by any means a natural Latin player – even a soft bossa doesn't quite sit right for his phrasing – he is more thoughtful than rhythmic, and the short tracks don't really allow him to develop ideas fully. A beautiful record, though, sensitively arranged and immaculately produced and engineered. By no means merely a 'summer of '69' curiosity.

 Skylark CTI ZK 65133 Desmond; Gene Bertoncini, Gabor Szabo (g); Bob James (p); George Ricci (clo); Ron Carter (b); Jack DeJohnette (d); Ralph MacDonald (perc). 12/73.
 Pure Desmond Columbia 74767 Desmond; Ed Bickert (g); Ron Carter (b); Connie Kay (d). 9/74.
 Like Someone In Love Telarc 83319 Desmond; Ed Bickert (g); Don Thompson (b); Jerry Fuller (d). 3/75.

The '70s were a period of retrenchment rather than decline for Desmond. His health was already suspect by the turn of the decade, and those who dealt with him at close hand seem to have been aware that not all was well. Qualitatively, there is not much to choose between these records, though the settings are very different and the technical quality ranges from pristine to documentary. The Telarc session was recorded live in Toronto and pitches the saxophonist up against a sympathetic but passive group who do everything they can to back him but without challenge or beguilement.

Bickert was to become a regular companion in these years and there are signs that the two had struck up an empathy almost as close as that with Brubeck. The fare is by now quite familiar, with 'Suicide Is Painless (Theme From M*A*S*H)' prominent in the mix alongside 'Nuages', 'Warm Valley' and some lovely show tunes.

Skylark puts him in company with younger players who have swallowed the rock'n'roll potion. Carter and DeJohnette were also both experimenting with rock grooves. The long 'Romance De Amor' is free of any such posturing, and a retake of the title-track suggests how much Desmond himself was resisting the drift. The setting is not conducive to his best work, though, and of all his records, and for all the fine playing on it, this is the one which seems most seriously time-locked.

 Live Verve/A&M 543501 Desmond; Ed Bickert (g); Don Thompson (b); Jerry Fuller (d). 10 & 11/75.

Desmond wasn't playing that much by this stage and had restricted himself to occasional dates with simpatico players. Bickert is an ideal foil and gives the saxophonist a lovely smooth launch platform for some untroubled but still inventive solos. Long versions of Jobim's 'Wave' and 'My Funny Valentine' suggest that Paul's intonation wasn't always equal to the flow of ideas at this period. He seems to have dropped in pitch slightly as well, presumably as the chops deteriorated, but the voice is immediately distinctive and any Desmond fan will be well satisfied with a set that also includes 'Take Five' and 'Wendy'.

Also, in brief:

 Cool Imagination BMG International 651420. 9/61–6/65.
Elegant mix of early '60s material. Nothing beats the original sets, but here's a good budget option.

Ted Des Plantes

PIANO, VOCAL

Des Plantes and his Washboard Wizards are a studio band formed to play the classic jazz of the '20s in modern sound and with a soupçon of modern style.

* Midnight Stomp Stomp Off CD 1231 Des Plantes; Leon Oakley (c); Jim Snyder (tb, v); Larry Wright (cl, as, ts, ocarina, v); John Otto (cl, as, v); Frank Powers (cl, as); Mike Bezin (tba, v); Jack Meilahn (bj); Hal Smith (wbd, d). 3–4/91.
 Ain't Cha' Got Music? Jazzology JCD-225 Des Plantes; Chris Tyle (t, v); David Sager (tb); Tom Fischer (cl, as, ts); Barry Wratten (cl); John Gill (bj); Tom Saunders (b, tba); Hal Smith (d, wbd, v). 5/92.
(*) Ohio River Blues Stomp Off CD 1290 Des Plantes; Leon Oakley (c); John Otto (cl, as); Larry Wright (cl, as, ts); Ken Keeler (g, bj); Ray Cadd (tba); Hal Smith (d, wbd). 10/94.
() Shim Sham Shimmy Dance / () Railroad Man Stomp Off CD 1325 / 1357 As above, except omit Keeler; add John Gill (bj, v). 8/97; 6/00.
(*) Thumpin' And Bumpin' Stomp Off CD 1409 As above, except omit Wright, Cadd; add Clint Baker (tb); Matthias Seuffert (cl, as, ts); Mike Walbridge (tba). 4/06.

Never a dull moment with this superb traditional outfit. Individually, each man has the right blend of chops and enthusiasm: nobody pretends to outright virtuosity, but there are no painful mistakes either. Oakley is a properly salty cornet lead, but it's Wright and Otto, their styles harking back to the oldest Chicago masters as if bebop had never happened, who lend a rare authenticity. Smith's washboard (the group is actually called The Washboard Wizards, though Des Plantes is the affable leader) lends a rare crispness to the rhythms, and even the singing is more than passable. Des Plantes chooses real obscurities from the oldest days of the music, including tunes from the books of Bennie Moten, Perry Bradford, Doc Cook, Alex Hill and The Pods Of Pepper, and everything sounds fresh-minted in outstanding studio sound.

The time-frame moves forward about eight years on Ain't Cha' Got Music, to the early swing-era styles, with Des Plantes's Louisiana Swingers re-creating the manner of that day on another 17 songs. If this one seems more ordinary, it's because the material is sometimes more familiar and the approach already mined – Marty Grosz does this kind of thing with perhaps an ounce more character – and while the New Orleans-based group have the measure of Henry Allen's 'Algiers Stomp' and James P. Johnson's title-track, they don't do so well by 'The Touch Of Your Lips'. But Ted was back to his best form with the next three releases. King Oliver's repertoire gets a shakedown on Ohio River Blues (though none of the obvious titles), and there's even a nod to our own Fred Elizalde in 'Stomp Your Feet'. On Shim Sham Shimmy Dance, Ted has another go at the Clarence Williams songbook, something of a homecoming since this was the material The Washboard Wizards were first formed to play. The 19 tunes are despatched with the band's familiar geniality; we especially liked the ensemble singing and Larry Wright's ocarina solo on 'Pile Of Logs And Stones (Called Home)', but it's idle to single out any one track in a consistently enjoyable set.

They're still locked into the '20s as a source of material on Railroad Man, and it suits them just fine. This time Ted has picked out 18 tunes which have hardly been covered since – everything from Henry Allen's great 'Make A Country Bird Fly Wild' to the New Orleans Owls' 'White Ghost Shivers' (the one 'modern' exception is a tune from the book of the top German trad outfit the Barrelhouse Jazz Band – a nice nod across the sea to some old-world veterans). The sound is superbly crisp, the arrangements foot-perfect, the solos hot.

'Choo Choo' on Thumpin' And Bumpin' is interesting in that the only black band to record it was The Washingtonians, the studio debut of one Duke Ellington. 'Harlemania' is another Ellington association played here with Duke's first composition, 'Soda Fountain Rag', interpolated in the middle. 'Arabella's Wedding Day' comes from a black revue called Plantation Days and a feature for Johnny Dunn, who was the trumpeter on the scene until Louis Armstrong popped up. 'Thumpin' And Bumpin'' is by Eubie Blake, 'Betsy Brown', 'Buttons' and 'She's Still Dizzy' by the now-unlistenable Fess Williams; they're perfectly fine in these versions, though. Des Plantes contributes a couple of originals, too. 'Hot Red' was written for Wright, whose party-piece is an ability to copy the exact sound of Lu Watters sideman Red Helm. Wright took ill before the session, so Seuffert flew in from Germany and took his place. If, indeed, this is the last Washboard Wizards record – age, money, health, other commitments all press – then they really are going out in a modest blaze of glory.

Also, in brief:

 Feelin' Good Stomp Off 1405. 97, 00, 06.
The title tells you all you need to know.

Detail

GROUP

Freebop supergroup with an evolving personnel based round saxophonist Frode Gjerstad and drummer John Stevens.

 In Time Was Circulasione Totale CT CD 86 07 06 Bobby Bradford (c); Frode Gjerstad (as); Johnny Dyani (b); John Stevens (d). 7/86.

(*) Less More Circulasione Totale CT CD 909089 Frode Gjerstad (as); Billy Bang (vn); Kent Carter (b); John Stevens (d). 1, 5 & 10/90.

 Last Detail – Live at Cafe Sting Cadence CJR 1068 Frode Gjerstad (as); Kent Carter (b); John Stevens (d). 5/94, 5/95.

Committed to a ruggedly lyrical form of free improv, Detail was a long-standing collaboration between Stevens and Gjerstad, first with pianist Eivin One Pedersen, later with bassists Johnny Dyani and Kent Carter. The earliest of these records, taped on tour in Britain, gives a clear picture of the group's basic language: intense, plangent, rootedly rhythmic even when there is only the hint of a pulse. Gjerstad is a highly effective player and shines on all three sets, but it's Stevens who creates the really interesting music. Bradford makes for a fascinating guest. He had grown close to Stevens and Trevor Watts earlier and seemed to relish the company. It's Bang, though, on the second record, who breathes new life into the set-up, adding a touch of magic to three cuts as a guest at the May 1990 gig. Gjerstad's alto has rarely sounded more alert and penetrating. The final record was made towards the end of Stevens's life and was released posthumously with an additional duo in memoriam played on alto and bass by the surviving members. The free improvs are strong and tightly focused, with 'Last Detail' itself standing as one of the group's finest moments.

Jimmy Deuchar (1930–93)

TRUMPET

Born in Dundee, he arrived in London at the beginning of the '50s. Important spells with Ronnie Scott and Tubby Hayes, then the Clarke–Boland Orchestra. Later divided his time between London and Scotland.

 Showcase Jasmine JASCD 616 Deuchar; Ken Wray (tb); Derek Humble (as); Tubby Hayes, Don Rendell (ts); Dill Jones, Victor Feldman (p); Sammy Stokes, Lennie Bush (b); Phil Seamen (d). 1/53–4/55.

(*) Opus De Funk Jasmine JASCD 621 As above, except omit Rendell, Jones, Stokes, Feldman; add Ronnie Scott (ts), Stan Tracey, Terry Shannon (p), Kenny Napper (b), Allan Ganley, Tony Crombie (d). 4/56–3/57.

(*) Pal Jimmy! Jasmine JASCD 624 Deuchar; Ken Wray (tb); Derek Humble (as); Tubby Hayes (ts); Eddie Harvey, Harry South (p); Kenny Napper (b); Phil Seamen (d). 3/57–3/58.

A hybrid of Bunny Berigan and Fats Navarro, Jimmy was usually recognizable within a few bars – taut, hot, but capable of bursts of great lyricism. Some of his best work is with Tubby Hayes, but these precious survivals – which exist solely through the dedication and enthusiasm of Tony Hall – are fine too. The first two discs are bothered by the boxy and inadequate sound, but the playing is of a standard which may surprise those unfamiliar with this period of British jazz. There are excellent contributions from Humble, Hayes, the very neglected Shannon and the redoubtable Seamen; but Deuchar, as is proper, takes the ear most readily: punchily conversational, sometimes overly clipped, but then throwing in a long, graceful line when you don't expect it, he was a distinctive stylist. These sets are made up from EPs and ten-inch LPs, but the third reissues all of the splendid Pal Jimmy! plus a stray track from a compilation. The trumpeter's solo on the title-track blues is a classic statement. Original vinyl copies command a king's ransom, so even uncertain CD sound is very welcome indeed.

 The Anglo/American/Scottish Connection Hep CD 2006 Deuchar; Colin Steele (t, flhn); Nicol Thomson (tb); Bob Martin (as); Gary Cox, Frank Griffith (ts); Jay Craig (bs); Johnny Patrick, Tom Cawley (p); Dave Cliff (g); Dave Lynane, Dave Chamberlain (b); Jack Parnell, Matt Fishwick (d). 4/79–2/03.

This reissues the original 1979 date The Scots Connection with five extra tracks recorded in 2003, when a suitably multinational group played five previously unrecorded Deuchar arrangements. Likeable as the original session was, it's attracted more attention as one of Deuchar's very few later featured appearances and anyone coming to it expecting some kind of neglected classic is likely to be disappointed. Deuchar and Cox both play with a lot of grace and invention, but the rhythm section is very tame and the music could use more of a lift than it gets. The main point of interest is hearing Deuchar play on some of his own pieces, and the 'new' tracks offer a contemporary band with Steele slipping easily into Jimmy's shoes. Martin plays an attractive lead on 'Daydream' and the score for 'Israel' is especially effective.

Stefano di Battista (born 1968)

ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Italian saxman based in Paris.

(*) A Prima Vista Blue Note 97945-2 di Battista; Flavio Boltro (t); Eric Legnini (p); Rosario Bonaccorso (b); Benjamin Henocq (d). 8/98.

(*) Stefano di Battista Blue Note 28417-2 di Battista; Flavio Boltro (t); Jacky Terrasson (p); Rosario Bonaccorso (b); Elvin Jones (d). 7/00.

 Round About Roma Blue Note 542406-2 di Battista; Eric Legnini (p); Rosario Bonaccorso (b); Andre Ceccarelli (d); Les Archets de Paris Orchestra. 7/02.

 Parker's Mood Blue Note 66740-2 di Battista; Flavio Boltro (t); Kenny Barron (p); Rosario Bonaccorso (b); Herlin Riley (b). 4/04.

European post-bop rarely reaches American shores, so it was good to find Blue Note releasing the second of these two sets in America. US readers might also like to ask their importer for the first, a splendid session brimming over with joyful playing: it's hard bop softened by Italian sunshine (even though recorded in Amiens), and both horn-players have a brush of Mediterranean charm to go with the bristling energy. If in doubt, simply try the opening three minutes of 'Spirit Of Messengers'.

Di Battista gives himself a bit more limelight on the quartet set (Boltro is kept to three appearances). He has a way of finding a sweetly melodic hook in an otherwise conventional theme, as in the opening 'Elvin's Tune', and 'Johnny's Time' is soaked in lyricism. On alto he has an oddly vocalized sound which goes with a vibrato that he likes to use for dynamic variation. Jones and Terrasson are the star guests, but they're not coasting.

Bookended by the two most vigorous pieces, the orchestral setting of Round About Roma suits di Battista handsomely, without ever quite suggesting that what's on offer – bedecked in lavish Vince Mendoza arrangements – is much more than high-octane mood music. 'Anastasia' and the closing 'The Next Nine Hours' are both given a lift by Ceccarelli, who otherwise has the least interesting job on the record, and di Battista plays vivid soprano on the former, bruising alto on the latter. In between is a lot of very pretty music.

The Parker set is reasonably authentic, and particularly when the tracks are given a Latin spin, at which Barron is just as adept as the leader, but one wonders what such an album is for, given that there's nothing either radical or particularly innovative going on. Nice, well-rounded sound.

Robert Dick (born 1950)

FLUTES

An avant-garde concert flautist with a niche in improvisation and the outer reaches of jazz. He is also a member of eclectic trio New Winds. A superb performer on all the flutes (including F contrabass!), he has a huge tonal and timbral range.

(*) Third Stone From The Sun New World 80435 Dick; Marty Ehrlich (bcl); Jerome Harris (b, g); Jim Black (d); Shelley Hirsch (v); Soldier String Quartet. 1/93.

* Worlds Of If Leo CDLR 224 Dick; Ned Rothenberg (as). 2/94.

Dick is a latter day Gazzeloni, who's recorded Edgard Varèse's 'Density 21.5' and other modern masterworks. Some of his recordings are difficult to locate generically, mixing composed and improvised materials, but these seem relevant here. There have been many jazz-centred Hendrix tributes over the last few years, but Third Stone From The Sun is one of the most unexpected and imaginative. Dick and arranger Dave Soldier give 'Pali Gap', 'Purple Haze' and 'Voodoo Chile' workouts that are obviously influenced by the Kronos Quartet's tongue-in-cheek approach but which are far more inventive musically. Producer Marty Ehrlich and Shelley Hirsch only play on the title-track, giving it an extra dimension the whole album could do with. Not to be missed, though.

For sheer, astonishing impact, Worlds Of If is the Dick record to start with. It begins with percussive, hollow sounds on the F bass flute (it might almost be some sort of marimba), stalking a range a full octave beyond a conventional bass instrument. 'Sea Of Stories', dedicated to novelist Salman Rushdie, shows how far Dick has come with the concept of overdubbing. Here, he weaves a mysterious carpet of sound in which threads of melody pop up in unexpected places, like characters returning from some distant enchantment. 'Eleven In Use' is a duo with Ned Rothenberg, the man Dick describes as the 'Jules Verne of the saxophone'; whatever it means, great music comes of it. There are other literary inspirations, as well, ideas from science-fiction writers Philip K. Dick and Ron Goulart (Worlds Of If was the name of an influential SF magazine), but there is no mistaking the absolute musicality of Dick's approach. He makes a palimpsest of the Varèse piece, playing it straight but multitracking additional interpretations, written as if Varèse himself had lived long enough to hear (and doubtless appreciate) Hendrix. That influence, with substantial input from Ornette Coleman, comes out on 'Lapis Blues', scored for 'harmolodic flute ensemble'. To borrow a tag from some other SF comics, Astounding, Amazing and Fantastic!

(*) Aurealis Victo CD 052 Dick; John Wolf Brennan (p, prepared p); Daniele Patumi (b). 97.

Strictly speaking, this is credited to Trio Aurealis, which joins the ADD Trio and New Winds in Dick's roster of associations; but, unlike the last of these at least, it sounds very much like his own group. Brennan is himself a gifted and enormously expressive performer and a brilliant composer, but this is a context which induces him to set aside some of his characteristic mix of complexity and lyricism in order to improvise in a more linear way. Dick's familiar quiver of flutes has rarely been deployed so sensitively. The sequence of astronomical pieces grouped as 'Stellar Nursery' is particularly effective.

(*) Jazz Standards On Mars Enja ENJ 9327-2 Dick; Regina Carter (vn); Dave Soldier (vn, metal vn); Judith Insell (vla); Dawn Buckholz (clo); Richard Bona, Mark Dresser, Kermit Driscoll (b); Steve Argüelles, Ben Perowsky (d); Valerie Naranjo (perc, v). 98.
Perhaps the most immediately accessible Dick album to date, featuring arrangements of material by John Coltrane ('India'), Eric Dolphy again ('Gazzeloni' and 'Something Sweet, Something Tender'), Jimi Hendrix ('Machine Gun') and Wayne Shorter ('Water Babies'). Arranged for the Soldier String Quartet and rhythm section by violinist Dave Soldier, it's a record that straddles Dick's interest in jazz and new music. The pace is necessarily slower than one might expect from some of the material, but Carter is an impressive front-line player and Dresser, playing upright bass rather than electric, gives the group a taut, propulsive rhythm. Some of the tracks sound a touch over-arranged and 'Machine Gun' is probably too close to Kronos's now clichéd approach to Hendrix for comfort.

Also, in brief:

 Irrefragable Dreams Random Acoustics RA 018. 96.
Tautly disciplined duets with Japanese violinist Mari Kimura.

 Sic Bisquitus Disintegrat Enja ENJ 9361. 8/98.
Dog Latin for 'that's the way the cookie crumbles' and there is a kind of ironic pomposity about some of the music on this delightful disc. With Christy Doran (g, elec) and Steve Argüelles (d).

Vic Dickenson (1906–84)

TROMBONE

Raised in Ohio, he started out with territory bands before working with Bennie Moten and Claude Hopkins. He worked in and around Boston in the '40s and '50s and later played with the revivalist swing outfit Saints And Sinners, in New York, as well as with his great friend Bobby Hackett.

CORE COLLECTION

* Nice Work / * The Essential Vic Dickenson
Vanguard VCD 79610 / 99/100 2 CD Dickenson; Ruby Braff, Shad Collins (t); Edmond Hall (cl); Sir Charles Thompson (p); Steve Jordan (g); Walter Page (b); Les Erskine, Jo Jones (d). 12/53; 11/54.
His early-'50s sessions for Vanguard frustratingly drift in and out of availability, and the sensible thing is to get them if you see them – they are classics of the mainstream idiom. The good news is that at time of writing there seemed to be plentiful quantities of these in circulation. It's terrific stuff, mostly nice long versions of relatively unfamiliar material (including originals by Vic and Sir Charles) but centred on stretched-out versions of 'Jeepers Creepers', 'Old Fashioned Love' and 'Everybody Loves My Baby'. The material overlaps heavily with The Essential, as is typical with this rather confused picture. Either option, though, will yield great music.

(*) Gentleman Of The Trombone Storyville STCD 5008 Dickenson; Johnny Guarnieri (p); Bill Pemberton (b); Oliver Jackson (d). 7/75.
Much of the contemporary trombone vocabulary comes from the bravura playing of Vic Dickenson. After spending many years hidden away in brass sections, he came into his own in the '50s, although he recorded sparsely under his own name. It's a big jump from there to the Storyville dates. On Gentleman Of The Trombone, the tunes are nearly all standards or blues, but Dickenson liked a wide repertoire, and even when one of the tunes might seem a dull choice, he makes it new: there are few versions of 'Bye Bye Blackbird' that can stand next to this one. The peppery delivery, unpredictable accents, huffing low notes and barking high ones, even his charmingly doleful singing – all are essential parts of a great jazzman who always gave his best. For all the humour in his work, there's an underlying feeling for blues that deepens all his solos, and his own composing is represented by the typically wistful 'Just Too Late'. Guarnieri's rococo touches get a bit much at times, but the record is all about Dickenson.

 Ding Dong Storyville STCD 8229 Dickenson; Buddy Tate (ts, bs); Red Richards (p); George Duvivier (b); Oliver Jackson (d). 4/76.
 Swing That Music Black & Blue 194 Dickenson; Doc Chatham (t); Eddie Barefield (cl, ts); Sir Charles Thompson (p); George Duvivier (b); Panama Francis (d). 7/76.
Ding Dong has all the expected good spirits, but the music is rather lumbered by the presence of Tate, who isn't having an especially good day. Vic and the rhythm section by themselves offer the best value, as in a lusciously blathery 'Blue And Brokenhearted'. The Black & Blue, saviour of many an under-recorded American living or sojourning in France, is attractively rough and ready. Cheatham and Barefield don't make the most convincing hypotenuse on the front line, but the playing is spirited and the blues tracks are confidently swung.

Walt Dickerson (born 1931)

VIBRAPHONE

Philadelphia-born, he worked on both coasts in the late '50s and early '60s but faded from view until a long sequence of records for Steeplechase in the '70s.

 This Is Walt Dickerson Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1817 Dickerson; Austin Crowe (p); Bob Lewis (b); Andrew Cyrille (d). 3/61.
(*) A Sense Of Direction Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1794 Dickerson; Austin Crowe (p); Edgar Bateman (b); Eustis Guillemet (d). 5/61.
(*) Relativity Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1867 Dickerson; Austin Crowe (p); Ahmed Abdul-Malik (b); Andrew Cyrille (d). 1/62.
* To My Queen Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1880 Dickerson; Andrew Hill (p); George Tucker (b); Andrew Cyrille (d). 9/62.
A deep thinker who managed to skirt the inherent prettiness of the vibes, Dickerson has never enjoyed the kind of critical praise heaped on Bobby Hutcherson's head. Of the two, Walt may even be the more interesting, though he can't claim quite the same level of innovation. Instead, he combines something of Milt Jackson's piano-based approach with Lionel Hampton's exuberantly percussive sound and an ear for tunes that head off in unexpected directions, like the wonderful 'Time' and 'Death And Taxes' on This Is.

To My Queen is his best record, not least for the pairing of Hill and Cyrille, and for the beautiful title-track, dedicated to the vibist's wife Elizabeth. A duet with Tucker on 'God Bless The Child' bespeaks a close understanding that is also evident on the title-piece. Short measure; this weighs in at just a fraction over half an hour. Cyrille was a stalwart of Dickerson groups until he went off to join Cecil Taylor. On Relativity, alongside Abdul-Malik and the little-known Crowe, he gets his teeth into a this time mostly standards programme, sounding less immediately identifiable than in future years, but certainly not a formula player. Seven tracks give an illusion of greater duration, but it's still short.

(*) Vibes In Motion Fresh Sound FSRCD 407 Dickerson; Walter Davis Jr, Austin Crowe (p); George Tucker, Henry Grimes (b); Edgar Bateman, Andrew Cyrille (d). 3/63, 3/64.
An important release, bringing to CD for the first time the fine 1964 Unity (originally on Audio Fidelity, with Davis, Tucker and Bateman) and the earlier Jazz Impressions: Lawrence Of Arabia (Dauntless), a curious project that actually contains some fine music. The long 'Unity' and 'High Moon' from the first record are strong support for the view that Dickerson was one of the key figures leading creative jazz out of the impasse of generic bop. The integration of rhythmic suppleness and harmonic daring is always impressive, even where the band don't seem quite ready to follow.

 Serendipity Steeplechase SCCD 31070 Dickerson; Rudy McDaniels (b); Edgar Bateman (d). 8/76.
(*) Peace Steeplechase SCCD 31042 Dickerson; Lisle Atkinson (b); Andrew Cyrille (d). 11/76.
 To My Son Steeplechase SCCD 31130 Dickerson; Andy McKee (b); Jimmy Johnson (d). 9/78.
On Peace, Cyrille drives things along with great generosity of spirit. Working without a piano, Dickerson sounds both edgier and more expressive, recalling the innovative work of the previous decade.

 Divine Gemini /  Tenderness / (*) Dialogue Steeplechase SCCD 31089 / 31213 / 31345 2CD Dickerson; Richard Davis (b). 2/77.
 Shades Of Love Steeplechase SCCD 14889 Dickerson (vib solo). 11/77.
 I Hear You John Steeplechase SCCD 31146 Dickerson; Jimmy Johnson (d). 10/78.
Working alone on Shades Of Love presented no terrors. The original LP consisted of just three tracks, 'Infinite Love', the short 'Love Is You' and the rather unromantic sounding 'Interim Love'. The reissue includes a second take of 'Infinite Love', which will be of interest to anyone who is intrigued by Dickerson's full-on approach to improvisation, tinged as ever with elements of both Hampton and Jackson but abstractly conceived.

Richard Davis is a well-practised duo improviser and he falls in at once with Dickerson's conception, giving the whole session a rich, almost symphonic depth of tone and breadth of development. The two albums have been compiled as Dialogue, though for the time being they may be found separately. I Hear You John is rather prosaic, though there is no mistaking the amount of emotion that has gone into it.

 Life Rays Soul Note 121028 Dickerson; Sirone (b); Andrew Cyrille (d). 82.
In the dynamic company of Sirone and Cyrille, Walt emerges as a particular kind of modernist, a radical-conservative. Most of the tracks are quite long, but 'Good Relationship' and a titanic version of 'It Ain't Necessarily So' give the set epic dimensions. Dickerson seems to be striking harder than usual, Cyrille is faultless and the music has a strongly percussive quality. Sirone is magnificent whenever soloing, but rather anonymous in accompaniment.

Also, in brief:

() Visions Steeplechase SCCD 31126. 7/78.
For all its cosmic subtexts, Visions is remarkably restrained, with duo partner Sun Ra playing some of his most intimate and earthbound piano. Once considered a minor classic, it has lost a lot of its original sheen.

() To My Queen Revisited Steeplechase SCCD 31112. 7/78.
A disappointing sequel.

Whit Dickey (born 1954)

DRUMS

Studied with Milford Graves, and has been associated with Davis S. Ware and Matthew Shipp. He is very much in the line of the 'New Thing' percussionists, almost 'classically' free.

(*) Transonic AUM Fidelity 005-2 Dickey; Rob Brown (as); Chris Lightcap (b). 1/98.
 Big Top Wobbly Rail 10 As above, except add Joe Morris (g). 00.
Dickey and Brown are frequent workmates, and Lightcap does a sound job in finding a way between them: Transonic is flaring and exciting free jazz, much of it played at full tilt, yet never so chaotically noisy that you feel the players are blowing just for the hell of it. Dickey notes, interestingly, that several of the eight themes were inspired by a couple of Monk tunes, 'Off Minor' and 'Criss Cross', and that grounding in a central jazz language suggests how they keep sight of a solid form behind the spontaneities. Big Top builds on its predecessor. Morris adds a layer of sound which helps the accessibility of this music. Dickey's two originals bracket Dolphy's 'Prophet' and Monk's lively 'Skippy', played very freely and hyperactively.

 Prophet Moon Riti CD 006 Dickey; Rob Brown (as); Joe Morris (g). 2/02.
(*) Coalescence /  Sacred Ground Clean Feed CF021 / 057 Dickey; Roy Campbell (t, flhn); Rob Brown (as); Joe Morris (b). 2/03; 04.
 In A Heartbeat Clean Feed CF037 Dickey; Roy Campbell (t,flhn); Rob Brown (as); Joe Morris (g); Chris Lightcap (b). 11/04.
The association between these players is a long-standing one now, and Prophet Moon, credited to Trio Ahxoloxha, is an intense three-way discussion. The timbre of the group can seem a little monochrome at times, given Morris's penchant for a neutral tone and Brown's even dynamics, but Dickey's own playing has rare clarity, which seems to bind the music together. The title-piece even resembles a blues jam.

Campbell arrives, Morris switches to upright bass and a new label association begins, characterized by the Portuguese imprint's bright, bold sound and vivid documentary approach. 'Mojo Rising' is better than the two-part title-piece, and it's largely down to Morris's thundering figure underneath the horn. The other date by this group came out some time later and marks a slackening of concentration, one feels. Lightcap returns for the Clean Feed album, opening with the surprise choice of Carla Bley's 'Calls'. The extra numbers add some clutter to Dickey's music, perhaps not always for the best: Brown sounds as if he's looking for extremes which don't really suit him. But some passages offer gripping and wholly absorbing playing. The titles, including 'Peace Overture', 'Dubya's Flying Lesson' and 'Democracy At Home', are downright inflammatory.

Also, in brief:

 Life Cycle AUM Fidelity AUM020. 9/00.
The Nommonsemble includes Rob Brown (as, f), Mat Maneri (vla) and Matthew Shipp (p), all of whom favour the dryer end of free jazz.

Neville Dickie (born 1937)

PIANO

Born in Co. Durham. He was playing professionally in his teens. He has a huge knowledge of pre-swing piano styles and is particularly devoted to Fats Waller and the stride masters.

(*) Shout For Joy Southland SCD-31 Dickie; Dick Morrissey (ts); Al Casey (g); Mickey Ashman (b); Terry Jenkins (d). 5/89.
 The Piano Has It Stomp Off CD1269 Dickie; Mickey Ashman (b); John Petters (d). 4–9/93.
 Oh! Play That Thing Stomp Off CD1309 Dickie; Mickey Ashman (b); Norman Emberson (d). 8–9/95.
Shout For Joy is a lot of fun, and Dickie had never had a better sound on a record – cut at the Bull's Head in Barnes, the very close-up sound gives the group a physicality which, when they dig in on the stompers, is enormously effective. Fifteen favourites from various books – Albert Ammons, Freddie Shayne, Leroy Carr, plus various standards – give Britain's answer to Don Ewell and Ralph Sutton the chance to execute some of the steadiest of his steady-rolling blues-to-boogie lines. Al Casey is on hand to add a smiling authenticity, but the real surprise is the presence of Morrisey, spreading around his best R&B licks at a period when he was doing the soft-funk of Morrisey Mullen. When they pile into 'Swanee River', it's sheer joyful abandon. On The Piano Has It there are 21 treatments of piano-roll solos, all played in faithful approximation to the originals, often solo. This is a scholar's record and it stands up well on that count, with Dickie obviously enjoying himself and the best of the pieces – James P. Johnson's 'Modernistic', for instance – securing a strong virtuosity. It is all rather samey, though, and Dickie doesn't quite have the bullish impact of his heroes. Dickie goes for the most sacred institution of revivalists on Oh! Play That Thing, the King Oliver Creole Jazz Band. Nearly all of these pieces are out of Oliver's 1923 repertoire, and this time Dickie has more provocative points to make. His version of 'Snake Rag' points up the crossover between early jazz and ragtime with startling clarity, as well as underlining how ragtime turned into jazz. The few later pieces, such as a terrific version of 'Wa Wa Wa' (Dixie Syncopators' repertoire), are a valuable addendum.

(*) Charleston Mad Stomp Off CD1324 Dickie (p); Martin Wheatley (bj, g). 6–7/96.
(*) Don't Forget To Mess Around Stomp Off CD1341 Dickie; Alex Revell (cl); Martin Wheatley (bj). 8/98–1/99.
Dickie and producer Bob Erdos were shrewd in varying the settings for his steamrollering style. It's hard to imagine anyone wanting all of his records, but each of them has bountiful rewards, and this pair might be his best – although Stomp Off's generosity (77:00 and 77:52 respectively!) can be exhausting. Charleston Mad was an idea to do numbers by female singers of the vaudeville era, and there are some terrific obscurities along with more familiar tunes. Dickie essays his customary striding for much of the disc, but he tempers the momentum with barrelhousing of a less pugilistic sort, and there is the excellent Wheatley, who underscores (and solos) on ten tracks. Don't Forget To Mess Around re-creates the Armstrong repertoire of the '20s. Dickie is at home on fast, stomping tunes like 'Struttin' With Some Barbecue', but the record is cleverly paced, with Revell and Wheatley adding piquancy in their walk-on roles. Dickie will never be accused of delicacy, but on a tune such as 'I'm Goin' Huntin'' at least he tricks a certain daintiness out of his right-hand figures.

 Never Heard Of Such Stuff! Stomp Off CD 1397 Dickie; Norman Emberson (d). 4/03.
This isn't the first time a CD has been specifically devoted to Fats Waller's rarer material – Stomp Off themselves have done it before with Marty Grosz's Unsaturated Fats, and that one was better than this. Dickie's difficulty is that many of Waller's lesser-known tunes are unfamiliar for the good reason that they're not up to his best. Neville strides through the programme with his usual enthusiasm, but a long CD is pushing it a bit.

 Just You, Just Me Stomp Off CD 1404 Dickie; Paul Asaro (p); Micky Ashman (b); Nick Millward (d). 10/04.
Most of these tracks are duets by Dickie and his youthful American stride counterpart Asaro. Ashman and Millward only play on the concluding 'Tiger Rag', and each ivory-tickler has three solos to himself. They are smart at not getting in each other's way, and Asaro clearly has a good feel for the stride idiom. But it's still difficult to make a (typically) long Stomp Off CD work all the way through. The slower pieces, such as a fine 'Tishomingo Blues', are some of the best, and Neville's glorious take on Grieg's 'Anitra's Dance' is a treat.

Danny D'Imperio (born 1945)

DRUMS

Veteran New York-area drummer, dedicated to hardcore hard bop and leading groups whose style is unflinching and straight to the point. Much big-band experience, culminating in a tour with the Buddy Rich band after the leader's death.

* Blues For Philly Joe VSOP 81 D'Imperio; Greg Gisbert (t); Gary Pribek (as); Ralph Lalama (ts); Hod O'Brien (p); Steve Brown (g); Dave Shapiro (b). 9/91.
(*) Hip To It VSOP 86 As above, except omit Pribek; add Jimmy Johns (tb); Andy Fusco (as). 10/92.
Superbly accomplished hard bop without frills, bluster or wasted space, despite the repertorial tunes and long running-times. D'Imperio originally called the band the Metropolitan Bopera House but got into a famous spat with the Met itself and had to stand down. The bruising quality of the music suggests that he couldn't have given up without a fight. Each set-list admits no originals, just classic or neglected set-pieces from the golden years of hard bop, and the band, in whichever incarnation, plays the hell out of them. The individual soloists have their standout moments, although Gisbert, then virtually unknown, makes a remarkable appearance on Blues For Philly Joe and Lalama is consistently fine across both records. Away from any leadership or compositional duties, the horns seem entirely relaxed while still able to burn, and perhaps the most notable element is how crisp the ensemble work is: unison lines have the crisp intensity of great big-band section playing. With everything coming democratically from the past, the formula also lets obscurer pieces stand as tall as obvious chestnuts like 'Nica's Tempo'. D'Imperio himself is commanding without trying to take over: he keeps himself to fills and breaks, and if he seems entirely in thrall to Art Blakey, so be it.

(*) The Outlaw Sackville SKCD2 3060 D'Imperio; Greg Gisbert, Andy Gravish (t); Chris Persad (flhn); Gary Pribek (as); Ralph Lalama, John Rohde (ts); Joe Carello (bs); Hod O'Brien (p); Dave Shapiro (b); Steve Brown (perc). 8/94-8/96.

D'Imperio's records for VSOP might still be available here and there, but this is the only secure survivor, marked out by the leader's Blakeyish role, driving the band along on the Wayne Shorter arrangement of 'One By One' and ably abetted by the exciting Gravish, a regular sideman of the '90s.

 Danny D'Imperio And The Bloviators Rompin' 045 D'Imperio; Chris Persad (t); Gary Pribek (as); Ralph Lalama (ts); Joe Carello (bs); Dino Losito (p); Peter Mack (b). 9/00.
 Big Band Bloviation Rompin' 046 D'Imperio; Dave Stahl, Greg Gisbert, Joe Magnarelli, Chris Persad, Glenn Drewes (t); John Mosca, Larry Farrell, Bruce Eidem (tb); Jim Daniels (btb); Joe Carello (as, f); Gary Pribek (as); Eric Alexander, John Rohde (ts); Barry Harris, Dino Losito (p); Peter Bernstein (g); Peter Mack (b). 10/01.

Still out there, keeping the hard-bop flame, and now on a new label. The septet record is, surprisingly, a little disappointing, in part because the placid studio sound tames the spirit of the band and makes them sound like the very thing which D'Imperio has managed to avoid in the past, an everyday hard-bop group. There's still plenty to enjoy, with the usual set of vintage tunes (plus, shockingly, an original by Losito!), and the horns inevitably step out for some accomplished solos. The big-band set sounds tougher, although again there's an unwonted hint of routine in performances which for once lose some of their impetus with the strings of solos. Even so, the three-trumpet chase on 'Three More Foxes', Eric Alexander on Wes Montgomery's 'Four On Six' and a grooving 'Adam's Apple' (by Alan Broadbent, not Wayne Shorter) are worthy flashpoints.

Jakob Dinesen (born 1970)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Danish co-leader of the group Once Around The Park, with Anders Christensen. Studied at Berklee; played with Gary Burton and Paul Motian.

 Around Stunt STUCD 19919-2 Dinesen; Ben Besiakov (p); Kurt Rosenwinkel (g); Anders Christensen, Nils Bo Davidsen (b); Paul Motian, Jeppe Gram (d). 1–5/99.
(*) Everything Will Be All Right Stunt STUCD 02152 Dinesen; Kurt Rosenwinkel (g); Anders Christensen (b); Kresten Osgood (d). 8/02.
 Lady With A Secret Stunt STUCD 05052 Dinesen; Ben Besiakov (p); Eddie Gomez (b); Nasheet Waits (d). 4/04.
 One Kiss Too Many Stunt STUCD 07022 Dinesen; Jacob Bro (g); Ben Street (b); Nasheet Waits (d). 11/06.

The even-tempered quartet session on Around (Besiakov, Davidsen and Gram only play on the final track, from a Copenhagen gig) has a Tristano-ish feel; Dinesen's long lines matched with Berklee buddy Rosenwinkel's unemphatic playing recalls Konitz and Bauer. Three Monk tunes have their abrasive lines softened and even Motian seems to be playing undemonstratively. The closing live take on 'In Walked Bud' feels tacked on. The second album has a more urgent feel, in part because the vigorous Osgood is high in the mix. But the dialogue between Dinesen and Rosenwinkel is again the core of the music. With five Dinesen originals, the music has a pleasing consistency, the fast pieces stirring, the slower ones absorbing. Dinesen's tenor again flirts only reluctantly with extremes of tone, with just the occasional plangent note. Lady With A Secret has live music by the Danish combo in the 2004 Jazzpar Prize concerts. It's a solid sax quartet record, the music played with aplomb but not much distinctiveness. Bro is no Rosenwinkel, but the most recent date has a new vigour that suggests Dinesen prefers a guitar behind him; a folkish tinge, this time.

Gene DiNovi (born 1928)

PIANO

Worked with Lester Young and Benny Goodman, flirted with bebop then came to the notice of Duke Ellington and Billy Strayhorn, of whom he became an accomplished interpreter

(*) Renaissance Of A Jazz Master /  Live At The Montreal Bistro Candid CACD 769708 / 79726 DiNovi; Dave Young (b); Terry Clarke (d). 3/93.

It might be easier to list the great players DiNovi hasn't worked with. A lot rubbed off along the way and the beautifully balanced Renaissance puts the emphasis on upbeat, forward-leaning themes: 'A Cockeyed Optimist', 'Springsville', 'Till The Clouds Roll By', 'Right As The Rain' – hardly jazz piano clichés, any of them. Elegant and skilful, he never lets the melody disappear behind mere harmonic artifice, and his two companions are equally respectful. The live date, taped on a regular gig, is more workmanlike, but DiNovi's touch is unfailing and the group melds seamlessly.

 Plays The Music Of Benny Carter Hep 2076 DiNovi (p solo). 1/99.

With the best will in the world, these themes aren't the best-known in the repertory and without bass and drums DiNovi can sound a bit detached and uncommunicative, so it's a musicianly set rather than one to get excited about.

(*) Plays Duke Ellington And Billy Strayhorn Baldwin Street 205 DiNovi; Dave Young (b). 02.

Each April, around Duke's birthday, DiNovi plays a residency at the Montreal Bistro devoted to the music of Ellington and Strayhorn. It's a wonderful idea and DiNovi's spoken introductions give the event and the CD a special cast. Working without a drummer, but with the all-important anchor provided by Dave Young, he sounds in great form. 'Isfahan' is meltingly beautiful, though played with more muscle than most horn players give it, and the two medleys, 'Chelsea Bridge/Warm Valley' and 'Single Petal Of A Rose/A Flower Is A Lovesome Thing' are impeccably constructed. 'Lady Mac' and 'Tomorrow Mountain' are less well-known and all the more welcome for that.

Also, in brief:

 At The Stables Hep 2071. 96.
Gene and Spike Robinson (ts). Lovely.

(*) The Three Optimists At The Old Mill Sackville SKCD 2072. 07.
With his Generations Trio. Appealing enough in a low-key way.

Joe Diorio (born 1936)

GUITAR

A veteran modernist and noted teacher and theorist who started recording late.

 Double Take RAM RMCD 4502 Diorio; Riccardo Del Frà (b). 4/92.
(*) We Will Meet Again RAM RMCD 4501 Diorio (g solo). 5/92.
 The Breeze And I RAM RMCD 4508 Diorio; Ira Sullivan (f, af, ss, as, perc). 6/93.
(*) More Than Friends RAM RMCD 514 Diorio; Steve LaSpina (b); Steve Bagby (d). 6/93.
He knows all the tunes, obviously loves them immoderately, but still manages to impart a little personal spin to even the most hackneyed warhorse standard. These recordings are all supremely elegant, affectionate and mainly thoughtful, and it is difficult to draw qualitative distinctions between subtly different sessions. In our judgement, the duos with Mick Goodrick (listed under his name) are less appetizing than the trio discs or the pairing with Sullivan, a player who trades up a limited stock of ideas by the sheer variety of sounds he can command on his horns. The other duo session, with Del Frà, is alternately exquisite and drab (two takes of 'Summertime' isn't quite gilding the lily). Like it, most of the sessions consist of standards, but graced with so much intelligence that almost all sound as if they have just been written. And then there are the unexpected coups, like 'The Summer Knows' on The Breeze And I, which jolt the whole thing into a new dimension. Diorio keeps going in and out of focus as a solo artist. This batch offers a fair portrait of an artist who has a very personal take on harmonic improvisation (see his book Intervallic Designs) and who has managed to reconcile it comfortably with straight chordal accompaniment, polyphonic ideas and some carefully selected aspects of free improvisation.

(*) I Remember You: A Tribute To Wes Montgomery RAM 4523 Diorio; Steve LaSpina (b); Steve Bagby (d). 98.
Joe apparently knew Wes and knows the classic trios inside out. Given that Montgomery wasn't much of a composer, almost all the material here is repertory stuff, though the trio include some original things as well, notably 'The Two Faces Of Steve'. LaSpina is wonderful on his own 'When You're Away' and lays down a memorable solo. Bagby is superb on his brushes and the whole set reeks of class. The most appealing tracks, for both Wes and Joe fans, are the opening 'I Remember You' and a wonderfully prolonged version of 'In A Sentimental Mood'. Nice, crisp sound that combines a live feel with studio polish.

 Stateside Diorio Jazz 1729 Diorio; Bob Magnusson (b); Jim Plank (d). 00.
Diorio hasn't found it easy to gain the interest of American labels, so this is a first issue on his own imprint. It follows the now familiar pattern of apparent predictability – eight fairly conventional standards – despatched with considerable invention. 'Alone Together' is a wonderful exercise in group co-ordination; Magnusson and Plank sound as if they've played this one with Joe dozens of times, but they're still finding new angles. 'Corcovado' is given an edgier quality than is usual, as is 'You And The Night And The Music'. But the album saves its greatest delight for last. Thad Jones's 'A Child Is Born' is a genuine modern classic and this is a definitive performance, close to perfection.

Also, in brief:

* To Jobim With Love RAM 4529. 9/95.
A delicious solo set of bossa classics preceded by Joe's short title tribute to the Brazilian master.

The Diplomats

GROUP

Boisterous free-bop collective.

 We Are Not Obstinate Islands Clean Feed CF061 Steve Swell (tb); Rob Brown (as); Harris Eisenstadt (d). 06.
We're not sure we'd send these guys to sort out an international incident. That said, there is a lot of quietly philosophical stuff hidden away among these four long improvisations. The shortest of the bunch, 'Past The Roots', is perversely the most effective, making one wish for a slightly more focused approach. However, it's exciting music, and with Swell sometimes acting as the anchor and Eisenstadt doing his usual vivid turn, it's an excellent listen.

Mike DiRubbo (born 1970)

ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Studied with Jackie McLean at the Hartt School of Music and still clings to that style of playing.

 From The Inside Out Sharp Nine 1013 DiRubbo; Steve Davis (tb); Bruce Barth (p); Nat Reeves (b); Carl Allen (d). 10/94.
DiRubbo's debut cemented his Jackie-isms by teaming him with players who had worked with McLean. It's an influence lightly enough worn, though, and for this album Mike ranges more widely for his material. Sahib Shihab's 'Rue De La Harpe' is outstanding, a deceptively detailed line, and there is a nice version of Dizzy Gillespie's generic 'Bebop'. The original themes begin with the title-track, which gets the set off to a brisk start, but one starts to sit up and take notice with the subtly paced 'Role Reversal' and 'Blues To Your Old Country', European chords within an expanded 12-bar format. Allen's drumming is sharply on the money, and the front line gives the set a distinctive timbre.

(*) Keep Steppin' Criss Cross 1205 DiRubbo; Joe Rotondi (t); Mike LeDonne (p); Dwayne Burno (b); Joe Farnsworth (d). 1/01.
(*) Human Spirit Criss Cross 1231 As above, except omit LeDonne, Burno; add David Hazeltine (p); Peter Washington (b). 5/02.
DiRubbo gravitated naturally to Criss Cross, as he might once have to Blue Note. His style is still firmly locked into that period of hard bop and in some respects Steppin' is a more straight-ahead set than its predecessor. The title-track is very much in period and very effective on its own terms, building on the group awareness established on Mike LeDonne's opening 'Encounter', a fairly orthodox variation on familiar chord changes. 'Introspection' is in relaxed waltz-time and the saxophonist's solo contains subtle nods to Stan Getz and Joe Henderson. LeDonne is usually the allusive one, and scarcely a chorus of his goes by without one or two sneaky tips of the hat to great and less-celebrated piano-players. McCoy Tyner's 'Sunset' is for saxophone and rhythm only and it's good to hear DiRubbo featured so prominently. He has a warm and emphatic tone, pitched lower than McLean and at times almost sounding like the middle register of a tenor saxophone.

On the second Criss Cross date, the same basic elements are still in place and the replacement of LeDonne, such a crucial element on the first record, is handled seamlessly. Hazeltine favours a less allusive and less oblique approach, as can be heard on 'Minor March' and the intriguing 'Throwback'. DiRubbo's terse theme statements are heard to good effect and his soloing goes from strength to strength.

(*) New York Accent Cellar Live 122506 DiRubbo; Harold Mabern (p); Dwayne Burno (b); Tony Reedus (d). 2/06.
Recorded live in Vancouver, DiRubbo turns in an inspired set that ranges from pungent bop ('Ray's Idea') to more romantic material like 'Prelude To A Kiss' and Billy Joel's 'She's Always A Woman'. DiRubbo's soprano-playing has always been secondary, but he deploys it effectively here. Mabern's the key to the date, in his pomp and full of wisdom.

Diz Disley (born 1939)

GUITAR, VOCAL

A staunch sideman (Grappelli, others) who's made surprisingly little impact as a leader or on record.

 At The White Bear Jazzology 212 Disley; & His String Quartet. 11/58.
Not quite the kind of string quartet you'd expect, but a vivid cohort of good jazzers working a predictable ('Nuages', 'Sweet Sue', 'Honeysuckle Rose', etc.) but beautifully weighted programme. The 19-year-old Disley has real presence and impressive musicianship.

Dixie Stompers

GROUP

Various outfits went out under this name.

 Jazz At Westminster College Delmark DE204 Bill Mason (c); Jim Haislip (tb); Norman Mason (cl); Glenn Tintera, John Chapman (p); Pete Patterson (bj); Bob Kornacher (d). 3 & 4/57.
 Stock Yards Strut Delmark DE229 Bill Mason (c); Jim Haislip (tb); Frank Powers (cl); Don Franz (tba); Jack Kuncl (bj); Wayne Jones (d); Karen Carroll (v). 9/94.
A chance to eavesdrop a bygone age, at the height of the Midwest revival boom, with the Stompers playing a college gig in Fulton, Missouri, together with private sessions at a frat house (what a nostalgic ring that has) and in someone's home. Delmark boss Bob Koester was initially much involved in Dixieland recording and it's nice to be reminded of it on this 2007 reissue. Amazingly, they're still at it in 1993, the 40th anniversary of their formation and of the Delmark imprint. The latter-day date, recorded the following year, is a bit creaky and, not unexpectedly, the years have whittled away the personnel, but the group sound is still good and Karen Carroll's five vocals vary it nicely.

Dixieland Jug Blowers

GROUP

Founded by warring friends Earl McDonald and Clifford Hayes.

 Louisville Stomp: The Complete Sessions Frog 6062 Johnny Dodds (cl); George Allen (ss, as); Lockwood Lewis (as, v); Clifford Hayes (vn); Curtis Hayes, Freddy Smith (bj); Cal Smith (g, bj); Henry Clifford (jug); Earl McDonald (jug, v); Prince LaVaughn, Elizabeth Washington (v). 12/26, 6/27.
Said to be the first jug band to record. McDonald and Hayes had fallen out by the time these 23 tracks were made under the group name, but they continued to work together. The presence of Dodds makes these crude but engaging cuts of more than passing interest. Hayes was the main composer, but Clifford and LaVaughn took a hand and much of the interest centres on founder McDonald's often spoken parts. A historical sidebar, to be sure, but a fascinating one.

Bill Dixon (born 1925)

TRUMPET

His first important associations were with Cecil Taylor and Archie Shepp, but in 1964 the trumpeter organized the October Revolution In Jazz, the New Thing's equivalent of the Armory Show. He has been an important educator, largely at the Bennington College in Vermont.

 7-Tette / New York Contemporary Five Savoy Jazz 73008 Dixon; Don Cherry, Ted Curson (t); Ken McIntyre (as, f); George Barrow, Archie Shepp (ts); Howard Johnson (bs, tba); Ronnie Boykins, David Izenzon (b); Sunny Murray (d). 2/64.
This is Dixon's important first statement, released on the label he was helping to run, and paired here with a set by Archie Shepp's New York Contemporary Five, who claimed the second side of the original LP. Dixon's piece is the five-part 'Winter Song', a gently flowing, semi-abstract suite of ideas that are reminiscent in places of some of Mingus's late-'50s pieces, but marked throughout by Dixon's melancholy lyricism and fine sense of structure. The Shepp material is worth having as well, though inevitably one wishes there were more material by both groups. Two alternate takes of 'Winter Song: Section III, Letter F' appear on the CD and add somewhat to our understanding of the genesis of the album, but it's still a thin representation of Dixon's work at this time.

(*) Solo Works (Odyssey) no label/no number 6CD Dixon (t solo, speech). 70–90.
(*) Collection: Music for Solo Trumpet Cadence 3712 Dixon; Lawrence Cook, David Moss (perc). 70–76.
Dixon's mellow tone, mournful delivery and preference for short, asymmetrical phrases sometimes recall Miles Davis. His is a very different line of development, though. These mostly lo-fi recordings are a valuable record of his progress as a solo performer. The box set, carefully compiled by the trumpeter himself and issued with examples of his fine artwork, is for specialists only but it's a rewarding experience, even at five hours' duration.

It's difficult to trace any obvious line of evolution from the earliest pieces – the tiny 'Mosaic', 'Albert Ayler' and longer 'Fortunata' from 1970 – to epic conceptions like 'Jerusalem' from 1990. Some are dedicated to fellow artists and friends, Booker Little in a gorgeous piece from 1975–6, 'For Wallace Thurman' and 'Umbra E Luce – For Sid Makay' both from 1973. Remarkably few come across merely as technical exercises, even when that is the presumed intention, and it's to Dixon's eternal credit that every piece, however shakily recorded, seems to have its own logic and purpose. The final disc consists of a valuable interview with the trumpeter, talking about his art, the vagaries of a career as a creative musician and the course of his long creative odyssey. Realistically, most listeners will be satisfied with the Cadence set, which includes some of this material on two rather brief CDs. The Booker Little requiem, 'Mosaic', 'Albert Ayler' and the three-part 'I See Your Fancy Footwork' are all there.

 Bill Dixon In Italy: Volumes 1–2 Soul Note 121008 / 121011 Dixon; Arthur Brooks, Stephen Haynes (t); Stephen Horenstein (ts, bs); Alan Silva (b); Freddie Waits (d). 7/80.

Having made a substantial mark with Cecil Taylor – notably on Conquistador – Dixon's own work seemed to languish during the '70s and it was only the enthusiasm of Giovanni Bonandrini that gave the trumpeter an outlet commensurate with his gifts. The 1980 studio dates (only his third in 20 years) are very much in the Taylor line and the closing track on Volume 1 is dedicated to the pianist. Dixon doesn't feature himself that prominently, preferring to spread much of the higher voicing round the three-trumpet front line. Horenstein has an unenviable task trying to keep up and is much more effective when he switches to baritone.

* November 1981 Soul Note 121038 Dixon; Mario Pavone, Alan Silva (b); Laurence Cook (d). 11/81.
 Thoughts Soul Note 121111 As above, except add Marco Eneidi (as); John Buckingham (tba); Peter Kowald, William Parker (b). 5/85.
(*) Sons Of Sisyphus Soul Note 121138 As above, except omit Eneidi, Kowald, Parker. 6/88.

November 1981 may be considered Dixon's small-group masterpiece, patiently conceived and executed, and generously proportioned. Dixon likes to build his ideas around silence, but these statuesque themes also use rich drones provided by the bass-player (a device even more noticeable on Thoughts, which has three of them). As ever, the trumpet is used quite sparingly, with the opening 'Webern' (less than a minute and a half) there to underline his use of the Klangfarbenmelodie device whereby different instruments play different parts of the line and in which timbre and colour are structural principles and not just decoration. Music as concentrated as 'Penthesilea' or the 'Llaattiinnoo Suite', performed live, requires certain adjustments of musical expectation, but they are consistently satisfying and Bonandrini provides a generous, albeit intimate, sound which suits Dixon very well indeed. Pavone and Cook survive from the earlier group, but Thoughts lacks its impact and drifts off into inconsequential and sometimes pretentious ramblings (for which, see 'For Nelson And Winnie: A Suite In Four Parts', which sounds like random studio ideas cobbled together to meet an important public moment). Again, Dixon's playing is at a discount, though his silences are resonantly meaningful too.

Sons Of Sisyphus (the title refers to an earlier, large-scale composition) is superior in almost every regard. It begins with a brooding duo for bass and Dixon on piano. 'Silences For Jack Moore' is a threnody for a dancer friend, always an important source of inspiration for Dixon, cast in the familiar bass range he favours. The sonorities are even darker on the long title-tracks, where Buckingham's tuba fills the role accorded the trio of bassists on Thoughts. The overriding impression is of space and movement and there's a sense in which Dixon's melancholically graceful soloing follows Cecil Taylor's much-quoted assertion that his own improvisations imitate the leaps that a dancer makes in space.

 Vade Mecum / (*) ... II Soul Note 121208 / 121211 Dixon; Barry Guy, William Parker (b); Tony Oxley (d). 8/93; 96.
 Papyrus /  ... Volume 2 Soul Note 121308 / 121338 Dixon; Tony Oxley (d). 9/00.

Inside almost all of Dixon's small group recordings there is a dark pressure, like the imprint of a much larger composition that has been denied full expression. That is profoundly evident on Vade Mecum, which begins Dixon's association with British percussionist Tony Oxley. It might be argued that both Oxley and compatriot Guy are too 'strong' in conception to conform to Dixon's exceptionally disciplined approach, and there is a hint that this may have resulted in conflict when one finds Oxley's role dismissed as 'background' on the later duo records. The two bassists take very different parts: Parker is sonorous and inward, while Guy flitters rapidly on what may be a chamber bass. 'Anamorphosis' on the first record is one of Dixon's most thoughtful conceptions, but if anything the second disc is more coherent and cogent.

There are moments when trumpeter and percussionist seem to be working on different ideas; were they recorded separately? And yet, there is such a stirring thoughtfulness to Dixon's spacious solo lines that the logic carries each piece forward to a satisfactory conclusion.

 Berlin Abbozzi FMP CD 110 Dixon; Matthias Bauer, Klaus Koch (b); Tony Oxley (d). 7/00.

Again, Dixon experiments with this quartet formation and again the impression is of players working at some remove from each other, or rather that Dixon works at some distance from the ensemble. His horn-lines are as open and gnomic as ever. Bauer and Koch are sometimes in the way, of each other if not of Dixon and Oxley, who seem to reprise the same slightly guarded and touchy relationship one hears on Papyrus. The key long suite is based on melodic ideas, resonant pedal-points and slow, softly shifting accompaniments that have run through Dixon's work since the '60s.

Also, in brief:

 Opium Between The Lines btl 011. 4/73, 8/76.

Originally on the tiny Pipe imprint and mainly taken up with material by Steve Lacy and label boss Franz Koglmann, but Dixon's 'For Franz' is, at 17 minutes, a significant statement.

Steve Dobrogosz

PIANO

One of the finest vocal accompanists working in Europe, a role that has largely eclipsed his skill as a composer and solo performer.

 Final Touch Dragon DRCD195 Dobrogosz; Berit Andersson (v). 1/89.
 Jade Dragon DRCD 203 Dobrogosz; Joakim Milder (ts); Putte Wickman (cl); Mats Bergström (g); Mats Ronander (hca); Olle Steinholtz (b); Per Lindvall (d); Berit Andersson (v); woodwinds, strings. 8 & 9/90.
(*) The Best Of Dragon DRCD 2003 2CD As above, except add Anders Jormin, Christian Spering (b); Alex Riel (d).

Dobrogosz has been associated with a number of fine Scandinavian singers over the years, including the tragic Radka Toneff, but his partnership with Berit Andersson has been the most successful. It's perhaps unusual to list such records under the accompanist's name, but Steve is the composer of all the songs on Final Touch and Jade and his piano-playing is a more than functional component of these performances. Imagine a collaboration between Cole Porter, the William Walton of Charade and Fran Landesman and you have something of the strangely beautiful cast of songs like 'Topaz And Sir Tom', 'Salieri On The Throne' (both from the second album) or 'Famous Guy And His Famous Girl' on Final Touch. The best-of selection is probably all anyone but a devoted collector needs.

 Duckwalk Dragon 300 Dobrogosz; David Wilczewski (sax); Olle Steinholtz (b); Magnus Öström (d). 9/96.
Relatively unusual to hear Dobrogosz in a group setting like this, but his obliquely lyrical themes are ideal for small-combo improvisation, and with Wilczewski contributing some finely idiosyncratic ideas it's a vivid and compelling set. The group's known as The Dobrogosz Quartet, which feels about right; it's more than piano-plus, but still very much a collective concern.

Baby Dodds (1898–1959)

DRUMS, VOCAL

Johnny's brother was playing drums at 16 and developing great showmanship. With King Oliver in 1922, then in Chicago for 20 years, before playing in NY with Bunk Johnson. Exemplifying the New Orleans style while remaining at a tangent from it, Dodds finally slowed down in the '50s when he suffered a series of strokes.

(*) Baby Dodds American Music AMCD-17 Dodds; Bunk Johnson, Louis 'Kid Shots' Madison, Wooden Joe Nicholas (t); Jim Robinson, Joe Petit (tb); George Lewis, Albert Burbank (cl); Adolphe Alexander Jr (bhn); Isidore Barbarin (ahn); Lawrence Marrero (bj); Red Clark, Sidney Brown (tba); Alcide 'Slow Drag' Pavageau (b). 44–45.
() Talking And Drum Solos Atavistic/Unheard Music UMS/ALP 241 Dodds (d, v); Laneville-Johnson Union Brass Band; Lapsey Band. 46, 54.
A slice of living history, Baby Dodds features the leading drummer of New Orleans jazz talking at some length about his traps, his cymbals, his style and how it all comes together – for jazz bands, marching bands, funeral parades and whatever else a drummer had to play for. Most of the music is actually lifted from other records, notably Bunk Johnson's American Music CDs. Some of it is horse sense that still holds good – 'Tiger Rag is played too fast', he grumbles, and then we hear the tempo he liked to play for it – and when he talks us through a lesson in technique, the good-natured generosity of the man comes alive again, five decades after his death. Remastering of all the speech/drum tracks is excellent, and though the music comes in mainly for illustration the compilers have chosen well.

The first eight tracks on Talking And Drum Solos were issued as a ten-inch LP on Folkway Records. They offer another fascinating insight into Baby's pioneering work in jazz rhythm. As if to illustrate how flat and uninflected the country band music he grew up out of is, there are also 19 tracks from almost a decade later, but illustrating the performing style of a fast-vanishing age. Dodds's evolution of a Caribbean-influenced percussion was of immeasurable importance and here he demonstrates shimmy beats, press rolls, workouts on the tom-toms, an extraordinary masterclass from one of the founding fathers.

(*) Jazz À La Creole GHB BCD-50 Dodds; Albert Nicholas (cl); Don Ewell, James P. Johnson, Don Kirkpatrick (p); Danny Barker (g); Pops Foster, Haywood Henry (b); Freddy Moore, Johnny Williams (d). 1/46–6/47.
Although Baby's style is all over this CD, he actually appears on only nine of the 18 tracks. Priceless are the two 'Drum Improvisation' pieces, where he demonstrates the full range of his kit and what a New Orleans man could and should do with it. There are trio pieces with Ewell and Nicholas, a piano/drums duet, and a single track with Barker and Pops Foster. Otherwise there are pieces which feature Nicholas alongside James P. Johnson and four Creole songs where Danny Barker takes the lead. All of these numbers come from the very earliest days of Rudi Blesh's Circle label, and the sleeve-notes include Blesh's reminiscences of how the initiative came into being. Ignore the few audio problems and tune in to some very deep music, full of Louisiana spirit even when it was being set down in New York City.

Johnny Dodds (1892–1940)

CLARINET, ALTO SAXOPHONE

Dodds and his brother Baby grew up in New Orleans and took the archetypal route north to Chicago. Though he did take some lessons with Lorenzo Tio Jr, the clarinettist was mainly self-taught and this may account for some idiosyncrasies which contributed very considerably to Dodds's distinctive sound. He was one of the great early soloists of jazz.

* Johnny Dodds 1926 Classics 589 Dodds; Freddie Keppard, George Mitchell (c); Kid Ory, Eddie Vincent (tb); Junie Cobb (cl); Joe Clark (as); Lockwood Lewis (as, v); Lil Hardin Armstrong, Jimmy Blythe, Arthur Campbell, Tiny Parham (p); Curtis Hayes, Cal Smith, Freddy Smith (bj); Eustern Woodfork, Johnny St Cyr (bj, v); Clifford Hayes (vn); W. E. Burton (wbd, v); Earl McDonald (jug, v); Jimmy Bertrand, Jasper Taylor (d, perc); Papa Charlie Jackson, Trixie Smith (v). 5–12/26.
* Johnny Dodds 1927 Classics 603 Dodds; Freddie Keppard (c); Eddie Ellis (tb); Lil Hardin Armstrong, Jimmy Blythe, Tiny Parham (p); Jasper Taylor (d); Baby Dodds (wbd). 1–10/27.
* Johnny Dodds 1927–1928 Classics 617 Dodds; Natty Dominique, George Mitchell (c); R. Q. Dickerson (t); Honoré Dutrey , Kid Ory, John Thomas (tb); Charlie Alexander, Jimmy Blythe (p); Bud Scott (bj); Bill Johnson (b); Baby Dodds (d); W. E. Burton (wbd, v); Julia Davis (v). 10/27–7/28.
 Johnny Dodds 1928–1940 Classics 635 Dodds; Natty Dominique, Herb Morand (c); Charlie Shavers (t); Honoré Dutrey , Preston Jackson (tb); Charlie Alexander, Lil Hardin Armstrong, Jimmy Blythe, Richard M. Jones, Frank Melrose (p); Teddy Bunn, Lonnie Johnson (g); Junie Cobb (g, v); Bill Johnson, John Kirby, John Lindsay (b); O'Neil Spencer (d, wbd, v); Baby Dodds (d, wbd). 7/28–5/40.
* Johnny Dodds & Jimmy Blythe, 1926–1928 Timeless CBC 015 Dodds; Louis Armstrong, Natty Dominique, Freddie Keppard (t); Punch Miller (c); Roy Palmer (tb); Jimmy Blythe (p); Bud Scott (bj); Jimmy Bertrand (wbd); W. E. Burton (wbd, v); Jasper Taylor (d, wbd); Trixie Smith (v). 5/26–3/28.
(*) New Orleans Stomp Frog DGF39 Dodds; Louis Armstrong (c, t); Natty Dominique, George Mitchell (c); James Tate (t);

Fayette Williams, Roy Palmer, John Thomas (tb); Stump Evans (as, bs); Norval Morton, Barney Bigard (ts); Lovie Austin, Teddy Weatherford, Lil Hardin Armstrong, Earl Hines, Charlie Alexander (p); Johnny St Cyr, Bud Scott (bj); John Hare (tba); Jimmy Bertrand (d, wbd); Baby Dodds (d). 3/26–10/27.

(*) Blue Clarinet Stomp Frog DGF 3 Dodds; Natty Dominique (c); Honoré Dutrey (tb); Charlie Alexander, Lil Hardin Armstrong (p); Bill Johnson (b); Baby Dodds (d, wbd). 7/28–2/29.

Johnny Dodds was the model professional musician. He rehearsed his men, frowned on alcohol and drugs, and watched the cents. In 1922 he was a member of King Oliver's Creole Jazz Band at Lincoln's Garden in Chicago, the band that included Louis Armstrong, Lil Hardin Armstrong, trombonist Honoré Dutrey, and Dodds's younger brother, 'Baby'. The clarinettist left in 1924, after a quarrel about money, and set out on a highly successful recording career of his own that faltered only with the beginnings of the swing boom.

His tone was intense and sometimes fierce, rather removed from the soft introspections of Jimmie Noone or George Lewis's folksy wobble. He favoured the lower – chalumeau – register of the instrument over the piercing coloratura. He doubles briefly on alto saxophone on the July 1926 cuts (Timeless CD above) with Jimmy Blythe, perhaps to get some change out of Paramount's insensitive microphones; unlike Sidney Bechet, Dodds never seriously considered a full turn to the saxophones.

Though much of his most renowned work was with Louis Armstrong's Hot Five and Seven, the Classics compilations are the essential Dodds documents. They contain work for Brunswick, Columbia, Gennet, the ropey Paramount, Victor and Vocalion. The real classics are the cuts made for Columbia with the New Orleans Wanderers/Bootblacks, a line-up that included George Mitchell, Kid Ory, Joe Clark, Johnny St Cyr and Lil Hardin Armstrong. There are fine clarinet duets with Junie Cobb (and without brass) from 26 August 1926 which have been rather overlooked in the rush of enthusiasm for the Wanderers/Bootblacks performances of the previous month. Inevitably, very little matches up to these classics, but Dodds's reconciliation with King Oliver in September for a single track ('Someday Sweetheart') underlines the great might-have-been of their interrupted association. Dodds by this time was making too much regular money at Burt Kelly's Stables on the South Side to consider a longer recruitment. A pity, because there's a definite falling-off after 1926. The duets with Tiny Parham are interesting, and there are excellent things on the Vocalion trios of April 1927; too many pick-up bands, though, and on a lot of the material Dodds is overpowered by other voices, notably Louis Armstrong (in for a Black Bottom Stompers session that also included Barney Bigard and Earl Hines) and Jelly Roll Morton. The Classics format omits the two Morton tracks but does reinstate a number, 'Cootie Stomp', from the State Street Ramblers session of August 1927 and includes a rare June 1928 session with the vocalist Julia Davis (half her entire recorded output) and trumpeter R. Q. Dickerson. The 1927–8 disc includes some of the material excerpted on Blue Clarinet Stomp. The final Classics volume ends with a rush and there isn't much on it to treasure, beyond a trio 'Indigo Stomp' with Lil Hardin Armstrong and Bill Johnson from February 1929; the 1938 session with the young Shavers includes the beautiful '29th And Dearborn'.

Timeless and Frog cover the same ground in different permutations. New Orleans Stomp has excellent sound, and though these aren't the sessions which really find Dodds at his best, there are some rarities to tempt collectors: the swinging Teddy Peters vocal record of 'What A Man!', the alternative takes of the Lil's Hot Shots and Black Bottom Stompers sessions, and the Erskine Tate date with Armstrong where Dodds's presence is uncertain. The other Frog has all the Victor sessions together, relatively untinkered with, and a correct discographical story for 'Pencil Papa' for which dates and sessions seem to have been transposed. Collectors will be satisfied; newcomers can feel they have a reasonable sampling of the classic material; and the remastering is top-notch. Neither disc will disappoint anyone who isn't interested in following the Classics sequence right through to its heartbreakingly banal end with the feeble 1940 session. Dodds is one of those jazzmen who may be in danger of slipping into history, and these meticulous reissues play a part in keeping a crucial memory of early jazz alive.

Also, in brief:

 Paramount Recordings /  ... Volume 2 Black Swan BSCD 32 / 33. 10/24–12/27; 4/26–2/29.

A collection of oddments from the Paramount label, almost all of them recorded under other leaders, often singers. The second volume has Dodds as a sideman with a variety of ensembles, including Jasper Taylor, Jimmy Blythe, Lovie Austin and Junie Cobb. Footnote stuff, in the main.

 King Of The New Orleans Clarinet Black & Blue 235. 7/26–1/38.

Nice career compilation that will satisfy most tastes for Dodds.

 The Myth Of New Orleans Giants of Jazz 53077. 7/26–6/33.

Cheap option; bargain basement sound.

Jerry Dodgion

SAXOPHONES

Versatile West Coaster.

 The Joy Of Sax Love & Smiles 101 Dodgion; Brad Leali (as); Daniel Block (as, ts); Frank Wess (ts); Jay Brandford (bs); Mike LeDonne (p); Dennis Irwin (b); Joe Farnsworth (d). 8 & 10/03.

Jerry has always figured strongly in our sideman index, and it's immediately clear why he's so highly regarded. The writing is strong, with subtle voicings, and his improvisations are clear and melodic. 'The Magic Lizard' deserves to be in everyone's band book and 'Thaddeus' is a lovely tribute to the great Thad Jones. Guest soloist Wess makes a nice contribution, but there's enough talent in the predictably named Joy Of Sax to sustain interest without him. Massed reeds notwithstanding, the rhythm section makes an important contribution and the other composers represented – Ellington and Phil Woods – would be pleased with what's been done to their ideas.

Chris Minh Doky (born 1969)

DOUBLE BASS

Younger brother of Niels Lan Doky, he learned music at home and at the Royal Danish Conservatory before taking up bass. Moved to the US in 1989 and played extensively on the fringes of jazz before signing to Blue Note.

 Letters Storyville STCD 4177 Doky; Randy Brecker (t); Niels Lan Doky (p, ky); Adam Nussbaum (d). 2–4/91.

There are a couple of earlier Storyvilles, but they probably won't be found now. Brecker doubles on his electric trumpet, which gives the session a curious saxophonic variation on those cuts. Chris holds the line well and his solo statements are meaningful without being either revelatory or long-winded.

 Cinematique Blue Note 26121 Doky; Joey Calderazzo, Larry Goldings (org); Makoto Ozone (p); Toots Thielemans (hca); Clarence Penn, Bill Stewart, Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). 02.
An intriguing idea to record with three very different trios and to do the sessions in 'live' form, with just single takes crammed into two hours of studio time for each line-up. The 'New York' trio of Calderazzo and Watts is high-energy, that with Larry Goldings and Bill Stewart more laid-back and reflective, and the third configuration, Ozone and Penn and piano instead of organ, a hybrid of the two. Ozone interestingly began his career on Hammond and only later switched to piano. Whether it's reflected in his touch or not is a matter for conjecture, but the album's emphasis is clear. Chris has assembled some intriguing material to reflect the different characters of his constituent trios, but it's a measure of the album's slightly anonymous character that the show is stolen comprehensively by Thielemans's guest spot on 'Goldfinger'.

Also, in brief:

 The Nomad Diaries Blue Note 66512. 06.
Odd, crossover project with little shape.

Niels Lan Doky (born 1963)

PIANO

Of Danish–Vietnamese parentage, he started on guitar and switched to piano at 12. Went to Berklee in 1978 and settled in NY. Also an expert producer.

(*) Here Or There Storyville STCD 4117 Doky; Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Alvin Queen (d). 1/86.
 The Target Storyville STCD 4140 Doky; Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Jack DeJohnette (d). 11/86.
(*) The Truth Storyville STCD 4144 Doky; Bob Berg (ts); Bo Stief (b); Terri Lyne Carrington (d). 6/87.
 Daybreak Storyville STCD 4160 Doky; John Scofield (g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Terri Lyne Carrington (d). 9/88.
(*) Close Encounter Storyville STCD 4173 Doky; Gary Peacock (b); Alex Riel (d). 7/89.
Doky's early records might have created more of a stir than they did and, looking back at them even now, this already seems like his best work. He plays with dazzling fluency, has a biting, percussive touch, relishes fast tempos and has a decisive, linear manner. He writes terrific riff tunes, too. The five Storyvilles are all brusquely recorded to show off his sound. While there's little to choose among the three trio dates, all of which are made up of originals plus a favourite standard or two, we've given the edge to the debut record for the sheer excitement that seems to energize every minute of the music. The Truth, a live session, loses some immediacy over the course of four long pieces, but it's an accomplished quartet, even if Berg's occasionally faceless tenor isn't an ideal match. Daybreak adds Scofield's dependably handsome guitar to the proceedings, and 'Jet Lag' and 'Natural' find Doky's writing at its wittiest.

 Paris By Night Soul Note 121206-2 Doky; Randy Brecker (t); Christian Minh Doky (b); Daniel Humair (d). 2/92.
Something of a holding operation, this on-the-hoof live date from Paris is nothing more or less than an accomplished blow on some jazz standards, with Brecker in firm voice, and the brothers displaying their usual seamless drive. Doky had a spell at Verve in the '90s and has since recorded three trio albums for Japanese Columbia, but the Verves are deleted and none of the recent sets have enjoyed wider release.

Klaus Doldinger (born 1936)

SAXOPHONES, KEYBOARDS

Doldinger is a Berliner who worked a route from early-'50s trad all the way to fusion and filmscore work. His jazz-rock group Passport was a favourite at home for many years.

 Works And Passion 1955–2000 Warners 8573-88087-2 4CD Doldinger; very large collective personnel. 11/55–1/00.
Germany has produced only a handful of jazz figures of much significance, and Doldinger can fairly claim to be among them. While it's his long series of albums with the group Passport which have brought him the widest attention, he took the long trek from trad to jazz-rock with enthusiasm and made a fair number of albums along the way. This handsomely mounted four-decker sets out the journey. Disc one starts with tracks from the middle '50s by his trad-mainstream group the Feetwarmers before a 1963 'Blues For George' unveils a move towards hard bop. Then come adventures with all-star groups and the German mood-music baron Paul Nero, as well as tracks from the '80s and '90s where Doldinger is featured soloist with the Munich Symphony. The bulk of the compilation is, properly, given over to his work with Passport, one of the few European fusion outfits to cross borders successfully. The first album dates from as long ago as 1971, a slick and energetic – and notably unpretentious – mixing of jazz and rock procedures, which set the tone for the various line-ups of the next two decades. Tracks such as 'The Cat From Katmandu' will be nostalgic survivals for many greybeards. While the group never boasted much in the way of daring improvisation, with Doldinger's tenor acting almost as a lead singer, its directness of tone and relative lack of faddish moves has kept the catalogue sounding fresher than much similarly inclined music of the era. A track such as 1995's 'Happy Landing' might almost have come from one of the earliest albums, they're that consistent. The downside is that the group ends up sounding close to an MOR act for a lot of the way. Still, as a portrait of Doldinger's music, this compilation does the job fine. The individual Passport albums have recently been made available again in new remasterings, for those keen to delve deeper.

Eric Dolphy (1928–64)

ALTO SAXOPHONE, BASS CLARINET, FLUTE, CLARINET

Born in LA, he made his first recordings with the Roy Porter band as early as 1949. Joined Chico Hamilton and developed as a multi-instrumentalist, pioneering bass clarinet as a solo improvising instrument. His Parker-derived alto saxophone was strongly identified with advances in post-bop harmony, but he was also involved in the Third Stream. Much of his best work was in the company of John Coltrane and Charles Mingus, with whom he toured Europe. Unable to find sufficient challenging work in the US he tried his luck as a 'single' there in 1964 but died in Berlin of diabetes complications..

 Outward Bound Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 022 Dolphy; Freddie Hubbard (t); Jaki Byard (p); George Tucker (b); Roy Haynes (d). 4/60.

Since his tragically premature death, Eric Dolphy has acquired an almost saintly reputation. His generosity of spirit is well attested by almost everyone who worked with him. Dolphy's mastery of alto saxophone is undoubted, a sound and idiom that marked a definite step forward from the prevailing Charlie Parker style, but combining elements of Ornette Coleman's radicalism as well. It was to be more than a decade after his studio debut with Roy Porter before Dolphy made a record of his own. Dolphy had been working with Chico Hamilton, and it's thought that bassist George Tucker arranged the session which led to this disc. By later standards it's a fairly cautious initiative.

'G.W.' is dedicated to the Californian bandleader Gerald Wilson, who had taught Dolphy something about arranging. It's in an unorthodox, slightly top-heavy form. '245', apparently the number of Dolphy's house, is an equally heterodox blues, while 'Les', named for trombonist Lester Robinson, is a 14-bar theme which establishes an unsettling harmonic tension between melody-line and accompaniment. Dolphy's bass clarinet is heard on 'Miss Toni' and 'On Green Dolphin Street', and his flute on 'Glad To Be Unhappy', and while all three are confident, even original, there's not yet the alienating originality that was to come later.

Hubbard's role is interesting, not least because he was to appear much later on Out To Lunch!, but there are signs already that the band don't quite understand what the leader is about. The new edition includes three interesting alternates.

(*) Other Aspects Blue Note 7 48041 Dolphy; Ron Carter (b); Gina Lalli (tabla); Roger Mason (tamboura); other musicians unidentified. 7/60–62.

These tapes were kept for almost 20 years by Dolphy's close friends Juanita and Hale Smith, when he left for Europe to work with Charles Mingus, and it was only after a memorial concert in 1985 that they were unearthed and considered for release.

It remains unclear whether Dolphy himself ever saw these five performances, of which he named only two, 'Jim Crow' and 'Improvisations And Tukras', as being suitable for commercial release. They were, however, studio performances and the sound is certainly more than adequate. The most substantial piece is the 15-minute 'Jim Crow', on which Dolphy plays all three of his horns over a backing of piano, bass, percussion and a strangely affecting female vocal, obviously intended to recall a mournful spiritual, but with the same Indian cast as the flute 'Improvisations And Tukras'. Two pieces now known as 'Inner Flight #1 & 2' are also for flute, albeit much less convincingly voiced, and 'Dolphy-N' is a duet with Carter. Whoever the bassist is on the November 1960 session, it isn't Ron Carter, and though some circumstances and some aspects of the sound point to its being George Duvivier, there is no way of confirming this.

The provenance doesn't matter much. These are snapshots of a master musician at the point of take-off. Though less than wholly satisfying, they add to a disconcertingly small and compressed discography.

(*) Out There Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 023 Dolphy; Ron Carter (clo); George Duvivier (b); Roy Haynes (d). 8/60.

This is where the promise begins to pay dividends. Since recording Outward Bound, Dolphy had appeared on five albums under the leadership of Charles Mingus, Oliver Nelson and Ken McIntyre, and he was to work with John Lewis, Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis, Mingus again, Abbey Lincoln, Gunther Schuller, his stylistic nemesis Ornette Coleman and even the Latin Jazz Quintet before the year was over. Of them all, it was to be Mingus and Coleman who exerted the greatest influence, though Dolphy also had an important role in Schuller's 'Third Stream' experiments.

Dolphy's decision to dispense with piano and replace it with Ron Carter's cello might well have been inspired by Nathan Gershman in the Chico Hamilton group, but the language is much closer to what Mingus was doing at the time, the tonal centre pitched low. 'Eclipse' was one of the very first Mingus compositions to be picked up by another bandleader, and it affords a rare glimpse of Dolphy playing a regular, concert-pitched clarinet. The E-flat blues 'Serene' is outwardly about as conventional as anything he ever did, but already Dolphy is hearing new and unexpected dimensions to chords and is experimenting with unconventionally subdivided structures, as on the title-track and the modified 12-bar blues '7 West'.

As with its predecessor, Out There was issued with an unhelpfully 'surreal' cover obviously intended to suggest that the music within was pretty wacky.

* Far Cry Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 400 Dolphy; Booker Little (t); Jaki Byard (p); Ron Carter (b); Roy Haynes (d). 12/60.

The week before Christmas 1960 was a quite astonishing one in Dolphy's career. On Tuesday, 20 December, he took part in Gunther Schuller's Jazz Abstractions, taping two Third Stream pieces in the company of Ornette Coleman, Scott LaFaro, Bill Evans and Jim Hall. The following day he played in Ornette's ambitious double quartet, the sessions that were to yield one of the definitive statements of the jazz avant-garde, Free Jazz. The very same day, he went over the river to Hackensack, New Jersey, and recorded Far Cry, his one studio recording with Booker Little.

Interestingly he decided to re-record two items from Out There. The title-piece of the August album is repeated, tougher and boppish in style, while 'Serene' remains essentially the same, which is perhaps why it was dropped from the original release. Byard brought in two pieces which helped turn side one of the LP into an extended tribute to Dolphy's most obvious creative forerunner: 'Mrs Parker Of K.C. (Bird's Mother)' and 'Ode To Charlie Parker'.

Far Cry also marks the first recorded appearance of Dolphy's most celebrated composition, 'Miss Ann', a delightful 14-bar theme that he was to play until the end of his life. Little drops out for 'It's Magic', one of the first times one feels Dolphy is doing something special on bass clarinet, and the whole band sits out 'Tenderly', an astonishing, unaccompanied alto solo, a piece of work that bridges Coleman Hawkins's pioneering 'Picasso' and Dolphy's own later solo bass clarinet excursions on 'God Bless The Child', except that here the tune is still very much in evidence. Some have suggested that he was influenced by Sonny Rollins's unaccompanied 'Body And Soul', recorded two years earlier.

* At The Five Spot: Volumes 1 & 2 / * Memorial Album Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 133 / 247 / 353 Dolphy; Booker Little (t); Mal Waldron (p); Richard Davis (b); Ed Blackwell (d). 7/61.

Dolphy's working association with Little was to be tragically short-lived. The two-week residency at the Five Spot in New York was the group's major exposure, and it's frustrating that only one night, 16 July 1961, was documented. Even so, the playing is exceptional. Dolphy albums are often defined by unaccompanied performances, and the Five Spot dates include a first recorded outing for 'God Bless The Child', which was to become Dolphy's bass clarinet feature, a sinuous, untranscribable harmonic exercise that leaves the source material miles behind. Dolphy had recently recorded The Quest under Waldron's leadership. Here Dolphy takes the initiative, roughening the texture of the pianist's 'Fire Waltz' and suggesting a more joyous take on Waldron's typically dark writing. Little contributes 'Aggression', 'Booker's Waltz' and the splendid 'Bee Vamp', a tough, off-centre theme that was to fall only rather uncomfortably under the horn-player's fingers.

Perhaps the finest thing of all is Dolphy's own 'The Prophet', which was directed to Richard Jennings, who had designed those half-baked covers for Outward Bound and Out There. It's also quite clearly an autobiographical piece, an insight into Dolphy's own quicksilver personality and forward-looking intelligence. No flute on these cuts, perhaps because Dolphy was becoming aware that the bass clarinet – and most particularly its unfettered soliloquy on 'God Bless The Child' – had become a voice of equal weight.

A mere matter of weeks after the Five Spot residency ended, Booker Little was dead, felled by uraemia. Another of the great might-have-beens of modern jazz.

 Berlin Concerts Enja ENJ 3007 2CD Dolphy; Benny Bailey (t); Pepsi Auer (p); Jamil Nasser (b); Buster Smith (d). 8/61.

These televised performances from the Deutschlandshalle in Berlin are poignant as a first sign of Dolphy 'going single', working the more open European scene with pick-up bands. This one was better than most, not just because Bailey's tense, boppish sound occasionally recalls Little, but also because Auer and Smith lean hard on the beat and push things along briskly. 'G.W.' is remarkably similar to the version on Outward Bound, Bailey tends to dominate on 'Hot House' and 'I'll Remember April', on which he is unsentimentally lyrical. He sits out 'When Lights Are Low' by namesake Benny Carter, and Dolphy thrives on the extra space. Even so, he sounds constrained on these tracks, not even opening up on the now obligatory 'God Bless The Child'.

 The Complete Uppsala Concert Gambit 69213 Dolphy; Rony Johansson (p); Kurt Lindgren (b); Rune Carlsson (d). 9/61.
(*) In Europe: Volumes 1–3 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 413 / 414 / 416 Dolphy; Bent Axen (p); Chuck Israels, Erik Moseholm (b); Jørn Elniff (d). 9/61.
 Stockholm Sessions Enja ENJ 3055 Dolphy; Idrees Sulieman (t); Knud Jørgensen , Rune Øfwerman (p); Jimmy Woode (b); Sture Kallin (d). 9/61.

It was a lonely path for Dolphy, but his natural sweetness seems to have guaranteed relaxed relationships in Scandinavia. The Uppsala concert tests the band, as was to happen time and again when Dolphy played with local rhythm sections, but they do a more than decent job of it and there are some nice things here. '245' goes on a bit and the soloing is less than charismatic, but 'I'll Remember April' and 'When Lights Are Low' on the second disc are more Johansson's speed and he does well.

The In Europe sessions were recorded in Copenhagen two days later and two days apart. The Danish players clearly don't understand Dolphy's more advanced ideas, but they are all decent, time-served players, and while some of their accompaniments tend to the callow in the extreme, they don't really seem to affect the blissfully tolerant Dolphy all that much. Two versions of 'Don't Blame Me' are taped on 6 September. Moseholm bungles his bass solo and Dolphy simply says, 'Let's try it again.' It's the drummer who makes a mess of 'When Lights Are Low', but there are no retakes, and Dolphy opts for the revised bridge popularized by Miles Davis, rather than Carter's original.

The second date, recorded in a more generous acoustic at the Studenterforeningens Foredragssal, a lecture theatre rather than a concert hall, is altogether better. 'Les' is played again, though for some reason it was mistitled 'Miss Ann' when the discs were first released. Dolphy seems content to settle back into the bebop idiom that seems to be the Danes' comfort zone. 'Laura' is a tremendous alto performance, laced with Parker quotes; 'Oleo' is one of the most effective bass clarinet outings documented to this point, and this must be considered the definitive recording of 'God Bless The Child', Dolphy's innate creativity suddenly freed from the constraints of playing down and breaking loose in an extraordinary outpouring of ideas.

The other intriguing item from Copenhagen is a duet version of 'Hi Fly', recorded on flute and bass; Chuck Israels was in Scandinavia with the Jerome Robbins dance company and obviously came and sat in. The Stockholm Sessions were released much later. The Swedes are arguably more adventurous but technically less adept, and here and there Dolphy seems to be having problems with his reed, or was simply tired. 'Miss Ann' is lacklustre, and even 'God Bless The Child' lacks the emotional clout he was bringing to it earlier in the month. These were the last recordings that Dolphy was to make for Prestige.

* The Complete Prestige Recordings Prestige 9PRCD 418 9CD Dolphy; other personnel as for the above, plus Bobby Bryant, Clark Terry, Richard Williams (t); Jimmy Cleveland, Melba Liston (tb); Oliver Nelson (as); Ken McIntyre (as, f); Bob Ashton, Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis, Jerome Richardson (ts); George Barrow (bs); Walter Bishop Jr, Richard Wyands (p); Joe Benjamin, Sam Jones, Wendell Marshall (b); Charli Persip, Art Taylor (d). 4/60–9/61.

Dolphy's association with Prestige spanned the period 1 April 1960 to 8 September 1961, when he recorded the second of the Copenhagen sessions. During his contract, he made records under the leadership of Oliver Nelson, Ron Carter, Mal Waldron and, often forgotten, Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis; the record with the Latin Jazz Quintet was also, strictly speaking, a sideman gig.

Screamin' The Blues was his first recording with Nelson, made in late May 1960. Dolphy played bass clarinet on the title-track but otherwise stuck to alto. Nelson plays tenor, except on 'Alto-itis', which is the best point of comparison for their work on the E-flat horn. This is fairly basic bebop material. On 23 February, Dolphy joined Nelson again to play on Blues And The Abstract Truth for Impulse!. He had the call again for Nelson's Straight Ahead, made on 1 March for Prestige. Dolphy cut three tracks on alto, and three on bass clarinet, including the extraordinary 'Ralph's New Blues', easily his best solo of the session.

In late June, Dolphy played on sessions for Ron Carter's Where? and Mal Waldron's The Quest. On the latter, Dolphy encountered the abrasive Ervin, a pairing that resulted in some tough and pliant solos. Harmonically and rhythmically, this was a challenging set. For the first time on record since Outward Bound, Dolphy plays only alto and clarinet, with Waldron an ideal foil. Earlier, in June 1960, multi-instrumentalist Ken McIntyre had offered him a chance to play with a top-flight rhythm section and with a degree of freedom he would have been hard pressed to find elsewhere. The result, originally released on Looking Ahead, is more interesting than genuinely involving, and the session with Lockjaw Davis, released as Trane Whistle, is more of a curiosity than anything; Dolphy does not solo.

Having this material in a single-box set, chronologically organized, properly documented and complete with alternatives, adds something to the Dolphy story. Though expensive, it's well stocked and full of insights.

(*) Candid Dolphy Candid 9033 Dolphy; Benny Bailey, Ted Curson, Kenny Dorham, Roy Eldridge, Lonnie Hillyer, Booker Little (t); Jimmy Knepper, Julian Priester (tb); Charles McPherson (as); Walter Benton, Coleman Hawkins (ts); Nico Bunink, Tommy Flanagan, Don Friedman, Mal Waldron (p); Ron Carter, Art Davis, Charles Mingus, Peck Morrison (b); Jo Jones, Dannie Richmond, Max Roach (d); Roger Sanders, Robert Whitley (perc); Abbey Lincoln (v). 10/60–4/61.

Though Dolphy worked exclusively for Prestige as a leader, he did work for other labels during 1960 and 1961. His involvement with Charles Mingus was one of the most intense creative relationships of his life; by comparison, his work with Coltrane is off-centre, creating an impression of two men on parallel but quite separate courses. The first take of 'Stormy Weather' with Mingus is extraordinary. Other tracks catch him with Little, under the trumpeter's leadership in March 1961, and with Abbey Lincoln, under the auspices of the Jazz Artists' Guild. A compilation of this sort is inevitably patchy. Without context, it probably won't mean much to anyone.

 Munich Jam Session, December 1 1961 Rare Live Recordings 88625 Dolphy; John Coltrane (ts); McCoy Tyner (p); Reggie Workman (b); Elvin Jones, Mel Lewis (d). 12/61.

A historical document. Dolphy and Tyner, with Workman and Lewis, work their way through three long standard interpretations – 'The Way You Look Tonight', 'On Green Dolphin Street' and 'Softly, As In A Morning Sunrise' – as well as a brisk read of the Sonny Rollins bopper 'Oleo'. Also included in this reissue is a performance of 'Impressions' with the Coltrane Quartet from the following evening at Berlin University. The sound quality is inevitably poor, but there's enough detail for students of Dolphy to work out how he worked his way through and across the changes, including some interesting chromatic progressions on the Rodgers theme.

() Vintage Dolphy Enja ENJ 505 Dolphy; Edward Amour, Don Ellis, Nick Travis (t); Jimmy Knepper (tb); Phil Woods (as); Benny Golson (ts); Lalo Schifrin (p); Barry Galbraith, Jim Hall (g); Warren Chiasson (vib); Art Davis, Richard Davis, Chuck Israels, Barre Phillips (b); Gloria Agostini (hp); Sticks Evans, J. C. Moses, Charli Persip (d); string quartet. 3/62–4/63.

Almost worth it for Charles Stewart's sleeve photograph alone: Dolphy in profile, beard jutting, lips pursed, his bass clarinet looped over his shoulder and neck like a serpent. Musically, it's not such a big deal, a slightly uneasy combination of jazz and Third Stream material. 'Iron Man' is fine, but there isn't much else that suggests an urgent reassessment.

 Gaslight 1962 /  Left Alone /  Complete Recordings Get Back 2027 / Fruit Tree 856 / Lone Hill Jazz 10124 Dolphy; Herbie Hancock (p); Richard Davis (b); Edgar Bateman (d). 10/62.

Much of this has already been available on Ingo and Unique Jazz; however, these interesting reissues of the same material dispense with two vocal tracks by the forgettable Joe Carroll, leaving the finished product a bit lightweight. 'Miss Ann' receives a strenuous workout, with Hancock doing some interesting work, but is really more dependent on Davis's sonorous playing, which is just about acceptably audible. '245' and 'G.W.' are old favourites, but the unexpected highlight of the set is a version of the Billie Holiday–Mal Waldron 'Left Alone', a unique inclusion in the Dolphy discography. Lovely stuff, but certainly not a beginner set; this one is mostly for collectors.

(*) The Illinois Concert Blue Note 4 99826 2 Dolphy; Herbie Hancock (p); Eddie Khan (b); J. C. Moses (d); brass, woodwinds. 3/63.

This live recording from the last full year of Dolphy's life isn't an attic discovery. It has been known about for years, played on radio by Brian Saunders, and available in low-quality bootlegs, but only in 1996 was it brought to the direct attention of discographer Alan Saul and to Dolphy's aunt, Luzmilda Thomas, who authorized its issue through the services of Michael Cuscuna.

Dolphy attended a seminar/workshop on improvisation at the University of Illinois in March 1963 as part of the 11th Festival of Contemporary Arts. He performed an evening concert with his working quartet, and with an ensemble drawn from the studentship. The recording quality is far from pristine, particularly on the flute feature 'South Street Exit', but this belated release is a key step in building a more complete picture of Dolphy's foreshortened development.

The set opens with 'Softly, As In A Morning Sunrise', with the leader on bass clarinet. The interplay between horn and piano is hypnotic and extraordinarily extended. Hancock resists the temptation to go outside conventional tonality altogether but, by his present and later standards, this is an 'outside' performance which dispenses with direct melodic statement until the final measures.

What follows is a brief statement of a theme, 'Something Sweet, Something Tender', which was to figure strongly on Dolphy's Out To Lunch!. Almost as soon as it is has been registered, it gives way to Dolphy's trademark bass clarinet meditation on 'God Bless The Child', a slightly constrained performance, with a hint of bitterness that isn't typical of him. Those present in March 1963 say that Dolphy was upset by the attitude of some academics and composers at the symposium component of the arts festival; perhaps something of that affront spilled over into his playing.

'South Street Exit' is marred by technical shortcomings, but it is a vigorous and astute performance. He switches to alto for 'Iron Man'. A review at the time seems to have referred to this piece as 'Bombs'. For the second half of the recital, he stays on alto but now in the company of an ad hoc brass ensemble including then student Cecil Bridgewater and with the university big band. The final track is a reworked arrangement of 'G.W.', but the really interesting one is 'Red Planet', a composition essentially identical to 'Miles's Mode', and usually attributed to John Coltrane. Given the closeness of the two saxophonists, the piece may well have been co-composed.

 Music Matador /  Complete Memorial Album Sessions / (*) Conversations Fresh Sound FSR-CD 304 / Lone Hill Jazz 10102 / Fresh Sound FSRCD 1627 Dolphy; Woody Shaw (t); Clifford Jordan (ss); Sonny Simmons (as); Prince Lasha (f); Bobby Hutcherson (vib); Richard Davis, Eddie Khan (b); Charles Moffett, J. C. Moses (d). 7/63.

Producer Alan Douglas had reliable instincts about what was happening in jazz and new music. He supervised five consecutive nights of recordings with Dolphy in the summer of 1963. Unattractively packaged and of less than pristine sound quality, they have often been overlooked or treated as subsidiary items in the Dolphy canon and are available from a confusing array of imprints. They are key works and important in setting him in some larger-than-usual ensembles.

'Iron Man' is a strong, muscular theme, and Dolphy's alto-playing is replete with wild overtone surges and unexpected harmonic outbreaks. Fats Waller's 'Jitterbug Waltz' (on Conversations and the Complete) is a lively flute feature, arguably his most effective performance on the instrument. Woody Shaw is perfect on 'Burning Spear' (Music Matador). Jordan (misidentified as 'Clifford Jarvis' on some early releases) sounds unfamiliar on soprano, but is tightly marshalled on his solo spot. Jaki Byard's 'Ode To C.P.' is a version of the piece Dolphy first recorded back in 1960, but here, one of three duets with Richard Davis (the other two on bass clarinet), it has a wry, haunted character. 'Love Me' (Conversations) is the first unaccompanied alto solo since 'Tenderly' for Prestige, a poignant, tender ballad.

The subsidiary players are uniformly impressive. Sonny Simmons is one of the unsung heroes of the avant-garde, and Prince Lasha is Dolphy's musical twin on flute. The key addition, though, is Hutcherson on vibraphone, soon to be a mainstay of the Out To Lunch! band, offering a very different, percussive sound to the ensembles.

Tantalizingly, it is thought that more material from these sessions exists, but so far none of it has surfaced. It is a great pity that the sound is not more generous, but Dolphy himself is well served, and the quality of the music sustains both records.

CORE COLLECTION

♛ * Out To Lunch!

Blue Note 98793 Dolphy; Freddie Hubbard (t); Bobby Hutcherson (vib); Richard Davis (b); Tony Williams (d). 2/64.

This was the third time Dolphy had used the word 'out' in an album title. Out To Lunch! now seems both more outside and more mainstream than his earlier work. It also stands in a slightly curious relation to the rest of the Dolphy discography, its reputation to some extent a reaction to Dolphy's imminent death and to Reid Miles's immaculate, witty cover design. Dolphy's only other release for Blue Note was the posthumous Other Aspects, though a month later he was to have a major role in Andrew Hill's Point Of Departure. How high does Out To Lunch! stand? If it is a masterpiece, then it is not so much a flawed as a slightly tentative masterpiece. Since the spring 1963 sessions for Alan Douglas, Dolphy had been working towards a new compositional sophistication. The session of 25 February 1964 was engineered by Rudy Van Gelder. The sound is strong and very centred, and the new band (with Williams in for J. C. Moses and the incendiary Hubbard in for Woody Shaw) was well suited to Dolphy's increasingly dissonant and fractured conception.

The solitary flute track is inspired by the great modernist Severiano Gazelloni. It's a relatively conventional bop theme, but one distinguished by Dolphy's virtuosic articulation and biting attack. In the same way, 'Straight Up And Down' and 'Out To Lunch' itself, the two alto pieces, are bordering on complete harmonic freedom, but again anchored in a strong rhythmic groove. CD transfer highlighted Davis's key harmonic role. Hutcherson's percussive and often polytonal lines allow Dolphy maximum freedom of invention.

The radical core of Out To Lunch! lies in the two opening numbers. 'Hat And Beard', a tribute to Monk, and 'Something Sweet, Something Tender' are both taken on bass clarinet, and the sheer physicality and dynamism of Dolphy's entry on the first tune imparts an excitement that runs through the record. It is 'angular', as the cliché runs, but also lyrical and unmistakably thoughtful. The later tracks are by no means a falling away, but they certainly represent a consolidation rather than an advance on what Dolphy does in those opening moments. There was to be no sequel and Out To Lunch!'s cachet lies as much in promise as in delivery.

 Last Date

Emarcy 5101242 Dolphy; Misha Mengelberg (p); Jacques Schols (b); Han Bennink (d). 6/64.

After Out To Lunch!, Dolphy recorded with Andrew Hill, then he rejoined the Charles Mingus Jazz Workshop for an eventful Town Hall concert and next a European tour, which was to be the most densely documented period of his career, a slew of live recordings issued under Mingus's name. The late spring found Dolphy on his own in Paris and the Netherlands. In the last week of June he was in Berlin, to play at a new club called The Tangent, but he was unwell and managed only one or two sets. On the 29th he died in the Achenbach Hospital, having suffered a cardiac and circulatory collapse brought on by diabetes.

An unfortunate aura of glamour surrounds last words. Last Date, recorded in Hilversum on 2 June, is certainly not the last time Dolphy played. There are bits and pieces from later on in the month, and inevitable rumours of other tapes. However, this is the last formal recording available, made in front of record executives and guests, who supply the 'live' applause. The performances are very good indeed and Misha Mengelberg's trio plays sympathetically. Dolphy opens with Monk's 'Epistrophy', an interesting kick-off point after the Monk-inspired opening of Out To Lunch!. Inevitably, this is milder, but the bass clarinet sound is as urgent and alien as ever. 'Hypochrismutreefuzz' is a Mengelberg original, very much in the bebop idiom, which dominates the session and is somewhat old-fashioned-sounding. 'The Madrig Speaks, The Panther Walks' is a reworking of 'Mandrake' from the Douglas sessions. The real delights on this disc are the two flute themes, 'South Street Exit', in which Dolphy conjures up a light, joyous sound, and a 'conference of the birds' theme. The key performance is the standard 'You Don't Know What Love Is', a masterpiece of construction and expression which prompts an audible sigh of delight from one of the audience (said to be actor Hans Veerman) at the end of its 11-minute span.

Which leaves just 'Miss Ann', a plain and unfussy alto theme which was probably as close as possible to triple-distilled Dolphy, the affectionate, generous spirit everyone who came close to him remembers. A certain mythology surrounds this track, which ends the album. The Philips release – and this Emarcy reissue – appended Dolphy's own voice, a statement that has become his curtain-call: 'When you hear music, after it's over, it's gone in the air. You can never recapture it again.' This wasn't said at the recording but during an interview with jazz historian Michiel de Ruyter, some time earlier in the spring of 1964. There is much of Dolphy that can never be recaptured, which is what makes that which survives so precious. Even as he experimented, even as he overthrew the rules, he managed to maintain a solidity of presence, a foothold in the tradition, which meant that his music, however fleeting, would never be gone in the air.

Also, in brief:

 Prestige Profiles: Volume 5 Prestige 5805 2CD N.D.
An excellent introduction to Dolphy's work for the label. 'Miss Ann', 'Serene', 'Out There', 'G.W.' are all there, along with some less-familiar material.

* Caribe Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 819. 8/60.
Even the record company apologizes for the music. The Latin Jazz Quintet was a south-of-the-border, poor man's MJQ. Dolphy was very proud of his central American ancestry, but he has little to work with here.

 Complete Recordings: Featuring Lalo Schifrin Lone Hill LHJ10121. 61.
Desperate sound quality, and misattributed: the pianist is Herbie Hancock.

 Here And There Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 673. 1/60–8/61.
A ragbag of oddments from the Prestige years. Most interesting is 'April Fool' from the Outward Bound session.

Sophia Domancich

PIANO

French pianist who has sometimes worked with fusion and art-rock groups, occasionally making music in more of a free-bop style.

(*) Funerals Gimini GM 1001 Domancich; Yvon Guillard (t); Jérome Naulais (tb); Alain Guillard (ts); Paul Rogers (b); Bruno Toccane (d); John Greaves (v). 7/91.
 L'Année Des Treize Lunes / (*) La Part Des Anges Seventh A XV / Gimini GM 1008 Domancich; Paul Rogers (b); Tony Levin (d). 12/94; 7/97.

Though Funerals is primarily a trio date, the horns make mournful declamations on the title-track and 'B. Rubatto'. John Greaves sings a lyric inspired by John Donne. It's gloomily played out, a little in the manner of Michael Mantler, but in its steady, wasteless way the music has real power, with Rogers superb as usual.

The music on L'Année Des Treize Lunes might not fit Rainer Werner Fassbinder's film, but it's a fine essay on the piano trio form. Domancich seems eager to involve the rhythm section as much as possible, and they provide ideal support to her propulsive and clear-headed playing. 'Parrots' starts out like a stately Charlie Haden melody, but is then rousted by Rogers's explosive bass solo and evolves into a gripping three-way conversation. The bassist also has one entire piece to himself ('Min'). Sometimes, as on the very long centrepiece, 'Annie, Pierre Et Les Enfants', the music settles into a beautiful lassitude, interesting from moment to moment but not quite convincing in the long run.

La Part Des Anges is a sequel in very much the same mould. Domancich is again more interesting for her writing and group sound than for her improvising, and there's a dramatic cast to the music which makes a long track such as 'Sur Les Traces ...' seem like a carefully wrought set-piece. With the pianist's four-square delivery contrasting with the free play of Rogers and Levin, it's an oddly intriguing result.

Natty Dominique (1896–1982)

TRUMPET

Anatole Dominique was born in New Orleans but went to Chicago in 1913 and did most of his playing there. He recorded often with Johnny Dodds in the '20s.

(*) Natty Dominique's Creole Dance Band American Music AMCD-18 Dominique; Preston Jackson (tb); Darnell Howard (cl); Ralph Tervalon (p); Sam Casimir (g); Bill Settles (b); Baby Dodds, Bob Mathews (d). 9/53.

Recorded at a hotel gig in 1953, this is an interesting discovery of some obscure Chicago jazz of its day. Dominique recorded little after the '20s and his trademark – a vibrato shake that makes his horn sound like it's constantly trembling – is hardly ideal stuff to lead a band with. But it's not a bad group: Howard plays some sly solos, Jackson is good, and Baby Dodds, whose beat Dominique always thought unsurpassable, keeps the band honest. Natty reminisces about his glory days on a couple of tracks.

Arne Domnérus (born 1924)

ALTO SAXOPHONE, CLARINET, BARITONE SAXOPHONE

The 25-year-old's appearance at the Paris Jazz Fair wakened an interest in Swedish jazz. He honed his technique with the Swedish Radio Big Band, but 'Dompan''s small-group playing, influenced by bop and Scandinavian folk forms, established a reputation that has lasted for almost half a century. On saxophone and clarinet, he is crisp, light-toned and nimble.

(*) Portrait Phontastic PHONT CD 9313 Domnérus; other personnel includes Clifford Brown, Rolf Ericson, Art Farmer, Clark Terry (t); Putte Wickman (cl); Benny Carter (as); Rolf Blomqvist, Jerome Richardson (ts, f); Lars Gullin (bs); Bengt Hallberg (p, org); Lars Estrand (vib); Sture Åkerberg , George Mraz, Georg Riedel (b); Rune Carlsson, Oliver Jackson, Johan Lofcrantz (d). 46–93.
 Favourite Groups: 1949–1950 Dragon DRCD 358 Domnérus; Leppe Sundevall (t, thn, b); James Moody (ts); Per-Arne Croona, Lars Gullin (bs); Bengt Hallberg, Gunnar Svensson, Gösta Theselius (p); Ulf Linde (vib); Yngve Åkerberg , Simon Brehm, Gunnar Almstedt, Thore Jederby (b); Sven Bollhem, Anders Burman, Jack Norén (d). 49–50.
 Arne Domnérus And His Orchestra 1950–1951 With Rolf Ericson Dragon DRCD 381 Domnérus; Rolf Ericson (t); Rolf Blomqvist (ts); Lars Gullin (bs, d); Gunnar Svensson (p); Yngve Åkerberg (b); Jack Norén , Gunnar Nyberg (d); Harry Arnold, Sonya Hedenbratt, Bibbi Johnson (v). 50–51.

'Jazz is Melody, Swing and Vitality', and Dompan's approach marks a shift away from the dominant bop influence of the early '50s in Scandinavia. Early records have him sounding closer to Benny Carter than to Parker in his phrasing, with a wan, meditative quality that frequently refers to diatonic folk themes and hymn tunes. For a time, he performed regularly in 'sacred concerts' that combined jazz and liturgical materials.

Portrait, as it suggests, is a career profile, 18 tracks covering the period from the end of the war (a single cut from a Sonora disc called Ben's Music, 1946) right up to Sugar Fingers. There's a quite extraordinary performance of Strayhorn's 'Blood Count', played as a duet with long-term associate Hallberg at the organ of the Stockholm Konserthus, and there is a single track from their New York trip, Downtown Meeting, where they recorded with Clark Terry, George Mraz and Oliver Jackson. There's return traffic on the Quincy Jones-conducted Swedish All-Stars session of 1953, an Art Farmer vehicle also featuring Clifford Brown and the great Swede, Lars Gullin. There's also a Swedamerican summit from 1982 with the veteran Benny Carter, originally released as Skyline Drive And Towards.

Though useful, Portrait makes for unsatisfactory listening as a continuous whole, put together more with an eye to coverage than to the creation of a well-balanced CD; an aircheck from the Salle Pleyel in Paris, May 1949, makes it in only as a historical oddity and, second track in, it's a touch off-putting. Favourite Groups is no less of a ragbag. In 1949, brothers Lars and Anders Burman founded the Metronome label and signed the 25-year-old Domnérus as their first star. Bebop had just made an impact and the opening 'Conversation', written by the gifted Theselius, is built round the same chords as 'Cherokee'. The track which follows from that first session is slower and freer in structure, but also more individual in tonality. The set includes some rarities, like 'Running A Temperature', which has not previously been released, and a version of Duke's 'Everything But You' from October 1949, which features Arne on baritone, anticipating later sessions with the peerless Gullin.

Arne's clarinet-playing, inspired by Buddy DeFranco, is featured on 'I Surrender Dear' and 'Night And Day' from the same session, and throughout the February 1950 date, which is co-led by Theselius. The pianist is little known outside Scandinavia, but here he fully merits Domnérus's description of him as an unsung genius. Whenever he plays, the energy level seems to soar. Gullin is wonderful on 'Body And Soul' and 'Out Of Nowhere' from the latest of the dates, a broadcast from October 1950. The former is on a Caprice LP, but the latter is, as far as we know, previously unissued.

For all the young Swede's enthusiasm for bebop, melody, swing and vitality are still very much the order of the day and there is little sign that Domnérus was influenced by Charlie Parker. His solo on 'Out Of Nowhere', one of the best cuts on the 1950/1951 compilation, suggests that he was listening thoughtfully to Bird, but possibly unconvinced that this was the way forward. Lars Gullin will be the main draw for most listeners to this, though Rolf Ericson is clearly a mover and shaker at this period, already experimenting with the cooler, drier sound that was to take over after bebop. The trumpeter certainly merits his featured status, but Gullin's whispery baritone is a constant delight and his work on 'Lullaby In Rhythm' is stunning.

There are some ugly moments in the remastering, but for the sheer pleasure of hearing two great saxophonists in their heyday all these are worth considering.

 Antiphone Blues Proprius PRCD 7744 Domnérus; Gustaf Sjökvist (org). 8/74.

Inspired by Duke Ellington's sacred concerts, and recorded in Spånga Church, these moving duets draw heavily on Ellington compositions, alongside spirituals, Russian and Swedish vespers, Schumann's 'Träumerei', and an arrangement of a Vivaldi largo. The Ellington themes – 'Almighty God', 'Come Sunday' and 'Heaven' – are deeply moving, but the real measure of Domnérus's brilliance is the improvisation 'Antiphone Blues', a thoughtful and beautifully constructed piece that lends a shape to the whole, otherwise logically constructed, record.

* Jazz At The Pawnshop, 1–4 Proprius PRCD 9044 / 9058 / 7778/9 / also LP & SACD Domnérus; Bengt Hallberg (p); Lars Erstrand (vib); Georg Riedel (b); Egil Johansen (d). 12/76.

Limited-edition documentation of a two-night residency at the famous club. The final disc, which is not much more than an EP, was printed off as a bonus for collectors of the earlier volumes. It's all great stuff; Hallberg is a giant and fuels Dompan's solos with obvious gusto. 'Mood Indigo' is the cut-out-and-keep, but there's barely a moment of dull music. Stunningly good sound.

 The Sheik / Bröst-Toner Four Leaf Clover FLCCD 2005/6 2CD Domnérus; Jan Allan (t); Olle Lind (tb); Erik Nilsson, Claes Rosendahl (reeds); Bengt Hallberg, Gunnar Svensson (p); Jimmy Rowles (p, v); Rune Gustafsson (g); Georg Riedel (b); Rune Carlsson, Egil Johansen (d). 4 & 5/79.

Utterly lovely in every way. Rowles is the feature on The Sheik. He has an iron-hard technique which tends to get forgotten given the beauty of his playing, and here he excels himself. Domnérus still has boppish tendencies ('Au Privave'), but they're subordinated here (as in some of the sacred music) to a more mellifluous and song-like delivery. The cuts on Bröst-Toner are less immediately beguiling, but this is a band that understands Dompan's music inside out and he responds with some unexpectedly fiery and passionate playing.

 Dompan At The Savoy Phontastic PHONT CD 8806 Domnérus; Ulf Johansson (p, tb, v); Sture Åkerberg (b); Aage Tanggaard (d). 9/90.

(*) Sugar Fingers Phontastic PHONT CD 8831 Domnérus; Jan Lundgren (p); Lars Erstrand (vib); Sture Åkerberg (b); Johan Lofcrantz (d). 7/93.

His typical sound, even on the alto and clarinet, is low, soft and somewhat undynamic. In later life, this has become even more pronounced – though, like Lee Konitz, Domnérus is occasionally able to surprise with brief episodes of dissonance. Sugar Fingers, recorded at the Swedish Academy of Music, has a respectful, elder-statesman feel, and the band hover round him like courtiers. Pianist Lundgren's title-track sounds almost tailor-made for the leader but, ironically, it's the one number he sits out.

Dompan At The Savoy is unusual in that Hallberg is absent. In his place is Ulf Johansson, who came in to jam and show off his multi-instrumentalism by contributing trombone solos to 'Honeysuckle Rose' and 'Solitude'. It's a relaxed, affectionate session that doesn't purport to offer much more than easy, mid-paced swing.

(*) Happy Together Ladybird LBCD 0019 Domnérus; Putte Wickman (cl); Rune Gustafsson (g); Jan Lundgren (p); Jesper Lundgaard (b); Aage Tanggaard (d). 12/95.

Recorded over two nights at the Royal Academy of Music in Stockholm, this contains no real surprises. Both Wickman and Domnérus had been awarded the Swedish Gold Medal Illis Quorum the previous year for services to music, and much of the music that followed had an honorific quality, roughened up here and there by association with younger players. Lundgaard pushes the pace along faster than the two veterans might like and then holds back maddeningly on the slower tunes. It's all very good-natured jockeying and the frontmen are absolutely in control of the situation. Dompan's tone has broadened a little with the passing years. The resemblance to Benny Carter is more pronounced. The choice of material is as eclectic as ever: two Ellington tunes, Thad Jones's 'Three And One', Roger Kellaway's seldom-covered 'I Have The Feeling I've Been Here Before', Bobby Timmons's 'Moanin'' and a Horace 'Parland' tune, a surprise package for the very end of a hugely enjoyable performance.

(*) In Concert: Live '96 Caprice CAP 21526 Domnérus; Bosse Broberg (t); Lennart Åberg (ts, f); Bengt Hallberg (p); Rune Gustafsson (g); Georg Riedel (b); Egil Johansen (d). 10/96.

A typically eclectic and well-paced septet date which ranges from original, blues-based material by Riedel and Hallberg to folkloric explorations arranged by Jan Johansson and others. Domnérus was quick to spot the potential of traditional Scandinavian musics in a jazz context, and what is striking here is that the 'trad' format conceals a powerful measure of experiment. The leader is less emphatic than in years gone by, his tone blurry and ill-defined, but the flow of ideas is unstaunchable.

CORE COLLECTION

* Face To Face

Dragon DRCD 344 Domnérus; Bernt Rosengren (ts, f); Jan Lundgren (p); Hans Backenroth (b); Aage Tanggaard (d). 99.

Two great masters of European jazz playing a set of relaxed standards with an expert and unobtrusive rhythm section. There is more to the story than that, not least Arne and Bernt's clever referencing of jazz history, notably moments from the recorded collaborations of Lee Konitz and Warne Marsh. Kicking off with Warne's curtain-piece, 'Out Of Nowhere', was just a gentle warm-up, and in the event the horns leave much of the passage-work to the piano-player. The really interesting stuff begins with 'Body And Soul', which is taken on clarinet and flute, quietly vivid. 'That Tired Old Routine Called Love' is a feature for the trio, 'St Louis Blues' and 'Just One Of Those Things' are spots for Rosengren out on his own, while Arne takes the spotlight on 'Stardust' and, back on clarinet, 'What Kind Of Fool Am I?', a duet with Lundgren. This is a wonderful jazz record, clearly thought out and articulated, packed with relaxed invention and some genuinely moving moments.

 Dompan! Fresh Sound 5032 Domnérus; Jan Lundgren (p); Tom Warrington (b); Paul Kreibich (d). 9/00.
In the late summer of 2000, Dompan played a residency at the Jazz Bakery near Los Angeles. The concept was a tribute to Duke, Rabbit and Sweet Pea, and the material is ideally suited to the clarinettist's swinging approach. He doesn't make any effort to pastiche Johnny Hodges or to take liberties with Ellington's compositions, which are mostly bright swingers – no 'Isfahan' this time, interestingly – and require a singing tone and great rhythmic awareness. The band is very good, too. Lundgren leads from the back, with powerful, accurate chords and a deft touch in his solo spots. Warrington is little known outside his locale, but he anchors the harmony very well and contributes some original ideas when called upon.

Also, in brief:

 Jump For Joy, 1959–1961 Dragon 196. 59–61.
A more coherent set than the earlier compilations. Dompan is on clarinet throughout and particularly strong on material like Mingus's 'Boogie Stop Shuffle' and Monk's 'Friday The 13th'.

 Heartfelt Proprius 9153. 8/94.
Recorded in Stockholm Cathedral with Gustav Sjökvist on the organ and Rune Gustafsson on guitar; lovely sound.

 Sketches of Standard Proprius PRCD 9036. 10/94.
Duets with guitarist Rune Gustafsson, immaculately recorded.

 Live Is Life Proprius PRCD 9142. 02.
Another lovely set from the great man, who gets more magisterial with the passing years.

Miles Donahue

TRUMPET, TENOR SAXOPHONE

His father played trumpet, but Charlie Mariano inspired Miles to play saxophone. Played soul, then piano, then returned to sax and trumpet with a side embouchure.

(*) Double Dribble Timeless SJP 392 Donahue; Kenny Werner (p); Bruce Gertz (b); George Schuller (d). 4/92.
 The Good Listener RAM 4510 Donahue; Jerry Bergonzi (ts); Kenny Werner (p); Bruce Gertz (b); Adam Nussbaum (d). 6/93.
 Simple Pleasures RAM 4525 Donahue; George Garzone (ts); Kenny Werner (p); Mick Goodrick (g); Bruce Gertz (b); Billy Hart (d). 5/95.
The New England axis is represented in force on these. Donahue's a senior figure now, but not much known outside his home territory. Like most who double on brass and reeds, he sounds stronger on the saxophone, but seems to favour sax-players rather than trumpeters as guests. The first two are both New Hampshire college gigs. Miles, on saxophone pretty much throughout, takes a firm hold of 'Inner Urge' on the first date, but Werner plays so many notes it sounds like he's taking hostages. The two quintets feature more trumpet, but are stronger and with more natural sound; 'Tab' is a bruising mêlée with Bergonzi, though Donahue's solo tenor turn on 'I'm Old Fashioned' has a furry beauty. Garzone doesn't try to upstage him, and the result is a rather low-key affair.

Also, in brief:

 Standards: Volumes 1–4 Amerigo 33711-4. 03.
Oddly academic readings of familiar fare, relieved on the first by Robin McElhatten's vocals. All four discs are separately titled.

Sam Donahue (1918–74)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Swing-era figure, born in Detroit. He took over Artie Shaw's Navy Band and led it till the end of the war.

 Hollywood Hop Hep CD 25 Donahue; Frank Beach, John Best, Bud Davis, Tony DiNardi, Conrad Gozzo, Don Jacoby, Louis Laros, Doc Severinsen, Liz Tilton, Lyman Vunk (t); Bob Burgess, Leon Cox, Harry DeVito, Ed Fromm, Dick La Fave, Tak Takvorian (tb); Ken Meisel (tb, v); Ralph LaPolla, Paul Mitchell, Bill Nichol, Paul Petrilla, Joe Reisman, Willie Smith, Charlie Wade (sax); Rocky Coluccio, Ray Rossi (p); Red Kelly, Mike Manley, Barney Spieler (b); Harold Hahn, Jimmy Pratt (d). 2/40–7/48.
 Convoy /  LST Party Hep CD 2 / 5 Donahue; Band Of The US Navy Liberation Forces. 6–12/45; 6/44–9/45.
 Take Five Hep 71 Donahue; Frank Beach, John Best, Fern Caron, Tony DiNardi, Phil Gilbert, Conrad Gozzo, Don Jacoby, Lee Katzman, Fred Lambert, William Marshall, Paul Mitchell, Ralph Osborne, Lyman Vunk (t); Eddie Bert, Sid Brantley, Bob Cutshall, Harry DeVito, Ed Fromm, Tasso Harris, Don Kelly, Dick LeFave, Obie Massingill, Ken Meisel, Dick Nash, Tak Takvorian, Kenny Trimble, Ollie Wilson (tb); Joe Aglora, Manny Albam, Joe Lenza, Bill Nichol, George Perry, Lennie Peterson, Paul Petrilla, Joe Reisman, Charlie Wade (sax); Rocky Coluccio, Bob Durand, Ted Napoleon, Ray Rossi (p); Benny Heller, Hy White (g); John Cianciarulo, Ed Cunningham, Barney Spieler (b); Harold Hahn, Buzz Sithens (d); Mynall Allen, Bill Lockwood (v). 6/45–12/47.
There's probably never been another band – in the West, at least – with a name like the Band Of The US Navy Liberation Forces. Donahue had first founded an orchestra in 1938, but he left day-to-day running to Sonny Bourke, while he himself went on the road with Buddy Rich. He later assumed control again. However, when the war started Donahue signed up and was soon in the Pacific with Artie Shaw. When Artie was medically discharged, Sam took over. The band, reckoned by aficionados to be superior to Glenn Miller's (and that's amply borne out by these Hep compilations), played an important role in the run-up to D-Day. Postwar, the situation changed and Donahue never again captured the same flair and success.

Hollywood Hop brings together studio and transcription recordings from the entire span of Donahue's active recording career. Convoy and LST Party concentrate on V-Discs and live performances, together with some rare material from the last year of the war. None of it is deathless music, but the band-book, inspired mainly by Jimmie Lunceford and to a degree by Basie, is crisp and inventive and there are some interesting names in the personnels. Donahue never recaptured the heady excitement of the war years. He played on for a while and spent his last years leading resort bands. Even so, this fluent, easy-paced reedman deserves his moment, even if it was lit by star-shells rather than limelight.

John Donaldson

PIANO

The Briton has a fresh, unaffected approach and interesting ideas.

 Meeting In Brooklyn Babel BDV 9405 Donaldson; Iain Ballamy (ss, ts); Ray Drummond (b); Victor Lewis (d). 9/93.

En route to California, Donaldson and Ballamy stopped off to cut this refreshingly spontaneous and unfussy session with two top-drawer Americans, who play on this with delightful simplicity, Drummond patiently chording behind Ballamy's delightful arrangement of 'Scarborough Fair', before handing over to Lewis to whip through the double-time second section. Donaldson's solo doesn't depart much from the tune, but then he is primarily a melodist, as his two compositions demonstrate. 'Big Loss In Lewisham' and 'Medjugorje' sound like Django Bates, but straighter, and Donaldson always plays for the band.

 Music Box Woodville 110 Donaldson; Oli Hayhurst (b); Asaf Sirkis (d). 2/06.

A music box is actually a very good analogy for Donaldson's sound: deceptively simple, one-note-at-a-time lines and basic chords, delicacy of touch. Nothing mechanical in the playing, though, which here pays tribute to some favourite piano-players, Michel Petrucciani prominent among them. Sirkis is an ideal foil, pattering out gentle cymbal patterns and fingertip rhythms on his drums. A quiet but excellent date with deceptive energy.

Also, in brief:

 Live At The Appleby Jazz Festival Trio 571. 05.

Engaging piano duo with Mark Edwards.

Lou Donaldson (born 1926)

ALTO SAXOPHONE

Arrived in NYC in the early '50s and worked with Monk, Blakey and Mingus, as well as leading his own groups. An unreconstituted bebopper, he played enough blues and gospel licks in his solos to forge the path towards soul-jazz in the '60s.

(*) Blues Walk Blue Note 46525-2 Donaldson; Herman Foster (p); Peck Morrison (b); Dave Bailey (d); Ray Barretto (perc). 7/58.

 Gravy Train Blue Note 92773 Donaldson; Herman Foster (p); Ben Tucker (b); Dave Bailey (d); Alec Dorsey (perc). 4/61.

 The Natural Soul Blue Note 42307 Donaldson; Tommy Turrentine (t); John Patton (org); Grant Green (g); Ben Dixon (d). 2/62.

 Good Gracious! Blue Note 54325-2 Donaldson; John Patton (org); Grant Green (g); Ben Dixon (d). 1/63.

Lou Donaldson has remained among the most diligent of Charlie Parker's disciples. His playing hardly altered course in 40 years of work: the fierce tone and familiar blues colourings remain constant through the '50s and '60s and, if he's as unadventurous as he is assured, at least his records guarantee a solid level of well-executed improvising. He replaces Parker's acidity with a certain sweetness which can make his work pall over extended listening.

Donaldson's stack of Blue Note albums has drifted in and out of circulation. Gravy Train is a curious first choice for an RVG edition. It's an accomplished enough record, but it never really excites and Foster is often the more impressive player. The Natural Soul, also now tricked out as an RVG, is better, though Lou himself doesn't always seem to enjoy the band's groove. Blues Walk, true to its title, is Donaldson at his bluesiest, and Bailey and Barretto make a propulsive combination; the material, though, is rather dull. Good Gracious! looks like another rote Blue Note affair, but with Patton and Green present and in rattling good spirits, both of them outplaying the leader, it comes off as one of his best.

 Possum Head / Signifyin' Groove Hut GH66703 Donaldson; Bill Hardman, Tommy Turrentine (t); John Patton (org); Ray Crawford, Roy Montrell (g); Ben Dixon (d); Cleopas Morris (perc). 7/63–1/64.

Lou's first two albums for Argo brought together in a nice package. Signifyin', which is sequenced second for some reason though it comes from July 1963, is probably the better of the two, though the two long tracks ('Time After Time' is only played out at single length unfortunately) are possibly the dullest, with 'I Feel It In My Bones' particularly creaky. Possum Head takes a poppier line, with 'Secret Love' given big licks and only 'Bye Bye Blackbird' stimulating Lou's bop nerve.

 Musty Rusty / At His Best Jazz Beat 508 Donaldson; Bill Hardman (t); Billy Gardner (org); Grant Green, Calvin Newborn (g); Ben Dixon, Grady Tate (d). 6 & 8/65.

Nobody much remembers Gardner, but he's the star of these Cadet recordings, a fiery but stylish organ-player who knows when to drop the dynamics and leave some space for the others. The second disc, his last for the label, predictably isn't the triumphal sign-off the title promises, but an oddly stiff date on which Lou sounds both musty and in places unwontedly rusty too. Worth it for the first one, though.

 Lush Life Blue Note 74214 Donaldson; Freddie Hubbard (t); Garnett Brown (tb); Wayne Shorter (ts); Jerry Dodgion (as, f); Pepper Adams (bs); McCoy Tyner (p); Ron Carter (b); Al Harewood (d). 1/67.

 The Midnight Creeper Blue Note 24549-2 Donaldson; Blue Mitchell (t); Lonnie Smith (org); George Benson (g); Leo Morris (d). 3/68.

These date from a fallow period in Blue Note's fortunes, but Midnight Creeper stays on the right side of righteous, with rising star Benson in its ranks. Lush Life, though, the album that brought him back into the fold after stints at Argo and Cadet, is a glamorous production designed to show off the romantic in Lou. A bit like putting Joe Frazier in a tux, it doesn't quite work, though Duke Pearson's arrangements are exquisitely done and, again, there are some intriguing names among the personnel.

(*) Caracas Milestone MCD 9217-2 Donaldson; Lonnie Liston Smith (org); Peter Bernstein (g); Kenny Washington (d); Ralph Dorsey (perc).

Lou's Milestone albums were a disappointing lot: he sounds plain tired a lot of the time, and digital glare doesn't suit him. His old chum Smith is often a pretty feeble prop and Bernstein plays many of the best licks. There's no shape to the albums, though, just casual blowing.

 Live On The QE2 Chiaroscuro CR(D) 366 Donaldson; Nicholas Payton (t); Lonnie Liston Smith (org); Randy Johnston (g); Danny Burger (d). 11/99.

Lou's first album in years is an enjoyable stroll through some of his old favourites: 'Harlem Nocturne', 'Marmaduke', 'I Can't Get Started', 'The Midnight Creeper' – the set-list writes itself. He's assembled a fine little outfit, though: Johnston has had lots of practice at this kind of gig, and a rejuvenated Smith works up a few new wrinkles at the Hammond. Payton turns up for a couple of blows, and Lou warns 'fusion or con-fusion musicians' against playing anything as tricky as original bebop.

Also, in brief:

 The Artist Selects Blue Note 31434-2. 6/52–11/68.
Lou's pick of his Blue Note years includes familiar hits such as 'Blues Walk' and 'Alligator Booglaoo'. Probably the Donaldson disc to have as a sampling of his powers.

 Live: Fried Buzzard Chessmates 18292. 65.
With Bill Hardman (t); it cooks along, but Donaldson never quite gets there.

 Say It Loud! Water 143. 11/68.
The James Brown title-tune, Gershwin, Ellington and two Lou originals: 'Snake Bone' and 'Brother Soul'. Ex-Blue Note.

 Everything I Play Is Funky Blue Note 31248. 8/69–1/70.
No masterwork, but it lives out the promise of the title pretty well.

(*) A Different Scene / Color As A Way Of Life Collectables COL6817. 76, 77.
These were originally on Cotillion. Non-vintage but fun for collectors.

Michel Doneda (born 1954)

SOPRANO AND SOPRANINO SAXOPHONES

French improviser, specializing in the higher frequencies.

 Open Paper Tree FMP CD 68 Doneda; Paul Rogers (b); Lê Quan Ninh (perc). 5/94.
This must have been a remarkable set – performed at Berlin's Free Music Workshop in 1994 – but, as so often with great improvisations, something's been lost in the translation. For once, Jost Gebers doesn't seem to have secured a very faithful sound, and the grand range of Lê Quan's percussion parts has been withheld. Rogers also suffers. The surviving document still has a raw, wound-up quality, which makes for unsettling listening over a long disc. Doneda's soprano begs no great virtuosity and he makes an awkward voice with the others, yet this makes the music the more intense and hard-won. There's little obvious textural interest, more a drawn-out struggle among three rather disparate voices, or entities. Tough work, and absorbing stuff for those who like a challenge.

(*) Anatomie Des Clefs Potlatch 598 Doneda (ss solo). 98.
The solo album, a nettle which Doneda grasps to only intermittent reward. 'Intermittent' is one way of describing the music, too, since much of it (especially the half-hour opening track) seems to have as much silence as sound in it. Elsewhere he recalls some of Roscoe Mitchell's more therapeutic pieces for saxophone-players, mustering every outlandish technique he can think of to get a result out of the fish horn. This needs a lot of tolerance.

 Not Victo 068 Doneda; Jean-Marc Montera (g, elec); Erik M (turntables, records etc). 5/99.
Doneda has his name on some interesting records, but he rarely seems to be the outstanding player. Montera and Erik M set the agenda for this live record, while the saxophonist is left to squeak and squiggle over the top. This kind of situation often seems to devolve into random electronic music, and frankly this is tiresome to listen to, oddly humourless for much of its dank duration.

 The Difference Between A Fish Potlatch P302 Doneda; Urs Leimgruber (ss, ts); Keith Rowe (g, elec). 2/01–5/02.
Consisting of two extended improvisations, 'The First Part' and 'The Third Part' (no reference to the second, and 'The Third' was recorded first!), these may strike some as an extended groan, underscored by Rowe's always s-l-o-w electronics. Leimgruber at least sounds like a tenor-player for some of the time. If you have the patience for it, accomplished in its truculent way.

Dorothy Donegan (1922–98)

PIANO, VOCAL

Born in Chicago, she was playing in church at 11. Performed in clubs and studied informally with Art Tatum. Despite a formidable technique, she was more of an all-round entertainer, singing and doing impersonations.

 The Many Faces Of Dorothy Donegan Storyville 101 8362 Donegan; Arvell Shaw, unknown (b); Panama Francis, unknown (d). 61–6/75.
 Live In Copenhagen 1980 Storyville STCD 8262 Donegan; Mads Vinding (b); Ed Thigpen (d). 5/80.
(*) Live At The 1990 Floating Jazz Festival Chiaroscuro CD(D) 312 Donegan; Jon Burr (b); Ray Mosca (d). 10–11/90.
(*) Live At The 1991 Floating Jazz Festival Chiaroscuro CR(D) 318 As above, except add Dizzy Gillespie (t). 10/91.
 Live At the Floating Jazz Festival 1992 Chiaroscuro CR(D) 323 As above, except omit Gillespie; add Clark Terry (t). 10/92.
A veteran whose greatest fame came very late in her career, Donegan was a pianist whose exuberance and sometimes hysterical virtuosity make her difficult to assess. The Storyville set from a gig in Copenhagen is a good one, with excellent support from Vinding and Thigpen, the latter proving himself to be Donegan's most swinging drummer. 'The Best Things In Life Are Free' and 'Take The "A" Train' are attacking set-pieces which turn out particularly well.

Her show-stopping appearances on Hank O'Neal's Floating Jazz cruises brought her some useful notoriety in the '90s. The 1990 session includes her celebrated impersonations of Lena Horne, Pearl Bailey, Eartha Kitt and (dead on) Billie Holiday, which are worth hearing once. But there's also some strong piano, and this rhythm section knows her well enough to make the music swing and stay together. Gillespie makes only the most desultory appearance on the 1991 date, which also has a very engaging 'Tea For Two'. Terry is more generously featured on his guest role the following year, and this is probably the one to get out of the three, although her spoken reminiscences at the end of the previous two discs make an interesting postscript. She was a phenomenon, whatever one thinks about the music, and a sensible best-of culled from all these recordings would be something to hear.

Donegan fans should welcome the appearance of The Many Faces Of. The first half is a session done for the small French label Mahogany in 1975, with Shaw and Francis, and although the piano's not very good and the balance is off, the music is in a rollicking humour. She tackles everything from 'You Are The Sunshine Of My Life' to Beethoven's 'Minuet In G', and there's a ten-minute 'Donegan's Blues' which is definitive in its way. The fill-up offers nine tracks drawn from London House broadcasts dated to 1961. Bass and drums (whoever they are) swing alongside and Dorothy is in high-energy mode.

Mark Donlon (born 1960)

PIANO

Born and studied in London, but now teaching jazz at Leeds College of Music. An acknowledged expert in Cuban music.

 Ashia F-Ire CD 020 Donlon (p solo). 07.

Widely respected for his compositions and big-band direction, Donlon surprises with this belated debut. It's a low-key, somewhat introspective essay with hints of Ravel, Debussy and Satie throughout. The opening 'Hardknot Pass' offers deceptive promise of something more upbeat, for the main piece is a threnody to Michael Brecker and the title-track a quietly shifting study. 'New Corners' might be a reference to Thelonious Monk, though that doesn't sound the most likely source for Donlon. Little sign, surprisingly, of his interest in Caribbean music, though some of the rhythms point in that direction.

Christy Doran (born 1949)

GUITARS, EFFECTS

An improviser who's wandered, with mixed results, through most areas of contemporary music.

* Corporate Art Winter & Winter 919053 Doran; Gary Thomas (ts); Mark Helias (b); Bobby Previte (d). 4–6/91.

Previously on JMT, this is a collaborative project with the emphasis on tight, edgy ensemble playing. Thomas is an increasingly hard man to pin down, but here he works hard for the group, even on his own 'Chiaroscuro', while Helias wheels in the magnificent 'Bass Minotaur' and '21'. Christy only has two numbers in the set, and they're not the strongest things here, though his playing throughout is extraordinary. He's pipped right at the end, after his own overlong 'The Same But Different' by Previte, whose lovely 'Theme For W' is the pick of the album and guarantees that it'll be spun again and again.

* Race The Time MGB CD 973 Doran; Jamaaladeen Tacuma (b); Fredy Studer (d). 5/97.

It would be stretching a point to suggest that here is a trio which interacts with the subtlety and sophistication of Bill Evans's classic Village Vanguard group. Doran's elegant chordal approach and delay-laden melody lines are the next step on, but this is a sound that also draws on the Jimi Hendrix Experience and Cream, the rock power trio pacified enough to accommodate the guitarist's elemental sound. Apart from the title-track and 'New Outline', all the tunes are by Doran and they reaffirm his gift for sweet, untroubled themes that open out on to vast landscapes of sound. The opening 'Circumstances' is deceptively brief, and it's only with the middle sequence of 'Race The Time', 'No Matter Where You Roam' and 'Incognito' that the real flavour of the set comes through. Doran has rarely played better.

* Triangulation Leo CD LR 388 Doran; John Wolf Brennan (p); Patrice Héral (perc, v). 6/04.

These are mostly short improvisations, executed with dancing dexterity and puckish humour. However, there are a couple of longer things which suggest that this must be a formidable group live as well as in the studio. 'A Day In The Life Of A Siren (Who Mistook Her Husband For An Umbrella)' is packed with ideas: Brennan fertile and quick-witted as always, Héral doing astonishing things with hands and voice, Doran himself in sparkling form. The final cut is also nearly ten minutes long, a tribute to the late Sergey Kuryokhin called 'Opera Perdu (Per Due; Per Tre)'. The word-play isn't entirely by-the-bye, for there's a lovely tale-spinning quality to these cuts, like something by Calvino, with the meaning left cheerfully unclear. Doran shows he's still capable of moving forward; Brennan doesn't know how not to.

Also, in brief:

 Musik Für Zwei Kontrabasse, Elektrische Gitarre Und Schlagzeug ECM 847941-2. 5/90.

Hovers between hard, almost industrial sound and a nervous algebraic discourse. Disappointing self-produced sound.

 Black Box /  Heaven Is In The Streets / (*) Perspectives Double Moon DMCHR 00710022 / 0071032 / Between The Lines btl 71204. 01; 02; 6/04.

Doran's New Bag group is a world fusion unit, consistently inventive, but on the fringes of jazz.

 Jimi Double Moon 71048. 10/04.

The heart sinks, but this actually works very well and the supporting cast – Erika Stucky (v), Fredy Studer (d), Kim Clarke (b) – do very well indeed with 'Spanish Castle Magic', 'Voodoo Child', 'Crosstown Traffic' and the rest.

Pierre Dørge (born 1946)

GUITAR

The Dane's conventional start in modal bop and fusion didn't prepare anyone for the outlandish adventures of his New Jungle Orchestra.

 Landscape With Open Door Steeplechase SCCD 31115 Dørge; Walt Dickerson (vib). 8/78.

 Ballad Round The Left Corner Steeplechase SCCD 31132 Dørge; John Tchicai (ss, as); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Billy Hart (d). 10/79.

The Dane is an experienced performer in jazz-rock and free settings, although his guitar tone is bright and clear, almost in a mainstream jazz tradition. But these small-group settings don't suit him. The duo session with Dickerson blends counterpoint almost too cleanly and palls quickly, while the quartet date, despite the promising line-up – Tchicai has been a frequent collaborator – is depressingly low in vitality, the compositions given only a perfunctory treatment.

(*) New Jungle Orchestra Steeplechase SCCD 31162 Dørge; Kenneth Agerholm, Niels Neergaard (tb); Uffe Markussen (ss, as); John Tchicai (as, ts); Jesper Zeuthen (as); Simon Spang-Hanssen (ts); Morten Carlsen (sax); Irene Becker (ky); Bent Clausen (vib); Peter Danstrup (b); Marilyn Mazur, Ole Rømer (d, perc). 5/82.

Here's the NJO in all its nutty glory, playing an uncategorizable blend that sometimes recalls the Vienna Art Orchestra, sometimes some folkloric ensemble that has been visited by an alien civilization, but also the old Ellington band. The opening section of 'Wobra Zebra' and 'Jungle Rituals' is as arresting as anything you'll hear, deceptively crisp underneath all the frantic energy.

 Brikama Steeplechase SCCD 31188 Dørge; Michel Marre (t, euph); Kenneth Agerholm, Niels Neergaard (tb); John Tchicai (ts, bcl); Jesper Zeuthen (as); Morten Carlsen (ts, bcl, bsx, ney, tarogato); Doudou Gouirand (as, ss); Bent Clausen (vib, perc); Irene Becker (ky); Johnny Mbizo Dyani (perc, v); Hugo Rasmussen (b); Thomas Akuru Dyani (perc); Marilyn Mazur (d, perc). 3/84.
(*) Very Hot – Even The Moon Is Dancing Steeplechase SCCD 31208 Dørge; Harry Beckett (t, flhn); Kenneth Agerholm, Niels Neergaard (tb); Søren Eriksen , Doudou Gouirand (ss, as); Jesper Zeuthen (as); John Tchicai (ts, v); Morten Carlsen (ts, bsx, f, tara, cl, zurna); Irene Becker (ky, perc, v); Bent Clausen (vib, perc); Johnny Mbizo Dyani (b, p, v); Hugo Rasmussen (b); Marilyn Mazur (d); Ahmadu Jarr (perc). 7/85.
(*) Johnny Lives Steeplechase SCCD 31228 As above, except omit Neergaard, Eriksen, Gouirand, Dyani and Jarr; add Hamid Drake (d); Thomas Akuru Dyani (perc). 4/87.
Dørge explores the idea of a global jazz village by pushing what is basically a post-bop orchestra into African, European and any other climes he can assimilate: roistering horn parts might emerge from a lush percussive undergrowth, or heartbreaking ballads may be brightened by Dørge's own sparkling high-life guitar solos. Inevitably there are moments on the records that sound misconceived, but refreshingly few: what one remembers is the joyful swing of the ensembles, the swirling tone-colours and rhythmic pep. There are fine soloists too in Tchicai, Carlsen and Beckett. Brikama is stunning, with vivid voicings and a bewildering range of instrumental characters. Very Hot is slightly fresher, with a winning reworking of Ellington's 'The Mooche' and two very long pan-global jams; but it would be unwise to pass up Johnny Lives, dedicated to the late Johnny Dyani, which has some beautiful writing and playing in such as 'Lilli Goes To Town' and 'Mbizo Mbizo'.

(*) Zig Zag Zimfoni Stunt STUCD 01022 Dørge; Kasper Tranberg (c); Kenneth Agerholm (tb, darbuka); Mads Hyhne (tb); Jakob Mygind, Anders Banke (ss, ts); Morten Carlsen (ts, f, taro); Peter Fuglsang (cl, bcl, f); Irene Becker (ky); Hugo Rasmussen (b); Bent Clausen (d); Ayi Solomon (perc); Josefine Cronholm (v). 9–10/00.
Here's his first for the new century, and it finds the NJO in rude health. As ever, this Jungle music is more about the Middle East than anything tropical, from the worldly rave-up of 'Arab Klap' which starts proceedings, on through the polyrhythmic hothouse of 'Bahrain'. Jazz keeps its hand in with the solos: as with the Arkestra, a more ruthless setting would expose weaknesses, but the NJO look after their own and there's always a huge support mechanism surrounding every exhilarating improvisation.

 Jazz Is Like A Banana Steeplechase SCCD 31636 Dørge; Gunnar Halle, Kasper Tranberg (t); Kenneth Agerholm (tb); Jakob Mygind (ss, ts); Irene Becker (ky); Thommy Andersson (b); Martin Andersen (d); Ayi Solomon (perc). 8/07.
At 60, Dørge sounds full of energy and mischief, and this is one of the best NJO records for years, or else it's just been a while since there was one and it feels good to have them back. 'A Minor Disturbance For Mr Nielsen' is a classic cut and both the title-track and the relatively short 'Landscape With Animals' are cut from very similar cloth. Dørge's role is increasingly that of auteur and lord of misrule and he keeps what in other hands might sound rather conventional charts from ever settling into routine. How is jazz like a banana? Suggestions gratefully received.

Also, in brief:

 Live At Birdland Stunt STCD 301. 9/99.
Wearing its Ellington heart on its sleeve, the Orchestra hits New York determined to make a splash. Not as great as seeing them live, but a terrific record.

(*) Dancing Cheek To Cheek Stunt STCD 4062. 2/03, 3/04..
The influences are still respectfully aired: 'Dukish Mingus' is iconic NJO, full of beauty and chaos.

Kenny Dorham (1924–72)

TRUMPET, VOCALS

His given name was McKinley, or 'Kinny' for short. Born in Fairfield, Texas, and a veteran of local bands, he worked with Billy Eckstine, Dizzy Gillespie and Charlie Parker, and as founding trumpeter of the Jazz Messengers. Later he spent considerable time in Europe. Dorham was also an effective singer.

(*) Kenny Dorham Quintet Original Jazz Classics OJC 113 Dorham; Jimmy Heath (as, bs); Walter Bishop Jr (p); Percy Heath (b); Kenny Clarke (d). 12/53.
 Afro-Cuban Blue Note 92744 Dorham; J. J. Johnson (tb); Hank Mobley (ts); Cecil Payne (bs); Horace Silver (p); Oscar Pettiford (b); Art Blakey (d); Carlos 'Patato' Valdes (congas). 1/55, 3/55.
Dorham never sounded more like Dizzy Gillespie than on Afro-Cuban, punching out single-note statements across the rhythm. The marvellous 1953 quintet features gulping blues passages that manage to thrive on the thinnest harmonic oxygen; never a mere showman, Dorham impresses with his mental stamina, a concentration and attention to detail that make him one of the most coherent and structurally aware of the bebop players. He is also one of the better composers, a point – 'Blue Bossa' apart – which is generally overlooked.

(*) Kenny Dorham And The Jazz Prophets: Volume 1 Chess GRP 18202 Dorham; J. R. Monterose (ts); Dick Katz (p); Sam Jones (b); Arthur Edgehill (d). 4/56.
At the turn of 1956, Dorham left the Messengers to form his own group, which he called the Prophets. The minor-key theme-piece 'The Prophet' makes for an arresting opening, with Dorham and an in-form Monterose swapping tiny phrases. 'Blues Elegante' opens with Katz and Jones, followed by Dorham playing muted and coming as close as he ever did to the Miles Davis sound, which he flirts with again on the Billie Holiday ballad 'Don't Explain'. The transfers are far from perfect, with occasional distortions and some noise which is presumably explained by tape wear.

CORE COLLECTION

* 'Round About Midnight At The Café Bohemia Vol. 2 Blue Note 33775 2CD Dorham; J. R. Monterose (ts); Kenny Burrell (g); Bobby Timmons (p); Sam Jones (b); Arthur Edgehill (d). 5/56.
... and at around midnight a sequence of minor keys would seem to be in order. Whatever else, Dorham always had a predilection for a unified mood, and this session, combining the Monk tune 'Autumn In New York' and 'A Night In Tunisia' with three originals, manages to sustain a slightly brooding, intensely thoughtful atmosphere. As a foil, Monterose was an excellent recruitment. Burrell swings with the usual horn-like attack and Timmons vamps righteously, though without ever really showing his mettle. Dorham's own solos are models of grace and tact, always giving an impression of careful construction and development. Francis Wolff's subtly doctored cover shot offers an intriguing impression of the man, showing Dorham in a bright check jacket, but with a faraway look in his eyes as he clutches the microphone; above him, a ghostly image of an American townscape, vivid but also fleeting. The reissue is a double set that includes four valuable alternatives.

 Jazz Contrasts Original Jazz Classics OJC 028 Dorham; Sonny Rollins (ts); Hank Jones (p); Oscar Pettiford (b); Max Roach (d); Betty Glamann (hp). 5/57.
 Two Horns / Two Rhythm Original Jazz Classics OJC 463 Dorham; Ernie Henry (as); Wilbur Ware (b); Granville T. Hogan (d). 11/57–12/57.
The pianoless horn-and-rhythm experiment posed interesting problems for Dorham. Ware's big bass almost fills in the gap; but what is interesting about the set as a whole is how Dorham adjusts his delivery, counting rests much more carefully, filling in with a broader intonation on ensemble passages. Henry and Hogan are by no means passengers, but the real drama of the recording is played out across the three octaves that divide trumpet and bass on some of the bridging passages. Rollins wasn't at first glance the ideal partner for Dorham, but he began to steer him in the direction of an altogether different approach to thematic variation which really became evident only towards the end of the decade. Horns/Rhythm gains a star for boldness; Jazz Contrast drops back one for the wishy-washy sound.

 This Is The Moment Original Jazz Classics OJC 812 Dorham; Curtis Fuller (tb); Cedar Walton (p); Sam Jones (b); G. T. Hogan, Charli Persip (d). 7 & 8/58.
Dorham always considered his singing to be an integral part of his work. He sang with Dizzy's band in the '40s but made the decision to concentrate on trumpet. Even here, it's his 15 July 1958 playing that counts, and while it's tempting to reverse the emphasis and say that it's as lyrical as his singing is improvisatory and horn-like, almost the reverse is the case. Dorham doesn't sing like a hornman but he gives the lyric almost deliberate weight and emphasis, closer to speech rhythms than to top-line jazz. Unlike many hyphenate players, he makes a hard and fast distinction between the two 'voices'. 'From This Moment On' is done as an instrumental, but 'I Remember Clifford' is adorned with the Jon Hendricks lyric, when it might have been more interesting the other way round. Both horns are muted throughout, lending the whole a soft, staccato bounce that is no less attractive for being determinedly understated. The album is significant for being Cedar Walton's first recording. He's not yet the presence he was to be in future years, a sapling rather than the solidly rooted sideman-for-all-seasons he was to become. Nevertheless his soloing is adroit and unclichéd and his accompaniment firm without being domineering.

 Blue Spring Original Jazz Classics OJC 134 Dorham; David Amram (frhn); Julian 'Cannonball' Adderley (as); Cecil Payne (bs); Cedar Walton (p); Paul Chambers (b); Jimmy Cobb, Philly Joe Jones (d). 1–2/59.
(*) Quiet Kenny Original Jazz Classics OJC 250, Dorham; Tommy Flanagan (p); Paul Chambers (b); Art Taylor (d). 11/59.
 The Arrival Of Kenny Dorham Fresh Sound FSRCD 200 Dorham, Charles Davis (bs); Tommy Flanagan (p); Butch Warren (b); Buddy Enlow (d). 1/60.
Dorham enjoyed a brief resurgence towards the end of the '50s. Quiet Kenny is a minor masterpiece. The blues playing is still as emotional as ever but there is a more relaxed approach to the basic metres, and Tommy Flanagan in particular invites a quieter and more sustained articulation of themes. Arrival sees him in good voice, tooting through a light but demanding programme that includes Rollins's favourite 'I'm An Old Cowhand' and 'Stella By Starlight' with the most open tone he'd produced.

 Jazz Contemporary Bainbridge 1048 Dorham; Charles Davis (bs); Steve Kuhn (p); Jimmy Garrison, Butch Warren (b); Buddy Enlow (d). 2/60.
(*) Showboat Pony Canyon 30106 Dorham; Jimmy Heath (ts); Kenny Drew (p); Jimmy Garrison (b); Art Taylor (d). 12/60.
Previously issued on Time, these are workmanlike sets that perhaps don't stand up quite so well on reacquaintance. Bob Shad's A&R work at Time yielded some strong sessions, particularly from trumpeters, and Dorham attempts some daring upward sweeps on 'Monk's Mood', staccato bursts of sound on 'Horn Salute' and the inventive ensemble composition 'Tonica', dedicated to Bird's and Monk's patron, the Baroness. On Brubeck's 'In Your Own Sweet Way' and the Sinatra song 'This Love Of Mine' he sticks pretty close to the melody.

CD transfer of these discs has done some violence to the trumpet sound, but the pay-off is a richer ensemble, a considerable bonus on the sololess 'Tonica'. It also suits the Kern album particularly well. Heath sounds warmer and more present and both 'Ol' Man River' and the Wodehouse collaboration 'Bill' are delightful.

 Whistle Stop Blue Note 25646 Dorham; Hank Mobley (ts); Kenny Drew (p); Paul Chambers (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 1/61.
() Matador / Inta Somethin' / () Complete Recordings Blue Note 84460 / Gambit 69267 Dorham; Jackie McLean (as); Walter Bishop, Bobby Timmons (p); Teddy Smith, Leroy Vinnegar (b); J. C. Moses, Art Taylor (d). 11/61, 4/62.
 Una Mas Blue Note 21228 Dorham; Joe Henderson (ts); Herbie Hancock (p); Butch Warren (b); Tony Williams (d). 4/63.
Despite the sustained energy of Una Mas, the title-track of which is one of Dorham's finest moments, and of Trompeta Toccata (both of which paired the trumpeter's brightly burnished tone with the muscular tenor of Joe Henderson; see below), Dorham seemed to be running out of steam in 1963; 'one more time' was beginning to sound like once too often.

The writing on Matador/Inta Somethin' (now available as an attractive pair) is strong-lined and challenging, but McLean was well up to such challenges and his own 'Melanie' ('Melonae'?) is full of good things, the longest cut on either set. There is a smattering of standard material and a Villa-Lobos 'Prelude' (a duo with Timmons), but Dorham emerges as an original thinker here. Whistle Stop is a bright and bubbly record, packed with great writing – 'Buffalo', 'Philly Twist' and 'Sunrise in Mexico' – and robust playing from all concerned. The album closes with the disturbingly titled 'Dorham's Epitaph', but it was far from that.

(*) Scandia Skies Steeplechase SCCD 36010 Dorham; Rolf Ericson (t, flhn); Tete Montoliu (p); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Alex Riel (d). 12/63.
 Short Story Steeplechase SCCD 36015 As above, except omit Ericson; add Allan Botschinsky (flhn). 12/63.
These were made about a fortnight apart in Copenhagen and they're pretty routine fare. Dorham sounds almost as if he was coasting on the earlier set and he and Ericson aren't sufficiently differentiated in sound to make it appealing. Montoliu is in cracking form on the later date and seems to revel in the relaxed atmosphere. A teenaged NHOP shows what a pro he was becoming. Not essential items, but perfectly agreeable.

 New York 1964 Rare Live Recordings 88627 As above, except omit Ericson; add Barry Harris (p); Julian Ewell (b); Albert Tootie Heath (d). 12/63, 8/64.
Some of this stuff reproduces material from the Steeplechases, but just the quartet tracks. The remainder comes from a New York set formerly available on the small Raretone label. There's nothing too essential and there are signs of tiredness in Dorham's articulation and phrasing. Nevertheless, Dorham on an average night was more interesting than most of his peers on a good one.

(*) Trompeta Toccata Blue Note 84181 Dorham; Joe Henderson (ts); Tommy Flanagan (p); Richard Davis (b); Albert 'Tootie' Heath (d). 9/64.
Kenny's last album as leader is rarely cited when the iconic statements of hard bop are listed, but it surely belongs among them. The band is as muscular as the writing and the classically tinged trumpet-playing on the long title-track and the more brooding 'Night Watch' that follows is among the best of his career. Henderson's 'Mamacita' gets an airing and the set ends with Dorham's own 'The Fox', which rounds out a foreshortened career with a breezy flourish. Smartened up in the remastering, it comes across as fresh as paint.

Also, in brief:

(*) Complete Savoy & Small Group Recordings Definitive 11156
Valuable compilation from the early years.

 The Art Of The Ballad Prestige 11013. 53–59.
Good to see Kenny represented alongside more-obvious players in this budget series. The trumpeter was a finely sensitive interpreter of ballads. And yet the album represents somewhat thin pickings for anyone eager to hear Kenny highlighted at length.

 Soul Support Jazz Colours 874756. 61.
Intriguing 1961 quintet/sextet material with Rocky Boyd (ts) and Curtis Fuller (tb).

 Trumpet Summit At Club Ruby, 1968 Fresh Sound FSRCD 382. 68.
A late tribute to Fats Navarro, Booker Little and Clifford Brown with fellow trumpeters Bill Hardman, Walter Kelly, Blue Mitchell and Woody Shaw.

Dany Doriz

VIBES

Owner of the legendary Paris club Caveau De La Huchette.

 This One's For Basie Black & Blue 860 Doriz; Georges Arvanitas (p); Eddie Jones (b); Butch Miles (d). 94.
 Jazz Fever Black & Blue 680 Doriz; Claude Tissendier (cl); Marc Fosset (g, v); Philippe Duchemin (p); Patricia Lebeugle (b); Didier Dorise (d); Martineke Kooistra, Catherine Bordeaux, Gabrielle Godart (v). 04.
 On The New Jersey Road Futura 104 Doriz; Enrico Granafei (hca); Philippe Duchemin (p); Particia Lebeugle (b). 05.
This is the man described by Lionel Hampton as 'my spiritual son', a ringingly percussive vibes-player in the old manner, who generates great excitement whenever he plays. And he's played with everyone from Bob Wilber to Manu Dibango. There are none of these that would constitute essential listening, but Doriz's easy swing is always engaging, and on things like 'Tickle Toe' (on the first disc) he's both in the tradition and quietly idiosyncratic. The Sweet System group on Jazz Fever is an interesting set-up, less successful than the trio on the Futura record, but packed with gracious energy.

Bob Dorough (born 1923)

VOICE, PIANO

He was singing in New York clubs in the '40s, has spent much time in Europe, and is now the oldest hipster in town.

 Bob Dorough & Sam Most Quartet: Complete Recordings Lone Hill Jazz LHJ10123 Dorough; Doug Mettome (t); Urbie Green (tb); Sam Most (cl, f); Bill Crow, Percy Heath (b); Louie Bellson, Joe Morello (d). 53, 56.
(*) Devil May Care JVC Victor 61464 Dorough; Warren Fitzgerald (t); Jack Hitchcock (vib); Bill Takas (b); Jerry Segal (d). 10/56.
Dorough has made only a modest number of records over his marathon career, and is mostly remembered as the author of 'Devil May Care' and other great songs. His own version is perhaps not the most exciting by today's standards, but it's brilliant singing and catches a moment in time almost perfectly. The album has been around in many different incarnations over the years, so it's likely to be available under one flag or another (Bethelehm Archives, Avenue, Charly, Rhino/WEA or the above). Whatever its port of registration, get it and enjoy Bob's 'Yardbird Suite' (two takes), 'Baltimore Oriole', 'I Had The Craziest Dream' and ten others, though at this stage only a couple of originals.

The Lone Hill material is fairly obscure, but it's interesting to catch Dorough as a piano-player, working a seam that already seems at odds with the prevailing bop/West Coast dichotomy of the day. Most has a few compositions on the early dates, but it's Bob's later 'Scoobydoo', 'Eulalia' and 'A Cuss Called Coss', added here as bonus tracks, that point the way forward.

(*) Just About Everything Evidence ECD 22094 Dorough; Al Schackman (g); Ben Tucker (b); Percy Brice (d). 3/66.
When jazz singers in the '90s – including Dorough fan Claire Martin – started to programme contemporary pop into their set-lists, knowing greybeards laughed at the media reaction and muttered 'Bob was doing it years ago.' On this, he includes 'Don't Think Twice, It's Alright', alongside 'Lazy Afternoon', 'Baltimore Oriole' and others. In fact, he begins the set with the Dylan song, as a way of throwing down the gauntlet. It's a terrific album, arguably Dorough's finest.

 Small Day Tomorrow Candid CCD 79844 Dorough; Derek Nash (ts); Geoff Gascoyne (b); Sebastiaan De Krom (d); Trudy Kerr (v). 4/05.
He finally got a major deal with Blue Note when in his 70s, at a point when they seemed to be signing some of the oldest jazz-associated artists still working. Typically, these have since lapsed, though they're funny and entertaining, if without the staying power of Mose Allison's in a related style. The Candid album was cut on a flying visit to the UK with a British band and features him on material scripted by Fran Landesmann. The songs suit him perfectly, although the voice is starting to turn into a throaty gargle.

 Sunday At Iridium Arbors ARCD 19305 Dorough; Joe Wilder (t); Daryl Sherman (p, v); Steve Gilmore (b); Ed Ornowski (d); Laura Amico, Roslyn Hart (v). 2/04.

The hippest jazz venue in town played host to the 80-year-old, who promptly turned back the clock with a fine set that includes 'Electricity Electricity', a fun vocal version of Sonny Rollins's 'St Thomas', 'Sunday' and the more recent original 'Baby Used To Be'. Daryl Sherman shares the keys and the mic for a lovely 'Without Rhyme Or Reason'. Wilder is called on for 'Sunday' and 'Ain't No Spoofin'' and there are some spots for the Bobettes, a great pair of singers/actresses who're regulars at the club. Joe's singing isn't exactly bel canto any more, but he tells a great story in song.

Jimmy Dorsey (1904–57)

ALTO AND BARITONE SAXOPHONES, CLARINET, TRUMPET

The elder, reed-playing Dorsey brother worked with his sibling on the NY session-scene of the '20s before co-leading a band which he eventually took over after a quarrel with Tommy. A superb technician, admired by Charlie Parker, and his music matched his mild-mannered demeanour. He was reconciled with his brother, and their final venture as co-leaders ended with Tommy's death, followed by Jimmy's passing only months later.

(*) Pennies From Heaven ASV AJA 5052 Dorsey; George Thow, Toots Camarata, Joe Meyer (t); Don Mattison (tb, v); Bobby Byrne, Joe Yukl, Bruce Squires (tb); Fud Livingston (as, ts); Jack Stacey, Len Whitney (as); Skeets Hurfurt, Charles Frazier (ts); Bobby Van Eps, Freddy Slack (p); Roc Hillman (g, v); Slim Taft, Jack Ryan (b); Ray McKinley (d, v); Bob Eberle, Frances Langford (v). 3/36–6/37.

 Amapola ASV AJA 5287 As above, except add W. C. Clark, Shorty Sherock, Ralph Muzillo, Nate Kazebier, Johnny Napton, Shorty Solomon, Jimmy Campbell, Ray Anthony, Paul McCoy, Bob Alexy, Ray Linn, Marky Markowitz, Phil Napoleon (t); Sonny Lee, Jerry Rosa, Al Jordan, Phil Washburne, Andy Russo, Nick Di Maio (tb); Noni Bernard, Dave Matthews, Sam Rubinowich, Milt Yaner, Frank Langone, Bill Covey (as); Leonard Whitner, Herbie Haymer, Don Hammond, Babe Russin (ts); Chuck Gentry, Bob Lawson (bs); Freddy Slack, Joe Lippman, Johnny Guarnieri, Dave Mann (p), Guy Smith, Allan Reuss, Tommy Kay (g); Jack Ryan, Bill Miller (b); Buddy Schutz (d); Bing Crosby, The Andrews Sisters, Helen O'Connell, Kitty Kallen (v). 7/36–10/43.

(*) At The 400 Restaurant 1946 Hep CD 41 Dorsey; Bob Avery, Claude Bowen, Ray Linn, Tonny Picciotto, Nathan Solomon, Seymour Baker, Irving Goodman, Louis Mucci (t); Si Zentner, Thomas Lee, Nick Di Maio, Anthony Russo, Fred Mancusi, Don Mattison, Bob Alexander (tb); Jack Aiken, Frank Langone, Bill Covey, Cliff Jackson (as); Bobby Dukoff, Charles Frazier, Charles Travis, Gill Koerner (ts); Bob Lawson, Johnny Dee (bs); Marvin Wright, Lou Carter (p); Herb Ellis, Teddy Walters (g); Jimmy Middleton, Norman Bates (b); Adolf Shutz, Karl Kiffe (d); Dee Parker, Paul Chapman (v). 1/46.

(*) Original Studio Radio Transcriptions Swing Factory SWCD66612 Dorsey; other personnel unlisted. 39–49.

The elder Dorsey brother was a saxophonist of the highest technical accomplishment, and he showed off as a young session-man in the '20s. The band he formed in 1935 after splitting up with his brother was a commercial dance unit, but the group could swing when Dorsey wanted it to, and there was some impeccable section playing, particularly from the trombones. The first ASV disc pulls together 18 tracks from this period, a mixture of vocal features for Eberle, Langford and McKinley and more jazz-orientated titles. 'Dorsey Dervish' harks back to the leader's technical exercises of the decade before, but 'Stompin' At The Savoy' is creditable enough, and Bobby Byrne's beautiful lead trombone on 'In A Sentimental Mood' (contrary to the sleeve-notes, Byrne doesn't sing on this tune) outdoes even Tommy for mellifluousness. It's a pity, though, that titles such as 'Swamp Fire', 'Major And Minor Stomp' and 'Cherokee' are omitted.

Amapola collects 24 of the biggest hits by Dorsey's band over a seven-year period. The emphasis here is on the ballad and vocal-feature side of Dorsey's discography, and if this is what you want, it's an ideal record – from the title-track, Helen O'Connell's signature rendition of 'Green Eyes' and Kitty Kallen's 'Besame Mucho' to the somewhat more swinging 'I Fall In Love With You Every Day' and the novelty 'Six Lessons From Madame La Zonga', these are the memories which Dorsey's amen corner will probably remember best. The odd soloist pops up here and there to remind us that it was basically a good band.

The Hep CD is a lot more modernistic: among the opening four tracks, which date from 1944, is a Dizzy Gillespie arrangement of 'Grand Central Getaway'. The remainder are airshots taken from a New York engagement two years later and, while the band has nothing very outstanding about it, there are one or two worthwhile solos from Bob Avery and the leader, whose attractive score 'Contrasts' hints at directions which he never really followed. Generally, though, there is rather more jazz-inflected material here than on the earlier CD, and remastering makes the best of the broadcast recording. The Swing Factory issue is in good sound, but the lack of any documentation leaves one guessing as to provenance and identity of the players.

 Jimmy Dorsey & His Original Dorseyland Jazz Band 1949–1950 Definitive DRCD 11205 Dorsey; Charlie Teagarden (t, v); Cutty Cutshall, Ray Diehl (tb); Frank Maynes, Artie Lyons (ts); Dick Cary, Bob Carter (p, cel); Carl Kress, Earl Backus (g); Bill Lolatte (b); Ray Bauduc, Karl Kiffe (d); Clair Hogan, Kenny Martin, Pat O'Connor (v). 11/49–9/50.

Dorsey's Columbia sessions of 1949–50 have been all but forgotten, but this useful reissue brings back 19 titles by a pretty good band in a swing–dixieland style. Compared to some of Eddie Condon's sessions the delivery can seem polite, but on the stomping numbers they let their hair down: 'Struttin' With Some Barbecue', the tone set by one of Jimmy's impeccable fast-fingered solos, is as frantic as any version on record. There are kitschy but amusing vocals by Hogan and Charlie Teagarden, who also plays a lot of fine trumpet.

Tommy Dorsey (1905–56)

TROMBONE, TRUMPET

A ubiquitous figure on the NY dance-band circuit of the '20s, he went on to lead one of the most successful swing-era big bands, although the jazz content of the records was often in doubt. The 'Sentimental Gentleman' of swing was a martinet, but he kept his band going in the post-swing era, eventually reuniting with his brother Jimmy. His perfect legato trombone style and singing high tone strongly influenced his band singer, Frank Sinatra. In 1956, he choked to death in his sleep.

 Tommy Dorsey 1928–1935 Classics 833 Dorsey; Manny Klein, Andy Ferretti, Sterling Bose, Bill Graham (t); Joe Ortolano, Ben

Pickering, Dave Jacobs (tb); Jimmy Dorsey, Sid Stoneburn (cl, as); Noni Bernardi (as); Clyde Rounds (as, ts); Johnny Van Eps (ts); Paul Mitchell, Fulton McGrath, Frank Signorelli (p); Arthur Schutt (harmonium); Eddie Lang, Mac Cheikes (g); Gene Traxler, Jimmy Williams (b); Sam Rosen, Sam Weiss, Stan King (d); Edythe Wright, Eleanor Powell (v). 11/28–11/35.

Classics' opening disc takes in Dorsey's great 1928–9 dates where he plays trumpet – a bit shaky, but tremendously fierce, with terrific Eddie Lang support. These sound very clean and bright, which is why the rotten quality of the 1935 orchestra dates is so disappointing. These can't have been direct transfers. Either way, Dorsey got off to a modest start with five fairly nondescript sessions – though the fourth released his hit theme, 'I'm Getting Sentimental Over You'.

(*) Tommy Dorsey 1935–1936 Classics 854 Dorsey; Sterling Bose, Andy Ferretti, Joe Bauer, Max Kaminsky, Sam Skolnick (t); Ben Pickering, Joe Ortolano, Walter Mercurio (tb); Joe Dixon (cl, as, v); Sid Stoneburn (cl, as); Fred Stulce, Noni Bernardi (as); Clyde Rounds (as, ts); Sid Block, Johnny Van Eps (ts); Dick Jones (p); Bill Schaffer (g); Gene Traxler, Dave Tough, Sam Weiss (d); Edythe Wright, Buddy Gately, Jack Leonard (v). 12/35–3/36.

 Tommy Dorsey 1936 Classics 878 As above, except omit Bose, Ferretti, Ortolano, Stoneburn, Bernardi, Block, Van Eps, Weiss, Gately; add Steve Lipkins (t); Red Bone, Les Jenkins (tb); Bud Freeman (ts); Carmen Mastren (g); The Three Esquires (v). 4–10/36.

 Tommy Dorsey 1936–1937 Classics 916 As above, except omit Skolnick, Pickering, Schaffer; add Bunny Berigan, Bob Cusumano, Andy Ferretti, Jimmy Welch (t); Artie Foster (tb); Slats Long (cl, ts). 11/36–2/37.

 Tommy Dorsey 1937 Classics 955 As above, except omit Berigan, Lipkins, Cusumano, Foster, The Three Esquires; add Pee Wee Erwin (t); Mike Doty, Johnny Mince (cl, as); Howard Smith (p). 2–5/37.

Like all the great swing orchestras, Dorsey's band was as much about dance music as it was about jazz. Relatively few of the songs survive the era; the arrangements are more functional than challenging, solos are usually kept to a minimum, and the music looks back in time rather than ahead. All that said, the trombonist could claim several virtues. While he was the principal soloist, he could call on several fine jazzmen: Freeman, Dixon, Mince and – above all – Berigan, whose tantalizing first stint with the band (a mere five sessions) resulted in 'Song Of India', 'Marie', 'Mr Ghost Goes To Town' and 'The Goona Goo', to cite four memorable solos (all on Classics 916). Dorsey also had one of the best band singers of the era, Edythe Wright, as well as his Clambake Seven small group. Sometimes an unpromising title will turn out surprisingly well, and on a piece like 'Keepin' Out Of Mischief Now' (Classics 916) the whole band shows what it could do. There is also the splendid swing drumming of Dave Tough to listen to.

Of these four discs, the first gets lower marks for a dearth of worthwhile music and some very sloppy remastering, the quality of which seems to vary from track to track. The standard improves on the next three, although a listen to the Retrieval CD listed below against the Clambake Seven tracks on Classics 955 shows how much better a job can be done with a little care and some mint originals. Classics 916 is probably the pick for the tracks with Berigan.

 Tommy Dorsey 1937 Vol. 2 Classics 995 Dorsey; Pee Wee Erwin, Joe Bauer, Andy Ferretti (t); Les Jenkins, Red Bone (tb); Johnny Mince, Mike Doty (cl, as); Fred Stulce, Skeets Herfurt (as); Bud Freeman, Tony Antonelli (ts); Howard Smith (p); Carmen Mastren (g); Gene Traxler (b); Dave Tough (d); Edythe Wright, Jack Leonard (v). 5–7/37.

 Tommy Dorsey 1937 Vol. 3 Classics 1035 As above, except omit Antonelli, Bone and Doty; add Lee Castle (t); Walter Mercurio (tb). 7–9/37.

 Tommy Dorsey 1937–1938 Classics 1078 As above, except omit Bauer, Mercurio; add Earle Hagen (tb); Maurice Purtill (d). 10/37–3/38.

Dorsey was making records at an incredible pace: he cut 22 sessions in 1937 alone, proof of the band's popularity. As usual, though, the results are the swing-era mix of worthwhile music and softcore ballads and schmaltz. When the vocalist sits out and Dorsey gives the soloists some space, the full band delivers something fine, such as 'Canadian Capers' (Classics 1035), but for the most part the jazz content is left to the Clambake Seven sessions, where Dorsey, Freeman and the underrated Mince especially put some real heat into the proceedings. But there are also other compensations: Edythe Wright's singing is always a pleasure, and the mellifluous sound of the leader is frequently parlayed into similarly graceful playing by the whole band. There is the quota of jazzed classics, from such unlikely sources as Dvořák and Rimsky-Korsakov, on Classics 995; and Classics 1078 has his big hit, 'The Dipsy Doodle', arranged by Larry Clinton, although the second half of the disc is let down by some particularly bland material

 Tommy Dorsey 1938 Classics 1117 Dorsey; Pee Wee Erwin, Lee Castle, Andy Ferretti (t); Les Jenkins, Frank D'Annolfo, Earle Hagen (tb); Johnny Mince (cl, as); Fred Stulce, Skeets Hurfurt, Hymie Schertzer (as); Bud Freeman, Deane Kincaide (ts); Howard Smith (p); Carmen Mastren (g); Artie Shapiro, Gene Traxler (b); Maurice Purtill (d); Edythe Wright, Jack Leonard, The Three Esquires (v). 2–5/38.

 Tommy Dorsey 1938 Vol. 2 Classics 1156 As above, except omit D'Annolfo, Freeman, Shapiro; add Charlie Spivak, Yank Lawson, Max Kaminsky (t); Buddy Morrow (tb). 7–9/38.

 Tommy Dorsey 1938–1939 Classics 1197 As above, except omit Erwin, Hagen, The Three Esquires; add Sam Shapiro (t); Dave Jacobs, Buddy Morrow, Elmer Smithers, Ward Silloway (tb); Babe Russin (ts). 9/38–1/39.

Not really a banner year for Dorsey, whose biggest success still lay ahead. These three discs are, as before, a mix of sessions for the orchestra and for The Clambake Seven, and though the small-group sides are the warmest, some of the best playing is in the music by the big band. Dorsey lost one of his best soloists when Bud Freeman departed (midway through Classics 1117). His replacement, Deane Kincaide, brought some charts into the band's book – although these were a curious set of throwbacks to '20s hits such as 'Copenhagen', 'Washboard Blues' and 'Panama' (all on Classics 1156), and 'Tin Roof Blues' and 'Down Home Rag' (Classics 1197). Spirited playing by the band, though, and Lawson and Russin were new recruits who could turn in a useful 16 bars. Dorsey himself, though sometimes maligned as a soloist, has a few good moments. The material has its share of forgotten non-hits, although in general Dorsey managed to avoid some of the worst of the pop fillers which blighted many a swing band's book.

(*) The Best Of Tommy Dorsey And His Clambake Seven 1936–1938 Retrieval RTR 79012 Dorsey; Max Kaminsky, Pee Wee Erwin (t); Joe Dixon, Johnny Mince (cl); Bud Freeman (ts); Dick Jones (p); Bill Schaffer, Carmen Mastren (g); Gene Traxler (b); Dave Tough, Maurice Purtill, (d); Edythe Wright (v). 12/35–2/47.

(*) The Music Goes 'Round & Around ASV AJA 5497 Dorsey; Sterling Bose, Pee Wee Erwin, Max Kaminsky, Yank Lawson, Ziggy Elman, Charlie Shavers, Bobby Hackett, Jimmy Blake, Billy Butterfield (t); Joe Dixon, Johnny Mince, Buddy DeFranco, Peanuts Hucko (cl); Sid Block, Bud Freeman, Skeets Herfurt, Babe Russin, Bommie Richman, Arthur Rollini (ts); Paul Mitchell, Dick Jones, Howard Smith, John Potoker, Gene Schroeder, Rocky Coluccio (p); Mac Cheikes, Carmen Mastren, Sam Herman (g); Gene Traxler, Sid Bloch, Jack Lesberg (b); Sam Weiss, Dave Tough, Russ Isaacs, Graham Stevenson, Cliff Leeman, Alvin Stoller, Buzzy Drootin, Moe Purtill (d); Edythe Wright, Hughie Prince, Sy Oliver (v). 12/35–12/50.

Dorsey's small group was an initiative he began almost as soon as the bigger band became successful, and he ran it on and off alongside the main orchestra for the rest of his career. As with the big band, though, the group's material is often thin and prone to novelty material. Retrieval's 21-track selection mystifyingly leaves out some very good Sevens (including our favourite, 'Rhythm Saved The World', which at least is on Classics 854), but otherwise offers a vivid portrait of some of Dorsey's best playing and excellent spots for Freeman, Erwin and Dixon. The best thing, though, is the superlative remastering by John R. T. Davies, which lets one hear what Carmen Mastren and Dave Tough were doing for the first time in any reissue and makes one aware of what a swinging rhythm section this was. The alternative disc on ASV is pretty good too. Inevitably there are duplications, but it also offers five much later tracks from 1950, which include some smart Bobby Hackett work.

 Tommy Dorsey 1939 Classics 1237 Dorsey; Yank Lawson, Andy Ferretti, Lee Castle, Pee Wee Erwin (t); Dave Jacobs, Ward Silloway, Elmer Smithers (tb); Johnny Mince (cl, as); Fred Stulce (as); Skeets Herfurt (as, v); Deane Kincaide, Babe Russin (ts); Howard Smith (p); Carmen Mastren (g); Gene Traxler (b); Dave Tough (d); Edythe Wright, Jack Leonard (v). 1–5/39.

 Tommy Dorsey 1939 Vol. 2 Classics 1278 As above, except omit Castle; add Mickey Bloom (t); Hymie Schertzer (as); Charles Carroll, Cliff Leeman (d). 5–7/39.

(*) Tommy Dorsey 1939 Vol. 3 Classics 1327 As above, except omit Erwin; add Jimmy Blake (t); Noni Bernardi (as); Anita Boyer (v). 8–10/39.

For sheer prolifigacy, Dorsey was practically unmatched at this point: these discs include 67 different titles, and they don't even cover a full year's output. And Dorsey's greatest music was arguably still ahead of him. Classics 1237 has some plain material, as usual, but the band make the absolute most of 'Tea For Two'; 'By The River Sainte Marie' gets an unexpectedly fine performance, and 'Milenberg Joys' nods back to an older hot style. Classics 1278 follows a similar pattern and has more of the dance band than the swing orchestra in it, although there are some excellent things – Sy Oliver's two-part arrangement of 'Lonesome Road', Edythe Wright on 'Well, All Right', and another good Oliver chart in 'Stomp It Off', even if the band could have played it with a little more vigour. Classics 1327 is easily the weakest of the three, despite including a Clambake Seven date (one of their mildest): lots of dull Jack Leonard vocals, and precious little swing.

(*) Palladium 1940 & Raleigh Show 1943 Jazz Hour JH-1035 Personnel unlisted. 40–43.

(*) 1942 War Bond Broadcast Jazz Hour JH-1013 Personnel unlisted. 7–10/42.

Both these discs of airshots are for hardcore followers only. The earlier set has some good if rusty 1940 material with Sinatra, and though the 1943 show is in surprisingly bright and clear hi-fi, the band sounds jolted and there's a lot of irrelevant speech-making. The 1942 disc starts off in poor sound, which gets increasingly worse until halfway through, when the October programme cleans up and works off a couple of nice if familiar Sy Oliver arrangements.

 The Carnegie Hall V-Disc Session April 1944 Hep CD 40 Dorsey; Pete Candoli, George Seaberg, Sal La Perche, Dale Pearce, Bob Price, Ralph Santangelo, Mickey Mangano (t); Walter Benson, Tommy Pederson, Tex Satterwhite, Nelson Riddle (tb); Buddy DeFranco, Hank D'Amico (cl, as); Sid Cooper, Leonard Kaye (as); Gail Curtis, Al Klink, Don Lodice, Mickey Sabol (ts); Bruce Branson, Manny Gershman (bs); Michael 'Dodo' Marmarosa, Milt Raskin (p); Dennis Sandole, Bob Bain (g); Joe Park (tba); Sid Block (b); Gene Krupa, Maurice Purtill, Buddy Rich (d); Bing Crosby, Frances Langford, Georgia Gibbs, Bob Allen, The Sentimentalists, Bonnie Lou Williams (v); plus string section. 10/43–9/44.

(*) The All Time Hit Parade Rehearsals Hep CD 39 As above, except omit Candoli, Price, Santangelo, D'Amico, Kaye, Klink, Gershman, Raskin, Sandole, Krupa and Purtill, Crosby, Gibbs; add Judy Garland, Frank Sinatra (v). 6–9/44.

Although there isn't a great deal of jazz on these records, they give a clearer idea of the sound of Dorsey's band, since John R. T. Davies again puts other reissues to shame. All Time Hit Parade is drawn from acetate transcriptions of rehearsals for a radio show and, while they tend to display the sweeter side of Dorsey's band, the smooth power of the sections is put across smartly. Sinatra has a couple of fine features in 'I'll Walk Alone' and 'If You Are But A Dream', and there's a showcase for Marmarosa on 'Boogie Woogie'. The V-Disc material, again in splendid restoration, is rather more exciting, with a number of spots for La Perche, DeFranco and Klink. Crosby and Langford deliver a couple of messages to the troops as a bonus.

 Live In Hi-Fi At Casino Gardens Jazz Hour JH-1018 Personnel unlisted. 6–8/46.

The first show here is OK but nothing special, with Charlie Shavers's feature on 'At The Fat Man' the only standout; but the second, with extended workouts on six good charts by Bill Finegan and others, is much more like it. There's a lot of badinage between Tom and the announcer, which will either charm or repel, but the music's strong and the sound, if not exactly 'hi-fi', is quite listenable.

 At The Fat Man's 1946–1948 Hep CD 43 Dorsey; Jack Dougherty, Mickey Mangano, George Seaberg, Ziggy Elman, Charlie Shavers, Claude Bowen, Vern Arslan, Chuck Peterson (t); Larry Hall, Tex Satterwhite, Greg Philips, John Youngman, Charles La Rue, Red Benson, Nick Di Maio, Dick Noel (tb); Buddy DeFranco, Billy Ainsworth, Marshall Hawk, Louis Prisby (cl, as); Sid Cooper, Bruce Branson (as); Boomie Richman, Don Lodice, Babe Fresk, Corky Corcoran, Marty Berman (ts); Joe Koch (bs); John Potoker, Rocky Coluccio, Paul Smith (p); Sam Herman, Tony Rizzi (g); Sid Block, Sam Cheifetz, Norman Seelig (b); Alvin Stoller, Louie Bellson (d); Stuart Foster, Denny Dennis, Lucy Ann Polk, Gordon Polk, The Sentimentalists (v). 5/46–12/48.

Dorsey's later records deserve a wider hearing than they've been given by posterity. He had no more hits on the scale of 'Marie' or 'Song Of India', but he remained a keen-eared musician and less conservative than many of his contemporaries. The Hep compilation suffers from some very variable sound-sources and, though these airchecks feature some fine alternative versions of some of the scores from their studio dates, this doesn't do the band best justice. It seems we shall have to wait for Classics to get this far in their sequence.

Dorsey Brothers Orchestra

GROUP

They put aside their many differences for a while at least. While their early bands were studio-only outfits, they formed a 'real' Dorsey Brothers Orchestra in 1934, but it lasted only a year before Jimmy took it over after a quarrel. Their last co-led band ran from 1953 until Tommy's death.

 The Dorsey Brothers' Orchestra Vol. 1 Jazz Oracle BDW 8004 Leo McConville, Fuzzy Farrar, Mickey Bloom, Nat Natoli, Mannie Klein (t); Tommy Dorsey (t, tb); Jack Teagarden, Carl Loffler, Glenn Miller (tb); Jimmy Dorsey (cl, as); Arnold Brilhart (cl, as, f); Frank Teschemacher (cl, ts); Herbert Spencer, Bill Green (ts); Adrian Rollini (bsx); Frank Signorelli, Arthur Schutt (p); Charles Dondron (vib); Carl Kress (g, bj); Eddie Lang (g); Tony Colucci (bj); Jimmy Williams (b); Joe Tarto, Hank Stern, Jack Hansen (tba); Stan King, Chauncey Morehouse (d); Smith Ballew, Hal Kemp, Nye Mayhew, Saxie Dowell, Skinny Ennis, Irving Kaufman (v). 2–11/28.

 The Dorsey Brothers' Orchestra Vol. 2 Jazz Oracle BDW 8005 Similar to above, except add Phil Napoleon, Muggsy Spanier, Frank Guarente (t); Joe Yukl (tb); Ollie Boyd (cl); Max Farley (as, f); Alfie Evans, Larry Abbott (as); Lucien Smith (ts, v); Jim Crossan, Paul Mason (ts); Phil Raines (bsn); Irving Brodsky (p); Al Duffy, Leo Kroucrick, Murray Kellner, Sam Rates, Nat Brusiloff, Sam Freed (vn); Emil Stark (clo); Jimmy Mullen (b); Ray Bauduc (d); Bing Crosby (v). 1/29–1/30.

 The Dorsey Brothers' Orchestra Vol. 3 Jazz Oracle BDW 8006 Similar to above, except add Bunny Berigan, Bill Moore, Louis Gracia, Charles Margulis (t); Foster Morehouse, Larry Binyon, Bud Freeman (ts); Fulton McGrath (p); Tony Sacco (g, bj, v); Dick McDonough (g); Artie Bernstein (b); Scrappy Lambert, Wes Vaughan, Elmer Feldkamp (v). 11/30–4/33.

 Harlem Lullaby Hep CD 1006 Manny Klein, Sterling Bose, Bunny Berigan (t); Tommy Dorsey (tb); Larry Binyon (cl, as, ts); Jimmy Dorsey (cl, as); Joe Venuti, Harry Hoffman, Walter Edelstein, Lou Kosloff (vn); Joe Meresco, Fulton McGrath (p); Dick McDonough (g); Artie Bernstein (b); Stan King, Chauncey Morehouse, Larry Gomar (d); Bing Crosby, Mae West, Ethel Waters, Mildred Bailey, Lee Wiley (v). 2–7/33.

The Dorseys could call on their best pals for their studio dates, even before the 'official' formation of their orchestra in 1934. A string of sessions for OKeh (and a couple for other labels) is covered by the nicely presented Jazz Oracle CDs, which include numerous alternative takes, a few rare tests and the various 'solo' sessions the brothers undertook in the period. Considering how often they threw in eight or 16 hot bars into otherwise conventional dance records, it's surprising that their own bands were not more jazz-orientated. The January 1929 date has some fine vocals by Bing Crosby, but too many of the tracks are troubled by feeble singing and only a few brief glimpses of a soloist (despite stellar line-ups, it's only Tommy and Jimmy who do any improvising). A track such as 'Breakaway' on the second volume is a comparative corker. But the solo sessions that were features for each Dorsey separately are still fondly remembered by collectors, and they're presented in admirable sound here: Jimmy's clarinet feature on 'Prayin' The Blues' still sounds terrific, and it reminds one why Charlie Parker and Dexter Gordon both held him in high esteem.

The third volume is arguably the best, since Berigan shows up and has some excellent solo spots of his own, along with those of the brothers: sample the rollicking 'Parkin' In The Moonlight' as a choice example. The disc closes with five more feature-sessions for the Dorseys as individual soloists. Tommy's turn on 'Maybe' doesn't have much jazz in it, but this rare pair of test-takes shows just why he was the greatest smooth-man of his day. First-rate transfers, although the January 1930 shellacs for Cameo have taxed even John R. T. Davies to the limit.

Hep's compilation offers the chance to hear the brothers and their men backing four vocalists of the day. Mae West's pair of titles are little more than a tuneless extension of her man-eating persona, and Wiley's session shows her still in raw shape, but the four tracks with Crosby show how much the singer had learnt from jazz players, and the eight featuring Mildred Bailey are delightful, her light and limber voice gliding over the music with little effort. There are brief solos for the Dorseys and Berigan, but the record belongs mainly to the singers.

Also, in brief:

(*) The Dorsey Brothers Orchestra – 1935 Circle CCD-20. 1/35.
Thirteen transcriptions for WBC, with the orchestra in fine fettle and in clean sound.

 Casino Gardens Ballroom 1946 Hep 59. 1/45–7/47.
Strictly speaking, not the brothers together at all, but their respective orchestras featured together in a number of 'battles of the bands' broadcasts.

Dave Douglas (born 1963)

TRUMPET, CORNET

A key figure in modern jazz, an individualist whose grasp of history is apparent mainly in elision and omission rather than homage.

(*) Parallel Worlds Soul Note 121226 Douglas; Mark Feldman (vn); Erik Friedlander (clo); Mark Dresser (b); Michael Sarin (d). 93.

Gunther Schuller turns up in the sleeve-notes to drop names like Stravinsky, Bartók, Berg and Lutosławski, as well as Don Ellis, Bob Graettinger and Leo Smith, and to say how much 'I like the Webernesque textures'. Unlike Paul Smoker or Franz Koglmann, Douglas actually includes material from the modern canon in this quietly ambitious programme. There can't be many more startling openings to a 'jazz' record than 'Sehr Bewegt', an arrangement of the third of Webern's Op. 5, Five Movements for String Quartet.

Elsewhere on the album, alongside half a dozen idiosyncratic originals, Douglas includes a 'Grand Choral' by Stravinsky (part of L'Histoire du Soldat), as well as Weill's 'Ballad In Which MacHeath Asks Everyone to Forgive Him', and Ellington's 'Loco Madi'. This, plus an unconventional instrumentation, makes for an interesting prospect. By the turn of the '90s, Douglas was obviously the coming thing, a strong, essentially melodic player, dry but not unemotional, whose sound fell somewhere between Booker Little, Miles and Don Ellis. The release of Parallel Worlds suggested strongly that Douglas wasn't going to be imprisoned by generalities, either, and certainly wasn't prepared to be seen as the anti-Miles. He is as various in approach as he is prolific, and as often inspired by humanitarian and political concerns as by purely musical ones; witness the passion and commitment he brings to 'Parallel Worlds', an evocation of lives lived under less than ideal conditions.

(*) The Tiny Bell Trio /  Tiny Bell Trio Songlines SGL 1504 / Arabesque Jazz AJ 0126 Douglas; Brad Schoeppach (g); Jim Black (d). 12/93; 96.

With the formation of the Tiny Bell Trio, Douglas cemented his interest in European song form. The first of these two extraordinary records includes arrangements of pieces by Joseph Kosma ('La Belle Saison' and 'Fille d'Acier'), Weill again ('Drowned Girl'), a piece by Germaine Tailleferre, the only female member of Les Six, and a traditional Hungarian csárdás (all on the Songlines disc).

A setting like this would be too exacting for a less than supremely confident player. Douglas floats almost unconcernedly over Schoeppach's guitar chords, often in a key which is relative to the implied location of the piece. His attack seems ever brighter and sharper, but this may be a function of better recording.

The live set on Arabesque is a touch disappointing, and certainly not up to some of the performances the group turned in over this period. Douglas seems to lean more heavily on chord structures in a setting like this, but there is ample evidence of his left-field approach, and committed enthusiasts will be delighted with further evidence of his talents.

* In Our Lifetime New World/Countercurrents 80471 Douglas; Josh Roseman (tb); Chris Speed (cl, ts); Marty Ehrlich (bcl); Uri Caine (p); James Genus (b); Joey Baron (d). 12/94.

* Five Soul Note 121276 As for Parallel Worlds, except omit Dresser; add Drew Gress (b). 8/95.

The second of the pair has a broad, orchestral sound, the supplementary horns deployed for depth of focus rather than for surface detail, and that is perhaps the big change in the string group. Feldman, Friedlander and Gress are treated much less as solo strings than as members of an ensemble, though all three have a solo role, too.

The presence of a piano on the earlier disc appears to restrict Douglas somewhat, though Caine is highly responsive to the leader. The diversions into atonality are less doctrinaire and the harmonies perhaps more conventional. Booker Little is a renewed influence; 'Strength And Sanity' (on In Our Lifetime) is a Little composition, rapidly followed by four miniatures in the spirit of his playing; there's also a Woody Shaw tune, 'Actualities'.

* Constellations / (*) Tiny Bell Trio Live In Europe hatOLOGY 673 / Arabesque AJ 0126 Douglas; Brad Schoeppach (g); Jim Black (d, perc). 2/95; 10/96.

The best of the Tiny Bell records, Constellations was recorded off-road but mid-tour. One hears immediately that this is a working unit. Douglas's Balkan interests – both musical and political – come through strongly. 'Taking Sides' is inspired by the brutal civil war in former Yugoslavia, a raw, powerful expression of anger and mourning. In an entirely different vein, 'Maquiladoras' takes up cudgels for low-paid migrant workers. 'Scriabin' is a thoughtful essay in extreme chromaticism, almost serial in quality, and 'Hope Ring True' sounds like '60s agit-prop jazz. To underline his eclecticism and sense of history Douglas hands the pianoless group a forgotten Herbie Nichols theme, 'The Gig', and makes it sound utterly contemporary as well.

Douglas seems confident in his partners, allowing Black in particular to stretch out and express himself. Schoeppach throws deliciously complex harmonic shapes, a crushed-velvet foil to the trumpeter's bright lines. As before, 'Csárdás' is an encore piece, but the real glory of the set is an almost 12-minute 'Zeno', which opens a central section of compelling modern jazz bookended by Douglas's trademark Schumann arrangement.

* Charms Of The Night Sky Winter & Winter 910 015-2 Douglas; Guy Klucevsek (acc); Mark Feldman (vn); Greg Cohen (d). 9/97.

A line-up calculated to combine musical complexity with the purest aesthetic grace. The language is very similar to that of the Tiny Bell Trio but, with Klucevsek and Feldman in the group and no drummer, the pace is slower and more deliberate, a musingly graceful album that never subordinates musicality to mere effect.

'Dance In Thy Soul' pays tribute to Charlie Haden, conceived somewhere between a classical sonata and one of Haden's beloved torch songs of the '40s. Klucevsek's touch with shorter, song-like forms can be heard in a sequence of three 'Mug Shots', tiny sketches that cry out for vivid lyrics. For a change, there is a jazz standard, Herbie Hancock's 'Little One', and a version of Francesco Cilea's 'Poveri Fiori'. This is a record beyond category, looking fruitfully back as well as forward.

(*) Moving Portraits DIW 934 Douglas; Bill Carrothers (p); James Genus (b); Billy Hart (d). 12/97.

Once again an intriguing blend of idiomatic jazz writing and some unexpected borrowed material, like the two Joni Mitchell songs which begin the final section. The closing track, 'Romero', is one of Douglas's most substantial jazz performances, and 'Moving Portrait' is the best evidence yet of how thoroughly he has absorbed modern classical procedures, rather than just importing ad hoc themes and ideas.

The presence of Hart is interesting. Jabali has been a constant source of inspiration over the years and he plays here with a calm, swinging authority, all the while responsive to the demands of Douglas's music. Carrothers is not the sort of player to set the heather on fire, but he has a nice touch, sounds as if he might have played the odd bit of Schumann in his youth, and clearly enjoys the challenge.

* Convergence

Soul Note 121316-2 Douglas; Mark Feldman (vn); Erik Friedlander (clo); Drew Gress (b); Michael Sarin (d). 1/98.

This, of course, is the same band that made Parallel Worlds and Five, with the single change of Drew Gress for Mark Dresser. No surprise by this stage in the game to find Douglas programming 'Desseins Eternels' from Olivier Messiaen's organ work La Nativité du seigneur, and following it with Weill's 'Bilbao Song'. The trumpeter claims he first heard the Messiaen piece in a blindfold test set by a friend, and thought it was 'Joe Zawinul, early Weather Report', which attests to a grasp of the basic seamlessness of musical styles, for the French composer's strong bass pedals are very similar to Zawinul's signature procedure.

The two key tracks here are a farewell to drummer Tony Williams, a perfect illustration of Douglas's ability to invest long form with real significance, and 'Meeting At Infinity', which indirectly gives the album its title and underlines how Douglas likes to have separate musical lines converge only virtually, leaving them to their own instrumental logic. Convergence is an important work, a strong synthesis of past approaches, with a tantalizing hint of new directions.

* Leap Of Faith Arabesque 145 Douglas; Chris Potter (ts); James Genus (b); Ben Perowsky (d). 9/98.

Stunningly good modern jazz, performed with a seriousness that never dips into solemnity. 'Mistaken Identity' and the presumably misspelt 'Igenous' are dazzlingly original. 'Western Haiku' nicely defines a new idiom; 'Guido's High Note' is a tour de force. Potter is a genuine sharer in this music; and the relatively mainstream pairing of Genus and Perowsky guarantees that the music stays straightforward and swinging, even when the source material points away from jazz.

(*) A Thousand Evenings RCA 63698 Douglas; Mark Feldman (vn); Guy Klucevsek (acc); Greg Cohen (b). 8/00.

Douglas's other RCA records – Strange Liberation, Soul On Soul, Witness, The Infinite and the Bluebird release Freak In – now enjoy only uncertain circulation, which is a loss. All of them are worth tracking down. This one was still around at time of writing. Astonishing that Douglas should have the confidence and the sheer moxie to programme the 'Goldfinger' theme alongside his own 'In So Many Worlds' suite, and to hand over the reins to Klucevsek for a solo performance on 'Variety'. The accordionist is a remarkable musician, as individual on his instrument as Douglas is on trumpet, and with something of the same diversity of idiom. There are almost too many inputs at work here: classical music, tango, folk from East and West, and of course avant-garde jazz as well. And yet Douglas is able to contrive a synthesis that sounds natural and unstrained.

(*) Bow River Falls Koch 5744 Douglas; Louis Sclavis (cl); Peggy Lee (clo); Dylan van der Schyff (d, laptop). 6/03.

* Mountain Passages Koch 5802 As above, except omit Sclavis; add Michael Moore (cl, as); Marcus Rojas (tba). 6/04.

Bad River Falls was made during the trumpeter's stint as artist-in-residence at the Banff International Workshop in Jazz And Creative Music. It does, unfortunately, sound slightly more 'workshopped' than his usual run of releases, and it is clearly a collaborative effort rather than strictly a Douglas record. One might wonder at how well this personnel could be expected to function together, but the results are mostly very impressive, hovering somewhere between free jazz and 'new music'. Sclavis and Lee also contribute compositions and van der Schyff adds some subtle concrète in addition to his drumming. Douglas sounds drier than usual, but that's fine for this idiom.

The music on Mountain Passages is more explicitly site-specific. Originally written for high-altitude performance at the Il Suoni delle Dolomiti festival, it has been re-recorded in studio and comes across with huge authority. Ever alert to new folk musics, Douglas had been listening to Landino recordings prior to fulfilling his festival commission and something of that spirit, if not its actual language, comes across here. Some of the pieces, not least 'Bury Me Standing', seem to refer to his father, Damon Douglas, a cartographer and mountain runner, to whom the project was dedicated.

Moore seems a more responsive and alert collaborator than Sclavis on the earlier record and the interplay of reed and trumpet on 'Gumshoe' is extraordinary. Van der Schyff is in a slightly more conventional role this time round, and with the amazing Rojas doing his stuff (truly amazingly on the closing 'All Is Forgiven') the feel is closer to classic jazz again. Interesting to know how these studio versions compare to those heard in the thinner air of the Dolomites.

 Keystone Greenleaf 03 + DVD Douglas; Marcus Strickland (ss, ts); Jamie Saft (p); Brad Jones (b); Gene Lake (d); DJ Olive (turntables). 2–5/05.

Following in the footsteps of his sometime colleague Bill Frisell, this is a project inspired by one of the stars of silent comedy. Typically, though, Douglas goes not for Keaton or Chaplin but for the altogether more problematic Roscoe 'Fatty' Arbuckle. There is a hectic quality to much of the music, and considerable tonal ambiguity, but Douglas makes no attempt to pastiche the music of the time, giving the project an intriguingly timeless quality that gives the original images (seen on the accompanying disc) an unexpectedly modern cast. A plugged-in band responds beautifully to some of Douglas's most tuneful music of recent years. 'The Real Roscoe' is both beautiful and strangely chilling.

* Meaning And Mystery /  Live At The Jazz Standard Greenleaf 04 / Green Leaf/Koch 5574 2CD Douglas; Donny McCaslin (ts); Uri Caine (p); James Genus (b); Clarence Penn (d). 2/06; 12/06.

More blues in evidence than usual on Meaning And Mystery and the little one for Steve Lacy is a heart-turning masterpiece in miniature. McCaslin fits into the group effortlessly, taking over from Chris Potter, but immediately bringing a new lyricism that seems to coax a similar quality out of the trumpeter. There is some very clever stuff, like the referencing on 'Twombly Infinites' (a reference to artist Cy Twombly), but for the most part these are songful compositions that are allowed to develop very spontaneously and naturally. McCaslin's solo on 'Culture Wars' – which at nearly 13 minutes is the album's big statement – is arresting and effective, and it serves to underline this group's debt to the great Miles Davis bands of the '60s. Though often cited as an alternative to the Miles 'tradition', Douglas here actually takes it up and extends it. Caine's Fender Rhodes work simply firms up the line of descent. Genus has become a sui generis genius, as important in his way to the jazz of this era as Ron Carter was in an earlier day. One of the must-hear albums of 2006.

Douglas made a close study of Don Cherry's music around this time, which in part explains his use of cornet at the Jazz Standard, but also the Cherry flavour of the later tracks on this long live set, which was originally available only as a download. 'The Cornet Is A Fickle Friend' is a grand, free-jazz thrash on the smallest scale, less than two minutes. Most of the other cuts are longer and more in his familiar style, though any Douglas fan dipping into the album later on will be surprised by how different the smaller horn makes him sound. McCaslin is terrific again, but the chime and wobble of Caine's Fender Rhodes is also a key factor.

Also, in brief:

 Stargazer Arabesque AJ 0132. 12/96.

He's entitled to have one off-day, and maybe this was it. Douglas leans heavier than usual on the chords and sounds slightly constrained. Still impressive, though.

 Magic Triangle Arabesque AJ 0139. 5/97.

An unusually conventional and inconsistent set. The leader's tone is softly burnished, but the interest lies in the writing, which suggests unexpected kinship with an array of mostly keyboard-based composers, Herbies Nichols and Hancock, and Horace Tapscott. No harmony instrument this time, though.

(*) Songs For Wandering Souls Winter & Winter 910 042-2. 12/98.

Great sound, a Schumann 'standard' and a nice suprise in Roland Kirk's 'Breath-A-Thon'. A strong if not canonical record from the trio with Brad Shepik (g) and Jim Black (d).

Down Home Jazz Band

GROUP

A West Coast revivalist institution.

 Dawn Club Joys Stomp Off CD1241 Bob Schulz (c, v); Chris Tyle (c); Tom Bartlett (tb, v); Bob Helm (cl, v); Ray Skjelbred (p); Jack Meilahn (bj); Mike Bezin (tba); Hal Smith (d). 7/91.

(*) Paddle Wheelin' Along Stomp Off Cd 1300 As above, except omit Bartlett, Skjelbred, Meilahn, Bezin; add John Gill (tb, v); Carl Lunsford (bj). 8/94.

 Back To Bodega! Stomp Off CD1273 Chris Tyle (t, v); Bob Mielke (tb); Bob Helm (cl, ss, bcl, v); Wally Rose (p); Carl Lunsford (bj, v); Mike Walbridge (tba); Hal Smith (d); Barbara Dane (v). 8/93.

 Dancing The Jelly Roll Stomp Off CD1316 Chris Tyle (c, v); John Gill (tb, v); Frank Powers (cl); Steve Pistorius (p, v); Leah Bezin (bj); Mike Walbridge (tba); Hal Smith (d). 10/96.

Chris Tyle's group has been a fixture in West Coast traditional circles for many years, though there was a ten-year disbandment in the '70s, and he has more recently been engaged with other projects. The first two discs pay tribute to the Lu Watters Yerba Buena sound, which had a huge impact on revivalists in the USA. There are a few oddities – such as 'When Ragtime Rufus Rags The Humoresque' on Back To Bodega! – but much of the material is from a relatively familiar pocket. The distinction comes in the tight syncopation of the ensembles, the particular jig-jog rhythm, and the blend of knowingness and genuine enthusiasm which drives American trad. It helps that original Yerba Buena man Helm is on hand for an extra drop of authenticity, though by Paddle Wheelin' Along it sounds as though he's there as a totem rather than a player; his pitching is desperate. Dancing The Jelly Roll is all ragtime – of sorts – even though the Down Home style of rag is less formally 'right' and more in the Turk Murphy style. They go far enough forward to dip into the Bennie Moten repertoire for items like 'Goofy Dust' and generally make a valid case for all 21 pieces.

Bob Downes (born 1937)

FLUTE, SAXOPHONES, OTHER INSTRUMENTS

Latterly based in Europe, he was a key figure in the British fusion/avant-garde scene, but has recorded relatively little since the '70s.

 Electric City Universal 93266 Downes; Harry Beckett, Ian Carr, Nigel Carter, Bud Parkes, Kenny Wheeler (t); Don Faye (sax); Ray Russell, Chris Spedding (g); Herbie Flowers, Harry Miller, Darryl Runswick (b); Clem Catini, Alan Rushton, Dennis Smith (d); Robin Jones (perc). 70.

(*) Diversions Dutton Vocalion CDSML 8434 Downes; Barry Guy (b); Dennis Smith (d). 72.

Though his work now seems locked in the past, Downes is a unique figure in British music, and a genuine catalyst. His Deep Down Heavy and Electric City were Zeitgeist records at the turn of the '70s. The roster of players on the latter should be enough to demonstrate his interest in combining jazz-rock and free jazz in an inventive way. It sounds unmistakably like a period piece, but Downes shouldn't be written off as a novelty act (he plays 23 instruments, but all of them with real musicality) and there has been a revival of interest with these recoveries from the vault. Some of the music on Diversions was written for Ballet Rambert, but the trio tracks with Guy and Smith (including 'Seventh Wave', on which Bob plays tenor) and the solo flute pieces are fine free-standing performances. Only the sound of Laurie Baker's VCS-3 synthesizer seriously dates the music. Other reissues, such as Episodes At 4 A.M., are more remote from our interests.

Arthur Doyle (born 1944)

TENOR SAXOPHONE, FLUTE, RECORDER, VOCAL

Originally from Alabama, he played in R&B bands in the '60s before joining New York's avant-garde. He moved in 'underground' circles before spending five years in prison in the '80s. In the '90s he began recording again.

 Do The Breakdown Ainsoph Lamed 1 Doyle (ts, f, v solo). 4/97.

(*) Dawn Of A New Vibration Fractal 009 Doyle; Sunny Murray (d). 3/00

 Live At Glenn Miller Café Ayler CD-002 As above, except add Bengt Frippe Nordström (as). 3/00.

 The Basement Tapes Durtro 062 Doyle; Dan Warburton (vn); Edward Perraud (d). 6/01.

Doyle's tenor-playing has the same bludgeoning power as Charles Gayle's, but where Gayle's music has a passionate and religious intensity, Doyle often sounds merely bleary. He sings in a manner which suggests an inebriated shaman, and his flute-playing is unlovely. Records have so far brought forth very mixed results. Do The Breakdown has the lo-fi feel of a field recording, and has a certain shambolic power. With Murray, at least he has a motor, and the drummer carries the next two records. The Fractal disc is salvaged by the drummer's inventiveness, and while Doyle has the audacity to claim a composer credit on the most corroded 'Nature Boy' ever recorded, he does strike some sparks. The Glenn Miller Café date has the poignant presence of Nordström on three tracks (he died later that year). For the rest, it's much as the previous set, although better recorded, and 'Two Free Jazz Men Speak' apotheosizes their duet manner. The Basement Tapes is a trio session where Warburton's negligible violin scrapes quietly below some of Doyle's most rootless musings. He has quite a grand reputation, but even adventurous listeners may find him a hard-to-acquire taste.

Also, in brief:

 Plays And Sings From The Songbook: Volume 1 Audible Hiss 4. 92.

Taken from some 300 songs written during his apparently wrongful imprisonment in France. Of mixed quality and relevance here.

Hamid Drake (born 1955)

DRUMS, PERCUSSION

Born in Louisiana, he moved with his family to Chicago, where he took drum lessons from Fred Anderson's son, later taking over his role in Fred's regular group. Now a leading sideman on the free jazz scene.

* Emancipation Proclamation: A Real Statement of Freedom Okka Disc 12036 Drake; Joe McPhee (pocket t, ts). 00.

 Soul Bodies: Volumes 1 & 2 Ayler 024 Drake; Assif Tsahar (ts, bcl). 5/01.

(*) Brothers Together Eremite 35 Drake; Sabir Mateen (as, ts, cl, bcl, f, v). 4/01.

Emancipation Proclamation is a thoughtful showcase for both players. McPhee's pocket trumpet is as primordial as the dawn and conjures up whole histories. Drake is quiet and restrained, happy to play a supportive role on the tribute to Miriam Makeba ('Mother Africa'), elsewhere leading and shaping the music. His touch is extraordinary. Rolling patterns lead into freer passages which rely on the momentum of what has gone before, giving many of these pieces a stronger metrical feel than is actually present. McPhee is as single-minded and enigmatic as ever and the opening 'Cries And Whispers', which introduces this live recital, has a majestic presence that belies its rather tentative origins.

The gig with Tsahar is not so satisfying, largely because Tsahar is a more impatient player. However, it's very much Drake's gig again. The long title-piece and 'Heart's Mind' find the drummer taking the modern percussion idiom on a step; he sounds more like Ed Blackwell than anyone else. The title-piece of Brothers Together also suffers from a tentative quality, but by the time Mateen and Drake are firing on all cylinders, this is a scorching session and the closing piece, 'New Life Dance', makes half an hour seem like seconds. Mateen is a versatile reedman, whose clarinet-playing deserves attention, full of dark power. His role on 'Knowing Oneself' is central, though again Drake takes hold of the music and pushes it into new and unexpected shapes.

 Evolving Silence: Volumes 1–2 Earsay 097 / 091 Drake; Albert Beger (sax); William Parker (b). 2/05.

The Turkish-born Beger will be new to many listeners. He's an impressive performer, hard to pin down stylistically, and it's not at first clear how he fits in with this established partnership. On the other hand, he sounds similar enough to Peter Brötzmann at moments for the trio (actually duos and trios) to sound like a continuation rather than a new start. Interesting, but certainly not enough quality playing for two discs.

Also, in brief:

 Ask The Sun Okka Disc 12008. 5/91–95.

Unexpectedy accessible and groove-driven percussion duos with Michael Zerang. Hand-drums and didjeridus vary the palette.

Ray Draper (1940–82)

TUBA

A rarity in modern jazz, the New Yorker made some fine sessions and worked with Max Roach, Horace Tapscott and others, but lost his way to drugs and was killed during a robbery.

 Tuba Sounds Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1936 Draper; Webster Young (t); Jackie McLean (as); Mal Waldron (p); Spanky DeBrest (b); Ben Dixon (d). 3/57.

 Ray Draper Quintet Featuring John Coltrane Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 986 Draper; John Coltrane (ts); Gil Coggins (p); Spanky DeBrest (b); Larry Ritchie (d). 12/57.

Draper was only 16 when he made the first of these. It's an impressive debut, notwithstanding the wonky rhythmic lag of the tuba and callow roster of 'original' themes. The sidemen, including fellow debutant Young, are all pretty good and McLean and Waldron keep things on course. Draper's modest footnote in hard-bop history was guaranteed by the presence of John Coltrane on the second album. Trane plays well and shows no sign of holding back. It's hard for the tuba to keep pace, though, and Ray's best moment comes right at the end on the saxless 'I Hadn't Anyone Till You'. Already known to Trane completists, it's worth a listen anyway.

Dreamtime

GROUP

Originally formed by Nick Evans as trombone/sax/drums trio, but later added trumpet and bass. Keith Tippett rounded out the personnel later.

(*) Cathanger 86 /  Zen Fish Hux 55 / Slam 232 Jim Dvorak (t); Nick Evans (tb); Gary Curson (sax); Keith Tippett (p); Roberto Bellatalla (b); Jim Lebaigue (d). 86; 98.

As above.

Amazingly, the first of these, recorded at Cathanger Studios in London, was not released for nearly 20 years. Tippett seems to have come on board during the sessions, for a couple of pieces were recorded without him. Admirable though the pianist always is, he slows and even somewhat deadens the music on occasion. Earlier Dreamtime recordings are no longer available and hard to find, so the comparison is difficult. The music's a mixture of collective improvisations, including the luminous 'Bushman's Dance', and composed pieces, including one by non-member but fellow trombonist Radu Malfatti. Evans and Dvorak carry much of the action, with Curson a more anarchic presence on the first one.

There's more emphasis on composition on the second disc, and the intervening years have hardened musical temperaments to a degree where the freshness and magic of the earlier date is missing. Evans is still the dominant voice and the most intriguing, but there's much to enjoy here, too; the trombonist's 'Trunk Call' and 'Papa' are superb.

Mark Dresser (born 1952)

DOUBLE BASS

Often assumed to be a lifelong New Yorker, he actually cut his musical teeth in his native LA, where he studied with Bertram Turetzky. Later worked with David Murray and Arthur Blythe, and in the Anthony Braxton Quartet.

* Force Green Soul Note 121273 Dresser; Denman Maroney (p); Fred Frith (g, p, org, vn); Ikue Mori (d machines); Phil Haynes (d); Theo Bleckmann (v). 9/94.

On 'Bosnia', one of the tracks on Force Green, Douglas utters despairing, pain-racked cries over Dresser's harmonic squeaks and rumbles, an intense evocation of both men's (Dresser is the composer) humanitarian reaction; Bleckmann, who is used as a second horn rather than a lyric vocalist, comes in with muezzin cries and wails that reinforce the Balkan/Middle Eastern tonality. The previous track, 'Ediface', is a more obviously jazz-based structure and allows Douglas to stretch out, counterpointed by Bleckmann's slightly nasal scats. The long 'Castles For Carter' is an elaborate fantasy for the late clarinettist John Carter, and a passing reference to his Castles Of Ghana album. Tightly organized round a series of pan-tonal themes, it never sounds like a blowing piece, nor as if it is wholly written out; and it's here for the first time on the set that the young Maroney and Haynes come into their own. Up to that point it could almost have been another trio. Douglas blows a thoughtful remembrance of his great predecessor on 'For Miles', with a sly quote from a famous solo, before Bleckmann reverts to falsetto for a gorgeous dialogue that consigns Dresser to the background for a few minutes. Maroney experiments with preparation again, creating a strange, sitar-like tone. This is otherwise very much the bassist's record, but only in the proper sense that he steers the music. Co-producer Tim Berne keeps him properly located in the mix – even the unaccompanied intro to 'Castles' is naturally balanced – and the total effect is of an ensemble rather than a loose coalition of individuals.

 Banquet Tzadik 7027 Dresser; Matthias Ziegler (f, cl); Marcus Rojas (tba); string quartet. 11/97.
Dominated by a passionate mourning song for the victims of TWA Flight 800, Banquet is one of Dresser's most beautiful and unusual projects to date. 'Loss Of The Innocents' is scored for cello, tuba and clarinet, while the remainder of the album is a species of mini double concerto for flute and bass with string quartet, a piece which allows Dresser to explore extremes of sonority and pitch with great sophistication.

* Aquifer Cryptogramophone 111 Dresser; Denman Maroney (p); Matthias Ziegler (fl). 3/01.
What is surprising about Aquifer is how much of the music comes directly out of a jazz tradition. There is a strong blues coloration to 'Digestivo' which contrasts sharply with the near abstraction of 'Sonomatopoeia' and Maroney's 'Pulse Fields', which come right at the centre of the record. A couple of the pieces have been around for long enough to seem almost like repertory items, but for the most part this is a highly original and challenging record. Like its predecessor, it is best to approach it with no preconceptions and merely surrender to its captivating sound-world. We warmly recommend you try it.

(*) Nine Songs Together CIMP 295 Dresser; Ray Anderson (tb). 9/03.
Anderson was the first player Dresser met on his arrival in New York City in 1975. That their association is a long and warm one is evident on this fine set of duos, recorded in the usual unadorned CIMP way. The opening improvisation is very much a renewal of acquaintance; 'One Plate' refers to an Oliver Lake poem, 'I Want All My Food On One Plate' – in other words, no musical boundaries of any sort; it also reinforces Dresser's foodie theme. The long 'Taps For Jackie' is a threnody to the trombonist's late wife, a poet and tapdancer, which balances sadness and affirmation. The most substantial element of the set is a new (outer) Planets Suite, which has less to do with Holst than with John Coltrane and Rashied Ali. Anderson plays the percussionist on this one, while Dresser teases out long, folkish lines. They chuck in a couple of standards: Billy Taylor's 'I Wish I Knew How It Would Feel To Be Free' and just for fun a closing version of 'I'm Confessin' That I Love You'.

* Unveil Clean Feed CF043 Dresser (b solo). 04.
Dresser's use of the Giffus, a system of pick-ups suspended from the scroll of the bass, has evolved steadily over the years. He now employs a system developed for him by luthier and electronics expert Kent McLagan which affords much more control and consistency. In addition to this, he continues to experiment with notes played above rather than below the stop, creating a fascinating range of harmonics and bitones. Apart from the acoustic 'Bacachaonne' (loosely based on a Bach partita), everything here is electronically manipulated. The results are easier to enjoy than to describe, but the combination of pick-ups and subtly altered finger pressure creates a buzzing effect which gives these pieces a richness of sound that seems impossible from a single instrument and player.

Also, in brief:

 Sonomondo Cryptogramophone 104. 99.
Duos with cellist Frances-Marie Uitti, who does everything from great motorcycle revs to bat-squeak harmonics on her cello.

 Marinade Tzadik 7063. 00.
Challenging ensemble writing, but a record that feels like a dry-run for something bigger.

 Reunion: Live At The Guelph Jazz Festival Intrepid Ear 002. 01.
Dresser and Gerry Hemingway (perc) anchored Anthony Braxton's early-'80s quartet. This reunion underlines the depth of understanding that always prevailed between them. Consequently, baritone saxophonist David Mott works a lonelier furrow.

 Time Changes Cryptogramophone 124. 1/03–10/04.
Duets with Denman Maroney (p).

Kenny Drew (1928–93)

PIANO

His first influences were Art Tatum and Fats Waller, and these were so deeply inscribed that later contact with Bud Powell and Thelonious Monk wasn't overwhelming. The gracious New Yorker spent many years in Europe, first in Paris, and later in Copenhagen in a long-lasting and well-documented residency at the Jazzhus Montmartre. Drew's expressive talent has been passed on to his son, Kenny Jr.

 Kenny Drew Trio: The Complete Recordings, 1953–54 Fresh Sound FSRCD 146 Drew; Curley Russell (b); Art Blakey, Larance Marable, Specs Wright (d). 53–54.
(*) The Kenny Drew Trio Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 065 Drew; Paul Chambers (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 9/56.
* Trio/Quartet/Quintet: The Riverside Collection Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 6007 2 As for the above. 56–57.
Drew began recording in 1949 with Howard McGhee's orchestra, in which he was, by all accounts, a rock of reliability. The early material with Blakey and Russell is mostly tight and professional with an emphasis on easy bop swing and relatively subtle harmony. The Fresh Sound brings together the Blue Note New Faces, New Sounds with the Norgran The Ideation Of Kenny Drew. The first of the Riversides is a typical piano trio date of the day: light, bluesy variations on a flock of standards. Chambers and Jones are typically strong in support, but the material is under-characterized. 'Ruby My Dear' never quite makes it to the starting-line and the better tracks are lighter-weight material like 'It's Only A Paper Moon' and 'Caravan', where Drew's elegant, deceptive swing has an opportunity to unfold without pressure.

Collection is a first-rate sampling of Kenny's work for Riverside; the emphasis is very much on trio work, with a couple of bonus tracks to please collectors.

 Undercurrent Blue Note 80459 Drew; Freddie Hubbard (t); Hank Mobley (ts); Sam Jones (b); Louis Hayes (d). 12/60.

What would have happened if Drew had stayed in America? He was gone less than a year after this generic hard-bop session, and for the rest of his life recorded for European and Far Eastern labels. At first hearing, it sounds like umpteen similar records from Blue Note, but Drew's elegance shines through on the title-tune and half a dozen other well-crafted originals.

 Solo-Duo Storyville STCD 8274 Drew; Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen , Bo Stief (b). 66, 12/78, 9/83.
Two blocks of duo material, recorded a decade and a half apart, with a solo set from 1978 wedged in between. The four unaccompanied tracks are brief and relatively uninspired. Drew seems to draw sustenance from the two bassists, and on the live tracks with Stief from 1983 he hits a wonderful groove. 'There Is No Greater Love' is the most finished performance of the set, though the opening 'Everything I Love' with NHØP has an emphatic presence as well.

 Duo /  Duo 2 /  Duo Live In Concert Steeplechase SCCD 31002 / 31010 / 31031 Drew; Ole Molin (g on Duo only); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b). 4/73; 2/74; 6/74.
(*) Everything I Love Steeplechase SCCD 31007 Drew (p solo). 10–12/73.
Drew left America for Europe in 1961 and worked and recorded there until his death. His numerous records for Steeplechase are modest successes, but the pianist's very consistency is perhaps his undoing: hard to tell one disc from another. The three duo sessions with NHØP are the best, if only because there is a fine clarity of interplay and the bassist doesn't settle for Drew's plainer modes of expression. The solo date is more quiescent.

(*) Dark And Beautiful Steeplechase SCCD 37011/12 2CD Drew; Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Albert 'Tootie' Heath (d). 5/74.
Drew went to Copenhagen in 1966 and became a stalwart of the jazz scene there, playing a long residency at the legendary Jazzhus Montmartre with NHØP, Tootie Heath and whatever guests were in town. We've previously accused these discs of blandness, but of course there are subtleties as well, and perhaps the best place to start, and to take a measure of Drew's pianism, is the two-CD set Dark And Beautiful. Here, stretched out over a generous playing-time, are Drew's patient exposition and almost conversational phrasing.

Dark Beauty is distinguished by a more than usually varied array of song-writing credits, as if Drew were deliberately casting his net wide and then moulding each song – from his old favourite Harry Warren's 'Summernight' to Thomas Clausen's 'Silk Bossa' – to the particular character of this group. He also programmes Miles's 'All Blues' and Brubeck's 'In Your Own Sweet Way', and he closes with an elegant 'Stranger In Paradise'.

 Morning Steeplechase SCCD 31048 Drew; Philip Catherine (g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b). 9/75.
 Lite Flite Steeplechase SCCD 31077 Drew; Thad Jones (c); Bob Berg (ts); George Mraz (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 2/77.
 In Concert Steeplechase SCCD 31106 Drew; Philip Catherine (g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b). 2/77.
 Ruby My Dear Steeplechase SCCD 31129 Drew; David Friesen (b); Clifford Jarvis (d). 8/77.
Three different bass-players here. Like NHØP, Friesen has a handsome tone and great technique. On 'Ruby My Dear', he sounds amazingly like Wilbur Ware. Jarvis's sound is perhaps the closest Drew has found to the drummers of the classic swing era and the set skates along on his unfailing beat. There are three originals, a version of Austin Wells's rarely covered 'Sunspots' and, more surprisingly, a version of Jobim's 'Gentle Rain'.

Lite Flite doesn't have the most probable of line-ups, but it works. Berg is in good form, obviously straining every sinew to make the grade in this company. The gracious Thad Jones glides through his solos as if he were sitting in an armchair, and even allows himself a couple of subtly corrected fluffs – though it's a pity none of Thad's tunes were included on the list. Mraz and Cobb are very much the kind of rhythm section Drew has always relied on, big-toned and straightforward.

Morning and In Concert are an extension of the familiar Montmartre partnership. Catherine is over-indulged on the live album with his own 'Twice A Week'. For the rest, it's a mild-mannered run-through of material that would have been familiar to all three: John Lewis's 'Django', 'Here's That Rainy Day', Pettiford's 'Blues In The Closet' and a breezy closing 'On Green Dolphin Street'. Certainly worth a listen but, like Morning, too mild and unemphatic for most tastes.

(*) At the Brewhouse Storyville 8318 VHS Storyville 6963/DVD 1140 Drew; Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Alvin Queen (d). 93.
Very near the end, Kenny still plays with magisterial calm and youthful energy. He kicks off the Brewhouse set with a storming version of Dave Brubeck's 'In Your Own Sweet Way' and then delivers a completely original and unexpected arrangement of the Jewish folk theme 'Hush-A-Bye'. The opening measures of 'It Could Happen To You' are brilliant, original jazz piano, totally unexpected. The climax of the set, 'You Don't Know What Love Is' and 'All Blues', showcases a trio at the very peak of its powers. The video and DVD options don't add much; Drew was never a showy or histrionic player, but he was always reassuring and restful to watch, a man very much absorbed in a job he enjoyed. Even by this stage, it looked as if Kenny Drew could go on for ever and it was a genuine surprise when one day that calm voice was silenced.

Also, in brief:

(*) This Is New Original Jazz Classics OJC 483. 3–4/57.
Nothing very new at all; this sort of hard-bop fare was already becoming standard repast in 1957.

 Plays The Music Of Harry Warren And Harold Arlen Milestone 47070. 57.
An evocative and elegant compilation of tunes by two of America's finest songwriters, played in duo format with Wilbur Ware (b).

 Pal Joey Original Jazz Classics OJC 1809. 10/57.
A typical jazz-goes-to-Broadway trio of the day: earns an extra notch, though, for Ware's hungry, probing bass-lines.

 Your Soft Eyes Soul Note 121040. 11/81.
Mads Vinding (b) and Ed Thigpen (d) are swinging enough, but there is not much substance to this record.

(*) And Far Away Soul Note 121081. 2/83.
The records continue to work a slight, pretty seam to rather soporific ends.

Kenny Drew Jr (born 1958)

PIANO

Few signs of famous-dad syndrome, partly because he was brought up by his grandparents and an aunt, largely because

Kenny Sr graced the jazz world quietly and cast no overpowering shadow.

 The Rainbow Connection Evidence ECD 22158 Drew; Terence Blanchard (t); Charnett Moffett (b); Cody Moffett (d). 98.
 Portraits Of Mingus And Monk Claves 50 1194 Drew; Lynn Seaton (b); Marvin 'Smitty' Smith (d). 94.

Monk was a stronger and more obvious source for Kenny Jr than his dad had been. The Claves set, which still surfaces fairly regularly, is a worthwhile date, nicely recorded, though not as interesting musically as the same trio's Secrets for TCB. Smitty sounds hurried and impatient. The other set is marked by a superb reading of Drew Sr's 'Serenity', another of his gently understated themes. The presence of Blanchard on the date gives the group real richness of sound. The other delight of this fine set is a reading of Monk's little-played 'Boo Boo's Birthday', a finger-breaking theme that Kenny pulls off with ease. The rhythm section is as tight as a band of brothers ought to be, and the sound is very clear.

(*) Passionata Arkadia 70561 Drew; Peter Washington (b); Lewis Nash (d); strings. 98.

It was only around this time that Kenny Jr started to programme his father's work prominently. Passionata is a full-scale tribute, titled after an unfinished song, played here for the first time. The set also includes Drew Sr material like 'Dark Beauty', one of the old man's finest compositions, and standards that he must have played a thousand times. These are fresh interpretations, though; 'Summertime' is given a classical spin and other tracks veer from the expected line. This is certainly the most accommodating and inventive trio Kenny has worked with since the days of Seaton and Smith. Washington has an enormous range and a capacity for free, full melody alongside a strong, sure beat, leaving Nash to embellish and elaborate. The strings are arranged by Bob Belden, unobtrusive, idiomatic and cleanly registered.

 Follow The Spirit Sirocco FJL 1004 Drew; Steve Wilson (ss, as); Lynn Seaton (b); Tony Jefferson (d). 98.
(*) Winter Flower Milestone MCD 9289-2 As above, except omit Wilson. 6/98.

The session with Wilson is flatly recorded, which means that the horn parts are more prominent than they ought to be and Seaton's all-important rhythm work dull and recessed. However, the band does wonderful things on tunes like 'Serial Blues', 'Soldier In The Rain' and a delightful standard, 'Wrap Your Troubles In Dreams'. The Milestone disc is preferable. Jefferson sounds a confident successor to Smith, Nash and Moffett. This time, Kenny nods to Chopin in a lilting A minor waltz, to Ellington in 'Isfahan' (not just a horn-player's song), and to Astor Piazzolla in 'Argentine Rhapsody', a fresh rhythmic profile for the group.

(*) Remembrance TCB 20202 Drew; Wallace Roney (t); Stefon Harris (vib); Santi Debriano (b); Tony Jefferson (d). 12/99.

A memorial concert to the recently departed Milt Jackson, Art Farmer and bossa composer Manfredo Fest. Though basically conceived as a trio date, the presence of Roney and Harris brings in the most obvious echoes of the great vibist and flugelhornist. Kenny Drew Sr made the first recording of 'With Prestige' with Art's group, so it was an obvious inclusion here, a strong, rolling theme with lots of harmonic potential. There is also a stunning version of 'Blame It On My Youth', on which Roney mutes his horn without drifting into the ubiquitous Miles Davis style. Harris is properly front and centre for 'Bags' Groove', a tearing version, only matched for sheer power by 'Epistrophy', one of Kenny's favourite Monk tunes. There are tributes to Fest as well, an original 'Song For Manfredo', a gentle reading of Jobim's 'Children's Games' and a brief take on 'Bossa Blues'.

 Live At Montreux TCB 21152 Drew (p solo). 7/99.

For this relatively rare solo set he mixes familiar material – 'Nardis' and 'Solar', 'There Is No Greater Love', 'Alone Together', an Ellington medley – with relatively unusual things. The most striking is Steve Swallow's 'Radio', which is given a playful treatment. There is also an Astor Piazzolla composition, more obviously pianistic and every bit as good. Drew's originality surfaces on his reading of 'Alone Together'; here the old groaner takes on a fresh and almost ironic quality. In contrast he delivers Duke's 'Single Petal Of A Rose' and 'Prelude To A Kiss' without much embellishment.

Martin Drew (born 1944)

DRUMS

Redoubtable British sideman who's worked with Oscar Peterson, Ronnie Scott and many others.

 Got A Match? Jazzizit 9919 Drew; Mornington Lockett (ss, ts); Gareth Williams (p); Laurence Cottle (b). 9/99.
 Celebrating The Jazz Couriers / Through The Night: ... Volume 2 Trio TR556 / 561 Drew; Mornington Lockett, Nigel Hitchcock(sax); Steve Melling (p); Andrew Cleyndert (b). 1/01; 7/02.
(*) Azule Serape Trio TR567 Drew; Mornington Lockett (ss, ts); Jim Hart (vib); Steve Melling (p); Paul Morgan (b). 04.

Drew has monster swing and unfailing good taste, which never descends to mere tastefulness. A pity that his recording career as leader has been so thirled to the memory of the Ronnie Scott–Tubby Hayes Jazz Couriers. The first of these is a straight tribute to Ronnie; the second, which has an astonishing silent-movie subtitle, too long to quote here, is an attempt – mostly successful – to revive the twin-tenor Couriers sound; the third a more tongue-in-cheek endeavour, which actually opens with 'Cheek To Cheek' in case no one detected the irony. Perhaps the best of all, though, is the most recent, recorded at London's Pizza Express with the New Couriers and featuring the blazing talent of Jim Hart on Tubbs's 'other' instrument. It's cracklingly good jazz where the others are merely workmanlike, club dates that work as souvenirs without being regularly playable. Through it all, Martin takes charge, playing with surprising grace and delicacy for a big guy, never resorting to hard bop cliché or pointless pyrotechnics.

Mary Anne Driscoll (born 1950)

PIANO

Grew up and studied in the Bay Area before working in NY with Paul Driscoll's group. She subsequently moved to Maine, raised a family and taught music.

 Inside Out CIMP 314 Driscoll; Paul Murphy (d). 6/04.

An outgoing and entertaining series of duets between two musicians whose association goes a long way back. This seems to be Driscoll's first disc with her name above the marquee, and she's bursting with music. Tayloresque freedoms are contained within a careful sense of form: most of the tracks are completed inside five minutes, and run their course before rhetoric sets in.

Murphy is a sympathetic partner, though the drums are often too loud.

Paquito D'Rivera (born 1948)

ALTO, SOPRANO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, CLARINET

A prodigy in Havana, he played in his father's band at the age of six. Later founded Irakere. Defected to the US in 1980.

 The Lost Sessions /  Este Camino Largo Yemaya 9423 / 9424 D'Rivera; various personnels. 76–78.

 The Best Of Paquito D'Rivera Columbia 507611 D'Rivera; others unidentified. 81–88.

D'Rivera was the first of the wave of defecting Cubans, and his intensely hot, infectiously runaway style has enlivened many sessions. Like his compatriot Arturo Sandoval he has difficulty in finding appropriate contexts for his talent and situations that prevent his firecracker virtuosity from simply blowing away aimlessly. The early material on Yemaya is culled from various sources and catches the precocious teenager (which makes the middle-aged photographs on the covers slightly misleading) playing with Sandoval, Irakere, the Valdes brothers and others. These make an interesting introduction, but decidedly shapeless albums. The Columbia dates were Latinized hard bop, mostly generic but usefully sampled here. D'Rivera still blows too much smoke when working on the likes of 'On Green Dolphin Street', but the best-of format at least rationalizes a sequence of noisy highlights.

 Return To Ipanema Town Crier 516 D'Rivera; Claudio Roditi (t); Jay Ashby (tb); Ralph Moore (ts); Danilo Perez (p); Nilson Matta (b); Portinho (d); Rafael Cruz (perc). 3/89.

Largely Brazilian fare on this one, which features an impressively international cast (Moore is UK-born) and a relaxed approach to the material, so there's no fuss about authenticity or correctness. D'Rivera plays with more patience and reserve than on comparable dates, but a near decade in the land of the free hasn't mellowed him too much. Nice, detailed sound.

 Tico! Tico! Chesky 034 D'Rivera; Danilo Perez (p); Fareed Haque, Romero Lubambo, Tiberio Nascimento (g); David Finck, Nilson Matta (b); Portinho, Mark Walker (d). 7–8/89.

Chesky pushed D'Rivera in the direction of a convincing brand of fusion. The bolero, waltz and bossa rhythms are integrated into a setting which sifts bebop into an authentic South American stew, and the leader turns to the clarinet (and a little tenor) to decorate the pulse.

 Who's Smoking? Candid CCD79523 D'Rivera; Claudio Roditi (t, flhn); Mark Morganelli (flhn); James Moody (ts); Danilo Perez, Pedrito Lopez (p); Harvie Swartz (b); Al Foster (d). 5/91.

Lots more gilt-edged hard-bop, heavy on glitter and flash but short on anything but the showmanship. D'Rivera and Roditi strike sparks off each other until they're both thoroughly alight, and there is a rather good 'Giant Steps'.

(*) Havana Café Chesky 60 D'Rivera; Danilo Perez (p); Ed Cherry, Fareed Haque (g); David Finck (b); Jorge Rossy (d); Sammy Figueroa (perc). 8/91.

One of the best of D'Rivera's many recordings of the period, this one smokes along nicely, but without the brushfire intensity that makes some of the records difficult listening. Perez is immaculate here and really makes the record, though the two guitarists offer up their rather different qualities on things like 'Jean Pauline' and 'Bossa Da Brooklyn'. As well-balanced as good chipotle.

(*) Live At Manchester Craftsmen's Guild Blue Jackel MCG 1003 D'Rivera; Diego Urcola, Mike Ponella (t); Conrad Herwig (tb); William Cepeda (tb, conch); Scott Robinson (as); Andres Boiarsky (ts, ss); Marshall McDonald (bs, ts); Dario Eskenazi (p); Fareed Haque (g); Oscar Stagnaro (b); Mark Walker (d). 2/97.

That's Manchester, Pennsylvania, not England, and the band is the United Nations Orchestra, founded by Dizzy Gillespie. The rhythmic subtexts come not only from Brazil and Cuba but also Uruguay, Puerto Rico and Argentina. Dishevelled and under-rehearsed, the jostling, fractious delivery proves more effective than many a better-drilled outfit. Several of the tunes have the teeming, shouting quality which one feels this music should aspire to, and for once D'Rivera's solos simply take their place against a rich, tempestuous fabric. His duet on clarinet with Stagnaro is a real surprise, almost melancholy in timbre even as the virtuosity abides.

 Brazilian Dreams MCGJ 1010 D'Rivera; Claudio Roditi (t); Jay Ashby (tb); Helio Alves (p); Mart Ashby (g); Oscar Stagnaro (b); Paulo Braga (d); New York Voices (v). 4/01.

Recorded live, there's an enjoyable fizz about this. D'Rivera has assembled a band that knows his moves and the showbiz snap of New York Voices brings plenty of fun to the party. They're a lot slicker and smarter than the average Brazilian vocal-on-a-jazz-record and will annoy as many as they please, but, as we've remarked before, this is familiar and comfortable turf for the saxophonist.

 The Jazz Chamber Trio Chesky 293 D'Rivera; Mark Summer (clo); Alon Yavnai (p). 12/04.

This would be a hard one to pin down. D'Rivera sticks mostly to clarinet, and with the cello and piano in place it's hard sometimes to guess the provenance of some of these lovely tunes, which might be Latin, might be Jewish, or might belong to some eclectic mid-Atlantic tradition lost to history. It's mostly quiet, lovely music and completely distinctive.

(*) Funk Tango Sunnyside 4451 D'Rivera; Diego Urcola (t, vtb); Fernando Otero, Alon Yavnai (p); Héctor del Curto (bandoneon); Oscar Stagnero (b); Mark Walker (d). 10/06.

After nearly 30 years in the US, D'Rivera continues to turn out terrific records. There's neither much in the way of post-Piazzolla tango nor latter-day funk on this, just an impressively and typically eclectic range of Cuban/bop ideas, culminating in a deceptively throwaway version of 'Giant Steps'. 'Contradanza' is a lovely clarinet/piano duet with Yavnai, smart, sophisticated and perfectly weighted.

Also, in brief:

 A Tribute To Cal Tjader Yemaya 9427. 87.

With the Louie Ramirez Latin Jazz Ensemble. 'Soul Sauce' is by Tjader, much of the rest by Ramirez.

 Portraits Of Cuba Chesky 298. 2/96.

Over-arranged and orchestrated but still a compellingly nostalgic project, reminiscent of Miles and Gil but with more pepper.

 100 Years Of Latin Love Songs Heads Up 3045. 8/98.

A clunky concept, but D'Rivera makes these one-per-decade melodies sing; Jobim's 'Corcovado' is the only one likely to be widely known.

 Tropicana Nights Chesky JD 186. 99.
In front of another polished showband, he steers a nice line between Latin kitsch and pointed improvising.

 The Clarinetist: Volume 1 Peregrina 50221. 10/00.
Grammy Award-winning crossover project that majors on Piazzolla pieces and other classical themes.

 Big Band Time Disc Medi 77802. 02.
'Who's Smokin'?' is a highlight again on a nicely varied and subtly balanced big-band set.

Billy Drummond (born 1959)

DRUMS

Born in Virginia, he followed his father's footsteps in becoming a drummer, arriving in NY in 1988. Joined the OTB band and has since freelanced successfuly.

 Native Colours Criss Cross 1057 Drummond; Steve Wilson (as, ss); Steve Nelson (vib); Renee Rosnes (p); Ray Drummond (b). 3/91.
(*) The Gift Criss Cross 1083 Drummond; Seamus Blake (ts, ss); Renee Rosnes (p); Peter Washington (b). 12/93.
 Dubai Criss Cross 1120 Drummond; Chris Potter (ts, ss, bcl); Walt Weiskopf (ts); Peter Washington (b). 12/95.
Drummond's relaxed facility and knack of piling on the pace as and when required made him a first-call player in the '90s. Much of the action takes place on the cymbals, a light, fast, highly tuneful sound punctuated with sudden dramatic accents and edgy metallic chimes.

The debut is congested; too much going on in the middle of the mix. Blake is better on The Gift because he has the power and determination to make his presence felt. Rosnes (who's Mrs Drummond) is less assured than on her own dates, but contributes to a well-balanced programme, which includes Harold Land's 'Ode To Angela' and Charles Lloyd's very beautiful 'Apex'.

Dubai dispenses with a harmony instrument, and the result is startling. Drummond's closeness to Max Roach suddenly becomes evident, and the originals – his own 'Dubai', Potter's 'Bananafish' and Weiskopf's 'Invisible Sun' and 'Drumhead' – take on a stark melodic beauty. Weiskopf is featured on Strayhorn's gruffly romantic 'Daydream'. Potter shines most on Pat Metheny's 'The Bat', another number where Drummond leaves his traps alone and concentrates on cymbals, a most effective trademark.

Ray Drummond (born 1946)

DOUBLE BASS

Studied in business school 1974–7, but returned to bass-playing and worked extensively on the NY scene.

 Camera In A Bag Criss Cross 1040 Drummond; David Newman (ts, f); Kenny Barron (p); Steve Nelson (vib); Marvin 'Smitty' Smith (d). 12/89.
Drummond has appeared on many, many sessions as sideman but his outings as leader are rarer. The Criss Cross session works out very well, although nothing exactly arrives with a bang. Newman plays as much flute as tenor and sounds full and funky on both, while Nelson functions peripherally; the strongest music, though, comes from the rhythm section, which develops a tremendously assured momentum across the nine compositions, four of them by Drummond.

(*) Vignette Arabesque AJ0122 Drummond; Gary Bartz (ss, as); Chris Potter, John Richmond, Joe Lovano (ts); Renee Rosnes (p); Billy Hart (d). 95.
Another exceptional band, with Richmond and Lovano sitting in on the handsomely voiced treatment of 'Eleanor Rigby'. Rosnes and Hart mesh with the leader's lines and ideas at a very high level and, as finely as Bartz and Potter play, one finds the ears constantly drawn to what piano, bass and drums are doing. In his writing and sense of group organization, Drummond seems regularly drawn to a closely argued kind of freedom – unusually so for a player so valued by others for his timekeeping and ability to keep everything within the frame.

 1 2 3 4 Arabesque AJ0191 Drummond; Craig Handy (ss, ts); Stephen Scott (p); Billy Hart (d). 6/97.
Again, the idiom of controlled freedom, with dark tonalities dominant. There is less original writing here, more emphasis, on this first quartet date, on blowing. That said, most of the tunes are quite short and the solo space seems carefully marshalled. They open with Wayne Shorter's tribute to his wife 'Ana Maria' who died in the TWA plane crash. It's a lovely thing, dancing and mournful by turns. There's another Shorter tune later, the peerless 'Nefertiti'. Ray's own 'Ballade Poétique' again shows how much this most reliable of sidemen likes to explore outside the fence; Handy is in fine form on tenor, having taken the opening cut on soprano. 'Driftin'' isn't such a compelling piece, but the album picks up again with 'Prelude To A Kiss' and Drummond has his own finest moment on record with a lovely free interpretation of 'Willow Weep For Me'. Before that, a version of Coltrane's 'Mr P.C.' (an obvious choice for a bassman leader) and a strident 'Goin' Home' on which Handy is again superb.

Also, in brief:

 Excursion Arabesque AJ0106. 93.
Mostly originals and again in Ray's signature idiom of bluesy freedom. Terrific stuff, though now possibly harder to find.

(*) Continuum Arabesque AJ011. 1/94.
The continuum here is the blues, the source for most of these pieces; Randy Brecker (t), Tom Chapin (f), John Scofield (g) head a starry band.

Amancio D'Silva (1936–96)

GUITAR

Born in Bombay to Goan parents, he developed a virtuosic playing style and a fascinating East–West compositional approach.

(*) Integration Universal Impressed Repressed 9866893 D'Silva; Ian Carr (t, flhn); Don Rendell (ts); Dave Green (b); Trevor Tomkins (d). 68.
() Konkan Dance Dutton Vocalion CDSML8420 D'Silva; Don Rendell (ss, ts); Alan Branscombe (f, vib, p); Stan Tracey (p); Clem Alford (sitar); Toni Campo (b); Mick Ripshar, Keshav Sathe (tabla). 74.
D'Silva established a presence on the Bombay scene, originally playing a bass instrument he'd adapted himself. Coming to Britain, he supported his family as a pub cleaner before meeting producer Denis Preston (who, it's said, invented the term 'fusion') and recording with him for the Lansdowne series. Integration featured almost all entirely D'Silva originals, though Carr is co-composer of 'Ganges', which establishes the disc's mysterious, funky style, and Rendell and Green are co-credited on the marvellous title-cut. Konkan Dance, made in 1974 but not issued, is a slighter work, though not necessarily less ambitious. The four tracks are long and jam-like and rely heavily on Branscombe's multi-instrumentalism as well as D'Silva's intriguingly overdriven guitar sound. No title was selected for the album at the time: 'A Street In Bombay' was another, perhaps better, contender. A second, fascinating insight into a now rather forgotten figure who once worked tirelessly on the British scene.

Scott Dubois

GUITAR

Adventurous NY player who's influenced by other idioms.

 Monsoon / (*) Tempest Soul Note 121409 / 121419 Dubois; Dave Liebman (ts, f); Jason Rigby, Loren Stillman (sax); Thomas Morgan (b); Mark Ferber (d). 02; 05.

The non-jazz elements are more evident on the second record, where Liebman's Indian flute is an effective extra voice. Though there are three saxophonists listed, Dubois only uses two per track, judging the best permutation in the light of the particular composition. A longish suite on the first record doesn't have much internal logic, though the parts are fine and Dubois himself occupies the foreground more as a rhythmic player, strumming much of his part, than as a charismatic soloist; he has, after all, the horns for that. Hard to pin down his influences, but electric-period Miles, Ornette and some contemporary classical writing seem to be in the mix, along with hints of Jungle on the later record – top track: 'Wander' or '200 Crows'.

Marc Ducret (born 1957)

GUITAR, GUITAR-SYNTHESIZER

A Parisian, he came to notice in the Orchestre National de Jazz and later with Louis Sclavis and Tim Berne.

* News From The Front Winter & Winter 919046 Ducret; Herb Robertson (t, flhn); Yves Robert (tb); François Verly (d, perc). 6 & 7/91.

Ducret is still rather more familiar as sideman than as leader, but this return from limbo (originally JMT) is strikingly original and probably his best record. A brief opener whets the appetite, then the remarkable 'Can I Call You Wren?' (one of three pieces with mysterious 'Wren' titles) has him interacting imaginatively with Verly's electronic and live percussion. The title-piece has a folksy bottleneck introduction, an intriguingly abstract development and then a crashing climax. And that's pretty much how this goes: never predictable, marked by some fine playing from Robertson and Robert, but with the main action focused on guitar and drums/machines.

 (detail) Winter & Winter 910003-2 Ducret (g solo). 1/96.
 Un Certain Malaise Screwgun 70005 Ducret (g solo). 6–7/97.

Performed with chiming clarity and precision, (detail) features Ducret alone on acoustic six- and twelve-string guitars. Un Certain Malaise is a live album where the guitarist is again by himself, though this time on electric. His virtuosity, inventiveness and skilful blending of genres are never in question. Neither disc, though, entirely escapes ennui. The scrawling treatment of 'What Did I Forget?/Old Brown Shoe' which opens Un Certain Malaise is an impressive show of chopsmanship, but it's not so different from listening to Edward Van Halen and, deprived of anything but his own context, Ducret seems landlocked. (detail) sometimes sounds like mere strumming, for all his refinements.

(*) L'Ombra Di Verdi Screwgun 70010 Ducret; Bruno Chevillon (b); Eric Echampard (d). 6/98.

Impressive. 'Dialectes' kicks off the set with clean guitar-lines and uncomplicated chords, but once the rest of the group is in it has a dark and roiling quality, reminiscent of the harmonically static chording of Miles's pre-retirement '70s groups. 'Lust' has been heard before, but this time it's transformed, with a Middle European feel. 'Description Du Tunnel' and 'Ta Rot' are the other big tracks and they have thought and subtlety as well as raw power.

Also, in brief:

 La Theorie Du Pilier Label Bleu LBL 6508. 87.

Fine early trio; worth seeking out.

 Qui Parle? Sketch SKE 333038. N.D.

Writers and poets inspire this lavishly orchestrated set. Weighed down by its eclecticism.

Gerd Dudek (born 1938)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, FLUTES, SHENHAI

Born in Poland, he began in his brother's big band, but later became associated with free music with trumpeter Manfred Schoof and in the Globe Unity Orchestra.

 Open Atavistic 247 Dudek; Buschi Niebergall (b); Edward Vesala (d). 77.

Originally on FMP but reissued as part of Atavistic's very welcome and well-named Unheard Music Series, this is a strong trio session which is best described as 'open' rather than 'free'. Sadly, neither Niebergall nor Vesala is still alive. In their different ways, both were inventive spirits with much to offer, but it's the drummer's controlled fire that grabs the attention here. Dudek's multi-instrumentalism is never merely decorative, but though he has very different attacks on his different horns, it is always clear who is playing.

(*) 'Smatter Psi 02.01 Dudek; John Parricelli (g); Chris Laurence (b); Tony Levin (d). 2/98.

Amazingly, more than one reviewer approached this record as if it were Gerd's debut. The real surprise of this session is its material: three themes by Kenny Wheeler, including the title-track, a lovely 'Body And Soul' and a version of Jimmy Rowles's 'The Peacocks'. Dudek switches between tenor and soprano, and the open tonality offered by Parricelli's guitar affords him considerable space for manoeuvre. Once or twice, the much-discussed Clifford Jordan influence comes to the fore, though oddly it's John Gilmore one thinks of on 'Body And Soul'.

Ismael Dueñas

PIANO

Sparkling new talent, based in Barcelona.

(*) La Tiranía De La Cosa Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 197 Dueñas; Tom Warburton (b); Jordi Gardeñas (d). 12/03.

Of the many, many young musicians brought forward by Fresh Sound, few pull you up short. Dueñas is an exception: a witty, stylist pianist/composer whose originals have a spicy freshness that continues to develop on subsequent hearings. All the material here is his own, apart from three versions of Mompou's 'Llac'; no longer a surprise to hear that composer in a jazz context, but these are markedly original interpretations. The trio is rock-solid, too, which consolidates the impression of thoughtful quality.

Ted Dunbar (1937–98)

GUITAR

The Texan had a busy sideman career, but also taught and published on guitar technique and harmony.

 Gentle Time Alone Steeplechase SCCD31298 Dunbar; Dotti Anita Taylor (f); Mickey Tucker (p); Ray Drummond (b); David Jones (d). 12/91.

Dunbar made several records as leader but mostly for Xanadu and Muse, and they have never been reissued. This is elegant jazz guitar, possibly too musicianly for most tastes and with the inexplicable addition of the flautist on two cuts. Dunbar's writing is stronger than Wes Montgomery's ever was, though the playing lacks the same glow and flair. Sadly, this was to be Ted's last recording and, apart from his books, his career remains poorly documented, though the index will reveal some important sideman engagements.

Mac Duncan (1931–81)

TROMBONE, VOCAL

A hard-nosed Yorkshireman who played for several years with Ken Colyer before leading trad groups in the '60s and '70s. His suicide shocked his community.

 Live At The Lord Napier 1973 Upbeat URCD 188 Duncan; Sonny Morris (t, v); Dave Bailey, Jack Gilbert (cl); Jim MacIntosh (bj); Eddie Edwards, Ray Holland (b); Brian Duddy (d). 4/73.

(*) Live At The Lord Napier Vol 2 Upbeat URCD 201 Similar to above. 73–75.

Duncan left very little under his own name to remember him by and this souvenir of a typical gig at the Thornton Heath pub is a splendid blast of unreconstructed British trad. Morton's 'The Chant' taxes them a bit, but otherwise the group barnstorms its way through a familiar set-list with bad-mannered aplomb. Morris, a degree more debonair with other players, joins in with Duncan's salty temperament and at its best the group really charges along. Bailey and Gilbert get together on the last four tracks for some two-clarinet fun. The second volume sweeps up some leftovers and adds material from a more routine 1975 studio date.

Paul Dunmall (born 1953)

SAXOPHONES, CLARINET, BAGPIPES

Bebop, free jazz, folk and large-scale composition all play a part. The Kent man is a member of Mujician, but increasingly follows his own star.

(*) Soliloquy Matchless MRCD 15 Dunmall (solo). 10 & 12/86.

The obvious points of reference are John Surman and Evan Parker, though Dunmall's influence from folk is obviously closer to the former. The most remarkable piece on this excellent set is 'Voyage', solo soprano-playing which finds a route and a niche midway between the two. 'Human Atmospheres' is a more extreme performance, exploring the limits of pitch, while 'Holocaust', which opens with huge unison siren effects, becomes a sober meditation on destructiveness and loss. Intimate and visceral, it's tough but rewarding music.

 Essential Expressions Cadence Jazz Records CJR 1079 Dunmall; Tony Levin (d). 1/96.

Levin is a treasure. Like Eddie Prévost, he combines freedom with unmistakable swing and, on the evidence of the title-track, it would be hard to distinguish him from some of the American masters whose idiom he has absorbed. The admixture of jazz is less obvious here, though the soprano feature ('I Found An Angel') touches on a couple of standard themes. Dunmall otherwise sticks to a blunt tenor sound that is frequently reminiscent of session producer Evan Parker.

* The Great Divide Cuneiform RUNE 142 Dunmall; Gethin Liddington (t); Paul Rutherford, Hilary Jeffries (tb); Elton Dean (as); Evan Parker (ss, ts); Keith Tippett (p); John Adams (g); Paul Rogers (b); Tony Levin, Mark Sanders (d). 99.

 Bridging the Great Divide Live Clean Feed 017 Dunmall; similar to above. 8/02.

The studio version is a remarkable achievement. The augmented personnel appears on only the final track. The rest of the set is for Paul's now well-established octet and treads a fine line between composition and free improvisation. The six parts of the main piece are beautifully modulated but leave ample room for spirited improvisation. Rutherford is in great form, blocking out huge sounds in the ensemble passages and playing solo with fire and passion. The Mujician personnel play for one another, as ever. The live version might seem a bit of a luxury, but it's worth having for the closing quartet 'Wind' and for a lovely recording.

* Hour Glass Emanem 4208 2CD Dunmall; Paul Rogers (b); Marcio Mattos (b, elec); Tony Bianco (d, perc). 2 & 4/02.

(*) In Your Shell Like Emanem 4111 Dunmall; Stevie Wishart (hurdy gurdy); Paul Lytton (perc). 1/03.

* Rylickolum: For Your Pleasure / (*) Go Forth Duck Creative Improvised 289 / CIMP 296 Dunmall; Paul Rogers (b); Kevin Norton (d, vib). 3/03.

* Awareness Response Emanem 4101 As above, except omit Norton. 3/03.

Dunmall was in a purple patch as he approached his 50th birthday. His albums of this period mark the fruition of a long-developing vision, music that comfortably transcends the boundaries of free, composed, jazz and folk forms. The trio with Mattos and Bianco is marked by the bassist's creative manipulation of electronics, creating the kind of expansive drones and sonic environments that Dunmall likes to work within. He plays tenor throughout the continuous one-hour piece, a feat of physical control. The other set finds Rogers working on his A.L.L. bass (see below). It's a more familiar partnership but no less stimulating and the even longer 'The Teepees Dive Deeply' is a wrenching, joyous experience.

The duos and trio on In Your Shell Like contain some searching music. Stevie Wishart's hurdy gurdy plays directly to his folkier side, though the balance of instruments isn't brought off too well. Paul's far more of an abstract/improv player in Lytton's company, using tenor, soprano and bagpipes often to quiet and contemplative effect. The percussionist is in great form, sly, subtle and intensely aware of context, and the tracks which bring all three players together are superb. A nice recording from L'Archiduc in Brussels, which has become a favourite Emanem hangout.

Rylickolum was caught live on a spring 2003 tour. Norton is an important innovator, restlessly creative. His vibraphone-playing here is perhaps the key element on the album. As he does again on the duo set, Rogers forcefully declares a pulse that resonates through the free passages. Restricting himself to soprano and tenor this time, Dunmall shows how far beyond his free-bop roots he has gone, peppering his solos with fragmentary melodies and pure-sound passages which have no relation to melody or harmonic changes. The title is dialect for a damn good time. One of the best records of 2003, certainly when paired up with the CIMP set, which extends the trio chemistry and features stunning work from Norton, though for some reason his vibes are uncredited. Paul's own highlight comes on the title-track, in a soprano solo of sheer beauty.

The duo album sees Rogers playing an A.L.L. bass built by Antoine Leducq and featuring six playing strings that give him access to most of the cello range, as well as twelve drone strings that help to boost the power of the instrument. The sound sits well with Dunmall's pipes and saxophones and the level of empathy on 'Priceless Response' is taut and emotionally draining.

 I Wish You Peace Cuneiform RUNE 303 Dunmall; Moksha Big Band (personnel as for records above). 3/03.
Commissioned by BBC Radio 3 to mark Dunmall's 50th birthday, this passionate piece is a protest against American aggression in Iraq. As such, it is very effective, but there is more heat than light and one craves the quieter passages where Keith Tippett's beautiful piano-playing can be heard, or Paul Rogers's bass work (as at the beginning of part three). Otherwise, I Wish You Peace relies too much on crescendo and on ever more overlapping layers of sound. Much of this music could have been played by Mujician or the octet, though who would grudge him a rare chance to work with a larger band?

 Deep Well / (*) Deep See FMR 207-0606 / 217-0207 Dunmall; Peter Brandt (b on Well); Jim Barr (b on See); Tony Orrell (d). 5/06; 11/06.
There's something pleasingly familiar about this style of British improv, tinged with vernacular styles, serious and blokeish by turns. It's clearly not Paul Rogers on either date or the other Tony on drums, but the relative unfamiliarity of the trio refocuses attention on Dunmall himself, who plays tenor and soprano only. The later gig is the obvious pick; Paul sounds very strong on the opening 'Deep Sea Diver' and maybe coasting a bit more on the two later pieces; not that they lack energy or commitment. Nothing wrong with Deep Well, but it feels more routine.

Also, in brief:

(*) Totally Fried Up Slam CD 235. 3/98.
The second outing from Dunmall's free-bop trio doesn't have quite the slapping impact of its predecessor, but it's still a powerful record.

 Utoma Trio Emanem 4040. 7/99.
With fellow saxophonist Simon Picard and percussionist Tony Bianco: a potent collaborative mix.

 Master Musicians Of MU Slam CD 241. 11/99, 1/00.
Duos with guitarist Philip Gibbs, a long-term collaborator who shares Paul's liking for unusual instruments. Unusually for this period, he uses a range of horns, not just tenor and pipes.

 Occasional Rain FMR 211-0616. 5/06.
Duos with Peter Brandt (b). Dunmall plays saxello and melodica as well as his tenor and it's all a bit diluted. The trios from the time are better.

 All Said And Dun Loose Torque LT016. 3/07.
Boisterous collaborative trio with Nick Stephens (b) and Tony Marsh (d).

Johnny Dunn (1897–1937)

TRUMPET

The Memphian was a sensation in early-'20s NY. He subsequently visited Europe and died young in Paris.

 Cornet Blues Frog DGF33 Dunn; Pike Davis (t); Herb Flemming, Earl Granstaff, Calvin Jones (tb); Garvin Bushell, Herschel Brassfield, Rudolph Dunbar, Nelson Kincaid (cl, as); Ernest Elliott (cl); Rollin Smith (as, ts); Alonzo Williams (cl, ts); Dan Wilson, George Rickson, Leroy Tibbs, Jelly Roll Morton, James P. Johnson, Fats Waller (p); George Smith (vn); John Mitchell, Sam Speed, Maceo Jefferson (bj); Harry Hull, Bill Benford, (tba); Jesse Baltimore (d). 12/21–3/28.
Dunn is a throwback to the first era of jazz on record. He arrived in New York in 1919 and seems to have been a trumpet kingpin until Louis Armstrong blew into town five years later. Like Freddie Keppard, Dunn played hard and loud. This superb reissue reopens the book on a now unfashionable stylist. Fine remastering gets us close to what Dunn and his Original Jazz Hounds (later just his Original Jazz Band) must have sounded like. He may have spent time in uniform; 'Sergeant' Dunn had a penchant for bugle motifs in his titles and style of playing; the 1921 'Bugle Blues' is entirely different from the 1928 'Original Bugle Blues' which closes the record, with Fats Waller and James P. Johnson on two pianos! He certainly came from some kind of brass-band tradition: there's that familiar stern vibrato and 'proper' phrasing which Armstrong and his followers eventually dismissed. 'Hawaiian Blues' and 'Four O'Clock Blues' aren't very exciting tracks, but as a coupling they sold 700,000 copies in 1922, and Dunn's playing actually shines out of his surroundings. If the rest of the Jazz Hounds had been up to his level – like Oliver's band in 1923 – these sides would have had a far higher reputation.

Dunn played in London in 1923 and 1926 and recorded with C. B. Cochran's Plantation Orchestra, although he is outdone by Pike Davis on the four existing tracks. The Columbia date of March 1928 has the unexplained presence of Jelly Roll Morton on piano and is an important survival, with the master inimitable on his own 'Ham And Eggs' and Dunn playing some of his best open horn. An important reissue, though non-specialists will find it hard work.

Eddie Durham (1906–87)

GUITAR, TROMBONE

Started out in band of siblings, but became a pioneer of electric guitar as a solo instrument as a member of the Kansas City Five, though he continued to play horn as well.

 Blue Bone JSP 881 Durham; Danny Moss (ts); Russell Henderson (p); Johnny Williams (b); Ronnie Verrell (d). 81.
Durham effectively stood in for Basie in the Kansas City Five. He was also co-composer of 'Topsy', which would have guaranteed him a certain prominence. Of his own recordings, surprisingly little survives. These relatively late sessions are swinging stuff from the man with the interesting 'double'. He doesn't really command much on trombone, though the style is hard to compare to anyone else, and it is primarily as a guitarist that he deserves to be remembered: tight, clipped and rich by turns, and capable of turning the expected harmony on its head.

Phil Durrant (born 1957)

VIOLIN, ELECTRONICS

A Londoner who has worked extensively in the home-grown improvisation scene, Durrant has moved from mainly group work to the solo environments suggested by the first record, which explore the violin's possibilities as an amorphous sound-source via electronic treatments.

 Sowari Acta 10 Durrant (vn, elec solo). 11/96–2/97.
As fiercely demanding a disc as any in improvised music, this solo effort compiles Durrant's various adventures with acoustic and electronically altered violin. The four untreated pieces are pretty hard work, often seeming like plays on the barest of structural themes, while the electronic episodes give rise to the occasional doubt, as in the funny, alarming 'Chew 3': is he actually in control of all the squelch and zap that's coming out of the speakers? Detailed exposure is more reassuring: this isn't trance music or any kind of minimalism, rather a refined exploration of a very particular playing medium.

(*) Dach Erstwhile 014 Durrant; Radu Malfatti (tb); Thomas Lehn (syn). 2/01.
Malfatti's interest in improvisation of the quietest and most evanescent sort dominates this fascinating trio session. The title – 'roof' – refers to the sounds one hears at the beginning of the session as wind and rain creak and patter at the roof of the auditorium. The continuous, one-hour performance has the quiet concentration of an AMM concert. It's not a demanding listen in the sense that dynamics and dissonance are high, but it requires a level of evenly suspended attention to appreciate such delicate art.

Also, in brief:

 Further Lock Concepts Of Doing 002. 3/97.
Durrant sticks to an unamplified and otherwise untreated instrument here, with Frangenheim doing the same, and the results are sometimes dry, dour and compellingly concentrated.

Dutch Swing College Band

GROUP

Founded by Peter Schilperoort in 1945, and still playing with undiminished enthusiasm.

 Vintage Dutch Swing College Band Vol. 1 Lake LACD177 Kees van Dorsser (t); Wim Kolstee (tb); Peter Schilperoort (cl, bs); Dim Kesber (cl, as); Joop Schrier (p); Dick Bakker (g, bj); Chris Bender (b); Arie Merkt (d). 7/48–7/49.

(*) Live In 1960 Philips 838765-2 Oscar Klein (c); Dick Kaart (tb); Peter Schilperoort (cl, bs); Jan Morks (cl); Arie Ligthart (g); Bob Van Oven (b); Martin Beenen (d). 60.

 Swinging Studio Sessions Philips 824256-2 As above, except add Ray Kaart (t); Chris Smildiger (b); Peter Ypma, Huub Janssen, Louis De Lussanet (d). 6/60–6/69.

 Digital Anniversary Philips 824585-2 Sytze Van Duin (c); Bert Boeren (tb); Bob Kaper (cl); Peter Schilperoort (ss, ts, bs, cl); Fred McMurray (p); Henk Bosch Van Drakestein (b); Huub Janssen (d). 10/85.

 Live On Stage Timeless CDTTD 645 Bert de Kort (c, v); George Kaatee (tb); Bob Kaper (cl, as, v); Frits Kaatee (cl, ss, bs); Rob Agerbeek (p); Adrie Braat (b); Bob Dekker (d). 3/01.

 The Swing Code Timeless CDTTD 658 As above, except omit Agerbeek, Dekker; add Kenny Ball (t, v); Chris Barber, Papa Bue (tb); Acker Bilk (cl, v); Tom van Bergeijk (p); Han Brink (d). 4/05.
This jazz institution survived Schilperoort's death in 1990 and did so in handsome style, even if the discography is now much eroded. Originally an enthusiastic if uneventful trad group, the band matured into a unit which bridged the classic traditional style and a more swing-styled mainstream, although the former held sway. There were always good soloists on hand, some of the best including Morks, Klein and the long-serving de Koort, and the rhythm players avoided the mechanical thud of much trad. A regimen of constant touring kept their professionalism polished.

The Lake compilation covers their earliest steps. While the acetates sound rough and dusty, the DSCB was already setting standards for the revivalism then getting under way: careful harmonizing, varying of the lead roles and a more thoughtful approach to material than most rival groups. Most of the tracks were made on home soil, but there are a couple of broadcasts from London too.

Swinging Studio Sessions is a neat cross-section of their early- and mid-'60s work. The 1960 live set goes with a real punch and, with Morks and Klein in top form, is one of their liveliest records. Digital Anniversary marked their 40th anniversary, but it's not one of their brightest sets.

Bob Kaper carries the DSCB torch these days, and they still, as he says, 'have a ball!' The live Timeless starts, as always, with their signature-tune, 'Way Down Yonder In New Orleans', and thereafter it's entertaining business as usual for these diehard jazz lovers. The Swing Code celebrates their 60th anniversary with some distinguished British chums along for the ride, and if the partying is gentler than of yore, it's still a lot of fun.

Dominic Duval

DOUBLE BASS

An East Coast 'undergrounder' whose own recording career was slow to start, but now is closely connected to the Cadence/CIMP nexus.

 Nightbird Inventions Cadence CJR 1072 Duval (b solo). 12/96–1/97.

 The Wedding Band CIMP 137 Duval; Jay Rosen (d). 1/97.
The solo album finds his bass doctored in numerous ways – with long echo, stereo panning, chorusing and more – for 13 pieces, and for once the comparative brevity of the individual tracks is a slight disadvantage: fewer, longer expositions might have effected a more convincing whole. But his inventiveness is undeniable, his use of effects subtle and persuasive, and here and there he comes up with a sonically ravishing idea, such as the closing 'Final Thoughts – Look Through Windows In Rain'.

The duets with Rosen feature the bass unadorned, and with the drummer playing with restraint on a modest kit the music has an evenly modulated flow – effective in small doses yet, as so often, monotonal over almost 70 minutes of music. Recorded at an astonishingly low level, this is a disc to sample as a series of brief encounters.

 Equinox Leo LR 267 As above, except omit Hwang, Lawrence; add Michael Jefry Stevens (p, perc). 8/97.
 State Of The Art CIMP 141 Duval; Mark Whitecage (ss, as, cl); Jason Hwang (vn); Tomas Ulrich (clo). 2/97.
 Live In Concert Cadence CJR 1097 As above, except add Joe McPhee (t, ts). 8/98.
(*) The Navigator / * Under The Pyramid Leo CD LR 257 / 279 Duval; Jason Hwang (vn); Ron Lawrence (vla); Tomas Ulrich (clo). 6/99.
 Cries And Whispers Cadence CJR 1111 Duval; Joe McPhee (flhn, ts); Mark Whitecage (acl, as); Jason Hwang (vn); Tomas Ulrich (clo). 8/99.
Variously credited to The C.T. String Quartet, The Equinox Trio and Duval's String Ensemble, these quite difficult records extend the approach of the earlier discs in different ways: they're heavier, gloomier, louder, more complex, and ultimately quite exhausting to get through. The Navigator and Under The Pyramid are so elephantine in feel that the interesting textures are hard work to decipher, never mind appreciate. Much of this is closer to formal chamber music than to any kind of jazz, and the improvisations, if such they be, are set to what seem to be specifically controlled energy levels. Equinox is a good deal easier to follow and Stevens is a good alternative to the other two, but this is still rather mysteriously cryptic music-making.

State Of The Art benefits enormously from CIMP's famously dry and naturalistic recording. You can hear every microtone and string-squeak, but Duval's interest in very low, groaning arco chords tends to bog the music down just when it should be flying. The concert recording was done at the Knitting Factory, in decent enough sound, although again the ensembles tend to congeal a bit. McPhee walks into this situation with his usual fearlessness, and his saxophone parts, alternately sonorous and barkingly aggressive, are powerful enough, although he tends to sit on top of the group rather than work within it.

The quintet returns for the scarcely less oppressive Cries And Whispers, but, a year further on, the ensemble has assumed a less ad hoc presence, and gothic episodes such as 'Cries And Whispers II' (which gets a cheer from the audience) have a more genuine if still cloudy impact.

(*) The Experiment Blue Jackel 5036-2 Duval; Jason Kao Hwang (vn). 4/99.
(*) Undersound Leo LR 295 Duval; Joe McPhee (ss, ts); John Heward (d, v). N.D.
The duet record with Hwang is for specialist tastes, but there are some extraordinary moments, none more so than a captivating dedication to Messiaen, 'Speaking Of Birds', where the combination of bass and violin and Dave Kowolski's 'implemented recording techniques' creates a dissonantly beautiful racket, not unlike a flocking of birds in a threatening sky. Not everything is as good but there are lovely passages to go with the expected scratching and scraping. Undersound is in more of a straightforward free-playing vein. McPhee is mostly on soprano and Heward isn't a great asset. Duval bookends with two bass solos, and the rest is pretty average.

Also, in brief:

 Asylem Leo LR 316. N.D.
Often funny ('Rectal Parasites' anyone?), this music suffers from the want of focus and editing. Herb Robertson unwontedly disappointing.

 Mountain Air CIMP 347. 06.
The String Quartet again with a set flavoured by a Cecil Taylor homage.

 Monkinus CIMP 348. 2/06.
The Monk canon explored on double bass and tenor saxophone (Jimmy Halperin). It's entertaining, though rarely does it tell you anything fresh about the composer.

Johnny Mbizo Dyani (1945–86)

BASS

Joined Chris McGregor's Blue Notes in 1962 and came to London with them in 1965. Moved to Denmark in 1970 and died in Berlin.

(*) Witchdoctor's Son Steeplechase SCCD 31098 Dyani; John Tchicai (as, ss); Dudu Pukwana (as, ts); Alfredo Do Nascimento (g); Luiz Carlos De Sequeira (d); Mohamed Al-Jabry (perc). 3/78.
 Song For Biko Steeplechase SCCD 31109 Dyani; Dudu Pukwana (as); Don Cherry (c); Makaya Ntshoko (d). 7/78.
 Mbizo Steeplechase SCCD 31163 Dyani; Dudu Pukwana (as, ss); Ed Epstein (as, bs); Churchill Jolobe (d). 2/81.
 Some Jive Ass Boer Jazz Unite 102 Dyani; Mal Waldron (p). 81.
 Afrika Steeplechase SCCD 31186 Dyani; Ed Epstein (as, bs); Charles Davis (as); Thomas Østergren (b); Gilbert Matthews (d); Rudy Smith (steel d); Thomas Akuru Dyani (congas). 10/83.
 Born Under The Heat Dragon DRCD 288 Dyani; Mosa Gwangwa (tb); Charles Davis (as); Ulf Adåker (t); Krister Andersson, Ed Epstein, Peter Shimi Radise (ts); Pierre Dørge (g); Thomas Østergren (b); Gilbert Matthews (d). 11/83–5/85.
(*) Angolian Cry Steeplechase SCCD 31209 Dyani; Harry Beckett (t, flhn); John Tchicai (ts, bcl); Billy Hart (d). 7/85.
Mbizo was by turns calmly visionary and volcanically angry. More than any of the South African exiles, he absorbed and assimilated a wide variety of styles and procedures. In Scandinavia, he forged close artistic relationships with John Tchicai, Don Cherry and Abdullah Ibrahim. The music is strongly politicized but never programmatic. Witchdoctor's Son and Song For Biko come from Dyani's most consistently inventive period. Some of the early '80s material is more diffuse, and though Pukwana is a powerfully compelling solo voice, he always seemed to mute Dyani's more inventive progressions. The duo with Waldron is often compelling, but also oddly one-dimensional; good, though, to welcome something new to this list. Mbizo is the starkest and most unsettling of Dyani's records, with Pukwana wailing and shouting on both his horns and Epstein filling in behind with full-chested baritone and a more measured alto sound reminiscent of Tchicai. Afrika is probably the weakest, marred by an ill-matched rhythm section and out-of-character horns. Dyani never found another drummer with Ntshoko's instincts and empathy, but he came briefly close with Churchill Jolobe and then again towards the end of his life with Billy Hart. Angolian Cry brims with pathos and joy, and Beckett is sterling. Born Under The Heat reappeared with two new live tracks, quartet performances recorded at the Lund Museum of Art with Epstein, Dørge and Matthews, a glimpse of Mbizo in the last year of his life. Not all the horns play together on the other tracks. Gwangwa appears only on 'The Boys From Somafco' and 'Song For The Workers', two of the more obviously political compositions. The absence of a harmony instrument leaves the playing a bit unanchored. Dyani's short life was packed with music, but listening back to these discs forces the conclusion that his best work never made it onto record.

Allen Eager (1927–2003)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Someone will one day make a film of Allen Eager's life, the racing cars, drugs, girls, curious obsessions, but for the purposes of this book he was a fine, Lester Young-influenced tenorist who failed to pursue his musical career with any urgency.

(*) An Ace Face Giant Steps 023 2CD Eager; Tommy Allison, Jimmy Deuchar, Fats Ford, Tony Fruscella, Phil Gilbert, Fats Navarro, Red Rodney (t); Bob Ascher, Billy Byers, Mario Daone, Bill Harris (tb); Pete Brown, Eddie Caine, Charlie Parker, Jerry Therkeld (as); Al Cohn, Wardell Gray, Coleman Hawkins, Illinois Jacquet, Brew Moore, Zoot Sims, Phil Urso, Charlie Ventura (ts); Danny Banks, Serge Chaloff, Gerry Mulligan (bs); John LaPorta (cl); Walter Bishop Jr, Harry Biss, Tadd Dameron, Eddie Finckel, Al Haig, Jimmy Jones, Ken Kersey, Harvey Leonard, Bill Triglia, Lennie Tristano, Richard Twardzik, George Wallington (p); Billy Bauer, John Collins, Mary Osborne, Al Valente (g); Terry Gibbs (vib); Earl Anthony, Bob Carter, Bernie Griggs, Chubby Jackson, Phil Leshin, Al McKibbon, Tubby Phillips, Tommy Potter, Benoît Quersin , Gene Ramey (b); Walter Bolden, Sid Bulkin, Kenny Clarke, Gene Glennon, J. C. Heard, Bradley Junior, Tiny Kahn, Stanley Kay, Shelly Manne, Charles Perry, Buddy Rich, Max Roach (d); Gail Madden (perc). 2/46–

 In The Land Of Oo-Bla-Dee, 1947–1953 Uptown 2749 Eager; Johnny Carisi, Miles Davis, Dizzy Gillespie, Red Rodney (t); Charlie Parker (as, ts); Serge Chaloff (bs, ts); Mike Coluccio, Bud Powell, Richard Twardzik (p); Specs Goldberg, Bernie Griggs, Jimmy Johnson, Eddie Safranski (b); Gene Glennon, Freddy Gruber, Buddy Rich, Max Roach, Morty Yoss (d). 47–53.

An Ace Face brings together most of what survives of Eager's curious career and anyone keen to hear him in distinguished modern jazz company could not do better. A Jazz At The Philharmonic 'Blues' has apparently not been released before, and nothing else is readily available, with small-group sessions (incomplete for some reason) from 1946 and 1947, dates with the Buddy Rich band and with Gerry Mulligan, a radio jam, and dates with Tony Fruscella, Terry Gibbs and many others. There's also a late version of 'Zootcase', recorded live and from just a couple of years before Eager gave up regular music-making for good. A terrific selection.

The fun of In The Land Of Oo-Bla-Dee is Eager's predilection for persuading his colleagues to swap horns. 'Serge Swings Allen's Axe' is self-explanatory, Chaloff in unfamiliar voice. Bird plays tenor on 'Swapping Horns' and then they do the same theme all over again on 'Original Horns'. 'All The Things You Are' from the same all-star session doesn't feature Eager at all, but does include some fine collectable playing by Parker and Powell. Musically, the best thing is a version of Al Cohn's 'The Goof And I', but there are some good live numbers recorded at the Hi Hat in Boston, with Symphony Sid Torin emceeing. Finally (the tracks go against chronological sequence, so why shouldn't we?), there is a rare airshot of Eager's own 'Some Blues', recorded for CBS's Adventures In Music programme in 1949. One of the delights of a set that majors on period detail is the set of photographs by Milton Greene, at whose place some of the jam material was recorded.

The Eagle Brass Band

GROUP

Formed by Barry Martyn to uphold the disappearing tradition of old-style New Orleans brass bands.

 The Last Of The Line GHB BCD-170 Leo Dejan, Herbert Permillion, Andrew Blakeney, Emery Thompson, Milton Batiste, Dan Pawson (t); John Ewing, Alex Iles, Wendell Eugene, Mike Owen (tb); Al Carson (bs horn); Joe Darensbourg, Chris Burke (cl); Floyd Turnham, Harold Dejan (as); Sam Lee, Fred Kemp (ts); Teddy Edwards, Emile Martin, Barry Martyn (d). 1/83–5/89.

Barry Martyn's notes espouse a kind of New Orleans fundamentalism which the music echoes as a mix of battle-cry and last hurrah. The recordings – one session cut in LA in 1983, the second made in New Orleans – are a defiant staring-down of pretenders like The Dirty Dozen Brass Band. Whether old pros or young believers, both of Martyn's lineups seem to have the authentic style in their bones, and can crack notes and wobble their vibratos on the tattered likes of 'Just A Little While To Stay Here', 'Eureka March' and 'Bourbon Street Parade' without a shred of self-consciousness. Raw, fragile music, unlike virtually anything else in jazz, though a CD's worth of this group may seem a long haul.

Geoff Eales

PIANO

Distinctive stylist who combines elegance with adventure. The Welshman has worked extensively in film.

 Facing the Muse Mainstem MCD 104 Eales; Roy Babbington (b); Mark Fletcher (d). 99.

 Mountains Of Fire Black Box 1006 Eales (p solo). 00.

 Red Letter Days Black Box 2019 Eales; Jim Mullen (g); Roy Babbington (b); Mark Fletcher (d). 01.

 Synergy Basho 112 Eales (p solo). 02.

 Homecoming /  Jazz Piano Legends 33 Records 33JAZZ143 / JazzCreative 4 Eales; Roy Babbington (b); Mark Fletcher (d). 04; 06.

 Epicentre 33 Records 33JAZZ162 Eales (p solo). 07.

A background in movie soundtracking probably doesn't hurt with music like this. Eales has an ability to take fairly familiar material – or very familiar in the case of chestnuts like 'Round Midnight' – and invest it with real drama. He's also good at ferreting out lost nuggets that sit well for the piano or creating striking juxtapositions that work better in reality than they look on paper; Synergy puts 'Hymn Of Ecstasy' alongside 'Funkin' At Greasy Jo's'. Not many recent pianists have taken a piece like Victor Feldman's 'A Face Like Yours' and subjected it to so thorough and respectful an examination as it gets at the top of Red Letter Days. Bill Evans might be considered an influence, but it's a subtle one. Eales has a touch that is extremely distinctive without being idiosyncratic – something about the way he lays out a phrase casually but with care – and it's a shame he isn't more widely known. All of the above can be safely recommended, but Mullen adds something to Red Letter Days, albeit a fleeting appearance, and that's still a good place to start, though a flurry of fresh releases since our last edition means that the same trio is also available, and playing beautifully, on The Homecoming, another inventive and unexpected set. Jazz Piano Legends is billed as a 'new concept' in jazz piano; it's hard to hear that – quite – but it's certainly a bold and innovative take on the tradition, 16 tracks from 'Maple Leaf Rag' and 'Jitterbug Waltz' to 'Armando's Rhumba' and 'Watermelon Man' (and with 'Night Train' miscredited to Oscar Peterson). The recent solo things are equally good. 'Boundless' on Epicentre might be a classical piece, but for its deep swing pulse. Eales has loyal fans, but it's a pity he's not more widely known.

Larry Eanet

PIANO

A Washington DC physician who began recording when he retired from medical practice.

 Piano Solos: Volumes 1 & 2 Jump 1220 / 1221 Eanet (p solo). 11/97.

(*) Sunset Stomp Arbors ARCD19220 Eanet; Ron Hockett (cl, ss, ts); Tommy Cecil (b); Harold Sumney Jr (d). 7/98.

His patients must miss him, but the therapeutic potential of these records is considerable. Eanet is a terrific technician, perhaps most obviously influenced by Teddy Wilson; his choice of material, which on the group disc includes Ellington's 'Lady Of The Lavender Mist' and the more obscure 'It Shouldn't Happen In A Dream', Strayhorn's 'Clementine', the title-piece (adapted from Grofé) and a Chopin tune, is as inventive as the playing. Hockett's a huge asset on all three of his horns, but the trio works just fine on its own and the sound is clear and strong. The solo records haven't quite the same impact, but 'Skating In Central Park' on the second of them is delightful and both will be enjoyed by swing and piano jazz fans.

Charles Earland (1941–99)

ORGAN

The Philadelphian began as a saxophonist with the Jimmy McGriff group. He switched to organ in 1963.

(*) Black Talk! Original Jazz Classics OJC CD 335 Earland; Virgil Jones (t); Houston Person (ts); Melvin Sparks (g); Idris Muhammad (d); Buddy Caldwell (perc). 12/69.

(*) Black Drops Original Jazz Classics OJC CD 1078 Earland; Virgil Jones (t); Clayton Pruden (tb); Jimmy Heath (ss, ts); Maynard Parker (g); Jimmy Turner (d). 6/70.

 Leaving This Planet Prestige PRCD-66002-2 Earland; Freddie Hubbard (t, flhn); Eddie Henderson (t); Joe Henderson (ts); Dave Hubbard (ss, ts, af); Patrick Gleeson (ky); Eddie Arkin, Greg Crockett (g); Brian Brake, Harvey Mason (d); Larry Killian (perc); Rudy Copeland (v). 12/73–1/74.

The revival of interest in 'traditional' jazz organ rekindled Earland's career. He made a key album, Black Talk!, at the very end of the '60s. Earland updated the heavier style of players such as Jack McDuff and Jimmy Smith, chose more pop-orientated material and delivered it with a percussive attack. Jones and Person are useful props, but Earland drives the music – even an unpromising piece like 'Aquarius' becomes a convincing, bluesy groove. Black Drops was the follow-up, but is nothing like as good – only 'Early Bird' and 'Buck Green' emerge with any power. Leaving This Planet, though it comes with some of the excess baggage of the era – dopey space effects, wah-wah guitars and the like – isn't far behind the debut, though, and summons a first-rate cast to hammer through a blowing session. Hubbard's own set-piece, 'Red Clay', also features.

 Front Burner Milestone M 9165 Earland; Virgil Jones (t); Bill Easley (ts); Bobby Broom (g); Rudy Williams (d); Frank Colon (perc). 6/88.

(*) Third Degree Burn Milestone MCD-9174-2 Earland; Lew Soloff (t); David 'Fathead' Newman, Grover Washington Jr (ss, ts); Bobby Broom (g); Buddy Williams (d); Ralph Dorsey (perc). 5/89.

(*) Blowing The Blues Away High Note HCD 70109 Earland; James Rotondi (t); Eric Alexander (ts); Bob De Vos (g); Greg Rockingham (d). 2/97.

 Slammin' And Jammin' Savant SCD 2008 Earland; Carlos Garnett (ts); Melvin Sparks (g); Eric Sealls (b); Bernard Purdie (d); Gary Fritz (perc). 5/97.

(*) If Only For One Night High Note HCD 7092 Earland; Najee (ss, ts, f); Melvin Sparks (g); Buddy Williams (d); Gary Fritz (perc). 10/99.

The second wave of Earland's career was largely respectable rather than eventful. The Milestone albums have a degree of freshness which a couple of subsequent efforts for Muse missed altogether. Blowing The Blues Away is a smidgeon sharper and livelier, with Rotondi and Alexander playing the faithful horn disciples, and Slammin' And Jammin', though not much more subtle than its title and cover art, has a straight-ahead simplicity that works nicely a couple of tracks at a time. His final album is very routine, and Najee (on vacation from smooth-jazz) is a weak lead voice. 'The Mighty Burner' found little new in a waning genre, but he played good repertory..

Also, in brief:

 Funk Fantastique Prestige PRCD 1130. 5/71–2/73.

Some of the material released as Charles III, but with unreleased tracks as well, which will appeal to collectors.

(*) In Concert Prestige PRCD 24267. 72, 7/74.

Compiles Live At The Lighthouse with later material from Montreux, originally released as Kharma.

 The Mighty Burner High Note HNCD7128. 2/97–10/99.

Good selection from the High Note period.

Bill Easley (born 1943)

REEDS

Studied at Juilliard, then worked with George Benson, and freelanced in theatre orchestras. By his own admission, a reluctant leader.

 First Call Milestone MCD 9186 Easley; Bill Mobley (t); George Caldwell (ky); Roland Hanna, James Williams (p); J. J. Wiggins, Dave Jackson (b); Grady Tate (d). 10/90.

 Easley Said Evidence ECD22183 Easley; Bill Mobley (t, flhn); George Coleman (ts); Donald Brown (p); Ron Carter (b); Billy Higgins (d). 9/94.

 Business Man's Bounce 18th & Vine 1055 Easley; Warren Vaché (c); Frank Wess (ts); Larry Ham (p); Hassan J.J. Shakur (b); Michael Carvin (d); Off Broadway Woodwind Ensemble. 11/06.

Easley was in his 40s before he made a record of his own, 1986's drab Wind Inventions for Sunnyside, on which he played mainly clarinet, and has never seemed in a hurry to repeat the experience. A lavish tenor treatment of 'It's All In The Game' gets First Call off to a fine start. Easley enjoys himself in the company of two quintets, Hanna and Williams changing places at the piano, their easy fluency giving the date a lighter and more knowing air than its predecessor. It's still not remarkable music, but it's persuasive enough. With Coleman on board for Easley Said, Bill restricts himself to alto, clarinet and flutes. The feel's very much that of a mildly adventurous Blue Note date of a previous decade, but it's convincing and often attractive music, and Higgins is in terrific form; Easley doesn't enjoy anonymous drummers.

Business Man's Bounce is a terrific date, but even here he's almost diffident about the front line, bringing in Wess on the hot 'Mentor', an Easley line that would have easily stood up to a one-horn treatment and well within his own range. Having Vaché in on an unexpected 'Memphis Blues' makes more sense and the woodwinds do a lovely job on 'September Song' and a unusual arrangement of 'Hi-Fly'. The wonderful Carvin keeps it all together, but hearing Bill's bluesy, almost R&B solos on 'Straighten Up And Fly Right' or the fresh swing of 'Chelsea Bridge', you wonder why you haven't heard more of and from him.

East–West Jazz Septet

GROUP

Touring supergroup organized by Birdland boss Morris Levy.

 The Birdland Stars On Tour 1956 Fresh Sound FSRCD 431 Conte Candoli, Kenny Dorham (t); Phil Woods (as); Al Cohn (ts); Hank Jones (p); John Simmons (b); Kenny Clarke (d). 56.

Manny Albam and Ernie Wilkins were retained to write some charts, which were properly rehearsed before the band set off on tour, so while the music has a relatively unfamiliar feel, it's all beautifully played in. Dorham and Candoli get along surprisingly well and the two saxophones are well blended over the rhythm section. It's not clear how much material was available from the tour as a whole, but, if this is the very best, it suggests that the concerts were more workmanlike than exciting. Candoli's and Pee Wee Marquette's introductions help establish atmosphere and the closing 'Birdland Fantasy' rounds out an attractive but inessential set.

Echoes Of Ellington Orchestra

ENSEMBLE

Imaginative and faithful arrangements of the great man's oeuvre.

 Rockin' In Ronnie's Ronnie Scott's Jazz House 50 Bruce Adams, Gavin Mallett, Jon Lee, Graham Russell (t); Bob Hunt, Mike Innes (tb); Peter Ripper (as, Cmel, cl); Colin Skinner (as); Jay Craig (as, bs, cl, bcl); Iain Dixon (ts); Ray Gelato (ts, v); Peter Walton (g, bj); John Francis (vn); Dave Olney (b); Mike Smith (d). 97.

No ghost band cachet, but the charts are the genuine article, bearing the thumbprint of Mary Lou Williams and Billy Strayhorn as well as Duke himself. Most of the themes are despatched briskly, but 'Mood Indigo', 'Take The "A" Train' and 'Diminuendo And Crescendo In Blue' are given long and detailed readings with ample space for soloing. No latter-day Hodges or Gonsalves steps forward, but there are strong spots from Adams and the underrated Gelato, and London's famous jazz spot echoes to the rafters.

Peter Ecklund (born 1945)

TRUMPET, CORNET, BUGLE

A Boston schoolteacher who turned pro in the '70s; he has also published studies of Armstrong and Beiderbecke.

(*) Ecklund At Elkhart Jazzology JCD-246 Ecklund; Dan Barrett (tb); Bobby Gordon (cl); Mark Shane (p); Marty Grosz (g, v); Greg Cohen (b); Hal Smith (d). 7/94.

(*) Strings Attached Arbors ARCD 19149 Ecklund; Scott Robinson (cl, ss, as, bs); Jay Ungar (vn); Lenny Pickett (cl, srspn); Kenny Kosek (mand); Chris Flory, Frank Vignola, Marty Grosz, Molly Mason (g); Cynthia Sayer (bj); Greg Cohen, Murray Wall (b); Richard Crooks (d). 4/92–3/95.

Though under his nominal leadership, Ecklund At Elkhart is another of those hot and good-humoured jazz parties which seem to take place when Marty Grosz and pals are on hand. Fifteen chestnuts from 1918 to 1939, some of which only the Grosz gang would dare go near these days, especially the once-frightful 'Trees', here given a peppery rendition. Barrett and Gordon have plenty of good solos and Shane is a model of light-fingered swing, but Ecklund does take marginal honours with cornet-playing of finesse and pukka good cheer.

Pieced together from six sessions over three years, Strings Attached ranges from duos to septets and is often awfully good: 'Try A Little Tenderness' is shorn of its Otis Redding bathos and turned into a lilting lament, or a tune we've waited to hear in jazz for a long time, the lovable novelty 'Wedding Of The Painted Doll'. There are winning vignettes from Robinson and Ungar, and when Ecklund plays a classic standard such as 'Too Marvelous For Words', it's simply marvellous. But titles like 'All-Purpose Cowboy Melody' give away the in-joke feel that lays the dead hand of kitsch on some of this stuff.

 Gigs – Reminiscing In Music Arbors ARCD 19230 Ecklund; Dan Block (cl, as, bs); Bobby Gordon (cl); Joel Martin, Warren Bernhardt (p); Keith Ingham (cel); Jay Ungar (vn); Peter Davis (g, bj, cl); Steve Cardenas, Madeleine Peyroux, Molly Mason, Frank Vignola (g); Guy Fischetti (pedal steel); Cynthia Sayer (bj); Howard Johnson (tba); Greg Cohen, Pete Toigo, Marty Grosz, Murray Wall, Kelly Friesen, Harry Aceto (b); Richard Crooks (d). 1/98–1/99.

Tunes and musicians who remind Ecklund of places he's played and jobs he's worked. He can hardly escape the charge of self-indulgence, but, good-natured fellow that he is, he makes this a charming set. A lot of it has the feel of folk music – from barn dances or back porches – but the players are anything but Saturday-night amateurs. If they were, they might have summoned a bit of useful hamfistedness here and there – for the most part, the music's so polite it's almost perfumed. But that's the price of being a pro. Highlight: Leroy Carr's 'Midnight Hour Blues'.

Billy Eckstine (1914–93)

VOICE, TRUMPET, VALVE TROMBONE

Though he was a competent brass-player, it was Eckstine's voice that was his fortune. He arrived in Chicago in 1938, found success as a vocalist with the Earl Hines band, and subsequently ran his own big band. He turned to small-group work in 1947 and enjoyed MOR success, though usually with a jazz flavour.

 Billy Eckstine 1944–1946 Classics 914 Eckstine; Dizzy Gillespie, Freddy Webster, Shorty McConnell, Al Killian, Gail Brockman, Boonie Hazel, Fats Navarro, Raymond Orr (t); Trummy Young, Howard Scott, Claude Jones, Jerry Valentine, Taswell Baird, Alfred 'Chippie' Outcalt, Walter Knox (tb); Budd Johnson, Jimmy Powell, John Jackson, Bill Frazier, Sonny Stitt, John Cobbs (as); Gene Ammons, Dexter Gordon, Wardell Gray, Thomas Crump, Arthur Sammons (ts); Rudy Rutherford, Leo Parker, Teddy Cypron (bs); John Malachi, Clyde Hart, Richard Ellington (p); Connie Wainwright (g); Oscar Pettiford, Tommy Potter (b); Shadow Wilson, Art Blakey (d); Sarah Vaughan (v). 4/44–10/45.

Eckstine's orchestra was a legendary incubator for young bebop talent, as a glance at the personnel shows, and it's a pity that the band's surviving performances are mostly of ballads and features for the leader. Not that one should decry anything that Eckstine himself does. His massive, smooth, sumptuous voice has its own virtues, and on the rare occasion when he handles an up-tempo piece – 'I Love The Rhythm In A Riff' – he is just as adept. There are glimmers of Gordon, Ammons, Gillespie and Navarro here, as well as Vaughan's debut on 'I'll Wait And Pray', but it's the power of the band as a whole, the lift given by the young Art Blakey and the rapt power of Eckstine's balladeering which are the merits of these tracks.

(*) Together Spotlite SPJ-CD 200 Eckstine; Gail Brockman, Boonie Hazel, Shorty McConnell, Fats Navarro (t); Taswell Baird, Alfred 'Chippie' Outcalt, Howard Scott, Jerry Valentine (tb); John Jackson, Bill Frazier (as); Gene Ammons, Budd Johnson (ts); Leo Parker (bs); John Malachi (p); Connie Wainwright (g); Tommy Potter (b); Art Blakey (d); Lena Horne, Sarah Vaughan (v). 2–3/45.

These Jubilee broadcast transcriptions offer the best evidence of the calibre of the Eckstine orchestra. Johnson, already a veteran at 35, is one of the most impressive soloists, but there are precious glimpses of Navarro and features for Horne and Vaughan, and the power of the sections comes bursting through. Great hipster announcements too by MC Bubbles Whitman!

 Billy Eckstine 1946–1947 Classics 1022 Eckstine; Boonie Hazel, Shorty McConnell, Raymond Orr, Kenny Dorham, Fats Navarro, Miles Davis, Hobart Dotson, Leonard Hawkins, King Kolax, Ray Linn (t); Alfred 'Chippie' Outcalt, Robert Scott, Jerry Valentine, Walter Knox (tb); Norris Turney, Junior Williams, Sonny Stitt, John Cobbs, Sonny Criss (as); Gene Ammons, Arthur Sammons, Josh Jackson, Wardell Gray (ts); Tate Houston, Leo Parker, Cecil Payne (bs); Richard Ellington, Jimmy Golden, Linton Garner, Warren Bracken (p); Connie Wainwright (g); Bill McMahon, Tommy Potter, Shifty Henry (b); Art Blakey, Tim Kennedy (d); strings. 1/46–4/47.

These six sessions for National are again dominated by ballads and the incomparable Eckstine voice, but a glance through the personnels shows what an abundance of jazz talent there was on hand: Blakey is always booting the band along; Navarro breaks through here and there; and the final date is a small-group session which offers Wardell Gray soloing on 'She's Got The Blues For Sale'. The original sound is still poor, although the later sessions show National improving their microphones to some extent.

 Billy Eckstine 1947 Classics 1142 Eckstine; Ray Linn (t); Gerald Valentine (tb); Sonny Criss (as); Wardell Gray (ts); Warren Bracken (p, g); Shifty Henry (b); Tim Kennedy (d); orchestras led by Sonny Burke, Hugo Winterhalter. 4/47–8/47.

By this point, Eckstine had had enough of his 'legendary' band – 'The legendary Billy Eckstine was about to starve', he later remarked. Though there's a single small-group date for National, the rest of the disc has him fronting studio bands and the 24-piece Hugo Winterhalter Orchestra. The material is all in the mould of 'Just An Old Love Of Mine' and 'On The Boulevard Of Memories', and the tempos rarely hitch up their skirts. Sumptuous singing, but don't expect more than a flicker of jazz.

(*) Verve Jazz Masters: Billy Eckstine Verve 519693-2 Eckstine; various groups. 49–58.

 Ballads, Blues And Bebop Proper Intro CD 2068 Eckstine; as various discs above. 40–53.

Eckstine's was the ripest, most luxurious voice in black music, and though his later records suggest he was fundamentally a conservative, one shouldn't forget how radical it was for a black singer to adopt such a romantic persona in the '40s. Eckstine's many records for Mercury from the '50s and '60s are once again scarce. Verve have deleted most of their editions. The Jazz Masters disc boils it down to 16 tracks and throws in a previously unissued obscurity, 'I Lost My Sugar In Salt Lake City', to tempt diehard collectors. The Proper compilation has 22 tracks covering his early years, and the sound on the later pieces is good enough, although it's pretty indifferent on the '40s music.

* No Cover No Minimum Roulette 98583-2 Eckstine; Charlie Walp (t); Bucky Manieri (tb); Charlie McLean, Buddy Balboa (saxes); Bobby Tucker (p); Buddy Grievey (d). 8/60.

A superlative example of Eckstine's art, and surely still his best record in print. Recorded at a Las Vegas lounge, the 21 tracks (12 of them previously unissued) luxuriate in Bobby Tucker's simple arrangements and bask in the grandeur of Eckstine's voice and phrasing. 'Moonlight In Vermont' has never sounded more richly expansive, 'Lush Life' is a proper ode to barfly poetry, and the swingers are delivered with an insouciant mastery of metre that creates shivers of delight.

Also, in brief:

(*) Once More With Feeling Roulette 81862. 7/59–1/60.

He's cool, he's romantic, but he knows about the blues.

 Now Singing In 12 Great Movies Verve 589307-2. 61–7/63.

The backings have started to turn vanilla, although it makes no difference to Eckstine.

Harry 'Sweets' Edison (1915–99)

TRUMPET

Born in Columbus, Ohio, he worked in territory groups before joining Count Basie in 1938, staying until 1950. After that, countless studio dates (with Sinatra and many other singers), and many all-star sessions; Sweets became the most revered of elder statesmen recognizable from the very first note.

(*) Complete 'Sweets' At The Haig Fresh Sound FSRCD 345 Edison; Georgie Auld, Benny Carter, Bob Lawson (sax); Arnold Ross, Jimmy Rowles (p); Joe Comfort (b); Buddy Rich, Alvin Stoller (d). 7/53.

A valuable recovery, since this period of Sweets's career isn't well represented. Recorded shortly after his arrival in Los Angeles, the main part of the set consists of quartet tracks made with Ross, Comfort and Stoller. 'Pennies From Heaven' and 'Tea For Two' are both solid performances and Harry's solos are mellifluous, nicely structured and of perfect length. The sound isn't bad, though Comfort's bass sounds artificially boosted. The remaining tracks were made with an octet. Rowles is superb, but Sweets rises to the occasion and sounds powerful on 'Just Blues'.

 Complete Studio Recordings Definitive DRCD11298 Edison; Sonny Criss (as); Jimmy Rowles (p); Barney Kessel (g); John Simmons (b); Buddy Rich (d). 8 & 9/55.

The first four tracks were recorded under Buddy Rich's leadership and issued on a couple of Norgran sets. They kick off with 'Sonny And Sweets', which is simply a version of 'Blues In The Closet', and conclude with a long, long 'Broadway'. The remaining material was recorded without Criss but with Kessel's elegant bop lines in September. These are attractive dates, though they hardly merit the sententious packaging and the first of them was intended as the drummer's in any case. Respectable sound, if a bit one-dimensional.

(*) Complete Midnight And At Riverside Sessions Lone Hill Jazz LHJ 10114 Edison; Charlie Shavers (t); Urbie Green (tb); Benny Carter, Willie Smith, Earl Warren (as); Coleman Hawkins, Plas Johnson (ts); Peanuts Hucko (cl); Jimmy Rowles (p); Billy Butterfield (g); Milt Hinton (b); Osie Johnson (d). 55, 56.

Broad, blowing arrangements that offer effective platforms for both Edison and the superb Shavers, who was in great form on these dates. The cast speaks for itself, but 'Blue Lou' and 'Tickle Toe' are superb and the gentle rivalry between the two trumpeters makes for some exciting exchanges. This is one of the best of Lone Hill's 'complete' sets. While there are quibbles elsewhere, the quality of music and transfer here, and the documentation, is pretty good.

 Sweets Verve/Clef 210347-7 Edison; Ben Webster (ts); Jimmy Rowles (p); Barney Kessel (g); Joe Mondragon (b); Alvin Stoller (d). 9/56.

Sweets cedes priority in the solos to the peerless Webster and an extremely fired-up Kessel on the opening cut, but his muted solo is gorgeous and full of nice flourishes, like the quote from 'Put Another Nickel In ...' The ensemble as a whole suggests a much bigger 'orchestra', thanks to Kessel's comping and Rowles's big rich chords, but it's basically a blowing date for the horns, piano and guitar. Webster is also delicious on 'Used To Be Basie' and the standard of his solos doesn't vary much through the set. He trades fours with Edison on 'Studio Call', which is another of the highlights.

 Jawbreakers Original Jazz Classics OJC 487 Edison; Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis (ts); Hugh Lawson (p); Ike Isaacs (g); Clarence Johnston (d). 4/62.

Jawbreakers comes highly recommended, a big, raw session that springs a romantic version of 'A Gal In Calico' which contrasts well with the tough funk of 'Oo-ee!'. It has a good, full sound.

* Just Friends Black & Blue 918 Edison; Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis (ts); Gerry Wiggins (p); Major Holley (b); Oliver Jackson (d). 7/75.

 Just You, Just Me Black & Blue 885 Edison; Earl Hines (p). 78.

Sweets hadn't made an album under his own name for nearly ten years, when he cut these attractive sets in France. Davis had become a regular partner and the perfect foil to Harry's softly burnished tone. 'There Is No Greater Love' is the standout track on a fairly predictable roster of material, which includes a couple of run-through originals got together for the session. Wiggins, Holley and Jackson do their business briskly and without fuss and there's a job-well-done feel to the whole proceedings. The Hines material is exactly as you would expect: jovial, steely with technique and unthreateningly enjoyable.

 Copenhagen 1976 Storyville 4004/4025 Edison; Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis (ts); John Darville (tb); Kenny Drew (p); Hugo Rasmussen (b); Svend Erik Nørregaard (d). 4/76.

Sweets was an honoured presence in Scandinavia, and generous with his time. His association with Davis produced some excellent music and this is one of the best of their shared records. Sweets's highlights are 'There Is No Greater Love' on the second volume and the gorgeous 'September Song' on the first. Davis gets his fair share of the spotlight, but Darville is largely restricted to the looser jam numbers.

 Edison's Lights Original Jazz Classics OJC 804 Edison; Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis (ts); Count Basie, Dolo Coker (p); John Heard (b); Jimmie Smith (d). 5/76.

(*) Simply Sweets Original Jazz Classics OJC 903 Edison; Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis (ts); Dolo Coker (p); Harvey Newmark (b); Jimmie Smith (d). 9/77.

Ubiquitous as an accompanist/soloist, Edison made surprisingly few records of his own, given the length of his career. Like many players of his type, he often sounds better on other people's sessions, though the presence of Basie on Edison's Lights audibly inspires him (compare the rather lacklustre tracks made on the same day with Coker). The '70s association with Lockjaw Davis produced some of the best of his work, a bright, bursting sound which can also be quite reserved and contemplative. The sound is good and full.

 Harry 'Sweets' Edison/Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis Storyville 8225 Edison; Mogens Eghjort (t); John Darville, John Larson, Bjarne Thanning (tb); Hans Leonardo Pedersen, Jens Sondergaard (as); Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis (ts); Kenny Drew (p); Hugo Rasmussen (b); Svend Erik Nørregaard (d); Richard Boone (v). 2 & 12/76.

Delightful from start to finish. A slick but responsive medium-size band provides both a solid foundation and a fast-moving engine for the two front-men. Boone plays no trombone on this occasion, but sings with his usual unabashed oddity. Lockjaw punches into his solos with great vigour and it's nice to hear the two main horns doing their good cop/bad cop routine so unselfconsciously. Nice stuff; however, be aware that Sweets appears on about half the cuts only.

(*) For My Pals Pablo 2310934 Edison; Buster Cooper (tb); Curtis Peagler (as, ts); Art Hillery (p, org); Andy Simpkins (b); Albert 'Tootie' Heath (d). 12/88.

 Swing Summit Candid CCD 79050 Edison; Buddy Tate (cl, ts); Frank Wess (ts, f); Hugh Lawson (p); Ray Drummond (b); Bobby Durham (d). 4/90.

Edison's artistic longevity was remarkable. For My Pals, with a larger than usual group, marked a welcome return to form: 'Lover Man' and 'There Is No Greater Love' are both top-notch performances and the sound is immaculate. Swing Summit contains less interesting material, but is brightly and faithfully recorded, and excellent value.

 Live At The Iridium Telarc 83425 Edison; Clark Terry (t, flhn); Frank Wess (ts, f); Junior Mance (p); Marcus McLaurine (b); Dave Gibson (d). 4/97.
His very last bow was at New York's Iridium, with a gang of old friends: nothing's said that wasn't said before, often enough, but for the pleasure of hearing these wily veterans together for a final time it's a record worth having.

Also, in brief:

 Sweets For The Sweet Collectables 5718. 7/65.
Originally on Sue, and slushily sentimental; compare For The Sweet Taste of Love on Vee-Jay.

(*) There Will Never Be Another You Nagel Heyer 83. 86.
Sharp evidence of a decline in powers on this collaboration with Henrik Meurkens (vib) and the Torsten Zwongenberger Quartet.

Zé Eduardo

DOUBLE BASS

Mingus and Haden seem the Portuguese virtuoso's main influences.

 A Jazzar No Zeca Clean Feed CF028 Eduardo; Jesús Santandreu (ts); Bruno Pedroso (d). 4/04.
 Bad Guys Clean Feed CF047 Eduardo; Jack Walrath (t); Jesús Santandreu (sax); Marc Miralta (d). 05.
Zé quotes from Miles's 'Jean-Pierre' on 'Canto Moco', a reminder that he's not just a powerful free player but is well-versed in contemporary jazz history as well. The remainder of that solo spot is reminiscent of Paul Chambers's line on 'So What', so the reference isn't a chance one. On this fine record the trio – or Unit, as they prefer – perform only songs written by the folk master José Afonso. The only exception is an improvised bass solo called 'Clean Free', which is obviously meant as a little thank-you to a label investing generously in contemporary Portuguese music. Santandreu has a well-absorbed Coltrane influence, but he can do a Cannonball line as well and indeed often sounds as though he's playing alto. Eduardo has a rounded tone that sits beautifully atop Pedroso's busy, skittish drumming. Fine stuff, with a leaven of humour.

That quality inevitably surfaces again in the co-led quartet with Walrath, who's one of the music's great jokers; so much so that hardly anyone notices the sharp intelligence lying under the surface. Bill Shoemaker's excellent liner-note points that up and wisely picks out the strong Monk influence lying under things like 'Simian Spring Song'. The Mingus tune 'Sue's Changes' is the only non-group track, and is actually the weakest thing on a set that repays close attention and frequent returns to the player.

John Edwards (born 1964)

DOUBLE BASS

Member of The Pointy Birds, B-Shops For The Poor and GOD, more recently of Bruise, but otherwise a tireless improviser on the British scene.

(*) Nisus Duets Emanem 4094 Edwards; Mark Sanders (d). 7/02.
We've counted nearly 90 discs since 1987 bearing Edwards's credit, yet this remarkably is the first on which he's identified as (co-)leader. The situation scarcely reflects his importance in British music; map the key connections of recent years and Edwards stands at the confluence of most of them. Here, with the like-minded and equally ubiquitous Sanders pattering out an urgent opening accent, Edwards declares himself with a delightfully simian bellow. His arco work, again at the beginning of 'Painting', is resonant and remarkable, while the chilly harmonics on 'Pouring' (all the titles are some such) create a bleak landscape that's far more fascinating than forbidding. Music to work at, to be sure, but the rewards are immense.

Teddy Edwards (1924–2003)

TENOR SAXOPHONE, CLARINET

Arrived in LA in 1944 after working in territory bands; active through the '50s and '60s and then making guest appearances in the '80s and '90s. South-western blues and West Coast cool both inform his sound.

(*) Steady With Teddy Cool N' Blue C & B CD 115 Edwards; Benny Bailey, Howard McGhee (t); Iggy Shevack (tb); Dexter Gordon (ts); Duke Brooks, Hampton Hawes, Michael 'Dodo' Marmarosa, Jimmy Rowles (p); Arvin Garrison (g); Red Callender, Addison Farmer, Bob Kesterson (b); Roy Porter (d). 10/46–8/48.
These are the earliest glimpses of Edwards on record, with boppers who put a lyrical spin on the familiar changes. Tracks like McGhee's 'Dilated Pupils' from the 1946 session suggest the sort of background he was working against. Though he has had his ups and downs, 'steady with Teddy' has been the watchword ever since.

(*) Teddy's Ready Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1785 Edwards; Joe Castro (p); Leroy Vinnegar (b); Billy Higgins (d). 8/60.
 Back To Avalon Contemporary CCD 14074 Edwards; Nathaniel Meeks (t); Lester Robertson (tb); Jimmy Woods (as); Modesto Brisenio (bs); Danny Horton (p); Roger Alderson (b); Lawrence Marable (d). 12/60.
Back To Avalon was an interesting attempt at arrangement for a mid-size band. The problem is that the octet doesn't generate quite the head of steam needed to overcome the blandness of these charts, and there isn't enough on the solo front, with Edwards rather subdued and preoccupied. Even the workhorse 'Good Gravy' fails to raise a cheer. Lester Koenig's recording (or the CD remastering) can't shoulder any significant blame. Teddy's Ready (also originally on Contemporary) has a timeless vigour that makes it endlessly replayable. It followed a period of ill-health – not drugs-related – and one can hear the relief and delight in the over-hasty attack on 'Scrapple From The Apple' and 'Take The "A" Train'. In later years, Edwards was reliably to be found behind the beat. Not a great deal is known nowadays about Arizonan Castro; he tends to be thought of as a fine accompanist (Anita O'Day, June Christy) who never quite made it as a straight jazz player. On this showing he's more than worthy, and the support of his two colleagues goes without saying.

* Together Again! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 424 Edwards; Howard McGhee (t); Phineas Newborn Jr (p); Ray Brown (b); Ed Thigpen (d). 5/61.
(*) Good Gravy Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 661 Edwards; Danny Horton, Phineas Newborn Jr (p); Leroy Vinnegar (b); Milton Turner (d). 8/61.

Edwards's reunion with a cleaned-up Howard McGhee in 1962 led to one of the best mainstream albums of its day. Together Again! is almost effortlessly crafted. The ultra-straight 'Misty' showcases Edwards's moody ballad approach, and there is a fine 'You Stepped Out Of A Dream'. Three months later, and without a second horn, Edwards waffles and digresses engagingly but doesn't quite get into the frame. Horton depped for Newborn for much of the three-day session; he's a bright enough lad but lacks horsepower and swing. Vinnegar is as surefire as ever.

 Heart And Soul Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 177 Edwards; Gerald Wiggins (org); Leroy Vinnegar (b); Milton Turner (d). 62.
 Nothin' But The Truth Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 813 Edwards; Walter Davis Jr (p); Phil Orlando (g); Paul Chambers (b); Billy Higgins (d); Montego Joe (perc). 12/66.
 It's All Right Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 944 Edwards; Jimmy Owens (t, flhn); Garnett Brown (tb); Cedar Walton (p); Ben Tucker (b); Lennie McBrowne (d). 5/67.
Heart And Soul is warm enough, but there's a hint that Teddy would like some company in the front line, and for all the guileful support he gets from Wig and the others, it's a bit routine in parts. The rather later Nothin' But The Truth is well-mannered, but with the exception of 'But Beautiful' and the title-track (to but no more buts than that), it's a rather average set. Even with a rhythm section of this quality, Edwards doesn't sound inclined to hurry or be infused with anything more dynamic than his usual step-up-and-play approach.

It's All Right is an unusual set in that some of the material points in the direction of Coltrane and even Ornette Coleman; though never remotely avant-garde, Teddy knew what was happening on the scene, and on 'The Cellar Dweller' and 'Mamacita Lisa' he was able to combine his usual easy, blues-inflected swing with something harder and darker.

(*) Midnight Creeper High Note HCD 7011 Edwards; Virgil Jones (t); Richard Wyands (p); Buster Williams (b); Chip White (d). 3/97.
A then-new label for Edwards – his Verve albums of the '90s have been axed – and for former Muse-man Houston Person, who produces with his usual skill, letting the music work rather than trying to sweeten it artificially. Despite a thinnish gig book at the time, there's certainly nothing wrong with either his technique or his enthusiasm. The album opens with the eponymous nocturnal wanderer, a thing of shadows with a ghostly wail. There are two other originals, 'Walkin' In The Rain', which sounds as if it might have been written for a larger group, and the medium ballad 'Sensitive'. Jones plays only on these three and 'Sunday', and the remainder of the set consists of standards, which is perhaps a pity, though the quality of playing on 'Tenderly' (the longest track) and the closing 'Almost Like Being In Love' makes up for everything. Williams is in cracking form, and along with Wyands and White he creates the kind of relaxed but positive vibe on which Edwards thrives.

 Ladies Man High Note HCD 7067 Edwards; Eddie E. J. Allen (t); Ronnie Mathews (p); Chip Jackson (b); Chip White (d). 5/00.
 Smooth Sailing High Note HCD 7088 Edwards; Richard Wyands (p); Ray Drummond (b); Chip White (d). 12/01.
Teddy pays court to ten lovely ladies, some of them – like 'Donna Lee' and 'Laura' – familiar from the canon, some – like 'Saskia' – more recent debutantes. The group could hardly be more responsive, but it is Mathews who holds proceedings together with wit, intelligence and courtly good humour. Teddy solos briefly but well, conserving his energy like an old pro. He was in failing health when the last High Note was made, but you wouldn't know it. Edwards's easy swing, generous solo development and ability to inject some gentle humour into otherwise sober performances (as he does on 'Robbin's Nest') is endlessly infectious. Wyands is a formidable accompanist and Drummond and White don't attempt to patronize the old man by keeping the pace down. Hank Mobley's 'Hank's Tune' and the Arnett Cobb title-track are among the highlights. Even at this age and even seriously ill, Teddy was able to swing a line with the best of them.

Also, in brief:

 Sunset Eyes Blue Note 948488. 8/59.
A varying personnel delivers a professional but unremarkable set.

 Out Of This World Steeplechase SCCD 1147. 12/80.
A lean time for players of Teddy's cast; this was welcome, but uneventful.

 Close Encounters High Note 7002. 99.
Houston Person plays and produces on this mostly effective two-header.

Marty Ehrlich (born 1955)

REEDS, FLUTES

Studied in Boston in the '70s with Ran Blake and others, then moved to NY in 1978, where he's a major presence.

 Emergency Peace New World NW 80409 Ehrlich; Muhal Richard Abrams (p); Abdul Wadud (clo); Lindsey Horner (b). 12/90.
Ehrlich sets himself a difficult programme here, with the contrasting resonances of Wadud and Horner making an intriguing bottom line (Abrams plays piano on only two tracks). Marty can't help but recall Julius Hemphill in duo with the cellist, and when they actually do a Hemphill tune ('The Painter'), the comparison doesn't favour him. This is the Dark Woods Ensemble, a useful image, and when the trio – Ehrlich on bass clarinet – execute the grave dance of 'Unison', they establish a real identity. Some of it, though, merely meanders.

 Sojourn Tzadik 7136 Ehrlich; Marc Ribot (g); Erik Friedlander (clo); Mark Helias (b). 2/96.
The revamped Dark Woods Ensemble lacks the saturnine power of the original line-up but has a playful energy that comes across in a version of Bob Dylan's 'Blind Willie McTell' and in the title-track. Helias is a key part of the equation, as one might expect given this group's low-toned foundations, but it is Ehrlich's soprano saxophone that dominates proceedings.

(*) Light At The Crossroads Songlines SGL 1511-2 Ehrlich; Ben Goldberg (cl, bcl); Trevor Dunn (b); Kenny Wollesen (d). 97.
The pleasures here are in the jousting between Ehrlich and Goldberg and the sneakily swinging rhythms set down by Dunn and Wollesen. On a clever piece like Wayne Horvitz's Monk inversion 'Ask Me Later', they find a humorous counterpoint which touches a comic aspect in their reeds without resorting to pastiche or clowning. Elsewhere they're irreproachably sober.

(*) The Long View Enja ENJ 9452 Ehrlich; Eddie Allen, James Zollar (t); Ray Anderson, Clark Gayton (tb); John Clark (frhn); Marcus Rojas (tba); Ned Rothenberg (as, bcl); Sam Furnace (as, f); Robert DeBellis (ss, ts, cl); H. D. Parran (ts, bcl); Andy Laster (bs, cl); Wayne Horvitz (p); Mark Feldman (vn); Ralph Farris (vla); Erik Friedlander (clo); Mark Dresser, Mark Helias (b); Pheeroan Ak Laff, Bobby Previte, Michael Sarin (d); Eddie Bobe (perc). 4/02.

The episodic structure of these six 'movements' and postlude written in response to paintings by Oliver Jackson might lead some listeners to conclude that this is a side-project. Ehrlich denies the compositions are painterly, but they are, and very agreeably so. Helias conducts some complex charts. Marty is in great form, not just as main soloist, but also as writer; in fact it is remarkable, given the talent assembled in the orchestra, that he should have shouldered so much playing responsibility. Every exposure to this fine album yields new insights.

 Line On Love Palmetto 2095 Ehrlich; Craig Taborn (p, ky); Michael Formanek (b); Billy Drummond (d). 12/02, 1/03.

The writing is mostly dull and on alto saxophone Ehrlich hasn't quite the personality he shows on soprano or bass clarinet. However, the playing is consistently strong and there are fiery exchanges with the mercurial Taborn. Bassist and drummer are well-versed and deliver responsive performances.

* News On The Rail Palmetto 2113 Ehrlich; James Zollar (t); Howard Johnson (tba); James Weidman (mca); Greg Cohen (b); Allison Miller (d). 11/04.

Right from the opening this sextet crackles along, its relatively unusual instrumentation no obstacle to some vivid group work and improvisation. Ehrlich plays stunning alto on 'Hear You Say', but elsewhere lets his clarinet interweave with the unique ensemble effects created by Zollar, Johnson and Weidman. Miller keeps everything tight but not regimented and Cohen, who plays a sweeping intro to the title-track, is in excellent supportive form.

(*) Spark Palmetto 21292 Ehrlich; Myra Melford (p). 9/07.

Arguably the centrepiece to this richly nuanced duo date is a threnody to the late Leroy Jenkins. Some of this music sounds as if it might come out of the older avant-garde graced by the violinist and his contemporaries: it's bold, experimental, politically engaged (Iraq, rather than Vietnam) and consistently open to ideas and extra-musical inspirations (one piece is developed from poems by Muhammad Mahdi al-Jawahiri). 'Hymn' is played at beginning and end, the latter position usually occupied on gigs by the Robin Holcomb piece 'Up Do', which sits here plumb centre, arguably a better location for its wildness. A terrific record from both players.

Also, in brief:

 Just Before The Dawn New World/CounterCurrents 80474. 94.

The Dark Woods Ensemble, a little hung up on the group sound.

(*) Live Wood Music & Arts 4986 2CD. 3 & 4/96.

An ambitious programme from the Dark Woods Ensemble that perhaps doesn't quite do enough to justify its length.

 Song Enja 9396. 10/99.

Little of the Enja output survives. Even with Ray Anderson (tb) and some Dylan material, this one is oddly conventional.

(*) Malinke's Dance Omnitone 12003. 12/99.

Good, strong Knitting Factory date. Bobby Previte (d) stars.

Thore Ehrling (born 1912)

TRUMPET, VOCAL

Born in Stockholm. He played in Frank Vernon's dance band from 1930, played with Benny Carter, then formed his own small group in 1938 and developed it into a successful big band, which endured until 1957. He also worked extensively in music publishing.

 Jazz Highlights Dragon DRCD 236 Ehrling; Gösta Redlig , Gösta Pettersson , Gösta Törner , Rune Ander, Yngve Nilsson, Olle Jacobsson, Arnold Johansson, Putte Björn , John Linder, Nisse Skoog (t); George Vernon, Sverre Oredson, Sven Hedberg, Andreas Skjold (tb); Ove Rönn , Curt Blomqvist, Erik Andersson, John Björling , Carl-Henrik Norin, Casper Hjukström , Stig Gabrielsson, Gunnar Lundén-Welden , Arne Domnérus , Harry Arnold, Fritz Fust, Rolf Londell, Georg Björklund , Mats Borgström (reeds); Stig Holm, Mats Olsson (p); Folke Eriksberg, Sven Stiberg (g); Thore Jederby, Hasse Tellemar (b); Anders Soldén , Gösta Hedén , Uffe Baadh, Henry Wallin, Bertil Frylmark (d). 1/39–12/55.

(*) Swedish Swing 1945–1947 Ancha ANC 9503-2 Similar to above. 3/45–7/47.

A sizeable slice of Swedish jazz history is packed onto the 26-track Dragon CD, decently remastered from some rare originals. Although his band made as many concessions to popular taste as did Basie and Ellington, they made enough good jazz-directed records to give this retrospective more than passing interest. Among the early tracks, a very swinging 'Roses Of Picardy' and a Dorsey-like 'Meditation' are impressive. Carl-Henrik Norin's arrival brought his interesting tunes to the book, including the Ellingtonian 'Mississippi Mood'; but the later tracks suggest that Ehrling never got much further than the solidly competitive swing style that was established by the early '40s. Soloists are more functional than inspiring, although Ove Rönn's Hodges-like alto is always worth catching, as is Norin, and Domnérus appears on one track. The Ancha disc is for more dedicated tastes, since, in rather crackly sound, it covers a couple of broadcasts from the mid-'40s. The first is all-Ellington, done with surprising panache, though the arrangements seem slavish. The second is by a nonet, with Björling's clarinet taking a significant role and a couple of kitsch items betraying the music's dance hall origins.

Dietrich Eichmann

PIANO, KEYBOARDS

The German's work confidently straddles free jazz and contemporary composition styles. A member of The Straight Trio and founder of the Oaksmus label and concert series.

 The Temperature Dropped Again Leo CDLR 390 Eichmann; Jeff Arnal (perc). 12/02.

(*) The Hot Days Leo CDLR 486 Eichmann; Chris Heenan (as, cbcl); Gunnar Brandt-Sigursson (hearing aid, elec, v); Alexander Frangenheim, Christian Weber (b); Michael Griener (d, perc). 7/07.

For a time in the '80s, Eichmann concentrated entirely on free improvisation. This led him to consider more formal compositional options under the tutelage of Wolfgang Rihm and this in turn has led him back to a more considered form of improvisation. The duo with Arnal, who has worked extensively with Charles Gayle, consists of two long suites and an extended homage to Benno Trautmann. The second of the suites is the more interesting, consisting of mostly small pieces, woven together with a logic so evanescent as to resist verbalization. Eichmann's compositional concerns are always in view, but Arnal tempers that with some edgy, occasionally unhinged percussion work.

The ensemble disc features a rare improvisation outing for the hearing aid, an unexpectedly flexible instrument whose feedback ratios can be controlled with surprising precision. Eichmann effectively adds harpsichord and bombarde (a Breton instrument that hybridizes the oboe and a conical-bored pipe) to his armoury. The twin basses and Heenan's contrabass clarinet guarantee that the other end of the tonal spectrum is dealt with very fully. As Johan Bossers points out in his liner-note, all but one of the instruments featured here are traditional and mostly played without electronic enhancement. All the more remarkable, then, that Eichmann and his ensemble should get such varied and freshly original sounds out of them.

Also, in brief:

 The First Concert Oaksmus omDVD01. 10/04.
Eichmann and percussionist Ramón López in concert at the Cité Internationale des Arts, Paris. A less sympathetic association than with Arnal, but the visuals are good.

Bruce Eisenbeil (born 1963)

GUITAR

The subtle Chicagoan is a 'pure' technician in the Derek Bailey mould, with hints of Sonny Sharrock.

 Nine Wings CIMP 144 Eisenbeil; Rob Brown (as); Lou Grassi (d). 3/97.
(*) Mural CIMP 194 Eisenbeil; J. Brunka (b); Ryan Sawyer (d). 2/99.
 Opium CIMP 241 Eisenbeil; David Taylor (btb); Michael Attias (as, bsx); Jay Rosen (d). 2/01.
Eisenbeil plays unadorned electric guitar, without effects or accoutrements, in a simple open tone that's bent into avant-garde service. With the peripatetic Brown, something of a free-playing veteran by now, and the tinkering Grassi, he leads the trio through eight compositions (and a brief improv) that break down structure into bloody three-way confrontations. 'Hermitage Of Xzeng Xzu' and 'Mercury' are especially all out. Brown's experience comes to the fore and he makes light of his exposed position, but Eisenbeil is arguably the more interesting performer since he tries to reconcile his melodicism with playing out.

The CIMP no-tricks sound isn't much help, but it has been tweaked for the second album, which is an arresting panel of soundscapes, shaped round two long tracks, 'Caesar' and 'Woman With A Handful Of Rain'. Sawyer's fast-decay cymbal sound is a key element, but Eisenbeil himself has extended his range of articulations, and he creates a new vocabulary of 'natural' effects which broadens and deepens the musical discourse considerably.

The downright peculiar instrumentation on the third is matched by the often bizarre music-making. Eisenbeil's deliberately stringy sound, twanging between the mooing low notes of Attias's bass sax and Taylor's bass trombone, will nonplus many listeners. Here and there it's almost akin to Eddie Lang and Adrian Rollini meeting in a nightmare. Refreshing in small doses, but don't look for meaning.

Mark Eisenman

PIANO

NY-born, but based in Toronto since 1972.

 Sweet And Lovely Cornerstone 125 Eisenman; Pat Collins (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 1/30.
The legendary Cobb was in Toronto for a jazz educators' conference when Eisenman persuaded him to record this elegantly swinging set. The pianist includes three attractive originals, 'Gilt Be All Thy Stars', 'Sosumi' and 'Bird's Assurance', but for the most part it's a standards programme, culminating in a relaxed and assured reading of 'Someday My Prince Will Come'. Hard to pin down Eisenman's influences on the strength of this one date, but he's certainly listened to Bill Evans and others of that period. It's a dateless style, though, and technically impeccable.

Harris Eisenstadt (born 1975)

DRUMS, PERCUSSION

The Toronto-born Eisenstadt, he has worked with Sam Rivers, Paul Rutherford, Wadada Leo Smith and others. He is also involved in multi-media, theatrical and educational projects and is leader of the Ahimsa ('non-violence') Orchestra.

* Fight Or Flight Newsonic 32 Eisenstadt; Bruce Fowler (tb); Mark Weaver (tba); Ellen Burr (f); David Philipson (bansuri f); Brad Dutz (mar, vib, crotales); Bill Casale (b). 6/02.
Eisenstadt's second release as leader almost perfectly balances new-music ensemble composition with an impressive level of improvisational integrity. The harmonic development of the opening section of 'Rise' is textbook accurate, but there is a freedom to the improvised sections and Fowler's mournful statement over the leader's delicate cymbal figures is impeccably crafted. The flutes are subtly modulated with Dutz's superb marimba work. Together, they don't so much subvert the familiar horns-and-piano idiom of a jazz group as extend that language in a new and attractively alien way.

'People Are Gonna Do What They're Gonna Do' is almost a blues march, a dark but never rancorous journey through a troubled landscape with individual testimonies along the way. The closing 'Trouble Here, Fly There' begins in similar vein but then breaks out into a more driven line. Eisenstadt brilliantly balances the polarities of the work as a whole – low and high, fast and slow, metrical and free, abstract and almost programmatic – and delivers a set that though short by contemporary standards seems absolutely crammed with material.

Fellow percussionist Gerry Hemingway contributes a short but illuminating liner-note, a model of its kind.

 Ahimsa Orchestra Nine Winds NWCD0237 Eisenstadt; Liz Allbee, Kris Tiner (t); George McMullen, Toyoji Tomita (tb); Mark Weaver (tba); Steve Adams, Ellen Burr (f); Kyle Bruckmann (ob); Sara Schoenbeck (bsn); Phillip Greenlief (cl); Vinny Golia (bcl); David Brandt (vib); Bill Horvitz, Noah Phillips (g); Jessica Catron (clo); George Cremaschi (b); Alex Cline (perc); Omid Zoufonoun (cond). 3/04, 1/05.
'Ahimsa' is the Gandhian concept of non-violence, which seems to be very important to Eisenstadt, though some might say that in this project he takes slightly too far its more profound meaning of avoiding hurt and offence of any sort. Like his small-group work, this larger ensemble is deployed with remarkable quietness and subtlety, though the leader does feature himself as a percussionist, which rarely happens with the small groups.

Again, there is a nice balance between structured composition and improvisation. The instrumentation – with flute, clarinet and bassoon, and oboe on the first four tracks – has a 'classical' resonance, though the growling guitars and Eisenstadt's typically light and skittering percussion immediately cancel that impression.

There are two ensembles involved here, both recorded live, but in Berkeley and LA respectively and just under a year apart. The first three tracks comprise 'Non-Violence', a thoughtful, quietly logical composition that lacks dramatic action, though there are some strident brass moments in the central movement and at the beginning of the finale.

'Relief' opens with Eisenstadt alone, some three minutes of unaccompanied playing that is as good a measure of his skills as any on record. Even after other instruments begin to emerge out of the quiet, he is still the main voice. The remainder of the movement is bitty and indistinct and the suite only starts to develop coherence with the beginning of the second of four sections. Part three is the most jazz-like, though the finale also has an underlying thematic development which picks up on harmonic ideas from earlier.

(*) Jalolu CIMP 300 Eisenstadt; Roy Campbell (t, pocket t, flhn); Paul Smoker (t); Taylor Ho Bynum (c). 10/03.

A fascinating concept and line-up, and the music delivers as strongly as it promises. The project seems to have been inspired by Eisenstadt's late-2002 visit to the Gambia, where he worked and studied with kora-player Foday Musa Suso; 'jalolu' is Mandinka for 'musicians'. Drummers have long been attracted to the highly specific and local percussion traditions of West Africa. Almost uniquely, Eisenstadt seems to have used the experience to reinforce his own thinking rather than simply borrow exotic patterns and time-signatures. The opening piece, 'Boogie On Lenjeno', does, however, use traditional elements, albeit with playful intent. 'Mwindo' sees the horns hocketing back and forth across the drum metre. 'Jumpin In' is dedicated to Eric Dolphy and some ideas the great saxophonist gave to Yusef Lateef in 1961. 'Ahimsa #2' returns to a long-standing concern and series of pieces. Somewhat unusually for CIMP, there are alternate takes of 'Seruba' and 'Jumpin In'; they're by no means makeweights but further examples of a remarkable group at the peak of its powers; only the improvised 'Go' (dedicated to Adam Rudolph) doesn't entirely convince.

* The Soul And Gone 482 Music 1042 Eisenstadt; Jeb Bishop (tb); Jason Mears (as, cl); Jason Adasiewicz (vib); Jeff Parker (g); Jason Roebke (b). 10/04.

Eisenstadt's finest recording to date is a delicately swinging, utterly melodic combo record. Eisenstadt has an excellent time-sense, as he demonstrates on the opening 'The Evidence Of Absence Is Not Necessarily The Absence Of Evidence', but elsewhere he prefers to use his kit melodically rather than to generate a groove. Tortoise guitarist Parker is probably the best-known member of the group and delivers a tight, logical solo on the same cut. Bishop has worked in Ken Vandermark's group and brings a similar authority to this, particularly on the long 'Posauno Y Schlagwerk: Between A Rock'.

'Three Breaths' is more abstract, while 'Portrait Of Holden Caulfield' conveys a callow innocence with very real edge. 'Seed' is a dedication to 'faith minimalist' composer Henryk Górecki, opening in near-silence and developing with almost geological slowness thereafter. Again, Adasiewicz is a key element, bending his notes around Mears's lovely clarinet, soft trombone, bass and guitar sounds. Eisenstadt is almost entirely out of the picture until the halfway point. He's back with a vengeance on the closing 'And A Hard Place', with the familiar pattering, almost song-like approach that builds in pace and intensity towards a climax that unexpectedly recalls Roswell Rudd's work with Archie Shepp. A fine record on its own terms.

Either/Orchestra

GROUP

Led by Russ Gershon and based in and around Massachusetts, this contemporary ensemble plays eclectic modern material.

 Dial E Accurate AC-2222 Tom Halter, Dave Ballou, Bob Sealy, Dan Drexter (t); Russell Jewell, Josh Roseman (tb); Rob Rawlings, Bob Sinfonia (as); Russ Gershon (ts); Steve Norton (bs); Kenny Freundlich (ky); John Dirac (g); Mike Rivard (b); Jerome Deupree (d). 7/86.

(*) Radium Accurate AC-3232 Tom Halter, John Carlson (t, flhn); Russell Jewell, Curtis Hasselbring (tb); Rob Rawlings (as); Russ Gershon (ss, ts); Charlie Kohlhase (bs); Kenny Freundlich (ky); John Dirac (g); Mike Rivard (b); Jerome Deupree (d). 8/87–1/88.

(*) The Half-Life Of Desire Accurate AC-3242 As above, except add Douglas Yates (ss, as); Dave Finucane (bcl); John Medeski (ky); Mark Sandman (g, v). 89.

* The Calculus Of Pleasure Accurate AC-3252 As above, except omit Freundlich, Dirac, Rivard, Deupree, Finucane, Sandman; add Bob Nieske (b); Matt Wilson (d). 4–6/90.

* The Brunt Accurate AC-3262 As above, except omit Hasselbring, Yates, Medeski, Nieske; add Dan Fox (tb); Andrew D'Angelo (as, bcl, cl); Chris Taylor (ky); John Turner (b). 5/93.

A modest-sized big band full of outsize talents. Gershon has squeezed these CDs out of the impossible restrictions that modern budgets have set for this kind of band. It's a heroic accomplishment that the group is as swinging, exciting and cheerfully cutting-edge as it is. All the first three records are a rag-bag of cover versions, bristling originals and complexities. Dial E is comparatively rough-and-ready compared with the finesse of the later discs, though it's still exciting and unpredictable. Rollins's 'Doxy' becomes an outlandish shuffle; they have the chutzpah to take apart 'Brilliant Corners'; and the extravagantly extended '17 December' is an early manifesto of what the band could do. Radium is live and runs the gamut from a tragedian's version of 'Willow Weep For Me' to a madcap distillation of 'Nutty' and 'Ode To Billie Joe', with Roscoe Mitchell's 'Odwallah' as a bonus. The Half-Life Of Desire expands the palette with Medeski's arrival; this brilliant keyboardist has a sure grasp of which electronics will and which won't work in a neo-trad context, and on Gershon's 'Strange Meridian' he blends acoustic and electric parts with perfect aplomb. Rock and 'world' musics get only a modest look-in in this group's work; its material comes largely from within jazz language itself. Yet it still manages to cover the King Crimson metal blow-out 'Red' and tamper with Miles Davis's 'Circle In The Round' on the same record.

The Calculus Of Pleasure, part live and part studio, is the best to date. There is an astonishing arrangement of Horace Silver's 'Ecaroh', previously a piano trio tune, and a sour, lavish update of Benny Golson's 'Whisper Not' which is an object lesson in renewing stale jazz repertory. Julius Hemphill's 'The Hard Blues' also comes in for a grandly decadent interpretation, with brass and reeds fattening up the harmonies. This leaves five originals from within the band's own ranks. Mention should also be made of soloists such as Medeski, Hasselbring, Yates and Kohlhase.

There is no falling off in quality with The Brunt. Though both Hasselbring and Medeski have departed, the team remains terrifically strong as a playing unit. The complexities of 'Notes On A Cliff' and the swaggering 'Permit Blues' are shrugged off, and the title-piece, a bequest by Hasselbring, is a feast of overlapping ideas. One of their most dramatic repertory adventures takes place in Mal Waldron's 'Hard Talk', and only the Ellington piece, 'Blues For New Orleans', disappoints. The charming retread of Bob Dylan's 'Lay Lady Lay' is a fitting finale.

 More Beautiful Than Death Accurate AC-3282 Tom Halter, Colin Fisher (t, flhn); Joel Yennior (tb); Jaleel Shaw, Miguel Zenon (as); Russ Gershon (ss, ts); Charlie Kohlhase (bs); Dan Kaufman (ky); Rick McLaughlin, Atemu Aton (b); Harvey Wirht (d); Vicente Lebron (perc). 5/98–8/99.

 Neo-Modernism Accurate AC-3284 As above, except omit Zenon, Kaufman, Shaw; add Jeremy Udden (as); Gregory Burk (p, ky). 6/01.

 Afro-Cubism Accurate AC-3283 As above, except omit Aton. 6/01.

More Beautiful Than Death is probably their best and worst album. Gershon wrote all this material, bar the three tracks which comprise 'Ethiopian Suite', and it's a more private, more melancholy Either/Orchestra which results. 'Number Three' and the title-track are dense, meditative pieces. Some of the fun seems to have gone out of the band, yet it has taken on a more singular collective cast. Or maybe it's Gershon asserting himself. Either way, the soloists make less impression and the ensembles sound more important. Admirers of the earlier records may be unsure whether to feel good or bad.

Neo-Modernism is very similar in mood; Gershon's material is mostly dark and speculative. The most obvious change is the plodding accompaniment provided by Gregory Burk, who stands in for the mercurial Kaufman and sounds deliberate on the opening 'Los Olivados'. Given that Wirht keeps the metre strong but open, he could have afforded to relax things a bit. 'Baby Invents Monk' is more skittish, and to that extent closer to the original Kenton-with-humour concept. Here, Burk redeems himself amply with a jaggy, Monk-inspired solo that swings in its own unexpected way. On 'The Modernist', the horns march in ragged procession, but a solitary Nieske tune is the best thing on the record, a setting for Gershon's wailing soprano solo.

Afro-Cubism might sound like the Orchestra on Caribbean vacation, but it isn't so. As ever, Gershon seeks out darker modes and timbres and the thick sound of 'Blue Attitude' is typical of the way the leader subverts his brief and sets his band a challenge. 'Soul Song' mixes up the sounds and styles of three different decades, but doesn't sustain nine minutes. A Beatles obscurity, 'Don't Bother Me', turns up at the end, wedded to 'No Me Molesta'.

Also, in brief:

(*) Across The Omniverse Accurate AC-3272 2CD. 7/86–9/95.
Two packed discs of out-takes from the first five albums.

 Ethiopiques: Volume 20 – Live In Addis Buda Musique 860121. 1/04.
A performance sponsored by the Alliance Ethio-Française. Might be hard to find, but the Orchestra's take on local material is fascinating.

Mats Eklöf

BARITONE SAXOPHONE, CLARINET

Swedish contemporary with a satirical bent, formerly in Position Alpha.

 Get Stupid Dragon DRCD 317 Eklöf; Staffan Svensson (t); Niclas Rydh (tb); Thomas Jäderlund (ss, as, bcl); Thomas Gustafson (ts, ss); Jonny Axelsson (vib, mar, perc); Johannes Lundberg (b); Göran Kron (d). 5/97.
Anything but stupid. Eklöf's sleeve-note betrays a peculiar sense of humour, and this extravagant record, 15 compositions sewn together in a virtually unbroken whole, is deadpan-funny in a way that only Swedish jazz can be; see 'The Swedish Way' at the end. Impenetrable harmonies, solos that bounce between brooding and hilarious, off-colour carnival melodies and the strange use of Axelsson's vibes as a sort of narrative-thread make this as individual as anything in this Guide. Eklöf stakes his place in a great tradition of European mavericks.

Roy Eldridge (1911–88)

TRUMPET, VOCAL, PIANO

The marker between swing trumpet and the bebop revolution. The archetypal high-note artist, 'Little Jazz' became an all too enthusiastic participant in cutting contests, sometimes neglecting expression in favour of excitement and competition. And yet he remains perhaps the greatest brass-player of the generation after Louis Armstrong.

(*) The Big Sound Of Little Jazz Topaz TPZ 1021 Eldridge; Al Beck, Bill Coleman, Torg Halten, Mickey Mangano, Norman Murphy, Joe Thomas, Dick Vance, Graham Young (t); Fernando Arbello, Joe Conigliaro, Ed Cuffee, John Grassi, Jay Kelliher, Babe Wagner, Dicky Wells (tb); Buster Bailey, Benny Goodman, Cecil Scott (cl); Omer Simeon (cl, as, bs); Russell Procope (cl, as); Sam Musiker (cl, ts); Scoops Carey, Benny Carter, Joe Eldridge, Ben Feman, Andrew Gardner, Hilton Jefferson, Howard Johnson, Rex Kittig, Jimmy Migliore, Clint Neagley, Mascagni Ruffo (as); Tom Archia, Walter Bates, Chu Berry, Don Brassfield, Coleman Hawkins, Teddy Hill, Ike Quebec, Ben Webster, Elmer Williams, Dave Young (ts); Sam Allen, Teddy Cole, Rozelle Gayle, Clyde Hart, Horace Henderson, Bob Kitsis, Joe Springer, Jess Stacy, Teddy Wilson (p); Bernard Addison, Danny Barker, Ray Biondi, John Collins, Bob Lessey, Lawrence Lucie, Allan Reuss, John Smith (g); Biddy Bastien, Israel Crosby, Richard Fulbright, John Kirby, Ed Mihelich, Truck Parham, Artie Shapiro, Ted Sturgis (b); Bill Beason, Big Sid Catlett, Cozy Cole, Gene Krupa, Zutty Singleton, Harold 'Doc' West (d). Mildred Bailey, Billie Holliday (v). 2/35–11/43.

 Roy Eldridge, 1935–1940 Classics 766 Similar to above. 35–40.
Eldridge moved to New York in 1934 and was quickly recognized as a new star. The introductory bars of '(Lookie, Lookie, Lookie) Here Comes Cookie', first item on the valuable Topaz compilation, offer a glimpse of the excitement the youngster must have caused. His ability to displace accents and play questionable intervals with perfect confidence and logic is immediately evident. More than just a high-note man, Eldridge combined rhythmic intuition with an ability to play intensely exciting music in the middle and lower register. His solo on 'Blue Lou' – recorded with the Fletcher Henderson band in March 1936 – is a perfect case in point. He does the same kind of thing with the Teddy Wilson band on 'Blues In C Sharp Minor', fitting his improvisation perfectly to the moody key; Chu Berry's follow-up and Israel Crosby's tensely throbbing bass complete a masterful performance. At the other end of the emotional spectrum, there are the starburst top Cs (and beyond) of 'Heckler's Hop', anchored on Zutty Singleton's tight drumming. The vocal tracks with Mildred Bailey are often quite appealing and show how responsive an accompanist Eldridge was, again able to play quietly and in contralto range when called upon. A solitary Billie Holiday track – 'Falling In Love Again' – gives only a flavour of that association.

Both of these cover pretty much the same material. As the massed personnels will again suggest, it selects from the broadest range of bands and sessions, starting with Teddy Hill, taking in Krupa, Henderson, the Little Jazz Ensemble with Chu, the Chocolate Dandies with Carter, and Teddy Wilson. The sound isn't fantastic on either.

[illegible]

* Heckler's Hop

Hep CD 1030 Similar to above, except add Prince Robinson, Franz Jackson (ts); Panama Francis (d); Mildred Bailey, Helen Ward, Gladys Palmer, Laurel Watson (v). 36–39.

Hep offers a high-quality transfer that renders the music with clarity. Though it covers a shorter chronological span and puts undue emphasis on less than startling singers, its immediacy and presence (check out the end of 'After You've Gone') make it the item of choice. Eldridge's work has been put at something of a discount in recent years. These, though, are essential modern jazz documents.

(*) Roy Eldridge, 1943–1944 Classics 920 Eldridge; Thomas Aiken, Emmett Berry, John 'Bugs' Hamilton, Cookie Mason, Joe Thomas, Clarence Wheeler (t); Ted Kelly, Jack Teagarden, Andrew Williams, George Wilson (tb); Barney Bigard (cl); Joe Eldridge, Andrew Gardner, Sam Lee (as); Tom Archia, Franz Jackson, Ike Quebec, Hal Singer (ts); Dave McRae (bs); Ted Brannon, Rozelle Gayle, Johnny Guarnieri, Art Tatum (p); Napoleon Allen, Al Casey (g); Lionel Hampton (vib); Israel Crosby, Oscar Pettiford, Ted Sturgis, Billy Taylor (b); Big Sid Catlett, Cozy Cole, Harold 'Doc' West (d). 11/43–10/44.

After leaving Gene Krupa, Eldridge recorded some sides for Brunswick in the late autumn of 1943. Later he was pitched into the free-for-all atmosphere of the jam sessions for V-Disc which prefigured the Jazz At The Philharmonic summits. An Esquire jam at the Metropolitan Opera House yielded 'Tea For Two' with Jack Teagarden, Barney Bigard, Hamp and Oscar Pettiford, the beginning of a sequence of loose jams which pressurized Eldridge into stratospheric high-note-playing at the expense of the delicacy he amply demonstrates on the earlier 'Stardust'. Early 1944 saw the Little Jazz Trumpet Ensemble with Thomas and Berry recording four sides for Keynote, of which 'I Want To Be Happy' and 'St Louis Blues' illustrate much the same tendency. Eldridge's harmonic brilliance and absolutely assured technique mean that these, like later discs, are of the highest quality; but one does wonder whether his talents were best deployed in this very limited way. A later session for Decca has him giving a vocal rendition of 'St Louis Blues' at the front of a big, well-drilled orchestra. By the end of the war, Little Jazz had cornered the market in a certain style of trumpet-playing. If Dizzy Gillespie was more fashionable and seemingly more in touch with cutting-edge developments, Eldridge remained vital and persuasive.

 Roy Eldridge, 1945–1947 Classics 983 Eldridge; Henry Clay, Andy Ferretti, Bill Graham, Thomas 'Sleepy' Grider, Marion Hazel, Elton Hill, Yank Lawson, Sylvester Lewis, Jimmy Maxwell, Dave Page, Jim Thomas, Elmon Wright (t); Nat Atkins, Will Bradley, Mort Bulman, Richard Dunlap, Charlie Greenlea, John McConnell, Hal Matthews, Fred Ohms, Al Riding, Fred Robinson, George Robinson, Ward Silloway, Sandy Watson (tb); Ray Ekstrand, Mike Doty, Joe Eldridge, Chris Johnson, Porter Kilbert, Sahib Shihab (as); Ernie Caceres (cl); Tom Archia, Charles Bowen, Nick Caiazza, Al Green, George Lawson, Walt Lockhart, Flip Phillips, Harold Webster (ts); Cecil Payne, Don Purvance, Hank Ross, Al Townsend (bs); Dave Bowman, Mike Coluchio, Buster Harding, Duke Jordan, Billy Roland (p); Napoleon Allen, Mike Bryan, Al Casey, Luke Fowler, Allan Hanlon (g); Trigger Alpert, Louis Carrington, Carl Pruitt, Rodney Richardson, Eddie Safranski, Ted Sturgis (b); Lee Abrams, Cozy Cole, Earl Phillips, Specs Powell, Melvin Saunders (d). 3/45–5/47.

Roy had worked with Artie Shaw in the last two years of the war, before going out with his own small groups again. The third Classics volume brings together the big-band sides he made for Decca, Coral and Vox, and three fascinating V-Discs cut just after the war; the first of them, 'Roy Meets Horn', features a spoken introduction by Eddie 'Rochester' Anderson. The two early Deccas catch Eldridge at opposite extremes, buoyantly walking the high wire on 'Little Jazz Boogie' and doing tough'n'tender on 'Embraceable You', two superb arrangements by Buster Harding. The 1946 dates are evenly spaced through the year and find Roy punching out terse, evocative choruses with a minimum of fuss. His playing on these sides is almost always more satisfying than any of his Jazz At The Philharmonic spots. Of the later tracks 'Lover Come To Me' from September is an excellent example of his signature control of dynamics. 'Tippin' Out' and 'Yard Dog' from the May session are marred by an odd imbalance between soloist and a distant ensemble. The WNEW Saturday Night Swing Session with fellow JATP stalwart Flip Phillips includes two tracks on which Eldridge clearly doesn't play, unusual practice for Classics. There's also still too much distortion at the top end on these reissues.

 Wild Driver /  Roy Eldridge, 1950–1951 Ocium OCM 0020 / Classics 1259 Eldridge; Zoot Sims, Buddy Tate (ts); Teddy Brannon, Dick Hyman, Gerry Wiggins (p); Oscar Peterson (org); Barney Kessel (g); Clyde Lombardi (g); Ray Brown, Pierre Michelot (b); Kenny Clarke, J. C. Heard, Ed Shaughnessy, Charlie Smith (d); Anita Love (v); strings. 50–51.

 Roy Eldridge, 1951 Classics 1311 Eldridge; Lennart Sundevall (t); Ove Lind (cl); Don Byas, Carl-Henrik Norin, Buddy Tate (ts); Claude Bolling, Teddy Brannon (p); Charles Norman (p, hpd); Rolf Berg, Clyde Lombardi (g); Gunnar Almstedt, Guy de Fatto, Thore Jederby (b); Anders Burman, Armand Molinetti, Charlie Smith (d); strings. 1, 3, 8, 12/51.

Eldridge came to Europe with Benny Goodman's sextet in 1950 and spent a productive year away from jazz politics. There is considerable overlap between these records, but they find him in bright and jovial form, and certainly less combative than back home. The earliest cuts on the Ocium set (also available on Classics) were made in Paris with Zoot Sims and vocalist Anita Love. They're slight enough, though 'The Man I Love' is delightful. Love's singing isn't epochal, but she's a foil to Roy's more lascivious delivery, heard to best effect on the two sides of 'Saturday Night Fish Fry' from January 1951 that open the Classics set. The Ocium continues with a lovely quartet session recorded less than a week after the Sims encounter. 'Wild Driver' and 'Someone To Watch Over Me' are superb, balancing lyricism with power. Gerry Wiggins accompanies sagely and Michelot and Clarke had a telepathic rapport.

Much of the remaining material also features on the Classics set. Compiler Tomas Gonzalez omits 'I See Everybody's Baby' from the August 1951 Verve session, recorded with strings back in New York when Roy was taken up by kingmaker Norman Granz. These were plush surroundings for the trumpeter and he makes the most of them with a big ripe sound and some lovely, unhurried phrasing on his own 'I Remember Harlem'.

The tracks cut in Stockholm for Metronome at the start of the year are workmanlike. Roy's used more as a vocalist than trumpeter and apart from some nice breaks on 'Hoppin' John' the session of 29 January with clarinet and harpsichord in the group is pretty strange. There are also four cuts from a Vogue session made in Paris in March 1951 with Don Byas and Claude Bolling, and two delightful duets with Bolling on 'Wild Man Blues' and 'Fireworks'. Some nice things here, but nothing of the quality that shines through the rest of that busy year, like the August date with Buddy Tate. Too much singing, not enough horn.

The Ocium is probably the best buy and what may clinch it for most purchasers is the inclusion of four tracks for Verve from December 1952 which pitch Roy in with Oscar Peterson on organ, with Barney Kessel, Ray Brown and J. C. Heard. 'Rockin' Chair' and 'Little Jazz' are possibly the best things on any disc.

(*) Roy And Diz Verve 521647-2 Eldridge; Dizzy Gillespie (t, v); Oscar Peterson (p); Herb Ellis (g); Ray Brown (b); Louie Bellson (d). 10/54.

A little friendly sparring, with just enough edge to get the juices flowing. Alongside his own biggest influence, Dizzy sounds comfortable and in good humour. On 'Pretty Eyed Baby' they take turns at accompanying the other's scat chorus, but the gloves are off for 'Limehouse Blues', where they try to cut one another like a pair of teenagers. Though thoroughly bested, Gillespie gets off a sarky quote from Eldridge's 'Heckler's Hop', only to find it taken up, turned around and thrown back with interest. Despite the obvious kinship, it's interesting to compare their styles. Gillespie gets cornered on the long blues only because he's taken some chances with the sequence. Eldridge, by contrast, stays close to the original melody, embroidering it and turning it around, but not veering off into distant keys. Peterson gives both hornmen a solid leg-up, but it's clear that his sympathies are mainly with Little Jazz.

* The Nifty Cat New World 80349 Eldridge; Benny Morton (tb); Budd Johnson (ts, ss); Nat Pierce (p); Tommy Bryant (b); Oliver Jackson (d). 11/70.

 Happy Time Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 628 Eldridge; Oscar Peterson (p); Joe Pass (g); Ray Brown (b); Eddie Locke (d). 6/75.

 Jazz Maturity ... Where It's Coming From Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 807 Eldridge; Dizzy Gillespie (t); Oscar Peterson (p); Ray Brown (b); Mickey Roker (d). 6/75.

 Decidedly Fantasy 5314 Eldridge; Ray Bryant, Milt Jackson (p); Joe Pass (g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Louie Bellson (d). 7/75.

 What It's All About Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 853 Eldridge; Budd Johnson, Norris Turney (sax); Milt Jackson (vib); Norman Simmons (p); Ted Sturgis (b); Eddie Locke (d). 1/76.

(*) Montreux '77 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 373 Eldridge; Oscar Peterson (p); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Bobby Durham (d). 7/77.

 Roy Eldridge & Vic Dickenson Storyville STCD 8239 Eldridge; Vic Dickenson (tb); Budd Johnson (ts); Tommy Flanagan (p); Major Holley (b); Eddie Locke (d). 5/78.

Much of Eldridge's recorded output was for a time tucked away on trumpet compilations and festival albums. The major compilations above have done much to improve the situation. Even so, there is quite a lot of valuable Eldridge to be found on one-off sessions from later years. Jazz Maturity with Diz and Peterson is pretty much a reworking of studio associations, but there were occasions in later years when the trumpeter found himself not so much reliving his old amities as reinventing them. The connection with Budd Johnson was a good case in point. The concert in St Peter's Church on Storyville is very relaxed and mild, but there are unexpected harmonies on the New World disc, a further sign that Roy was always prepared to try new angles. Johnson doesn't hustle and bluster as Hawkins tended to do at this period.

What It's All About is disappointing in that Eldridge seems content to do little more than punch out high notes and then swoop down to swoony ballad territory, then up, then down. By this stage in his career it was all too easy and predictable, though one or two articulation problems seem to have crept in and were affecting his attack on material like 'The Heat's On', which needs to be played with precision.

Along with the New World album, perhaps the best of the later stuff is the Montreux set. The trumpeter has regained some of his fire and sparkle and doesn't seem to require much notice for the upper-register stabs. The 1978 concert from St Peter's Church in New York is laid-back and comradely, with some wise musicianship but not much excitement. A decade from the end of his life, Roy had won all the bouts he cared about; merely playing seemed to be reward enough.

Decidedly for some reason was withheld until 2002. It's not the greatest Eldridge album ever, but the Antibes audience lap him up and his distinctive blend of pre-bop and bop styles stands him well. Milt Jackson puts in a guest appearance on the final cut of Monk's 'Hackensack', making it a memorable occasion and a thoroughly enjoyable souvenir.

Also, in brief:

* Little Jazz: Trumpet Giant Proper PROPERBOX 69. 2/35–7/53.

Ninety-seven tracks, and not one dud. Probably all the early Eldridge that most collectors will ever need. Recommended.

 The Quintessence: Chicago To New York, 1936–1945 Frémaux & Associates 231. 36–45.

Another nice blend of live cuts and airshots.

(*) Little Jazz & The Jimmy Ryan All Stars Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1058. 4/75.

Ryan's was an institution, but this is sloppy fare.

Eliane Elias (born 1960)

PIANO, VOCAL

Born in São Paolo, she worked in big bands before moving to NY in 1981. Briefly with Steps Ahead and Randy Brecker (to whom she was married) and since then she has worked in a light but effective fusion of Brazilian and post-bop forms.

(*) The Three Americas Blue Note 53328-2 Elias; Dave Valentin (f); Gil Goldstein (acc); Mark Feldman (vn); Oscar Castro-Neves (g); Marc Johnson (b, v); Satoshi Takeishi (d); Café (perc, v); Manolo Badrena (perc); Amanda Elias-Brecker (v). 96.

(*) Sings Jobim Blue Note 95236-2 Elias; Michael Brecker (ts); Oscar Castro-Neves (g); Marc Johnson (b); Paulo Braga (d); Café (perc). 97.

In her quiet and uncomplicated way, Elias has created a more genuine and affecting synthesis of American music than many a more self-consciously pioneering type. Several of her Blue Notes have disappeared now, but The Three Americas seeks to align North, South and Central American rhythms, harmonies and melodies in a seamless whole, and with the chamberish instrumentation, folkish tunes and soft, settled textures she makes the fusion a plausible and generous creation that only occasionally dips into light-music pleasantry.

Sings Jobim might have been crashingly obvious, yet Elias manages to take an unpredictable course through most of the tunes. Even with tenor and rhythm on hand, she makes 'Desafinado' sound nothing like the Getz–Gilberto version. 'So Danco Samba' is quirkily crisp and precise. 'Samba De Uma Nota So' is as gentle as featherfall. Her voice would win no prizes at jazz singing school, but neither would Astrud Gilberto's. Johnson, as always, is a little giant in these situations and he's an indispensable presence on both discs.

(*) Impulsive! Stunt STUCD 00102 Elias; Bob Brookmeyer (vtb, arr); Danish Radio Jazz Orchestra. 2/97.

Composed by Elias, arranged by Brookmeyer, this gets the most out of Eliane's lyrical side. There's a tenor battle-royal on the title-track, but what Brookmeyer looks for is to underscore and counterpoint her melodies with his inimitable brass scoring: particularly effective on 'So In Love', to take just one instance. 'It's not world music, it's jazz with a capital J', says band boss Peter Larsen. Amen to that.

(*) Everything I Love Blue Note 520827-2 Elias; Rodney Jones (g); Marc Johnson, Christian McBride (b); Jack DeJohnette, Carl Allen (d). 99.

This time the focus is squarely on bebop material and its encumbrances: can anything new be wrought out of 'Woody 'n' You' or 'Nostalgia In Times Square'? What she does is look for the sweetness and the lyricism in the tunes, without sacrificing improvisational finesse. It helps that she's become a characterful singer, a small voice but not an unsteady or a shy one. The accompaniments are as high grade as the names suggest, and this is altogether as pleasing a 'repertory' record as one might wish.

 Kissed By Nature RCA Bluebird 09026-63914-2 Elias; Randy Brecker (t); Rick Margitza (ts); Paulo André Tavares (g); Marc Johnson (b); Joey Baron, Paulo Braga (perc). N.D.

() Dreamer Bluebird 58335 Elias; Michael Brecker (ts); Oscar Castro-Neves (g); Marc Johnson (b); Paolo Braga (d); orchestra. N.D.

A new label, and they clearly want Eliane to become a singing star. The obvious comparison is with Astrud Gilberto, but she's better than that and more reminiscent of Françoise Hardy, whose light, sing-song delivery is not so different to Elias's half-sung, half-spoken way. At least many of these tunes are relatively unfamiliar, given that most come from her own pen; and she's clearly taken care not to reduce her piano-playing to a mere added attraction. Dreamer is more of the same, but it's edging closer to mere sweetness. After this, she's a pop act.

Also, in brief:

() The Best Of Eliane Elias: Originals Blue Note 31789. 88–99.

'Best' as in most commercial. Some good stuff buried away in the middle but for the most part a disappointing compilation.

 Brazilian Classics Blue Note 84337. 12/89–10/97.

Lifted off the Jobim album and earlier deleted discs. Obvious enough concept and not bad.

The Elite Syncopators

GROUP

Group dedicated to performing original ragtime repertory.

 Ragtime Special Stomp Off CD1286 Terry Parrish (p); James Marshall (bj); Steve Ley (tba); Mike Schwimmer (wbd, v). 4–5/94.

Ragtime piano is specialized enough, but placing it in the context of a repertory group was quite something in the '90s. Of the 26 tracks here, all but three are original rags, two-steps or cakewalks of differing vintages, and it's some tribute to the expertise of the quartet that the music doesn't go stale at CD length. The sometimes unvarying jollity of ragtime is tempered by intelligent programming – an occasional vocal, some reflectively melodic as opposed to pop-tune rags – and the graceful syncopation of the playing. Parrish's liner-notes offer useful background for hard-core scholars, and though this is a lot to take in at one sitting, determined cakewalkers will find it indispensable.

Marty Elkins

VOICE

Cool-toned standards singer.

(*) Fuse Blues Nagel Heyer 62 Elkins; Herb Pomeroy (t); Houston Person (ts); Tardo Hammer (p); Greg Skaff (g); Dennis Irwin, Mark Taylor (d). 8/99.

This had the misfortune of appearing just when jazz singers were being expected to explore a more adventurous and contemporary repertoire. Nothing by Joni Mitchell, Nick Drake, Elvis Costello or Björk here; just a run-of-the-mill-looking set of standard songs, including 'Stars Fell On Alabama', 'In The Wee Small Hours Of The Morning', 'You're Blasé' and 'Born To Be Blue'. On the other hand, Elkins came along at a time when there was a returning respect for such cool singers as Chris Connor and June Christy, who're very much her model. She's not the most virtuosic of singers, but there's more here than meets the eye – though what meets the eye is very striking as well – and these are subtle and carefully nuanced performances. Check out the group, too; hardly the kind of line-up you'd assemble for a dashed-off vocal date. So she's smart, writes well ('Fuse Blues' is her own), sings old songs with a personalized directness and is glamorous into the bargain. What's not to like?

Rune 'Lulle' Ellboj (1911–60)

ALTO SAXOPHONE, BANDLEADER

A significant catalyst in his day.

 Time For Jump 1944–1946 Dragon DRCD 342 Ellboj; Rolf Ericson, Tore Forslund, Nisse Skoog, Anders Swärd (t); Bertil

Jacobsson, Bob Henders, Sven Bohman, Karl-Erik Lennholm, Bror Skogehall, Sture Green (tb); Arne Domnérus , Dag Löwå , Hasse Theselius, Gunnar Lundén-Welden , Fritz Fust, Erik Elgstam, Zilas Görling , Pelle Sejby, Lars Schöning (reeds); Rolf Larsson (p); Nils-Erik Sandell (g); Harry Andersson (b); Uffe Baadh, Åke Brandes , Henry Wallin (d). 44–46.

An interesting period piece, from around the time Ellboj was leading his big band at the Winter Palace in neutral Stockholm, but also useful for early glimpses of significant post-war soloists like Ericson and Domnérus. The repertoire's a mixture of swing-jump and some slightly more modern elements, together with the Swedish interest in folk themes. 'Honeysuckle Rose' and 'Tea For Two' certainly don't sound as if they're being played by an American outfit, and the wackier items – 'Song Of The Volga Boatmen', 'The Workers Train', 'Jazz Comes Home From War' – could only be Scandinavian. Ellboj doesn't play much saxophone, but he led an interesting and, on their day, exciting unit.

Art Ellefson (born 1932)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

From Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan. He started on brass, spent some time living in the Caribbean and worked briefly with Maynard Ferguson.

 As If To Say Sackville SKCD 2030 Ellefson; Lee Ellefson (g); Russell Botten (b); Buff Allen (d). 2/92.

The thing to do here is to skip straight to the unaccompanied 'Mellonova' right at the end of the album, an intriguing essay in solo form that nicely points up both Ellefson's debt to relatively unfashionable figures like Don Byas and possibly Lucky Thompson (though that's more evident on his soprano-playing: 'Motion Notion'), but also how quietly individual he is. The group, with son Lee duetting on 'Unframed', is quiet and unshowy, but it works well and Ellefson deserves to be more widely appreciated.

Kurt Elling (born 1967)

VOICES

The Chicagoan sent a demo tape to Blue Note and won a deal. The quintessential contemporary male jazz singer.

(*) Close Your Eyes Blue Note 30645 2 Elling; Von Freeman, Edward Petersen (ts); Laurence Hobgood (p); Dave Onderdonk (g); Rob Amster, Erich Hochberg (b); Paul Wertico (d, perc). 2–11/94.

* The Messenger Blue Note 52727 2 As above, except omit Freeman; add Orbert Davis (t, flhn); Eddie Johnson (ts); Jim Widlowski (perc); Cassandra Wilson (v). 7–12/96.

It's easy to see Elling as a contemporary version of Mark Murphy, but Frank Sinatra was a powerful influence as well. Elling shares Murphy's poetic understanding, and Close Your Eyes includes two poems by Rainer Maria Rilke, including 'Now It Is Time That Gods Came Walking Out', which hints at the Charlie Parker title as well. The other Rilke text is 'How The Thimble Came To Be God', part of a vocalese reading of Paul Desmond's solo on Brubeck's 'Balcony Rock'. He also provides a vocal introduction and coda to 'Dolores' Dream', based on Wayne Shorter's solo intro on the 1977 VSOP version. The American anarchist Kenneth Rexroth is represented by 'Married Blues'.

One of the great joys of vocalese has always been the ability to tell a story, and Elling blends a narrative by Jim Heynen into 'Storyteller Experiencing Total Confusion'. He makes Fran Landesman's 'Ballad Of The Sad Young Men' sound as fresh as the day it was written. The guest spots – by Von Freeman on the punning '(Hide The) Salome' and Edward Petersen on 'Storyteller' and Herbie Hancock's 'Hurricane' – are nicely judged, and the band is impossible to fault. The Messenger is a studio album divided into two sets. It briefly brings together the two finest jazz singers of the '90s. An unexpected choice of repertoire, but Rod Argent's 'Time Of The Season' teams Kurt Elling and Cassandra Wilson, an exquisite blending of voices that combines an absolutely authentic jazz sensibility with the power and inflexion of rock and soul singers. Elling opens with a glorious version of 'Nature Boy' that restores some of the fragile melancholy of the Nat Cole hit. 'April In Paris' is a little routine, but the suite that follows – 'The Beauty Of All Things', 'The Dance' and 'Prayer For Mr Davis' – is superb, three strong Hobgood/Elling compositions that top anything on the first album. 'Gingerbread Boy' and a melting 'Prelude To A Kiss' set up a virtuosic climax, 'Time Of The Season' followed by the long 'The Messenger', a composition by Edward Petersen into which Elling builds a spontaneous narrative on the death of his brother.

* Live in Chicago Blue Note 22211 Elling; Von Freeman, Eddie Johnson, Ed Petersen (ts); Laurence Hobgood (p); Rob Amster (b); Michael Raynor (d); Kahil El'Zabar (perc); Jon Hendricks (v). 99.

This marvellous set is drawn from a three-night residency at the Green Mill club. The set has a hometown feel, and the guest appearances by local hero El'Zabar and the veteran Hendricks add a final touch. 'My Foolish Heart' is titanic. Elling thinks musically but never loses sight of a song's emotional freight. Backed with three powerful tenors, he produces a tone of horn-like strength and purity that cuts through a noisy ambience.

The technical quality is excellent, though there are a couple of dead moments on Shorter's 'Night Dream' (lyrics by Elling); the engineering manages to balance live presence with a commendable level of musical detail.

* Flirting With Twilight Blue Note 31113 Elling; Clay Jenkins (t); Bob Sheppard (ss, ts); Jeff Clayton (as); Laurence Hobgood (p); Marc Johnson (b); Peter Erskine (d). 1–2/01.

This confirms Elling as the finest singer of his generation. He opens on Glenn Miller's 'Moonlight Serenade' and turns it into a complex modernist epic, condensed into just four and a half minutes. As usual, he takes on less familiar material; Curtis Lundy's 'Orange Blossoms In Summertime' becomes a compelling jazz poem that honours the bassist's art and builds into something bigger and more ambitious. Jazz singers have rarely been drawn to Stephen Sondheim, but Kurt sees the merit in 'Not While I'm Around', from Sweeney Todd.

The accompanists are in cracking form. Johnson is huge, and in combination with Peter Erskine he drives the music along, enriching the harmonic palette with every phrase. He is sole accompanist on the Dietrich classic 'Je Tire Ma Révérence'. The horns aren't quite as compelling or vigorous this time, but Sheppard emerges as a figure who commands closer inspection.

* Man In The Air Blue Note 80834 Elling; Jim Gailloreto (ss); Laurence Hobgood (p); Stefon Harris (vib); Rob Amster (b); Frank Parker Jr (d). 03.

This is perhaps the jazz vocal album of the last decade. Almost ten years on from his debut, Elling delivers a bold and accomplished performance, marked by a highly original choice of material and some devastating playing from his regular band. Elling's scat and his delivery of a ballad are now so confident that he is able to take on material like John Coltrane's 'Resolution' and bring to it a genuine philosophical understanding as well as a musically coherent performance. He also includes Joe Zawinul's lovely ballad 'Time To Say Goodbye' and Herbie Hancock's 'A Secret I', both of them thoroughly original and intelligent interpretations. Hobgood is the key, a master of subtle harmonic shifts and rhythmic changes. Harris's contribution is more dramatic, but less thoughtful, and Gailloreto is more a foil to Elling's voice than a completely successful soloist.

* Nightmoves Concord CCD 30138 Elling; Bob Mintzer (ts); Laurence Hobgood, Rob Mounsey (p); Guilherme Monteiro (g): Howard Levy (hca); Rob Amster, Christian McBride (b); Willie Jones III (d); Escher String Quartet. 4/07.

This is elegance itself. Elling jumped ship to Concord and produced a record of graceful adventure, packed with unexpected items: a Guess Who hit; Betty Carter's 'Tight'; Walt Whitman; Sinatra's 'In The Wee Small Hours' is medleyed with a Keith Jarrett theme; Theodore Roethke's poem 'The Waking' is set to a new melody by the singer, quietly authoritative; 'Body And Soul' is reinvented as 'A New ...'. 'Change Partners' is full of pathos and quiet threat; Ellington's 'I Like the Sunrise' is the perfect curtain-piece. The arrangements are kept flexible, with personnels running up to a septet. Mintzer is superb on the title-piece, tackling his solo with unshowy authority. There are extra touches here and there, like Levy's harmonica and Monteiro's guitar, which seem perfectly judged to add to a song rather than just vary the palette for variation's sake. Hobgood plays acoustic while Mounsey sticks to Fender Rhodes and deals with the string arrangements. Elling's at the top of his game. There's no better male singer around.

Also, in brief:

(*) This Time It's Love Blue Note 93543 2. 12/97–1/98.

The highlights are a vocalese based on Lester Young's solo on 'She's Funny That Way' and 'Freddie's Yen For Jen', which takes its inspiration from Freddie Hubbard.

Duke Ellington (1899–1974)

PIANO

Born in Washington DC, to a middle-class family, he learned piano as a child, became interested in ragtime, and started leading his own groups around 1918. Duke Ellington & His Washingtonians worked in NY from 1924, and a residency at the Cotton Club from 1927 sealed its breakthrough. Long tours followed, with trips to Europe in the '30s, and an almost continuous presence in the studios. In the '40s he played a series of annual Carnegie Hall concerts, wrote for the stage and briefly dispersed the big band, but reassembled it in 1949. Although the '50s saw a decline in his fortunes, his Newport appearance in 1956 reasserted his eminence. He also wrote for film and TV, and in the '60s continued to tour relentlessly. Illness slowed him down, but he was working up until his hospitalization for cancer early in 1974. Besides his major works, his individual compositions – with and without his frequent collaborator, Billy Strayhorn – number in the thousands, and his recorded legacy is surely the largest and grandest that jazz will ever be able to boast.

 Duke Ellington 1924–1927 Classics 539 Ellington; Bubber Miley, Pike Davis, Harry Cooper, Leroy Rutledge, Louis Metcalf, June Clark (t); Jimmy Harrison (tb, v); Charlie Irvis, Joe 'Tricky Sam' Nanton (tb); Don Redman (cl, as); Otto Hardwick (Cmel, as, ss, bs); George Thomas (as, v); Edgar Sampson (as); Prince Robinson, Rudy Jackson (ts, cl); Harry Carney (cl, ts, bs); George Francis, Fred Guy (bj); Mack Shaw, Henry 'Bass' Edwards (bb); Sonny Greer (d, v); Alberta Jones, Irving Mills, Adelaide Hall (v). 11/24–11/26.

Ellington bestrides the history of jazz on record. The sheer volume of recorded works – authorized and otherwise – continues to enrich our understanding, while offering many frustrations and disappointments to go with the numberless masterworks. After the enormous and comprehensive LP reissues of the '70s the industry has made plenty of headway in reissuing all this material on CD. With the copyright lapsed on all the pre-1954 records, smaller labels have taken up the challenge too.

Classics is content to stick to the band sides leading up to the Victor version of 'Black And Tan Fantasy' in 1927; it has omitted a handful of obscure early accompaniments to singers. However, the early material will be of interest only to scholars. Poor recording and a primitive, clumsy ensemble will be almost shocking to any who've never been acquainted with the earliest Ellington. Certainly the stiff rhythms and feeble attempts at solos on all the pre-1926 records are sometimes painful to hear and, if it weren't for Bubber Miley, the man who made Ellington 'forget all about the sweet music', there'd be nothing to detain anyone here. Yet Miley is already distinctive and powerful on his solo on the Washingtonians' 'Choo Choo' from November 1924. With 'East St Louis Toodle-oo', from the first important Ellington session, the music demands the attention. Any comprehensive edition will include much duplication, since Ellington spread himself around many different record labels: he recorded for Broadway, Vocalion, Gennett, Columbia, Harmony, Pathé, Brunswick, OKeh and Victor in the space of a little over three years. It also includes the debut versions of 'Black And Tan Fantasy', Ellington's first masterpiece, and Adelaide Hall's vocal on 'Creole Love Call'. Remastering is occasionally indifferent.

(*) Duke Ellington 1927–1928 Classics 542 Ellington; Bubber Miley, Jabbo Smith, Louis Metcalf, Arthur Whetsol (t); Joe 'Tricky Sam' Nanton (tb); Otto Hardwick (ss, as, bs, bsx); Rudy Jackson, Barney Bigard (cl, ts); Harry Carney (bs, as, ss, cl); Fred Guy (bj); Wellman Braud (b); Sonny Greer (d); Adelaide Hall (v). 10/27–3/28.

(*) Duke Ellington 1928 Classics 550 As above, except omit Jackson, Smith; add Lonnie Johnson (g); Baby Cox, Palmer Brothers (v). 3–10/28.

 Duke Ellington 1928–1929 Classics 559 As above, except omit Metcalf, Cox, Palmer Brothers; add Freddy Jenkins (t); Johnny Hodges (cl, ss, as); Ozie Ware, Irving Mills (v). 10/28–3/29.

Ellington progressed quickly from routine hot dance records to sophisticated and complex three-minute works which showed a rare grasp of the possibilities of the 78-r.p.m. disc. Yet during these years both Ellington and his band were still seeking an identifying style. Having set down one or two individual pieces such as 'Black And Tan Fantasy' didn't mean that Duke was fully on his way. The 1926–8 records are still dominated by the playing of Bubber Miley, and on a track such as 'Flaming Youth' (Classics 559), which was made as late as 1929, it is only Miley's superb work that makes the record of much interest. Arthur Whetsol made an intriguing contrast to Miley, his style being far more wistful and fragile; his version of 'The Mooche' on the 1928 Victor version is in striking contrast to Miley's (all are on Classics 550), and his treatment of the theme to 'Black Beauty' (same disc) is similarly poignant. Joe Nanton was a shouting trombonist with a limited stock of phrases, but he was starting to work on the muted technique which would make him one of Duke's most indispensable players. The reed team was weaker, with Carney taking a low-key role (not always literally: he played as much alto and clarinet as baritone in this era), and until Bigard's arrival in 1928 it lacked a distinctive soloist. Hodges also didn't arrive until October 1928. When the Ellington band went into the Cotton Club at the end of 1927, the theatricality which had begun asserting itself with 'Black And Tan Fantasy' became a more important asset, and though most of the 'Jungle' scores were to emerge on record around 1929–30, 'The Mooche' and 'East St Louis Toodle-oo' show how set-piece effects were becoming important to Ellington. The best and most Ellingtonian records of the period would include 'Blue Bubbles' (Classics 542), 'Take It Easy' and 'Jubilee Stomp' (1928 versions, on Classics 550), and 'Misty Mornin'' and 'Doin' The Voom Voom' (both Classics 559). But even on the lesser tunes or those tracks where Ellington seems to be doing little more than copying Fletcher Henderson, there are usually fine moments from Miley or one of the others. The Classics CDs offer admirable coverage, with a fairly consistent standard of remastering, and though they ignore alternative takes Ellington's promiscuous attitude towards the various record companies means that there are often several versions of a single theme on one disc (Classics 542, for instance, has three versions of 'Take It Easy').

(*) Duke Ellington 1929 Classics 569 Ellington; Cootie Williams (t, v); Arthur Whetsol, Freddy Jenkins (t); Joe 'Tricky Sam' Nanton (tb); Barney Bigard (cl, ts); Johnny Hodges (ss, as, cl); Harry Carney (bs, cl, as); Fred Guy (bj); Wellman Braud (b); Sonny Greer (d, v); Ozie Ware (v). 3–7/29.

 Duke Ellington 1929–1930 Classics 577 As above, except omit Ware; add Juan Tizol (vtb); Teddy Bunn (g); Bruce Johnson (wbd); Harold Randolph, Irving Mills (v). 8/29–1/30.

 Duke Ellington 1930 Classics 586 As above, except omit Bunn, Johnson, Randolph; add Cornell Smelser (acc); Dick Robertson (v). 1–6/30.

 Duke Ellington 1930 Vol. 2 Classics 596 As above, except omit Smelser; add Charlie Barnet (chimes); Sid Garry, Jimmy Miller, Emanuel Paul (v). 6–11/30.

 Duke Ellington 1930–1931 Classics 605 As above, except omit Barnet, Robertson, Miller, Paul; add Benny Paine (v, p); Chick Bullock, Frank Marvin, Smith Ballew (v). 11/30–1/31.

The replacement of Bubber Miley by Cootie Williams was the key personnel change in this period. Williams was a leaner, less outwardly expressive version of Miley, but equally fiery. His scat singing was a fast development of Armstrong's vocal style, and he gave the brass section a new bite and brightness, even if he lacked Miley's growling intensity. Hodges and Carney, too, were coming into their own, and along with Ellington's increasing mastery in handling his players the band was now growing in assurance almost from session to session. The Victor recording of 7 March 1929 (Classics 569) exemplifies many of the new powers of the orchestra. 'Hot Feet' includes a superb Hodges solo, Williams singing and playing with great authority, and the band moving out of the older hot style without sacrificing any drive. It was the now extraordinarily powerful swing of the rhythm section that was responsible for much of this advance. The same session is a fine instance of what it could do, from Braud's subtly propulsive drive on the excellently scored 'The Dicty Glide' to his outright stomping line on 'Hot Feet', with Greer taking a showman's role on his cymbals and traps and the remarkable Guy strumming a quick-witted counterpoint that made the banjo seem far from outdated (he would, though, soon switch to guitar). The two important Victor sessions on this disc (a third, two parts of a Cotton Club medley, is less substantial) make this a valuable issue; there are two fascinatingly different versions of the small-group blues 'Saratoga Swing', as well as little-known Ellington attempts at 'I Must Have That Man' and an accompaniment to singer Ozie Ware.

Ellington was recording at a prodigious pace – surprisingly so, given the state of the industry at that time – and there are some three CDs' worth of material from 1930. Classics 586 includes some tunes that reek of Cotton Club set-pieces – 'Jungle Nights In Harlem', 'Jungle Blues' – and some thin novelty tunes, but new versions of 'The Mooche' and 'East St Louis Toodle-oo' and new originals like 'Shout 'Em Aunt Tillie', 'Hot And Bothered' and 'Cotton Club Stomp' are more substantial. Classics 596 has three different versions of 'Ring Dem Bells' with outstanding solos by Williams, three of 'Old Man Blues', and a first try at 'Mood Indigo'. Classics 605 has three versions of 'Rockin' In Rhythm', each showing a slight advance on the one before, the tempo brightening and the reeds becoming smarter, and a slightly ironic reading of 'Twelfth Street Rag' which hints at Duke's later treatment of other people's jazz standards. But the record closes with his first lengthy work, the two-part 'Creole Rhapsody', where for perhaps the first time the soloists have to take a firm second place to the arrangement. (This is the 10-inch 78 version; the subsequent 12-inch version is on the next disc in the Classics sequence.) Remastering is mainly good and full-bodied; some of the records from more obscure companies sound a little rougher; there are some tracks in which bass boom overcomes mid-range brightness.

 Duke Ellington 1931–1932 Classics 616 Ellington; Arthur Whetsol, Freddy Jenkins, Cootie Williams (t); Joe 'Tricky Sam' Nanton, Lawrence Brown (tb); Juan Tizol (vtb); Johnny Hodges (as, ss, cl); Barney Bigard (cl, ts); Harry Carney (bs, cl); Fred Guy (bj, g); Wellman Braud (b); Sonny Greer (d); Frank Marvin, Ivie Anderson, Bing Crosby (v). 1/31–2/32.

 Duke Ellington 1932–1933 Classics 626 As above, except omit Crosby; add Ray Mitchell, Adelaide Hall, Mills Brothers, Ethel Waters (v). 5/32–1/33.

(*) Duke Ellington 1933 Classics 637 Similar to above. 2–8/33.

(*) Duke Ellington 1933–1935 Classics 646 Similar to above. 9/33–3/35.

The second 'Creole Rhapsody' opens Classics 616, a longer and better-played though still imperfect version, but the rest of the disc is more conventional Ellington, with 'It Don't Mean A Thing' and 'Lazy Rhapsody' the highlights in a programme which is mainly made up of other writers' songs. The arrival of both Lawrence Brown and Ivie Anderson is more important: Brown gave the brass section a new mellifluousness, and Anderson was probably the best regular singer Duke ever employed. Classics 626 has ten Ellington themes out of 23 tracks and loses impetus at the end with sundry accompaniments to singers, but there are four substantial pieces in 'Slippery Horn', 'Blue Harlem', 'Ducky Wucky' and especially 'Lightnin'', though the orchestra often sounds sloppy here.

Classics 637 and 646 divide the fine Brunswick material (previously on the now-deleted Jazz Information sequence) between them, and 646 covers a number of important Victor sessions as well: 'Stompy Jones', the locomotive classic, 'Daybreak Express' and 'Blue Feeling'.

(*) Cotton Club Stomp /  It Don't Mean A Thing Naxos Jazz Legends 8.120509 / 8.120526 As above. 27–31; 30–34.

 Jazz Cocktail / (*) Rockin' In Rhythm / * Early Ellington ASV AJA 5024 / 5057 / GRP 053640-2 3CD As appropriate discs above. 10/28–9/32; 3/27–7/36 3/27–5/32.

The various compilations of early Ellington offer a considerable choice. The pair of Naxos discs are very enjoyable, although the second has a slightly idiosyncratic track selection. The two ASV albums aren't really competitive since the remastering is rather grey and undefined. GRP's three-disc set covers all of Ellington's Brunswick material up to 1932 and makes a particularly enjoyable and welcome package.

(*) Duke Ellington 1935–1936 Classics 659 Ellington; Charlie Allen, Cootie Williams, Arthur Whetsol (t); Rex Stewart (c); Joe 'Tricky Sam' Nanton, Lawrence Brown (tb); Juan Tizol (vtb); Johnny Hodges (cl, ss, as); Harry Carney (cl, as, bs); Otto Hardwick (as); Barney Bigard (cl, ts); Ben Webster (ts); Fred Guy (g); Hayes Alvis, Billy Taylor (b); Fred Avendorf, Sonny Greer (d); Ivie Anderson (v). 4/35–2/36.

(*) Duke Ellington 1936–1937 Classics 666 As above, except omit Allen, Avendorf; add Pete Clark (as); Brick Fleagle (g). 2/36–3/37.

(*) Duke Ellington 1937 Classics 675 As above, except omit Whetsol, Clark, Fleagle; add Wallace Jones (t); Sandy Williams (tb); Bernard Addison (g); Chick Webb (d). 3–5/37.

* Duke Ellington 1937 Vol. 2 Classics 687 As above, except omit Sandy Williams, Webb; add Freddy Jenkins (t); Jack Maisel (d). 5–10/37.

* Duke Ellington 1938 Classics 700 As above, except omit Jenkins, Maisel; add Harold 'Shorty' Baker (t); Mary McHugh, Jerry Kruger (v). 1–4/38.

* Duke Ellington 1938 Vol. 2 Classics 717 As above, except add Scat Powell (v). 4–8/38.

(*) Duke Ellington 1938 Vol. 3 Classics 726 As above, except omit Anderson, Kruger, McHugh, Powell. 8–12/38.

Ellington's mid- and late '30s output is a subtle blend of commerce and art and even the most trifling pieces usually have something to commend them. Classics 659 is important for the four-part original recording of 'Reminiscing In Tempo', a dedication to Ellington's mother that was one of the first of his extended works; but it also has the joyful 'Truckin'' and two early 'concerto' pieces in 'Clarinet Lament' for Bigard and 'Echoes Of Harlem' for Cootie Williams. Classics 666 starts with some unpromising material magically illuminated: Rex Stewart's filigree touches on 'Kissin' My Baby Goodnight', the lovely scoring on 'Maybe Someday'. Several tracks here are small-group crossovers with the Columbia discs (see below), but there are top-drawer records by the full group, including 'In A Jam', 'Uptown Downbeat', the rollicking 'Scattin' At The Kit Cat' and 'The New East St Louis Toodle-oo', an example of Ellington's revisionism. One of the best in this sequence.

In contrast, Classics 675 is a bit thin so far as the full-band tracks are concerned, though two versions of 'Azure' shouldn't be missed. Much stronger is Classics 687, which peaks on the still remarkable first recording of 'Diminuendo And Crescendo In Blue' but which also has the tremendous 'Harmony In Harlem', 'Chatterbox' and 'Jubilesta', as well as several of the small-group sessions. Classics 700 includes a lot of distinctive Ellingtonia that has been obscured by some of his obvious hits: 'Braggin' In Brass', 'The Gal From Joe's', the new version of 'Black And Tan Fantasy', superbly played by the band which transforms itself from dance orchestra to complex jazz ensemble – and back again. Though seldom commented on, the rhythm section of Guy, Taylor or Alvis and Greer is unobtrusively fine. There are more neglected winners on Classics 717, including 'I'm Slappin' Seventh Avenue' (which Cecil Taylor admired), 'Dinah's In A Jam', the lovely treatment of 'Rose Of The Rio Grande' and the very fine 'The Stevedore's Serenade'. The next disc might be a little behind in class, but there are more fine small-group sides led by Hodges and further lesser-known Ellington originals.

(*) Duke Ellington 1938–1939 Classics 747 Ellington; Wallace Jones, Cootie Williams, Louis Bacon (t); Rex Stewart (c); Lawrence Brown, Joe 'Tricky Sam' Nanton (tb); Juan Tizol (vtb); Barney Bigard (cl, ts); Johnny Hodges (ss, as, cl); Otto Hardwick (as); Harry Carney (bs, as, cl); Fred Guy, Brick Fleagle (g); Billy Taylor Sr (b); Sonny Greer (d); Jean Eldridge (v). 12/38–3/39.

() Duke Ellington 1939 / () Duke Ellington 1939 Vol. 2 Classics 765 / 780 As above, except omit Bacon, Fleagle, Eldridge; add Billy Strayhorn (p). 3–6/39; 6–10/39.

* Duke Ellington 1939–1940 / * Duke Ellington 1940 Classics 790 / 805 As above, except add Ben Webster (ts); Jimmy Blanton (b); Ivie Anderson (v). 10/39–2/40; 2–8/40.

* Duke Ellington 1940 Vol. 2 Classics 820 As above, except omit Williams; add Ray Nance (t). 11/40–7/41.

* Duke Ellington 1941 Classics 851 As above, except add Junior Raglin (b). 7–12/41.

With all of the late '30s Ellington now back in print, it's easier to see that he had been working towards this exceptional period for the band for a long time. Ellington had been building a matchless team of soloists, his own composing was taking on a finer degree of personal creativity and sophistication, and with the arrival of bassist Jimmy Blanton, who gave the rhythm section an unparalleled eloquence in the way it swung, the final piece fell into place. The 6 May 1940 session, which opens Never No Lament (below), is one of the great occasions in jazz history, when Ellington recorded both 'Jack The Bear' (a feature for Blanton) and the unqualified masterpiece 'Ko-Ko'. From there, literally dozens of classics tumbled out of the band, from originals such as 'Harlem Air Shaft' and 'Main Stem' and 'Take The "A" Train' to brilliant Ellingtonizations of standard material such as 'The Sidewalks Of New York' and 'Clementine'. The arrival of Billy Strayhorn, who stayed until he died in 1967, is another important element in the music's success.

The four Classics discs covering 1939 include many of the small-group dates led by Bigard, Hodges and Williams, and those who have the Columbia sets may not want to duplicate this material. (However, followers of Duke's piano solos will want Classics 747, which includes a couple of little-known 1939 items, 'Just Good Fun' and 'Informal Blues'.) Classics 790 includes some important stuff: the Ducal solo 'Blues' and the duets with Blanton, 'Blues' and 'Plucked Again'. Thereafter, the 1940–41 discs cover much the same ground as the three-disc RCA Bluebird set. All this is four-star material, and for those who would prefer to have it a disc at a time, this isn't a bad way forward.

CORE COLLECTION

* Never No Lament

RCA Bluebird 82876-50857-2 3CD Ellington; Wallace Jones, Cootie Williams, Ray Nance (t); Rex Stewart (c); Joe 'Tricky Sam' Nanton, Lawrence Brown (tb); Juan Tizol (vtb); Barney Bigard, Chauncey Haughton (cl); Johnny Hodges (ss, as, cl); Harry Carney (bs, cl, as); Otto Hardwick (as, bsx); Ben Webster (ts); Billy Strayhorn (p); Fred Guy (g); Jimmy Blanton, Junior Raglin (b); Sonny Greer (d); Ivie Anderson, Herb Jeffries (v). 3/40–7/42.

Bluebird's set collects 70 tracks (and five alternative takes) from a two-year period which many hold as Ellington's greatest on record, and it's certainly the summation of his work within the three-minute confines of the 78-r.p.m. disc. This latest remastering, drawn from the huge complete RCA Ellington edition, is in stunning sound and is a delight from first to last. Our only complaint is the shoddy packaging, which does no justice to the music. But what music!

() Reminiscing In Tempo / () Echoes Of Harlem / (*) Braggin' In Brass / * Tootin' Through The Roof Naxos 8.120589 / 8.120682 / 8.120706 / 8.120729 As various discs above. 32–35; 36–38; 38; 39–40.

While pre-war Ellington is now open house for anyone who fancies putting together their own compilation, Naxos have gone about it in a sensible way, and these excellent compilations choose to pick only the best tracks from each period rather than exhaustive coverage. In clean sound, with excellent notes and documentation and at a bargain price, these would be a worthy introduction for anyone who wants to investigate this music.

♛ * The Duke At Fargo 1940 Storyville STCD 8316/7 2CD As above, except omit Haughton, Strayhorn, Raglin. 11/40.

Of the many surviving location recordings of the Ellington band, this is one of the very best, catching over two hours of material from a single dance date in North Dakota, part of it broadcast but most of it simply taken down by amateur enthusiasts. Storyville released a 60th-anniversary edition of the music in 2000, handsomely presented. The sound is probably as fine as it will ever be. Here is one of the greatest Ellington orchestras on a typical night, with many of the best numbers in the band's book and the most rousing version of 'St Louis Blues' to climax the evening. The sound is inevitably well below the quality of the studio sessions, but it's a fine supplement to them, and a definitive glimpse into a working day in the life of one of the great swing orchestras. An essential swing-era document.

(*) Duke Ellington 1942–1944 Classics 867 Ellington; Wallace Jones, Harold 'Shorty' Baker, Dizzy Gillespie, Scad Hemphill, Taft Jordan, Cootie Williams (t); Ray Nance (t, vn); Rex Stewart (c); Joe 'Tricky Sam' Nanton, Lawrence Brown, Claude Jones, Juan Tizol (tb); Barney Bigard, Chauncey Haughton, Jimmy Hamilton (cl); Johnny Hodges (as); Otto Hardwick (as, bsx); Ben Webster, Skippy Williams, Al Sears (ts); Harry Carney (cl, bs); Billy Strayhorn (p); Fred Guy (g); Junior Raglin, Jimmy Blanton, Wilson Myers (b); Sonny Greer (d); Ivie Anderson, Herb Jeffries, Al Hibbler (v). 11/39–5/44.

* Duke Ellington 1944–1945 Classics 881 As above, except omit Jones, Baker, Gillespie, Cootie Williams, Stewart, Webster, Skippy Williams, Blanton, Jeffries, Anderson; add Cat Anderson (t); Duke Brooks (p); Red Callender (b); Hilliard Brown (d); Joya Sherrill, Kay Davis (v). 12/44–4/45.

 Duke Ellington 1945 Classics 915 As above, except add Bob Haggart (b); Marie Ellington (v); Tommy Dorsey (tb) and his orchestra. 4–5/45.

* Duke Ellington 1945 Vol. 2 Classics 951 As above, except omit Haggart, Marie Ellington, Dorsey and orchestra. 5–7/45.

A mix of studio dates and V-Discs for these releases. Classics 867 starts with the final Victor sessions before the recording ban, and there are masterpieces of the order of 'What Am I Here For?' and 'Main Stem' before four sessions for V-Disc from 1943–4: some excellent Hodges, and there's an extended 'Boy Meets Horn' for Rex Stewart. They fill up the disc with two 1939 V-Disc tracks that were missed off an earlier disc. Classics 881 returns to Victor for four pop tunes before the studio version of 'Black, Brown And Beige', a Capitol small-group date led by Sonny Greer which has Jordan and Bigard in top form, and the delightful V-Disc debut of 'Perfume Suite', including Duke's dapper piano treatment of 'Dancers In Love'. A splendid issue. Classics 915 looks promising but is let down by very poor sound on a V-Disc version of 'Black, Brown And Beige' (a subsequent 'Harlem Air Shaft' sounds much better). Some of the Victor material is relatively lightweight, although the disc does include the famous occasion when the Duke sat in with the Tommy Dorsey band and the trombonist returned the favour by sitting in with the Ellington band the following day. Classics 951 includes ten further titles from V-Disc and there are some beauties among them, including excellent takes on 'Hollywood Hangover' (actually a Buck Clayton composition) and 'Ring Dem Bells', and a masterly treatment of 'New World A-Comin''. For the rest, more Victor sessions, including the studio version of 'Perfume Suite' (which mystifyingly omits 'Dancers In Love') and the debut of 'Diminuendo And Crescendo In Blue'.

(*) Duke Ellington & His Orchestra Vols 1–5 Circle CCD-101/2/3/4/5 (5CD, only available separately) Basically as above discs in this period. 43–45.

Since the American recording ban was in full swing, Ellington's studio work was limited to material like this, transcriptions in the World Broadcast Series. Circle has included what seems to be every available fragment from these sessions, which means multiple takes and many false starts. If this detracts from a general recommendation, it ought to be remembered that this was the greatest Ellington orchestra in top form, and there are countless things to marvel at in the likes of (to pick a few of our personal favourites) 'Air Conditioned Jungle', 'Let The Zoomers Drool', 'Blues On The Double', 'In A Jam', 'Blue Cellophane' and 'Three Cent Stomp'. Besides, the many breaks allow an intriguing insight into Duke's way of working. Excellent notes and impressive remastering.

* Black, Brown And Beige RCA Bluebird 86641 3CD Ellington; Taft Jordan, Cat Anderson, Shelton Hemphill, Ray Nance, Rex Stewart, Francis Williams, Harold 'Shorty' Baker (t); Claude Jones, Lawrence Brown, Joe 'Tricky Sam' Nanton, Tommy Dorsey, Wilbur De Paris (tb); Jimmy Hamilton (cl, ts); Otto Hardwick (as); Johnny Hodges (as); Al Sears (ts); Russell Procope (cl, ts); Harry Carney (bs); Fred Guy (g); Junior Raglin, Sid Weiss, Oscar Pettiford, Al Lucas, Bob Haggart (b); Sonny Greer, Big Sid Catlett (d); Al Hibbler, Joya Sherrill, Kay Davis, Marie Ellington, Marian Cox (v). 12/44–9/46.

While this stands a notch below the music on Never No Lament, it is still an essential Ellington collection. Besides numerous further examples of the composer's mastery of the three-minute form, there are the first of his suites to make it to the studios, including most of 'Black, Brown And Beige' – never recorded in its entirety in the studio – and 'The Perfume Suite'. New Ellingtonians include two brilliant individualists, Anderson and Jordan, as well as the lyrical Baker, Sears and Procope. Ellington's confidence may have been sagging a little from the loss of major soloists – Webster, Williams – and the indifference to some of his higher ambitions as a composer, but the orchestra itself is still inimitable.

(*) The Duke Ellington Carnegie Hall Concerts January 1943 Prestige 34004 2CD Ellington; Rex Stewart, Harold 'Shorty' Baker, Wallace Jones (t); Ray Nance (t, vn); Joe 'Tricky Sam' Nanton, Lawrence Brown (tb); Juan Tizol (vtb); Johnny Hodges, Ben

Webster, Harry Carney, Otto Hardwick, Chauncey Haughton (reeds); Fred Guy (g); Junior Raglin (b); Sonny Greer (d); Betty Roche (v). 1/43.

 Live At Carnegie Hall Dec. 11 1943 Storyville 1038341 2CD As above, except omit Webster, Roche; add Taft Jordan (t); Jimmy Hamilton (cl, ts); Skippy Williams (ts); Al Hibbler (v). 12/43.

(*) The Duke Ellington Carnegie Hall Concerts December 1944 Prestige 24073 2CD As above, except omit Baker, Jones, Williams, Haughton, Greer; add Shelton Hemphill, Cat Anderson (t); Claude Jones (tb); Al Sears, (reeds); Hilliard Brown (d); Kay Davis, Marie Ellington (v). 12/44.

(*) The Duke Ellington Carnegie Hall Concerts January 1946 Prestige 24074 2CD As above, except omit Stewart, Nanton, Guy, Raglin, Hilliard Brown, Marie Ellington; add Francis Williams (t); Wilbur De Paris (tb); Al Lucas (g); Oscar Pettiford (b); Sonny Greer (d); Joya Sherrill (v). 1/46.

(*) The Duke Ellington Carnegie Hall Concerts December 1947 Prestige 24075 2CD As above, except omit Jordan, Anderson, De Paris, Hamilton, Lucas, Sherrill; add Harold 'Shorty' Baker, Al Killian (t); Tyree Glenn (tb, vib); Russell Procope (reeds); Fred Guy (g); Junior Raglin (b). 12/47.

Ellington's Carnegie Hall appearances began in 1943 and continued on an annual basis. The only surviving recordings are mainly in indifferent condition, and none of the Prestige CDs can really be called hi-fi, despite extensive remastering. The 1943 concert premiered 'Black, Brown And Beige' and its lukewarm reception became a notorious snub that reduced Ellington's confidence in the work. These surviving extracts are fascinating but inconclusive. The rest of the programme includes greatest hits and one or two scarcer pieces. The missing concert from the Prestige series was the December 1943 event, now restored on Storyville; sound on vinyl editions was always poor, and this really isn't much better, but there are still some characteristic glories such as 'Black And Tan Fantasy'. The 1944 concert includes many less familiar tunes – 'Blutopia', 'Suddenly It Jumped', 'Blue Cellophane' – plus more 'Black, Brown And Beige' and the debut of 'The Perfume Suite', as well as a glorious finale showcase for Nanton on 'Frankie And Johnny'. Notable in the next concert were a reworking of 'Diminuendo And Crescendo In Blue' and some fine miniatures, including 'Magenta Haze', Joya Sherrill's fine interpretation of 'The Blues' and a euphoric treatment of 'Solid Old Man'. The 'Liberian Suite' is one of the principal items of the 1947 set, but the Ray Nance feature in 'Bakiff', Duke's own spot on 'The Clothed Woman' and Carney on 'Mella Brava' are of equal interest. While all the concerts have their weak spots, each has enough fine Ellington to make it more than worthwhile.

(*) The Treasury Shows Volumes 1–9 D.E.T.S. 903 9001–9009 – each 2CD Ellington; Rex Stewart, Taft Jordan, Shelton Hemphill, Wallace Jones, Harold 'Shorty' Baker, Cat Anderson (t); Ray Nance (t, vn, v); Joe 'Tricky Sam' Nanton, Lawrence Brown, Juan Tizol (tb); Jimmy Hamilton (cl, ts); Johnny Hodges, Otto Hardwick (as); Ben Webster, Al Sears (ts); Harry Carney (bs); Billy Strayhorn (p); Fred Guy (g); Junior Raglin, Oscar Pettiford (b); Sonny Greer (d); Al Hibbler, Joya Sherrill, Kay Davis, Marie Ellington (v). 6/43–11/45.

The US Treasury Department hired Ellington to perform public service broadcasts as part of their remaining war effort in 1945, and the band worked on these sessions throughout most of 1945 and much of 1946. Many of them have survived as airshots and the music was extensively reissued during the vinyl era, in a series which ran to more than 50 LPs. Now the D.E.T.S. label (via Storyville) is putting the material onto CD for the first time, and these nine two-disc sets are the result. Besides station breaks and Duke reading out war bond promotional messages, there's a lot of vintage Ellington. Our overall rating may seem generous, given that sound quality is variable and there is a lot of repetition, but, as with so many of the major swing orchestras, away from the studios the band's treatments of even familiar fare were looser and more expansive. In addition, there are extra broadcasts from New Zanzibar and Birdland (New York), Meadowbrook Gardens (California) and the Blue Note (Chicago). When complete, this will be an exceptional archive of Ellington at work. Hard to pick out highlights, not least because there's a lot of listening here, but each set has its merits.

(*) Duke Ellington 1946 Classics 1015 Ellington; Ray Nance (t, vn, v); Taft Jordan, Shelton Hemphill, Cat Anderson, Francis Williams, Harold 'Shorty' Baker (t); Lawrence Brown, Claude Jones, Wilbur De Paris (tb); Jimmy Hamilton (cl, ts); Johnny Hodges (as); Russell Procope (as, cl); Al Sears (ts); Harry Carney (bs, cl); Fred Guy (g); Oscar Pettiford (b); Sonny Greer (d); Marion Cox, Kay Davis (v). 8–11/46.

A mixed bag: the final sessions for Victor; two tracks that were issued only in France on the Swing label; the first of several dates for Musicraft; and six V-Discs drawn from the November Carnegie Hall Concert, including the four-part 'Deep South Suite'. Sound on the latter isn't so good, but the other transfers are fine. The Victor material includes some of Ellington's ingenious transformations of other material, such as 'Beale Street Blues' and 'My Honey's Lovin' Arms', and 'Magenta Haze' is a typically gorgeous Hodges feature.

(*) Duke Ellington 1946–1947 Classics 1051 As above, except omit Cox; add Dud Bascomb (t); Tyree Glenn (tb); Al Hibbler, Chester Crumpler (v). 11/46–9/47.

Thirteen more titles for Musicraft, a V-Disc session and seven titles celebrating Duke's return to the Columbia label. The Musicrafts have been in and out of the catalogue, and this edition seems to be about as good as any other in terms of the sound. Memorable moments include the raucous 'Happy-Go-Lucky Local', Al Sears buzzing through 'Hiawatha (The Beautiful Indians)', the four-horn concerto 'Jam-A-Ditty', and a vintage Ellington pastel in 'Lady Of The Lavender Mist'.

 Duke Ellington 1947 Classics 1086 As above, except omit Anderson, De Paris, Crumpler; add Billy Strayhorn (p); Woody Herman, Delores Parker (v). 9–11/47.

All these were Columbia sessions, though several tracks were not heard until the LP era. There is some commercial flab, including versions of 'Singin' In The Rain', 'Cowboy Rhumba' (guest vocalist Woody Herman!), 'Put Yourself In My Place' and 'I Fell And Broke My Heart'. The only really characteristic Ellington date is from November 1947, with 'Stomp, Look And Listen', 'Air Conditioned Jungle' and 'Three Cent Stomp'.

(*) Duke Ellington 1947–1948 Classics 1119 Ellington; Shelton Hemphill, Francis Williams, Dud Bascomb, Herman Grimes, Al Killian, Harold 'Shorty' Baker (t); Ray Nance (t, vn); Lawrence Brown, Claude Jones, Quentin Jackson (tb); Tyree Glenn (tb, vib); Jimmy Hamilton (cl, ts); Johnny Hodges (as); Russell Procope (as, cl); Al Sears (ts); Harry Carney (bs); Billy Strayhorn (p); Fred Guy (g); Edgar Brown, Junior Raglin, Oscar Pettiford (clo, b); Sonny Greer (d); Elayne Jones (perc); Al Hibbler, Delores Parker, Kay Davis (v). 11/47–11/48.

 Duke Ellington 1949–1950 Classics 1191 As above, except omit Hemphill, Francis Williams, Grimes, Bascomb, Jones, Sears, Guy, Brown, Davis; add Nelson Williams (t); Jimmy Forrest (ts);

Wendell Marshall, Lloyd Trotman (b); Jo Jones (d); Chubby Kemp, Lu Elliott, Sara Forde (v). 10/49–10/50.

(*) Duke Ellington 1950 Classics 1217 As above, except omit Killian, Forrest, Trotman, Pettiford, Kemp, Elliott, Forde; add Cat Anderson, Andres Merenguito (t); Mercer Ellington (flhn); Paul Gonsalves (ts); Wild Bill Davis (org); John Collins (g); Joe Shulman (b), Yvonne Lanauze (v). 10–12/50.

An awkward period for Ellington. With the new LP format waiting in the wings, he could begin to think more about his extended works. But Columbia, which suspended his contract in 1950, wasn't so enchanted. Classics 1119 includes the 'Liberian Suite' (including the V-Disc instrumental version of 'I Like The Sunrise') and a few lesser-known nuggets ('New York City Blues', 'On A Turquoise Cloud'), and ends on another V-Disc recording of 'The Tattooed Bride'. Classics 1191 is much more of a hotch-potch and features the first sessions on the Mercer label, while the Columbia situation was in abeyance. The final Columbia sessions are mostly vocal features (though there is wonderful Hodges in 'On The Sunny Side Of The Street'), and the first Mercer sessions are routine vocal settings for Chubby Kemp and Sara Forde, plus the debut of Pettiford on cello in a strange quintet date. For specialists only.

Classics 1217 has the intriguing Ellington–Strayhorn piano duets, although these are listed separately as an OJC reissue under Strayhorn's name. In November, Duke returned to Columbia for one three-song session (which marked the debut of Paul Gonsalves) and a second date that offered extended studio versions of 'The Tattooed Bride' and 'Mood Indigo'.

 Duke Ellington 1950–1951 Classics 1258 Ellington; Harold 'Shorty' Baker, Nelson Williams, Cat Anderson, Andres Merenguito, Ray Nance (t); Mercer Ellington (flhn); Lawrence Brown, Quentin Jackson, Tyree Glenn, Juan Tizol, Britt Woodman (tb); Johnny Hodges, Willie Smith (as); Russell Procope (cl, as); Jimmy Hamilton (cl, ts); Paul Gonsalves (ts); Harry Carney (bs); Billy Strayhorn (p); Wendell Marshall (b); Sonny Greer, Louie Bellson (d); Yvonne Lanauze (v). 12/50–5/51.

(*) Duke Ellington 1951 Classics 1282 As above, except omit Merenguito, Mercer Ellington, Glenn, Hodges, Greer, Lanauze; add Willie Cook, Clark Terry, Dick Vance, Francis Williams (t); Lloyd Oldham (v). 6–12/51.

 Duke Ellington 1952 Classics 1320 As above, except omit Vance, Williams, Strayhorn; add Hilton Jefferson (as); Jimmy Grissom, Betty Roche (v). 3–7/52.

Here the Classics sequence enters the LP era in earnest. Classics 1258 starts with extended versons of 'Sophisticated Lady' and 'Solitude', both made for Columbia (and notable as Sonny Greer's last appearance with the orchestra), then goes into four little-known tracks by The Coronets, one of the small groups which recorded for Mercer Ellington's label. Cat almost out-Cooties Cootie Williams on 'Night Walk'. However, ensuing sessions for Columbia (marking Louie Bellson's debut on 'The Hawk Talks') and Mercer are in very average sound and lose marks for presentation. The final date, for Columbia again, is better, although the three tracks (two of which were only issued in the UK) are nothing special.

Classics 1282 starts with four more titles for Mercer. There's an almost funky 'Caravan' by a sextet (Duke on piano, Strayhorn on organ!) and Willie Smith is superb on 'Alternate'. The remaining four sessions were made for Columbia and include two extended pieces: 'A Tone Parallel To Harlem' and the almost forgotten 'Controversial Suite', which pokes gentle fun at the traditional versus modern argument which was stirring up jazz at the time.

Most of Classics 1320 is taken up with the live programme which made up RCA's Seattle Concert LP. It's a relatively routine set, in unexceptional sound, but as always there are moments to savour – not least Duke's introduction of Britt Woodman prior to 'Sultry Serenade'. After that, four tracks for Columbia, including an extended '"A" Train' where Betty Roche takes the vocal.

(*) Ellington Uptown Columbia 512917-2 Ellington; Cat Anderson, Willie Cook, Clark Terry, Ray Nance, Francis Williams, Harold 'Shorty' Baker, Shelton Hemphill, Al Killian (t); Quentin Jackson, Britt Woodman, Juan Tizol, Lawrence Brown, Claude Jones (tb); Tyree Glenn (tb, vib); Johnny Hodges (ss, as, cl); Russell Procope (as, cl); Hilton Jefferson, Willie Smith (as); Jimmy Hamilton (ts, cl); Al Sears, Paul Gonsalves (ts); Harry Carney (bs, cl); Billy Strayhorn (p); Wendell Marshall, Junior Raglin (b); Sonny Greer, Louie Bellson (d); Al Hibbler, Betty Roche (v). 5/47–6/52.

 Masterpieces By Ellington Columbia 512918-2 Ellington; Harold 'Shorty' Baker, Nelson Williams, Cat Anderson, Andres Merenguito, Ray Nance, Willie Cook, Clark Terry, Dick Vance, Francis Williams (t); Mercer Ellington (flhn); Lawrence Brown, Quentin Jackson, Tyree Glenn, Juan Tizol, Britt Woodman (tb); Johnny Hodges, Willie Smith (as); Russell Procope (cl, as); Jimmy Hamilton (cl, ts); Paul Gonsalves (ts); Harry Carney (bs); Billy Strayhorn (p); Wendell Marshall (b); Sonny Greer, Louie Bellson (d); Yvonne Lanauze. Lloyd Oldham (v). 12/50–8/51.

Ellington Uptown was always a patched-up job, bringing together the 1947 recording of 'Liberian Suite' with what were dignified as 'concert versions' of '"A" Train', 'Harlem Suite' and 'Perdido', with Louie Bellson's feature 'Skin Deep' and another look at 'The Mooche'. It all comes up very clean in this fresh remastering, especially 'Liberian Suite'. If you're collecting the Classics sequence, you'll already have all this, but Columbia's package is certainly attractive.

Masterpieces was another project to debut Ellington in the LP era, with the long versions of 'Mood Indigo', 'Sophisticated Lady', 'The Tattooed Bride' and 'Solitude'. Given the somewhat droopy feel to the music, this isn't one of our favourites, although again the new Columbia packaging is appealing.

 Duke Ellington 1952–1953 Classics 1350 Ellington; Clark Terry, Willie Cook, Ray Nance, Cat Anderson, John Carroll, John Hunt (t); Quentin Jackson, Britt Woodman (tb); Juan Tizol (vtb); Hilton Jefferson, Jimmy Hamilton, Russell Procope, Harry Carney, Rick Henderson (reeds); Wendell Marshall (b); Louie Bellson, Butch Ballard (d); Betty Roche, Billy Grissom (v). 7/52–9/53.

 Duke Ellington 1953 Classics 1398 As above, except omit Bellson, Carroll, Hunt, Roche. 4–7/53.

Classics 1350 includes a chunk of Ellington Uptown and adds a few stray final tracks made for Columbia before it starts on Duke's period with Capitol. There are some sides issued as singles and the ten-inch album Premiered By Ellington. Not the most exciting Ellington collection, but as ever there are things to savour: 'Stormy Weather' features the three trumpeters; Clark Terry is gorgeous on 'Stardust'; there are rare titles in 'Boo-Dah' and 'Blossom'; and Paul Gonsalves unexpectedly takes the Hodges role in a remake of 'Warm Valley'. The 1953 collection includes all of Piano Reflections, listed below, and some interesting pieces rejected at the time but later issued in a Mosaic set.

The 1953 collection includes all of Piano Reflections, listed below, and some interesting pieces rejected at the time but which were later issued in a Mosaic set.

 Piano Reflections Capitol 92863-2 Ellington; Wendell Marshall (b); Butch Ballard, Dave Black (d); Ralph Colier (perc). 4–12/53.

Ellington's apparent reluctance to document himself extensively as a pianist must be a source of regret, but these 1953 sessions find him pondering on 14 of his own tunes (and Mercer's 'Things Ain't What They Used To Be'). Most of them are too short to show any great development from the original themes, and Duke's habitual cat-and-mouse with the listener takes some of the pith out of the session; but it shows how distinctive his touch had become, how mannerism could become even more inimitable than Basie's minimalism, and how Ellington could fashion moving little episodes out of mere fragments.

(*) The Compete Gus Wildi Recordings Lone Hill Jazz LHJ10173 2CD Ellington; Cat Anderson, Clark Terry, Willie Cook (t); Ray Nance (t, vn, v); Britt Woodman, John Sanders, Quentin Jackson, George Jean, Alfred Cobb (tb); Johnny Hodges, Rick Henderson (as); Russell Procope (cl, as); Jimmy Hamilton (ts, cl); Paul Gonsalves (ts); Harry Carney (bs); Billy Strayhorn (cel); Jimmy Woode, Wendell Marshall (b); Sam Woodyard, Dave Black (d); Jimmy Grissom. 12/53–2/56.

This confusing-looking package brings together the albums Historically Speaking – The Duke and Duke Ellington Presents ..., made for Gus Wildi's Bethlehem label, together with the Ellington '55 set listed in brief below. The first-named set was always highly regarded amongst the '50s albums, although its series of remakes of vintage Ducal material is coloured by strange choices of tempo, and an almost jokey feel. Nevertheless, both sets found the band in good voice and the remastered sound is full and solid. Whatever one thinks about Lone Hill's eclectic policy and titling, this makes an attractive buy at a time when the Bethlehem material seems to be otherwise unavailable.

* Ellington At Newport 1956 (Complete)
Columbia C2K 64932 2CD Ellington; Cat Anderson, Willie Cook, Ray Nance, Clark Terry (t); Quentin Jackson, John Sanders, Britt Woodman (tb); Johnny Hodges, Russell Procope (as); Paul Gonsalves, Jimmy Hamilton (ts); Harry Carney (bs); Jimmy Woode (b); Sam Woodyard (d). 7/56.

The 1956 Newport Festival marked a significant upswing in Duke's critical and commercial fortunes. In large part, the triumph can be laid to Paul Gonsalves's extraordinary 27 blues choruses on 'Diminuendo And Crescendo In Blue', which CBS producer George Avakian placed out of sequence at the end of what was to be Ellington's best-selling record. Gonsalves's unprecedented improvisation (which opened up possibilities and set standards for later tenor saxophonists from John Coltrane to David Murray) was clearly spontaneous, yet in a way it dogged him for the rest of his life, and Ellington continued to introduce him, years later, as 'the star of Newport'. Gonsalves himself suggested that a particularly competitive edge to the band that night was the real reason for his playing. Johnny Hodges had just returned to the fold after a brief stint as an independent bandleader. His beautiful, almost stately solo on 'Jeep's Blues' was intended to be the climax to the concert, but Hodges found himself upstaged in the subsequent notices, and the concert firmly established Gonsalves as one of the leading soloists in jazz. Unfortunately, much of the solo was played badly off-mic (of which more later) and in the past it was slightly difficult to get a complete sense of its extraordinary impact. It does, nevertheless, dominate the album, overshadowing Hodges and, more significantly, the three-part 'Festival Suite' – heard in its original live form for the first time here – which Ellington and Strayhorn had put together for the occasion. The first part, 'Festival Junction', is more or less a blowing theme for a parade of soloists, including a first excursion by Gonsalves, who gives notice of what's to come with some blistering choruses (though not 27) on the third part, 'Newport Up'. Columbia's new edition of the music puts an entirely fresh slant on the occasion. The circumstances of how a 'virtual' stereo production came about are too complex to detail here (go to Phil Schaap's notes in the booklet for that), but essentially Columbia's mono tape was combined with a second mono recording of the music, made by Voice Of America. It was their microphone which Gonsalves was mistakenly playing into. That recording (rediscovered at the Library of Congress in the '90s) is on one channel and Columbia's on the other, meticulously synchronized.The result is an astonishing advance on previous versions. The attempted 're-creations' of the live event on the following Monday, such as the repeat of 'I Got It Bad And That Ain't Good' with two notes repaired and canned applause added, are here, as is the studio 'Newport Jazz Festival Suite' with Norman O'Connor's remarks from the live event spliced in. There are no fewer than ten new tracks too, mostly from the concert itself. The overall sound is excellent and fully conveys the near-pandemonium of the occasion!

 Duke And Friends, Connecticut Jazz Festival 1956 IAJRC 1005 As above, except add Buck Clayton (t); Willie 'The Lion' Smith, Hank Jones (p); Jimmy Grissom (v). 7/56.

This happened three weeks later. Ellington's 'Newport Jazz Festival Suite' gets another airing, but the rest is a bit of a mess, with throwaway versions of some of the hits and some blues, plus an uproarious Nance feature of 'Her Cherie'. Of some interest are extra tracks with Clayton fronting a small Ellington group and three numbers by the Lion. Good concert sound.

* Such Sweet Thunder Columbia CK 655684 Ellington; Cat Anderson, Willie Cook, Ray Nance, Clark Terry (t); Quentin Jackson, John Sanders, Britt Woodman (tb); Johnny Hodges, Russell Procope (as); Paul Gonsalves, Jimmy Hamilton (ts); Harry Carney (bs); Jimmy Woode (b); Sam Woodyard (d). 8/56–5/57.

The wit and sagacity of his nod to Will Shakespeare makes for one of the most delightful of all Ellington records. Hard to choose between the pleasures of hearing Clark Terry cough out the words (or so it seems) 'Lord, what fools these mortals be' through his horn at the end of 'Up And Down'; or Britt Woodman's remarkable solo on 'Sonnet To Hank Cinq'; or Hodges' heartbreaking delineation of 'Star-Crossed Lovers'. Sweet, swinging, perfect Ellingtonia. This new edition sounds terrific, with the music all in stereo for the first time, and there are an extra ten tracks of alternative takes, a few associated pieces from nearby sessions, and the huge (nine-minute) first version of 'Star-Crossed Lovers'.

 A Drum Is A Woman Columbia CK 65567 As above, except add Betty Glamann (hp); Candido Camero, Terry Snyder (perc); Margaret Tynes, Joya Sherrill (v). 57.

Ellington's 'history of jazz' is a sly oratorio with virtuoso singing by Tynes and Sherrill, as well as an amusing commentary on jazz history by Duke as narrator and composer. Somewhat dated, perhaps, though not a bad antidote to the earnest history-mongering of the '90s from one of the music's sharpest intellects.

* Black, Brown And Beige Columbia CK 65566 Ellington; Cat Anderson, Harold 'Shorty' Baker, Clark Terry (t); Ray Nance (t, vn); Quentin Jackson, John Sanders, Britt Woodman (tb); Jimmy Hamilton (cl); Bill Graham (as); Russell Procope (cl, as); Paul Gonsalves (ts); Harry Carney (bs); Jimmy Woode (b); Sam Woodyard (d); Mahalia Jackson (v). 2/58.

Duke was hurt by the indifferent reception that his great work received on its debut, and this truncated version was his only full-scale studio treatment of it. Even this was coolly received, but it sounds like vintage and often glorious Ellington now. Mahalia Jackson's magisterial presence adds to what now seems like the first sacred concert. There is what amounts to an entire alternative take of the suite, all of it in beautifully remastered sound, with great notes.

(*) Live At Newport 1958 Columbia C2K53584 2CD Ellington; Harold 'Shorty' Baker, Clark Terry, Cat Anderson (t); Ray Nance (t, v); Quentin Jackson, John Sanders, Britt Woodman (tb); Harry Carney, Paul Gonsalves, Jimmy Hamilton, Johnny Hodges, Russell Procope, Gerry Mulligan (reeds); Mildred Falls (p); Jimmy Woode (b); Sam Woodyard (d); Lil Greenwood, Mahalia Jackson, Ozzie Bailey (v). 7/58.

The original Newport 1958 LP was actually a studio re-creation, cut a few weeks later. This set restores the original performances and covers plenty of extra ground. Some useful rarities such as 'Princess Blue', the Clark Terry feature 'Juniflip' and a track where the guesting Mulligan spars with Harry Carney, 'Prima Bara Dubla'. Mahalia Jackson is another unlikely drop-in and she belts out an impressive 'Come Sunday'. There are plenty of loose ends, but this is a good one to have restored.

(*) At The Alhambra Pablo 5313-2 As above, except omit Greenwood, Jackson, Bailey, Mulligan. 10/58.

In excellent sound, this is the band at Paris's Alhambra Theatre. It's a happy blend of old and new, from the '20s staples to then-current tunes like 'Juniflip', 'Jam With Sam' and 'Hi Fi Fo Fum'. Hodges gets three luxuriant features and Harry Carney makes light work of the difficult 'Frustration', although Jimmy Hamilton nearly falls over his feet on 'Newport Up'.

* Back To Back Verve 521404-2 Ellington; Johnny Hodges (as); Harry 'Sweets' Edison (t); Les Spann (g); Al Hall, Sam Jones (b); Jo Jones (d). 2/59.

* Side By Side Verve 521405-2 As above, except add Roy Eldridge (t); Lawrence Brown (tb); Ben Webster (ts); Billy Strayhorn (p); Wendell Marshall (b). 58–59.

Back To Back is a small-group (and small-hours) classic, now given a new remastering in Verve's Master Edition series. The opening 'Wabash Blues' sets an attractive 32-bar theme over an initially disconcerting Latin rhythm that goes all the way back to W. C. Handy's experiments with tango measures in a blues context. Hodges and Edison take contrasting approaches on their solos, with the trumpeter working the changes in fairly orthodox fashion, Hodges sticking much closer to the melody. 'Basin Street Blues' features Spann in a slightly wavering but completely authentic solo, after which Hodges comes in with two delightfully varied choruses. Ellington's own solo is a curious affair, with a slightly wistful quality but also marked by repeated references to his own youthful style, in particular the descending arpeggios that became something of a tic.

The varied 12-bar form of 'St Louis Blues' is further developed in Ellington's fast, accurate introduction. The two horns do a call-and-response routine that further underlines their different approaches. Duke is the featured soloist again on 'Loveless Love' ('Careless Love'), a traditional tune with some kinship to the blues, but not a strict blues at all. Fittingly, though, the set ends with 'Royal Garden Blues', an orthodox 12-bar structure given a deliberately basic (Basie-like?) treatment.

The companion piece, Side By Side, brings Strayhorn in for Ellington at the piano and enlists Webster, Eldridge and Brown. Hodges dominates again, but his friends all have some pertinent remarks, and although the material is jam-session stuff as usual, it falls open to the expertise on show here. Three tracks from the session with Duke, including a classic 'Stompy Jones', are carried over to this one.

(*) Live At The Blue Note Roulette 828637-2 2CD Ellington; Cat Anderson, Harold 'Shorty' Baker, Fats Ford, Clark Terry (t); Ray Nance (t, vn); Quentin Jackson, John Sanders, Britt Woodman (tb); Jimmy Hamilton (cl, ts); Russell Procope (cl, as); Johnny Hodges (as); Paul Gonsalves (ts); Harry Carney (bs); Billy Strayhorn (p); Jimmy Woode, Johnny Pate (b); Sam Woodyard, Jimmy Johnson (d). 8/59.

The session at Chicago's Blue Note is drawn from three sets on a single night. Overhead mics caught the performances, which consequently have a live but slightly askew feel, as if we're listening from the gods. Four tunes from Anatomy Of A Murder get a welcome outing, Strayhorn comes on to do a duet, Stan Kenton and June Christy drop by to say hello; a typical night's work. Best moment: the perennially underrated Baker blowing as sweet as he could on 'Almost Cried'.

(*) Blues In Orbit Columbia CK 44051 Ellington; Cat Anderson, Harold 'Shorty' Baker, Clark Terry (t); Ray Nance (t, vn); Quentin Jackson, John Sanders, Britt Woodman, Booty Wood (tb); Matthew Gee (bhn); Harry Carney, Paul Gonsalves, Bill Graham, Jimmy Hamilton, Johnny Hodges, Russell Procope (reeds); Billy Strayhorn (p); Jimmy Woode (b); Jimmy Johnson, Sam Woodyard (d). 2/58, 2/59.

If 'Blues In Orbit' was some sort of Ducal welcome to the age of Sputnik, the previously unreleased 'Track 360' is an elegant train-ride, Pullman-class and with a nod in the direction of Honegger's popular concert-opener 'Pacific 231', swaying over a track laid down by Sam Woodyard; the drummer fell ill shortly afterwards and isn't heard on the rest of the album.

There are two more tracks which weren't on the original release. 'Brown Penny' is a state-of-the-art Hodges solo, played in imitation of Kay Davis's earlier vocal version and sounding as if it is being poured out of a bottle. The other also features Hodges on a slightly too syrupy reading of 'Sentimental Lady' (aka 'I Didn't Know About You'). Hodges rather dominates the album, soloing even on 'Smada', which was usually a Hamilton spot. Hamilton himself has mixed fortunes, sounding anonymous on tenor on his own 'Three J's Blues' and 'Pie Eye's Blues'. The latter is a rackety 12-bar that compares badly with the subsequent 'C Jam Blues', where Hamilton goes back to clarinet and rounds off a sequence of solos that includes excellent work by Gonsalves, the little-known Matthew Gee and Booty Wood. A very fine album, with just enough new compositional input – 'Blues In Blueprint' and 'The Swinger's Jump' – to vary a slightly predictable profile.

(*) Festival Session Columbia 512916-2 Ellington; Cat Anderson, Harold 'Shorty' Baker, Clark Terry, Ray Nance, Willie Cook, Andres Merenguito (t); Quentin Jackson (tb, b); Britt

Woodman, John Sanders (tb); Johnny Hodges (as); Russell Procope (as, cl); Jimmy Hamilton (ts, cl); Paul Gonsalves (ts); Harry Carney (bs, bcl); Jimmy Woode, Joe Benjamin (b); Sam Woodyard, Jimmy Johnson (d). 9/59.

Not a live session, but a studio date meant to collect some of the pieces Duke had played on his spin through the summer's festivals. One curiosity is that there were three bassists playing: Woode was late, Quentin Jackson subbed on the first tune, Joe Benjamin on another, and then Woode turned up. The Gonsalves feature 'Cop-Out Extension' was recorded several times, but much of the rest – including the three-part 'Duael [sic] Fuel' and four-part 'Idiom '59' – were hardly touched again. 'Launching Pad' (aka 'Blues In The Round') is the finale, and in the notes Clark Terry says, 'I wrote the whole damn thing. Duke orchestrated it.' Clark was further miffed that Duke gave the trumpet solo to Ray Nance!

 Anatomy Of A Murder Columbia CK 65569 As for Blues In Orbit, except omit Gee, Woodyard; add Gerald Wilson (t). 5–6/59.

Ellington's score for Otto Preminger's film strikes a moderate number of sparks. The title-theme shows he could write effective thriller material for Hollywood, but the more impressionistic music tends to sound like middleweight Ellington. Columbia's fresh edition adds a lot of odd bits and pieces – the single version of the title-piece, an interview with Ellington, and so forth – interesting, but for scholars only.

(*) Live At Monterey 1960 / ... Part Two Status DSTS 1008 / 1009 Ellington; Willie Cook, Andres Meringuito, Eddie Mullins (t); Ray Nance (t, v); Quentin Jackson, Booty Wood, Britt Woodman (tb); Juan Tizol (vtb); Jimmy Hamilton, Russell Procope (cl, as); Johnny Hodges (as); Paul Gonsalves (ts); Harry Carney (bs, cl); Aaron Bell (b); Sam Woodyard (d); Lil Greenwood, Jimmy Rushing (v). 9/60.

In fine concert sound, here's some previously unheard Ellington from 1960. Volume one has several seldom-encountered tunes; the second disc is slighter stuff, with Rushing doing three amiable turns and a run across 'Red Carpet' (the rest of the disc features the Cannonball Adderley group). Wally Heider did the original recording, and though some of the soloists drift off, the clout of the band comes over very well.

* The Duke Columbia C3K 65841 3CD Ellington with various groups. 27–62.

This is the place to consider Columbia's Centenary compilation from their Ellington holdings. It starts with 1927's 'Hot And Bothered' and ends on the titanic 'Battle Royal' bust-up with Basie. There are plenty of interesting and unobvious choices, particularly on disc two, which covers the period 1947–52 and is otherwise largely missed by Columbia's other reissues. A detailed booklet is a pleasing extra, with many photographs, and the remastering is up to present standards. An excellent buy.

(*) Featuring Paul Gonsalves Original Jazz Classics OJC 623 Ellington; Cat Anderson, Bill Berry, Roy Burrowes, Ray Nance (t); Lawrence Brown, Chuck Connors, Leon Cox (tb); Russell Procope (cl, as); Johnny Hodges (as); Paul Gonsalves (ts); Jimmy Hamilton (cl, ts); Harry Carney (bs); Aaron Bell (b); Sam Woodyard (d). 5/62.

A deserved album feature for a saxophonist who contributed enormously to the Ellington sound and who has made a considerable impact on contemporary players like David Murray, but whose reputation has been somewhat eclipsed by that of Johnny Hodges. The tenorist's solo material is typically extended and supremely logical, and his tone, sometimes a little muffled and lacking in individuality, is razor-sharp here. Whether the 'name' ranking was planned beforehand or was awarded in recognition of particularly inspired playing isn't clear, but this is a significant set by one of the unsung geniuses of the saxophone, who joins Warne Marsh and Richie Kamuca in the ranks of those who have been passed over in favour of noisier talents.

 Duke Ellington Meets Coleman Hawkins Impulse! 051162-2 Ellington; Ray Nance (c, vn); Lawrence Brown (tb); Johnny Hodges (as); Coleman Hawkins (ts); Harry Carney (bs, bcl); Aaron Bell (b); Sam Woodyard (d). 8/62.

The sketchy nature of this meeting of giants finally tells against it. The good-natured fun of 'Limbo Jazz' is the tonic note of the date, and while there is much entertaining playing by the small band on hand, one wishes for some of the gravitas which at least got into the date with Coltrane (see below). 'Solitude' is added to the original LP programme.

(*) Duke Ellington And John Coltrane Impulse! 051166-2 Ellington; John Coltrane (ts, ss); Aaron Bell, Jimmy Garrison (b); Elvin Jones, Sam Woodyard (d). 9/62.

It's known that Coltrane was going through a difficult transitional phase when this remarkable opportunity was presented to him. Six months before, he had recorded the simply titled Coltrane with what was to be the classic quartet. He was, though, stretching for something beyond its surprisingly relaxed lyricism and had managed to wreck his mouthpiece (no minor loss for a saxophonist) trying to improve its lay. His work around this time is, in retrospect, quite conventional, certainly in relation to what was to follow, and it's often Ellington, as so often in the past, who sounds the 'younger' and more adventurous player. It is, for all that, a disappointing record which peaks early with a brilliant reading of 'In A Sentimental Mood' but never reaches such heights again.

(*) Money Jungle Blue Note 46398 Ellington; Charles Mingus (b); Max Roach (d). 9/62.

Set up by United Artists, this was intended to put Duke in the company of two modernists of the next generation, both of whom (Mingus especially) had drawn particular sustenance from his example. It was the first trio recording the bassist had made since the 1957 Jubilee sessions with Hampton Hawes and Dannie Richmond. Despite his apparent misgivings before and during the session, Mingus completely steals the show, playing complicated countermelodies and dizzying, out-of-tempo runs in every register. 'Money Jungle' itself and 'Very Special' are both reasonably orthodox 12-bars and both sound improvised. 'La Fleurette Africaine' is clearly developed from a simple melodic conception, stated at the beginning by the piano. Long-standing Ellington staples 'Warm Valley' and 'Caravan' are rather less successful, and it isn't clear on the former whether an agitated Mingus is unfamiliar with the changes or whether he is suffering one of the minor huffs Ellington recounted later.

(*) The Reprise Studio Recordings 1962–1965 Warners/Rhino 8122-73658-2 5CD Ellington; Cootie Williams, Cat Anderson, Roy Burrowes, Bill Berry, Eddie Preston, Herbie Jones, Nat Woodard, Mercer Ellington, Howard McGhee, Rolf Ericson (t); Ray Nance (t, c, vn); Lawrence Brown, Chuck Connors, Buster Cooper (tb); Russell Procope (cl, as); Johnny Hodges (as); Jimmy Hamilton (cl, ts); Paul Gonsalves (ts); Harry Carney (cl, bcl, bs); Billy Strayhorn (p); Stéphane Grappelli (vn); Svend Asmussen (vla); Ernie Shepard, Major Holley, Peck Morrison, John Lamb (b); Sam Woodyard (d); Paris/Hamburg/Stockholm Symphony Orchestras. 11/62–4/65.

Warners have solved the problem of putting together an expensive and time-consuming reissue project by letting someone else do the work. This is a completely unembellished reprint of Mosaic's Ellington-on-Reprise box – mastering, artwork, sleeve-notes, it's all the same. Given that Mosaic do this kind of thing better than anyone else – if you like their black-and-white minimalism, that is – it's a sensible decision.

The late Mark Tucker contributed an extensive essay to the Mosaic package, and though he suggests that the Reprise sessions 'received scant acclaim and little critical scrutiny', even his notes betray the feeling that a lot of the music in the ten album-length sessions which Ellington set down is of secondary importance. The one masterwork is Afro-Bossa, a beautiful set of a dozen Ellington and Strayhorn miniatures which might almost hark back to the dazzling early-'40s era in their compact ingenuity. The Symphonic Ellington realizes one of Duke's ambitions in presenting 'Harlem' and 'Night Creature' in a form which twins the band with three different symphony orchestras, and the final Concert In The Virgin Islands is a live-in-the-studio re-creation of a typical mid-'60s Ellington programme, old favourites mixed with new entries.

After this, though, we get two albums of pop covers, one of music from Mary Poppins, a greatest-hits package and two sessions which weren't even released during the Reprise years: one collection of big-band covers and the unlikely Jazz Violin Session, where Svend Asmussen and Stéphane Grappelli joined Ray Nance for a lot of bowing and scraping. Ellington's knack for teasing great performances out of unpromising material was always an integral part of his own tradition: here, for instance, one can find 'I Can't Stop Loving You' and 'Feed The Birds', treatments which can stand alongside such earlier masterpieces as 'The Sidewalks Of New York'. But the great moments are scattered, and most of these sessions feel much more dated than Afro-Bossa. Given Ellington's habitual masking of his true feelings, it's hard to divine what his priorities really were at this point. As achievements to be proud of, the great works of the '60s were surely the big-scale pieces, yet Duke hankered after being on jukeboxes and the radio, and a lot of his touring was still playing for dancers.

What Frank Sinatra expected from Ellington when he signed him to Reprise is even harder to figure out. The ballyhoo at the outset suggested that Duke would have carte blanche over what he wanted to record and would take on a wider A&R role for the label. Yet the association lasted less than three years, Reprise never really got going in jazz terms, and surely some of these dates were the product of 'suggestions' from outside Duke's own camp. One valuable thing, though, was the sound of Ellington's Reprise sessions: finally, the sonic richness of the Ellington ensemble was set down in consistent, high fidelity, and perhaps the greatest pleasure of these five discs is in sitting back and basking in it …

 Harlem Pablo 2308-245 Ellington; Cat Anderson, Rolf Ericson, Herbie Jones, Cootie Williams (t); Lawrence Brown, Buster Cooper, Chuck Connors (tb); Russell Procope (as, cl); Johnny Hodges (as); Jimmy Hamilton (cl, ts); Paul Gonsalves (ts); Harry Carney (bs, bcl, cl); Major Holley, Jimmy Woode (b); Sam Woodyard (d). 64.

In 1964 Ellington made a triumphal return to Carnegie Hall, the scene of the famous wartime concerts. The title-piece remains one of Duke's most effective big-scale works, and the rest is a useful mix of standard hits and well-turned features for the band's good guys.

(*) In The Uncommon Market Pablo 2308-247 Ellington; Cat Anderson, Roy Burrowes, Cootie Williams (t); Ray Nance (t, vn); Lawrence Brown, Chuck Connors, Buster Cooper (tb); Johnny Hodges (as); Russell Procope (as, cl); Jimmy Hamilton (ts, cl); Paul Gonsalves (ts); Harry Carney (bs); Ernie Shepard (b); Sam Woodyard (d). N.D.

Undated, but this probably comes from the same period as the above. Challengingly unfamiliar scores – 'Bula', 'E.S.P.', 'Silk Lace' – and trio performances of two concepts of 'The Shepherd' make this a valuable session. The soloing is not so much below par as clearly subordinated to collective values, and the ensembles repay the closest attention.

(*) Berlin '65 Paris '67 Pablo 5304-2 Ellington; Cat Anderson, Herbie James, Cootie Williams, Mercer Ellington, Ray Nance, Money Johnson (t); Lawrence Brown, Chuck Connors, Buster Cooper (tb); Russell Procope (as, cl); Johnny Hodges (as); Jimmy Hamilton (ts, cl); Paul Gonsalves (ts); Harry Carney (bs); John Lamb (b); Sam Woodyard, Rufus Jones (d). 65–67.

Echoes from a couple of European stopovers, although smartly chosen and with numerous highlights. The great set-piece of 'Ad Lib On Nippon' features Ellington playing cat-and-mouse with John Lamb; but it's the features for Gonsalves and Hodges, each at their most magnetic and songful, that raise the enjoyment level to the maximum.

(*) Soul Call Verve 539785-2 As above, except omit Nance, Johnson. 7/66.

This Verve LP originally appeared as a stand-alone disc, and it's been extended to CD length with music from four different festival sets at Juan-les-Pins. The important pieces are a vivacious reading of 'La Plus Belle Africaine', deliciously lit up by Woodyard's skittering rhythms and Carney's stately solo, the bubbling near-calypso 'West Indian Pancake' and a couple of Such Sweet Thunder excerpts. Loaded with atmosphere.

 A Concert Of Sacred Music Status DSTS 1015 As above, except omit Rufus Jones, Woodyard; add Louie Bellson (d); Bunny Briggs (tap); Tony Watkins, Jon Hendricks, Jimmy McPhail, Esther Merrill, Herman McCoy Choir (v). 66.

Although not all of this is new material as such – it includes both 'New World A-Comin'' and 'Come Sunday' – this live set from Grace Cathedral in Los Angeles is effectively the first Sacred Concert. The band is often peripheral to the various singers and choirs engaged for the concert: Hendricks has four showcases, the effulgent Tony Watkins and Esther Merrill have three, Bunny Briggs taps his way through 'David Danced Before The Lord' and the Herman McCoy Choir handles three pieces in the spirit. Ellington's own principal involvement comes in his piano solo version of 'New World A-Comin''. An inconclusive collection of bits and pieces, salvaged from damaged tapes, and in really quite respectable sound.

 The Popular Duke Ellington RCA Victor Gold 09026 638802 As above, except omit Bellson, vocalists; add Sam Woodyard (d). 66.

Dave Hassinger secured a big, almost voluptuous sound for the band at RCA's Music Center of the World studio on this session of remakes, 11 venerable nuggets from the book plus a new blues called 'The Twitch'. The performances are nothing special, but somehow the band summoned considerable heart on tunes they must have done thousands of times. Hodges is almost lubricious on 'I Got It Bad And That Ain't Good' and Williams is sublime in 'The Mooche' and 'Creole Love Call'.

* The Far East Suite Bluebird 82876-55614-2 Ellington; Cat Anderson, Mercer Ellington, Herbie Jones, Cootie Williams (t);

Lawrence Brown, Chuck Connors, Buster Cooper (tb); Harry Carney, Paul Gonsalves, Jimmy Hamilton, Johnny Hodges, Russell Procope (reeds); John Lamb (b); Rufus Jones (d). 12/66.

It should really have been The Near East Suite. In 1963, the State Department sent the Ellington band on a tour that took in Ceylon, India and Pakistan, most of the Middle East, and Persia. The tour was eventually interrupted by the assassination of JFK, but Duke and co-writer Strayhorn slowly absorbed the sights and tone-colours of those weeks, and nearly three years later went into the studio to record the suite. Typical of Ellington's interpretation of the genre, it is really little more than a well-balanced programme of individual songs but with a greater-than-usual degree of overall coherence, summed up at the end by 'Amad'. 'The Tourist Point Of View' serves as an overture and a reminder of the Duke's characteristic sound, and it introduces two of the most important solo voices, Anderson and Gonsalves. 'Bluebird Of Delhi' relates to a mynah that mocked Billy Strayhorn with a beautiful song (played by Jimmy Hamilton) and then brought him down with the resounding raspberry one hears at the end of the piece.

What follows is arguably the most beautiful single item in Ellington's and Strayhorn's entire output. Hodges' solo on 'Isfahan' is like attar of roses, once smelt, impossible to forget. Critical attention has almost always focused on Hodges, but it's important to be aware of the role of the backing arrangements, a line for the saxophones that seems as monumental as the place it celebrates. The other unquestionable masterpiece of the set is 'Mount Harissa', a soft, almost spiritual opening from Ellington, building up into a sinuous Gonsalves solo over a compulsive drum-and-cymbal pattern and huge orchestral interjections. An evocation of Agra, location of the Taj Mahal, is quite properly assigned to Harry Carney, in superb voice.

Ellington's ability to communicate points of contact and conflict between cultures, assimilating the blues to Eastern modes in tracks like 'Blue Pepper (Far East Of The Blues)', never sounds unduly self-conscious. This remains a postwar peak.

(*) 1967 European Tour Lone Hill Jazz LHJ10105 2CD Ellington; Cat Anderson, Cootie Williams, Herbie Jones, Mercer Ellington (t); Lawrence Brown, Chuck Connors, Buster Cooper (tb); Jimmy Hamilton (cl, ts); Russell Procope (as, cl); Johnny Hodges (as); Paul Gonsalves (ts); Harry Carney (bs, cl, bcl); John Lamb (b); Rufus Jones (d). 2/67.

Recorded in the Teatro Sistina in Rome, with the band in good heart. Besides things like the warm-up blues 'The Twitch', there are some interesting and unfamiliar pieces: 'Up Jump', 'Rue Bleu', 'Wild Onions', 'Mara Gold' and 'Chromatic Love Affair' among them. It's a fine in-person portrait of the band in one of its last great incarnations. Sound is pretty decent, though there are some drop-outs and what sounds like the odd speed-wobble here and there.

 The Jaywalker Storyville 101 8390 As above, except add Emmanuel Abdul-Rahim (perc). 3–6/67.

A mix of Ellington rarities to go with the disc of solo Duke which Storyville have also recently released (see below). Music for the stage as well as more-familiar pieces such as 'The Shepherds' and 'Blood Count'. A pendant to the essential albums but perfectly enjoyable on its own terms.

(*) The Intimacy Of The Blues Original Jazz Classics OJC 624 Ellington; Cat Anderson, Willie Cook (t); Lawrence Brown (tb); Norris Turney (f); Johnny Hodges (as); Harold Ashby, Paul Gonsalves (ts); Harry Carney (bs); Wild Bill Davis (org); Joe Benjamin, Victor Gaskin, Paul Kondziela, John Lamb (b); Rufus Jones (d). 3/67–6/70.

Delightful small-group settings, of which the 1967 'Combo Suite' (incorporating the title-piece, 'Out South', 'Near North' and 'Soul Country') is far and away the best. Even in restricted settings like this, Ellington manages to get a tremendous depth of sound, and the disposition of horns is such that Carney's line often suggests that a whole section is at work. The tenor is contrastingly quieter and less forceful, which has the same effect.

* ... And His Mother Called Him Bill RCA Victor 74321851512 Ellington; Cat Anderson, Mercer Ellington, Herbie Jones, Cootie Williams (t); Clark Terry (flhn); Lawrence Brown, Chuck Connors, Buster Cooper, John Sanders (tb); Harry Carney, Johnny Hodges, Paul Gonsalves, Jimmy Hamilton, Russell Procope (reeds); Aaron Bell, Jeff Castleman (b); Steve Little, Sam Woodyard (d). 8–11/67.

This is Ellington's tribute to Billy Strayhorn, who died in May 1967. The mood is primarily one of loss and yearning, and Strayhorn titles like 'U.M.M.G.', standing for 'Upper Manhattan Medical Group', and 'Blood Count' bear poignant witness to his prolonged final illness. Hodges' solo on the latter is almost unbearable and it is surpassed in creative terms only by the later 'Day-Dream'. 'U.M.M.G.' has an urgent, ambulance-ride quality, largely conveyed by Ellington's clattering piano, that sets it in sharp opposition to the easy swing of the opening 'Boo-Dah'.

The CD has four previously unreleased tracks, including 'Smada', 'My Little Brown Book' and (another Hodges feature) 'Lotus Blossom'; but the main interest focuses on the tracks mentioned above and on the astonishing 'All Day Long', which counts as one of Duke's most devastating orchestral conceptions, as daring as anything in the modern movement.

 Second Sacred Concert Prestige P 24045 Ellington; Cat Anderson, Mercer Ellington, Cootie Williams (t); Lawrence Brown, Buster Cooper (tb); Harry Carney, Paul Gonsalves, Johnny Hodges, Russell Procope (reeds); Jeff Castleman (b); Sam Woodyard (d); voices. 68.

Ellington wrote church music in his last few years. The second Sacred Concert is a blend of jazz, classical and black gospel materials, profoundly influenced by the large-scale Masses and praises of Mary Lou Williams, Ellington's only serious rival in jazz composition on the large scale. Despite the dimensions of the piece and the joyous, ringing concords, it is a surprisingly dark work, with a tragic sub-theme that constantly threatens to break through. Non-believers will still appreciate the extraordinary part-writing; for Christians, it remains an overwhelming musical experience.

(*) Latin American Suite Original Jazz Classics OJC 469 As above. 9/68.

Typically, this was not an attempt to duplicate the sounds and rhythms Ellington and his band heard on their first trans-equatorial trip in 1968. Where most composer/bandleaders would have packed the rhythm section with congas, shakers and timbales, Ellington conveys a strong Latin feel with his regular rhythm section. On the short 'Tina', an impression of Argentina, he uses a small rhythm group with two bassists and works a bluesy variation on the tango. The bass is again important on the jovial 'Latin American Sunshine', paired with Ellington on an untypical theme statement. The opening 'Oclupaca' (read it backwards) is a bright, danceable theme that recalls the Latin-influenced big bands of the '30s and '40s. And that is the overall impression of the set. There is a nostalgic feel underneath its typically adventurous arrangements and voicings. There's a wistful quality to 'The Sleeping Lady And The Giant Who Watches

Over Her', ostensibly the two mountains overlooking Mexico City; but one wonders if Ellington wasn't thinking about Latin America and the neo-colonial United States, and expressing a tinge of regret that he hadn't plunged into the music of the southern continent earlier in his career.

(*) Up In Duke's Workshop Original Jazz Classics OJC 633 Ellington; Johnny Coles, Willie Cook, Mercer Ellington, Money Johnson, Jimmy Owens, Eddie Preston, Alan Rubin, Fred Stone, Cootie Williams (t); Tyree Glenn, Bennie Green, Benny Powell, Julian Priester, Vince Prudente, Malcolm Taylor, Booty Wood (tb); Russell Procope (as, cl); Johnny Hodges, Harold Minerve, Buddy Pearson, Norris Turney (as); Harold Ashby, Paul Gonsalves (ts); Harry Carney (bs); Joe Benjamin, Victor Gaskin, Paul Kondziela (b); Rufus Jones (d). 4/69–12/72.

The line-ups don't actually vary very much, but there are a number of relatively unfamiliar names, notably those trying to fill Johnny Hodges' shoes, for which they should have been assigned rabbits' feet. As the title implies, these are working sessions – and slightly tentative ones at that. The early 'Black Butterfly' and the interesting 'Neo-Creole' are significant pieces, but in only eight cuts there's a fair bit of slack.

CORE COLLECTION

* New Orleans Suite

Atlantic 81227-3670-2 Ellington; Cootie Williams, Money Johnson, Al Rubin, Fred Stone (t); Booty Wood, Julian Priester, Chuck Connors (tb); Dave Taylor (btb); Johnny Hodges, Russell Procope, Norris Turney, Harry Carney, Paul Gonsalves (reeds); Wild Bill Davis (org); Joe Benjamin (b); Rufus Jones (d). 4–5/70.

This remains our favourite among the later big-scale works. Ellington looked to create another of his quasi-historical overviews here, but there was no commentary, just a sequence of intensely beautiful vignettes. The rollicking 'Blues For New Orleans', which opens the set, features Davis in a very effective cameo, but the wellspring of this album is the sound of the orchestra rather than individual soloists; the reed section is truly on song for the last time (Hodges died during the making of the album and is absent from the final tracks). Gonsalves and Carney abide, though, and the scoring for 'Second Line', 'Bourbon Street Jingling Jollies' and 'Portrait Of Mahalia Jackson' is exceptionally expressive. 'Portrait Of Wellman Braud' is also a fascinating rhythmic exercise. Atlantic's remastering sounds terrific.

 The Afro-Eurasian Eclipse Original Jazz Classics OJC 645 Ellington; Mercer Ellington, Money Johnson, Eddie Preston, Cootie Williams (t); Chuck Connors, Malcolm Taylor, Booty Wood (tb); Russell Procope (cl, as); Norris Turney (as); Harold Ashby, Paul Gonsalves (ts); Harry Carney (bs); Joe Benjamin (b); Rufus Jones (d). 71.

World music of a very high order. Ellington's understanding of non-Western forms was often limited to a grasp of unusual tone-colours, but here, on 'Chinoiserie', 'Didjeridoo' and 'Afrique', he produces something that sounds genuinely alien. The original Fantasy release sounded veiled and mysterious, but the CD reissue is quite bright, perhaps too much so for music of this sort. However, sharper resolution does confirm a strong impression that, far from being a by-blow, these pieces are essential items in the Ellington canon.

 The Piano Player Storyville 101 8399 Ellington (p solo). 61–71.

There is so little solo Ellington extant that a disc of 'the piano-player' by himself might seem like a great discovery. But these are mostly bits and pieces, sketches and warm-ups, covering a decade of music. The six-part 'The River' is probably the standout piece. But mostly this is Duke typically doodling to himself.

() Live At The Witney Impulse! 11732 Ellington; Joe Benjamin (b); Rufus Jones (d). 4/72.

Another rare concert featuring the piano-player – entirely by himself on many of the tunes. Nine rambling minutes of 'New World A-Comin'' and a tune called 'A Mural From Two Perspectives', which is so clumsily played that it seems even Duke doesn't know it, are rather discouraging. There is much kidding around with the audience on the up-tempo pieces and the hits, and he even chucks in a minute or so of 'Soda Fountain Rag', his first composition. The piano sound is bass-heavy and there is an audible hum during quiet passages.

 This One's For Blanton Original Jazz Classics OJC 810 Ellington; Ray Brown (b). 12/72.

An inventive idea of Norman Granz, to pay tribute to Blanton via his boss and a later disciple. It's no great masterwork, though, since Ellington seems to have gone at it with the usual throwaway elegance that he invested in all of his spotlight piano work; but the interesting piece is the 'Fragmented Suite For Piano And Bass'. Probably the best of the later albums starring Duke's piano, all the same.

() Duke's Big 4 Pablo 2310703 Ellington; Joe Pass (g); Ray Brown (b); Louie Bellson (d). 73.

A joshing sort of set that put little demand on the improvisational instincts of any of the participants. This was the kind of stuff they could all do blindfold at festivals, and apart from some of Duke's chording, which is typically unpredictable, there's not much to listen to.

 In Sweden 1973 Caprice 21599 Ellington; Money Johnson, Johnny Coles, Barry Lee Hall, Mercer Ellington, Rolf Ericson (t, flhn); Vince Prudente, Art Baron, Chuck Connors, Åke Persson (tb); Russell Procope (as, cl); Harold Minerve (as, f, picc); Harold Ashby (ts, cl); Percy Marion (ts); Harry Carney (bs, bcl); George Wein, Nils Lindberg (p); Joe Benjamin (b); Rocky White (d); Alice Babs, Anita Moore, Tony Watkins (v). 10/73.

() Eastbourne Performance RCA Victor Gold 74321 303162 As above, except omit Ericson, Persson, Wein, Lindberg, Babs. 12/73.

The Swedish concert was clearly a happy occasion, with the final Ellington band augmented by old hand Ericson, trombone master Persson and Alice Babs, a singer Duke held in high esteem. All three have their moments, but Alice is especially fine on 'Serenade To Sweden' and 'Checkered Hat'. Lindberg and Wein sit in on a couple of encores and some of the poorer sides of this edition of the orchestra have been left out of the concert tapes, which are in good, clear sound.

The Eastbourne set is not quite as bad as its reputation. There are dreadful moments for Moore and Watkins, and some of the features seem redundant, an admission that the band too was living on borrowed time. But a final 'Creole Love Call' retains its elegance, and Ellington himself, with his characteristic ability to shrug off illness and fatigue for a performance, sounds very good on 'Pitter, Panther, Patter' – his very last officially recorded feature.

Also, in brief:

 Duke Ellington Presents Ivie Anderson Columbia 501654-2 2CD. 2/32–2/40.
A good idea to collect some of the best records featuring Ellington's finest singer: 32 tracks, full personnels, lyrics, but the remastering is poor.

(*) At The Hurricane Storyville 101 8359. 4–6/43.
Three radio shows from a swank eaterie at 49th and Broadway. Sound is decent, though with gaps; Betty Roche (v) gets one of her largest features in the Ducal discography; and Juan Tizol (tb) springs a surprise with 'Nevada' from the Tommy Dorsey book.

 The Duke In Washington Storyville STCD 8310. 12/43–4/69.
An entertaining compilation of hometown material spread across a quarter-century: an astonishing reception at the Naval Training Center in 1944 and a piano solo dedication to the First Lady from the 1969 birthday party at the White House; much in between.

* The Complete Duke Ellington & His World Famous Orchestra / Complete Studio Transcriptions Hindsight HBCD 501 3CD / Definitive DRCD 1119 3CD. 3/46–6/47.
These transcriptions have drifted in and out of circulation, but these fine (and identical) three-disc sets bring them all together in mostly clean and quite lively sound.

(*) Live At Birdland 1952 Jazz Unlimited JUCD 2036. 11/52.
A complete Birdland broadcast, marred by intrusive announcements (in honour of Duke's 25th anniversary, and they never let us forget it) and repetitive material.

 Ellington '55 Capitol 520135-2. 12/53.
The first 12-inch album wasn't the most auspicious; a bland mix of old favourites and standards like 'Body And Soul' suggests the impasse the band was in prior to its Newport comeback.

(*) Ellington Indigos Columbia CK 44444. 10/57.
This sounds like a chore for the company. Ten smoochy ballads (only three by Duke), with the band set on snooze.

 The Ellington Suites Original Jazz Classics OJC 446. 2/59–10/72.
An interesting collection of extended and medley pieces from the 1959 'Queen's Suite' to the late and indifferent 'Uwis Suite'. The most arresting track of all, significantly, is 'The Single Petal Of A Rose', a duo for Duke and bassist Jimmy Woode.

 First Time! Columbia CK 65571. 7/61.
Never highly regarded, but if one approaches this meeting of the Basie and Ellington bands in a spirit of undemanding fun, that's what comes out.

 Recollections Of The Big Band Era Atlantic 790043-2. 11/62.
A novelty set, bringing together some of the most famous theme and signature tunes of the pre- and postwar bands: 'The Chant Of The Weed', 'Ciribiribin', 'The Woodchopper's Ball', 'Tuxedo Junction', etc.

(*) Yale Concert Original Jazz Classics OJC 664. 4/65.
This has its moments but suffers from the surfeit of available Duke-in-concert.

(*) Live At The Greek Theatre Status DSTS 10143. 9/66.
Duke's spoken intros sound as if he's broadcasting from Mars, but the band sounds all right. Ella sings with her trio.

(*) The Intimate Ellington Original Jazz Classics OJC 730. 69–71.
Definitions of intimacy vary, but this isn't an obvious choice for last thing at night with a glass of malt and the dimmer turned down.

 Togo Brava Suite Blue Note 30082-2. 10/71.
Recorded on tour in England, this finds the band starting to slip into its final phase, with Hodges, Brown and Anderson all gone and Ellington's own health in decline.

(*) Continuum Fantasy 24765-2. 6/74–5/75.
Mercer did his best to keep the Ellington orchestra alive, but perhaps it was already fading away, even before its boss did. Cootie Williams returned, but he was an old man, too, and Harry Carney passed away between sessions for this album.

Dave Ellis (born 1967)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Tough, Bay Area tenor who enjoys R&B and funk as well as jazz.

 State Of Mind Milestone MCD 9328 Ellis; Vincent Herring (as); Mulgrew Miller (p); Christian McBride, Peter Washington (b); Carl Allen, Lewis Nash (d). 3 & 11/01.
This is sleeves-rolled-up contemporary hard bop, played with just enough sophistication (an unusual 'Summertime', for instance) to keep it from seeming merely workmanlike. Ellis perhaps has delusions of being a West Coast Trane (he was born in the year of the great man's death), but his version of 'Grand Central' isn't too slavish a homage. Horace Silver's 'Peace' is another shrewd selection, though the surprise of the date is Clint Houston's lovely 'Sunshowers', which might be known from a Woody Shaw record. Two bands at separate sessions, as the details imply, though nothing to choose between them. Dave's not a debutant, but he goes at this one as if he'd never been in a studio before and didn't expect to be again. Bright, effective jazz.

Don Ellis (1934–78)

TRUMPET

He was born in LA, studied in Boston and worked in New York big bands in the late '50s. Played with George Russell in 1961 and cut three experimental albums of his own before forming a big band that won festival and crossover popularity, despite the music's complexity. Film work took up the early '70s, but a heart attack in 1975 slowed him.

 ... How Time Passes ... Candid 9004 Ellis; Jaki Byard (p, as); Ron Carter (b); Charli Persip (d). 10/60.
 Out Of Nowhere Candid 9032 Ellis; Paul Bley (p); Steve Swallow (b). 4/61.
 New Ideas Original Jazz Classics OJC 431 Ellis; Al Francis (vib); Jaki Byard (p); Ron Carter (b); Charli Persip (d). 6/61.
(*) Essence Mighty Quinn 1101 Ellis; Paul Bley (p); Gary Peacock (b); Nick Martinis, Gene Stone (d). 7/62.
(*) 'Live' At Monterey /  Live In 3⅔/4 Time Pacific Jazz 94766-2 / 23996-2 Ellis; Bob Harmon, Paul Lopez, Glenn Stuart, Ed Warren, Alan Weight (t); Ron Meyers, Dave Wells (tb); Terry Woodson (btb); Reuben Leon (ss, as, f); Tom Scott (as, saxello, f); Ira Schulman (as, ts, cl); Ron Starr (ts, cl); John Magruder (bs, cl); Dave Mackay (p, org); Chuck Domanico, Ray Neapolitan, Frank De La Rosa (b); Steve Bohannon, Alan Estes (d); Chino Valdes (perc). 9 & 10/66; 10/66.
'I believe in making use of as wide a range of expressive techniques as possible', said Ellis, who never lost sight of his own challenging credo. How Time Passes was made before the Third Stream finally ran dry. Half the album is devoted to 'Improvisational Suite No. 1', in which the soloists are asked to extemporize, not on chord progressions or standard melodies, but on a relatively orthodox 12-tone row. The title-track is loosely inspired by Stockhausen's views on musical duration. The extraordinary accelerations and decelerations of tempo are initially almost laughable; but it's a highly significant piece, and Ellis's own solo (with Byard on alto saxophone) is superbly structured. 'Sallie' is a straightforward modal ballad.

Out Of Nowhere is much more conventional and standards-based, but Ellis plays melodic inversions of considerable inventiveness, striking out for the microtonal terrain he was to colonize later in the '60s when he began to work on a four-valve quarter-tone trumpet. 'All The Things You Are' is extraordinary, running from free abstract patterns round the subdominant to fast runs in quadruple time. The alternate of 'I Love You' shows how he could occasionally miscue. Bley plays superbly, though unfortunately Swallow is a bit far back in the mix.

On New Ideas Ellis moves effortlessly between the D-flat blues of 'Uh Huh', the atonal 'Tragedy', the strict canon of 'Imitation' and the stark, improvisational approach of 'Despair To Hope' and a piece for unaccompanied trumpet. In a more conventional jazz context, the opening 'Natural H' and 'Cock And Bull' are strikingly original, with Ellis demonstrating an ability to assimilate advanced harmonic ideas to jazz. Challenging, provocative music, sympathetically recorded by Rudy Van Gelder. The band is on the case from start to finish, with a particular word of praise for Francis, who has a demanding role. Ellis's own liner-notes are very informative about his methods.

The group on Essence is a fine one; even the little-known drummers play with authority and seem equal to Ellis's rhythmic concerns. The originals sound like test-pieces, but there are lovely versions of Strayhorn's 'Johnny Come Lately' and of 'Angel Eyes'. Bley is fascinating and Peacock his usual authoritative self.

Ellis helpfully pops up with a breakdown of the 19-beat figure at the start of his big band's legendary 1966 Monterey appearance: '33 222 1 222 ... of course, that's just the area code!' Everything about Ellis's band was distinctive. He fielded three basses and three percussionists, played his quarter-tone trumpet, and performed programmed jazz tunes with names like 'Passacaglia And Fugue' and 'Concerto For Trumpet', none of which was mere gimmickry. Monterey MC Jimmy Lyons compares the impact of the band to that of the Stan Kenton Orchestra. That to some ears might sound two-edged, but, like Kenton, Ellis manages to combine intellectual sophistication and visceral impact. Tom Scott's funky solo never once diverts from classical forms but still manages to swing its butt off.

The original album also included the concerto, which was recorded a month later at the Pacific Jazz Festival; apparently the Monterey version of the same piece did not satisfy Ellis. His playing on the issued version isn't flawless, but it has great power. The reissue includes three previously unheard cuts: a short thing called 'Crete Idea', featuring trombonist Ron Meyers, the swing pastiche of 'Beat Me Daddy, Seven To The Bar' and another rhythmic exercise in '27/16'. Ellis mildly notes on the album-sleeve that the longest metre he had attempted to date was 85, though he modestly defers to folk forms where the count is well into three figures!

The title of the other 1966 album is difficult to render in print – three-and-two-thirds over four – but the same fascination with complex time-signatures is in evidence. Recorded at Shelly's Manne Hole and at Monterey, it now comes with extra cuts of some tracks, including a fantastic 'Freedom Jazz Dance'. 'Barnum's Revenge' and the original 'Orientation' are the most entertaining and provocative cuts and the remastered sound is very good indeed.

 Pieces Of Eight: Live At UCLA Wounded Bird 6000 Ellis; Dave Wells (tb); Tom Scott (as, ts, cl); Dave MacKay (p); Ray Neapolitan (b); Steve Bohannon (d); Alan Estes, Chino Valdes (perc). 4/67.

A live recording from Ellis in the year of the great Electric Bath. A version of 'Milestones' is intriguing for the way the trumpeter approaches a modal composition by another musician. There are also a couple of tunes by Scott, and a good version of 'Lush Life' and a long, long arrangement (by the composer) of Arif Mardin's 'Turk's Works'. Not a revelatory set, but a valuable addition to the Ellis discography.

* Electric Bath Columbia CK 65522 Ellis; Bob Harmon, Glenn Stuart, Ed Warren, Alan Weight (t); Ron Meyers, David Sanchez, Terry Woodson (tb); Reuben Leon, Joe Roccisano (as, ss, f); Ira Schulman (ts, f, picc, cl); Ron Starr (ts, f, cl); John Magruder (bs, f, bcl); Mike Lang (p, ky); Ray Neapolitan (b, sitar); Frank De La Rosa (b); Dave Parlato (b); Steve Bohannon (d); Alan Estes, Mark Stevens, Chino Valdes (perc). 9/67.

With Electric Bath, recorded at the high-water mark of the rock revolution, Ellis showed that jazz – albeit unorthodox – could still generate the level of excitement youngsters had come to expect as of right.

By this stage Ellis had no difficulty in combining metrical complexity with hot blowing. His own solos on 'Indian Lady' and 'Turkish Bath' are endlessly fascinating. Even seasoned brass-players, perhaps forgetting that four-valve horn, still wonder how some of the phrases were articulated. The orchestra isn't quite up to speed all the time. Asking a working band to play and swing in 17/4 is asking a lot, and yet the lineaments of the music are as clear today as they must have seemed baffling 30 years ago. The new issue is superbly remastered, with a ripe, fruity bass, and includes the single versions of both the compositions mentioned above. Tough as it sometimes is, Ellis's music is never less than exhilarating.

 Shock Treatment Koch 8590 Very similar to above. 2/68.
* Tears Of Joy Wounded Bird 927 Ellis; Milcho Leviev (p); brass, winds, strings, vocals. 5/71.
 Live At Montreux Koch Jazz 51410 Ellis; Jack Coan, Gil Rathel, Glenn Stuart (t); Alan Kaplan (tb); Richard Bullock (btb); Sidney Muldrow (frhn); Jim Self (tba); James Coile, Ann Patterson, Jim Snodgrass (reeds); Randy Kerber (p, ky); Laurie Badessa, Pam Tompkins (vn); Jimbo Ross (vla); Paula Hochhalter (clo); Darrell Clayborn (b); Leon Gaer (b, elec); Dave Crigger (d, perc); Mike Englander, Ruth Ritchie (perc). 7/77.

Originally on Columbia, Shock Treatment is now available with half a dozen bonus tracks, including the mysterious 'Zim' and 'Rasty' and a fine, unorthodox version of 'I Remember Clifford'. Ellis was moving in a more commercial direction at this point, aware that jazz was still losing ground to pop and rock. His playing remains adventurous and bright, but the band misses Tom Scott.

Also originally on Columbia, the live Tears Of Joy is regarded by some as the best Don Ellis record. It's certainly bold and expansive, featuring a string group, brass octet, vocal quartet and extended rhythm section. It also includes the Ellis masterpiece 'Strawberry Soup'. Stretched over two CDs (the original release was a double LP), it offers an eclectic mix of folk ideas, abstract constructions and boldly swinging modern jazz. '5/4 Getaway' is a cracker, refuting any charge that Ellis was merely an egghead. Leviev stars throughout, a fine soloist with a rare touch.

The Montreux set comes with three bonus tracks, including the long 'Arcturus'. Newcomers to Ellis Island may feel a little strange and find the metres and weird harmonies hard to take. 'Open Wide' and 'Niner Two' are worth sampling. If you haven't experienced the trumpeter's work before, Electric Bath is a much more comfortable place to soak.

Also, in brief:

(*) The New Don Ellis Band Goes Underground Wounded Bird 9889. 69.
A vintage period for Ellis but a disappointing record, sketchy and overcooked.

(*) Connection Wounded Bird 1766. 72.
Generally lame selection of jazzed-up pop tunes, ranging from 'I Feel The Earth Move' and 'Jesus Christ Superstar', Yes's 'Roundabout' and the Carpenters' 'Goodbye To Love'. Unlikely to connect with audiences now.

 Music From Other Galaxies And Planets Wounded Bird 8227. 77.
More Boston Pops than Inter-Galactic Arkestra. Dreary sci-fi project.

Herb Ellis (born 1921)

GUITAR

Studied at North Texas State and played with Jimmy Dorsey in the '40s. Major association was with the Oscar Peterson Trio, 1953–8, and as an accompanist to singers. Much studio work and subsequent club dates as a senior swing-to-bop stylist.

 Ellis In Wonderland Verve 59300 Ellis; Harry 'Sweets' Edison (t); Charlie Mariano (as); Jimmy Giuffre (cl, ts, bs); Oscar Peterson (p); Ray Brown (b); Alvin Stoller (d). 12/55, 1/56.
Ellis's country-tinged bop is in evidence on 'Pogo' and 'Sweetheart Blues', both his own themes. Curiously, Peterson, with whom the guitarist was working at this time, seems reticent on the date. Interpretations vary: some would say Oscar was simply giving his colleague as much of the limelight as possible; others would argue he didn't like situations where he wasn't the leader. Giuffre simply sounds a bit lost, even on his own closing 'A Simple Tune'. It's a decent representation of the guitarist, not long back in catalogue and all the more welcome for the dearth of later material in the current lists.

 Arrival Concord CCD2-2168 2CD Ellis; Joe Pass (g); Ray Brown (b); Jake Hanna (d). 73, 74.
 In The Pocket Concord CCD2-2154-2 2CD Ellis; Harry 'Sweets' Edison (t); Plas Johnson (ts); Mike Melvoin; George Duke (ky); Ray Brown (b); Jake Hanna (d). 75–76.
Herb Ellis's extensive discography is still thinly represented. Most of the Verve material is gone and only the appearance of these Concord twofers has straightened out the later years. Ellis was one of the label's first signings and Jazz/Concord and the live Seven, Come Eleven, compiled on Arrival, were among the imprint's very first releases. They set something of the house style: tempos at an easy jog, standard programmes with one or two eccentric choices, and bands that are like an assembly of old rogues joshing one another about past glories. The albums with Pass are amiably sparring, the two styles easily distinguished, Brown jumping in with tasteful embellishments or brusque calls to order. The concert material on the second disc is much the best of it, largely because they get room to work. The two albums with Edison and Brown have now been reissued as the twofer In The Pocket, and while there's nothing exactly surprising here, it's all thoroughly enjoyable in its comforting way: Ellis digs in, the trumpeter turns in some of his wryest solos, and Brown is insuperably masterful as always.

 An Evening With Herb Ellis Jazz Focus JFCD019 Ellis; Bill MacDonough (p); Chuck Israels (b); John Nolan (d). 2/95.
Not a bad way to spend an evening. The Ellis trademarks – a gutsy, physical style of playing, with his south-west twanging delivery, independence of single-string lines and bluesy chording – are intact and well to the fore. But it does seem like a simple pick-up date, with the rhythm section doing little more than their duty.

Also, in brief:

 Concord Jazz Heritage Series Concord CCD 4821. 72–80.
A founding artist on the label generously represented in this archive series.

John Ellis

TENOR SAXOPHONE

A deft composer, he's worked with guitarist Charlie Hunter.

* Roots, Branches & Leaves Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD124 Ellis; Nicholas Payton (t); Aaron Goldberg (p); Roland Guerin (b); Jason Marsalis (d); Bilal Oliver (v). 10/00.
A strange and magical record. It begins with a recording of Ellis's grandmother singing 'John Brown's Gun', from which the opening track emerges. Vocalist Oliver is involved here, and later on 'Nowny Dreams' and 'The Lonely Jesus'. We've not heard anything quite like this music, and with Goldberg switching to Fender Rhodes here and there and Payton making a couple of guest appearances (on 'Ed' and 'Who', the two jazziest cuts) the music is rich and varied. Ellis himself isn't earth-shaking as a saxophone-player; his role here is mainly as composer/auteur of a fascinating aural experience that's equivalent to looking at an exhibition of photos, old and new, coloured and sepia, familiar things and unknown portraits. Lovely.

(*) By A Thread Hyena 9348 Ellis; Aaron Goldberg (ky); Mike Moreno (g); Reuben Rogers (b); Terreon Gully (d). 06.
There is another Hyena release in between but it has not come our way and seems to have had relatively limited distribution. A pity, because the quality remains very high. There's a more oblique and enigmatic quality to the writing here, some might say reminiscent of Wayne Shorter. There are hints of that on the opening 'Ferris Wheel', but we're more inclined to suggest Booker Ervin or even Dewey Redman as a possible source: the same gnomic directness of speech on 'Umpty Eleven', 'Swirl' and 'Moore's Alphabet', similarities in sound-colour, too. By this stage, though, Ellis is doing things on his own impressive terms, and with Goldberg and Moreno playing mostly a supporting role he gets lots of space to have his say.

Liberty Ellman (born 1971)

GUITAR

Born in London, raised in the Bay Area, he worked with Greg Osby, but has made his own associations since moving to NY in 1998.

 Orthodox Noir 12 Ellman; Eric Crystal (ts); Vijay Iyer (g); Brad Hargreaves (d); Babou Sagne (djembe); DJ Pause (turntables). 98.
 Tactiles Pi 108 Ellman; Greg Osby (as); Mark Shim (ts); Stephan Crump (b); Eric Harland (d). 02.
(*) Ophiucus Butterfly Pi 19 Ellman; Steve Lehman (as); Mark Shim (ts); Stephan Crump (b); Jose Davila (tba); Gerald Cleaver (d). 9/05.
An angular but refreshingly understated player, Ellman does not hog the foreground. His funk and hip-hop mannerisms are components of a genuinely original language. The debut album starts with turntable effects on 'Translator' and closes with a lovely guitar/piano duet on Billy Strayhorn's haunting 'Blood Count'. It's a spectrum that gives an important measure of how important jazz is to Ellman. His funk stylings on 'Psi Missing' are still open and improvisational, his grooves unpredictable, and in Iyer he is joined by one of the rising stars of the new music. The sophomore effort is more sophisticated. Working with saxophonists – Shim mainly, but with three guest spots from Osby – strongly reinforces the jazz lineage. The opening is tentative, but with the second track, 'Clean Is Rich', the group's blowing potential becomes obvious. Ellman lays down an asymmetrical solo before giving way to Shim's attractively staccato feature. A repetitive scale sets the music off in a different direction entirely. Old boss Osby comes in on the moody 'Temporary Aid', floating in behind the guitarist's softly stated chords. Greg is also back for 'How Many Texts' and 'Ultraviolet', which are closer to the M-Base idiom. A special word, too, for Harland, who cements these cuts with a brilliantly varied pulse and a lovely range of timbres and sonorities. Cleaver fulfils a similar role on the third record, though here it's the addition of Davila that makes the biggest difference. He has a wonderful tone and mitigates the slight dryness of the front line. Lehman is a young master and Shim's ease in these situations is already noted. Ellman himself is writing ever more individually, and the title-track, which opens the date, gives promise of rich rewards within.

David El-Malek (born 1970)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Born in France, but raised in Israel until the age of eight. Studied with Jean-Claude Fohrenbach and has since made steady and individual progress.

 Organza Cristal 1970 El-Malek; Pierre de Bethmann (p); Alban Sautour (g); Jules Bikôkô Njami (b); Daniel Garcia-Bruno (d, perc); Laïka Fantien (v). 12/00.
 Talking Cure Cristal 1988 El-Malek; Pierre de Bethmann (p); Rémi Vignolo (b); Franck Agulhon (d). 10/03.
El-Malek's early years in the Levant have left an indelible trace on his music, which contains folkloric elements in the service of a vigorous world-jazz. The saxophone sound owes something to Joe Henderson and El-Malek sounds much more convincing in the basically acoustic setting of the second record rather than in the sampled and beat-driven sound-world of the first. He's not yet a completely convincing writer, seeming to overspice every line and idea, but he makes up for it in performance, which is never less than arresting. Hard to pick out individual tracks; both albums work well as entities.

Ziggy Elman (1914–68)

TRUMPET

Joined Benny Goodman, then was with Tommy Dorsey, 1940–47, before leading his own (unsuccessful) big band. In later years, he worked mostly in TV and radio, though troubled by alcoholism.

 Ziggy Elman 1938–1939 Classics 900 Elman; Noni Bernardi, Toots Mondello, Hymie Schertzer (as); Jerry Jerome, Arthur Rollini, Babe Russin (ts); Milt Raskin, Jess Stacy (p); Ben Heller (g); Artie Bernstein, Harry Goodman, Joe Schwartzman (b); Nick Fatool, Al Kendis (d). 12/38–12/39.
 Ziggy Elman And His Orchestra, 1947 Circle CCD 70 Elman; Harry DeVito (tb); Clint Garvin (cl); Johnny Hayes (ts); Virginia Maxey, Bob Manning (v); other personnel unidentified. 3–4/47.
The man born Harry Finkelman played trumpet with enormous power, but he has been dismissed in recent years as a Schmaltzmeister. Ziggy's image was set in stone by his appearance as himself in The Benny Goodman Story, though by then he was too ill to play his own solos, and his parts had to be dubbed in by Mannie Klein. Goodman had hired him in 1936, impressed by his adaptability and tone (and not put off by the weird embouchure; Ziggy played, literally, out of the side of his mouth). The postwar material is better-known, but it is never much more than routine. Hayes is a similarly underrated player, but he was to do more interesting things elsewhere, and DeVito always had fascinating ideas to share. What made the prewar band interesting was the unusual front line of single trumpet and saxophone section. 'Fralich In Swing' is a Jewish wedding-dance tune which Goodman had turned into a hit song, 'And The Angels Sing'. It loses none of its freshness with Elman blaring away in front. The remaining material for Bluebird sticks to the basic formula and relies on essentially the same pool of Goodman-trained players, which may account for the tightness of the section work. Benny's absence may account for the joyous, just-let-out-of-jail quality of some of the playing. Bernardi is exceptional, immediately distinguishable from his fellow altoists, and Stacy and Milt Raskin hold down the chords with calm precision. The sound quality on the whole is good, though there is some distortion on the December 1938 session.

Alan Elsdon (born 1934)

TRUMPET

A doughty British trad sideman who's only recorded infrequently under his own leadership.

 Featuring Alan Elsdon Lake LACD 146 Elsdon; John R. T. Davies, Campbell Burnap, Graham Stewart, Phil Rhodes (tb); Ron Drake (cl, ts); Cy Laurie, Alex Revel, Terry Lightfoot, John Barnes (cl); Brian Leake, Alan Thomas, Ted Ramm, Arthur Wood (p); John Attwood, Jim Forey (g, bj); Johnny Barton (bj, v); Brian Munday, Paddy Lightfoot (bj); Mick Gilligan, Stan Leader, Johnny Johnson, Vic Barton (b); John Armatage, Pete Mawford, Ron McKay, Colin Bowden, Jimmy Garforth, Lennie Hastings (d); Clinton Ford (v). 1/55–7/75.

Elsdon has been bandleading since he left Terry Lightfoot in 1961, but there's been precious little documentation, and the modest trumpeter has, as a result, just this 20-year compilation single disc to show for his efforts. Early tracks with Cy Laurie and the Graham Stewart Seven are nothing special, and the Lightfoot pieces are typically tidy. His own half-dozen tracks are good enough, although Johnny Barton's vocals are dispensable. The great Clinton Ford is a much more welcome addition to 'Pretty Baby', and it ends, surprisingly, with a version of The Beatles' 'Lovely Rita'.

Kahil El'Zabar (born 1953)

DRUMS, PERCUSSION, KALIMBA, FLUTE

A leading light among the spirits who emerged from AACM, the Chicagoan's small groups, the Ethnic Heritage Ensemble and the Ritual Trio, seek big-scale results in terms of creating new Afro-American fusions. He once designed dresses for Nina Simone.

(*) Renaissance Of The Resistance Delmark DE- 466 El'Zabar; Ari Brown (ts, p); Malachi Favors (b). 11/93.
 Big Cliff Delmark DE-477 As above except add Billy Bang (vn). 9/94.
(*) 21st Century Union March Silkheart SHCD 142 El'Zabar; Joseph Bowie (tb, perc); Edward Wilkerson (ts, acl, perc). 6/95.
(*) Love Outside Of Dreams Delmark DG-541 El'Zabar; David Murray (ts, bcl); Fred Hopkins (b). 5/97.
 Jitterbug Junction CIMP 150 As for Renaissance. 6/97.

El'Zabar has a knack for creating exciting musical situations out of elemental materials. His most longstanding group is the Ethnic Heritage Ensemble, although their early records are all currently unavailable. Renaissance unveils the Ritual Trio and affords a fine glimpse of El'Zabar's expansive imagination. 'Trane in Mind' isn't quite the free-blowing, atonal odyssey one might expect. Instead, it's highly melodic, as is 'Ornette'. There are world-music touches elsewhere, largely when El'Zabar reaches for his kalimba, but the basic language is unequivocally that of Chicago jazz. The team has a chamberish feel on 21st Century Union March. Bowie takes a prominent soloist's role, Wilkerson seems reserved, and the music has a gentle way of unfolding, even when El'Zabar works up some thunder at his various drums. There is some merely filled-in time, but the best of it has all the group's qualities on show and it remains a unique ensemble.

Big Cliff gets its biggest kicks out of the title-piece, in which Bang and Brown take boiling solos, and the funky fun of 'Another Kind Of Groove', where the sawing violin over the bomp rhythms starts to get a hypnotic happening under way. Though the music is dedicated to El'Zabar's late father, it is celebratory; scarcely a new take either on what he's done before or on Chicago jazz itself, it's nevertheless a very satisfying record. El'Zabar and Murray clearly get on and the free-flowing Love ... (Fred Hopkins's last recording session, incidentally) recalls some of the saxophonist's exciting early records, particularly in the likes of 'The Ebullient Duke'. The CIMP session is more volatile and loudly spoken. Brown isn't as strong a player as Wilkerson, and the attempted masterwork in 'The Sweet Nectar Of Cacophony' is finally unconvincing, but the dedication to Coltrane miniaturizes the quartet's passions rather effectively, and the trio plays with great enthusiasm.

(*) Papa's Bounce CIMP 167 El'Zabar; Joseph Bowie (tb, perc); Ernest Dawkins (as, ts); Atu Harold Murray (perc, f). 2/98.
* Freedom Jazz Dance Delmark DE-517 As above, except omit Murray; add Fareed Haque (g, perc). 3/99.

CIMP's dry, 'real' sound suits the EHE just fine, and it's seldom made a record that sounds as lucid and spontaneous as Papa's Bounce. Dawkins is an excellent recruit, the whole tradition of Chicago saxophone running through his greasy, gritty, perversely romantic sound, and Bowie is all over his horn. When El'Zabar hits on a multi-kulti groove like 'Blue Rwanda', he gets as close as anyone has to blending the different deltas of Afro-American sound with an ancestral tinge.

The addition of Haque gives the band yet another sound, even while working off the same simple formula of two horns and a drum. The title-piece nods towards El'Zabar's Chicagoan mentor, Eddie Harris, and allows Dawkins to uncork one of his most sweeping solos, starting out in bebop and pulsing in and out of the tradition from there. Haque doesn't get in the way of the horns, here or elsewhere, but he provides a new, lean textural ground for them to work from in addition to the leader's colourful beats. That gives an extra pinch of harmonic spice to tracks such as 'Katon' and 'So Low But Not Alone'. Arguably the best EHE album to date.

 Spirits Entering Delmark DE-533 El'Zabar; Billy Bang (vn). 7/99.
(*) The Power CIMP 205 As above, except add Hamiet Bluiett (f, bsx, cbsx). 7/99.

The duo with Bang has some splendid music, though it's compromised a little by the dry and thin tone the violinist gets. El'Zabar makes enough noise to drown him out at times, but in the more mellifluous passages it's a fine match.

Not so the CIMP date. The notes refer evasively to some arguments among the musicians and the producers, and whatever waffle there is about anger transmuting into musical power, this was clearly not a happy session. Bluiett seems like a dead weight for much of the way (despite the credits, he sounds as if he's playing his usual baritone at least some of the time), although there are still a few beautiful moments, such as the fingertip delicacy of 'Moment's Resolution'.

* Live At The River East Art Center /  Big M: A Tribute To Malachi Favors Delmark DE-566 CD/DVD / 572 El'Zabar; Ari Brown (ts); Billy Bang (vn); Yosef Ben Israel (b). 12/04.

And here's an example of a guest who does blend so well that he sounds like a fourth wheel. Bang had worked with El'Zabar before but in this post-Favors line-up his role is even more prominent and functional. 'Big M' is a tribute to the the late bassist, but dominated by a wonderful kalimba solo from the leader. Kahil testifies exuberantly on 'Be Exciting', but it's the interplay of Bang and the outrageously underrated Brown that really makes this fine record. 'Return of the Lost Tribe' is rerun, a very different performance to that on the Bright Moments CD with Joseph Jarman and Kalaparusha Maurice McIntyre. The live sound is pretty good and the crowd buzz merely adds to the party atmosphere; there is a DVD option, though frankly you won't need it. For some reason, the tribute to Favors doesn't come off; doubtless deeply felt, it's drab and repetitive.

(*) Transmigration Delmark DE 576 El'Zabar; Infinity [illegible] Orchestra. 05.

El'Zabar has a regular teaching post in Bordeaux and this large-scale improvisation project is the result of his workshops there. The large French orchestra (Joe Bowie and Ernest Dawkins also guest) probably deserves individual credits, but they also work hard for each other, creating a fascinating fabric of sound.

El'Zabar only appears briefly as a player and limits himself to conducting the ensemble. Arguments about how 'European' or 'American' the band sounds are mostly beside the point; they sound very good and highly committed. A curious throwback to the days, half a lifetime ago, when much of the American avant-garde was working in French exile.

Also, in brief:

 Conversations /  Africa N'Da Blues Delmark DE-514/519. 1 & 12/99.
Not a bad idea to call up some old spirits of the Chicago avant-garde, but Archie Shepp's ludicrous, fumbling playing is all wrong, and pointlessly squeezes out poor Ari Brown (who mostly has to settle for the piano). The collaboration with Sanders is hardly any improvement and the trio feature of 'Autumn Leaves' (Brown on piano again) is a waste of time.

(*) One World Family /  We Is: Live At The Bop Shop CIMP 220 / Delmark DE 577. 3/00.
Duets with a notably spare David Murray, but how they miss the presence of Fred Hopkins. Highlights are the ruminative 'Ryan's Discourse' on the CIMP, 'Blues Affirmation' and a reprise of 'One World Family' (bass clarinet/percussion) on the live disc.

Emergency

GROUP

Short-lived international free outfit.

(*) Homage To Peace America 9806917 Glenn Spearman (s); Takashi Kako (p); Boulou Ferré (g); Bob Reid (b); Sabu Toyuzumi (d). 70.
They were around for not much longer than it took to record this album, another of those avant-garde sessions taped in Paris at the turn of the new decade, but Emergency brought a distinctive sound and personality. Ironically, the main item here is a fine version, with Ferré prominent, of Roscoe Mitchell's 'People In Sorrow'; the Art Ensemble were also in France at the time. The collectively conceived 'Emergency Theme' is what sets it all off, though, and it's an amazing clarion for free jazz, wild and welcoming by turns, anarchic but also tensely ordered. A forgotten gem of the period. 'Kako Tune' foregrounds a pianist who will be less well-known than others who started out at the time, Bobby Few and suchlike; he's a formidable player. The bassist contributes the closing 'Infidels', which might have been written by Few's old schoolfriend Albert Ayler. A time capsule of a record, but worth chasing down while it's still around.

James Emery (born 1951)

GUITAR

An innovative and imaginative guitarist who took his cue from Charlie Parker. Best known as a member of the String Trio Of New York.

(*) Luminous Cycles Between the Lines btl 015 Emery; Marty Ehrlich (ss, as, cl, f); Chris Speed (cl, ts); Kevin Norton (vib); Drew Gress (b); Gerry Hemingway (d, glock). 10/00.
Emery's earlier sets for FMP and Enja are currently out of circulation. He cleverly pairs the clarinets on the title-track, a nervy, stop-start theme that has its feet in bebop and its ambitions elsewhere entirely. That also goes for the following 'One Red Thread', a slowly weaving idea that has connections with Eric Dolphy's Out To Lunch session. Emery ranges between hard-scrabble riffs in complex time and more delicate picked rubato lines, like the introduction to 'Beyond Words'. Speed's clarinet solo is an old-fashioned delight, almost swing era in its shaping. As ever, Hemingway and Norton provide thoroughly musical accompaniment. Not a significant advance in Emery's musical language, but a confident consolidation.

(*) Fourth World Between The Lines btl 019 Emery; Joe Lovano (ss, as, ts, Cmel, af, d, perc); Judi Silvano (f, v); Drew Gress (b). 5/01.
A delightful and unusual record that depends to a large degree on Lovano's writing skills and multi-instrumentalism; he is also a very convincing drummer. Emery has never sounded more effortlessly melodic than here and it's a mode that suits him very well. Silvano (who's Joe's wife) might look like a courteous add-on, but she brings something very specific to the music and contributes as an equal member where she's featured, mostly vocalizing, but with some lovely flute touches.

* Transformations Between the Lines btl 027 Emery; Franz Koglmann (flhn); Tony Coe (ts, cl); Peter Herbert (b); Emilio Pomárico (cond); Klangforum Wien. 9/01.
This is an extremely impressive achievement, a large-scale work for orchestra and improvising musicians. There is every ground for suspicion of projects of this stamp. All too often either the orchestration is a bland and dispensable backdrop for the improvisers, or, looked at the other way, the improvisers are there to add some figure and detail to a fairly dull orchestral conception. The miracle of Transformations is that Emery has managed to create a strong musical architecture and a context for improvisation. The pairing of Coe and Koglmann reflects his own ambivalent take on jazz, a mixture of deep, romantic commitment and a certain scepticism. Koglmann's solos frequently draw attention to jazz history, but they ironize it at the same time. Coe is more of a fundamentalist and his lovely tone imparts a warmth and intensity to the most abstract passages. Emery starts the whole thing off with a movement called 'Archai', which might refer to both strings and the distant past.

Arranged in five connected sections with three interludes, Transformations is the pinnacle of Emery's career so far, a work of real depth and resonance and one which repays frequent hearings. Under Emilio Pomárico, the Klangforum Wien plays with confident gusto and precision. The set is rounded out by a sequence of quartets on which Peter Herbert is the additional soloist. 'Down Home Tone Poem' and 'Bird's Nest' are further interesting reflections on what jazz is about in the 21st century. A perfect match of artist and label.

Empirical

GROUP

Harbingers of a new generation in British jazz, and gifted with enough talent to make the predictions seem more than hype.

(*) Empirical Destin-E Records 777 001001001 Jay Phelps (t, v); Dennis Rollins (tb); Nathaniel Facey (as, v); Courtney Pine (bcl); Kit Downes (p); Neil Charles (b); Shaney Forbes (d, perc). 11/06.
Courtney Pine produced this for his own label and must have felt he was passing on the generational baton. There's a huge wealth of performing and writing talent here, comfortably embracing an array of contemporary styles within a basic language that recalls a span of modern jazz from Miles's classic quintets to Ornette's more radical/populist approach. Phelps's 'A Tyrant's Tale' is a long, dark meditation on 9/11, the trumpet part alternately anguished and defiant. Facey contributes both the opening 'Blessings', which might have something of the Adderleys about it, and the more mysterious 'The Deep'. Driven by a powerful religious belief, the saxophonist infuses everything he plays with consistent vision and an already distinctive voice. Forbes delivers a beautiful line for 'Kite', inspired by Leonardo and his home town, while Downes, who's perhaps the most easily overlooked of the group, delivers a wonderful, unpredictable accompaniment and a great slice of Grand Guignol on 'Fat Cat'. Charles, who has no composer credits, holds together what's already a real band and not just a studio grouping. Pine and Rollins both guest, but, to be honest, they're there largely to offer a blessing. Glorious, eclectic modern jazz (they even include an Ali Farka Toure tune). Time will tell, but the auguries are more than good.

Marco Eneidi (born 1956)

ALTO SAXOPHONE

Born in Portland, raised in San Francisco, he began his career playing Dixieland in restaurants and hospitals, but eventually moved to NY and established a reputation with Cecil Taylor. Botticelli is his own label.

(*) Final Disconnect Notice Botticelli 17069 Eneidi; Karen Borca (bsn); William Parker (clo, b); Wilber Morris (b); Jackson Krall (d). 94.
* Cherry Box Eremite 025 Eneidi; William Parker (b); Donald Robinson (d). 9/98.
For all his emaciated tone, Eneidi is an exciting player who has devised his own approach to improvisation/notation. Sometimes, as on 'The Last Call' from the first of these, he creates freebop. At others, for example 'Untitled', he takes tiny cellular ideas (this one from Cecil Taylor) and develops them into an entire dialect which seems sufficient for one performance and then evaporates. Borca is a solid second voice, managing to make her notoriously quiet instrument heard at all times. The ubiquitous Parker provides resonant foundations, rarely playing like an orthodox bassist, a job consigned to the late lamented Morris. The 1998 trio shows off Eneidi at his best, blowing fiercely enough to make his wiry saxophone sound glow with energy. Parker does his usual thing, but Robinson is the real star of the piece, providing a tireless but subtle accompaniment.

Also, in brief:

 And the American Jungle Orchestra Botticelli 1012/13. 95.
An impressive line-up includes Glenn Spearman (ts) and Wadada Leo Smith (t). The charts are ambitious and there's a surprise version of Basie's 'Jumpin' At The Woodside'.

 Creative Music Orchestra Music & Arts 980. 6/95.
Co-led by Glenn Spearman (ts), fierce, dark and strangely compelling. Unfair, perhaps, to devote so little space to Marco's most ambitious projects, but it's hard music to verbalize.

 Live At Radio Valencia Botticelli 1014. 1/97.
An ugly, impressive quartet date with Glenn Spearman (ts), William Parker (b) and Jackson Krall (d).

(*) American Roadwork CIMP 312. 5/04.
Titles like 'Shock And Awe' and a version of 'Baby, Please Don't Go' might lead you to expect something less than filigreed sophistication, and you'd be right. Heavy on the blues, for which Eneidi doesn't really have the right voice.

Bob Enevoldsen (1920–2005)

VALVE TROMBONE, TENOR SAXOPHONE, DOUBLE BASS

A stalwart West Coaster, who appears in many band settings, he started out on reeds, dabbled with double bass when he suffered lip problems, and remains along with Bob Brookmeyer the best-known exponent of the valve instrument.

 Smorgasbord: The Music Of Bob Enevoldsen Fresh Sound FSRCD 2224 Enevoldsen; Marty Paich (p, acc); Howard Roberts (g); Red Mitchell (b, p); Don Heath (d). 8 & 11/55.
The surprise here is that Enevoldsen plays more tenor and bass than he does trombone, perhaps a sign of recurrent lip trouble. The opening cut is on his familiar horn, the original 'Iron Works', but of the remaining 16 tracks, six are played on saxophone (plus one on both horns) and five on double bass (on occasion doubling with Mitchell). A veritable smorgasbord (Bob's dad was Danish) of styles, but with a fresh, almost folksy quality running through the newly written themes, and not much sign of what one would normally expect of West Coast cool. Paich's accordion work is fascinating, but he leads on organ for 'Swingers' Dream'. A delightful set that commemorates a great stager.

Also, in brief:

 Sunday Afternoons At The Lighthouse Café Woofy WPCD143. 6/04.
Amiable quintet gig with Jack Trott (t) and Bob Hardaway (ts).

Enten Eller

GROUP

Piedmontese bop-to-fusion band, formed in the late '80s.

 Antigone Splasc(h) H 352-2 Mario Simeoni (ts, f); Carlo Actis Dato (ts, bs, bcl); Ugo Boscain (p); Giovanni Maier (b); Massimo Barbiero (d); Alex Rolle, Andrea Stracuzzi (perc). 1/91.
 Medea CMC 9961-2 Alberto Mandarini (t, flhn, v); Maurizio Brunod (g); Rocco de Lucia (b); Massimo Barbiero (d). 1–2/96.
(*) Trait D'Union Splasc(h) 623 Alberto Mandarini (t, flhn); Maurizio Brunod (g); Giovanni Maier (b); Massimo Barbiero (d, mar). 4/97.
 Melquiades Splasc(h) 805 As above, except add Tim Berne (as). 5/99.
 Auto Da Fe Splasc(h) 819-2 As above. 00.
This band is from Piedmont, which has spawned several of the best of the newer Italian groups (Enrico Fazio, Claudio Lodati, Carlo Actis Dato). Antigone is their second album and is, if anything, even more brawling than their rough-and-ready earlier set, with the opening tracks, 'Il Mago' and 'Pragma', blown open by Actis Dato and Simeoni; but a lengthy set also includes ballads, and the basic quintet know each other's moves to make this blend of modal, bop and fusion leanings into an entertaining whole.

Medea and Trait D'Union pick up the thread a full six years on, with a very different line-up. Brunod's guitar tends to set the tone, which leans towards out-and-out fusion, although Mandarini makes sure that some bop vernacular survives. There are stabs at completely free playing and both sets are altogether more temperate, sometimes moving towards sound-painting. For all its frequent energy, this is rather bland stuff.

Melquiades brings in Tim Berne as surprise guest star. As if under threat, Brunod doubles his assault and introduces more loops, effects and whatever else he can think of to keep the attention; even so, there are still moments of quiet such as 'Per Emmanuela'. Berne seems content to be a band member but still gets in some imposing remarks. There is a return match for the pairing on Auto Da Fe, with rather mixed results. The group seem to be increasingly moving towards a free (or at least an open-ended) preference, but bassist and drummer seem unsure of which way to play it, and some interesting improvising could use a better anchor.

 Euclide Splasc(h) CDH 919.2 Alberto Mandarini (t, flhn); Lauro Rossi (tb); Achille Succi (as, cl); Maurizio Brunod (g); Giovanni Maier (b); Massimo Barbiero (d). 7/03.

Another new line-up for the band. Rossi's mournful trombone makes an early impression on 'Cruna', and the group sounds at its most effective in this kind of processional piece. But the funk-into-free of 'Funkhit', up next, is another false step. Thereafter the music's distinctly hit and miss, veering from thoughtful formality to crusty free playing, Brunod again alternating as hero and villain. They clearly like a mixed palette, but settling for one style over another seems to be a struggle.

Hannes Enzlberger

DOUBLE BASS

Gifted Austrian bassist and composer. Has Carla Bley fixation.

 Songs To Anything That Moves Between the Lines btl 022 Enzlberger; Thomas Berghammer (flhn); Oskar Aichinger (p). 00.

(*) Tango 1–8 Between the Lines btl 030 Enzlberger; Thomas Berghammer (flhn); Otto Lechner (acc). 2/01.

Despite the title, which is taken from her Escalator Over The Hill, the first album has nothing to do with Carla Bley beyond a certain level of creative inspiration. In company with Berghammer and fellow BTL artist Aichinger, Enzlberger creates delicately nuanced chamber jazz of a pleasingly abstract sort. After three long opening tracks, of which 'Heisse Nacht' is the most successful, the bassist presents a suite of short pieces under the generic title 'Sieben Versatzstücke'. These are not quite miniatures and not quite songs either, and it is not entirely clear what thematic relationship there is between the elements. They do, however, eventually cohere convincingly.

The Bley influence is more overt (though unstated) on Tango 1–8, a project suffused with the sardonic spirit of her 'Reactionary Tango'. Eight tangos are interspersed by improvised solos and duos, again featuring the delicate, Koglmann-like flugelhorn of Thomas Berghammer but this time instead of piano the accordion of Otto Lechner. Fine as he is on his instrument, Enzlberger is more interesting as a composer. His ideas develop logically but also laterally and he takes the source material into some unexpectedly fruitful areas. Almost inevitably, Berghammer is the dominant voice. His delicacy conceals a toughness as he reveals in duo with the leader and when he energizes the music with hot rips and runs.

Rolf Ericson (1922–97)

TRUMPET

Born in Stockholm, he played trumpet with local groups before going to the USA in 1947 and working with Charlie Barnet, Woody Herman and Charles Mingus, eventually joining Ellington in 1963. Also returned home to tour, lead his own big band and take a sojourn in Berlin. One of the Europeans who made most international impact in the '40s and '50s.

 Rolf Ericson & The American Stars /  Rolf Ericson & His All American Stars 1956 Dragon DRCD 255 / Fresh Sound FSRCD 464 Ericson; Lars Gullin, Cecil Payne (bs); Duke Jordan, Freddie Redd (p); Tommy Potter, John Simmons (b); Joe Harris, Art Taylor (d); Ernestine Anderson (v). 6 & 7/56.

 Stockholm Sweetnin' Dragon DRCD 256 Ericson; Nisse Sandström (ts, p); Claes Crona (p); Göran Lindberg (b); Mel Lewis (d). 8/84–7/85.

 Ellington & Strayhorn Sittel SITCD 9223 Ericson; Lennart Åberg (ss, ts, f); Bobo Stenson (p); Göran Klinghagen , Max Schultz (g); Dan Berglund (b); Egil Johansen (d); Rose-Marie Åberg (v). 1/95.

* I Love You So ... Amigo AMCD 879 Ericson; Bernt Rosengren (ts); Lars Sjøsten (p); Björn Alke (b); Fredrik Norén (d). 97.

The gifted and likeable Ericson left a fine legacy on record, though comparatively little under his own name. A totally reliable section player, he tended to hide away a gentler and more lyrical side, and it's this which comes out on I Love You So ... right at the end of his life.

The 1956 recordings date from a Swedish tour when Rolf was asked to front a band of Americans. The first tour was wrecked by the narcotic problems of two of the visitors (all four were sent home), and only four tracks survive. The bulk of the disc has Ericson and Gullin in the front line, with Redd, Potter and Harris in the rhythm section. Despite the problems, the tour helped bring hard bop to Sweden, previously drawn more to American cool. Ericson and Gullin are in brimming form, though the live recording isn't ideal. Anderson sings on six tracks. The Dragon and Fresh Sound options are much of a muchness; better sound on the former, which also has two extra tracks.

Ericson was still in fine fettle on the 1984 date for Dragon: a juicy selection of jazz tunes and standards by an accomplished band, with Sandström's Lestorian tenor a fine foil for the trumpet; there are four previously unreleased trumpet/piano duets as a bonus. Ericson takes things more gingerly on the set of Ellington and Strayhorn tunes for Sittel, but it's an even better band – Åberg's solemn tenor, Stenson's unfailingly intelligent piano, the light, deep rhythm section. One or two too-obvious choices, but a couple of nice rarities – and the studio sound is gorgeous: try Rolf's muted work on 'Star-Crossed Lovers'.

The title-piece on I Love You So ... is the only Ericson composition on a set of surpassing elegance and sophistication, the leader's own gifts more than matched by the peerless Rosengren and by a hugely experienced rhythm section. 'I Had The Craziest Dream' is the most substantial single piece, a long exploration of those slightly wayward chords and offbeat melody line. Harold Ashby's 'Ashes' is an intriguing choice, not often covered, but Ericson saves his most pungent statement for 'Brownie Speaks', rarely heard to better effect. Ericson's clean, unfussy delivery works well in just about every mood from flat-out blowing to the most delicate and Chet Baker-like of ballads. I Love You So ... was intended to celebrate Ericson's return to Sweden from a long stay in Germany. Sadly, but appropriately, it turned into his memorial.

Peter Erskine (born 1954)

DRUMS

After starting out with Stan Kenton, he became one of the most sought-after drummers in American jazz, taking the occasional rock gig for fun. Stints with Weather Report and John Abercrombie were crucial.

 Peter Erskine Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 610 Erskine; Randy Brecker (t, flhn); Michael Brecker (ts); Bob Mintzer (ts, bcl); Don Grolnick, Kenny Kirkland (p); Mike Mainieri (vib); Eddie Gomez (b); Don Alias (perc). 6/82.

Besides his formidable technique, he's gregarious enough to handle virtually any musical situation and is a thoughtful composer to boot. His first record as a leader found him in charge of a relatively straightforward post-bop session; but, with such a heavyweight gathering of studio craftsmen all on their toes, the results are impressive if a little too brawny here and there.

(*) Sweet Soul Fuzzy Music 6 Erskine; Randy Brecker (t); Joe Lovano, Bob Mintzer (ts); Kenny Werner (p); John Scofield (g); Marc Johnson (b). 3/91.

Erskine recorded several dates in the later '80s which have not survived. This comes from his own imprint and it's some kind of breakthrough. His own material (including the drum solo 'But Is It Art?') bespeaks a real musicality, but it's left pretty much to the others (and Vince Mendoza) to supply the material. 'In Your Own Sweet Way' is played by a piano trio; some of the tracks are for an augmented group, with Scofield, Mintzer and Brecker guesting. It's a varied roster, with some fine soloing from all concerned, and while Erskine is always prominent in the mix, he's never pushed right to the front. Mendoza's 'Sco-lastic' is a highlight.

 You Never Know / () Time Being / () As It Is / (*) Juni ECM 517353-2 / 521719-2 / 529085-2 / 539726-2 Erskine; John Taylor (p); Palle Danielsson (b). 7/92; 11/93; 9/95; 7/97.

This has become a trio of considerable stature. You Never Know was disappointing in that Erskine deferred so much to Taylor. There is only one composition by the leader, with four by Taylor and three (very good) by Vince Mendoza; this is really a piano album in which Erskine does conscientious time and duty. A less fully realized record than the later discs, it's still a strong set, although it relies on Taylor's lean pastoralisms, which are always interesting, seldom compelling. Time Being follows the same path but is more involving. One reason is a greater sense of group identity, with the three men finding a teetering balance between their parts; another is the wider variation in material, with Staffan Linton's 'Liten Visa Till Karin' a particularly delightful choice; another is Danielsson's increasing involvement, his bass parts securing an eminent voice inside the trio.

Where DeJohnette never quite gives up on a drummer's muscle, even in the midst of a set of the balmiest, sweetest tunes, Erskine is prepared to lie back and stroke the gentlest rhythms out of the kit. Since Taylor and Danielsson are the kind of players who glove their intensities anyway, pieces like 'Glebe Ascending' and 'For Ruth' on As It Is emerge as a distinctive blend of rural impressionism and sophisticated strength. Here also is another version of 'Touch Her Soft Lips And Part', first recorded on a 1991 Novus disc. Maybe Erskine can't get the tune out of his mind, but when the results are as gorgeous as this, who can blame him?

Diminishing returns may set in at some point, but not on the strength of Juni. None of these eight themes really stand out, but they're treated as vehicles for group chemistry and perhaps are best heard as a single interconnected piece. Erskine continues to do a tremendous amount at the kit without once sounding intrusive or overbearing; Taylor and Danielsson pace thoughtfully around him. This kind of trio music won't be to all tastes, but it's exceedingly well done.

() Live At Rocco / () Badlands Fuzzy Music PEPCD 007 2CD / 011 Erskine; Alan Pasqua (p); Dave Carpenter (b). 10/99; 8/01.

Pasqua's gushing lyricism dominates this live trio date, and maybe it's too much, stretched across two hour-long CDs. But after the more severe beauties of the ECM trio with Taylor, this feels like a kind of release – a more generous, big-sounding, more American date. Only a curmudgeon wouldn't enjoy it. If you like the younger, less rambling Jarrett, Pasqua's your man, and since Carpenter and Erskine aren't given to merely leaning back and letting him wander, we get the melody-making without the indulgence. Here and there, as in an overlong 'How About You?', the music loses its grip – but not for long, and Erskine himself, while content to stay as a support, calmly makes his presence felt throughout. For a live set, the music is also beautifully registered in the recording.

Badlands is almost as good, and the duration feels more comfortable. The pianist contributes most of the material, and again his rich playing is the keynote of the set. Erskine's own 'On The Lake' and 'Meanwhile' vary the flavours a little and help to define another strong set.

 E_L_B ACT 9289 Erskine; Nguyên Lê (g); Michel Benita (b). 10/01.

Again, very much a band of equals, with a lot of the featured work falling to the guitarist. Erskine's still very much at the heart of things, and while some of his best work veers towards the hyper-subtle, appreciable only with a certain focused effort, he plays for the band. All three contribute material, and it's varied in style and content, which makes for an attractive if not always very coherent mix.

Also, in brief:

(*) Behind Closed Doors Vol. 1 Fuzzy Music PEPCD 005. 3/91-96.
Released on the home label, this is a valuable collection of out-takes and leftovers going all the way back to Sweet Soul.

 Side Man Blue Fuzzy Music PEPCD010. 3/01.
Peter at the head of a quintet drawn from the WDR Big Band, playing music Erskine wrote for a play by Warren Light. Never quite rises above its programme.

Lars Erstrand (born 1936)

VIBRAPHONE

Born in Uppsala, Erstrand tried piano, tuba and trombone before taking up vibes after hearing Lionel Hampton. He worked with Ove Lind in the '60s, played with Benny Goodman in 1972 and has been a sideman and leader in numerous situations since.

 Two Sides Of Lars Erstrand /  Lars Erstrand And Four Brothers Opus 3 8302 / Opus 3 8402 Erstrand; Roland Jivelid (ts); Knud Jørgenson (p); Bertil Fernqvist (g); Arne Wilhelmsson (b); Pelle Hultén (d). 5–6/83; 6/84.
 Tribute To Benny Goodman Quartet Opus 3 8603 Erstrand; Ove Lind (cl); Rolf Larsson (p); Pelle Hultén (b). 12/86.
(*) Dream Dancing Opus 3 9101 Erstrand; Kjell Öhman (org); Tommy Johnson (b); Gus Dahlberg (d). 2/91.
 Beautiful Friendship – The First Set /  ...– The Second Set Sittel SITCD 9204 / 9205 As above, except add Ken Peplowski (cl, ts), Frank Vignola (g). 6/92.
(*) International All Stars – Live At Uttersberg '98 Gemini GMCD 98 Erstrand; Roy Williams (tb); Jan Lundgren (p); Hans Backenroth (b); Joe Ascione (d). 8/98.

Erstrand's enduring admiration for the Lionel Hampton style – as best evidenced in their meeting on Two Generations, Phontastic 8807 – disguises a rather broader range of interests. Two Sides also touches on bebop in 'Sweet And Hot Mop' and there are even traces of European echoes of the MJQ in such pieces as the Bach 'Invention In C Major'. This and the Four Brothers disc feature an entertaining band – Jivelid's nicely Lestorian tenor floats agreeably over the rhythm players, and Jørgenson unobtrusively steals the show on several tracks with some quick-witted improvisations. The Goodman tribute is an accurate-sounding evocation, with Lind's wonderfully supple lines twining round the vibes apparently effortlessly. The organ band with Öhman puts the pots on, at least compared with the other discs, and it encourages the vibesman to dig in more wholeheartedly than he does on some of the other records. Dream Dancing suffers from a few more laid-back and almost sleepwalking ballads, but the two live albums on Sittel have some genuine fire in the belly on the up-tempo tunes: 'Jim Dawgs' is almost over the top in its energies and 'Lady Be Good' personifies the swinging small combo. Peplowski is an unlikely man for a grooving organ/tenor band, but he puts his romantic hat on for the ballads and 'I Thought About You' on the first disc is a charmer. Second guest Vignola prefers strumming over single notes. But both discs have a sound-problem: the organ sounds either tinny or buzzy at different moments, and the overall mix seems rougher than it should have been. Erstrand enjoys it all, though.

The 1998 concert set from Uttersberg is a notch ahead of the other discs because everyone's on his mettle and the band is an intriguing mix of personalities. Young lions such as Lundgren and Backenroth blow alongside an enthusiastic Erstrand and the admirable Williams, who often ends up in soporific mainstream situations but here is asked a few questions and comes up swinging mightily. A great session.

(*) Lars Erstrand Meets Rebecca Kilgore Gemini GMCD 116 Erstrand; Jan Lundgren (p); Hans Backenroth (b); Joe Ascione (d); Rebecca Kilgore (v). 8/03.

Joyous high spirits here, despite the fact that the music – again from an Uttersberg festival – was played over two days, one in torrential rain, the other in the face of a plague of mosquitoes. Becky Kilgore raises the spirits as she seems to on all of her appearances, and her signature version of 'The Lady's In Love With You' is a beauty. Lundgren is smart without being too clever, Ascione keeps the tempos as chipper as they should be, and Erstrand himself is in fine fettle. An enduring language, caught on the hoof and proving its durability.

Also, in brief:

 Sessions Opus 3 19405. 8/94–12/95.
With Danny Moss (ts), Roy Williams (tb) and others in various combos. Spotty, but good.

(*) The 'Complete' Songs Opus 3 22014. 11/01.
Trio and quartet with guests and a programme that retreads the Benny and Hamp connection.

Booker Ervin (1930–70)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

He taught himself saxophone while in the services and instinctively veered towards the kind of blunt, blues-soaked sound of fellow Texans like Arnett Cobb and Illinois Jacquet. He had his big break with Mingus, who liked his raw, unaffected approach. The career was painfully short, but Booker packed a lot in.

 The Book Cooks Rhino 76691 Ervin; Tommy Turrentine (t); Zoot Sims (ts); Tommy Flanagan (p); George Tucker (b); Dannie Richmond (d). 6/60.
 Cookin' Savoy 150 Ervin; Richard Williams (t); Horace Parlan (p); George Tucker (b); Dannie Richmond (d). 11/60.
(*) That's It Candid CCD 79014 Ervin; Horace Parlan (p); George Tucker (b); Al Harewood (d). 1/61.

Booker started out on trombone and carried over some of the brass instrument's broad portamento effects into his reed work; he's unmistakable as a result. The debut album finds him in strong and confident voice, but with a certain guardedness in his soloing. Zoot was there for moral support and there could hardly be a greater contrast in tenor styles, the one bluff and reticent, the other cool and open-hearted. 'The Blue Book' and the title-track are generic Ervin performances, but stick around for the delightful brief 'Poor Butterfly'.

A handful of nice originals on the Savoy date, with 'Mr Wiggles' and 'Down In The Dumps' already pointing to Ervin's desire to take hard bop forward rather than abandoning it for freer procedures. It's probably the least attractively recorded of his albums, with definite though non-specific problems with the remastering.

On the Candid disc, Ervin is in full, fierce voice, blending elements of Don Byas and John Coltrane into a typical Texan shout. 'Uranus' is his finest ballad performance. George Tucker's deliberate introduction to 'Booker's Blues' takes the music down into some south-western storm cellar, where it spins out its unhurried message. To avoid contractual problems, Parlan was originally credited as 'Felix Krull', but there is nothing fraudulent about his playing on the album.

(*) The Song Book Original Jazz Classics OJC 779 Ervin; Tommy Flanagan (p); Richard Davis (b); Alan Dawson (d). 2/64.
(*) The Blues Book /  Groovin' High Original Jazz Classics OJC 780 / 919 Ervin; Carmell Jones (t); Gildo Mahones (p); Richard Davis (b); Alan Dawson (d). 6/64; 12/63–10/64.
* The Freedom Book / (*) The Space Book Original Jazz Classics OJC 891 / 896 As above, except omit Mahones, Jones; add Jaki Byard (p). 12/63; 10/64.

With the inclusion of Groovin' High, a further round-up of material from the prolific Book sessions, most of Ervin's recordings for Prestige are available again. This was the kind of in-depth coverage a label like Prestige and producer Bob Weinstock were able to give a developing artist in those days. These are consistently excellent discs, marking the core of Ervin's output as a solo artist. Davis and Dawson are strong rhythm players of the kind the saxophonist needed, and their ability to play gently on the ballad album is as impressive as their driving beat on 'No Booze Blooze'. The Freedom Book, with its wider remit, is probably the best of the lot, with Byard a more robustly percussive and blues-aware pianist. The Space Book serves as reminder of just how concentrated these sessions were and how ideas from one take and tune inevitably spilled over into the next. 'Reading' the Books in sequence is an instructive exercise. Try it, or go straight for Freedom.

(*) Settin' The Pace /  The Trance Prestige PRCD 24123 / Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 943-2 Ervin; Dexter Gordon (ts on Settin' The Pace); Jaki Byard (p); Reggie Workman (b); Alan Dawson (d). 10/65.

 Heavy!!! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 981-2 As above, except add Jimmy Owens (t), Garnett Brown (tb). 66.

The conjunction of Ervin and the not-too-dissimilar Dexter Gordon on Settin' The Pace makes for interesting listening, though it's Dexter who establishes the ground-rules and sets the pace for most of the tunes. 'The Trance' is included, and there is a bouncing, fiery workout on 'Dexter's Deck', the kind of theme played by the hour.

The Trance was recorded at the same session in Munich. It's a lean and straightforward jazz album, not without some subtlety. 'Groovin' At The Jamboree' is a blowing blues, nothing fancy but powerfully argued. 'Speak Low' is handled with a gruff grace, but the real emotional weight of the album is concentrated in the title-track, a memorial to the bassist George Tucker; Booker would soon be the subject of a similar tribute, sadly.

Heavy!!! is an odd record, full of fine playing but also rough and unvarnished. The material is decidedly left-field, opening with 'Bachafillen', including 'Bei Mir Bist Du Schön' and Byard's weirdly wonderful 'Aluminum Baby'; it closes with an 'Ode To Charlie Parker'. The three-horn front line is reminiscent of Coltrane's Blue Train session, with a similar mismatch of voices and styles, but on the whole it works.

(*) Structurally Sound Blue Note 57545 Ervin; Charles Tolliver (t); John Hicks (p); Red Mitchell (b); Lenny McBrowne (d). 12/66.

A rock-solid and highly inventive set, with Hicks playing an important chordal role and keeping the well-selected material turning over at a respectable pace. The pianist kicks off Randy Weston's 'Berkshire Blues' and with that stamps his authority on the session. Ervin seems happy to be an ensemble player for much of this, but he's in cracking form on 'Shiny Stockings', a bonus track on this Connoisseur Edition reissue, and on Tolliver's 'Franess', which is also represented in an alternate take. Neither trumpeter nor saxophonist can often have been better recorded. Charles comes across bold and muscly, while the saxophone has real presence and edge.

 The In Between Blue Note 59379 Ervin; Richard Williams (t); Bobby Few (p); Cevera Jeffries (b); Lenny McBrowne (d). 1/68.

Unlike some other figures on the label, Ervin seemed determined to show that there was still considerable creative mileage in hard bop, without needing to head off into 'the avant-garde'. In consequence, these half-dozen taut originals are every bit as challenging as the free jazz of the time, and command exceptional musicianship from a relatively obscure group. Williams is remembered for his one set as leader; McBrowne was a faithful companion of the saxophonist; Jeffries is virtually unknown; Few is still woefully little-known, and like pianists on previous Booker sessions he's very much allowed to determine the pace and attack here. A fine workout from an excellent pianist.

* The Tex Book Tenor Blue Note 311402 Ervin; Woody Shaw (t); Kenny Barron (p); Jan Arnet (b); Billy Higgins (d). 7/68.

Ervin arrived at Blue Note late in his short career, but this consistently overlooked set was a significant step forward. Again, the saxophonist shows no signs of dalliance with the avant-garde and turns in a tough-minded set that doesn't lack for sophistication but remains very much within the accepted harmonic language of hard bop. Barron's opening 'Gichi''s Afro-Cuban tinge lends it a crackling energy. Ervin's own four compositions – the closing '204' is probably the best and certainly the most extended of them – show what a thoughtful composer he could be, but it is his exchanges with the pianist and with Shaw, whose 'In A Capricornian Way' sits enigmatically in the middle of the set, which set the speakers alight. Shaw's trumpet is heard to best effect on the ballad 'Lynn's Tune', but plaudits too to the virtually unknown Arnet, a Czech, who positively shines on the ballad, showing a touch closer to Scott LaFaro and George Mraz than the usual run of finger-busting sidemen. To think that this fine set only limped out in the later '70s, paired with another unreleased session by another Mingus favourite, Horace Parlan. An overlooked classic.

Also, in brief:

 Gumbo Prestige 24229. 63, 1 & 2/64.

An interesting reissue that ought to be credited to Pony Poindexter (as), whose compositions evoke the sights and sounds of New Orleans.

 Exultation Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 835. 6/63.

A loose jam, not much improved by the addition of extra tracks.

* Booker'n'Brass Pacific Jazz 7243 4 94509 2. 9/67.

Teddy Edwards arranged and conducted this often-overlooked large-ensemble record on which Ervin is plonked in front of a superbly crafted horn section and plays his heart out. A bootleg of these sessions that did the rounds was almost certainly a rehearsal tape.

Pee Wee Erwin (1913–81)

TRUMPET

George Erwin was playing on American radio when still a boy. He worked with Benny Goodman and Ray Noble, and helped Glenn Miller create his celebrated sound. Extensive studio work in the '40s, then gigged at Nick's through the '50s.

(*) Dr Jazz Vol. 14: Pee Wee Erwin Storyville STCD 6059 Erwin; Vic Dickenson (tb); Gene Sedric (cl); Teddy Roy (p); Johnny Giuffrida (b); Morey Feld (d). 4–5/52.

(*) Complete Fifties Recordings Lone Hill Jazz LHJ 10122 Erwin; Andy Russo (tb); Sal Pace (cl); Billy Maxted (p); Charlie Treagar (b); Tony Spargo (d). 55–56.

 ... Swingin' That Music Jazzology JCD-80 Erwin; Herman Foretich (tb, v); Herb Gardner (tb); Harry Hagan, Mason 'Country' Thomas (cl); Freddie Deland, Al Stevens (p); Steve Jordan (g); Ike Isaacs, Van Perry (b); Hal Smith, Chuck Redd (d). 3/80.

The material is a stable-full of Dixieland warhorses and the sound no better than broadcast quality, but the Dr Jazz session is marvellous. Erwin was a great jazz trumpeter whose handful of LPs have had no luck with CD reissue. This is a welcome, if inadequate, remedying of that situation. Recorded from four different broadcasts at Lou Terassi's Club on West 47th Street – the gig was Bobby Hackett's, but Pee Wee depped three nights a week – the music is sheer good fun but also efficient; no untucked shirt-tails. Erwin's poise as a trumpeter is akin to Hackett's, but he was a hotter player, and in a fast piece like 'Clarinet Marmalade' he gets off a solo which is as embroidered as vintage Hackett, but feistier too. The rhythm section is no more than good enough, both Dickenson and the undervalued Sedric play in top gear.

The Lone Hill jazz release brings together Erwin's two sextet albums Accent On Dixieland and the live At Grandview Inn. The players might be second-string Dixielanders, and some of the material is hoary, but the music sustains a high standard: Pace is a lusty clarinet man, Maxted is neat and tidy, and Erwin himself peels off one exemplary solo after another.

On the Jazzology set the band play regulation Dixieland and do it capably. But even the year before his death, it's Erwin's beautiful trumpet which makes the record. There is a stray festival track to round things off, with a different band.

Wayne Escoffery (born 1975)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Strong-voiced player who's worked with the Mingus Big Band and in Tom Harrell's quintet.

 Times Change Nagel Heyer 2015 Escoffery; Aaron Goldberg (p); Joel Forbes (b); Carl Allen (d). 1/01.

(*) Intuition Nagel Heyer 2038 Escoffery; Jeremy Pelt (t); Rick Germanson (p); Gerald Cannon (b); Ricky Peterson (d); Carolyn Leonhart (v). 11/03.

In a scene still packed with Trane-spotters and Brecker stepbrothers, it's nice to come across a saxophonist who nods to Sam Rivers and Yusef Lateef on his debut disc. Wayne's reading of Rivers's lovely 'Beatrice' is a high-point, but before it comes along he has already got things going with a hard-swinging original, 'Come Back Lucky'. Escoffery gets out his soprano for 'Dawn', which exposes some of his weakness as a soloist: lots of technique, not yet much in the way of drama. His take on Jobim's 'Triste' has promise and he does a great job with the Lateef piece, 'Water Pistol', which is a pianoless trio. When Goldberg is around, he does great work and the group as a whole sounds tight and sympathetic.

The sophomore disc sounds anything but that. Escoffery has learned how to build a solo and his repeated figures at the very opening of 'Intuition', the first track, give a strong clue as to how he sets about it, working melodically/rhythmically as much as on the changes. Pelt is an asset and his 'Tightrope' is a nice trumpet feature. 'I Should Care' is the only weak track, a soprano cut significantly, and diluted by Leonhart's very matter-of-fact singing. 'The Alchemist', which is one of Wayne's, is the other high-point, and here Germanson really shows his quality with some rugged chords and a nicely driven line.

(*) Veneration Savant SCD 2081 Escoffery; Joe Locke (vib); Hans Glawischnig (b); Lewis Nash (d). 6/06.

Interesting title. It's apt enough for a disc that seems set on paying homage to a number of influences, Joe Henderson and Jackie McLean most obviously, but it has enough individuality to emerge at the end as Escoffery's very own. The McLean connection is registered right at the end, with a fine 'Melody For Melonae'. They seem ready to wind things up halfway through and then it all kicks in again for another brisk round of playing. Henderson's alluded to on 'Isfahan', though Escoffery insists he had forgotten the great man's similarly configured tenor/bass duo with Christian McBride. Booker Little's 'Bee Vamp' and 'Looking Ahead' receive formidable treatment, with some brilliant work from Nash on the latter (his best recorded solo, we'd say) and the former taken at a near-gallop. Again, though, the saxophonist's technique runs ahead of his expression. It's Locke who provides most of the inflection and even on 'Tell Me Why', a solitary original dedicated to Wayne's mother and wife, there isn't much substance beyond the line itself. Nice work, though, and the live club recording from Smoke in New York is impossible to fault.

Christian Escoudé (born 1947)

GUITAR

An enigmatic but always creative presence, whose gypsy-influenced jazz is sometimes deceptively accessible.

 Holydays Emarcy 514 304 2 Escoudé; Paul Challain Ferret, Biréli Lagrène , Babik Reinhardt, Frédéric Sylvestre (g); Marcel Azzola (acc); Xavier Desandre (perc). 5/92.

 Ma Ya Ya Nocturne 132 Escoudé; Stéphane Guillaume (sax); Marcel Azzola (acc); Jean Baptiste Laya (g); Jean Marc Jafet (b); Bruno Ziarelli (d). 05.

The catalogue is still somewhat depleted. Holydays is a sweet-toned session from Escoudé's basic trio (Ferret, Sylvestre), with some effective guest spots from the others. Abbey Lincoln's 'Bird Alone' is a great choice of opener and makes up for a drab 'Cavatina'. 'The Day I Met Bill Evans' gives the best profile of the trio, with all three soloing superbly. Reinhardt is beautiful on 'Num Um Talvez' and the Lagrène solo and four-bar exchanges on the closing 'Lyle's Song' bring the set to a very satisfying conclusion. As so often, the limpid beauty of Escoudé's playing distracts attention from the richness and complexity of the arrangements. The later disc demands careful attention. The chordal patterns are often quite demanding and there are passages where normal tonality seems to be left behind, always though to great dramatic effect. Lovely stuff and, one hopes, a prompt to Universal that the earlier records are overdue for reissue.

Also, in brief:

 Charentes Elabeth 620137. 06.

Nice duets with Christophe Bruna(rd) – there seems to be doubt about the spelling of his name – but with no striking high-points.

Ellery Eskelin (born 1959)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Raised in Baltimore; his mother played the Hammond B-3, his father was the cultish songwriter Rodd Keith. His own music moves from outside to in, and back again.

 Forms hatOLOGY 592 Eskelin; Drew Gress (b); Phil Haynes (d). 90.

Eskelin stands apart from the throng. He has a querulous tone and likes to stretch phrases into elongated shapes that defy orthodox tonality. There are a couple of unavailable earlier records, but on Forms Eskelin takes a relatively conventional setting and resolutely familiar materials – the blues, triplets, bebop, Ellington's 'Fleurette Africaine' – and subjects them to rugged interrogation. 'In Three' is a clever idea, using the trio as a basis for all sorts of other tripartite forms and divisions. The approach to Dizzy's 'Bebop' is both orthodox as to changes and completely out of the normal loop. And so forth ... a record determined to show that there is life in existing idioms.

* Figure Of Speech Soul Note 121232-2 Eskelin; Joe Daley (tba); Arto Tunçboyaciyan (perc). 7/91.
 Jazz Trash Songlines SGL 1506-2 Eskelin; Andrea Parkins (acc, sampler); Jim Black (d). 10/94.
Figure Of Speech was a breakthrough. Eskelin's purposeful avoidance of obvious theme-and-variation procedures brings a rare sense of something new to this project. Daley's tuba and Tunçboyaciyan's quiet, pattering percussion are important voices, but their essentially simple figures throw the detail and complexity of Eskelin's own playing into sharp relief. The tunes revolve round carefully coded motifs or structural ideas without depending on them, and the improvisations usually form separate entities, contrasting with (rather than commenting on) the written material. This is a rare kind of freedom, negotiated with superb assurance.

Jazz Trash has 'interesting' writ large, but goes little further. The trio skirmishes rather than creating any tangible interplay, and while there are numerous intriguing moments – 'Rain' is a nicely abstruse essay on the ballad form – there's a meagreness to the textures which makes 70-aught minutes a hard listen.

 Green Bermudas Eremite MTE02 Eskelin; Andrea Parkins (sampler). 6/96.
* One Great Day hatOLOGY 502 As above, except add Jim Black (d). 9/96.
Green Bermudas is Eskelin's most abstract disc, in which he decorates Parkins's oddball array of sampled sounds (singalong pop, varispeed drums, chunks of Eskelin himself from Premonition) with some of his sparsest playing. A lot of it feels like experimental bits and bites, at least until the two long tracks which close the record, each a testing dialogue. One Great Day restores the Jazz Trash situation; Black's compendium of jazz, rock and free rhythms is spontaneously exciting; Parkins conjures unpredictable shapes out of her instrument; Eskelin plays with real physicality, seeming to grab and twist the sound as it emerges from his horn.

() Kulak 29 & 30 / () Five Other Pieces (+2) hatOLOGY 521 / 533 Eskelin; Andrea Parkins (acc, sampler); Jim Black (d). 10/97; 10/98.
Two and a quarter hours of non-stop invention. Eskelin takes a very considered approach to the music of his trio, both in his originals – Kulak 29 & 30 – and in the pieces he chooses to cover – Five Other Pieces (+2). Parkins makes her sampler sound like a gothic Hammond (memories of Ellery's mother?) and the music seems less self-consciously eclectic than in some of their earlier collaborations. There's a droll side to 'Fifty Nine' and 'Visionary Of The Week' and it lightens what might otherwise be a dour palette. Courtesy of Black's lurching rhythms, the music sways rather than swings. When they tackle the old Mahavishnu Orchestra chestnut 'The Dance Of Maya' the result is blackly comic, without giving the impression that they're playing it for laughs. Eskelin himself refuses to settle into familiar free licks and sounds – his solos are huge slices of saxophone oratory, scaled down to fit the dimensions of an intimate group.

 Ramifications hatOLOGY 551 Eskelin; Andrea Parkins (acc, sampler); Erik Friedlander (clo); Joe Daley (tba); Jim Black (d). 9/99.
(*) Vanishing Point hatOLOGY 577 Eskelin; Matt Moran (vib); Mat Maneri (vla); Erik Friedlander (clo); Mark Dresser (b). 12/00.
 12 (+1) Imaginary Views /  Arcanum Moderne hatOLOGY 584 / 588 Eskelin; Andrea Parkins (acc, p, sampler); Jim Black (d). 4/01; 5/02.
(*) Ten (EEwAP&JB+3(10)) hatOLOGY 611 As above, except add Marc Ribot (g); Melvin Gibbs (b); Jessica Constable (v). 1/04.
 Quiet Music Prime Source 4010 As above, except omit Ribot, Gibbs; add Philippe Gelda (p, org). 5/06.
Ramifications debuts Eskelin's writing for a five-piece group. As with his smaller unit, the details matter; parts interconnect with a kind of severity, and no posturing. There's space, and intensity is adjusted very methodically. The title-piece opens on a fluttering tenor improvisation, then settles into a dead-slow blues march which finally crawls to a halt. Friedlander then picks up on the theme as the introduction to the next piece, though it develops differently after that – a process of alignment, rather than thematic evolution, which Eskelin likens to film-making. What's troublesome is the air of gloom which hangs over the set, something even Black's vigorous rhythms to 'Title Piece' can't dispel. 'Transister' is a rousing resolution, but it's an awfully sombre journey.

Vanishing Point is entirely improvised, cut at a six-hour session. Eskelin notes that 'the inevitable comparisons with classical music will be made with respect to this one', but it doesn't much sound like classical music. The chamber instrumentation sets up one set of expectations; the bustle of 'Scatter Brain' dispels them at once. Three strings, vibes and tenor is a striking combination and the players deal with it imaginatively, although one feels that there may be more direction by Eskelin than the free premise implies; the strings often fall into what sound like orchestrated sections, though the music's none the worse for it.

The 12 'ideas' of Imaginary Views each offer a 'concept containing some specific element that characterizes an open improvisation' – an approach that harks back (in a more simplified way) to Figure Of Speech from ten years before. But it suits Eskelin, who seems to want freedom but can't bring himself to abandon structure. Some of it is power-trio, some atmospheres, and as before Parkins takes key decisions. Perhaps it distils some of the more madcap music off Green Bermudas, too. By the end – a sardonic reading of the Monk obscurity 'Oskar T' – the music's beginning to sound tired.

It seems almost cruel to do to samba what the trio do at the start of Arcanum Moderne, but Eskelin's astonishing saxophone part marks some kind of high-point for his own playing. Thick with knowledge, hung up on procedural matters, scientific and emotive in even-steven quantities, it's a group like no other. Ten looks on paper like a Braxton project, though it doesn't take a moment to work out what the title's about. The guest contributions here, with the possible exception of the floaty Constable, are very effective. In what appears to be a wholly improvised setting, Eskelin and a shifting cast work through some intriguing logical moves. The best of the stuff comes first with the fine 'Ask Me Why' (Ribot in top form) and peters out later.

The sound is more evolved and coherent on Quiet Music, which sounds more like the work of a settled group with a common philosophy. Constable's processed vocals interact well with the instruments and the double-keyboard tracks add a shimmering, multi-layered quality to Eskelin's compositional ideas; his charts are still open-ended, but every bit as challenging and democratic as he finds himself able to write for the group.

Also, in brief:

(*) Premonition Prime Source 2010. 7/92.
A mixture of rather technical exercises and intriguing standards treatments. A more rarefied Eskelin than usual.

 The Sun Died Soul Note 121282-2. 2/96.
A set of bar-b-q specials from the greasy cookbooks of Harold Vick, Jack McDuff and Gene Ammons, whose gruff, grizzled tone Eskelin copies beautifully.

 Dissonant Characters hatOLOGY 534. 12/98.
Friendly and generous duets with Han Bennink (d), which are entertaining, if somewhat dashed-off.

(*) The Secret Museum hatOLOGY 552. 11/99.
Hard work for both trio and listener, but with modern jazz respite in Monk's 'We See'.

Bruce Eskovitz

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Born in California, he made some fusion records before embarking on jazz as a vocation.

 One For Newk Koch 7081 Eskovitz; Ernie Watts (ts); Bill Mays (p); Charlie Shoemake (vib); Ray Drummond (b); Laurence Marable (d). 11/93.
 Conversations Azica 72219 Eskovitz; Bill Mays (p). 9/00.
A full-toned player who has a nice way with a phrase, Eskovitz manages to pull off the Rollins tribute record without ever once trying to sound like Newk, and all power to him for that. To be frank, the best thing on the album is the closing 'Tenor Madness', a long shared feature with the wonderful Watts, but he holds his own throughout the remainder and the band, which includes the underrated Shoemake, work hard for him.

The duos with Bill Mays stand or fall almost entirely on the strength of Bruce's saxophone-playing. Mays is a fine accompanist, but he isn't proactive in such an exposed situation (ironically, he's more confident when completely on his own) and tends to back-pedal when Eskovitz steps back from the mic. The two long cuts, 'Invitation' and 'Like Someone In Love', are pretty much the best of it, but the remainder never drop lower than so-so professional.

Also, in brief:

 Invitation Pacific Coast Jazz 4209. 8/07.
Bruce's Jazz Orchestra tackle a batch of his own charts, including 'Just In The Newk Of Time', plus the title standard and Freddie Hubbard's 'Red Clay'.

John Etheridge (born 1948)

GUITAR

Self-taught and both technically and expressively adroit, he played with Soft Machine in the '70s and has since worked in a wide range of situations.

 Sweet Chorus: A Tribute To Stéphane Grappelli / (*) Chasing Shadows Dyad DY001/ DY004 Etheridge; Christian Garrick (vn); Dave Kelbie (g); Malcolm Creese (b). 6–7/98; 2/01.
Martin Taylor has covered similar territory, but whereas Taylor is above all a melodist, Etheridge has a more analytical approach to the material. Not all of it is directly associated with Grappelli, though the performances are in the right spirit and don't lack for authenticity.

It takes something special now to invest 'Nuages' with any degree of originality and conviction, but Etheridge's group pulls it off, a performance that's both idiomatic and fresh. The same is true of Jobim's 'How Insensitive' and the Reinhardt–Grappelli title-tune. Garrick is a chip off the old block, with his dad Michael's intense harmonic awareness and some of Grappelli's own singing jazz voice. Creese can do this stuff standing on his head, and his contribution is significant on 'Rhythm Futur' and 'Shine', two of the strongest tracks. Others break down the basic group into trios, duos and Etheridge solos. The last of these lack something: not technique, not expressiveness; but there are perhaps signs of restraint, as if he isn't quite ready to break loose.

Chasing Shadows is a marvellous record. The band tackles 'Giant Steps' with a gleeful confidence; Garrick's now the leader's secret sharer, an ideal collaborator. 'Moment's Notice' continues that particular seam. The real surprises are earlier in the disc, with glorious versions of 'Do You Know What It Means To Miss New Orleans' and 'Someone To Watch Over Me', the latter an ideal vehicle for Etheridge's lyrical side.

 The Music of Frank Zappa: Absolutely Live JazzPrint JPVP 122 Etheridge; Paul Jayasinha (t); Annie Whitehead (tb); Ben Castle (sax, f); Steve Lodder (ky); Rob Statham (b); Mike Bradley (d); Teena Lyle (perc). 00.
Etheridge pays homage to the guitarist who, after John McLaughlin, has probably had the biggest impact on his own playing. Zappa's compositions have yet to find a secure place in the jazz repertory, but 'The Grand Wazoo', 'Big Swifty' and 'King Kong' (previously covered by Jean-Luc Ponty) are all given vivid and authentic workouts. Whitehead is in stunningly good form. Her tone is so rich and resonant that there are moments when she almost sounds paired in the mix with a second horn. Etheridge himself fires off licks like Zappa himself, constructing solos out of found material, natural blues and rock progressions, with occasional imaginative leaps into the unknown.

(*) I Didn't Know Dyad DY024 Etheridge (solo g). 04.
A stunning demonstration not just of skilful guitar-playing but also of Etheridge's catholic enthusiasms. The standout tracks here are Zawinul's 'Mercy, Mercy, Mercy' and 'Now's The Time', a version which may owe something to Prince's band of the '90s. There are, however, some gentle spirituals and almost hymn-like tunes where Etheridge is happy to set virtuosity aside and let the beauty of a melody do all the work.

 Stitched Up Jazz Cat 04 Etheridge; Ben Crosland (b); Ben Tyas (d). 06.
This is the guitarist's Trio North, an annual get-together that allows some nice balance between the security of a regular band and the adventure and risk of a pick-up situation. Etheridge sounds in sparkling good form throughout, but he's exceptional on the unexpected 'Will You Still Love Me Tomorrow' and the lovely 'St Mary's Loch'. Crosland and Tyas are reminiscent of those redoubtables Cleyndert and Tracey, solidity personified.

(*) In House Dyad DY025 Etheridge; Arild Andersen (b); John Marshall (d). 1/07.

Here's three guys who ought to be much more highly valued, caught together at London's Pizza Express. Apart from Marshall's 'Sideburn', which features him strongly, all the writing is by Andersen and Etheridge. The bassist's opening 'Infinite Distance' bears a strange resemblance to Sting's 'Englishman In New York'; Etheridge's 'Pump Room' won't make you think of Bath and Jane Austen, almost a rock idea; and so it progresses, tough, lyrical jazz with a hefty beat but loads of intelligence.

Also, in brief:

 Second Vision Voiceprint BP 341. 80.
Intriguingly folky in cast, with the presence of Ric Sanders suggesting Etheridge's later enthusiasm for working with violinists.

 Ash Jazzprint JPVP 102. 92.
It sounded a little tired on reissue, flat sound rather than poor playing; John's in cracking form on 'In Your Own Sweet Way', 'Ugetsu', 'Little Wing'.

Charles Eubanks (born 1948)

PIANO

Elder brother of Robin and Kevin, he has worked with modernist luminaries Rashied Ali, Archie Shepp and Oliver Lake but was late making his debut as leader.

 New Beginnings /  Birds Of Baghdad CIMP 250 / 290
Eubanks (p solo). 6/01; 6/03.
Eubanks's belated solo ventures are harmonically strong but rhythmically less varied than one might like on a solo disc. Very much a left-hand man, he constructs strong foundations for Parker's 'Donna Lee' and 'Sippin' At Bells' and Coltrane's 'Countdown' and these familiar tunes are the best way of sampling how Eubanks constructs his own originals. 'Ra-Shied', dedicated to a former boss, is a darkly swinging thing, with a powerful bass. 'Sand Prints' and 'Fortune Teller' have a more mysterious quality.

There is one Monk tune on each of the albums. 'Tell Me Why' on New Beginnings is a less taxing piece than 'Trinkle Tinkle' on Birds Of Baghdad but Charles despatches them both with delightful calm. The second record reprises the feel of the first. There are the same elements of stride and gospel, boogie and bop, in pretty much the same permutations, but with a slightly darker mood. Titles like 'Roadmap To Swing' and 'Birds Of Baghdad' hint at big themes and the title-piece is a swirl of impressions. The three-movement 'Making Overtures' sounds like an autobiographical sketch and is certainly the most substantial thing on the set. Again, though, Eubanks shows he can give a standard like 'How Deep Is The Ocean' a fresh spin.

Robin Eubanks (born 1955)

TROMBONE, BASS TROMBONE, KEYBOARDS

The Eubanks family is the Philadelphia equivalent of the Marsalises. Robin is a versatile, expressive player, with a distinctively flowing line.

(*) Different Perspectives Winter & Winter 919023 Eubanks; Michael Mossman (flhn); Clifton Anderson, Slide Hampton (tb); Doug Purviance (btb); James Weidman (p, ky); Kevin Eubanks (g); Rael Wesley Grant, Peter Washington (b); Teri Lyne Carrington, Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). 88.

* Dedication Winter & Winter 919032 Eubanks; Steve Turre (tb); Mulgrew Miller (p, syn); Charnett Moffett (b); Tony Reedus (d); Jimmy Delgado (perc). 4/89.
The trombonist's debut is a corking record, full of clever writing, subtle arrangement and some very good playing indeed. Younger brother Kevin is on hand to crank up the funk on Stevie Wonder's 'Overjoyed', but for the most part the set is dominated by Eubanks themes. These are responsive to what was going on in pop music, but they are unmistakably the work of a man steeped in classic jazz. 'Midtown' sets the agenda at a tempo that suits Robin and he sticks to it for most of the set, phrasing accurately and with great feeling. The guest trombonists are there for more than moral support and the whole disc comes across as a 'bone makeover, a primer for a new slide dialect.

The second album is, if anything, even better. Turre is a master in his own right, and while they're anxious to avoid too many Jay and Kai clichés he and Robin do draw on that very successful example. Some of the writing is straight jazz, like the swinging 'Koncepts', but the more successful tracks trade high energy for expression, like the moody dedication to Woody Shaw.

 Karma Winter & Winter 919044 Eubanks; Earl Gardner (t); Greg Osby (as); Branford Marsalis (ts); Renee Rosnes (p, ky); Kenny Werner (ky); Kevin Eubanks (g); Dave Holland, Lonnie Plaxico (b); Marvin 'Smitty' Smith (d); Mino Cinelu (perc, v); Kimson 'Kism' Albert, Cassandra Wilson (v). 5/90.
Again rescued from the JMT back-catalogue, this begins unpromisingly with a slice of rap, delivered with the aggressive self-consciousness jazz guys seem to bring to street music. After that it gets better, but this is still a curiously bitty album, without much identity over and above individual songs. 'Evidently' is a nice reworking of a Monk tune and there are some nicely judged originals, but a fairly disappointing showing, and possibly significant that there's a bit of a gap before the next one, albeit Eubanks spent part of that time as a member of Holland's group.

(*) 4:JJ/Slide/Curtis And Al TCB 97802 Eubanks; Antonio Hart (as, ts); Mike Cain (p); Lonnie Plaxico (b); Gene Jackson (d). 98.
Robin continues his mission to the great trombone stars of the past with this set named after four of them. It's another vivid demonstration of the Philly man's combination of fresh imagination and some scholarship in the music. Apart from Wayne Shorter's 'Black Nile' (an intriguing choice), Thad Jones's 'A Child Is Born', and a lovely soulful version of 'Speak Low', all the material is by Eubanks and is well up to his very high standard. These days he has traded in high-energy playing pretty much for a more romantic approach. It suits his tone perfectly, especially on the tenor trombone.

* Live: Volume 1 Kindred Rhythm 1136 CD/DVD Eubanks; Orrin Evans (ky); Kenwood Dennard (d, elec). 7/06.
Whether you enjoy the DVD component depends on how much you like to know about how music is made. On the opening 'Me, Myself & I', Eubanks deploys a sampler, drum machine and then improvising trombone to create a rich and varied tapestry of sound. Dennard is equally adept with kit and bass synthesizer on 'Moko Jojo' and has his own feature on 'Jig Saw', which immediately precedes the record's only repertory piece, Wayne Shorter's 'House Of Jade', played on electric trombone. Evans doesn't assert himself much, but that's less of an issue on the audio-only tracks when who is doing what isn't an issue. Apart from the dismal 'Blues For Jimi Hendrix', it's a terrific set.

Also, in brief:

 Mental Images Winter & Winter 919022. 4/94.
There's a vague political programme behind this, but what's more interesting is that Kevin's J.J. influence seems to have run its course.

 Wake Up Call Sirocco SJL 1001. 2/97.
The first release on John Priestley's label was a quiet, thoughtful record, mixing standard material with a group of well-crafted originals.

 Get 2 It Robin Eubanks Music 001. 1–3/00.
Launching his own label, Eubanks also makes an impressive appearance on the electric trombone. It doesn't sound like J.J., but it works.

Eureka Brass Band

GROUP

One of the leading New Orleans parade bands of the day.

(*) New Orleans Funeral And Parade American Music AMCD-70 Percy Humphrey, Willie Pajeaud, Edie Richardson (t); Albert Warner, Sunny Henry (tb); George Lewis (cl); Ruben Roddy (as); Emmanuel Paul (ts); Joseph 'Red' Clark (sou); Arthur Ogle, Robert 'Son' Lewis (d). 8/51.

(*) In Rehearsal, 1956 American Music AMCD-110/111 2CD Percy Humphrey, Willie Pajeaud, George 'Kid Sheik' Cola (t); Sunny Henry, Albert Warner (tb); Ruben Roddy (as); Emmanuel Paul (ts); Joe Clark (tba); Cie Frazier, Robert Lewis, Alfred Williams (d). 1/56.

The most authentic example of old New Orleans music in its original environment, even if this recording of traditional funeral and parade music was recorded in a French Quarter alleyway rather than actually on the job. The regulars of the Brass Band, as it was then, were augmented by Lewis for the day, although he plays flat, and the brass are similarly wayward in intonation. The recording is musty, the tempos ragged, the extra takes of four of the numbers an anti-climax, while some of the dirges threaten to dissolve altogether. But seldom has the old music sounded so affecting, the workmanlike attitude of the players lending it something like nobility. The remastering has been done very well, considering the source material, and the superb documentation – by Alden Ashforth, the teenage enthusiast who recorded the session – adds to the undeniable mystique.

Samuel Charters managed to record the Eureka again in 1956, for Moe Asch's Folkways label, and some 80 minutes of rehearsal music has also survived, now rather extravagantly spread across two CDs. Given that some of this is chatter, tune-ups and breakdowns, it's scarcely an essential way into this kind of music. But Charters's vivid notes bring the occasion back to life, and since it presents the Eureka players at their most typical (this time without Lewis), it may even be more valuable as a document. Since these were one-microphone rehearsals, it's inevitably wanting in high fidelity. But that will scarcely trouble anyone who comes to this with sympathetic ears.

Bill Evans (1929–80)

PIANO

His first notable gig was with the Tony Scott group, in 1956, and his most important early liaison was with Miles Davis, with whom he recorded Kind Of Blue. Thereafter he worked in a trio format for the rest of his life, although there are solo sessions, records with singers and a few with horns or orchestral arrangements. Prolific in the studio and much taped in concert, his records were widely disseminated and listened to by musicians, who absorbed his handling of modality and followed him out of the dead-end of bebop changes. A difficult personal life was exacerbated by drug dependence, which hastened an early death.

 Emergence FiveFour 21 Evans; John Carisi, Art Farmer (t); Jimmy Cleveland, Urbie Green (tb); Tony Scott (cl); Hal McCusick, Danny Bank (bs); Howard Collins, Barry Galbraith, Dick Garcia (g); Jerry Bruno, Bob Carter, Teddy Kotick (b); Sol Gubin, Joe Harris, Osie Johnson, Lennie McBrowne, Camille Morin, Paul Motian (d); Lucy Reed (v). 55–57.

 The Sideman Years Fresh Sound FSRCD456 Evans; Jimmy Knepper (tb); Gene Quill (as); Dick Garcia, Joe Puma (g); Eddie Costa (vib); Jerry Bruno, Les Grinage, Teddy Kotick, Oscar Pettiford (b); Camille Morin, Lennie McBrowne, Paul Motian, Dannie Richmond (d). 55–9/57.

Almost everything Evans did is now available on CD, a situation matched by very few major artists in this book. Taken altogether, it is an incredible body of work, flawed and even repetitive though much of it may be, and it is particularly rewarding to work through it chronologically. The very first recordings were with Jerry Wald and Lucy Reed respectively (the latter are sampled on Emergence). They, and the next few dates, find him in a subordinate role, as the title suggests, accompanying dates by Garcia and Costa in 1955 and 1956, already sounding harmonically astute, but by no means showy or prodigal. It's really only with the date for clarinettist Scott in the summer of 1956 that one starts to hear an exceptional talent at work. Scott's curious compositions, 'Aeolian Drinkin' Song' and 'Vanilla Frosting On A Beef Pie', call for something more than usual and Evans delivers strongly. Three months later, he would deliver his debut as a leader (below) with two of the sidemen documented (separately) on these dates. The final half-dozen cuts are with Knepper in 1957 and there's already a growth of confidence; listen to his comping on the trombonist's 'Idol Of The Files', relaxed, simple, but utterly assured.

Emergence brings together some of the Garcia date, some tracks with the George Russell group of the time, negotiating some intricate charts, plus material with Scott's combo and tentet, and 'Baltimore Oriole' from the vocalist's The Thinking Reed. A messier compilation than the Fresh Sound, but an alternative insight into a star in the making.

 New Jazz Conceptions Original Jazz Classics OJC 035 Evans; Teddy Kotick (b); Paul Motian (d). 9/56.

Evans began modestly enough – 'When I started out, I worked very simply, but I always knew what I was doing' – with a fine, comfortable set of boppish trio performances which created little stir at the time (the record sold only 800 copies in its first year). Orrin Keepnews was convinced he should record Evans by hearing a demo tape over the telephone, and the pianist's distinctive touch and lovely tone are already apparent. He makes bop material such as Tadd Dameron's 'Our Delight' into comprehensive structures, and the three tiny solos – including the very first 'Waltz For Debby', his most renowned original – hint at what was to come.

* Everybody Digs Bill Evans Original Jazz Classics OJC 068
Evans; Sam Jones (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 12/58.

Perennially reluctant, busy with the Miles Davis group, Evans didn't record as a leader for two years after New Jazz Conceptions. The wait was worthwhile, though. The Joneses bring out his most energetic delivery, and the assertiveness he'd found with Davis turned 'Night And Day' and 'Oleo' into driving performances. But 'Peace Piece', a translucent reshaping of the opening phrases of 'Some Other Time', which Evans came up with in the studio (and was omitted from the original LP), is one of his most affecting soliloquies, and the ballad reading of 'Young And Foolish' makes an astonishing contrast to the up-tempo pieces.

* Portrait In Jazz / * Explorations / ♛ * Sunday At The Village Vanguard / ♛ * Waltz For Debby / * At The Village Vanguard Original Jazz Classics OJC 088 / 037 / 140 / 210 / Riverside 60-017 Evans; Scott LaFaro (b); Paul Motian (d). 12/59; 2/61; 6/61; 6/61; 6/61.

Evans had trouble finding good bassists, but LaFaro's arrival precipitated one of the finest piano trios ever documented. The bassist's melodic sensitivity and insinuating sound flowed between Evans and Motian like water and, while notions of group empathy have sometimes been exaggerated in discussion of this music – still very much directed by Evans himself – the playing of the three men is so sympathetic that it set a standard that holds to this day. Both Portrait In Jazz and Explorations have their small imperfections: there's an occasional brittleness in the latter, possibly a result of a quarrel between LaFaro and Evans just before the session, and the recording of both does less justice to LaFaro's tone. But 'Autumn Leaves', 'Blue In Green', 'Beautiful Love' and the transformation of John Carisi's 'Israel' to the trio format are sublimely integrated and inspiring. Yet the two records culled from a day's work at the Village Vanguard are even finer. Evans's own playing is elevated by the immediacy of the occasion. His contributions seem all of a piece, lines spreading through and across the melodies and harmonies of the tune, pointing the way towards modality yet retaining the singing, rapturous qualities which the pianist heard in his material. All the Vanguard music is informed by an extra sense of discovery, as if the musicians were suddenly aware of what they were on to and were celebrating the achievement. They didn't have much time. LaFaro was killed in a car accident ten days later. There are extra tracks and alternative takes on the CD editions of all the above and, because the trio left very little music, these are indispensable. At The Village Vanguard offers nothing new, simply ten tracks culled from the other two records; a nice single-disc representation, but the others must be heard in their entirety. This is music which continues to provoke marvel and endless study.

[illegible]

* The Complete Live At The Village Vanguard 1961
Riverside 3RCD 1961–2 3CD As above. 6/61.

Riverside have now released this three-disc set of absolutely everything from the Vanguard tapes; the breakdown on the opening 'Gloria's Step' is the only 'new' thing here. For once in such enterprises, there's nothing that's not worth having and as a set of piano trio music it is virtually peerless.

(*) Moon Beams / * How My Heart Sings! Original Jazz Classics OJC 434 /369 Evans; Chuck Israels (b); Paul Motian (d). 5–6/62.

Chuck Israels replaced LaFaro, although Evans was at first so upset by the bassist's death that he stopped playing for a while. After some months of work, the pianist felt they were ready to record, and Keepnews, who'd wanted to get an all-ballad album out of Evans, cut both the above discs at the same sessions, alternating slow and up-tempo pieces and saving the ballads for Moon Beams. There are five Evans originals – 'Very Early' and 'Re: Person I Knew' on Moon Beams, 'Walking Up', 'Show-Type Tune' and '34 Skidoo' on How My Heart Sings! – and the slightly unfocused readings by the trio can be accounted for by the fact that the pianist revealed them to the others only at the dates. But this was otherwise a superb continuation of Evans's work. Israels plays pushy, hard-bitten lines and meshes very capably with Motian, and it spurs Evans into a sometimes pugnacious mood. 'Summertime' numbers among the more dramatic revisions of this standard, and 'In Your Own Sweet Way', two different takes on How My Heart Sings!, negotiates Brubeck's theme with a hint of asperity. Not that the ballads are wispy; 'Stairway To The Stars' is a model of firm melodic variation.

* Undercurrent Blue Note 790538-2 Evans; Jim Hall (g). 4–5/62.

 Interplay Original Jazz Classics OJC 308 Evans; Freddie Hubbard (t); Jim Hall (g); Percy Heath (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 7/62.

Evans and Hall hit it off perfectly in the studios. The duet album is a masterpiece of quiet shadings, drifting melancholy and hard swinging, the vigour emerging on a full-blooded 'I'm Getting Sentimental Over You'. But it's the nearly hallucinatory ballads, 'Dream Gypsy' and 'Romain', which stick in the mind: harp-like tones and gently fingered refrains establish a rare climate of introspection. The Interplay session, organized by Keepnews to keep Evans in funds, is comparatively desultory, but Hubbard plays rather well, and 'When You Wish Upon A Star' retains a powdery charm.

(*) At Shelly's Manne Hole Original Jazz Classics OJC 263
Evans; Chuck Israels (b); Larry Bunker (d). 5/63.

An understated yet tremendously intense 'Round Midnight' is among the highlights. Bunker and Israels were again given sight of some of the material only on the night of the recording, and their concentration adds to the tense lyricism which Evans was spinning out at the piano. A couple of rare excursions into the major blues, 'Swedish Pastry' and 'Blues in F/Five', complete a very strong programme.

* The Solo Sessions Vol. 1 / (*) ... Volume 2 Milestone M 9170 / 9195 Evans (p solo). 1/63.

These records were made in haste as part of a contract-fulfilling exercise, and lay unreleased for over 20 years, before appearing first on the boxed set below. The music finds Evans at his most exposed (the tunes include 'Why Was I Born?' and 'What Kind Of Fool Am I?'), and there's an underlying tone of aggressive disquiet, which has to be set against some deliriously lyrical passages. Two medleys – of 'My Favorite Things/Easy To Love/Baubles, Bangles And Beads' and 'Love Theme From Spartacus/Nardis' – are particularly revealing (both are on Volume 1), and there's a vivid reading of 'Ornithology' on the second disc.

* The Complete Riverside Recordings Riverside 018 12CD
Personnel collected from all above-listed OJC records. 56–63.

This huge collection is a breathtaking monument to Evans's art, and it would merit coronation if the individual albums weren't easily available. It includes all the music on the OJCs above, as well as the two solo Milestones.

(*) Empathy / A Simple Matter Of Conviction Verve 837757-2 Evans; Monty Budwig, Eddie Gomez (b); Shelly Manne (d). 8/62–10/66.

Although Budwig is excellent and Gomez, making his debut with Evans, is superb, it's the partnership with Manne which is the most interesting thing here. Evans seldom responded to a hard-driving drummer, but Manne's canny momentum creates sparks of interplay without disturbing the pianist's equilibrium. That said, the spontaneity misses the clarity of thought which is at the core of Evans's music, and although there's a flashing ingenuity in their playing on, say, 'With A Song In My Heart' with its mischievous coda, the more considered strengths of the pianist's regular trios are more satisfying.

(*) Conversations With Myself Verve 521409-2 Evans (p solo). 1–2/63.

An entire album of overdubbed three-way piano, something only Tristano had tried before. Conversations has aroused fierce views both for and against, but in an age where overdubbing is more or less the norm in record-making, its musicality is more important. Carefully graded, each line sifted against the others, it's occasionally too studied, and the follow-up Further Conversations With Myself (now also available together as Art Of Duo) is arguably more graciously realized. But 'Theme From Spartacus' and a fine-grained 'Round Midnight' are pieces where Evans seems to gaze at his own work and find it compelling.

(*) Trio '64 Verve 539058-2 Evans; Gary Peacock (b); Paul Motian (d). 12/63.

The trio record features Peacock's only official appearance with Evans, and the empathy is stunningly adventurous. On 'Little Lulu', for instance, the reach of the bassist's lines and his almost flamenco-like rhythms score brilliant points against the pianist's own energetic choruses. Motian, for once, seems subdued. Trio '64 has now been expanded to include seven alternatives and one 'new' piece, 'My Heart Stood Still'.

 Trio '65 Verve 519808-2 Evans; Chuck Israels (b); Larry Bunker (d). 2/65.
 Live In Paris 1965 Gambit 10289 As above, except add Paul Motian (d); Symphony Sid (mc). 2/65, 2/62.

Trio '65 documents a good rather than a great edition of the trio on a middling day in the studios.The tempos sound brusque – a good one to play to people who still think Evans was pure marshmallow – and some of the tracks are curtly dismissed, but there is still a good 'Round Midnight' and a fine 'If You Could See Me Now'. The live date confirms that impression and it's strange that a whole CD should be valued on the basis of three bonus tracks, in this case from 1972 at Birdland with Paul Motian at the kit: a lovely 'Gloria's Step'.

 Live In Stockholm 1965 Lone Hill Jazz 10290 Evans; John Lewis (p); Palle Danielsson, Eddie Gomez (b); Rune Carlsson, Jack DeJohnette (d); CBS Orchestra. 11/65, 7/68.

The personnel has an unfamiliar look. The main substance here is a Golden Circle date with local players Danielsson and Carlsson, who stand up well among some of the classic bass-and-drums teams of modern jazz, couple with a 1968 broadcast featuring Evans with Gomez and DeJohnette, augmented on a Granados arrangement and a blues by Lewis and an orchestra conducted by Alfred Antonini. These aren't new-found tapes: both were previously released, on Royal and Chazzer respectively.

(*) At Town Hall Verve 831271-2 Evans; Chuck Israels (b); Arnold Wise (d). 2/66.
(*) Intermodulation Verve 833771-2 Evans; Jim Hall (g). 66.
(*) Further Conversations With Myself Verve 559832-2 Evans (p solo). 8/67.
(*) California Here I Come Verve 986257-2 Evans; Eddie Gomez (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 67.
(*) At The Montreux Jazz Festival Verve 827844-2 Evans; Eddie Gomez (b); Jack DeJohnette (d). 6/68.
 Alone Verve 833801-2 Evans (p solo). 9–10/68.

Evans's period with Verve went on to produce two further in-concert albums and his first officially released solo record, aside from the multitracked albums. At Town Hall includes some exquisite playing on his favourite standards, together with the long 'Solo – In Memory Of His Father', a requiem that includes 'Turn Out The Stars'. Wise makes his only appearance in the Evans canon and keeps out of the way. The Montreux disc was a Grammy winner in its day and is another one-time-only appearance for DeJohnette; hardly the ideal man for the position, but, along with fellow recruit Gomez, he pushes Evans into his most tigerish form. 'Nardis' and 'A Sleepin' Bee' sound particularly strong. Much of the solo album's music sounds low-voltage, even for Evans, but the very long (over 14 minutes) exploration of 'Never Let Me Go' investigates what would become Keith Jarrett territory. Intermodulation is maybe not quite as perfect as the earlier Undercurrent; the choice of material encourages a less ethereal feel, but Evans and Hall together should be sufficient commendation.

Further Conversations With Myself repeats the trick of his earlier overdubbed solo set and, though this one is far less well-known, we prefer it for its more complete picture of Evans as a soliloquizer. 'Emily' is played almost friskily, 'The Shadow Of Your Smile' is meticulously prepared from simple beginnings. Sometimes he takes a wrong turning, but it remains an endearing record, even if the sound is still not kind.

The trio sessions with Gomez and Philly Joe were greatly expanded for their release in the 'complete' Verve edition, but for the moment European collectors will have to settle for the CD equivalent of the original double-LP. Evans liked to play with Jones, with whom he had worked in the Miles Davis band years before, and the drummer's prodding, restless manner brought out a rare kind of intensity in the pianist. Instead of his collected self, there's an almost daredevil manner at certain moments which few other performers seemed to find in him.

 Waltz For Debby: The Complete Pescara 1969 Festival Lone Hill LHJRCD 10156 Evans; Eddie Gomez (b); Marty Morell (d). 7/69.

The new trio in fine form on this much-bootlegged European date. Morell plays with fire and control and Gomez's own spots are a feature of a programme that mixes familiar material – 'Nardis', 'Very Early', the title-piece – with real harmonic invention and edgy improvisation.

 From Left To Right Verve 557451-2 Evans; Sam Brown (g); Eddie Gomez (b); Marty Morell (d); orchestra. 69–70.

Originally on MGM, this is one of Evans's most obscure records. He plays acoustic and electric pianos, there are some unedifying arrangements by Mickey Leonard, and there is a hint of Creed Taylor in the overall feel. For completists only.

 You're Gonna Hear From Me /  Montreux II / (*) The Bill Evans Album /  The Tokyo Concert /  Live In Tokyo Milestone 9164 / Columbia 481264-2 / Columbia CK 30855/480989-2 / Original Jazz Classics OJC 345 / Columbia 481265-2 Evans; Eddie Gomez (b); Marty Morell (d). 11/69; 6/70; 5/71; 1/73; 1/73.

Some of the steam had gone out of Evans's career on record at this point, after the astonishing consistency of his first ten years in the studio. Gomez, a great technician, has an immediately identifiable 'soulful' sound which tends to colour his lines; his interplay with the leader assumes a routine excellence which Morell, a fine if self-effacing drummer, tends to play alongside; and bass and piano take more conspicuously solo turns rather than seeking out the three-way interplay of the earlier trios. The individual albums are still usually very good and highly enjoyable. You're Gonna Hear From Me, cut live at Copenhagen's Montmartre, is sprightly, with 'Waltz For Debby' taken at possibly its fastest-ever tempo, a surprisingly light-hearted 'Round Midnight' and an excellent 'Nardis'. Evans dabbles with electric piano on Album, but both Japanese concerts are straight-ahead and flow with ideas; 'Up With The Lark' on the OJC is a marvellous piece, and the Columbia version is almost as good. The Bill Evans Album was always a weak note in the Evans discography and the latest edition sounds no better. Montreux II is fine on its own terms, but nothing stands out.

 The Secret Sessions Milestone 4421-2 8CD Evans; Teddy Kotick, Eddie Gomez (b); Arnie Wise, Philly Joe Jones, Jack DeJohnette, John Dentz, Marty Morell, Eliot Zigmund (d). 3/66–1/75.

Evans was the kind of musician to create disciples in listeners as well as musicians, and there was none more diligent than Mike Harris, who lugged in a semi-portable tape-machine to the Village Vanguard over a period of ten years to catch Evans at work. The tapes feature various incarnations of the trio over a decade, including some tunes Bill seldom looked at. Aside from the earliest date, where Teddy Kotick does a good job, it's Eddie Gomez all the way, with six different drummers. The sessions with Philly Joe Jones are especially interesting, although it's the fidelity which is the real problem here, better than most amateur recordings and cleaned up by Milestone, but not much: the bass booms, the crowd chatters, and finely though Evans often plays, he's never done proper justice.

 Since We Met /  Re: Person I Knew /  Jazzhouse /  Blue In Green /  Live In Ottawa 1974 Original Jazz Classics OJC 622 / 749 / Milestone M 9151 / 9185 / Gambit 69271 Evans; Eddie Gomez (b); Marty Morell (d). 1/74; 1/74; 74; 74; 8/74, 9/72.

 Intuition /  Montreux III Original Jazz Classics OJC 470 / 644 As above, except omit Morell. 11/74; 7/75.

 From The 70's Original Jazz Classics 1069 As above, except add Morell. 73–74.

Evans signed to Fantasy and with his assiduous producer, Helen Keane, created a big body of work that lasted through the '70s. Since We Met and Re: Person I Knew both come from a single Village Vanguard engagement, and though Gomez and Morell don't erode memories of LaFaro and Motian, the music speaks with as much eloquence as this trio could muster. Jazzhouse and Blue In Green tell us nothing new about him and must be considered for collectors only, even if the playing is mostly impeccable. Consistency had become Evans's long suit, and he seemed content to tinker with favourite pieces, disclosing little beyond the beauty of his inimitable, endlessly imitated touch. The live set from Ottawa, broadcast from Camp Fortune and briefly available as a Can-Am LP, is more illuminating than some, in that it touches on relatively untrodden material and is presented in very decent sound; there are a few cuts from autumn 1972, but they're poor by comparison. From The 70's salvages two duets with Gomez and a live set from The Manne Hole. The two albums with Gomez as sole partner explore a wider range of material – Montreux III is a particularly well-turned concert set – but one still misses the extra impetus of a drummer.

(*) Alone (Again) Original Jazz Classics OJC 795 Evans (p solo). 12/75.

 Crosscurrents Original Jazz Classics OJC 718 Evans; Lee Konitz (as); Warne Marsh (ts); Eddie Gomez (b); Eliot Zigmund (d). 2–3/77.

(*) Quintessence Original Jazz Classics OJC 698 Evans; Harold Land (ts); Kenny Burrell (g); Ray Brown (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 5/76.

 I Will Say Goodbye Original Jazz Classics OJC 761 Evans; Eddie Gomez (b); Eliot Zigmund (d). 5/79.

 Eloquence Original Jazz Classics OJC 814 Evans; Eddie Gomez (b). 11/73–12/75.

 The Complete Fantasy Recordings Fantasy 1012 9CD As all Fantasy/OJC sessions listed above. 73–79.

The Fantasy material isn't on a par with the magnificent complete Riverside set, but it has many rewards and the complete edition includes two bonuses: an interview with Marian McPartland from her Piano Jazz radio series, and a 1976 date in Paris. A few recent reissues have brought some other Fantasy sessions back into general circulation. Crosscurrents is another interesting if ultimately unremarkable meeting with two great horn-players. I Will Say Goodbye finds the trio tackling some relatively unfamiliar material in 'A House Is Not A Home', 'Quiet Light' and 'Seascape'. But it's good to have the neglected Alone (Again) as a separate release. This features some very fine Evans on five standards, with a long and wide-ranging exploration of 'People' as the highlight. Quintessence was a rare horn-fronted date; it's amiable but not especially interesting. Eloquence is a mixture of solos and duets with Eddie Gomez, some studio, some live. Losing the drummer doesn't do anything special for the situation, but two ballads, 'In A Sentimental Mood' and 'But Beautiful', are notably effective.

* The Tony Bennett/Bill Evans Album /  Together Again Original Jazz Classics OJC 439 / Concord CCD-2198-2 Evans; Tony Bennett (v). 6/75; 9/76.

Pairing Evans with Tony Bennett was an inspired idea that pays off in a session which has an illustrious kind of after-hours feel to it. Bennett, as big-hearted as always, lives out the helpless-Romeo lyrics of such as 'When In Rome' and sounds filled with wonder when working through a gorgeous 'The Touch Of Your Lips'. He also sings what's surely the definitive vocal version of 'Waltz For Debby', where the corn of Gene Lees's lyric suddenly sounds entirely right. Evans plays deferentially but seems to read every mood with complete accuracy. For some reason the follow-up was nothing like as good, with a droopy feel that the preponderance of doleful lyrics only accentuates. Some lovely episodes, though.

 You Must Believe In Spring Warner Bros 8122-73719-2 Evans; Eddie Gomez (b); Eliot Zigmund (d). 8/77.

 New Conversations Warner Bros 7559-27505-2 Evans (p solo). 1–2/78.

 Affinity Warner Bros 7599-27387-2 Evans; Larry Schneider (ss, ts, f); Toots Thielemans (hca); Marc Johnson (b); Eliot Zigmund (d). 10–11/78.

 We Will Meet Again Warner Bros 7599-27504-2 Evans; Tom Harrell (t); Larry Schneider (ts, ss, f); Marc Johnson (b); Joe LaBarbera (d). 8/79.

() The Paris Concert Edition One / () The Paris Concert Edition Two Warner Bros 7559-60311-2 / 7599-60311-2 As above, except omit Harrell, Schneider. 11/79.

(*) We Will Meet Again: The Warner Bros & Elektra Years 1977–1980 Warner Bros 5101 11507 2 2CD As above discs. 77–80.

Evans's Warners albums are comparatively neglected and little talked-of. Affinity, co-credited with Toots Thielemans, was the first album to feature his final bassist, Marc Johnson, and some of the music is heartbreakingly lovely, although Thielemans, when tuned in to the typical Evans wavelength, can often sound helplessly doleful. There are some tunes which Evans was trying out as new elements of his set, such as Paul Simon's 'I Do It For Your Love', and even Schneider contributes 'Tomato Kiss'. Somehow it feels a bit stiff and produced, and 'The Other Side Of Midnight' and one or two others come out sounding like mere mood music. We Will Meet Again, in dedication to Bill's late brother, Harry Evans, brings in Harrell and LaBarbera. Once one gets past the idea that a two-horns-plus-rhythm quintet is simply not Evans's natural environment at this point, the playing seems fine, but, despite some new tunes and Harrell's flowing solos, the music lacks focus, or particularity, even.

New Conversations restores the multiple-overdubbing technique which Evans had tackled during his Verve years. He uses acoustic and electric pianos for some extra tonal variation, and the results are pleasing rather than compelling. 'Remembering The Rain', for instance, is characteristically beautiful in the pianistic touch, but inescapably pastel.

The live albums are both from the same Paris concert. Though the trio was still quite new, it was already forging new momentum out of the pianist's favourite pieces: 'Re: Person I Knew', 'Laurie' and 'Quiet Now' are good enough to stand with the best of his many versions, and he has another go at 'I Did It For Your Love' on the first record. The sound is mostly good, though Johnson's bass – less 'pneumatic' than Gomez – isn't quite focused in the mix.

The appearance of You Must Believe In Spring, actually the earliest of this group, pretty much completes this part of the story. Evans introduced his annoying obsession with 'Theme From *M*A*S*H*' here, and some of the other tunes pander to ideas of the pianist as romantic misery, but a bonus version of 'Freddie Freeloader' makes a nice compensation. We Will Meet Again, one disc of studio and one of live work, is an attractive compilation that makes the most of this sequence of albums.

 Half Moon Bay Milestone 9282-2 Evans; Eddie Gomez (b); Marty Morell (d). 11/73.

 Getting Sentimental Milestone 9336-2 Evans; Michael Moore (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 1/78.

 Homecoming Milestone 9291-2 Evans; Marc Johnson (b); Joe LaBarbera (d). 11/79.

In the endless search for releasable Evans material, Milestone dug up these amateur live tapes. Half Moon Bay was done at a favourite little beach-house club in California and finds the 1973 trio in rare form, the usual set played with particular intensity. Getting Sentimental has real rarity value (another private recording by Mike Harris) and catches Michael Moore auditioning for the trio, with Philly Joe on drums. Homecoming is from the days of the final trio and was done at Bill's old Alma Mater in Hammond, Louisiana – hence the title. Again, the music is played with considerable gutsiness – hear the almost thunderous ending to 'But Beautiful' – and is personalized by the pianist's many spoken introductions, a rarity in the Evans discography.

(*) Complete February 1972 Paris ORTF Performance Gambit 69230 2CD Evans; Eddie Gomez (b); Marty Morell, Tony Oxley (d). 2 & 6/72.

(*) Live In Switzerland Gambit 69232 Evans; Eddie Gomez (b); Eliot Zigmund (d). 2/75.

 Köln Concert 1976 Gambit 69228 As above, except add Marty Morell (d). 2/72, 6/76.

() Live In Rome 1979 Gambit 69229 Evans; Eddie Gomez, Marc Johnson (b); Marty Morell, Joe LaBarbera (d). 7/69, 12/79.

Evans was often recorded on his European tours, and these Gambit releases round up several concerts that between them cover a decade of playing. The Paris set is in excellent sound and has the trio in fine shape, but even more interesting is the bonus of a 15-minute version of 'Nardis', taken down at the Ljubljana Festival of a few months later, where Tony Oxley replaced Morell for a brief period. It certainly touches shores wilder than many Evans explored, even if there is actually more bass and drums than piano here. The Swiss concert of three years later also sounds good and has 78 minutes of music, the playing calmly intense. The Cologne tape isn't as good, although again the playing is excellent from all hands, and this disc includes three bonus pieces from a set played in Milan three years earlier, with the trio dancing through 'How My Heart Sings'.

The Rome set marks an early appearance by the final Evans trio. Unfortunately this is in poorly balanced sound, with a noisy audience, the piano somewhere in the middle distance and Johnson roving in and out of view. A version of 'Nardis' by the 1969 trio, also recorded in an Italian club, is pointlessly tacked on to the end.

(*) Turn Out The Stars /  The Last European Concert: Complete Bad Hoenningen Performance 1980 /  The Last Waltz /  Consecration Warner Bros 45925-2 6CD / Gambit 69243 / Milestone 4430-2 8CD / 4436-2 8CD Evans; Marc Johnson (b); Joe LaBarbera (d). 6/80; 8/80; 9/80; 8–9/80.

Evans was clearly prepared to try new things with this group, and although one sometimes feels the music is struggling rather aimlessly with form, as if reluctant to seek a freedom that would ultimately be more confining, the group feels vital in a way that Evans's trios hadn't touched on in some time. There is inevitably an unseemly rush to claim the 'last' this or that with such a career. The Bad Hoenningen date, available before on West Wind, is good but torn between genuine creative enterprise, with Johnson easily meeting the standard of previous bassists, and a tiredness at its core, and when Evans plays 'Suicide Is Painless' – the theme from *M*A*S*H* – there's a gulp as you realize how far down he was having to go to get water from the well.

The Village Vanguard material on Turn Out The Stars (the same title was confusingly used for a Dreyfus disc recorded at Ronnie Scott's around the same time) is much better. The expected tunes are present and correct, and in the best of them – 'Nardis', for instance – Evans, Johnson and LaBarbera find genuine new ground in repertoire that the pianist might otherwise have done to death. The old seraphic glow is sometimes glimpsed here, but seldom; for all the ingenuities on show, much of the songlike beauty which enlightened his most affecting music has vanished. In its place, a certain heaviness of hand and probably heart.

An even closer-to-the-bone farewell is The Last Waltz, no fewer than eight discs of Evans from his final completed residency, at San Francisco's Keystone Korner, made only days before the pianist's death. Evans students will certainly want to study the six versions of 'Nardis', and his final thoughts on 'new' pieces such as 'I Do It For Your Love', as well as the familiar watermarks. Again, there's an impression of energy being forced through the fingers, and listening at length requires some effort. That said, there remain passages which would be the envy of most other pianists in jazz. Consecration is mostly the first sets taken down on the same evenings. As before, certain tunes get several treatments (six of 'My Romance', although this is one of the most interesting vehicles for the pianist's thinking, five each of 'Tiffany' and 'Your Story', and five of 'Re: Person I Knew'). While he plays some tunes at an over-fast pace, others are slowly unfolded in a vintage Evans manner. It's hard to think of much more to say about this music. No artist should be asked to stand up to such obsessive scrutiny, but for all their idiosyncrasies, there's much fine music in these sets.

Also, in brief:

 Tenderly Milestone MCD-9317-2. 56–57.
Vibist Don Elliott made home recordings of these duets: two guys having fun with standards, blues, bop and whatever came into their heads. There's chatter, prompting, some laughs, the odd car horn, the telephone, and at the very end the prototype of Evans's 'Funkallero', which he wouldn't record until 1962.

(*) Bill Evans And Orchestra Gambit 69214. 6–7/57.
Misleadingly named, in that it's made up of sessions under Gunther Schuller's leadership of music scored for performances at the 1957 Brandeis Festival, a key Third Stream event.

 The Complete Gus Wildi Recordings Lone Hill Jazz LHJRCD10151. 57–59.
Lone Hill are tripping over themselves; some of this stuff came out again later on The Sideman Years. Check the contents carefully before buying.

 Bill Evans & Eddie Costa: The Complete Quartets Lone Hill Jazz LHJRCD10185. 1/58.
'Complete' nothing. This is Costa's Guys And Dolls Like Vibes, plus a single track ('Django') from Legrand Jazz, featuring Miles Davis.

 Bill Evans & Lee Konitz Play The Arrangements Of Jimmy Giuffre Lone Hill Jazz LHJRCD10193. 5 & 10/59.
Previously issued as Lee Konitz Meets Jimmy Giuffre and You And Lee, so again Evans is basically in a sideman role.

() The 1960 Birdland Sessions Fresh Sound FSR-CD 390. 3–4/60.
Broadcast recordings, which have floated round semi-legitimately for years.

 The 'Interplay' Sessions Milestone 47066. 7 & 8/62.
Made for money as he got out of a slump, and featuring horns – Freddie Hubbard, Zoot Sims – these are untypical and curiously characterless; some of the stuff wasn't released until after Bill's death.

 The Best Of Bill Evans On Verve Verve 527906-2. 5/63–12/69.
A dozen tracks from twelve albums.

 Live In Europe 1965 Lone Hill Jazz 10214. 2–10/65.
A selection of transatlantic radio broadcasts. Patchy sound but some intriguing moments, including guest spots from Lee Konitz.

 Bill Evans Trio With Symphony Orchestra Verve 821983-2. 9–12/65.
Claus Ogerman's arrangements are pretty, if hardly a milestone in jazz.

Bill Evans (born 1958)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Studied in north Texas and New Jersey, then with Dave Liebman, who recommended him to Miles Davis. With Davis, 1980–84, then worked with his own groups and in various fusion-orientated situations.

 Escape Escapade ESC 03650-2 Evans; Wallace Roney (t); Jim Beard (ky); Lee Ritenour, Jon Herington, Gary Poulson, Nick Moroch (g); Victor Bailey, Marcus Miller, Mark Egan, Ron Jenkins (b); Billy Kilson, Steve Ferrone (d); Manolo Badrena (perc); MC 900 Ft Jesus, Mark Ledford, Ahmed Best (v). 12/95–1/96.
Evans got off to a high-profile start in the Miles Davis band of the early '80s. His star has remained reasonably bright since then, although a stint with Blue Note led him nowhere in particular, and much of his recorded work is deleted. He seems to enjoy the fusion-blowing context while wishing to keep at least one foot in a boppish environment. Beard's shrewd production, typical of the new breed of art-jazz that evolved out of fusion, cocoons Evans and the other soloists in glittering keyboard and percussion surrounds. It's OK, but neither deep nor enduring.

 Modern Days And Nights Double-Time DTRCD-120 Evans; Andy LaVerne (p); John Patitucci (b); Steve Davis (d). 11/96.
Modern Days And Nights, a slow-burning set of Cole Porter pieces, is by a co-operative group for which LaVerne seems to have taken most of the arranging decisions. Some of the tunes are clever in the slightly exasperating way that LaVerne often enjoys, melodies reharmonized and rhythms destabilized as if to make sure that players of this accomplishment aren't just going over standards they know backwards. The environment suits Evans, who finds his most plaintive tone for 'Every Time We Say Goodbye' in particular, but the record has an air of calculation that undercuts its appeal.

 Soul Inside ESC 03668-2 Evans; Lew Soloff (t); Conrad Herwig (tb); Ricky Peterson (p, org); John Scofield, Dean Brown (g); James Genus, Tim LeFebvre (b); Steve Jordan (d); Don Alias (perc); Les McCann, Vaneese Thomas (v). 6/00.
(*) Big Fun ESC 03681 Evans; Randy Brecker, Lew Soloff (t); Conrad Herwig (tb); Mickey Raphael (hca); Robben Ford, Hiram Bullock (g); Ricky Peterson (org); Clifford Carter (p); James Genus (b); Vinnie Colaiuta (d); Manolo Badrena (perc); Les McCann, Willie Nelson, Bruce Hornsby (v). 1–5/02.
An entertaining simulation of a top-drawer R&B band, just about pushed into the jazz zone by Evans's own solos and the odd 'interesting' chord here and there. Les McCann turns in some throaty vocals, which may or may not add to the jazz side of things. This gang of top-class session-men will never really sound loose or uncomplicatedly funky, but they can play – and, unlike some of his other own-name efforts, Evans sounds as if he feels at home. Same again on the next one, and if the tougher tracks hit pretty hard, the less-appealing ones are, well, even less appealing. Hiring Willie Nelson to sing 'For What It's Worth' must have seemed like a good idea to somebody.

Also, in brief:

 Starfish And The Moon Escapade 03654-2. 97.
Continues the feel of Escape, ranging between the electronic pastorale of 'It's Only History' and the trim, forceful blow of 'Red Dog'.

* Soulbop Band Live BHM 1003-2 2CD. 04.
Evans and Randy Brecker (t) share top billing on this tour souvenir. A starry line-up, but the music is grinding and relentless, reminiscent of fusion's worst excesses.

 Soulgrass BHM 1008-2. 10/04–1/05.
Recorded mostly in Nashville, this mildly entertaining mix of country and jazz is a breakthrough for nobody, but give Bill some credit for at least trying something new.

() The Other Side Of Something Intuition INT 34162. 07.
Same again, with Béla Fleck (bj) back on board and Evans taking more vocals.

Doc Evans (1907–77)

CORNET

Minnesota-born, he returned there in 1952 after a successful time touring. Had his own Dixieland TV show.

 Down In Jungle Town Jazzology JCD 19 Evans; Hal Runyon (tb); Harry Blons, Loren Helberg (cl); Tom McGovern, Hod Russell (p); Irv Wickner (bj) Bernie Sundermeyer (b); George Tupper (tba); Mickey Steinke, Warren Thewis (d). 53, 55.
 Stomps And Blues Jazzology JCD 195 Evans; Albert Nicholas, Omer Simeon (cl); Knocky Parker (p); Early Murphy (b); Gene Juckem (d). 56.
 Four Or Five Times Jazzology JC2D 312 Evans; Hal Runyon (tb); Harry Blons (cl); Knocky Parker (p); Bill Peer (bj); George Tupper (tba); Red Maddock (d, v, gate crasher). 56.
(*) Muskrat Ramble Jazzology JCD 236 Evans; Bob Gruenenfelder (c); Hal Runyon (tb); Dick Pendleton, Loren Helberg (cl); Knocky Parker (p); Bill Peer (bj); George Tupper (tba); Red Maddock, Warren Thewis (d). 57.
 At The Gaslight Jazzology JCD 363 Evans; Bob Gruenenfelder (c); Alan Frederickson, Hal Runyon (tb); Dick Pendleton, Mark Strachota (cl); Mel Grant, Augie Kepp (p); Eddie Lynch, Bill Peer (bj); Jim Morton (b, tba); Tommie Andrews, Warren Thewis (d). 57, 67.
Unlike a Colyer, say, Paul Wesley Evans wasn't hidebound by the example of the old masters. Though his models were and remained Pops and Bix, he played Dixieland his way, assembling a pool of like-minded players in Minnesota who worked away quietly, or rather quite noisily, outside the jazz mainstream. Most of these records are old Audiophile LPs, in most cases doubled up for CD reissue: so, Down in Jungle Town consists of the record of that name, made shortly after Doc's return to Minnesota, plus the later Traditional Jazz. There really isn't much to choose between these discs, though Muskrat Ramble has always been the most popular and probably deserves its fame by an edge. All one can say of Evans's fellows is that they're all decent players, perhaps a little vanilla for this repertoire, but they go for it with some gusto and it makes for fine listening. Having Simeon and Nicholas on the Stomps And Blues compilation adds some interest and it's possible to find earlier recordings of Doc with Yerba Buena and Bunk Johnson. The Audiophiles, though, pretty much sum up the story.

Also, in brief:

() Jazz Ltd Delmark DE 226. 49, 51.
An oddly disappointing disc despite Miff Mole (tb) and Don Ewell (p) on two sessions.

 Dixieland Encores Doc Evans Music DEM 02. 54, 57.
Live material, recorded at the Walker Art Center in Minnesota.

 Doc Evans Live Doc Evans Music DEM 04. 57.
Up the Mississippi from New Orleans to Minneapolis; a musical history of traditional jazz.

Gil Evans (1912–88)

PIANO, ARRANGER, COMPOSER

A gentle Svengali. His association with Miles Davis was definitive of one strain of modern jazz, but Gil went on to rewrite the musical legacy of Jimi Hendrix. Born in Canada, and serving a tough indenture in Claude Thornhill's band, he drew heavily on Duke Ellington as both composer and arranger. His peerless voicings are instantly recognizable.

 Gil Evans And Ten Original Jazz Classics OJC 346 Evans; John Carisi, Jack Loven, Louis Mucci (t); Jimmy Cleveland, Bart Varsalona (tb); Willie Ruff (hn); Lee Konitz (as); Steve Lacy (ss); Dave Kurtzer (bsn); Paul Chambers (b); Jo Jones, Nick Stabulas (d). 9–10/57
Recorded four months after his epochal arrangements for Miles Ahead, this is oblique, intelligent modern jazz, with Carisi's trumpet prominent, Lee Konitz and Steve Lacy lending the reed parts the floating feel typical of an Evans chart. It's a record somewhat overshadowed by the Impulse! and Verve sessions below, but there's still plenty to listen to and enjoy.

(*) The Complete Pacific Jazz Recordings Blue Note 58300 Evans; Johnny Coles, Louis Mucci, Clyde Reasinger, Ernie Royal, Allen Smith, Danny Stiles (t); Jimmy Cleveland, Bill Elton, Curtis Fuller, Frank Rehak (tb); Rod Levitt, Dick Lieb, Tom Mitchell Jr (btb); Earl Chapin, Bob Northern, Julius Watkins (frhn); Billy Barber, Harvey Phillips (tba); Steve Lacy (ss); Cannonball Adderley (as); Eddie Caine (as, f); Budd Johnson (ts); Al Bock (cl, bcl, f); Gerald Sanfino (cl, eng hn, f, picc); Ray Crawford, Chuck Wayne (g); Dick Carter, Paul Chambers, Tommy Potter (b); Art Blakey, Denis Charles, Elvin Jones, Philly Joe Jones (d). 5/58, 59.
New Bottle, Old Wine was the perfect title for a set that delivered wonderfully fresh arrangements and performances of such hoary things as 'King Porter Stomp' (an amazing performance) and Waller's 'Willow Tree'. There's some Charlie Parker bop as well, but everything has been transmuted by Evans's arranging. Great Jazz Standards isn't quite such a compelling record. Lacy is an uneasy voice in the second line-up, and he's blown away by the now largely forgotten Johnson, who plays wonderfully on 'La Nevada'. There's also a version of Fran Landesman's 'Ballad Of The Sad Young Men', which would have been a contemporary pop song when this was made. These are powerful sets, perhaps not as accomplished as Out Of The Cool a year later, but certainly key Evans recordings.

[illegible]

 Out Of The Cool
Impulse! 051186-2 Evans; Johnny Coles, Phil Sunkel (t); Keg Johnson, Jimmy Knepper (tb); Tony Studd (btb); Bill Barber (tba); Ray Beckenstein, Eddie Cane (as, f, picc); Budd Johnson (ts, ss); Bob Tricarico (f, picc, bsn); Ray Crawford (g); Ron Carter (b); Elvin Jones, Charli Persip (d). 12/60.
Out Of The Cool is Evans's masterpiece under his own name and one of the best examples of jazz orchestration since the early Ellington bands. It's the soloists – Coles on the eerie 'Sunken Treasure', a lonely-sounding Knepper on 'Where Flamingoes Fly' – that immediately catch the ear, but repeated hearings reveal the relaxed sophistication of Evans's settings, which give a hefty band the immediacy and elasticity of a quintet. Evans's sense of time allows Coles to double the metre on George Russell's 'Stratusphunk', which ends with a clever inversion of the opening measures. 'La Nevada' is one of his best and most neglected scores, typically built up out of simple materials. The sound, already good, has been given lots more timbre by digital transfer. Be aware that Into The Hot, the obvious 'sequel', with Gil's picture on the cover, isn't an Evans album at all; long story.

(*) The Individualism Of Gil Evans Verve 833804-2 Evans; Ernie Royal, Johnny Coles, Bernie Glow, Louis Mucci (t); Jimmy Cleveland, Tony Studd (tb); Ray Alonge, Jimmy Buffington, Gil Cohen, Don Corado, Bob Northern, Julius Watkins (frhn); Bill Barber (tba); Al Block, Garvin Bushell, Eric Dolphy, Andy Fitzgerald, Steve Lacy, George Marge, Jerome Richardson, Wayne Shorter, Bob Tricarico (reeds); Kenny Burrell, Barry Galbraith (g); Bob Maxwell, Margaret Ross (hp); Paul Chambers, Richard Davis, Milt Hinton, Gary Peacock, Ben Tucker (b); Osie Johnson, Elvin Jones (d). 9/63, 4 & 7/64.

 Verve Jazz Masters 23: Gil Evans Verve 516728-2 Similar to above. 63–64.

Individualism is a looser album, made with a pool of overlapping ensembles, perfectly tailored to the compositions and all securely grounded in the bass. The solos are now mainly improvised rather than written, and stray more freely from the original composition, in anticipation of the '80s bands. 'Hotel Me' is an extraordinary performance, basically very simple but marked by throaty shouts from the brass that set up Evans's own churchy solo. 'El Toreador' again features Coles, less certain-sounding than on Out Of The Cool, but still a soloist of considerable imagination. Remarkable as the music is, there's an oddly unfinished feel to the record, as if it had been put together out of previously rejected bits and pieces. It isn't just a CD round-up, though. The Jazz Masters album has no pretensions, but it's actually a well-paced and convincing survey, ideal for anyone coming at Gil's music with no previous acquaintance or no stock of old vinyl.

 Svengali Atlantic 8122 73720 Evans; Tex Allen, Hannibal Marvin Peterson, Richard Williams (t); Joe Daley (tb, tba); Sharon Freeman, Pete Levin (frhn); Howard Johnson (tba, flhn, bs); Trevor Koehler (ss, bs, f); David Sanborn (as); Billy Harper (ts, f); David Horowitz (syn); Ted Dunbar (g); Herb Bushler (b); Bruce Ditmas (d); Sue Evans (perc). 5 & 6/73.

Much reissued and usually easy enough to find, this significant statement from the early '70s finds the orchestra in a later vintage, with Sanborn and Harper providing much of the excitement. The altoist is superb on 'Blues In Orbit', while Harper's originals, 'Cry Of Hunger' and 'Thoroughbred', are staples of the programme. There's a not quite successful 'Summertime', but 'Eleven', a collaboration between Gil and Miles, is restored to full length as a bonus track, in addition to the savagely edited minute and three quarters that went out on the release version.

(*) Plays The Music Of Jimi Hendrix RCA Victor 09026 638722 Evans; Hannibal Marvin Peterson, Lew Soloff (t, flhn); Tom Malone (tb, btb, f, syn); Peter Gordon (frhn); Pete Levin (frhn, syn); Howard Johnson (tba, bcl, b); David Sanborn (ss, as, f); Billy Harper (ts, f); Trevor Koehler (as, ts, f); David Horovitz (p, syn); Paul Metzke (syn, b); Joe Gallivan (syn, perc); John Abercrombie, Ryo Kawasaki, Keith Loving (g); Warren Smith (vib, mar); Don Pate, Michael Moore (b); Bruce Ditmas (d); Sue Evans (perc). 6/74, 4/75.

Evans's championing of Hendrix's compositions – 'Little Wing' most immortally – was a controversial but ultimately career-stoking decision. It's difficult to tell, while listening to these powerful tracks, whether the quality of the music is testimony to Hendrix's genius as a composer or Evans's as an arranger, or to some strange posthumous communication between the two. Some of the tunes are inevitably moved a long way from source; '1983 A Merman I Should Turn To Be' takes on a new character, as does 'Up From The Skies', two takes of which are included. 'Little Wing' remains the touchstone, though, and the recording, from spring 1975, is superb.

 Paris Blues Owl 013429-2 Evans; Steve Lacy (ss). 12/87.

It's scarcely a momentous occasion, musically speaking, for either man. Mingus themes predominate, and Gil takes yet another look at 'Orange Was The Color Of Her Dress', which was most likely the last thing on his music-stand. Interesting to hear Lacy at work on this music, but in the end the results are merely light and agreeable.

 75th Birthday Concert BBC Legends 7007 Evans; Miles Evans, Palle Mikkelborg, Lew Soloff (t); Dave Bargeron (btb, tba); Steve Lacy (ss); Chris Hunter (ss, as); John Surman (ss, bs); Don Weller (ts); Delmar Brown (ky, v); Hiram Bullock (g); Mark Egan (b); Danny Gottlieb (d); Anita Evans, Airto Moreira (perc). 87.

Gil's 75th birthday was marked by a special concert at the Hammersmith Odeon in London, recorded for broadcast by the BBC and now available on disc. The occasion was distinguished by a brief walk-on from Van Morrison, who delivered an excruciating version of 'Moondance' before disappearing again; mercifully it is not included. There is, though, a valuable interview with Evans, conducted by Charles Fox. Musically, it's very much of its time and period, with cuts from two houses in a shamefully empty hall. Both versions of 'Stone Free' are very good and there are a couple of cracking Mingus interpretations, but it's the surprise elements – 'Murder By Numbers' and 'Synchronicity' – that really catch the ear. The recording is as good as you'd expect, with lots of presence in the orchestra and plenty of detail round individual horns.

 A Tribute To Gil Soul Note 121209 Miles Evans (t, perc); Lew Soloff (t); Dave Bargeron, Tom Malone (tb, tba); Chris Hunter (as, f); Alex Foster (ts); Gil Goldstein (ky); Biréli Lagrène (g); Michal Urbaniak (vn); Mark Egan (b); Danny Gottlieb (d); Urszula Dudziak (v, elec). 7/88.

Gil's death came along with the band's festival diary pretty full, and not surprisingly the decision was taken to fulfil as many engagements as possible, with Gil Goldstein as concertmaster. These performances were recorded in Italy during July 1988. The two main items selected are long versions of 'Orgone' and 'London' with, by comparison, very short, almost schematic readings of 'Moonstruck One' and 'Eleven', neither of which goes over the two-minute mark. It's to be wondered why and how these selections were made, for they don't seem to answer any obvious logic. Urszula Dudziak is characteristically dramatic in her feature, 'Duet', and the horn, violin and synth solos are all sharp, emphatic and to the point. Even so, we are left to wonder what else was recorded on the tour and why we haven't heard more of it.

Also, in brief:

 The Real Birth Of The Cool: Studio Recordings / **(*) ...

Transcription Recordings Jazz Factory 22801/ 22803. 41–47; 46–47.
Nice idea to grab the name and cachet of Miles's record for these earlier arrangements for the Thornhill band and elsewhere. The studio work is more interesting.

() Live At The Public Theater Volumes 1 & 2 Storyville STCD 5003 / 5005. 2/80.
A transitional band. Individual performances are generally good, but there's a lack of excitement about the music and an unfamiliar abstraction.

 The Gold Collection Fine Tune 2234. 81, 86.
Some nice touring material from Paris in 1981 and Lugano/Milan from 1986. Nothing revelatory, but well up to snuff.

 The Honey Man Newtone 5022. 86
Versions of 'Boogie Stop Shuffle', 'Goodbye Pork Pie Hat' and 'Voodoo Chile', but these are relatively bland. The one surprise is the Gershwin title-track, delivered with raw passion.

 Live At Umbria Jazz: Volumes 1 & 2 EGEA 0861001 / 0861002. 87.
These late recordings seem to be available under a number of imprints, which may raise some questions about the exact provenance. However, these are fine, fiery performances from a time-served band.

Orrin Evans (born 1975)

PIANO

Born in New Jersey, Evans has subsequently worked extensively in and around the Philadelphia scene before moving to New York (and back again).

(*) Justin Time Criss Cross 1125 Evans; John Swana (t); Tim Warfield (ts); Rodney Whitaker (b); Byron Landham (d). 12/96.
(*) Captain Black Criss Cross 1154 Evans; Sam Newsome (ss); Antonio Hart (as); Ralph Bowen (ts, ss, as); Tim Warfield (ts); Avishai Cohen (b); Ralph Peterson (d). 10/97–6/98.
 Listen To The Band Criss Cross 1195 Evans; Duane Eubanks (t); Sam Newsome (ss); Ralph Bowen (ts, as); Reid Anderson (b); Nasheet Waits (d). 6/99.
(*) Blessed Ones Criss Cross 1213 Evans; Eric Revis (b); Edgar Bateman, Nasheet Waits (d). 1/01.
As a group of projects, these work on several levels: as evidence of the leader's own powers as a player and soloist; as examples of the way standards and familiar repertory are being recharged through a new generation's ideas; and as a showcase for some of the Criss Cross cast of post-bop talents. All of this was obvious from the opener, where Evans mixes four originals, four standards and 'Tune Up'. The key player is Warfield, who brings livid colour to Evans's music: their duet on 'My Shining Hour' is in a great tradition of duo virtuosity; but just as impressive is the wonderfully tender examination of 'It Had To Be You' at a daringly slow tempo. Evans's writing has a pleasingly lyrical bent, which his suitably affectionate 'Mom', voiced by Swana's trumpet, makes clear.

Captain Black leans heavily on Evans's originals, which sometimes put ingenuity above communicability – some of the writing sets up high-level challenges for the horn-players, such as the ferociously quick 'Big Jimmy', which they inevitably master while the listener is left a bit short-winded. That said, Bowen and Warfield especially turn in some astonishing solos. Peterson, as is his wont, overplays all through while giving everybody out front enough feeds to let them go wherever. There's a surprising solo version of 'Calvary' which certainly tries new threads on the gospel axis.

Listen To The Band is out of the very top drawer. 'I Want To Be Happy' is this time a dramatically effective standard reworking, apparently from a standing start where the tune wasn't even called. From there, the sextet play mostly originals from within the group, although 'In His Place' is another absorbing variation on a gospel touch, and Evans's solo on 'There Is A Quiet Place' is pensively beautiful. Throughout, the playing is less obviously flashy, better integrated, yet still sounding fresh and contemporary.

No originals on Blessed Ones but everything from a couple of Coltrane tunes to the warhorse 'Autumn Leaves' – although, as before, you'd be pressed to spot the tune, since he starts from the changes and puts the minor-key feel into the background, so it's much more jaunty and assertive than usual. Pat Metheny's 'Bright Size Life' is treated as a 'breathing-together' tune, a real trio piece. 'I Will Wait For You' gets a thorough demolition. Evans isn't a destructive pianist, but he does like to use only those parts of the material which he thinks are best placed to offer up something new. In contrast, 'The Inchworm' circles regularly around the melody. But some of the most impressive playing comes in the two versions of Trudy Pitts's 'Anysha', done as an undeniably romantic ballad but with a complexity of feeling that calls for patient and repeated listenings to both versions.

 Easy Now Criss Cross 1259 Evans; Ralph Bowen (ss, as); J. D. Allen (ts); Mike Boone, Eric Revis (b); Byron Landham, Rodney Green (d). 4/04.
Returning to Criss Cross after a stint at Palmetto (see below), Evans delivers a homage to his late father. The music has an inevitably sombre cast, and one wonders at some points if we should be eavesdropping; Bowen's contribution, 'For DE', is also a memorial. Evans reworks three of his old themes and only the title-piece is a new original; there's also a low-key 'Song For My Father', which is Allen's sole appearance. The playing is cultured and impressive, but this isn't the first place to get to know Orrin's music.

Also, in brief:

 Déjà Vu Imani 42905. 95.
Originally released as The Trio with Matthew Parrish (b) and Byron Landham (d). Stands up well to fresh scrutiny.

 Grown Folk Bizness Criss Cross 1175. 6/98.
Starts with another solo, a fussy bit of revisionism on 'Rocking Chair' and turns almost nihilistic in places. The weakest of the earlier records.

 Meant To Shine Palmetto PM-2087. 1/02.
A label debut marred by earnestness, but delivered with real power.

Peter Evans (born 1982)

TRUMPET

A rising star, he studied at Oberlin, works in various cutting edge formats and was brought to wider notice by Evan Parker.

 More Is More Psi 06.08 Evans (t solo). 05.
 Peter Evans Quartet Firehouse 12 04-01-004 Evans; Brandon Seabrook (g, elec); Tom Blancarte (b); Kevin Shea (d). 2/07.

Evans's magnificent solo deconstruction of jazz trumpet on More Is More is one of the most exciting instrumental records of the last few years, proposing new directions for his instrument. The technique is extraordinary, whether on piccolo (his apparent preference) or concert trumpet: notes are bent, stretched, pulled through timbral spectra and sometimes stabbed into the air with an almost physical intensity.

To suggest that the eponymous quartet record is more conventional is to miss the point, for he brings the same iron-hard lip, elements of 'extended technique' and a harmonic/melodic language that is both historically aware and entirely innovative to a fresh kind of freebop. The opening track, '!!!!!', is well-named. It leaps out of the speakers in a wild flurry of sound that hints at some of the wilder brass-playing of the New Thing but also at the flat-out ensembles of early jazz, for this is emphatically a quartet record. Blancarte is worth listening to closely (and it has to be close, because he's the least well recorded) to get a sense of how thoroughly the old rhythm section spec has been overturned. Shea clatters away very melodically, but there are clear rhythmic reference points lifted from bop drumming.

'Bodies And Souls' seems to derive in places from the great standard, but the kinship is so remote as to be insignificant and the plural form again points one to the useful conclusion that this isn't an expressionist record, with 'lead' and 'rhythm' parts, but a collective. Seabrook has the most varied language at his disposal. He ends the first track on a huge wash of colour – one tiny quibble: there's too little space left between these numbers, which need a quick breath and recalibration before the next one and don't benefit from any impression that this is a continuous suite – but reverts to a more familiar idiom on later tracks.

'Tag' is more routine, and might be off some unreleased avant-garde Blue Note session. It's the only disappointment. 'Frank Sinatra' is the big statement, accessible but not unchallenging. Possible to hear a couple of Hobokenite references – 'Fly Me To The Moon', maybe, and one of the late-night drinking songs – but it's mostly a showcase for Evans's most lyrical trumpeting, every note hit clean and centre, but with a saxophonist's phrasing. 'The 3/4 Tune' is a fierce Mephisto waltz, and nobody bothered to count it in for Blancarte and Shea, who knock down the bar-lines like so many hurdles. A terrific end to a magnificent and beautifully paced record.

Douglas Ewart (born 1946)

MULTIPLE WIND INSTRUMENTS

Born in Jamaica, he was part of the AACM experience in Chicago and continues to experiment with self-made instruments and a self-determined aesthetic.

 Bamboo Meditations At Banff Aarawak 003 Ewart (flutes solo). 01.

(*) Angles Of Entrance Aarawak 004 Ewart; Mwata Bowen, Edward Wilkerson (cl); Anthony Braxton (b flat cbcl, E flat sno cl); Don Byron (ss, bcl); Roscoe Mitchell (scl, bcl); J. D. Parran (cacl, acl); Henry Threadgill (scl); Malachi Favors (b, perc). 01.

 Songs Of Sunlife: Inside The Didgeridu Innova 594 Ewart; Adam Lane (b); Stephen Goldstein (perc). 2/04.

Ewart's rare appearances as leader have only given a flavour of his remarkable gifts. The three CDs offer an ideal introduction to Ewart's sound-world. The solo flute (actually endblown flute, reminiscent of the recorder) album is virtuosic and very beautiful, while the clarinet choir goes to the heart of the ensemble language that was at the heart of the AACM experience. Angles Of Entrance is a rare chance to hear an ensemble of contemporary reed luminaries all together. 'Migrations Of Whales' revisits a long-standing concern and is perhaps too literal to be entirely easy, though if it were called 'Composition #24' no one would be any the wiser. Apart from a few recognizable Byron licks (he rather stands out from the choir) and some familiar Braxton devices, it's an admirably collective project. The most recent is an extraordinary exploration of home-made didjeridus and roar flutes. Lane and Goldstein appear on some tracks only, and while they're no distraction they don't add much. A musical philosopher, or scientist, rather than a mere performer, Ewart absorbs himself in his researches; it's a privilege to be vouchsafed a glimpse.

Don Ewell (1916–83)

PIANO

Born in Baltimore, he played in the city from the mid-'30s onwards, in a style that harked back to Jelly Roll Morton. He later played regularly with New Orleans musicians such as Bunk Johnson and George Lewis and worked with Jack Teagarden from 1956 to 1962, before returning to New Orleans. He toured Europe in the years leading up to his death.

 Music To Listen To Don Ewell By Good Time Jazz 12021-2 Ewell; Darnell Howard (cl); Minor Hall (d). 3/56.

 Man Here Plays Fine Piano! Good Time Jazz 10043-2 Ewell; George 'Pops' Foster (b); Minor Hall (d). 2/57.

 Free 'N' Easy! Good Time Jazz 10046 Ewell; Darnell Howard (cl); George 'Pops' Foster (b); Minor Hall (d). 6/57.

A structured, disciplined practitioner of stride piano, Ewell took his cues from New Orleans musicians – his early sessions in the '40s were with Bunk Johnson and George Lewis – without succumbing to any raggedly 'authentic' mannerisms. One hears an almost prim sense of detail in his playing, the tempos unerringly consistent, the left hand a meticulous counterpoint to the right, the variations as refined and logical as in ragtime. The GTJ reissues find him with the great Minor Hall, and between them they offer seasoned jazz piano, deftly balanced. Free 'N' Easy! is more from the same sessions, with Howard more generously featured. It's unpretentious, amiable traditionalism.

 Denver Concert Storyville STCD 8379 Ewell; Charles Burrell (b); Barbara Dane (v). 12/66.

A likeable evening of music, with long medleys devoted to Waller, Morton and Hines, and some standard songs pitched in Barbara Dane's direction. It's all slightly mechanical but engaging enough, and in places even involving as Ewell throws out references and allusions faster than Ezra Pound.

 Solo Piano 1969–1973 /  Live At The 100 Club Chiaroscuro 106 / Solo Art SACD-89 Ewell (p solo). 69–73; 2/71.

 Don Ewell With The Yarra Yarra Band – Nicholas Hall Concert GHB BCD-378/9 2CD Ewell; Maurie Garbutt (t); Roger Janes (tb); Paul Martin (cl, ts); Paul Finerty (g, bj); Don Heap (b); Peter Clowsey (d). 10/75.

The solo format was not Ewell's natural métier. The Chiaroscuro compilation brings together Jazz On A Sunday Afternoon, Take It In Stride and A Jazz Portrait Of The Artist. There's a lot of playing that sounds pretty much the same. The London session is solid but equally wearisome. His treatment of Fats Waller was somewhere between fanciful and respectful; 'Keepin' Out Of Mischief

Now' is almost rococo in some of its designs, while the following 'Handful Of Keys' pirouettes on tiptoe. Nicholas Hall Concert finds him on tour in Australia. The Yarra Yarra Band are doughty but not exactly outstanding local players, and this is a pretty average chunk of touring trad which doesn't merit the expensive double-CD format.

Excelsior Brass Band

GROUP

One of the most long-standing New Orleans brass bands, it traces its roots back to 1880.

(*) Jolly Reeds And Steamin' Horns GHB BCD-290 Teddy Riley, James May (t); Gregory Stafford (c); Fred Lonzo, Clement Tervalon (tb); Michael White (cl); Oscar Rouzan (as); David Grillier (ts); Walter Payton (bb); Freddie Kohlman, Calvin Spears, Stanley Stephens (d). 10/83.

The rich yet carefully 'restricted' tradition of New Orleans brass bands made a cautious and piecemeal transition to CD, and this spirited disc by perhaps the oldest institution in the genre is a very fine example of the tradition as it stands in modern times. The digital sound allows one to hear all the detail which scrappy old recordings eliminated, and the ineffable bounce of the drummers (two on snare, one on bass), the old-fashioned tremble of the reeds and the sheer brassiness of the brass create some sense of a living tradition on material which is profoundly historical – 'Just A Closer Walk With Thee', 'Amazing Grace', 'Down In Honky Tonk Town', 'Just A Little While To Stay Here' and so on. At the same time the primitivism of the band can only be affected. Players such as White, Lonzo and Riley could probably go bebop if they wanted to, which one could never say about original brass-band stalwarts. Whether that matters may depend on the ear of the behearer.

Exploding Customer

GROUP

New Swedish jazz at its exciting best.

(*) Live At Glenn Miller Café /  Live At Tampere Jazz Happening /  At Your Service Ayler AYL030 / AYL031 / AYL063 Tomas Hallonsten (t); Martin Küchen (ss, as, ts); Benjamin Quigley (b); Kjell Nordeson (d). 5/02; 11/04; 12/05, 10/06.

Martin Küchen's quartet is an exciting example of some of the new jazz bursting out of Scandinavia. Working broadly in a freebop vein, they derive energy from Nordeson's helter-skelter drumming and Quigley's fat-toned, grooving bass-lines. Küchen plays in a deliberately sour, spitting way that is nicely balanced by the brighter, sweeter lines favoured by Hallonsten. They have a knack of reaching boiling point on a tune and holding it on a fast simmer that can be at times almost unbearably exciting. As with any live sets, there are a few barren spots, but for the most part it's all compelling.

Exuberance

GROUP

Fire music of a distinctive sort.

 Other Shore /  Live At Vision Festival Boxholder BXH 040 / Ayler AYL009 Roy Campbell (t); Louie Belogenis (ts); Hilliard Greene (b); Michael Wimberly (d). 9/02; 5/03.

A free-jazz supergroup, Exuberance is very much centred on Belogenis, who's been a loyal collaborator with Rashied Ali, and the more widely travelled Campbell; but it would be unwise to overlook the role of the other two, less well-known perhaps but giving a solid foundation to music that seems to start with Coleman and Coltrane and move outwards from there. The level of excitement is always high, but there's great intelligence at work as well, and even if 'Afro Eurasian Sketches' (Shore) isn't an explicit homage to Ellington, it moves on that language a notch.

Face To Face

GROUP

Lyrical trio with more than one-off potential.

 Canossa Intuition 3238 Ernie Watts (ts); Jasper van't Hof (p, organ, ky); Bo Stief (b). 9/99.

This doesn't look the most promising partnership on paper, and there's been no follow-up on record, but both Watts and van't Hof are highly expressive players with their own compositional ideas, while Stief is one of the most underrated bass-players around. The chemistry is strong and immediate, audible on the pianist's long title-track, on Stief's 'First Day' and Watts's only contribution, 'On The Border'. They do a wonderful version of Charlie Mariano's 'Pink Lady' but other than that do standards or repertory pieces. Van't Hof is the featured composer with four titles but it's Watts's flowing, mellifluous saxophone that dominates the sound of a trio that sounds like no other group around.

Jon Faddis (born 1953)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

The Californian section-man is Dizzy Gillespie's heir on trumpet, often uncannily close.

(*) Remembrances Chesky JD 166 Faddis; Jim Pugh (tb, euph); John Clark, Stewart Rose (frhn); George Young (as, f); Lawrence Feldman, Dale Kleps (as, f); Paquito D'Rivera (ss, ts, cl); Bill Easley (ts, cl); Blair Tindall (ob, eng hn); Ken Hitchcock, Roger Rosenberg (bs, bsn); David Hazeltine (p); Peter Washington (b); Clarence Penn (d). 10/97.

 Teranga Koch 9969 Faddis; Clark Terry (flhn, v); Gary Smulyan (bs); Frank Wess (af); David Hazeltine (p); Russell Malone (g); Kiyoshi Kitagawa (b); Dion Parson (d); Alioune Faye (sabor); Abdou M'Boup (perc). 9/05.

Faddis has tended to prefer the anonymity of the studios to the spotlight in recent years. There are a few records of his own around, but harder and harder to find, even Jon And Billy (Harper) on Storyville, which was always one of his best. Remembrances is all elegance and grace. The arrangements by Carlos Franzetti are far from bland, and the disc features some inspired trumpet (notably the solo on 'Johnny Bug') as well as limber big-band tunes. The best of the record comes in the middle section, a sequence that begins with Herbie Hancock's 'Speak Like A Child', and continues with Wayne Shorter's 'Footprints' and Trane's 'Naima'. It's overlong, and Franzetti's chart for Guastavino's 'La Rosa Y El Sauce' sounds like film music.

Teranga is an African word for hospitality. It's a warm and open-hearted record, not so laden with concept that it creaks, but driven by a common theme and an attractive coherence of sound. Terry makes a guest appearance, by now the most prolific walk-on man in the history of the music, but it's the core band that makes this attractive and Faddis's mellowing sound always catches the attention.

Don Fagerquist (1927–74)

TRUMPET

West Coast lynchpin, who had few opportunities to record as leader.

 Portrait Of A Great Jazz Artist Fresh Sound FSRCD2212 Fagerquist; Bob Enevoldsen (vtb); Herb Geller, Ted Nash (as); Bill Holman, Dave Pell, Zoot Sims (ts); Don Trenner, John T. Williams (p); Vernon Polk, Howard Roberts (g); Buddy Clark, Joe Comfort, Herman Wright (b); Don Heath, Frank DeVito, Jack Sperling, Alvin Stoller (d); Russell Garcia Orchestra; string quartet. 1/55–59.

 Eight By Eight VSOP 4 Fagerquist; Ed Leddy (t); Bob Enevoldsen (vtb); Vince DeRosa (frhn); Herb Geller (as); Ronnie Lang (bs); Marty Paich (p); Buddy Clark (b); Mel Lewis (d). 9/57.

Not highly rated as a soloist himself, Fagerquist leads a breezy and fresh-voiced band on the 1957 date. 'Aren't You Glad You're You?' has a buoyant line, with the leader and Enevoldsen prominent. 'Time After Time' is tackled much the same way, but it's on 'Lullaby Of Broadway', right at the end, that Fagerquist's touch as an arranger is most evident: it begins conventionally enough, then moves into an unexpected free feel, with parts distributed in an unusual way, and a terrific bop solo from Geller; very effective and a guarantee that you'll return to this album often. 'Easy Living', 'Smoke Gets In Your Eyes' and 'All The Things You Are' are less obviously meddled with, but the voicings, with DeRosa taking an important part throughout, are consistently inventive. The Fresh Sound compilation brings together material from a number of sessions, made while Don was a studio musician. Interestingly, his voice jumps out every time: a rich, mellow tone that might be boring if it were not for the elegance and daring of the phrasing. The best of the tracks are those with a smaller ensemble, but Don's features with the Garcia orchestra on 'Worry-Go-Round' and 'The Boy Next Door' are a measure of his gifts. Perhaps not a great jazz artist, but a significantly underrated one.

Peter Fairclough

DRUMS, PERCUSSION

British drummer and composer, playing contemporary jazz with a touch of English pastoral.

 Imago Jazzprint JPVP 132 Fairclough; Keith Tippett (p, perc). 10/01.

Fairclough's strong records for ASC are hard to find at present, which makes this less worthy entry for Jazzprint his only showing. Basically, this is everything that was said on the earlier (and superior) duo record Wild Silk, reiterated. Tippett dominates somewhat and it does Peter few favours to be playing second fiddle.

Richard Fairhurst

PIANO

Started piano relatively late at 15, but quickly emerged as a force in British jazz composition.

 Hungry Ants Babel BDV 9404 Fairhurst; Iain Ballamy, Osian Roberts (ss, ts); Steve Watts (b); Tim Giles (d). 95.

 Formic Babel BDV 9824 Fairhurst; Rob Townsend (ss, ts, perc); Tim Harries (b); Tim Giles (d, perc). 98.

 Myrmidons Babel BDV 2133 As above, except add Stuart Hall (g). 02.

(*) Standing Tall Babel BDV 2452 Fairhurst; Dave Priseman (t); James Allsop, Rob Townsend (sax); Dave Whitford (b); Tim Giles (d). 04.

Fairhurst's precocious debut suggested an older, more mature talent. Some of the writing suggests the laddish humour of the Loose Tubes crowd, but the content of tunes like 'Lo-Ganberries' and 'Rat On Stilts' is far from adolescent. His playing isn't so distinctive but doesn't need to be. Ballamy is the lead voice in Hungry Ants (also the band name), and his arrangement of 'Mad About The Boy' is unexpected and superb. A version of Mingus's 'Self-Portrait In Three Colours' rivals the original for sheer verve.

Formic acid is the bitter stuff ants secrete. The second disc is a strong consolidation. Apart from 'Sludge' and the collectively composed 'Mandibles', and Harries's attractive 'Whenever', all the tunes are by Fairhurst. 'Fish Magic' borders on whimsy, but avoids it. He doubles on Hammond this time, though without much individuality. His piano-playing has developed steadily and on 'Fetish' and 'Growth In An Old Garden' he combines a briskly modern style with an attractive tinge of pastoral.

The third album was delayed when Giles was sidelined for a period, but Richard's in no rush. A generous range of reference – 'The Twittering Machine' is inspired by a Paul Klee work – never sounds pretentious. There's a funkier feel to the latest of the batch. Fairhurst sounds energized by the larger group, chiefly because Priseman and Allsop know how to utilize space. 'Empty Corridors', 'The Bright Side' and 'The Rare Sound Of Compromise' all suggest that early promise is already delivering.

Al Fairweather (1927–93)

TRUMPET

Born in Edinburgh, he co-led groups with Sandy Brown from the early '50s and helped pioneer the British mainstream; worked with Acker Bilk in the '60s but then became a full-time teacher.

(*) Fairweather Friends Made To Measure Lake LACD75 Fairweather; Kenny Ball (t); Tony Milliner (tb, btb); John Picard, Chris Barber (tb); Sandy Brown (cl); Bruce Turner, Tony Coe (as); Red Price, Dick Heckstall-Smith (ts); Ian Armit, Stan Greig (p); Bill Bramwell (bj); Tim Mahn (b); Graham Burbidge, Allan Ganley (d). 11/57–11/61.

Recorded when the British mainstream was just coming into being. Fairweather Friends was made for Pye, and the extremely rare Made To Measure, issued originally as a limited edition of 100 copies, came out on Ristic. The latter set has the surprise of Kenny Ball sharing front-line duties with Fairweather's big sound, remaining under the Armstrong spell but starting to lean, like Humph, in the direction of Buck Clayton. Solid, but more inventive, is the excellent Fairweather Friends, which has the 22-year-old Coe playing handsome alto and the trumpeter turning in some of his best performances. There is a peculiar bonus in the shape of a B-side by the Laurie Johnson Orchestra with Fairweather, Barber and Brown playing 'Doin' The Racoon', an old '20s hot-dance number.

Also, in brief:

 The Incredible McJazz /  Al & Sandy Lake LACD 229 / 193. 59–60.
The old partnership in vintage form.

Digby Fairweather (born 1946)

TRUMPET, CORNET, MELLOPHONE, VOICE

He turned professional in the '70s but continues to write and broadcast. He has an accurate and expressive tone and solos strongly. We're also happy to report that he is co-author of a jazz reference book almost as distinguished as this one.

 Songs For Sandy Hep CD 2016 Fairweather; Roy Crane, Al Fairweather (t); John Picard (tb); Tony Coe (ts); John Barnes (as, cl, bcl); Alan Cooper (bcl); Brian Lemon (p); Dave Green (b); Tony Allen, Bobby Orr (d). 70, 82.
Digby Fairweather's embouchure is, like Ziggy Elman's, decidedly unorthodox. However odd the angle, it hasn't adversely affected his sound, which is richly toned and curiously delicate, especially at slower tempos. There are still some who think that it was Digby, not Al, Fairweather who was the great Sandy Brown's playing partner. Dig stands in very comfortably for his namesake on the 1982 Songs, a fine and heartfelt tribute which includes archive material recorded privately. The bulk of the record, though, is Digby's suite of songs, which tell Brown's life in music. 'Singing Away The Cold In Edinburgh' is a legendary anecdote of Sandy and Al still making music even when their horns have been hocked. The other material is equally intense and idiomatic.

 Something To Remember Us By Jazzology 84 Fairweather; Stan Barker (p). 84.
Barker only began playing professionally when he was 50, after a career in music education. He's a patient, wise and wily accompanist to Fairweather and between them they deliver a set which is short on surprise but long on musicality and lyricism. Barker's gruffness is a front; he's really a romantic.

 With Nat In Mind Jazzology JCD 247 Fairweather; Pete Strange (tb); John Barnes (cl, as, bs); Pat Smuts (ts); Dave Lee (p); Paul Sealey (g); Jack Fallon (b); Johnny Armatage (d); Wild Bill Davison, Lisa Lincoln (v). 94.
The Nat is Gonella, of course, an eloquent, nicely paced tribute. The guest stars span the generations, establishing a link back to Nat's Georgians and the Lew Stone orchestra. Nat's theme 'Georgia On My Mind' is given an expansive airing, with Wild Bill taking the vocal. 'I Must See Annie Tonight' carries references to the old master's association with American greats like Benny Carter. There are less-expected things as well: 'I'm Feelin' Like A Million' is arranged from Nat's original solo and 'September Song', which Nat never actually recorded, offers Dig an opportunity to express his satisfaction with proceedings.

 Twelve Feet Off The Ground Flat Five GBHCD03 Fairweather; Malcolm Earle Smith (tb, v); Julian Marc Stringle (cl, as, v); Craig Milverton (p, ky, v); Len Skeat (b); Bobby Worth (d). 99.

 Moon Country A AL73192 As above, except add Pete Strange (tb), John Barnes (as, bs, bsx, cl, v), Martin Litton (p), Paul Sealey (g, bj), Chris Ellis (v), Bloomfield String Quartet. 00.
The second of these is, as the title hints, a tribute to the music of Hoagy Carmichael. Digby doubles on piano and penny whistle as well as vocals, and sounds as if he's having a thoroughly good time in the Fairweather's Friends format. Litton knows the Carmichael songbook inside out. The arrangements are generous and generally faithful to the originals, except where Digby has added a revivalist spin to 'Lazybones' and 'Baltimore Oriole'. Other outstanding tracks include 'Manhattan Rag', played at interesting speed, and the closing 'Serenade To Gabriel', which should guarantee Dig his spot in the heavenly chorus. Twelve Feet is a more conventionally swinging set from the established band. 'Pink Champagne' is segued with 'Sister Kate' and there is a rollicking, salacious version of 'The Blues My Naughty Sweetie Gave To Me'. Digby's tone is strong, but there is a new warmth in the recording.

 Things Ain't What They Used To Be Robinwood Productions RWP 0020 Fairweather; Chris Gower (tb); Julian Marc Stringle (cl, as, v); Craig Milverton (p, ky, v); Dominic Ashworth (g, v); Len Skeat (b); Bobby Worth (d). 4/03.
The Fairweather Half-Dozen sounds alert and adventurous. There are 18 tracks here and every one of them is sharply crafted and despatched. George Melly turns up for a vocal on 'When My Ship Comes In', sounding as if the vessel in question might have been a rum runner from Barbados. The Ellington–Bigard classic 'Saturday Night Function' is a great vehicle and Digby's phrasing is exquisite, reminiscent of the co-composr's own. Indeed, there is a reed-like smoothness to some of his choruses now that is beguiling and unexpected, and not at all at odds with an otherwise idiomatic brass sound.

 Partners In Time Rose Cottage 001 Fairweather; Pete Strange (tb); Johnny Parker (p); Ron Rubin (b); Lennie Hastings (d). 07.
Several chestloads of campaign medals on show here as a veteran band goes through its paces. Digby sees off his frontline partner more often than not when it comes to a scrap, but for the most part it's easy-going trad-mainstream with a generous division of solo space. Nice sound, too, live but not too busy, clean but in no way antiseptic.

Also, in brief:

 Recorded Delivery Loose Tie Records LOTCD 4310. 10/97.
Sponsored by the Post Office, so no surprise to find 'Airmail Special', 'Penny Black Blues' and, of course, 'My Funny Valentine' in this bright, attractive session by some of Britain's senior traditionalists.

 Two Part Conversation Raymer Sound RSCD 852. 04.
Attractive duets with pianist Craig Milverton, who needles him along, even on the more sentimental material.

Giovanni Falzone (born 1974)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

A Sicilian, he sits somewhere between hard bop and free.

 Music For Five Splasc(h) 766.2 Falzone; Tino Tracanna (ts); Francesco Pinetti (vib, marim); Tito Mangialajo Rantzer (b); Ferdinando Faraò (d). 7/01.

Falzone declares that he most enjoys switching between instinctual playing and working on specific structures, which is pretty much the terrain inhabited by Music For Five. The ensemble has an attractively loose-knit feel, with the glassiness of Pinetti's vibes adding timbral interest, and the compositions give the players plenty to chew on, particularly in their varied approach to tempo. As an improviser, Falzone seems to have rather less to say, and the weight falls mostly on Tracanna's shoulders. In the end, this gets a perhaps inevitable mark of 'interesting'.

(*) Suite For Bird Soul Note 121428 Falzone; Beppe Caruso (tb); Tino Tracanna (ss, bs); Carlo Nicita (f); Francesco Pinetti (vib); Tito Mangialajo Rantzer (b); Ferdinando Faraò (d). 05.
This is one of the strongest sets from Soul Note since the label set aside its international remit and concentrated on home talent. Falzone's groups of recent times have tended to sound rarefied and pseudo-classical. This has some of that sophistication, but with a solid core of improvisational activity, and the front-men, Tracanna particularly, handle the challenge beautifully. One wonders what this would have sounded like without a conventional bass-and-drums set-up. There's something a bit wooden about Rantzer and Faraò.

(*) Meeting In Paris Soul Note 121438 Falzone; Robin Verheyen (sax); Bruno Angelini (p); Mauro Gargano (b); Luc Isenmann (d). 06.
He's hovering on the brink of producing something truly exceptional and this date with the European Ensemble edges ever closer. The long 'Vite In Piattaforma' and the opening 'Rotation' are genuinely original and interesting ideas, and there's a real strength to the closing 'Machine Man', which could nevertheless have done with some more weight. At moments, the group sounds as though it needs a guitar or an extra keyboard to fill in some of the harmonic background; but, dare we say it, what Falzone really needs is a sympathetic producer and a bigger budget. It's all bubbling under.

Also, in brief:

 Big Fracture Black Saint 121378. 04.
The trumpeter's Contemporary Ensemble, sounding edgy and lyrical by turns.

 Earthquake Suite Soul Note 121418. 04.
The Chamber Group playing in slightly rarefied form and at some distance from Falzone's jazz idiom.

Charles Fambrough (born 1950)

DOUBLE BASS

The Philadelphian was already 41 when he first recorded under his own name. By then, he had a substantial CV, including stints with the Messengers and with McCoy Tyner.

 The Proper Angle Past Perfect 205709 Fambrough; Roy Hargrove, Wynton Marsalis (t); Branford Marsalis (ss, ts); Joe Ford (ts); Kenny Kirkland (p); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d); Steve Berrios, Mino Cinelu, Joe Gonzalez (perc). 5/91.
 City Tribes Evidence ECD 22149 Fambrough; John Swana (t); Craig Handy (ss, ts, bcl); Dave Valentin (f); Billy O'Connell (ky); Ricky Sebastian (d); Cafe, Marlon Simon (perc). 95.
Fambrough favours a solid, lower-register sound that sometimes recalls Paul Chambers, sometimes Mingus. His debut album has returned to the catalogue and it's a disc that pretty much sums up his apprenticeship ('Our Father Who Art Blakey') with the Messengers, but also his association with McCoy Tyner and others. The line-up is pretty special, though not everyone appears on all tracks, and the two Marsalises are in great, slightly pugnacious form when they appear together. Kirkland, still much missed on this scene, contributes 'The Tonality Of Atonement', one of his best lines.

Some of the later stuff is disappointing by comparison. On City Tribes Swana and guest player Valentin are well featured, as is the bassist himself, but the impression is of parts rather than anything coherent. Only Craig Handy seems willing to take things up and on.

Also, in brief:

(*) Keeper Of The Spirit Audioquest AQ 1033. 12/94.
Some interesting sounds, including tenor recorder on 'Save That Time', but it's a low-key effort.

(*) Upright Citizen Random Chance 7. 97.
Originally on Nu Groove, this has the same tracks in a different order, which seems wise since it brings 'Fun City' up to first place.

(*) Charles Fambrough Live At Zanzibar Blue Random Chance 6. 02.
An obscurity, but a welcome opportunity to catch a Fambrough unit on the stand. The sound is frankly awful, but the playing is consistently good on a set of briskly inventive charts.

Alon Farber (Hagiga)

SOPRANO AND ALTO SAXOPHONES

Young Israeli player who co-leads the Hagiga Quintet.

 Exposure Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 228 Farber; Avishai Cohen (t); Hagai Amir (as); Uzi Finerman (g); Tal Ronen (b); Dani Benedikt (d). 6/03.
Modern jazz burgeons in Tel Aviv. This briskly eclectic quintet (Cohen only plays on a couple of numbers) work through a number of influences, including funk and harmolodics-of-a-sort ('A Chat With Ornette'), but end up with very much their own sound. 'Monkeys' is the key track, as cute and tricksy as a barrow-load of.

Tal Farlow (1921–98)

GUITAR

Self-taught, he got his first break in 1949 with Red Norvo, who inspired him to accelerate his own technique and work as a leader in his own right. Following his marriage in 1958 he went into semi-retirement and worked as a sign-painter; seen more frequently in the '80s and '90s, his technique intact.

(*) Complete 1956 Private Recordings Definitive DRCD 11263 2CD Farlow; Eddie Costa (p); Vinnie Burke (b); Gene Williams (d). 12/56.
* The Swinging Guitar Of Tal Farlow Verve 559515-2 Farlow; Eddie Costa (p); Vinnie Burke (b). 56.
* Tal Farlow: Jazz Masters 41 Verve 527365-2 Farlow; Bob Enevoldsen (vtb); Bill Perkins (ts); Bobby Gordon (bs); Claude Williamson, Eddie Costa, Gerald Wiggins (p); Red Mitchell, Ray

Brown, Monty Budwig, Oscar Pettiford, Vinnie Burke, Bill Tackus, Knobby Totah (b); Stan Levey, Chico Hamilton, Joe Morello, Jimmy Campbell (d). 1/55–3/58.

 Finest Hour Verve 549677-2 Farlow; Claude Williamson, Eddie Costa, Gerald Wiggins (p); Red Norvo (vib); Barry Galbraith (g); Red Mitchell, Ray Brown, Oscar Pettiford, Vinnie Burke (b); Stan Levey, Chico Hamilton (d). 52–56.

(*) The Return Of Tal Farlow Original Jazz Classics OJC 356 Farlow; John Scully (p); Jack Six (b); Alan Dawson (d). 9/69.

Farlow's virtuosity and the quality of his thinking, even at top speed, inspired more than one generation of guitarists, and his neglect is mystifying. Perhaps, in the age of Bill Frisell and Pat Metheny, his plain-speaking is out of favour. His reticence as a performer belied his breathtaking speed, melodic inventiveness and pleasingly gentle touch as a bop-orientated improviser. A tenure at Verve included some marvellous sessions, and while The Swinging Guitar has returned and the Jazz Masters compilation creams off the pick of seven albums, providing an indispensable introduction, there are plenty more that could be reinstated. On the JM track list, the trios with Costa and Burke are especially fine, but so is the date with Wiggins, Brown and Chico Hamilton, which features one of the fastest treatments of 'Cherokee' ever recorded. Unassumingly as he plays, one never feels intimidated by Farlow's virtuosity, even when he takes the trouble to reharmonize a sequence entirely or to blitz a melody with single-note flourishes. Finest Hour is good too, and duplicates none of the tracks on the JM selection, although it does rather invite the question that if this was his finest hour, why weren't these tracks used before? Restoring the original albums in full would have been the proper course of action. The Return is hardly less fine than the Verve sessions, and Farlow plays just as quickly, with comparable insight; try the lovely variations on 'My Romance'.

The Definitive set reissues two '70s albums originally on Xanadu, private recordings made at the apartment of a fan named Ed Fuerst. The sound is surprisingly good, and it's precious also for an extended glimpse of Costa. The quartet luxuriate through eight standards, some around the 15-minute mark, and freed from studio and audience expectations the music's notably unselfconscious and falters only occasionally.

(*) Chromatic Palette Concord CCD 4154 Farlow; Tommy Flanagan (p); Gary Mazzaroppi (b). 1/81.

 Cookin' On All Burners Concord CCD 4204 Farlow; James Williams (p); Gary Mazzaroppi (b); Vinnie Johnson (d). 8/82.

 Autumn Leaves Concord CCD2-2133-2 2CD Farlow; Sam Most (ts, f); Frank Strazzeri (p); Gary Mazzaroppi, Bob Maize (b); Tom Sayek, Albert 'Tootie' Heath (d). 9/77–84.

Chromatic Palette is a shade better than earlier Concord sessions, currently out of print. Flanagan digs in a little harder than he often does, and Farlow's own playing has a majestic breadth to it on some of the tunes, all of which are dispatched quickly and with few frills. Mazzaroppi sounds somewhat like a more youthful Red Mitchell on the bass. Try the hard-bitten 'Nuages' as a sample.

Cookin' On All Burners was nearly the last of Tal's Concords. Williams doesn't quite have the aristocratic touch of Flanagan, but it's a solid date, with some of the guitarist's favourite standards given a characteristically quickfire treatment. The very last of them, The Legendary, has now been coupled with the other 'missing' record, Tal Farlow '78, as Autumn Leaves. The 1978 date was a trio session and arguably not one of Tal's best: with no piano to assist, Mazzaroppi is sometimes found wanting, and some of the quicker tempos leave Farlow in trouble. The later set has fine support from Strazzeri and Most.

Art Farmer (1928–99)

FLUGELHORN, TRUMPET

Born in Iowa and raised in Phoenix, Arizona, he settled in LA in the late '40s and did not make the inevitable move to New York until the mid-'50s. Associations with Gigi Gryce, Horace Silver and Gerry Mulligan followed, and he co-led The Jazztet with Benny Golson from 1959. He worked extensively in Europe and by the '80s was an elder statesman of bebop trumpet, though his soft and persuasive style later led him to flugelhorn or the hybrid 'flumpet'. His twin brother, Addison (1928–63), was a bassist.

 Art Farmer Septet Original Jazz Classics OJC 054 Farmer; Jimmy Cleveland (tb); Clifford Solomon, Charlie Rouse (ts); Oscar Estell, Danny Bank (bs); Quincy Jones, Horace Silver (p); Monk Montgomery, Percy Heath (b); Art Taylor, Sonny Johnson (d). 7/53–6/54.

(*) When Farmer Met Gryce Original Jazz Classics OJC 072 Farmer; Gigi Gryce (as); Freddie Redd, Horace Silver (p); Addison Farmer, Percy Heath (b); Kenny Clarke, Art Taylor (d). 5/54–5/55.

* The Art Farmer Quintet Original Jazz Classics OJC 241 Farmer; Gigi Gryce (as); Duke Jordan (p); Addison Farmer (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 10/55.

(*) Two Trumpets Original Jazz Classics OJC 018 Farmer; Donald Byrd (t); Jackie McLean (as); Barry Harris (p); Doug Watkins (b); Art Taylor (d). 8/56.

 Farmer's Market Original Jazz Classics OJC 398 Farmer; Hank Mobley (ts); Kenny Drew (p); Addison Farmer (b); Elvin Jones (d). 11/56.

Art Farmer began his recording career with the 10-inch album Work Of Art, included on Septet. Although pitched around Farmer's trumpet solos, the music is in debt to the composing and arranging of Jones and Gryce, and witty originals such as 'Elephant Walk', 'The Little Band Master' and 'Wildwood' make up the programme. Yet Farmer's skilful contributions elevate the scores; and it's clear that his style was already firmly in place: a pensive restraint on ballads, a fleet yet soberly controlled attack on uptempo tunes, and a concern for tonal manipulation within a small range of inflexions. If he was comparatively unadventurous, then, as later, it didn't stop him from developing an individual style.

This begins to come clear in the small-group work of the mid-'50s. The outfit he led with Gigi Gryce has often been overlooked, but the two OJC reissues are both impeccable examples of a more considered approach to hard-bop forms. While When Farmer Met Gryce is the better known, it's slightly the lesser of the two. Quintet has some of Gryce's best writing in the unusual structures of 'Evening In Casablanca' and 'Satellite', while 'Nica's Tempo', constructed more from key centres than from chords, might be his masterpiece; in the sequence of long solos, Farmer turns in an improvisation good enough to stand with the best of Miles Davis from the same period. The rhythm section, too, is the most sympathetic of the three involved.

The two-trumpet meeting with Byrd is capable but routine, a typical Prestige blowing session of the period, while Farmer's Market suffers slightly from unexpectedly heavy tempos and an erratic performance from Mobley, although Kenny Drew takes some crisp solos.

[illegible]

 Portrait Of Art
Original Jazz Classics OJC 166 Farmer; Hank Jones (p); Addison Farmer (b); Roy Haynes (d). 4–5/58.

Though as unassumingly handled as everything in Farmer's discography, this one has long been signposted as a classic. The rhythm section is beautifully balanced and offers exemplary support to the leader, whose playing summons elegance, fire and craftsmanship in almost perfect accord, with his ballad playing particularly refined. Never as fêted as any comparable session by Miles Davis, this is still jazz trumpet-playing on an exalted level and should be acknowledged as such.

 Modern Art Blue Note 84459-2 Farmer; Benny Golson (ts); Bill Evans (p); Addison Farmer (b); Dave Bailey (d). 9/58.

This Blue Note album, originally on United Artists and finely remastered, is one of Farmer's most successful records of the period. Golson contributes one excellent theme, 'Fair Weather', but most of the others involve subtle reworkings of familiar standards: a surprisingly jaunty 'The Touch Of Your Lips', a beguilingly smooth reading of Junior Mance's 'Jubilation', a stately 'Like Someone In Love'. The presence of Evans makes a telling difference – his solos are so finely thought out that it makes one wish he'd become the regular man in The Jazztet.

 The Brass Sessions: Brass Shout/The Aztec Suite Gambit 69254 Farmer; Lee Morgan, Ernie Royal (t); Jimmy Cleveland, Curtis Fuller, Wayne Andre (tb); James Haughton (bhn); Julius Watkins, Bob Northern (frhn); Don Butterfield (tba); Zoot Sims (ts); Hank Jones, Bobby Timmons (p); Addison Farmer, Percy Heath (b); Philly Joe Jones, Elvin Jones, Charlie Persip (d). 59.

Featuring one of the grisliest covers ever, Brass Shout is actually much more low-key than title or styling might suggest. Benny Golson's arrangements are fairly laid-back and use the ensemble rather sparingly, leaving lots of space for the featured horns. 'Autumn Leaves' goes along at a perky bounce, and 'Moanin'' does the preacher call-and-response thing rather stiffly. Chico O'Farrill's music for The Aztec Suite occasionally sounds like it might have been written for Yma Sumac, but Art finds a path through it all, largely thanks, one suspects, to Al Cohn's direction of the ensemble, which is crisp but relaxed.

(*) Blues On Down Chess GRP 18022 Farmer; Tom McIntosh (tb); Benny Golson (ts); Cedar Walton (p); Tommy Williams (b); Albert 'Tootie' Heath (d). 9/60–5/61.

The balance of two albums by The Jazztet, Big City Sounds and The Jazztet At Birdhouse. If Golson was the prime mover as far as arranging and material were concerned, Farmer's soft, insinuating lines and long-form view of a solo remain the most absorbing elements, and they balance Golson's more obviously powerful delivery. McIntosh is a subservient third voice but he does nothing wrong, and the rhythm section is fine – hear the often-forgotten Williams especially, with his superb playing on 'Five Spot After Dark'. These were excellent small-group albums, as good in their way as anything by the Messengers in the same era.

 Out Of The Past / * Art And Perception Chess GRP 18092 / Gambit 69251 Farmer; Tommy Flanagan, Harold Mabern (p); Tommy Williams (b); Roy McCurdy, Albert 'Tootie' Heath (d). 9/60–10/61.

Another peerless example of Farmer plus rhythm section, the Chess draws together most of two Argo LPs, Art and Perception; for an unexplained reason, producer Orrin Keepnews has left off one track from each disc, though they're restored on the Gambit. The earlier date with Flanagan is close to perfect, a measured, unflashy but deeply felt reading of seven tunes that peaks on 'Goodbye, Old Girl' and 'I'm A Fool To Want You'. The second date, with Mabern, was done on flugelhorn and is only a whit behind.

(*) To Sweden With Love Koch CD 8510 Farmer; Jim Hall (g); Steve Swallow (b); Pete LaRoca (d). 4/64.

Recorded in Stockholm during a Swedish tour, a rare record by this quartet features improvisations based on six Swedish folk tunes. Though some of the playing is cautious, possibly owing to the unfamiliarity of the material, Farmer and Hall sparkle in their solos and interplay, and Swallow and LaRoca support beautifully. Just 32 minutes of music.

 The Many Faces Of Art Farmer Gambit 69252 Farmer; Don Elliott (mel, vib); Tony Scott (cl, bs); Charles McPherson (as); Ben Webster (ts); Tommy Flanagan (p); Mundell Lowe (g); Ron Carter, George Duvivier, Steve Swallow (b); Osie Johnson, Bobby Thomas (d). 7/58, 64.

Farmer considered Flanagan to be a like-minded player on his instrument and they always sound together, both of them rather more acerbic and rhythmically tense when together than apart. They clatter through 'Happy Feet' at the start of Many Faces, with McPherson in hot pursuit, sounding a bit sharp but soloing pointedly. Then they move into more sombre territory with 'Hyacinth', which blooms in a dark tonality that leans heavily on Carter's solid bass (Swallow alternates tracks with him). 'Minuet In G', 'People' and 'Saucer Eyes' are all vividly executed, but the real bonus here is a whole Porgy And Bess album from the Mundell Lowe septet (with Farmer, Elliott, Scott and Webster in the front line) from six years before. All the cuts are short, without much solo space, but the ensemble playing is terrific.

(*) Sing Me Softly Of The Blues Atlantic 7567-80773-2 Farmer; Steve Kuhn (p); Steve Swallow (b); Pete LaRoca (d). 3/65.
(*) Interaction / Sing Me Softly Of The Blues Collectables COL-CD-6235 As above, except add Jim Hall (g); Walter Perkins (d). 7/63–3/65.

Kuhn displaces Hall, and though one immediately misses the deftness and subtlety of the master guitarist, the pianist is far from an unworthy substitute. Basically ballad-directed, with Farmer keeping to the flugelhorn, the playing is immaculate and slow-burning as only Farmer's records can be – although the fast closing blues, 'One For Majid', is played with fine energy. Collectables have coupled the same album with the earlier Interaction, which still has Jim Hall in the band. Although the studio sound isn't very ingratiating, the playing is again exemplary after a surprisingly stiff start with 'Days Of Wine And Roses'. What a partnership this was!

 What Happens? CAM 498377-2 Farmer; Phil Woods (as); Martial Solal (p); Henri Texier (b); Daniel Humair (d). 10/68.

This Italian date has some prodigious playing, but the problem is in the sound-mix. Humair is so loud (particularly his cymbals) that he all but buries both Texier and Solal. That said, Farmer and Woods play some terrifically hot solos: Woods is spectacular on Kenny Dorham's 'Blue Bossa'. If you can tune out the drums, this is a worthwhile listen.

 On The Road Original Jazz Classics OJC 478 Farmer; Art Pepper (as); Hampton Hawes (p); Ray Brown (b); Shelly Manne, Steve Ellington (d). 7–8/76.

Farmer undertook a long stay in Europe at the end of the '60s and most of his '70s work is out of print. This one has an exceptional band, but the music is not quite as good as one might have hoped. The sole outstanding performance is 'Namely You', where Farmer and Pepper both turn in superb solos, while 'Will You Still Be Mine?' and 'What Am I Here For?' are merely very good. Pepper, entering his Indian summer in the studios, remains unfocused, and Hawes is not at his best. But Farmer is as consistently fine as ever, by now using the flugelhorn almost exclusively, and the recording captures much of the quality of his tone.

(*) Manhattan Soul Note 121026-2 Farmer; Sahib Shihab (ss, bs); Kenny Drew (p); Mads Vinding (b); Ed Thigpen (d). 11/81.
(*) Mirage Soul Note 121046-2 Farmer; Clifford Jordan (ts); Fred Hersch (p); Ray Drummond (b); Akira Tana (d). 9/82.
 ARTistry Concord CCD2-4974-2 2CD Farmer; Fred Hersch (p); Bob Bodley, Ray Drummond (b); Billy Hart, Akira Tana (d).
Farmer spent the early part of the '80s recording, like so many of his colleagues, for European rather than American companies. Manhattan blends excellent original material from Drew, Horace Parlan and Bennie Wallace with a jaunty reading of Charlie Parker's 'Passport', and Shihab is an unexpected but rumbustious partner in the front line. Mirage is perhaps a shade better, with Jordan at his most fluent, Hersch numbering among Farmer's most sympathetic accompanists and another Parker tune, 'Barbados', taken at an ideal tempo. Drummond and Tana are also splendid. The Concord issue couples two albums, A Work Of Art and Warm Valley, dates that miss only the stimulation of another front-line horn to set off Farmer's most introspective playing, although Hersch's finely wrought ballad 'And Now There's You' is the kind of track that makes any record worth keeping for that alone.

 The Jazztet: Moment To Moment Soul Note 121066-2 Farmer; Curtis Fuller (tb); Benny Golson (ts); Mickey Tucker (p); Ray Drummond (b); Albert 'Tootie' Heath (d). 5/83.
() Real Time / () Back To The City Contemporary 14034-2 / Original Jazz Classics OJC 842 As above, except omit Heath; add Marvin 'Smitty' Smith (d). 2/86.
The occasionally re-formed Jazztet was rather more of a showcase for Golson – as both composer and performer – than it was for Farmer. Their Soul Note session is a perfunctory return, with the six themes passing in prescribed fashion; but the Contemporary album, recorded live at a single residency at New York's Sweet Basil, gives a vivid idea of the group's continued spirit. Real Time offers lengthy readings of Golson staples such as 'Whisper Not' and 'Are You Real'. There's also an expansive treatment of 'Autumn Leaves', which finds all the soloists at their best. Coltrane's influence on Golson was never clearer. Farmer is incisive with the muted horn, romantically ebullient with it open, and Tucker emerges as a considerable soloist and accompanist: his solo on 'Autumn Leaves' is sweepingly inventive. Smith, the most audacious drummer of his generation, is the ideal recruit. Back To The City features some lesser-known items from the band's book, including a rare outing for Farmer as composer, 'Write Soon'.

* Something To Live For Contemporary CCD-14029-2 Farmer; Clifford Jordan (ts); James Williams (p); Rufus Reid (b); Marvin 'Smitty' Smith (d). 1/87.
♛ * Blame It On My Youth Contemporary CCD-14042-2 As above, except omit Smith; add Victor Lewis (d). 2/88.
* Ph.D. Contemporary CCD-14055-2 As above, except omit Lewis; add Kenny Burrell (g); Marvin 'Smitty' Smith (d). 4/89.
As he entered his 60s, Art Farmer was playing better than ever. The three albums by this wonderful group speak as eloquently as any record can on behalf of the generation of players who followed the first boppers (Farmer, Jordan) yet can still make modern music with a contemporary rhythm section (Williams, Reid, Lewis, Smith). The first record, dedicated to Strayhorn, is a little doleful on the ballads but is otherwise perfectly pitched. Blame It On My Youth, though, is a discreet masterpiece. Art's reading of the title-track is one of his very finest ballad interpretations. Jordan plays with outstanding subtlety and guarded power throughout and has a memorable feature of his own on 'I'll Be Around', and Williams leads the rhythm section with consummate craft and decisiveness. But it's Lewis who, like Smith, shows amazing versatility and who really makes the music fall together, finding an extra ounce of power and crispness in every rhythm he has to mark out. Ph.D. doesn't quite maintain this exalted level, but, with Burrell guesting in jovial mood, it's good-humoured and fluent. Outstanding production work from Helen Keane.

 Central Avenue Reunion Contemporary CCD-14057-2 Farmer; Frank Morgan (as); Lou Levy (p); Eric Von Essen (b); Albert 'Tootie' Heath (d). 5/89.
The reunion is between Farmer and Morgan, friends from the LA scene of the early '50s, yet never together on record before. The music, from a live engagement at Kimball's East in California, is finally disappointing: Morgan's keening and late-flowering interest in what extremes he can reach on his horn isn't a very apposite partner for Farmer's unflappable flugelhorn, and the rhythm section have few ambitions beyond comping. Some fine moments amid a generally routine record.

Also, in brief:

 Art Farmer And The Jazz Giants Prestige 60-027. 55–87.
Only those with limited shelf-space will settle for a compilation from Farmer's many Prestige and Contemporary albums.

(*) Art Farmer & Hal McKusick Quintet Complete Studio Recordings Lone Hill Jazz LHJ 10223. 12/56–4/58.
These were McKusick releases – Quintet, Cross Section Saxes and bits of Jazz Workshop – but such details have never stayed this label's reattribution drive. Great music all the same.

 Baroque Sketches / The Time And The Place Collectables COL-CD-6870. 9/66–2/67.
The first mixes genuine and pastiche baroque (Bach to John Lewis), hepped up with what amount to boogaloo rhythms. The quintet is meatier, purportedly live at MOMA in New York, though the applause sounds suspiciously dubbed in.

 From Vienna With Art /  A Sleeping Bee MPS 981144-3 / Sonet 0602498 148907. 9/70; 9/70, 74.
Two European survivals reissued in very disappointing audio. Jimmy Heath (ss, ts, f) plays well on the first, even allowing for a few clinkers, but the drums and percussion are overloud and superfluous on the Sonet date.

(*) Azure Soul Note 121126-2. 9/87.
Nine duets with Fritz Pauer (p) that never really compel.

Joe Farnsworth

DRUMMER

Dad was trumpeter and bandleader Roger Farnsworth, and Joe's brothers were involved in music. He studied with Arthur Taylor and Harold Mabern and has recorded prolifically as a highly musical hard-bopper.

 Beautiful Friendship Criss Cross 1166 Farnsworth; Eddie Henderson (t, flhn); Steve Davis (tb); Eric Alexander (ts); Cedar Walton (p); Nat Reeves (b). 99.

The debut album is haunted by the death of Joe's sibling, baritone saxophonist James Farnsworth, who is remembered on 'I See You, Brother', and on Alexander's fine 'Joobie'. The presence of Henderson and Walton lends distinction to the session and the standard of playing is predictably high. The overall impression is of material drawn from hither and yon, though Lee Morgan's 'Melancholee' is the only repertory piece. Walton's two tunes, 'I'm Not So Sure' and 'Something In Common', are the most assured, while Alexander's closing 'Joe's Tempo' is a basic blowing theme.

Also, in brief:

 It's Prime Time 441 Records 26. 1/03.

Maybe still around and worth picking up. Old teacher and boss Harold Mabern (p) shows up, as does Benny Golson (ts), who contributes three compositions. Joe contributes the title-tune.

Charles Farrell

PIANO

A former boxing promoter, he may be 'the only man alive who has promoted a Leon Spinks fight and played with both Sonny Rollins and Buddy Guy'.

 Hope Springs Eternal World Tribe 3067 Farrell; Evan Parker (ss, ts); John Stephan (feedback, programming). 11/04–4/05.

 Glossolalia World Tribe 2961 As above, except omit Stephan. 12/04.

The label is Farrell's own. Hope Springs Eternal is one of the strangest records in this book: a soundstage dominated by old tapes culled from Farrell's telephone answering machine, messages left by boxers and other people in the fight game, built into a montage and mixed, via John Stephan's programming, with music from piano and saxophone. This is Farrell's own ring cycle! Eerie, disquieting, it is a fascinating piece of work, but it doesn't stand much repetition, and several tracks are simply alternative versions of what's gone before. How Evan Parker got involved in all this is hard to say, but the second disc consists of two marathon duets for saxophone and piano (recorded in London): the first lasts three seconds short of 45 minutes, which is certainly going 15 rounds. Farrell's style tends to be an undifferentiated torrent, line over teeming line coming off the keyboard. Parker, as usual, doesn't spare himself, but while Farrell may be quite a technician, one wonders at times if he is actually listening to his partner.

Joe Farrell (1937–86)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, FLUTE

Originally Joseph Firrantello, he arrived in NY from Chicago in 1960 and worked with many of the leading outfits there; founder member of the Jones–Lewis Orchestra and with Chick Corea in the original Return To Forever. Turned mostly to West Coast session work in the '70s, but toured in his final years.

(*) Sonic Text Original Jazz Classics OJC 777 Farrell; Freddie Hubbard (t, flhn); George Cables (p); Tony Dumas (b); Peter Erskine (d). 11/79.

Originally on Contemporary, this captures perfectly Farrell's adventurous modal approach and his interest in pure sound. His flute part on Cables's 'Sweet Rita Suite' is both effective and unusual. He was a better flautist than saxophonist, but his soprano work always had what one-time colleague Flora Purim describes as a 'singing' quality. Hubbard may be too assertive a player for Farrell's music – the trumpeter's own 'Jazz Crunch' is out of character for the set – but when he switches to flugelhorn for 'When You're Awake' and the melancholy 'If I Knew Where You're At', which might almost be by Chick Corea, he sounds spot-on. The closing 'Malibu', reminiscent of some of the things with Corea, is Farrell's best testament.

Also, in brief:

 Moongerms CTI/Epic 505176-2. 11/72.

Joe plays only soprano and flute, Herbie Hancock (p), Stanley Clarke (b) and Jack DeJohnette (d) are in the band, but it's blighted by Creed Taylor's emasculating production.

(*) Fuse One CTI/Epic 512794. 80.

An equally grand cast (John McLaughlin (g), Larry Coryell (g), Stanley Clarke (b), Victor Feldman (p)), but a dreary fusion project.

Claudio Fasoli (born 1939)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Italian post-bopper, frequent sideman, occasional leader.

(*) Welcome Soul Note 101171-2 Fasoli; Kenny Wheeler (t, flhn); Jean-François Jenny-Clark (b); Daniel Humair (d). 3/86.
 Cities RAM RMCD4503 Fasoli; Mick Goodrick (g); Paolino Dalla Porta (b); Billy Elgart (d). 93.
 Ten Tributes RAM RMCD4517 Fasoli; Kenny Wheeler (t, flhn); Mick Goodrick (g); Henri Texier (b); Billy Elgart (d). 4/94.
 Stilla Soul Note 121335-2 Fasoli; Rudy Migliardi (tb); Paolo Birro (p). 4/03.

Fasoli's records have dabbled in most contemporary styles without sounding entirely at ease in any of them. Most conventional is probably the earlier Soul Note, which finds Wheeler playing with unusual aggression, spurred by the tough underpinnings of Jenny-Clark and Humair. When he tries to go outside familiar parameters, as on the edgy 'Surfaces' on Cities, Fasoli's broken phrasing can sound contrived. But otherwise this is an interesting session, made up of dedications to different metropolises. Goodrick's versatile range is more authoritative than the leader's playing, binding the parts together and taking liquid, affably lyrical solos in his own time. Dalla Porta and Elgart play restlessly, unwilling to settle into any simple groove; yet when the four of them find the same pulse – '20121' is a good example – the results are very pleasing.

Ten Tributes carries over elements of both, delivering some fresh originals alongside edgy reinterpretations of standards like 'Yesterdays' and 'Body And Soul'. Claudio still sounds as if he's trying too hard, but even so it's his best showing on record. Stilla is credited to the Gammatrio. The curious instrumentation lends a fresh sound to what is otherwise what even Fasoli describes as chamber group music. Nobody pushes too hard and the three musicians settle for nicely melodious ruminations, which are agreeable if hardly compelling.

Also, in brief:

(*) Trois Trios Splasc(h) 678. 9/93–4/94.
Self-explanatory format and a familiar enough personnel, given the records above. Good in patches, but it feels like a compilation.

 Mirror RAM 4522. 03.
With Jay Clayton (v) and Stefano Battaglia (p); diffuse.

Riccardo Fassi (born 1955)

KEYBOARDS

The Italian works mostly with his large Tankio Band.

(*) Notte Splasc(h) H 345-2 Fassi; Tankio Band. 2/91.
(*) Toast Man Splasc(h) H 307 Fassi; Flavio Boltro (t, flhn); Dario La Penna (g); Massimo Moriconi (b); Alberto D'Anna (d); Massimo Rocci, Alfredo Minotti (perc). 2–4/90.
 One For Leonardo Splasc(h) H 379-2 Fassi; Flavio Boltro (t, flhn); Riccardo Luppi (ss, ts, f, af); Sandro Cerino (bcl, cbcl); Massimo Moriconi, Paolino Dalla Porta (b); Alberto D'Anna (d); Alfredo Minotti (perc). 4/92.
 Plays The Music Of Frank Zappa Splasc(h) 428 Fassi; Tankio Band. 5/94.
His orchestral scores are colourful and fluent if not always individual and it's the soloists who make Notte catch occasional fire. British readers will be reminded of Kenny Wheeler with John Taylor when they hear 'Octopus' and 'La Foresta' on Toast Man. Some of the other tracks aim for a studious kind of fusion; Fassi turns to synthesizer, and his lyrical bent is obscured by those settings, although Boltro is attractively elegant throughout. The trumpeter gets even more space on One For Leonardo, which is probably Fassi's best work with a bigger group. There is only a dash of electronics this time and the soundscape is widened by the bass reeds of Cerino; not all the sonic effects are convincingly integrated into Fassi's arrangements, and he seems short on real melodic invention, but Boltro and the useful Luppi play with great purpose on the date. For the tribute album, Fassi chooses a group of Zappa favourites – all from the '60s output, though – and sets them up as something between blowing vehicles and smartly arranged pastiches. As homage, it's probably too respectful, but it does get a lot of good jazz out of the likes of 'Twenty Small Cigars'.

(*) Walkabout Splasc(h) DH 475-2 Fassi; Paolino Dalla Porta (b); Billy Elgart (d). 1/96.
This trio session is another strong effort, less direct than his deleted New York record, more elusive and at times – especially Dalla Porta's mysterious 'Game 1' – openly free. Yet there is still plenty of bebop in 'Di Coccio' and 'What Cosa?', and Fassi and his team sit very comfortably in both milieus. Elgart is crucially effective, constantly busy without seeming intrusive, and Dalla Porta offers some lovely countermelodies: his 'Message From The Earth' is one of the prettiest things on any of Fassi's records.

 Serial Killer Splasc(h) 826-2 Fassi; Enrico Rava, Claudio Corvini, Giancarlo Ciminelli (t); Mario Corvini (tb); Massimo Pirone (btb, tba); Michel Audisso (ss, as); Sandro Satta (as); Riccardo Luppi (f, picc); Torquato Sdrucia (bs); Antonello Salis (acc); Ruben Chaviano (vn); Luca Pirozzi, Gianluca Renzi (b); Pietro Iodice, Ettore Fioravanti (d); Alfredo Minotti (perc). 3/01.
Some of Fassi's beloved influences (especially Frank Zappa) pervade a little too strongly at times, the title-track sounding like big-band rock, and a few of the pieces have the feel of a kind of aimless ingenuity. More effective are 'Solstizio D'Estate', with guest Rava in high form, and the smart reworking of Morricone's 'Indagine', which features Fioravanti in a sequence of five duets.

Also, in brief:

(*) L'Amico Immaginario Splasc(h) 630.2. 3-12/94.
Much of this is a straightforward duet with Gary Smulyan (bs), with some bass and drums elsewhere.

(*) Belleville (Vite In Sospeso) Splasc(h) 810-2. 4/98.
A soundtrack album, though the 16 episodes are quite able to stand on their own, and it has the plus of Steve Lacy (ss) going uncharacteristically wistful and melancholy.

(*) Plays The Music Of Eric Dolphy Splasc(h) 868. 06.
You wonder if he turned on to Dolphy because Zappa once put him in a song title. Unconvincing homage.

(*) Seven Pieces For Large Splasc(h) 8912. 07.
Undoubtedly exciting, but increasingly diffuse and only lightly peppered with memorable moments.

Kali Z. Fasteau

SOPRANO SAXOPHONE, OTHER INSTRUMENTS

Previously known as Zusaan Kali Fasteau and formerly married to bassist Donald Rafael Garrett; she grew up in Europe and in 1972 began a decade-long examination of world musics.

* Memoirs of a Dream Flying Note FNCD 9008 2CD Fasteau; Donald Rafael Garrett (b, Bb cl, f, perc, other instruments). 5/75, 3/77.
(*) Worlds Within Worlds Flying Note FNCD9001 Fasteau; James C. Jamison II (g); Elizabeth Panzer (hp); Bob Cunningham (b); Rashied Ali (d); Paul Leake (tabla); David Cornick (perc). 89.
 Expatriate Kin CIMP 140 Fasteau; Noah Howard (as, etc); Bobby Few (p). 3/97.
 Comraderie Flying Note FNCD 9006 Fasteau; Joe McPhee (ts); Bobby Few, Sonelius Smith (p); Warren Smith (d); Mike Wimberly (djembe, perc). 3 & 10/97.
(*) Vivid Flying Note FNCD 9008 Fasteau; Sabir Mateen (as, ts, bamboo f); Joe McPhee (pocket t, ss); William Parker (b); Hamid Drake (d, perc); Ron McBee (djembe, perc). 6/98, 5/99.
 Making Waves Flying Note FNCD 9004 Fasteau; Kidd Jordan (ts); Bobby Few (p); Sirone (b). 6/00, 5/04.
(*) People Of The Ninth Flying Note FNCD 9007 Fasteau; Kidd Jordan (ts); Michael T. A. Thompson (d, perc). 9/05.
Fasteau's multi-instrumentalism is consistently thoughtful and to the point. Though she utilizes a bewildering range of instruments, including various flutes, cello and piano, as well as percussion, everything she does seems to have consistent inner purpose. To that extent, these records are something of a muchness, often distinguished more by the presence of other participants rather than what Fasteau does. This is a description, not a criticism.

It's no surprise to find Parker on some of these records. He's drawn to eclectic projects and his resonant sound is remarkably similar to the late Donald Rafael Garrett's. Fasteau and her husband played together on a number of earlier records, now very rare or deleted, but they can be heard together on Memoirs

Of A Dream, a generously proportioned sampling of their like-minded work together; check out 'Bamboo Grove' and the long 'Streaming Love'.

Garrett died in 1989, and Fasteau has since worked with approximately similar players. Sirone is a towering presence on Making Waves, but as collaborators none come closer to Fasteau's own exacting standard than Joe McPhee and Kidd Jordan. Kidd's duets with Fasteau and percussionist Michael Thompson on People Of The Ninth add up to a striking tribute to the beleaguered citizens and musicians of New Orleans in the immediate aftermath of Hurricane Katrina. It's a valuable set not least for adding to the still scanty discography of Jordan, who had also appeared on the earlier record in a more conventional group context.

The absence of a drummer on Making Waves is explained by Fasteau's own turn at the kit. The time-sense is immensely sophisticated, drawing on music well outside jazz and the interplay between bass and percussion on many of the tracks here is a worthwhile study for any rhythm section player trying to extend his/her language. However, she concentrates on synthesizer for much of the album.

World Within Words, which inaugurated her Flying Note label, has featured in these pages before and remains a favourite, not least for the post-Coltrane trios with Cunningham and Ali ('From Above' is a career high-point) but also for some delicate work on the difficult shakuhachi ('Dolphin Meditation'). Given her predilection for free but directed improvisation, it was no surprise to find Fasteau turning up on CIMP as well. Intriguing company again, and a useful addition to the sparse Howard discography.

As will be seen from the datelines, Fasteau has little interest in records as 'product', preferring to release when musical logic dictates: an important figure, still below the radar of many contemporary jazz fans.

Also, in brief:

 Prophecy Flying Note FNCD 9003. 12/87, 9/92.
A patchier record than some, given the time-span, but fascinating all the same.

 Sensual Hearing Flying Note FNCD 9005. 1/94, 8/95.
Perhaps too much ethnomusicology on show, but very beautiful.

 Oneness Flying Note FNCD 9009. 5/01, 12/02.
Recorded live, and an intriguing glimpse of the little-known Lee Mixashawn Rozie (ts, bamboo f, etc).

Nick Fatool (1915–2000)

DRUMS

A swing-era veteran, he went the route of several dedicated craftsmen and ended up playing good Dixieland when good swing bands faded away

 Nick Fatool's Jazz Band Jazzology JCD-158 Fatool; Ernie Carson (c); Johnny Mince (cl); Eddie Miller, Bud Freeman (ts); Lou Stein, Ray Sherman (p); Bill Rutan (g, v); Howard Alden (g); Bob Haggart, Phil Stevens (b). 1/82–3/87.

This rare outing as a leader is very good fun. The band are all seasoned campaigners, and though some of the playing isn't exactly light on its feet, they get up a good head of steam on 'Shine', 'Hotter Than That' and similar chestnuts. Carson provides the fireworks while Miller, Mince and Stein take joshing solos. Fatool gives himself some breaks but otherwise lets the others take the limelight. Lively and full-blooded sound, somewhat diminished on two 1982 club tracks with Freeman and Alden.

Dan Faulk (born 1969)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

The Philadelphian post-bopper has many sideman credits.

(*) Focusing In Criss Cross 1076 Faulk; Barry Harris (p); Rufus Reid (b); Carl Allen (d). 12/92.
 Spirits In The Night Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 024 Faulk; Myron Walden (as); Joe Martin (b); Jorge Rossy (d). 10/96.
 The Dan Faulk Songbook, Volume 1 Uglifruit UFP 012 Faulk; Carlton Holmes (p); Ugonna Ukegwo (b); Will Terrill III (d). 03.

Benny Golson contributes an appreciative liner-note to Focusing In, and at first hearing Faulk might be a player of Golson's generation. He has a big, slightly old-fashioned tone to go with his racy delivery of new and standard material. His own 'Quintagon' demonstrates an ability to push bebop chords on a step. Faulk frequently departs from the basic harmonic structure but in ways that give even 'wrong' notes an aura of relatedness. Harris is, of course, an ideal collaborator in this, and the partnership comes into its own on two Monk tunes, 'Nutty' and 'Epistrophy'; 'Barry's Tune' is offered by way of thanks. Though the liner-details list only tenor, Faulk shifts to the straight horn for one of the oddest takes on 'I Love Paris' ever committed to disc. Allen is at his best here and on 'Lover', laying off threes against fours, speeding up, then softening the count. If, as Golson suggests, ballads offer the most accurate index of a young player's chops, then Faulk fits the part with a long and flawless version of Horace Silver's 'Peace' that constantly finds new things to say.

Enjoying the patronage of Jordi Pujol as well as Gerry Teekens, Faulk created a strong and individual statement with Spirits In The Night. His Coltrane influence is most in evidence on the opening 'The Night Has A Thousand Eyes', and it emerges here and there in the originals which follow, not least 'Three Cheers For Paul Chambers', which is less breathless than it sounds. The basic trio is proficient if unspectacular, and Walden, who is special guest on five tracks, has some interesting things to say on 'The Heath Blues', his own 'Stop'N'Go' and the Chambers song. It all sounds a bit flat, though.

It was a long wait for the next one. There are langueurs on Songbook, Volume 1 (still no sign of Volume 2), though the best of the material is excellent and the group is well suited to Dan's concept. Tunes like 'Crawfish' and 'Hopscotch' don't deliver much punch. The opening sequence of 'Look For The Sun' and 'Violets For Tuesday' (influenced by 'Violets For Your Furs') is beautiful and there are superb solo spots throughout from the leader and the accomplished Holmes.

Malachi Favors (Mahgostut) (1937–2004)

DOUBLE BASS, OTHER INSTRUMENTS

Born, worked and died in Chicago.

 2 x 4 Southport 0058 Favors; Tatsu Aoki (b). 6/98.

Favors almost never took a solo with the Art Ensemble. He frequently contributed with other instruments and with vocals, and he made a permanent impact on the group's presentation by suggesting the use of face paints, but he was, by and large, a group player. The dark, Wilbur Ware-influenced sound is unexpectedly familiar here, highlighted by Aoki's vivid work with the bow.

Pierre Favre (born 1937)

DRUMS, PERCUSSION

In his teens he played Dixieland with Albert Nicholas and Lil Armstrong and has worked in bebop and the avant-garde. An instrument-maker, he often explores the relationship between sound and substance.

 Singing Drums ECM 823639-2 Favre; Paul Motian (d, gongs, crotales, calabashes, rodbrushes); Fredy Studer (d, gongs, log d, cym); Nana Vasconcelos (berimbau, tym, congas, water pot, shakers, bells, voice). 5/84.
(*) Window Steps ECM 529348-2 Favre; Kenny Wheeler (t, flhn); Roberto Ottaviano (ss); David Darling (clo); Steve Swallow (b). 6/95.
Singing Drums rapidly degenerates into a sampling of effects, beautiful but empty, and the music seems to call out for something to draw the various strands together. If it appeals only to specialist tastes, the second record is more accessible. The presence of Wheeler and the much-admired Ottaviano guarantees music of interest, and Darling sounds highly focused. Favre himself is seldom out of focus, but he is never intrusive and he holds the long 'Lea' together with great intelligence.

* Soufflés Intakt CD 049 Favre; Michel Godard (tba, serpent); Roberto Ottaviano (ss); Lucas Niggli (perc). 6/97.
The dynamism of this fascinating group takes time to absorb: as often as not, the two horns act as accompanists to the two percussion players; interlocking patterns, phased metres, a dark pulse. Hailing from Cameroon, Niggli is the Swiss's secret sharer, individual but absolutely in tune with the leader. In conjunction, they create a music of some complexity (try 'Felix Dancing In Own Space') and not easy to absorb at a single hearing. It amply rewards close attention, though.

* European Chamber Ensemble Intakt 062 Favre; Michel Godard (tba, serpent); Roberto Ottaviano (sax); Philipp Schaufelberger (g); Karel Boeschoten (vn); Marius Ungureanu (vla); Pierre-François Massy (b); Lucas Niggli (perc). 02.
This delivers an exquisite impact right from the opening 'Amarcord D'Un Rose'. The Singing Drums group has been expanded to an octet, though there is little hint of 'chamber' or 'art' music here. The writing is as limpidly beautiful as ever and Favre's percussion is bright and communicative, never merely functional. As the leader suggests in his liner-note, there is a mixture of delight and profound melancholy about these tracks. They are mostly short, apart from the opening, and almost songlike in structure. 'Casa Di Nebbia', 'Colonel Sorbet' and 'Le Scorpion' are not much more than miniatures, but repeated hearings reveal their subtlety and depth and both Ottaviano and Godard find ways of expanding their remit whenever solo space opens for them.

* Saxophones Intakt CD 091 Favre; Michel Godard (tba, serpent); Beat Hofstetter (ss); Sascha Armbruster (as); Andrea Formenti (ts); Beat Kappeler (bs). 03.
The title gives priority to the members of the ARTE Quartet, who in reality provide greater service in rich backgrounds for Favre and Godard, both of whom are in stupendous form. On 'Sito', Favre's gongs create an atmosphere; Godard responds on serpent, and then the saxophones in pairs. The percussionist has his finest moment on 'Stampede', a genuinely virtuosic piece that never lapses into mere virtuosity, and 'Solar Wheel', which is shimmeringly beautiful. The horns are deployed on the through-composed 'Music 4 & 7' and again on 'Anecdote', where they sound like the 29th Street Saxophone Quartet. 'Hippopotamus' is just a lark, Saint-Saëns stuff on tuba and percussion.

Also, in brief:

 Punctus Splasc(h) 817-2. 6/00.
An untypically jazz-based session, with Tino Tracanna (sno, ss, bs) playing blues lines and Monk's 'Misterioso'.

 Two In One Intakt CD 114. 5/05.
Attractive duos with Yang Jing (pipa), but quite remote from jazz.

Wally Fawkes (born 1924)

CLARINET, SOPRANO SAXOPHONE

Born in Vancouver, but a Bechet-influenced British trad veteran, best known for his association with Humphrey Lyttelton, and as 'Trog', creator of the long-running Daily Mail Flook comic strip.

 Flook Digs Jazz Lake LACD 143 Fawkes; Spike Mackintosh (t); Eddie Harvey, Keith Christie, Jeremy French, John Mumford (tb); Ian Armit, Lennie Felix, Colin Bates (p); Lennie Bush, Tom Mahn, Russ Allen (b); Eddie Taylor, Jackie Turner, Dave Pearson, John Armatage (d). 3/57–4/59.
This welcome gathering-in of 21 tracks from one 10-inch LP and four EPs accounts for Fawkes's '50s output as leader. Although the line-ups are subject to continuous change from the trombonist backwards, Fawkes and Spike Mackintosh – a fondly remembered trumpeter who hardly made any other records – are a constant in the front line. The music has more to do with a genteel kind of small-band swing than trad, with Mackintosh's skilful take on mid-period Louis Armstrong leading the way. Wally himself plays the most worthwhile solos, with the trombonists each trying some interesting things. Nothing really stands out; it probably made more impact on EP!

 The Wally Fawkes Collection Lake LACD 207 2CD Fawkes; Ben Cohen (t, c); Ian Christie (cl); John R. T. Davies (as); Martin Litton, Johnny Parker, Butch Thompson (p); Paul Sealey (g); Tony Pitt (bj, g); Graham Read (b, tba); Vic Pitt (b); Pam Pameijer (d); Norman Emberson (wbd). 11/82–7/87.
'Trog' has seldom taken leadership duties in the recording studios, but the Collection is a useful compilation of three LPs he made for Stomp Off in the '80s, two under his own billing and one with Pam Pameijer's trio. Ben Cohen and Martin Litton provide fine support on one date, with a lovely reading of 'Mister Jelly Lord', and Ian Christie spars with Trog on the next. Perhaps the trio with Pameijer and Butch Thompson isn't quite so good, but there's a lot of excellent clarinet spread across the two discs.

 Jazz Jurassics Macjazz 003610 Fawkes; Colin Smith (t); Stan Greig (p); Pete Skivington (b); Ritchie Bryant (d). 9/99–1/00.
Wally shares the nominal leadership with Stan Greig, and Smith comes in for half the tracks to add some extra piquancy. The playing sometimes has a cheese-paring quality which listeners used to Coltrane-length solos may not appreciate, but it's more like a shrewd husbanding of resources by these veterans, and with Bechet specifically invoked here and there – via 'Revolutionary Blues' and 'Bechet's Wedding Day' – Wally pays homage to his old mentor.

Also, in brief:

 Fidgety Feet Stomp Off CD1248. 1–2/92.
Wally gets top bill as guest with the Zenith Hot Stompers. Plenty of vim on the upbeat numbers and, despite a few gargled notes, he sounds in good heart.

Rick Fay

CLARINET, TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

The Chicagoan didn't record until 1989 but has made up for lost time since.

 Live From Lone Pine Arbors ARCD 19101 Fay; David Jones (c); George Palmer (tb); Bob Leary (g, bj); Lee Richardson (sou); Pat Doyle (d). 9/89.
 Memories Of You Arbors ARCD 19103 Fay; Ernie Carson (c); Dan Barrett (tb); Johnny Mince (cl); Bob Leary (g); Lee Richardson (b, sou); Pat Doyle (d). 1/91.
Fay's record was the first on the Arbors imprint and he's kept the catalogue ticking over ever since with a production-line of no-fuss Dixieland records that always seem to hit the spot without ever suggesting anything new or left-field, which is perhaps the point. A crafty multi-instrumentalist, Fay has the ability to suggest that there are several more guys on the date than actually turned up; his clarinet-playing isn't perhaps his strongest suit and he's most convincing on the soprano.

Memories Of You comes in on 'That Da Da Strain' with a sound reminiscent of a car shifting into cruise. From here on, it's a regular procession of discs. The playing's great, but particularly on the tracks where Rick's featured with just Carson, Leary and Richardson. As on the first record, the singing isn't up to much, but it isn't the point of the date, either.

 Glendena Forever Arbors ARCD 19104 Fay; Jackie Coon (flhn, v); Charlie Bornemann (tb); Bob Phillips (p); Lee Richardson (b, sou); Eddie Graham (d). 5/91.
For the first time, the credit is shared, with the Hackett-like Coon (and Phillips takes a solo spot on 'Cherry'), but the Fay wagon rolls on relentlessly. This time, there's way too much singing, as if inventiveness has flagged and Fay's own spots seem perfunctory and clipped.

 Rolling On Arbors ARCD 19108 Fay; Jon-Erik Kellso (t); Dan Barrett (tb); Chuck Hedges (cl); Dick Cary (p); Paul Scavarda (g, bj); Howard Alden (bj); Mat Domber (wh); Lou Mauro (b); Joe Ascione (d). 12/91.
Fay seems never to have been out of the studio at this point, having avoided recording for the first few decades of his career. You have to see a certain wry irony in the title. There are a couple of surprises here: Cary arranges Bix's 'In The Dark', but it comes too early in the set to save the rest; and Alden appears on banjo for a couple of numbers. Kellso joined the operation around this time, and he's already in fine, fresh voice. Otherwise, it's the usual mild juggernaut.

 Endangered Species Arbors ARCD 19120 Fay; Betty O'Hara (c, flhn, double-bell euph, b-t); Jackie Coon (flhn); Dan Barrett (tb); Bobby Gordon (cl); Johnny Varro (p); Eddie Erickson (bj); David Stone (b); Gene Estes (d). 3/93.
Once this nine-piece gets moving, it sounds like it'll never stop. 'Meet Me Tonight In Dreamland' is a deceptive opener, though much of the rest has a melancholy tinge. Coon's in good shape, Barrett's always reliable, and in Betty O'Hara any leader has a whole brass sub-section in the wings. Fay is spending more time with his tenor, possibly because the intonation is easier, but he doesn't sound tired yet. If the title refers to Dixieland music or its exponents, there's no reason for the World Wildlife Fund to get excited just yet. They sound in rude good health.

Also, in brief:

 Hello Horn! Arbors ARCD 19102. 4/90.
A quick follow-up to the debut record. 'Japanese Sandman' is terrific.

(*) Oh Baby Arbors ARCD 19105. 4/91.
This seems to have been held back for later release. Fair decision; it's not the strongest of the earlier dates.

 Live At The State Arbors ARCD 29102. 4/92.
A good, basic set from St Petersburg, Florida, also available on video.

(*) Poetry & Jazz /  Words Among The Reeds Arbors ARCD 19113 / 19196. 9/92; 11/96.
Sometimes jazz and poetry situations work out; often they don't. Fay's Sax-O-Poem group tries for a result, but the effort's futile. The tribute pieces are better on the second disc and the music is more successfully integrated with text.

 This Is Where I Came In Arbors ARCD 19106. 6/96.
Fay and his Summa Orchestra in unashamedly nostalgic mood.

 With A Song In My Heart Arbors ARCD 19205. 6/98.
With strings: nice, but it makes you hanker for the rudery of the early records.

Enrico Fazio

DOUBLE BASS

A frequent sideman, but also an ambitious composer-arranger.

(*) Euphoria! Splasc(h) H 327-2 Fazio; Alberto Mandarini (t); Lauro Rossi (tb); Francesco Vigone (ss, as); Carlo Actis Dato (ts, bs, bcl); Fiorenzo Sordini (d, vib, mar); Franca Silveri (v). 7/89.
 Zapping! Leo LR 372 Fazio; Alberto Mandarini, Fabrizio Bosso (t, flhn); Gianpiero Malfatto (tb, tba, f); Francesco Vigone (ss, as); Carlo Actis Dato (ts, bs, bcl); Angelina Perrotta (vln, vla, ky); Fiorenzo Sordini (d). 6/01–4/02.
 Live In Milano – Villa Litta Leo LR 424 Fazio; Giovanni Falzone (t, c); Gianpiero Malfatto (tb); Francesco Vigone (as); Carlo Actis Dato (ts, bs, bcl); Emanuele Parrini (vn); Fiorenzo Sordini (d). 8/04.
Fazio loves an exciting, kinetic band, full of carnival colours and offbeat energies. While the longest section of Euphoria! is a tribute to Charles Mingus, it doesn't sound much like a Mingus band: trombone, bassoon and oboe make only fleeting appearances, but the central unit of three horns, bass and drums swarms all over Fazio's pleasing melodies and four Mingus themes, enough to convince that there's a bigger band at work. Mandarini's notes seem to topple out of his horn, and long, barely controlled lines spiral crazily over the ensemble. Actis Dato's typically zesty ripostes and Vigone's brusque, pinchy alto-lines fill in the rest.

On the first of the Leos, Fazio explains that his intentions as a composer were to 'zap' between 'hundreds of excerpts from many styles of music and [use] them out of context'. It takes an expert team and a very strong directorial hand to make such eclecticism seem anything but shallow, and most of the way Fazio and his players seem up to the task. One might question, though, if there really are hundreds of jumpcuts here: most of the pieces seem to have very little illogic to them. Essentially the record continues the bright, inventive work of his earlier music. 'Kitsch' is one of two very big pieces, and here and in the final 'In Vino Veritas' one might complain that Fazio is simply overcrowding the stage. The notebooks of a particularly inquisitive mind.

The live album is more conventional. His septet engage with his music with characteristic gusto, Falzone making a particularly strong impact, and the tunes have the familiar zip and multi-coloured feel. The live recording, however, leaves some of the soloists sounding remote.

Miguel F(ernán)dez-Vallejo

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Studied classical music, then went to Berklee. His name's shortened to Fdez-Vallejo.

(*) El Perro Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 273 Fdez-Vallejo; Miguel Villar (ts); Gorka Benítez (f); Marc Miralta (vib); Juan Pablo Balcázar (b); Gonzalo del Val (d). 05.

There's much to admire here, even if doesn't seem to get above second gear. That, in part, is in keeping with the two principals' (old friends) desire not to indulge in a conventional tenor battle. Most of the tracks, and centrally Balcázar's title-track, which maybe shouldn't have gone first, and 'Equinox-Silent Walk', sound like moody chorales, with the two saxophones weaving round one another. Benítez and Miralta are guests on 'Bad Dream', which is refugee film music, so most of the tracks have no harmony instrument. It's a daring strategy and mostly it comes off well, though casual listeners might feel the same themes are coming round again and again. We liked del Val's closing 'Escrich Sobre Schoenberg', played with the lightest percussion; it's the bassist, predictably, who holds together most of the rest.

Leonard Feather (1914–94)

PIANO, CELESTE

One of the great jazz spokesmen, he was a Londoner in love with the music who went to America in the mid-'30s and continued to be fiercely involved for the rest of his life, as producer, composer, sometimes as performer, though best remembered as a historian-critic.

 Leonard Feather 1937–1945 Classics 901 Feather; Bobby Hackett (c, g); Dave Wilkins (t, v); Buck Clayton, Archie Craig (t); Benny Carter (t, as); Edmond Hall, Andy McDevitt (cl); Pete Brown (as); Joe Marsala (cl, ts); Buddy Featherstonehaugh, Bertie King, Coleman Hawkins (ts); Joe Bushkin (p, cel); Dan Burley, Eddie Macaulay, Billy Kyle (p); Alan Ferguson, Eddie Freeman, Remo Palmieri, Tiny Grimes (g); Wally Morris, Len Harrison, Artie Shapiro, Hayes Alvis, Carl Powell, Oscar Pettiford, Jack Lesberg (b); Al Craig, George Wettling, Hymie Schneider, Cozy Cole, Specs Powell, Morey Feld (d); Leo Watson (v). 5/37–1/45.

Pleasing to have a CD available under the nominal leadership of the great man. Although Feather emigrated young, there are two London sessions here by some of his British friends under the name Ye Olde English Swynge Band. On such wholly unpromising material as 'Colonel Bogey' they actually sound pretty good, given that they basically dispense with the melodies as quickly as possible. More substantial are three All-Star Jam Band dates which Feather organized, including such luminaries as Hackett, Carter, Clayton and Hawkins. Nobody really excels, but there is some fine small-band swing and Hawk gets a feature to himself on the 1944 date, 'Thanks For The Memory'. The disc closes on the rare session when Leonard and fellow scribe Dan Burley sat at two pianos alongside Tiny Grimes, Jack Lesberg and Morey Feld for some blues and boogie fun.

Also, in brief:

 Presents Bop Tofrec 88913. 8/57.

Bebop classics played by Idrees Sulieman (t), Thad Jones (t), Art Taylor (d), George Wallington (p) and others, fronted by Leonard.

 Presents The Mitchells And The Joneses Fresh Sound FSRCD 444. 3 & 10/58.

Feather was producer of these 'family' sets: but for Eddie, the Jones boys were genuine siblings, but Blue Mitchell wasn't, for obvious reasons, kin to Red and Whitey on the other disc represented. Confused? You needn't be; it's just engaging jazz with a mild gimmick.

John Fedchock (born 1957)

TROMBONE

Experience in modern big bands, including a long stint as Woody Herman's MD, stands him in the very best stead.

* New York Big Band Reservoir RSRCD 138 Fedchock; Tony Kadleck, Greg Gisbert, Barry Ries, Tim Hagans (t, flhn); Keith O'Quinn, Clark Gayton, George Flynn (tb); Jon Gordon (ss, as); Mark Vinci (as); Rich Perry, Rick Margitza (ts); Scott Robinson (bs); Joel Weiskopf (p); Lynn Seaton (b); Dave Ratajczak (d); Jerry Gonzalez (perc). 9/92.

(*) On The Edge Reservoir RSR CD 153 As above, except add Scott Wendholt (t, flhn); Charles Pillow (ss, as, cl); David Taylor (btb); Allan Farnham (p); Bobby Sanabria, Emedin Rivera (perc). 10/97.

This is far from being another anonymous studio big band: Fedchock has creamed off some of the sharpest of New York's contemporary players and created a meticulous and skilful, yet passionate, orchestra. The leader spent seven years with Herman and knows his trade: he has a sonorous if not especially distinctive style as a soloist, which gives the featured treatment of 'Ruby, My Dear' a glistening quality, but he leaves the showstopping moments to players such as Perry, Robinson, Hagans, Margitza and Gisbert. 'Limehouse Blues' is a brilliant flag-waver, tempestuous but perfectly controlled; 'La Parguera' is melodically lovely, far more than the typical Latin potboiler; and when they end on the dreaded Flintstones theme, Fedchock takes the trouble to reharmonize it and actually takes the parodic element out. Glittering digital recording lends extra attack.

We grade the follow-up, On The Edge, a notch lower, although it's still a splendid record. Fedchock mixes his own writing with another expert choice of jazz themes – Oliver Nelson's '111-44', Pastorius's 'Teen Town' and more – and the orchestra, present as before but with even a few extra names, still sounds Rolls-Royce. Maybe the sheer freshness of the debut has been dissipated but, on a flag-waver such as Thad Jones's 'Ain't Nothin' Nu', this still sounds like one of the great orchestras in jazz.

(*) Hit The Bricks Reservoir RSR CD 163 Fedchock; Scott Wendholt (t); Chris Potter (ss, ts); Allen Farnham (p); Rufus Redd (b); Dave Ratajczak (d); Adrian D'Souza (perc). 1/00.
A small-group set is inevitably going to seem like an anti-climax after the previous two, though on its own terms this does more than well enough, and it does throw greater light on Fedchock the instrumentalist: his solo beginning to 'Twilight' demonstrates a lovely sound on the horn, and he spots notes with the sort of accuracy which displays a great section-man's skills. The band has some familiar spirits in it – perhaps too familiar, in the case of Wendholt and Potter – but they make appropriately light work of the music.

(*) No Nonsense Reservoir RSR CD 170 Fedchock; Tony Kadleck, Craig Johnson, Scott Wendholt, Barry Ries (t, flhn); Keith O'Quinn, Clark Gayton (tb); George Flynn (btb); Mark Vinci (ss, as, f, af); Charles Pillow (ss, as, cl); Rick Margitza (ts); Rich Perry (ts, f); Scott Robinson (bs); Allen Farnham (p); Lynn Seaton (b); Dave Ratajczak (d); Bobby Sanabria (perc). 5/02.
Back with the big band, Fedchock delivers a set which the title amiably sums up. Given that they meet and record rarely enough, the group doesn't have the chance to settle into mere routine; on the other hand, there isn't quite the unified snap and sparkle that a more regular team might use to transform Fedchock's originals, which are fine if a little on the workmanlike side. They make a terrific big sound, though.

Avram Fefer (born 1965)

SOPRANO, ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, CLARINET, BASS CLARINET

A San Franciscan based on the East Coast who spent some time in France.

(*) Lucille's Gemini Dream CIMP 237 Fefer; Steve Swell (tb); Wilber Morris (b); Igal Foni (d). 1/01.
(*) Shades Of The Muse CIMP 286 Fefer; Tomas Ulrich (clo); Ken Filiano (b); Jay Rosen (d). 4/03.
 Painting Breath, Stoking Fire CIMP 324 Fefer; Michael Bisio (b). 2/05.
Fefer's heavy, almost bleary sound on the tenor isn't exactly uplifting. The tunes on Lucille's Gemini Dream are a dour lot, and only Swell's 'Cycle Of Fits', which has a superb duet between sax and trombone, really engages the ear (the producer's suggestion that Fefer's tunes 'could work their way into the book of jazz standards' is surely hubris). For all that, when they hit a more urgent pace, as on the title-piece, the quartet strike some sparks. Shades Of The Muse obliges Fefer to hold down the horn parts by himself and there are some interesting ruminations from the string-players. On clarinet, the leader is almost perky on 'Oblique Departures' and he takes 'BC Reverie' as a solo for bass clarinet. Still, the music often seems so effortful that enjoyment is very sporadic.

Fefer's status as a composer still isn't convincingly proven, and on the third disc he overstretches himself with a suite of duo pieces which might have been better deployed with another favourite partner, pianist Bobby Few. Bisio never lets the interest level drop too far, though, and takes command on a number of occasions when Fefer himself descends into prosiness. Conceived as some kind of suite, it does work better as a whole than in the parts.

Michael Felberbaum

GUITAR

Brought up in Rome to an American family of Central European ancestry, he was based in Boston for some years. Moved to Paris in 1991 and gigged regularly with Steve Potts. Style is eclectic, with a certain conservatism in his guitar-playing and a more advanced cast to his writing.

 Sharp Water Nocturne Jazz 347 Felberbaum; Matthieu Donarier (ss, ts); Diego Imbert (b); Karl Jannuska (d). 4/04.
 Sweetsalt Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 275 Felberbaum; Pierre De Bethmann (p, ky); Darryl Hall (b); Karl Jannuska (d). 12/05.
A cracking player and composer, Felberbaum has a clean, spacious sound that allows him to dwell on the lines of melodies which often seem constructed on 12-tone principles. The debut record is packed with ideas, and playing alongside a saxophonist rather than a keyboard suits his approach very well. Even so, Bethmann is more than equal to this clever and not unsoulful music and Jannuska's presence guarantees a certain level of energy on both discs. One suspects that Felberbaum is a man best caught in a small club with a simpatico playing partner – he worked with Steve Potts every week for months at one stage – but these are a very impressive sampling of his talent and 'All-fall' and 'Phosphor-essence' on the Fresh Sound album are small masterpieces of form that unwind nicely in the improvised sections.

Mark Feldman (born 1955)

VIOLIN

He learned violin in his native Chicago and was playing the bar circuit as a teenager; moved to Nashville in 1980 and played on hundreds of country sessions; now in NY and a significant downtowner.

(*) Chromatic Persuaders Konnex 5063 Feldman; Neal Kirkwood (p); Lindsay Horner (b); Tom Rainey (d). 97.
This first appeared on Timescraper and it was shrewd of Konnex to pick it up. Feldman has assembled a fine group and among the muster an excellent composer in Kirkwood. He also has an instinct for the kind of material which will suit his own distinctive voice. No disrespect to the pianist, but the standout track here is Scott LaFaro's 'Gloria's Step', given a fresh new impetus in this reading. That said, the long 'Drums Of Heaven' is everything you could ask for in a modern jazz track, full of rhythmic invention and featuring Mark's most extraordinary recorded solo. The opening 'Arthur's Seat' is pretty fine, too, as is Horner's sole credit, the penultimate 'Providence'. Great stuff, and well worth seeking out; extra points if you can find the original issue.

* What Exit ECM 9876537 Feldman; John Taylor (p); Anders Jormin (b); Tom Rainey (d). 6/05.
Overdue and appropriate recognition for a brilliant composer and improviser, who doesn't so much bathe in the wonderful sound Manfred Eicher and engineer James Farber lay out for him as rise to the challenge of it. Feldman's violin has become a compelling improvisational voice and the opening 'Arcade' is a virtuoso exploration of musical space. Nothing else on the record quite matches up to it, either in scale or in beauty, though the small title-piece is the perfect finish. Taylor sounds more unguarded than usual and Jormin and Rainey find a real empathy, with the drummer particularly responsive to his leader's moves.

Also, in brief:

 Music For Violin Alone Tzadik TZ 7006. 4/94.
His sideman work has been so consistently provocative and exciting that in some ways Feldman's solo record is a shade disappointing; this is more a record of violin music than a jazz or an improviser's set.

Victor Feldman (1934–87)

PIANO, VIBRAPHONE, DRUMS

Originally a drummer – he played with Glenn Miller when he was ten – the Londoner switched to vibes and piano and worked with Ronnie Scott. His career took off in America and he was guaranteed his moment in jazz Valhalla when Miles Davis recorded 'Seven Steps To Heaven'.

(*) Suite Sixteen Original Jazz Classics OJC 1768 Feldman; Jimmy Deuchar, Dizzy Reece, Jimmy Watson (t); Ken Wray (t, b-t); John Burden (frhn); Jim Powell (tba); Derek Humble (as); Tubby Hayes, Ronnie Scott (ts); Harry Klein (bs); Tommy Pollard, Norman Stenfalt (p); Lennie Bush, Eric Peter (b); Tony Crombie (d, p); Phil Seamen (d). 8 & 9/55.

(*) Departure Dates Jasmine JASCD 609 Feldman; Dizzy Reece, Jimmy Deuchar (t); Ken Wray (b-t); John Burden (frhn); Derek Humble (as); Ronnie Scott, Tubby Hayes (ts); Harry Klein (bs); Tommy Pollard, Norman Stenfalt (p); Eric Peter, Lennie Bush (b); Phil Seamen, Tony Crombie (d). 12/56.

(*) In London Volumes 1 & 2 Jasmine JASCD 622 / 625 Feldman; Dizzy Reece, Jimmy Deuchar (t); Bobby Pratt (t on Volume 2); Ken Wray (b-t); Derek Humble (as); Ronnie Scott (ts); Tubby Hayes (bs); Pete King (bs on Volume 2); Terry Shannon, Norman Stenfalt (p); Pete Blannin, Lennie Bush (b); Kenny Napper (b on Volume 2); Phil Seamen (d); Benny Goodman (d on Volume 2). 12/56; 12/56–1/57.

It was probably inevitable that Feldman would move to America, but Suite Sixteen suggests that he might equally easily have stayed and played at home had London just offered enough adventurous paying gigs. Divided into big-band, septet and quartet tracks, Suite Sixteen was cut just prior to his first American trip. As a cross-section of the local talent – Deuchar, Scott, Hayes, Crombie, Seamen, Reece – it's a remarkable document. Musically, it doesn't come up to some of the later, American sessions, but it features four excellent Feldman originals, Tony Crombie's title-piece, Allan Ganley's 'Duffle Coat', Dizzy Reece's exuberant 'Maenya', which makes a fine closer, and Kenny Clarke's and Gerald Wiggins's 'Sonar'.

Feldman plays all three of his instruments but concentrates on vibes, with excellent solos on his own brief 'Elegy', where he follows the fiercely melancholic Deuchar, and on 'Maenya'. The quality of his solo work always seemed to be in inverse proportion to its length. Feldman was a master of compression who often lost his way beyond a couple of choruses. The septet and quartet tracks are less buoyant, though 'Brawl For All', which features the leader's only piano contribution, is excellent. The sound is good but inconsistent.

The Jasmine reissues, originally on various EPs and 10-inch and 12-inch LPs, bring together Feldman's various sessions for the Tempo label, the lone outpost of British modernism in the '50s, and offer an intriguing glimpse into an emerging and vivid new doctrine. As British jazz emerged from the swing and dance band era a fresh generation of players began finding an identity out of American trends, and Feldman, then in his early 20s, was clearly one of the sharpest talents. He's heard mostly on vibes, sometimes at the piano and occasionally on drums. On quartet sessions where Feldman plays vibes, there are inevitable echoes of American models – 'You Are Too Beautiful' from In London Volume 1 could be a vintage MJQ standard reading – yet the players have their own things to say, especially in originals such as Crombie's 'The Toff' and 'Time Will Tell'. Departure Dates features a septet of two trumpets, alto, vibes and rhythm and is as tonally surprising as the line-up suggests, while there's also an extraordinary big-band session which ransacks every kind of arranging style. The second In London is again split between big band, sextet and quintet, with effective cameos from the likes of Reece, Hayes, Scott and Deuchar. If it's Feldman's vibes you most want to hear, the earlier In London is the one to have, dedicated mainly to quartet music, though Dizzy Reece arrives for the leisurely original 'Wilbert's Tune', and there are two rowdy charts for a nonet. While there are some secondhand touches, it's striking how smart much of this music still sounds, with near-forgotten figures such as Pollard, Shannon and Humble also registering strongly. Remastering is generally so-so, and the packaging is low budget.

(*) With Mallets A Fore Thought VSOP 13 Feldman; Frank Rosolino (tb); Harold Land (ts); Carl Perkins (p); Leroy Vinnegar (b); Stan Levey (d). 9/57.

* The Arrival Of Victor Feldman Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 268 Feldman; Scott LaFaro (b); Stan Levey (d). 1/58.

Mallets (as bad a pun as you get) is reissued from a long-gone Interlude LP. Feldman concentrates on vibes, and the mesh with pianist Perkins, possessor of that famous crablike technique, is very good indeed. Rosolino and Land are featured on only half the tracks, but they bring to the session a breezy bounce that is engaging and endlessly refreshing. As always, Vinnegar and Levey generate a brisk, propulsive context for the band.

Arrival is a marvellous record, completed just after Victor had settled in Los Angeles. LaFaro's role in extending the vocabulary of the piano trio is well documented in his association with Bill Evans but, given how tragically foreshortened his career was, it's surprising that these sides haven't received more attention. As ever, the young bassist is firm-toned, melodic and endlessly inventive, and the interplay with the piano is stunning: long, highly wrought lines round a basic bop figuration. Levey's accents are quietly insistent and the whole recording seems to have been mic'ed very close, as was the practice at the time. 'Serpent's Tooth', 'Satin Doll' and 'There Is No Greater Love' are the outstanding tracks. This should certainly be in the collection of anyone interested in the evolution of the piano trio in jazz.

Also, in brief:

 Latinsville Contemporary 9005. 3–5/59.
Effortfully swinging and, despite a large and varied cast (Scott LaFaro (b) features on the bonus tracks), by no means an essential buy.

 Merry Olde Soul Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 402. 60, 61.
Altogether more predictable than Arrival (see above), perhaps an indication of the toll exacted by Feldman's time as an in-demand session-player.

 His Own Sweet Way Ronnie Scott's Jazz House JHAS 605. 2/65.
Caught live at Ronnie Scott's 'old place', this was a happy homecoming for the exiled Feldman, a trio residency with real warmth and class. Feldman plays piano on all but three tracks, and the only pity is that there isn't rather more of his glittering vibraphone-playing.

(*) Rio Nights Hindsight 615. 12/77–5/87?
Rounding up material from the later years (we rather doubt the dating of the John Patitucci (b)/Trevor Feldman (d) cuts, which probably come from 1983), this usefully restores the rather good In The Pocket. Otherwise, very patchy.

 To Chopin With Love Hindsight 610. 5/83.
Trio versions of the great composer with John Patitucci (b) and son Trevor Feldman (d). Pleasant, rather than inspiring.

Simon H. Fell (born 1959)

BASS, KEYBOARDS, ELECTRONICS

The work proposes a mature and fully thought-out synthesis of improvisation and often large-scale composition.

* Composition No. 12.5 Bruce's Fingers BF 26 Fell; Alan Leggett (t); Martin Jones (flhn); Tim Brooks (tb); Charles Wharf (cl, ss, bcl); Alan Wilkinson (as, bs); Pete Minns (ts); Bruce Godfrey (vn); Helen Godfrey (clo); Paul Hession (d). 2–7/90.
This was a minor legend in its vinyl format: here it comes with extra sections from a subsequent cassette release, an amended finale and retrospective notes from Fell. Recorded in Royston, it features a remarkable ensemble who seem utterly committed to Fell's dramatic forms: the playing is superb. Some of it already has a kind of period charm, such as the phoney piano and squiggly electronics, but the music is as fresh and intense as on its first release. Combining free playing, jazz improvisation, densely structured composition and studio manipulation (such as the drum solo accompanied by reverse-electronics), the agenda sounds intimidating, yet the results are enough to sweep any open-eared listener along. Fell has gone on to yet more powerful things, but the bite and energy of this music are still phenomenal; sad that several of these players have since dropped from sight.

(*) Bogey's / * Foom! Foom! Bruce's Fingers BF 31 / BF 5
Fell; Alan Wilkinson (ss, as, bs); Paul Hession (d). 6/91; 2/92.
The best precedent for this music is the old Brötzmann trio with van Hove and Bennink: exploding, tumultuous, improvised sound. There is little point in cold analysis of Wilkinson's saxophones (primarily baritone) as they roar over the top of bass and drums, or the amazing internal dialogues which the trio manage to create even as they break the sound barrier. This was a welcome, cold-shower experience at a time when acoustic free jazz had dropped many of its confrontational aspects: these men revivify the intensities of Ayler, Brötzmann and others in the small but noble tradition of great noise. A CD is a poor substitute for a live performance, but Foom! Foom! (six pieces, from the lengthy 'Ballad Of Otis Twelvepersons' to the almost snapshot-like 'The Alphabet Poised Like Twenty-Six Frozen Ducklings') is a fine place to start. Bogey's is a revival of a 1991 set at the Huddersfield club celebrated in the title: sound is again less than ideal, but anything the group was doing in this period is worth keeping.

(*) Frankenstein Bruce's Fingers BF 25 Fell; Charles Wharf (ss, ts, cl, bcl, ky). 3/92–10/96.
If there's one thing Fell enjoys, it's density. This is a long-standing duo and their music is a great boiling soup of sound, treated and mistreated either in real time or by the studio. Fell also takes to keyboards and electronics for these eight multi-part pieces, recorded over six sessions across four years. A flowchart usefully explains how the music was put together, although a basic grasp of atomic physics may be of some use in deciphering it. Bach and 'Here's That Rainy Day' put in guest appearances and there are several versions of Fell's underground hit, 'Crammed With Distressing Brain'. It is also, en passant, a concept album based around James Whale's Frankenstein.

* Composition No. 30: Compilation III Bruce's Fingers BF 27 2CD
Fell; Gary Farr, Tom Rees-Roberts, Joanne Baker (t); Paul Wright, Carol Jarvis, Matthew Harrison (tb); David Tollington, Tim Page (frhn); Becky Smith (cl); John Butcher (ss, ts); Carl Raven (ss, cl); Simon Willescroft (as); Hayley Cornick (as, f); Mick Beck, Katy Hird (ts); Jo Luckhurst (bs, bcl); Alan Wilkinson (bs); Nikki Dyer (f, picc); Charles Wharf (cbcl); Sam Koczy (ob); Jeremy Webster (bsn); Jon Halton (contrabass bsn); James Cuthill (p); Fardijah Freedman (hpd); Orphy Robinson (vib); Thanea Stevens (dulcichord); Justin Quinn, Stefan Jaworzyn, Colin Medlock, Damien Bowskill, Andrew Stewart (g); Mark Wastell, Matthew Wilkes, Kate Hurst (clo); Rhodri Davies (hp); John Preston (b); Paul Hession, Mark Sanders (d). 1–4/98.
'As a piece based almost entirely on the principles of total serialisation, Compilation III has an unnecessarily complex, ornate and mathematical basis to every aspect of its existence' – this composer pulls no punches. For further enlightenment, ask for a copy of Fell's 136-page score. Recorded at numerous sessions involving the RNCM Big Band, the Anglia X Ensemble and sundry (and many familiar) improvisers, the result is a mighty two-disc work which, despite its rigorous structural undertow, nevertheless seems like a phantasmagoric improvisation from end to end, where the performers arrive and depart in predestined but spontaneous ways. Many of the 'constructs' which exist within the piece are clearly organized to the last letter, but only if you want to hear them that way. We prefer to hear it as the lifetime masterpiece by a major contemporary musician – except, of course, Fell is hopefully going to be delivering much more music to us yet.

(*) Ghost Notes Bruce's Fingers BF 28 Fell; Rhodri Davies (hp); Mark Wastell (clo). 11/97–9/98.
Fell's mistrust of 'tasteful' improvising ensures straight away that a meeting of cello, harp and bass isn't going to get itself hung up in pretty, tinkling textures. It's all rough-and-tumble, scrubbing and scraping – which doesn't mean that there aren't moments of space, delicacy and quiet. Recorded on three different occasions, it is not, in fact, an entirely free record: seven of the 11 pieces start from a composition, by Phil Durrant and Guto Pryderi Puw, as well as Fell and Wastell, and for those interested enough to follow the detailed notes, this might as well be a small masterclass in the art of bridging the fabled improv–composing gap, or just a fine trio playing for its life.

 Kaleidozyklen Bruce's Fingers BF 46 Fell; Rachel Cocks (cl); Paul Kosciecha (d); LSTwo Ensemble. 11/00.
Another monster undertaking from Fell, which attempts to create 'a 'classical' music realized with the sensibility, techniques and flexibility associated with experimental jazz and improvisation'. The five-part composition stretches across 70-odd minutes, but for once in Fell's oeuvre the music is often more interesting to read about – via his usual engrossing sleeve-note commentary – than listen to: the classical overpowers the jazz elements for much of the way, and with a sometimes cloudy recording the necessary details are often obscured. Even the closing 'Intensity' never seems quite as intense as it should be. That said, there is still plenty to mull over in what's been set down here – it's just not the first place to make Fell's acquaintance.

Simon's newest adventure is chronicled on Composition No. 62 (Bruce's Fingers BF 57), his latest 'quasi-concerto for clarinet(s), improvisers, jazz ensemble, chamber orchestra and electronics', recorded over a period of three years and involving 57 musicians. If you have the Fell habit, you must have it. But grading it is beyond us.

 Thirteen Rectangles / (*) Four Compositions Bruce's Fingers BF 43 / Red Toucan 9326 Fell; Gail Brand (tb); Guy Llewellyn (frhn on Four only); Alex Ward (cl); Alex Maguire (p); Steve Noble (d); Mark Sanders (d, elec on Four only). 4/01, 3/03, 1/04.

SFQ is a collaborative group of seasoned improvisers, hence the rather anonymous designation, but devoted largely to Fell compositions for smaller ensemble. The first record is magnificent, a series of fourteen improvisations based on relatively straightforward procedures determined by the composer. The blend of voices is wonderful, mostly quite low-toned and unabrasive, with Brand, Maguire and the superb Noble all in fine form. The other set consists of three long quintet compositions recorded in London, coupled with a group of smaller and presumably improvised quartet pieces taped in Liverpool the following spring. The smaller group actually has the larger sound, since Sanders's electronics expand what's already a hefty arsenal and Llewellyn produces some very interesting overtones.

Also, in brief:

 Music For 10(0) Leo Lab 013. 11/93.

Celebrating a decade of achievement at the Termite Club with a symphony for ten improvisers and one poet: poet? Ben Watson is of the loudhailer variety.

 Registered Firm Incus CD33. 6/96.

Joe Morris (g) walks into the lion's den of Leeds hangout The Blizzard Condition with eyes open and plectrum at the ready. An amiable quartet blow, even if the guitarist prefers to kibitz from the sidelines.

 9 Points In Ascent Bruce's Fingers BF 24. 7/97.

Fifty-two minutes of awkward, squally improvising by Fell and Graham Halliwell (as). Anti-virtuosic and unrelieved.

Eric Felten

TROMBONE, VOICE

Post-bop trombonist who's more recently turned to singing.

(*) T-Bop Soul Note 121196 2 Felten; Jimmy Knepper (tb); Joshua Redman (ts); Jonny King (p); Paul LaDuca, Paul Henry (b); Jorge Rossy (d). 4/91.

 Gratitude Soul Note 121296 Felten; Randy Brecker (t); Joe Lovano (ts); Bob Mintzer (bcl); Jonny Kong (p); Ira Coleman, Paul Henry (b); Billy Drummond (d). 3–7/94.

Felten's solos are notably spare and unfussy and if he lacks his senior partner's glorious facility, he has other virtues on which to trade: strength, evenness and very exact pitching. It's clear from the opening track (on which Knepper quite properly leads off) that they're working in a very different vein from Jay and Kai, weaving together subtly voiced lines rather than alternating harmonized unisons and cutting-session chases. When they solo on the same track, as on 'T-Bop' and 'Ontology', there's not much between them technically, but it's perfectly clear who has the greater poise and experience. Felten has a couple of tracks to himself, with just the bass for company on 'Love Muffin' (one of a number of nice originals) and 'Guess I'll Hang My Tears Out To Dry'.

Some hints there, perhaps, as to what direction Felten might be taking a few years later. The second album also has an astonishing cast. Brecker and Lovano were much more established artists than Harvard-mate Josh Redman had been, and Felten challenges them with some brisk, taxing compositions. His writing, though, and his own playing sound more inside and swing-based this time. The opening 'Jeep's Blues', arranged by Brent Wallarab, is terrific and guarantees an attentive listen to what follows. Of the originals, 'Pretty Lies' and the reprised title-track are the standouts, but 'The King In Yellow' is packed with interest and there's a nice take on 'I Fall In Love Too Easily'.

(*) Meets the Dek-Tette V.S.O.P. #113 Felten; Bob Findley (t); Bob Enevoldsen (vtb); Rick Todd (frhn); Les Benedict (tba); Herb Geller (as); Med Flory (ts); Tom Peterson (bs); Chuck Berghofer (b); Gregg Field (d). 9/03.

Brave to the point of foolhardiness to tackle repertoire associated with the peerless Mel Tormé and the arrangements devised for the Fog by Marty Paich. Felten, who sounds substantially more confident in his vocals this time, wisely avoids any sort of pastiche. This is 'in the spirit' rather than a re-creation, and all the better for it. The arrangements were made by Brent Wallarab and Scott Silbert and they have enough novelty to maintain a healthy distance from invidious comparison. Felten's one spot of hubris is in signing up the Dek-Tette to back him. Bill Perkins died of cancer shortly before the session, but the other great names are there and sounding as crisp and confident as ever. Jack Sheldon takes a lion's share of solos, but Herb Geller, who had travelled from Germany for the session, is inspirational on 'Gone With The Wind' and that old Felten favourite 'Guess I'll Hang My Tears Out To Dry'. Eric himself takes a couple of instrumental spots and once again leaves you listening up for more.

Also, in brief:

 Nowhere Without You BSD Records ABW9859. 03.

No surprise given his family history to hear him turn back from post-bop to swing; more so to find him subordinate trombone-playing to singing.

Alan Ferber (born 1975)

TROMBONE

Raised in the Bay Area, he's the brother of the highly regarded Mark Ferber but is now making a splash of his own.

(*) Scenes From An Exit Row Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 224 Ferber; David Smith (t); Will Vinson (ss, as); John Ellis (ts); Douglas Yates (bcl); Bryn Roberts (p); Bruce Saunders (g); Alexis Cuadrado (b); Mark Ferber (d); Akiko Pavolka (v). 8/04.

* The Compass Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 284 As above, except omit Pavolka; add Pete Rende (syn). 7/06.

Not to be confused with Alon Farber, who's also found a niche on Jordi Pujol's showcase label, Ferber has moved on at an impressive clip since moving to New York. His nonet project is the repository for an impressive range of ideas and styles, though what's exciting about Scenes From An Exit Row is how comfortably it wears its eclecticism. The title-track is a hard-edged thing that flirts with freedom, while 'Jigsaw' funks unblushingly and 'Long Lost' jerks tears without shame. There is room, too, for a couple of imaginative covers: Kenny Wheeler's 'Kayak' can rarely have sounded so effortlessly swinging (Pavolka only appears here and on the title-cut), and there's a nice revival of Gigi Gryce's once-popular 'Reunion', which introduces some fascinating harmonic concepts. It's very much Ferber's group, but they're a phenomenal young unit and destined to go places.

Ferber has had a regular date at Small's since the debut record and the experience has matured both the writing and the band by the time of the second album. The title-track alone would be enough to convince a sceptic of his quality, but a version of Ben Monder's delightful 'Luteous Pangolin' and the long 'Angel's Landing', another Ferber original, make this one of the most exciting projects by a mid-size ensemble around at the moment. Not to be missed.

Maynard Ferguson (1928–2006)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN, VALVE TROMBONE, BARITONE HORN, BANDLEADER

Born in Verdun, Canada. An alumnus of the Boyd Raeburn and Charlie Barnet bands, he combined a fiery tone and fast articulation with a structure influenced by Count Basie and Stan Kenton.

(*) Jazz Masters 52: Maynard Ferguson Verve 529905-2 Large collective personnel, including most listed below. 12/51–8/57.

 Hollywood Jam Sessions Fresh Sound FSRCD 383 Ferguson; Milt Bernhart (tb); Herb Geller, Bud Shank (as); Bob Cooper (ts); Bob Gordon (bs); Russ Freeman, Claude Williamson (p); Curtis Counce, John Simmons (b); Shelly Manne, Max Roach (d). 2/54.

 Plays Bill Holman's Arrangements: I Have But Two Horns Fresh Sound FSRCD 2209 Ferguson; Conte Candoli, Buddy Childers, Ray Linn (t); Milt Bernhart, Bob Burgess (tb); Herb Geller (as); Georgie Auld, Bill Holman, Nino Tempo (ts); Bob Gordon, Bud Shank (bs); Ian Bernard, Lorraine Geller (p); Max Bennett, Ray Brown, Red Callender, Buddy Clark, Red Mitchell (b); Sid Bulkin, Gary Frommer, Shelly Manne, Alvin Stoller (d). 4/55–5/56.

 The Birdland Dream Band RCA Bluebird 6455 Ferguson; personnel includes Jimmy Cleveland (tb); Herb Geller (as); Al Cohn (ts); others as above. 9–12/56.

 Live At Peacock Lane, Hollywood Fresh Sound FSRCD 1016 Ferguson; Joe Burnett, Ed Leddy, Tom Slaney (t); Bob Burgess, Bob Fitzpatrick (tb); Herb Geller (as); Richie Kamuca, Nino Tempo (ts); Willie Maiden (bs); Paul Moer (p); Red Kelly (b); Mel Lewis (d). 1/56.

 Boy With Lots Of Brass Fresh Sound FSRCD 462 Ferguson; John Bello, Joe Burnett, Tom Slaney (t); Bob Burgess, Jimmy Cleveland (tb); Anthony Ortega (as); Jimmy Ford (as, ts); Willie Maiden (ts); Tate Houston (bs); Bobby Timmons (p); Richard Evans (b); Larry Bunker (d); Irene Kral (v). 7/57.

There are few sights more impressive in animal physiology than the muscles in Maynard Ferguson's upper thorax straining for a top C or beyond. Unfortunately, on record there are no such distractions; putting a Ferguson disc on the turntable evokes sensations ranging from walking into a high wind to being run down by a truck. The Verve compilation fills in what until recently had been a missing part of the story, the early stuff for Emarcy on Dimensions, Round The Horn and Boy With Lots Of Brass. The earliest item of all is actually from a Ben Webster session arranged by Benny Carter, in whose august company Ferguson sounds a touch too brassy and brash. There is also a track, 'Can't We Talk It Over?', from a Mercury album by arranger Pete Rugolo. The rest, though, is pure double-smelted Ferguson.

The Hollywood sessions were recorded over two days, an opportunistic on-the-fly date that gave big-band players a rare chance to stretch out. The material is pretty familiar – 'Love Is Here To Stay', 'Somebody Loves Me', a basic blues or two – and nobody attempts anything too revolutionary. Nice to hear someone like Bernhart catch a moment in the spotlight; Maynard plays some valve trombone on the first date. Geller was in for the second date with a different rhythm section and shows his class on 'Air Conditioned'. Nice stuff and a useful pointer forward.

The material on I Have But Two Horns is split between earlier octet sessions and later big-band dates. Holman's arrangements are always nicely voiced and sit beautifully for the brass. What's interesting here is Ferguson's evident interest in a sound that doesn't just rely on launch-pad arrangements but has an organic coherence. Holman, who always arranges idiomatically and without pretension, delivers crisp, intelligent charts.

The Birdland Dream Band's material is exciting, with some fine solos from Cleveland and Geller in particular. Ferguson was juggling business and playing responsibilities at this time and occasionally the strain seems to show. Yet with fantastic arrangements from some of the best in the business (including Jimmy Giuffre, Marty Paich, Bob Brookmeyer and Bill Holman) he could hardly go wrong.

The material on Fresh Sound gives a reliable account of what the MF Orchestra sounded like at its peak: brash, brazen, curiously likeable even when it is slapping the listener jovially round the mouth. There is as little point commenting analytically on these tracks – say, for example, 'Stand Up And Preach' – as analysing a thunderstorm: it's just there, and you have to deal with it. What may be slower to register is the sheer grace and elegance of some of the leader's gentler features, like 'My Funny Valentine'.

It's also on Boy With Lots Of Brass, a nice illustration of Ferguson's view that if you have x guys in a band you want to hear and identify x voices, not just the leader plus undifferentiated ensembles. It's a thoroughly professional operation, and while Maynard does steal most numbers, the use of individual breaks and features is more effective with this size of ensemble than with a larger group.

 A Message From Birdland Angel 97447 Ferguson; Don Ellis, Jerry Tyree (t); Slide Hampton, Don Sebesky (tb); Carmen Leggio, Willie Maiden (ts); Joe Zawinul (p); Jimmy Rowser (b); Frankie Dunlop (d). 6/59.

This is an intriguing rediscovery, with charts by Benny Golson (his own 'Starfire' and 'Nightlife'), Slide Hampton ('The Mark Of Jazz'), Sebesky ('Sea Isle Stomp', one of five bonus tracks) and even saxophonist Maiden, who gets in the short 'Back In The Satellite Again', though his 'Three More Foxes' is also a bonus cut. The band's equally interesting, with Ellis and Zawinul in the personnel. It fills out another corner of the story.

 MF Horn 2 / The Ballad Style Dutton Vocalion CDSML 8421 Ferguson; Derek Wadsworth (tb); Pete King (as); Pete Jackson (p); Dave Lynane (b); Randy Jones (d); Keith Mansfield Orchestra. 69, 74.

Keith Mansfield was arranging for Ferguson while he was under contract to CBS in the UK, but there are a few charts on MF Horn 2 by Kenny Wheeler, which despite their shared nationality seems an unlikely juxtaposition. It's mostly pop material, though Wheeler provides a theme of his own, 'Free Wheeler', and Kenny also takes a hand in setting 'The Summer Knows' for the small group. The ballad record is mostly schmaltz, but the leader rises over a rather undifferentiated orchestra. Terrific sound, as you'd expect from this marque. A lot of other stuff from this period is around on labels like Wounded Bird. We noted them last time, mostly with a sniff of disdain. They can still be found, though when you can get sound like this, why bother?

 MF Horn 3 / MF Horn 4 & 5: Live At Jimmy's Dutton Vocalion CDSML 8429 2CD Ferguson; Lin Biviano, Danny Cahn, John De Flon, Bob Summers, Alan Downey, Mike Davis, Tony Mabett, Terry Noonan (t, flhn); Billy Graham, Adrian Drover, Randy Purcell, Graham Ellis, Geoff Wright (tb); Andy Mackintosh (ss, as, f); Tony Buchanan (ts); Ferdinand Povel (ts, f); Bruce Johnstone (bs, f); Pete Jackson (p); Dave Markee, Rick Petrone (b); Randy Jones (d); Vimu Mukunda (veema); Ray Cooper (perc). 74.

These aren't unrelievedly barren sets. The bands are utterly professional, Ferguson is hitting all the high notes on his horns and 'superbone' and there's a reasonable blend of material, including an unexpected 'Round About Midnight' on MF3. As you'd expect, the real emphasis on these remasterings from the CBS UK originals is on sound quality. It comes out of the speakers in an almost physical way.

 Conquistador Columbia 34457 Ferguson; James Bossy, Randy Brecker, Jon Faddis, Bernie Glow, Stan Mark, Irvin Markowitz, Dennis Noday, Alan Rubin, Marvin Stamm, Ron Tooley (t); Wayne Andre, Roger Homefield, Julian Priester, Randy Purcell, David Taylor (tb); Donald Corrado, Brooks Tillotson (frhn); Mark Colby (ss, as, ts); Mike Migliore (ss, as); George Young (as); Joe Farrell (ts); Bobby Militello (bs, f); Bob James (p, ky); Kenny Ascher, Biff Hannon (ky); George Benson, Eric Gale, Jeff Layton, Lance Quinn (g); Gordon Johnson, Gary King, Will Lee (b); Peter Erskine, Phil Kraus, Harvey Mason Sr, Alan Schwatzberg (d); Ralph MacDonald (perc); Patti Austin, Richard Berg, Ellen Bernfield, Ernie Bernfield, Vivian Cherry, Lani Groves, Gwen Guthrie, Martin Nelson, Linda November (v); strings. 77.

Dominated by the themes from Rocky and from Star Trek, this is an easy album to overlook, but it was a second turning-point in the trumpeter's career, propelling him into new prominence. The bands he put together in those days were a notable mix of brilliant instrumentalists and poppy session-men. The vocal component on 'Mister Mellow' is likely to prompt second thoughts from anyone who was captured by the sheer bravura of 'Gonna Fly Now', Bill Conti's theme-song for Rocky, but there is enough strong playing right across the board to win over the most sceptical listener. A typically over-egged production dates the sound, but Conquistador was a strong indication of how determined Maynard was to win new audiences and to keep the mettle of his playing well up to the mark. His playing would get stronger still in the following decade, but as a band record this one is still hard to beat.

 These Cats Can Swing Concord CCD 4669 Ferguson; Carl Fischer, Jon Owens, Joey Tartell (t); Tom Garling (tb); Chip McNeill (ss, ts); Matt Wallace (ss, ts); Ron Oswanski (p, org, ky); Chris Berger (b); Jason Harnell (d); Lorenzo Martinez, Sandea (perc). 94.

 One More Trip To Birdland Concord CCD 4729 Ferguson; Scott Englebright, Carl Fischer, Larry Foyen (t); Tom Garling (tb, g); Christopher Farr (ss, as, ts); Matt Wallace (as, ts, v); Dan Zank (p, ky); Paul Palombi (b); Marko Marcinko (d, perc). 6/96.

Pumped up and fiery, Maynard puts together latter-day bebop, much of it composed by the resourceful Tom Garling and by arrangers Denis DiBlasio and Alan Baylock with a more measured and harmonically subtle approach. As a live outfit Big Bop Nouveau were one of the most exciting around in the mid-'90s and though some of it can be dismissed as mere excitement, overheated and overloud, there is more lyricism on These Cats than on earlier projects. 'Caravan' is wonderful, and so too is the long 'Sweet Baba Suite (Bai Rav)' (Indian music always intrigued Maynard), which underlines how good MF can be when he stretches out over a long line rather than shorter bebop phrases. Here and on One More Trip the weight of the arrangements still falls on the trumpets, but Matt Wallace more than holds his own on alto and sounds like a find. A cover of Joe Zawinul's 'Birdland' manages to avoid most of the hackneyed mannerisms.

 MF Horn 6: Live At Ronnie's BCD 011629 Ferguson; Peter Ferguson, Ernie Hammes, Patrick Hession (t); Reggie Watkins (tb); Julio Montgomery (as); Matt Parker (ts); Denis DiBlasio (bs); Jeff Lashway (p). 8/05.

This must have been the last visit to Britain before Maynard's death. A new generation is coming through in the band, but the set has reverted nicely to familiar form, with 'Blue Birdland' framing a decent roster of standards as well as an overlong medley of MF hits. Decent sound, but not a priority for anyone but collectors.

Also, in brief:

 Dancing Sessions Jazzbeat 514. 2–10/59, 10/60.

The whole of Plays Jazz For Dancing and Let's Face The Music And Dance.

 The New Sounds Of Maynard Ferguson And His Orchestra Fresh Sound FSRCD 2010. 64.

A smaller, subtler and more coherently inflected Ferguson outfit than many before or since, benefiting from arrangements by Don Sebesky, Oliver Nelson, Bill Holman and others, and sticking to shorter durations.

(*) Sextet 1967 / * Orchestra 1967 Just a Memory 9503/9504. 5/67.

In Canada for the Expo and working with pick-up musicians. The small-group players sound slightly uncomfortable with the trumpeter's full-on approach but the big-band members are well-schooled and it's an effective set of mostly standards.

(*) Chameleon Columbia Legacy 46112. 4/74.

An odd mix of jazz classics and pop tunes, and one of MF's less successful bids for crossover appeal with versions of Herbie Hancock's 'Chameleon' and Chick Corea's 'Fiesta' alongside Wings and Stevie Wonder. Don't let anyone tell you Teo Macero never produced a dud record.

 This Is Jazz: Volume 16 Columbia CK 649790. N.D.

Very much a chart-dominated compilation, with 'Birdland', 'Gonna Fly Now' and, of course, 'MacArthur Park' taking up most of the space.

 Live From San Francisco Rhino 71704. 8/83.
Recorded at the Great American Music Hall and centred on the allusive and cleverly structured 'Bebop Buffet'. Interesting to see Hugh Ragin (t), usually an avant-gardist, in the personnel.

(*) Body And Soul The Jazz Alliance 10027. 1/86.
Sauced with cheesy electronics and lethally overproduced by Jim Exon and Chad Wackerman, this is far from vintage Ferguson though the high-note work is as impressive as ever.

 Brass Attitude Concord CCD 4848. 10/98.
More restrained and lyrical than in years gone by, MF is still capable of risky high-wire acrobatics and the odd touch of experimentalism, as on the Indian 'Misra-Dhenuka'.

Agustí Fernández

PIANO

Born on Majorca, he studied in Barcelona, France and Germany, making a special study of Xenakis and Cecil Taylor.

(*) One Night At The Joan Miró Foundation Disconforme 55301 Fernández; William Parker (b); Susie Ibarra (d). 98.
 2nd Set Radical Records MPE047 As above, except omit Ibarra. 11/00.
One tends to think somehow of architecture when listening to Fernández's music: his interest in Xenakis certainly a factor, but also its intrinsic solidity and internal space, secret corners and subtle mix of function and beauty. The gig at the Fundació Joan Miró – architect: Josep Lluís Sert – has all of those qualities. Parker brings a lot of his physicality and, as so often, it's Ibarra who seems to be running in the corridors, bringing a noisy and sometimes disruptive edge. Compare the duo with the bassist, where Parker's philosophical calm has nothing to fight against. It's an altogether stronger record.

(*) Critical Mass Psi 05.06 Fernández; Mats Gustafsson (ts, bs). 6/04.
Gustafsson's boiling approach and percussive attack might not sound the ideal complement, but this is a glorious encounter. Fernández gets inside his piano, much as the Swede uses every means to make his horn sound different to the norm. Some of the tracks have a so what-ish pay-off, but for the most part it's an estimably strong set.

 Sea Of Lead Hopscotch 17 Fernández; Peter Kowald (b). 6/00.
 Barcelona Hopscotch 10 Fernández; Derek Bailey (g). 11/01.
These are to be treasured as encounters with great European improvisers who have since passed on. The session with Kowald is inevitably the more intense, but lead hardly seems the appropriate metal: something lighter and more anomalous like antimony might make better sense. The duets with Bailey are all light and movement. The guitarist was living in Barcelona at the time – 'Just what Spain needs, another *ing guitarist' – and there's an ease to his playing that would disappear as illness later took hold. A nice remembrance.

(*) Aurora Maya MCD 0601 Fernández; Barry Guy (b); Ramón López (d, perc). 11/04–3/06.
This documents a relationship of some standing and, without risking the bathos of 'development', it's clear that they have learned a lot about one another. Guy's a master at such things and, given this is on his own label, he's entitled to equal prominence with the pianist, who plays some wonderfully luminous stuff. López can be a cuss, but he's tremendous here and each track is nicely proportioned, so that his slow pulses have an almost narrative coherence.

* Topos Maya MCD 0701 Fernández; Evan Parker (ss, ts); Barry Guy (b); Paul Lytton (d). 06.
One of us wrote the liner-note for this one, but let's just say that if the rating offered above seems suspiciously generous, it matches up exactly to the initial impression that led us to provide that imprimatur. It's a wonderful record, richly nuanced and so endlessly inventive that return visits are always rewarding. Again, Fernández seems to be exploring ideal or utopic spaces, but he has fellow travellers, and they bring their own agenda. Our fuller thoughts are on the CD.

Bobby Few (born 1935)

PIANO

A childhood friend of Albert Ayler in Cleveland, he emigrated to Paris at the end of the '60s and formed Center Of The World; later closely associated with Steve Lacy.

 Continental Jazz Express Boxholder BXH 026 Few (p solo). 5/00.
 Few And Far Between Boxholder BXH 029 Few; Avram Fefer (ts); Wilber Morris (b). 6/00.
Few's an eclectic. Like Dave Burrell, he incorporates elements of stride, boogie-woogie, some seemingly classical flourishes and free jazz. At its best, it is exhilarating; at its occasional worst, merely confusing. The solo record tries to boil down the history of jazz piano into a single performance; played continuously, it leaves the listener slightly giddy. The trio package is reminiscent of Few's debut More Or Less, recorded in 1973 with fellow Center Of The World members Alan Silva and Muhammad Ali, but this one simply puts quirkiness in place of genuine radicalism. 'Continental Jazz Express' is again the main theme, but the set is distinguished by a remarkable version of 'Nostalgia In Times Square'.

(*) Lights And Shadows Boxholder BXH 054 Few (p solo). 07.
Steve Lacy's classic 'Flakes' is the second track on this pungent, lively recital which is marked by the same polystylistic flare you expect from Dave Burrell. 'Bells' has nothing to do with Albert other than by association and all the other pieces are Few's. He plays marches, rags, stride, rustle-of-spring classical figures and flat-out atonality, but it all coheres and the long title-piece is masterful in scope and control.

Also, in brief:

 Live In New York Boxholder BXH 026. 02.
The label has been good to Bobby. This isn't one of the best showings, though.

 Kindred Spirits / (*) Heavenly Places Boxholder BXH 048 / 049. 03.
Duos with Seattle-born Avram Fefer (ts, cl), who deserves joint billing; reminiscent of David Murray's duets with Dave Burrell; more abstract, though.

Garrison Fewell (born 1953)

GUITAR

American-born swing player, influenced to some degree by Jim Hall and Larry Coryell but also Pat Martino.

 A Blue Deeper Than The Blues Accurate 4700 Fewell; Fred Hersch (p); Cecil McBee (b); Matt Wilson (d). 1/92.
(*) Are You Afraid Of The Dark Accurate 4701 As above, except omit Hersch; add Laszlo Gardony (p). 1/95.
 Reflection Of A Clear Moon Accurate 4702 As above, except omit McBee, Wilson. 8/95.

Fewell made a belated name with the excellent A Blue Deeper Than The Blues, recorded live at Sculler's. A fine line-up pushes him and he responds well, fronting an adventurous programme of two Benny Golson tunes ('Park Avenue Petite', 'Out Of The Past'), Frank Foster's 'Simone' and some originals. There is intelligent interplay between Fewell and Hersch, especially on the Foster tune, and the only real longueurs come on the overlong bossa 'Brazilian Breeze'. Garrison plays electric guitar, but without distortion, and his clean lines are effortlessly melodic. As the applause kicks in on 'Blues Update', one wonders why he isn't better known.

Are You is almost as good, but Hersch is missed. It's a tighter and more schematic sound, though the ballad playing is full of feeling and there are interesting echoes of Fewell's interest in Middle Eastern and Oriental musics. The duo set with Gardony, recorded for Hungarian radio, has slightly odd sound, but some excellent playing.

 Birdland Sessions Koch 8575 Fewell; Steve LaSpina (b); Jeff Williams (d). 5/98.

And again you think: the guy is big in Hungary, so why's he so little known in America? This is a fascinating set, not least for a fine version of Sam Rivers's 'Beatrice'. The trio format suits Fewell as his harmonics become more open and ambiguous. Not many guitarists automatically turn to Hampton Hawes compositions, but Garrison opens the set with 'Sonora' and includes the blues 'Black Forrest'. Fewell's own writing continues to evolve impressively. 'Caffiend' is a finger-buster, 'The Wheel-Turning King' and 'Dance Of The Moroccan Veil' have intriguing exotic elements, while 'Hearing Things' is a fantastically beautiful ballad.

 City Of Dreams Splasc(h) 820 As above, except add Tino Tracanna (ss, ts); George Cables (p). 12/99.
 Red Door Number Eleven Splasc(h) 857 As above, except omit Tracanna. 99.

City Of Dreams feels casually put together, an on-the-fly session done on tour, but the empathy of the trio and the effortless musicianship of both Tracanna and Cables lift it. There's more repertoire material than usual, Coltrane's 'Naima', Waldron's peerless 'Soul Eyes', but also Tina Brooks's 'Theme For Doris'. 'Girl With The Groovy Hips' and 'Waltz For The Lonely One' might also be classic '50s tunes, cool and funky but with considerable harmonic guile and playfulness, the first of the pair at least. The other Splasc(h) consists largely of standards and repertory pieces, and there's more emphasis on chords. 'Lotus Blossom' and 'Johnny Come Lately' are relatively conventional: maybe answering a need for more familiar and commercial material.

(*) The Lady Of Khartoum Creative Nation Music CNM010 Fewell; Eric Hofbauer (g, perc). 4 & 5/06.

Hofbauer is a student of deconstructed Americana, and this extraordinary duo session makes most of Bill Frisell's records seem one-dimensional. The means are relatively simple and generally quiet, with percussion used colouristically. No point trying to separate the two voices. These are men with a common agenda. A Thelonious Monk tune sits rather uneasily in the midst of it all, though there's some fascinating material by John Tchicai. An important reappearance by an underrated musician, though Hofbauer equally deserves wider recognition.

Mongezi Feza (1945–75)

TRUMPET

One of the tragic legends of South African jazz, Mongs was born in Queenstown and came to Britain in 1964 with the other exiled Blue Notes. His high, vocalized sound was a keynote of the late '60s and early '70s. Medical mishandling led to his early death.

() Free Jam 1972 Ayler AYLCD 048/049 2CD Feza; Bernt Rosengren (ts, f, p); Tommy Koverhult (ts); Torbjørn Hultcrantz (b); Leif Wennerstrøm (d); Okay Temiz (perc). 11 & 12/72..

Almost anything that survives of Feza is worth preserving. These lo-fi tapes, though, represent nothing more than an unstructured rehearsal session involving musicians whose common ground is probably more hindrance than help. 'Group Notes' and 'Theme Of The Day' are give-away titles, though at this period Rosengren's group was dabbling in free improvisation on a regular basis. The sound is not so muffled that Mongs's bright, keening sound doesn't come through, but there's more heat than light. The best of him was elsewhere.

Scott Fields

GUITAR

Fields is a veteran of the Chicago free-jazz scene of the '60s who quit in 1975 and returned to active duty from a new base in Madison, Wisconsin, in the '90s.

() 48 Motives Cadence CJR 1064 Fields; Joseph Jarman (as); Marilyn Crispell (p); Matt Turner (clo); John Padden, Hans Sturm (b); Vincent Davis, Geoff Brady (perc); Stephen Dembski (cond). 1/96.
 Disaster At Sea Music & Arts CD-961 Fields; Matt Turner (clo); Vincent Davis (d). 5/96.
 Five Frozen Eggs Music & Arts CD-987 Fields; Marilyn Crispell (p); Hans Sturm (b); Hamid Drake (d). 10/96.
 Sonotropism Music & Arts CD-1007 Fields; Larry Ochs (sno, ts); Marilyn Crispell (p); Matt Turner (clo). 10/96.
(*) Denouement Clean Feed CF088 Fields; Jeff Parker (g); Jason Roebke, Hans Sturm (b); Michael Zerang, Hamid Drake (d). 12/97.

These albums mark the re-emergence of an interesting talent. Each disc has its moments, but they give the impression of a man with a lot to say, trying to get it all out as fast as possible. 48 Motives and Sonotropism both experiment specifically with long-form ideas. The Cadence disc sets the ensemble a structure of 48 eight-bar melodic fragments, subdivided and shared among the ensemble with various rhythmic motives stirred in. The result is a continuous piece lasting almost an hour, the sound ebbing and flowing among the players. Somehow the music sounds far less structured than one expects, often resolving into a kind of drone, and although everyone is clearly giving their all, the piece is troubled by a muzzy sound-mix which badly affects the overall impression. Dembski is cast here in a Butch Morris-like role, and he steps further into the limelight on Sonotropism, which is a 50-minute composition/improvisation which he notated and directed. The feel here is of an exquisite piece of chamber-jazz just sufficiently dirtied to keep it lively. Crispell, who's done so much of this kind of playing with Anthony Braxton, is perfect for the job, and Ochs is equally capable. Three brief improvisations by the quartet fill out the playing-time.

Fields himself is content to be a busy ensemble player on those two, but he is more forward on Disaster At Sea, which he describes as an opera seria based around a seafaring tragedy. The trio hits an extraordinary level of intensity on 'Sputter', which seems like a vivid evocation of panic, and the subsequent pieces carry the story through. Yet there is a sameness about the dynamics which fails to sustain the attention through what is ultimately a rather dry piece of music-making.

Five Frozen Eggs – the sleeve-notes explain the title – strikes something of a balance among the various styles Fields is investigating, loosening the chamberish qualities of some of the pieces without surrendering the rather formal, almost courtly kind of free organization he seems to be interested in. His own playing here eschews much in the way of effects (employed more extensively on Disaster At Sea) and there is a sense of contrapuntalism among the four musicians which makes this record perhaps the best place to sample Fields's music – energetic, occasionally volatile, but fundamentally about form and its effect on content. Best, that is, till Denouement came along. This languished on the shelf for almost a decade before Clean Feed stepped in. It's a variation on the 'double trio' idea, with Scott's regular partners augmented by Roebke and Zerang, each group carefully separated in the stereo. The titles imply a narrative and the contrapuntalism of the playing delivers a storyteller's repertoire of relationships, losses, harmonies and conflicts. It's heady stuff.

* Beckett Clean Feed CF069 Fields; Matthias Schubert (ts); Scott Roller (clo); John Hollenback (perc). 12/05.

Samuel Beckett seems such a dumbly obvious figure for improv situations that it's surprising it isn't done more often. To be honest, this would be interesting music if it were called Pieces 1–5. Fields lets rip with his group here and there but there's plenty of space and reflection as well and the unusual instrumentation (not that unusual any more) doesn't draw attention to itself but serves the music. And just when you think it can't go on, it goes on, and into ever more interesting territory.

Also, in brief:

(*) Mamet Delmark DE-527. 8/00.

A 'concept' album, offering a musical pendant to the playwright's work; slow, dense and effortful, neither enlightening nor involving.

 From The Diary Of Dog Drexel Rossbin 008. 4/02.

Recorded in a strange, hollow ambience, this is a spirited if ill-tempered sequence, with a coda where the ensemble members each played solos which were then doctored by Gregory Taylor's software into a droning, rattling track that sounds somewhat like old musique concrète.

Ken Filiano

DOUBLE BASS, BELLS, ELECTRONICS

A brilliant bass-player and respected educator, he works prominently as a sideman.

(*) Subvenire Nine Winds NECD 0223Q Filiano (b solo). 01/02.

 The Other Side Of This Clean Feed CF058 Filiano; Steve Adams (reeds). 06.

Solo bass performance is a very tough discipline. Until now, Ken Filiano has modestly avoided the spotlight, thereby denying more adventurous listeners a remarkable voice. His bowed playing on the opening 'water down stone' – trendy lower-case and a misspelt album title are our only quibbles – is poetic and effective, but Filiano is more than a water-colourist. There is the same genuine jazz feel to these rather abstract cuts as one finds on his work with producer Vinny Golia (who runs the label) and with Paul Smoker. Another fruitful association is marked by a cover of Bobby Bradford's 'woman', segued with the original 'crucible'. This is the penultimate track to an album that ends on a jazzy high with the lovely 'dancing shadows' and guarantees a return visit.

The duos with ROVA man Adams are demanding but consistently rewarding. There's no opportunity here for finger-painted loveliness, just a terse, sometimes tense dialogue between two highly intelligent players who between them (allowing for Filiano's electronics) call on a rich repertory of sound.

David Finck

DOUBLE BASS

Seasoned pro who's worked with everyone from Rod Stewart to André Previn.

 Future Day Soundbrush SR 1012 Finck; Jeremy Pelt (t); Bob Sheppard (ts); Joe Locke (vib); Tom Ranier (b); Joe LaBarbera (d). 07.

Finck has a huge sound, seduced out of a 1929 John Juzek bass with seemingly effortless command. He's not much featured as a composer on this, just two tunes out of 12, and they're not the ones that stand out, though you can hear that 'New Valley' is very much pitched round the bass. The two horns are only in as guests, so the music's very much built round the quartet. Locke sounds gorgeous, and his runs on 'Nature Boy' are inch-perfect. He also contributes 'Appointment In Orvieto' later. Finck's solo on the Ahbez song is a highlight of the set; what a sound! Ranier sounds a bit rinky-dink in places and the recording's very close-up and bright, though that has the effect of bringing the wonderful LaBarbera to the fore. A couple of unusual tunes in the programme: Bevan Manson's swinger 'Four Flags' (with horns), Roger Davidson's lovely 'Ballad For A Future Day' (Locke again very prominent, motors spinning hypnotically), followed by Wayne Shorter's 'Black Eyes' – hardly your run-of-the-mill repertory gig.

Milo Fine (born 1952)

PIANO, DRUMS, PERCUSSION

Minneapolis-based and thus free from fashionable concerns, Fine runs his own Free Jazz Ensemble (often an SME-like duo with guitarist Steve Gnitka) and writes on music.

* Precision In Inexactitude Lotus Sound 04 Fine; Steve Gnitka (g). 97.

 Surges/Suspensions, Comme Toujours Shihshihwual 7-9 3CD As above, except add John O'Brien (t, flhn); Jason Hale Shapiro (p, syn); Elliott Fine (perc). 98.

 Koi/Klops Emanem 4060 As above, except omit O'Brien, Elliott Fine; add Nathan Smith (b, g, bcl); Scott Newell (ts, v). 12/00–4/01.

Depending on how it initially strikes you, Fine's brand of improvisation can seem like the radical purity of a child's view of the world – obsessive repetition of water drip or farting sounds – or it can seem like an extended tantrum. Fine extends the idiot savant approach to his groups as well and their nursery-like confusion either enchants or enrages, again depending on your initial disposition.

Most of Fine's discography is on LP and on his own Shihshihwuai label. The Lotus Sound CD is the first survivor, a drab fingerpainting session that seems to have been edited randomly, so there isn't any logic to the improvisations in the long as well as short term. One wonders not so much at why Fine continues in this vein – many a neglected genius has stuck to his last through ridicule and oversight – but how he has managed to win round Gnitka to his cause. For part of its history at least, the Ensemble was just the two of them.

The main document here is Surges/Suspensions, Comme Toujours, an exhaustive(ing) three-CD documentation of two nights at Augsburg Hall in Fine's native Minneapolis. There are no track titles, just details of who played on each piece. Most are delivered at length, but some seem arbitrarily edited, which is either a further statement of Fine's mischievous aesthetic, or else a sign that tapes ran out. It scarcely matters. Fascinating as his procedures are, we can't imagine anyone spending the time to listen to these sides, certainly not more than once.

The Emanem set features two different configurations of the group: one a quartet with Smith and Shapiro, the other a trio with Newell, but it's Fine and Gnitka who take the stage alone on the first two improvisations. Milo sticks to his modified drumkit, but at this vintage the group was experimenting with electronics, including Shapiro's confident exploration of synthesizer, and the expanded sound-palette is a refreshing change. Hearing the Ensemble in this context, it's hard not to compare them to Emanem's archived Spontaneous Music Ensemble recordings. The comparison illustrates a split between American and European approaches to free improvisation: the colonials go out of their way to avoid melody, harmony, a groove; the Europeans simply deem them irrelevant and get on with it. Divided, you might say, by a common language.

James Finn (born 1959)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

The Brooklynite is a seasoned player but slow to record under his own name.

() Opening The Gates Cadence CJR 1170 Finn; Dominic Duval (b); Whit Dickey (d). 8–10/03.

 Plaza De Toros Clean Feed CF034 Finn; Dominic Duval (b); Warren Smith (d). 12/03.

() Faith In A Seed CIMP 308 As above. 3/04.

 Great Spirit Not Two MW763 Finn; Deanna Witkowski (p); Leon Lee Dorsey (b); Klaus Kugel (d). 05.

Finn's mature tenor sound is massive, though not always easy on the ear. A workout such as the title-piece of Opening The Gates (originally a demo) is harsh and exhausting in the manner of late-period Coltrane. Dickey has to work hard, since Duval tends to rumble away at the bottom end as if talking to himself. There are some fiercely effective passages, but as a record it's flawed and over-long.

The next two are conceptual, the Clean Feed portraying the rituals of the bullfight, the CIMP 'a musical story about the life of a seed'. Perhaps inevitably, Plaza De Toros calls some of Gato Barbieri's wilder music to mind. Faith In A Seed, despite its supposed framework, is more diffuse. Finn can draw powerful playing out of the horn, but too often his lines end up in shrieking excess, at just the moment where a more considered position would work better. The Polish set on Not Two might be Finn's A Love Supreme. The titles are the words of a blessing, pantheistic in the Trane way, and the instrumentation and playing point in a similar direction. The saxophonist seems at various points to be vocalizing something, perhaps again the words of the text, but the overall impact is huge and undifferentiated, almost uncomfortably compelling.

Firehouse

GROUP

Swedes who add rock sensibility to the mix.

 Live At Glenn Miller Café Ayler AYL055 Magnus Broo (t); Fredrik Ljungkvist (ts); John Lindblom (g); Johan Berthling (b); Kjell Nordeson (d). 04.

Hard to pin down obvious antecedents for this: something of Miles's electric period (though Broo is a fierier player) and a little of Ornette's Prime Time (notably on 'Nothing Too Eccentric'), but mostly it's coaxed along by Lindblom's Sharrock-influenced guitar and angular compositions. 'What I Say' puts in a surprising appearance, red-hot. Firestarters, more like.

Firehouse Five Plus Two

GROUP

An amateur group formed from a bunch of animators at the Disney studios, by trombonist Ward Kimball; they kept it going for two decades.

() The Firehouse Five Plus Two Story Good Time Jazz 2GTJCD 22055 2CD Johnny Lucas, Danny Alguire (t); Ward Kimball (tb); Clark Mallory, Tom Sharpsteen, George Probert (cl); Ed Penner (bs, tba); Frank Thomas (p); Dick Roberts (g, bj); Harper Goff (bj); Jim McDonald, Monte Mountjoy, Jerry Hamm (d). 5/49–3/54.

() Goes South! Good Time Jazz GTJCD 12018 As above, except omit Mallory, Sharpsteen, Hamm. 1/54–10/56.

 16 Dixieland Favorites /  Goes To Sea /  Around The World / (*) At Disneyland /  Goes To A Fire! Good Time Jazz GTJCD 10040 / 102282 / 10044 / 10049 / 10052 As above, except omit Penner, McDonald; add Ralph Burns, George Bruns, Don Kinch (tba, b); Eddie Forrest (d). 9/59–3/60; 2–11/57; 11/57–2/61; 7/62; 4–6/64.

 Twenty Years Later Good Time Jazz GTJCD 10054 As above, except omit Thomas, Roberts; add K. O. Ecklund (p); Bill Newman (uke); George Bruns (tba). 10/69.

 Settin' The World On Fire: The Whole Story – Volume 1 /  Stoking The Fire: ... Volume 2 /  Live At Earthquake McGoon's Jasmine 426 2CD / 460 2CD / GHB 450 As various discs above. 49–59; 70.

It's difficult to offer a serious criticism of what was always a semi-professional band, who habitually appeared in firemen's helmets and often played to self-consciously rowdy audiences. The music seldom varies from record to record or even from track to track: it's Dixieland done with enthusiasm rather than style and it's as formulaic as anything done by British trad. Yet the group earned a certain authenticity over time, through sheer persistence, and Bing Crosby once popped in to give them a lift (which seems an ironic reversal of roles, given those uniforms). The personnel settled down in the later '50s, though, and made some more personal and quite successful records, notably the Dixieland Favorites set and Goes South! Now Jasmine and GHB have rekindled (ha!) interest by releasing compilation and archive material.

The earlier versions of the band play with clockwork momentum and there is a hint of Spike Jones to the music, occasionally underlined by Kimball's use of sirens, duck calls and washboards. The brass-players were reticent about taking solos and it was left mainly to Probert to be the chief improviser: his playing is often sour and he can't sustain solos for very long, but there's an interestingly quirky edge to his best moments and that tends to go for the whole band. The whole thing came to an end in 1969, after 20 years of activity, but the next year the group played a set at Earthquake McGoon's in San Francisco and a tape of that surfaced in 2005. It's not hi-fi and the band hasn't gone modernist or written an impressionistic suite for the occasion, but again it's wild, sometimes tooth-grating good-time jazz, though this time on another label.

Also, in brief:

(*) Plays For Lovers Good Time Jazz GTJCD 12014. 9–12/55.
Lots of songs with 'love' in the title, but perhaps not the most effective way to romance your girl.

(*) Crashes A Party Good Time Jazz GTJCD 10038. 9/58–11/59.
… by knocking the wall down. Great cover art; familiar music.

Fire Of Space

ENSEMBLE

Ambitious unit formed by trumpeter Jordan McLean, associated with the Antibalas Afrobeat Orchestra and to some degree inspired by the Sun Ra Arkestra and a range of ethnic musics.

 Handbasket 482 Music 1043 Jordan McLean (t); Aaron Johnson (tb); Stuart Bogie (cl, c-acl); Leah Paul (af); Michael Herbst (ts, f, ob, eng hn); Michael Perna (bs); Shoko Nagai (ky); Tom Abbs (b); Geoff Mann (perc). 10/06.

If a handbasket is what we're doomed to go to hell in, it should be an interesting ride. This is the kind of project that gives 'ethnic crossover' music a good name. McLean writes impressively, but also includes a traditional Turkish theme – 'Rampi Rampi' – alongside his own 'Quiet', which might have its origins in a raga, and 'Prayers For The Elders'. The distinctive ensemble sound comes as much from McLean's careful layering of voices, which is by no means anarchically free-form, as from the unusual instrumentation, dominated by Nagai's organ and by the use of Bogie's growling contra-alto clarinet (on 'Quiet') and the double-reeds. They certainly enhance the Middle Eastern effect – as do the guest spots from Perna and Paul – but one shouldn't overstate the multiculturalism. This isn't jazz for tourists but formidably well-conceived experimental music for ensemble. There is an earlier FOS disc called Age Of Epoch, but it has eluded us so far.

First House

GROUP

Led by Django Bates, but on a collaborative basis.

 Erendira /  Cantilena ECM 1307 / 1393 Ken Stubbs (ss, as); Django Bates (p, thn); Mick Hutton (b); Martin France (d). 7/85, 3/89.

Returning to these after long absence, one marvels again at the thoughtful energy of Bates's writing, but more by how important the resolutely uncharismatic Stubbs is to the overall sound. The second disc actually stands up better to fresh hearing; the last of Bates's pretentious Loose Tubes nonsense has been leached away, leaving a strong and compelling structure.

Ella Fitzgerald (1917–96)

VOICE

Moved to NY as a child, and after several attempts at singing work won a Harlem talent contest and began working with Chick Webb, from whom she took over. Worked as a soloist in the '40s. Managed by Norman Granz, she became America's favourite jazz singer, and her Verve albums in the mid-'50s established both the label and her eminence as a songbook interpreter. Toured throughout the '60s and '70s, recording latterly for Granz's Pablo; but spells of poor health slowed her down in the '80s and her final years were spent in seclusion.

(*) Ella Fitzgerald /  The Early Years Part 1 ASV AJD 055 2CD / GRP 052618-2 2CD Fitzgerald; Taft Jordan, Mario Bauza, Bobby Stark, Gordon Griffin, Zeke Zarchy, Ziggy Elman (t); Sandy Williams, Nat Story, Claude Jones, Murray McEachern, Red Ballard (tb); Benny Goodman (cl); Teddy McRae, Louis Jordan, Pete Clark, Edgar Sampson, Elmer Williams, Wayman Carver, Garvin Bushell, Chauncey Haughton, Hymie Schertzer, Bill DePew, Arthur Rollini, Vido Musso (reeds); Tommy Fulford, Joe Steele, Jess Stacy (p); John Trueheart, Allan Reuss, Bobby Johnson (g); Beverley Peer, Bill Thomas, Harry Goodman (b); Chick Webb, Gene Krupa (d). 10/35–12/37; 35–37.

(*) Ella Fitzgerald 1935–1937 Classics 500 As above, except add Frankie Newton (t); Benny Morton (tb); Chu Berry (ts); Teddy Wilson (p); Leemie Stanfield (b); Cozy Cole (d). 6/35–1/37.

(*) Ella Fitzgerald 1937–1938 Classics 506 As above, except omit Griffin, Zarchy, Elman, McEachern, Ballard, Goodman, Schertzer, DePew, Rollini, Musso, Stacy, Reuss, Goodman, Newton, Morton, Berry, Wilson, Stanfield and Cole; add George Matthews (tb); Mills Brothers (v). 1/37–5/38.

 Ella Fitzgerald 1938–1939 Classics 518 As above, except add Dick Vance (t); Hilton Jefferson (as). 5/38–2/39.

 Ella Fitzgerald 1939 Classics 525 As above, except omit Mills Brothers; add Bill Beason (d). 2–6/39.

 Ella Fitzgerald 1939–1940 Classics 566 As above, except omit Webb; add Irving Randolph (t); John 'Shorty' Haughton, Jimmy Archey, Floyd Brady, John McConnell (tb); Sam Simmons (ts); Roger 'Ram' Ramirez (p). 8/39–5/40.

 Ella Fitzgerald 1940–1941 Classics 644 Similar to above, except omit Sandy Williams, Ramirez; add John McConnell, Earl Hardy (tb); George Dorsey (as); Elmer Williams (ts); Ulysses Livingston (g); Jesse Price (d). 5/40–7/41.

 The Early Years Part 2 GRP 052623-2 2CD As appropriate discs above. 39–41.

 Live From The Roseland Ballroom New York 1940 Jazz Anthology 550032 Fitzgerald; Dick Vance, Taft Jordan, Bobby Stark (t); George Matthews, Nat Story, Sandy Williams (tb); Garvin Bushell (cl, ss); Hilton Jefferson (as); Wayman Carver (as, ts, f); Teddy McRae (ts, bs); Tommy Fulford (p); John Trueheart (g); Beverley Peer (b); Bill Beason (d). 40.

 A-Tisket, A-Tasket Naxos Jazz Legends 8.120540 As various discs above. 36–41.

(*) It's The Way That You Do It Naxos Jazz Legends 8.120611 As discs above. 36–39.

Fitzgerald's fabled break came when she won an Apollo Theater talent contest in 1934, aged only 17, and by the following year she was singing for Chick Webb's band. When Webb died in 1939, the singer inherited leadership of his band; by this time she was its undoubted star. But her recordings of the period are often hard to take because the material is sometimes insufferably trite. After Ella had a major hit with the nursery-rhyme tune 'A-Tisket, A-Tasket', she was doomed – at least, until the break-up of the band – to seek out similar songs. The Classics CDs offer a chronological survey of her work up to 1941, and while the calibre of her singing is consistent enough – the voice at its freshest, her phrasing straightforward but sincerely dedicated to making the most of the melody – the tracks seem to spell the decline of what was, in the mid-'30s, one of the most swinging of big bands. The arrangements are often blandly supportive of the singer rather than creating any kind of partnership, and when the material is of the standard of 'Swinging On The Reservation' it's difficult to summon up much enthusiasm. Still, there are many minor successes. The 1937–1938 CD includes the session which produced Webb's only 12-inch 78, 'I Want To Be Happy' and 'Halleleujah', arranged by Turk Van Lake, and 'Rock It For Me' and 'Bei Mir Bist Du Schön' look forward to the authority which Fitzgerald would bestow on her later records. The 1939–1940 disc, although it sports 'My Wubba Dolly', has a number of swinging features such as 'After I Say I'm Sorry', 'I'm Not Complainin'' and a fine 'Baby, Won't You Please Come Home?'. Fitzgerald tends to treat all the songs the same – there's little of Billie Holiday's creative approach to the beat – but the lightness of her voice lets her float a lyric without losing her grip on it.

The remastering of all these discs is very mixed. The earlier discs vary almost from track to track, some laden with hiss, some foggy, others crisp. 'A-Tisket A-Tasket', on the 1937–1938 volume, is dreadfully brassy. Only the 1939–1940 set has consistently clear transfers. The ASV two-disc set offers a cross-section from Ella's earliest sessions, but the remastering is bass-heavy and listening isn't much fun. The best bets are the two GRP anthologies, which come in reasonably consistent sound at least. With all this material out of copyright, there are other sets on the market, too: a double-set on Memoria, Savoy Ambassadors, and a single-disc ASV release called Rhythm And Romance. Collectors can choose at their leisure, but we commend the GRP set for completists. We also issue a warning that there are numerous cheap multi-disc sets which mix out-of-copyright studio dates of this period with indifferent broadcast material, often packaged to suggest the Ella of later years. Buyers beware. The Jazz Anthology set captures a 1940 airshot which mixes superior material – 'Royal Garden Blues', 'Sugar Blues' – with tunes of the order of 'Chewin' Gum', but it's not without period charm, though the sound is indifferent.

As with their other Jazz Legends series reissues, Naxos have done a pretty impressive job with their two Ella collections. David Lennick secures a consistency of sound which outdoes some of his competitors, and they have picked some of Ella's best sides from the period and ditched the novelty material.

 Ella Fitzgerald 1941–1944 Classics 840 Fitzgerald; John McGhee (t); Eddie Barefield (as); Teddy McRae (ts); Tommy Fulford, Bill Furness, Bill Doggett (p); Ulysses Livingston, Slim Furness, Bernie Mackey (g); Peck Furness, Beverley Peer, Bob Haggart (b); Bill Beason, Kenny Clarke, Ernie Hatfield, Johnny Blowers (d); Ink Spots (v). 10/41–11/44.

The beginning of Ella's solo career, away from the Chick Webb band. It starts with a lovely version of 'Jim', and the first three sessions have some excellent material, but the 1942 dates with the Four Keys are more novelty-orientated, and two sessions with the Ink Spots are missable. The 1944 tracks see her with an orchestra again. Transfers are from unlisted sources and are good enough.

 Ella Fitzgerald 1945–1947 Classics 998 Fitzgerald; Louis Armstrong (t, v); Charlie Shavers (t); Lou McGarity (tb); Peanuts Hucko (cl); Al Sears (ts); Buddy Weed, Renee Knight, Billy Kyle, Nick Tagg, Eddie Heywood (p); Joe Mooney (acc); Jimmy Shirley, Remo Palmieri, Hy White (g); Trigger Alpert, Junior Raglin, Billy Taylor, Haig Stephens, Lemont Moten (b); Buddy Rich (d, v); George Wettling, Big Sid Catlett, Sylvester Paine, Keg Purnell, Eddie Bourne (d); Ink Spots (v); plus groups led by Randy Brooks, Vic Schoen, Louis Jordan, Bob Haggart. 2/45–3/47.

 Ella Fitzgerald 1947–1948 Classics 1049 Fitzgerald; Idrees Sulieman (t); Illinois Jacquet (ts); Sir Charles Thompson (org); Hank Jones (p); Hy White (g); Ray Brown, John Simmons (b); J. C. Heard (d); plus group led by Bob Haggart. 3/47–11/48.

All but a few of these tracks are from sessions for Decca, the exceptions being a handful of titles on Classics 998 made for V-Disc (including an entertaining dust-up with Buddy Rich on 'Blue Skies'). Ella was still getting very thin material – her exuberant scat showcase on the 1945 'Flying Home' was followed by a ludicrous 'Stone Cold Dead In De Market' with Louis Jordan – but the voice was starting to bloom into its full maturity and there are some lovely things scattered amid the lesser pieces: 'I'm Just A Lucky So And So', 'A Sunday Kind Of Love', 'That Old Feeling' and a hip and convincingly boppish 'How High The Moon'.

 Ella Fitzgerald 1949 Classics 1153 Fitzgerald; orchestras led by Sy Oliver, Gordon Jenkins, Sonny Burke, Louis Jordan, Mills Brothers (v). 1–11/49.

(*) Ella Fitzgerald 1950 Classics 1195 Fitzgerald; Louis Armstrong (t, v); Charlie Shavers (t); Hank Jones (p); John Collins (g); Ray Brown (b); Charlie Smith (d); Four Hits & A Miss (v); Sy Oliver Orchestra; Louis Jordan Tympany Five. 2–12/50.

Decca sessions throughout. Since the label had still not really figured out how to present her, like many of her contemporaries Fitzgerald was stuck with good and bad material alike, often within the same session. Classics 1153 has some delightful collaborations with Louis Jordan as well as the Mills Brothers, although both sessions tend to present her as a novelty singer. 'I Couldn't Stay Away From You' is a superior ballad, and the Sy Oliver charts for 'In The Evening' and 'Basin Street Blues' set her up as an almost vaudevillian belter. Classics 1195 bounces between sublime and ridiculous. There are some appealing duets with Jordan, Armstrong and even Sy Oliver ('Don'cha Go Way Mad'), and the eight Gershwin titles with Ellis Larkins (see also below). Yet the latter session is followed by 'Santa Claus Got Stuck In My Chimney' and two feeble Ink Spots titles. If you're collecting this series rather than Universal's various compilations, this one is a must.

(*) The Enchanting Ella Fitzgerald: Live At Birdland 1950–1952 Baldwin Street Music VBJH 309 Fitzgerald; Don Elliott (mel); Hank Jones, Raymond Tunia, Don Abney (p); Terry Gibbs (vib); Ray Brown (b); Charlie Smith, Jimmy Crawford, Roy Haynes (d). 12/50–8/55.

Four Birdland broadcasts, plus 'I Can't Get Started' from the Apollo and a couple of tracks from a Basin Street show from 1955. Besides all the usual period charm, these are rare examples of the improvising Fitzgerald in her prime. She scats her way through such set-pieces as 'Air Mail Special', 'Lemon Drop' and 'Preview', and when she's on song she's breathtaking. Plus the expected mix of ballads and whatever her new release on Decca was at the time ('We hope you'll buy it'). Pretty good airshot sound for the most part.

 75th Birthday Celebration MCA GRP 26192 2CD Fitzgerald; Louis Armstrong (t, v); Taft Jordan, Aaron Izenhall, Leonard Graham (t); Sandy Williams (tb); Louis Jordan (as, v); Josh Jackson, Hilton Jefferson, Teddy McRae (reeds); Bill Doggett (p, org); Billy Kyle, Bill Davis, Ellis Larkins, Don Abney, René Knight , Hank Jones, John Lewis (p); Carl Hogan, John Trueheart, Bill Jennings, Hy White, Bernie Mackay, Jimmy Shirley (g); Arnold Fishkind, Jesse Simpkins, Ray Brown, Haig Stephens, Bob Bushnell, Joe Mondragon, Beverley Peer, Bob Haggart, Junior Raglin (b); Larry Bunker, Sylvester Payne, George Wettling, Chick Webb, Johnny Blowers, Eddie Byrd, Joe Harris, Rudy Taylor (d); Dick Jacobs, Harry Dial, Vic Lourie (perc); Ink Spots (v); orchestras led by Bob Haggart, Chick Webb, Vic Schoen, Sy Oliver, Gordon Jenkins, Benny Carter and Toots Camarata. 5/38–8/55.

 The War Years 1941–1947 GRP 052268-2 2CD Similar to above. 41–47.

 The Last Decca Years 1949–1954 Decca/GRP 050668-2 Fitzgerald; Louis Armstrong (v, t); orchestra led by Sy Oliver. 49–54.

* Pure Ella GRP 051636-2 Fitzgerald; Ellis Larkins (p). 9/50–3/54.

(*) Oh! Lady Be Good Naxos Jazz Legends 8.120716 As various discs above. 3/45–1/52.

 Ella Fitzgerald 1953–1954 Classics 1404 Fitzgerald; Ellis Larkins (p); orchestras led by Sy Oliver, John Scott Trotter, Gordon Jenkins. 2/53–3/54.

Universal's Ella holdings are vast, since they bring together both the Decca and the Verve material. The birthday collection (now a bit dated since she's passed on) is an intermittently convincing cross-section of her best for Decca over 17 years. The early tracks are given short shrift since there are only two tracks with Webb, and accurate though it may be as a portrait of her Decca period, there's too much pap chosen from the '40s – rubbish with the Song Spinners and the Ink Spots. Premium scat on 'Lady Be Good' and a gorgeous duet with Pops on 'Dream A Little Dream Of Me' salvage the day; the '50s stuff is better, with a full session of Benny Carter charts and one track from the collaboration with Larkins. The War Years covers her uncertain early period at Decca more comprehensively, while The Last Decca Years 1949–1954 is devoted mostly to Sy Oliver arrangements; a frustrating mixed bag. Some of Oliver's charts are mysteriously banal – he makes the promising 'I've Got The World On A String' almost vaudevillian – and 'Goody Goody' wasn't the sort of song to bring Ella any grown-up appeal. But her singing is approaching its great period, and she does some wonderful things with 'You'll Have To Swing It (Mr Paganini)', 'In The Evening' and 'Angel Eyes', among others.

Pure Ella is a masterpiece, coupling her first great album (Ella Sings Gershwin) with Songs In A Mellow Mood, all of it with Larkins's gentle, persuasive accompaniments. Her voice bridges the girlish timbre of her early days with the grander delivery she moved on to for her Verve albums; and on this almost ideal programme of standards nothing is out of place.

Naxos continue their impressive series with a choice collection of Fitzgerald's post-war sides, mixing some of the ballads made with Larkins and famous set-pieces such as 'How High The Moon'. Classics 1404, meanwhile, takes in some ordinary material cut with Sy Oliver and John Scott Trotter with some of the Songs In A Mellow Mood sessions. Good enough if you are collecting the Classics sequence.

[illegible]

* The Cole Porter Songbook

Verve 537257-2 2CD Fitzgerald; Buddy Bregman Orchestra. 2/56.

In January 1956, Fitzgerald began recording for Norman Granz's Verve label, and the first release, The Cole Porter Songbook, became the commercial rock on which Verve was built. It was so successful that Granz set Ella to work on all the great American songwriters, and her series of songbook albums are an unrivalled sequence of their kind. The records work consistently well for a number of reasons. Fitzgerald herself was at a vocal peak, strong yet flexible, and her position as a lyric interpreter was perfectly in tune with records dense with lyrical detail; each disc carefully programmes familiar with lesser-known material; the arrangers all work to their strengths, Bregman and May delivering hard-hitting big-band sounds, Riddle the suavest of grown-up orchestrations; and the quality of the studio recordings was and remains outstandingly lifelike and wide-ranging on most of the discs. The Porter set is a sentimental favourite of many, in the jazz audience and beyond, and it's one of the records which typifies the first great era of the long-playing record.

* The Rodgers And Hart Songbook Verve 537258-2 2CD Fitzgerald; Buddy Bregman Orchestra. 8/56.

* Sings The Duke Ellington Songbook Verve 559248-2 3CD Fitzgerald; Cat Anderson, Willie Cook, Clark Terry, Harold 'Shorty' Baker (t); Quentin Jackson, Britt Woodman, John Sanders (tb); Jimmy Hamilton (cl, ts); Johnny Hodges (as); Russell Procope (cl, as); Ben Webster, Paul Gonsalves, Frank Foster (ts); Harry Carney (bs, bcl, cl); Duke Ellington, Paul Smith, Oscar Peterson (p); Stuff Smith (vn); Barney Kessel, Herb Ellis (g); Jimmy Woode, Joe Mondragon, Ray Brown (b); Alvin Stoller, Sam Woodyard (d). 9/56–10/57.

(*) The Irving Berlin Songbook Verve 543830-2 2CD Fitzgerald; Paul Weston Orchestra. 3/58.

* The George & Ira Gershwin Songbook Verve 539759-2 4CD Fitzgerald; Nelson Riddle Orchestra. 1–3/59.

* Ella Sings The Harold Arlen Songbook Verve 589108-2 Fitzgerald; Billy May Orchestra. 8/60–1/61.

 The Jerome Kern Songbook Verve 821669-2 Fitzgerald; Nelson Riddle Orchestra. 63.

 The Johnny Mercer Songbook Verve 539057-2 Fitzgerald; Nelson Riddle Orchestra. 10/64.

 The Songbooks Verve 823445-2 As above discs. 56–64.

* Best Of The Songbooks Verve 519804-2 As above discs. 56–64.

(*) Best Of The Songbooks – The Ballads Verve 521867-2 As above discs. 56–64.

 Day Dream: Best Of The Duke Ellington Songbook Verve 527223-2 As Ellington set above. 9/56–10/57.

 Oh, Lady Be Good! Best Of The Gershwin Songbook Verve 529581-2 As Gershwin set above. 3/59.

* The Complete Songbooks Verve 519832-2 16CD As above discs. 56–64.

Arguably the greatest achievement is the Gershwin set, once a five-LP box, now a resplendent four-CD set, which works patiently through 53 songs without any suspicion of going through the motions. The delight in listening to these discs one after another lies in hearing some almost forgotten tunes – 'The Half Of It, Dearie, Blues', 'You've Got What Gets Me', even 'Just Another Rhumba' – alongside the premier Gershwin melodies, and Fitzgerald's concentration is such that a formidable standard is maintained. Verve's new Master Edition adds a fourth disc to the original three and includes the only surviving alternative takes (Ella complains on take eight of 'Oh, Lady Be Good' that she may never get it – she does) as well as ten songs in their mono mixes – quite a revelation, since the voice actually comes through more clearly on these tracks, and it makes one wish to hear the whole set that way on CD as well.

The Rodgers and Hart set can seem slightly bland and lacking in wit, but she's so supremely effective on the best tracks, it's a minor quibble. The Arlen and Porter sets remain singular masterpieces, too. Arlen's songs are among a jazz singer's most challenging material, though, and Fitzgerald is ebulliently partnered by Billy May, who sounds more pertinent here than he did on some of the sessions he did with Sinatra. The two separate discs have now been combined in the Master Edition series. The Mercer record is slightly disappointing after the previous Gershwin triumph with Riddle, and the Kern collection, though fine enough, is also a secondary choice. The two discs dedicated to Berlin (now combined as a single two-CD set) are a bit patchy, but the first volume starts off with a quite unsurpassable reading of 'Let's Face The Music And Dance', in which Ella negotiates all the changes in backdrop without the slightest hint of discomfort and goes on to wonderfully tender versions of 'Russian Lullaby' and 'How Deep Is The Ocean'. The second disc works further miracles with 'Isn't This A Lovely Day' and 'Heat Wave'.

The collection made with Duke Ellington is a somewhat different matter, with the composer himself working with the singer. It's been an undervalued record in the past, with charges of under-rehearsal flying about, and there's certainly a major difference between these sessions and the others. Riddle would surely never have tolerated the looseness of some of the playing, or Sam Woodyard in any circumstances. Yet the best of the disc finds Ellington inspired, with such tunes as 'Caravan' evoking entirely new treatments and swingers like 'Drop Me Off In Harlem' fusing Ella's imperturbable time with the rough-and-ready movement of the band in full cry. Some of the tracks feature her with a small group, and there is an 'I Got It Bad And That Ain't Good' which finds Johnny Hodges almost oozing out of the speakers. Highly recommended, though remastering leaves the Ellington band sounding improbably fierce at times.

The best-of pick on The Songbooks isn't bad, with 19 tracks and a little over an hour of music, but it emphasizes how little fat there is in the original albums. Best Of The Songbooks is a neat pocket-edition, with some lesser-known tracks alongside the obvious winners. There are also the subsequent The Ballads and single-disc editions filleted from the Ellington and Gershwin sets. But the addictive qualities of these albums often leave one hankering for more, and the solution to that problem is the 16-CD set, which collects the whole lot.

 At Newport Verve 559809-2 Fitzgerald; Don Abney, Mal Waldron, Junior Mance, Ray Bryant (p); Wendell Marshall, Joe Benjamin, Ike Isaacs (b); Jo Jones, Jimmy Cobb, Specs Wright (d); Carmen McRae (v, p); Billie Holiday (v). 7/57.

 Get Happy! Verve 523321-2 Fitzgerald; orchestras led by Frank DeVol, Russell Garcia, Marty Paich, Nelson Riddle, Paul Weston. 7/57–10/59.

The Newport album brings together the sets sung at the 1957 festival by Ella, Billie and Carmen and is at times close to a shambles. Fitzgerald has a difficult time with her trio and is fighting them over the tempos of more than one song, although 'Air Mail Special' is a stunning scat showcase. Holiday is in awful shape and struggles through her set. McRae gets off to a dreadful start, since half of her group didn't show up until three numbers in (she sounds as if she's cheering when they do arrive) and she gets barely any time onstage anyway. Fascinating documentary record, but whether listeners would want to return to it very often is debatable.

Get Happy! is an unhappy set of songs – 'Beat Me Daddy Eight To The Bar', 'Like Young', 'Cheerful Little Earful' – strung together from five different sessions under five different leaders. In the circumstances, consummate pro that she is, Ella still turns in some fine work.

* Like Someone In Love Verve 511524-2 Fitzgerald; Ted Nash (as); Stan Getz (ts); Frank DeVol Orchestra. 10/57.

 At The Opera House Verve 831269-2 Fitzgerald; Roy Eldridge (t); J. J. Johnson (tb); Sonny Stitt (as); Coleman Hawkins, Stan Getz, Flip Phillips (ts); Oscar Peterson (p); Herb Ellis (g); Ray Brown (b); Connie Kay (d). 9–10/57.

* Ella Swings Lightly Verve 517535-2 Fitzgerald; Don Fagerquist, Al Porcino (t); Bob Enevoldsen (vtb); Bud Shank (as); Bill Holman (ts); Lou Levy (p); Mel Lewis (d). 58.

 Ella In Rome (The Birthday Concert) Verve 835454-2 Fitzgerald; Oscar Peterson, Lou Levy (p); Herb Ellis (g); Ray Brown, Max Bennett (b); Gus Johnson (d). 4/58.

(*) Sings Sweet Songs For Swingers Verve 0602498604175 Fitzgerald; Frank De Vol Orchestra. 11/58–7/59.

(*) The Intimate Ella Verve 829838-2 Fitzgerald; Paul Smith (p). 60.

 Mack The Knife (Ella In Berlin) Verve 519564-2 Fitzgerald; Paul Smith (p); Jim Hall (g); Wilfred Middlebrooks (b); Gus Johnson (d). 2/60.

 Ella Returns To Berlin Verve 837758-2 Fitzgerald; Lou Levy, Oscar Peterson (p); Herb Ellis (g); Wilfred Middlebrooks, Ray Brown (b); Gus Johnson, Ed Thigpen (d). 2/61.

(*) Ella Wishes You A Swinging Christmas Verve 827150-2 Fitzgerald; Frank DeVol Orchestra. 60.

 Clap Hands, Here Comes Charlie! Verve 835646-2 Fitzgerald; Lou Levy (p); Herb Ellis (g); Joe Mondragon, Wilfred Middlebrooks (b); Stan Levey, Gus Johnson (d). 1–6/61.

(*) Ella Swings Brightly With Nelson Verve 519347-2 Fitzgerald; Nelson Riddle Orchestra. 59–61.

 Ella Swings Gently With Nelson Verve 519348-2 Fitzgerald; Nelson Riddle Orchestra. 61–62.

 Rhythm Is Our Business Verve 559513-2 Fitzgerald; Bill Doggett Orchestra. 1/62.

 Ella Sings Broadway Verve 549373-2 Fitzgerald; orchestra led by Marty Paich. 62.

(*) Ella And Basie Verve 539059-2 Fitzgerald; Joe Newman, Al Aarons, Sonny Cohn, Don Rader, Fip Ricard (t); Henry Coker, Grover Mitchell, Benny Powell, Urbie Green (tb); Marshal Royal (as, cl); Eric Dixon (ts, f); Frank Wess (ts, as, f); Frank Foster (ts);

Charlie Fowlkes (bs); Freddie Green (g); Buddy Catlett (b); Sonny Payne (d). 7/63.

 These Are The Blues Verve 829536-2 Fitzgerald; Roy Eldridge (t); Wild Bill Davis (org); Herb Ellis (g); Ray Brown (b); Gus Johnson (d). 10/63.

(*) Verve Jazz Masters: Ella Fitzgerald Verve 519822-2 Fitzgerald; various groups. 55–62.

The songbook albums may be Fitzgerald's best-remembered at Verve, but there were many more good ones, and most of them are now on CD. Essential: Like Someone In Love, a very fine programme of major standards and rarities, with Getz taking solos on four tracks; Ella Swings Lightly, arranged by Marty Paich with his West Coast band handling the backings; the meeting with Basie, more fun than her encounters with Ellington, brash and exciting but tempered by the Count's invulnerable machine; The Intimate Ella, a one-on-one meeting with underrated Paul Smith, and a good instance of the big voice being shaded down; and the Christmas album, the least affected and most swinging seasonal jazz album ever made. Good ones: At The Opera House, which is a bit of a typical JATP rave-up but has its moments; Clap Hands, Here Comes Charlie!, a swinging small-group encounter, and something of a rarity in her record dates from this period; Sings Sweet Songs For Swingers, with a great set of charts by Frank DeVol, a neglected and only recently reissued record; and Returns To Berlin, which comes in excellent sound. The original Berlin set has been beefed up with some extra tracks in its latest incarnation and includes the famous version of 'Mack The Knife'.

Disappointing, but still worth hearing, are These Are The Blues, which tends to prove that Ella is no great queen of the idiom, despite the nicely simmering back-ups from Davis and Eldridge, and the Rome concert. Rhythm Is Our Business seems like a shot at some kind of youth market, with Doggett's R&B-flavoured scores and material like 'Hallelujah I Love Him So'. Ella sings gamely enough, but this isn't really her thing. The Swings Brightly/Swings Gently albums with Riddle are welcome appearances on CD. The Brightly set is the superior one, if only for the irresistible treatment of 'Don't Be That Way'; but the ballads disc is fine, too. Sings Broadway is unusual because it has a Marty Paich West Coast sound to it, and the songs are an interesting collection from various Broadway hits of the time. A few duffers, but don't miss 'Hernando's Hideaway', 'Whatever Lola Wants' and 'Almost Like Being In Love'.

The Verve Jazz Masters disc picks its way past some of the other Ella compilations and delivers an interesting summary for those who don't want to trawl through the whole Verve catalogue. Her albums with Louis Armstrong are listed under his name.

 Ella And Duke At The Côte D'Azur / (*) Côte D'Azur Concerts Verve 539030-2 2CD / 539033-2 8CD Fitzgerald; Cat Anderson, Dud Bascomb, Mercer Ellington, Herbie Jones, Cootie Williams (t); Lawrence Brown, Buster Cooper, Chuck Connors (tb); Jimmy Hamilton (cl, ts); Russell Procope (cl, as); Johnny Hodges (as); Paul Gonsalves, Ben Webster (ts); Harry Carney (bs); Duke Ellington, Jimmy Jones (p); Jim Hughart, John Lamb (b); Grady Tate, Sam Woodyard (d). 7/66.

The first is the original double-LP set with just a few extra tracks, whetting the appetite for the eight-disc set that covers all the concerts from this occasion by Fitzgerald and Ellington. In what is effectively a truncated form, this seems like little more than a patchwork of some pieces by Ellington and some by Ella with her trio (Jones, Hughart and Tate). Since neither situation finds the artists at their greatest heights, this goes down as an enjoyable but familiar sampling of festival routine. Highlight: Ella's serenely effective 'The More I See You'.

The big set is more about Ellington than Ella, and it includes on the final disc a full-scale rehearsal of three pieces which will intrigue Ducal scholars. Our grading may be on the generous side. There's much to enjoy on each of the discs, but presenting what is effectively four days of work, with all the various repetitions and routines of the artists exposed, is a demystification which many will not particularly welcome.

 Whisper Not Verve 589478-2 Fitzgerald; Marty Paich Orchestra. 7/66.

A rematch with Marty Paich. 'Old Macdonald'? – what on earth was Norman Granz thinking of? – but Ella is in gorgeous form for several songs, particularly 'Thanks For The Memory', 'Time After Time' and 'Lover Man'.

 Jukebox Ella: The Singles Vol. 1 Verve 0044007605820 2CD Fitzgerald, with various groups and orchestras, as in Verve sessions listed above. 1/56–10/67.

Fitzgerald recorded plenty of sides meant for single consumption during her Verve reign, and they've been gathered in for this 36-track double-disc set. Anyone expecting a lot of buried treasure is going to be disappointed, because Granz seems to have reserved some of Ella's most teeth-grinding material for such occasions: here are such immortal tunes as 'Hotta Chocolatta', 'Dreams Are Made For Children', 'I'm A Poached Egg (Without Toast)' and the German version of 'You're Driving Me Crazy'. There are good things too: a swinging 'Beale Street Blues', a smooth 'Desafinado'. The packaging is super.

(*) Something To Live For Verve 547800-2 2CD Fitzgerald; various accompanists, most listed above. 35–66.

In the overcrowded marketplace of Fitzgerald compilations, at least this one breaks new ground, covering both her Decca and Verve material in one package and two CDs. Excellent sound throughout and fine documentation will make this a worthwhile choice for many, but the track listing seems to have been closely tied in with a PBS documentary and in consequence feels compromised; any Ella admirer will be disappointed at some of the omissions.

 Take Love Easy Pablo 2310-702 Fitzgerald; Joe Pass (g). 73.

(*) Fine And Mellow Pablo 2310-829 Fitzgerald; Clark Terry (t, flhn); Harry 'Sweets' Edison (t); Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis, Zoot Sims (ts); Tommy Flanagan (p); Joe Pass (g); Ray Brown (b); Louie Bellson (d). 1/74.

(*) Ella In London Pablo 2310-711 Fitzgerald; Tommy Flanagan (p); Joe Pass (g); Keter Betts (b); Bobby Durham (d). 4/74.

 Montreux 1975 Pablo 2310-751 As above, except omit Pass. 7/75.

(*) Ella And Oscar Pablo 2310-759 Fitzgerald; Oscar Peterson (p); Ray Brown (b). 5/75.

 Fitzgerald And Pass ... Again Pablo 2310-772 Fitzgerald; Joe Pass (g). 1–2/76.

 Dream Dancing Original Jazz Classics OJC 1072 Fitzgerald; Nelson Riddle Orchestra. 6/72–2/78.

(*) Lady Time Pablo 2310-825 D Fitzgerald; Jackie Davis (org); Louie Bellson (d). 6/78.

 A Perfect Match Pablo 231-2110 Fitzgerald; Pete Minger, Sonny Cohn, Paul Cohen, Raymond Brown (t); Booty Wood, Bill Hughes, Mel Wanzo, Dennis Wilson (tb); Kenny Hing, Danny Turner (ts); Eric Dixon, Bobby Plater (as); Charlie Fowlkes (bs); Count Basie (p); Freddie Green (g); Keter Betts (b); Mickey Roker (d). 7/79.

 A Classy Pair Pablo 2310 132 As above, except add Nolan Smith (t); John Clayton (b); Butch Miles (d); omit Cohen, Betts and Roker. 2/79.
 Digital III At Montreux Original Jazz Classics OJC 996 Similar to above, except add Paul Smith (p); Joe Pass (g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b). 7/79.
Back with Norman Granz again, Ella recorded steadily through the '70s, but there was little to suggest she would either repeat or surpass the best of her earlier music. If encroaching age is supposed to impart a greater wisdom to a singer of songs, and hence to the interpretation of those songs, it's a more complex matter with Fitzgerald. While her respectful delivery of lyrics honours the wordsmithing, she brought little of the personal gravitas to the American songbook which was Sinatra's trademark. Her scatting grew less fluent and more exaggerated, if no less creative in its construction; her manipulation of time and melody became more obvious because she had to push herself harder to make it happen. There are still many good records here, but no really great ones.

Granz recorded her in several settings. With Joe Pass, the bare-strings accompaniment is initially intimate but finally dull. Pass can't devise enough variation to make the music stay awake, and Fitzgerald isn't always sure how strongly she's able to come on. Their duet albums are nice enough, but one is enough. Fine And Mellow is noisy and brash, but the title-track is a very good version of the Holiday favourite, which sounds just as good in Ella's hands. The first Montreux live set is merely OK, and much better is the London date from 1974. Probably the final chance to hear Ella in a club setting, and it's a racy and sometimes virtuosic display by the singer, a fine souvenir of a memorable visit. The 1979 Montreux set is unexciting. Most of it is average Basie or Pass, and Ella does only one ballad and a lumber through 'Flying Home'. Of the big-band dates, Dream Dancing features Nelson Riddle at his sententious worst and is missable, while the two sets with Basie are boisterous if comparatively uneventful. Lady Time is an unusual setting which tries Ella out as a kind of club-class blueswoman; she makes a game go of it. The other must-hear record, though, is the duet (almost – Ray Brown offers discreet support) with Oscar Peterson, Ella And Oscar. The pianist plays as hard as usual, but instrumentalist and vocalist bring out the best in each other, and there are at least three near-classics in 'Mean To Me', 'How Long Has This Been Going On?' and 'Midnight Sun'.

 Speak Love /  Easy Living Pablo 2310-888 / 2310-921 Fitzgerald; Joe Pass (g). 3/83.
 All That Jazz Pablo 2310-938 Fitzgerald; Clark Terry, Harry 'Sweets' Edison (t); Al Grey (tb); Benny Carter (as); Mike Wofford, Kenny Barron (p); Ray Brown (b); Bobby Durham (d). 3/89.
 The Best Of Ella Fitzgerald Pablo 2405-421 As various Pablo discs above.
 Bluella: Ella Fitzgerald Sings The Blues Pablo 2310-960 As various Pablo discs above.
The '80s saw Fitzgerald slackening off her workload as illness and perhaps sheer tiredness intervened; so, two more albums with Pass and what proved to be a farewell set in the strained and unconvincing All That Jazz. The best-of is a good selection, while Bluella tackles the thorny issue of Fitzgerald in her most vulnerable idiom by settling for pseudo-blues items such as 'C-Jam Blues', 'Duke's Place' and 'Smooth Sailing'; not bad.

(*) The Concert Years Pablo 4414-2 4CD Basically as Pablo albums above. 53–83.
Distilled from Fizgerald's live appearances as a headliner and with JATP, this is a very strong four-disc set which should be the first stopping-point for those who want to hear Ella the improviser and jazz musician. Starting with JATP material from the '50s, it takes in three different shows with Ellington, the 1974 set at Ronnie Scott's club, three Montreux appearances from the '70s, and a final (1983) show in Tokyo. If there are occasional lapses in judgement, where her scatting or phrasing can become almost parodic, the quality of her musicianship wins through. Cameos from many famous names add to the interest.

Also, in brief:

 All Roads Lead To Rome Gambit 89203. 7/57–4/58.
This couples the 1957 Newport Festival set listed above with music from a concert in Rome a year later.

 Ella At Duke's Place Verve 529700-2. 10/65.
If only the whole album had been as good as the opening, a wonderful reading of 'Something To Live For'.

(*) In Budapest Pablo 5308-2. 5/70.
A rare sighting of Ella in Eastern Europe, from a period when she wasn't making many records.

(*) Ella Abraça Jobim Pablo 2630-201. 9/80.
Bad timing, in that everyone had 'done' Jobim by this stage.

(*) The Best Is Yet To Come Original Jazz Classics 889. 2/82.
Another tiresome set of Nelson Riddle arrangements.

(*) Nice Work If You Can Get It Pablo 2312-140. 5/83.
Pointless star-matching with André Previn (p).

David Fiuczynski

GUITAR

He draws on rock power but with subtlety.

 Jazz Punk Fuzelicious FUZE8898 Fiuczynski; Rufus Cappadocia (clo); Tim Lefebvre, Santi Debriano (b); Billy Hart, Gene Lake (d); Daniel Sadownick (perc). 3/00.
 Amandala Fuzelicious FUZE8899 As above, except omit Cappadocia, Debriano, Hart; add Fima Ephron (b). 01.
 Kif Fuzelicious FUZE8903 Fiuczynski; Matt Darriau (cl, kaval, gaita); Rufus Cappadocia (clo); Gene Lake, Tobias Ralph (d); Daniel Sadownick (perc); Lian Amber (v). 04.
The title and cover of Jazz Punk is obviously meant to conjure up memories of Jaco Pastorius, but no version of 'Teen Town' inside; instead a bold mix of Hendrix, Ellington and Strayhorn, Chick Corea, Sousa and Chopin, all filtered through Fuze's (the label is his own) powerful intelligence. 'Stars And Stripes Whenever' is his homage to Jimi's feedback anthem, but it's on 'Star-Crossed Lovers', with its saxophonic phrasing and vibrato, that he shows his jazz mettle. It's Cappadocia who does the Jaco stuff on his electric cello, even more effective on Kif.

The second album, credited to his group Headless Torsos, is actually much better for having got all that other stuff out of its system. Here, the writing is all the guitarist's, with a couple of cuts by Lake and Sadownick. Fiuczynski writes a little bit like Pastorius, leaning heavily on a non-specific 'ethnic' feel in the percussion but producing themes which are hard to pin down geographically. 'Shannon's Kitchen' is the best of them, though the percussionist's 'Kiss That Whispers' is the clincher.

Kif's a clever record in that having shown on the first of these discs how readily he processes music of all shorts, Fiuczynski now shows that his own compositional imagination roves all over the place but remains true to a certain aesthetic, which is punchy, funky but also curiously elusive. There's a Middle Eastern feel to much of it, thanks in part to the shawm-like sound Darriau gets from his clarinet and other instruments, and the only negative point is the singer: who asked her along?

Also, in brief:

 Screaming Headless Torsos Live Fuzelicious FUZE8890. 02.
Lumpy and without the sophistication of the studio sets.

(*) Black Cherry Acid Lab Fuzelicious FUZE8902. 11/02.
Only an LP's worth of stuff, but some interesting music, with Mark Shim (ts) making an important contribution.

Five Birmingham Babies

GROUP

A tiny slice of jazz history.

 Heart Breakin' Baby Frog 58 Red Nichols (c); Frank Cush, Chelsea Quealey (t); Abe Lincoln (tb); Sam Ruby (cl, Cmel); Bobby Davis (cl, as); Adrian Rollini (bsx, goofus); Irving Brodsky, Jack Russin (p); Tommy Fellini, Ray Kitchingman (bj); Herb Weil (d); Stan King (d, kz); Arthur Hull, Ed Kirkeby (v). 7/24–7/27.
Closely related to the Goofus Five, who were set up by Ed Kirkeby, manager of the California Ramblers, as a way of playing hot music. Rollini was a kingpin on his big horn and on the melodica-like goofus (he also dabbled in 'hot fountain pen', a clarinet with a sax mouthpiece) and his unique sound figures here. It's a period piece, musically, but there are good breaks on Adrian's 'I Know What It Means' and on 'Heart Breakin' Baby', on which he had to split the royalty with Kirkeby, and how could you fail to love a band where the MC announces 'and on trombone … Abe Lincoln!'?

Paul Flaherty (born 1948)

ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES

A Connecticut native, nominal leader of a gang of unreconstituted free-jazzers.

(*) Fat Onions Cadence CJR 1054 Flaherty; James 'Chumly' Hunt (t, pkt-t); Stephen Scholz (vn); Mike Murray (g); Richard Downs (b); Randall Colbourne (d). 11/93.
(*) Anahad Cadence CJR 1107 Flaherty; James 'Chumly' Hunt (t, flhn, pkt-t); Mike Murray (g); Richard Downs (b); Randall Colbourne (d). 11/98.
Flaherty is an irascible-sounding saxophonist who takes his cues from the unadorned energy playing of the '60s and early '70s. With Colbourne, he marshals a music which forms around dense, braying collectives, sometimes recalling the heterophony of the Ayler ensemble, sometimes a golden-age FMP session, and sometimes creating something peculiarly their own. It's an exhilarating and sometimes exhausting experience; but endemic to this kind of listening is a sense of shared work-experience with the players.

They have released a stack of discs, dating mostly to the '90s, on the Zaabway label, which we have previously discussed, but some of these may be hard to get hold of now. Fat Onions, with its bigger ensemble and heavier, cloudier music, is still our favourite. There are moments of lyricism and quiet, though these are annihilated soon enough, and the group breaks into a kind of hymnal mode when it wants to sound celebratory. On Anahad, the team return for another freewheeling, free-ranging and freely formed set of free jazz; the record you have to pay for. They open with a tremendous blow on 'Smokeshop', almost 29 minutes long, and follow it with three more which are pretty much more of the same; hugely enjoyable if you like this kind of music; if you don't, you'll relate to the 26 put-downs which Flaherty lists in the sleeve-note: our favourite is 'My wife said to get your record outta the house.'

 Sannyasi Wet Paint 3001 Flaherty; Greg Kelley (t); Chris Corsano (d). 5/01.
 Voices Wet Paint 3002 Flaherty (as, ts solo). 9/01.
They caught a good one with Sannyasi, in decent studio sound, and a great blow by all hands. 'This music isn't for everyone – but it should be', says Paul. Voices finds him alone at last. He sounds to be in a thoughtful mood, and there are passages of unaffected sweetness to go along with lung-clearing outbursts. He never stays away from the extreme stuff for very long, although Flaherty's idea of 'extremes' probably isn't like most people's. Like many solo records, this isn't truly sustained, but it's strong.

(*) Kaivalya Vol. 1 Cadence CJR 1177 Flaherty; Marc Edwards (d). 10/03.
Edwards is a particularly fruitful partner. He plays with a comparable energy level, but moves around the kit with a finesse and graceful touch that is at times almost sensual. It brings a little fireside warmth into music which otherwise tosses us straight into the inferno.

 A Rock In The Snow Important 095 Flaherty; C. Spencer Yeh (vn, v); Chris Corsano (d). 12/04.
Yeh, from Burning Star Core, probably shouldn't be allowed out. His wild playing and vocalizing are a key element here, but the familiar Flaherty–Corsano axis steers most of these pieces. Not sure why some of the tracks are faded out; tape problems, or did they just go on for ever? Stirring stuff, though. They're also together on Snow Blind Avalanche, which is available on LP, same label, consecutive number.

(*) Whirl Of Nothingness Family Vineyard 43 Flaherty (as, ts solo). 2/05.
This is a wonderful record, still tough and uncompromising, but on 'Firetrance Lonely Heartache Still' and a couple of other pieces touching on a melodic sweetness as unexpected as a sudden tang of wild honey in a split log. At nearly 60, Flaherty has acquired a mage's rough wisdom and a sense of grace to go with the danger. Unmissable, but perhaps only if you're already along for the ride.

Also, in brief:

 The Beloved Music Family Vineyard 39. 05.
Ferocious duets with Chris Corsano (d).

Tommy Flanagan (1930–2001)

PIANO

A Detroit master, he played on many recordings in the late '50s but then sought an accompanist's security behind Ella Fitzgerald and Tony Bennett. Re-emerged as an undimmed creative spirit in the '70s and '80s.

(*) Overseas Original Jazz Classics OJC 1033 Flanagan; Wilbur Little (b); Elvin Jones (d). 8/57.

Made in Stockholm, this was a collectors' piece when issued by Prestige the first time, with a clever cover design that read Over CCCCCC. It is interesting to compare Flanagan's 'Relaxin' At Camarillo' and 'Eclypso' with the versions he made 20 years later: a remarkable constancy of energy and trim melodic ideas. Jones does some fine work, nowhere more so than in the odd introduction to 'Eclypso' and the fiercely effective 'Beat's Up'. As ever, Flanagan's bop vocabulary is uplifted by his beautiful touch.

 The Tommy Flanagan Trio Original Jazz Classics OJC 183 Flanagan; Tommy Potter (b); Roy Haynes (d). 5/60.

This is as blunt and straightforward as the title suggests. Flanagan rolls his sleeves up and wades straight into a nicely judged programme of standards with an emphasis on medium-paced ballads. He's at his best on 'In The Blue Of The Evening' and 'In A Sentimental Mood', the opening and closing numbers, while 'You Go To My Head' underlines his determination to stay in sight of the lyric at all times.

(*) Solo Piano Storyville 101 8387 Flanagan (p solo). 74.

The much-quoted suggestion that Alone Too Long, released in Japan in 1977, was his first unaccompanied set turns out to be incorrect. Recorded on a superior piano in Zurich, this comes from the same period in which Flanagan was considering a comeback as leader, even while he continued working with Ella Fitzgerald. The playing is graceful, meditative even on the bop numbers, and consistently attentive to the history of jazz piano. He nods to Strayhorn on an elegant medley, romps through 'Well, You Needn't' and offers learned footnotes to Tatum, Hines and Garner on an array of beautiful swing tunes.

 The Tokyo Recital /  Montreux '77 / (*) The Best Of Tommy Flanagan Original Jazz Classics OJC 737 / 372 / Pablo PACD 2405 410 Flanagan; Keter Betts (b); Bobby Durham (d). 2/75; 7/77; 2/75 & 7/77.

 Something Borrowed, Something Blue Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 473 As above, except omit Durham; add Jimmie Smith (d). 1/78.

(*) Eclypso Enja ENJ 2088 Flanagan; George Mraz (b); Elvin Jones (d). 2/77.

(*) Our Delights Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 752 Flanagan; Hank Jones (p). 1/78.

(*) Super Session Enja ENJ 3059 Flanagan; Red Mitchell (b); Elvin Jones (d). 2/80.

 The Magnificent Tommy Flanagan Progressive 7059 Flanagan; George Mraz (b); Al Foster (d). 81.

 Thelonica Enja ENJ 4052 Flanagan; George Mraz (b); Art Taylor (d). 12/82.

Throughout the '70s and early '80s, Flanagan explored aspects of harmony most closely associated with the late John Coltrane, often stretching his solos very far from the tonal centre but without lapsing into the tuneless abstractions that were such a depressing aspect of Coltrane's legacy.

Elvin Jones's presence and multidirectional approach are always a plus on Flanagan dates. Eclypso develops the relationship further; Super Session brings it to a peak, recorded three years later. The only real drawback with these Enja dates is the less than attractive piano sound which one has to listen through. Our Delights has all the signs of a real meeting of minds. As usual, not a particularly adventurous roster of tunes – 'Our Delight', 'Jordu', 'Lady Bird', two takes of 'Robbins' Nest', 'Autumn Leaves' – but beautifully crafted all the same.

The Best Of, which brings together much of the preceding Tokyo Recital with the live session from Montreux '77, might more usefully have been labelled a Strayhorn tribute, since he is the main composer represented. Flanagan sounds bright and airy but also a little empty of ideas, and some of his colleagues' work is decidedly pedestrian and uninspired.

 The Trio Gambit 69218 Flanagan; Ron Carter (b); Tony Williams (d). 6/83.

Originally released in Japan only, this doesn't quite punch its weight. Williams isn't the right drummer for Tommy and, while it's clearly intended to be a supergroup meeting of equals, the bassist and drummer are too prominently featured (and mixed up) on a not particularly inspiring set of standards.

(*) Let's Enja ENJ 8040 Flanagan; Jesper Lundgaard (b); Lewis Nash (d). 4/93.

 Flanagan's Shenanigans Storyville 41928 As above, except add Jesper Thilo (ts); Steen Hansen (hn); Vincent Nilsson (baritone hn); Jan Zum Vohrde (as, bcl); Flemming Madsen (bcl); Uffe Markussen (ss, ts, bcl). 93.

Flanagan was the 1993 Jazzpar winner and this music was recorded at the event. The trio date is a celebration of Thad Jones's music; much of it, most famously 'A Child Is Born', has been well covered by big bands and by horn groups, but never before by a piano trio. Flanagan knew Thad years ago when they were both starting out. One suspects that they were temperamentally similar, and these treatments bespeak a warm sympathy. It's a generous programme; as well as the title-piece and 'Child', there are performances of 'Mean What You Say', 'To You', 'Bird Song' and 'Scratch' (Nash standing out prominently on these), 'Thadrack', 'Three In One', 'Quietude', 'Zec' and, finally, 'Elusive', which closes the record on a high.

The Storyville set features the same trio working with the Jazzpar Windtet. They provide some lovely moments, particularly on Flanagan's own 'Eclypso', where Vincent Nilsson turns in a lovely baritone horn solo. 'Beyond The Bluebird' is also covered, as is the clever and devious 'Minor Mishap'. Most of the rest is standard or repertoire material, but including the title-piece, written for him by James Williams. Tommy's solo on 'But Beautiful' is one of the best of his career and Jesper Thilo's feature on 'For Lena And Lennie' is worth the price of admission alone.

(*) Sunset And The Mockingbird: The Birthday Concert Blue Note 93155 Flanagan; Peter Washington (b); Lewis Nash (d). 98.

To mark his 67th birthday, Flanagan took over the Village Vanguard and delivered one of his trademark performances. As ever, the material is chosen with intelligence and delivered with real expression. He kicks off with a superb rendition of Thad Jones's 'Birdsong'. Another Thad tune, 'Let's', comes along later, as does Dizzy's 'Tin Tin Deo', both of them songs Tommy had made very much his own in recent years. He's also done a lot to promote the work of Tom McIntosh, whose 'Balance Scales' featured on Shenanigans and is reprised here along with 'The Cupbearers' and 'With Malice Toward None'. Tommy's piano sounds in good heart and his technique well up to scratch. Washington and Nash are ideal collaborators, unobtrusive but effortlessly creative.

Also, in brief:

 The Cats Original Jazz Classics OJC 079. 4/57.
Officially a Prestige All Stars session (sanctified by the presence of John Coltrane (ts)), but it is Flanagan's stewardship of the house rhythm section that makes the gig his own.

 Complete Recordings Lone Hill LHJRCD10301. 57–64.
Brings together Overseas, Lonely Town and Trio, of which only the middle one, made for Blue Note in 1959 with Joe Benjamin (b) and Elvin Jones (d), isn't separately available.

 Nights at the Vanguard Uptown 2729. 10/86.
With George Mraz (b), Al Foster (d) and a notably unhackneyed set-list, including Tommy's favourite, 'All God's Chillun'.

 Jazz Poet Timeless 301. 1/89.
The title's a fair passport entry for Tommy; beautifully judged and perfectly formed.

Ingebrigt Håker Flaten

DOUBLE BASS

A leading member of the Norwegian free division.

 Double Bass SOFA 511 Flaten (b solo). 12/02–5/03.
Flaten uses two instruments on what is basically a brief collection of mostly brief improvisations, ranging from 'The Joy Of German Bowing', which sounds like two minutes of grunting, to the more melodic application of 'Slides'. Two pieces have 'random overdubs done without playback'. As so often on a solo record, the bassist takes the chance to isolate certain technical considerations and use those as the basis for a piece's structure or overall sound, although here he usually ends the piece as soon as – or even before – he thinks the idea's even beginning to flag. While there sounds to be little in the way of prepared-instrument techniques, he certainly gets some curious timbres out of the big fiddle, as in the tough strumming of 'Gghameshu'. In the end, not a record to stand tall next to soliloquies by Kowald or Guy, but sometimes striking enough.

Bob Florence (born 1932)

PIANO, ARRANGER

Active since the late '50s as an arranger in the LA area, his own big-band records are unambiguously complex and modernistic playing situations. He's Julie Andrews's MD.

 Name Band – 1959 Fresh Sound FSCD 2008 Florence; Johnny Audino, Tony Terran, Jules Chaikin, Irv Bush (t); Bob Edmondson, Bobby Pring, Don Nelligan, Herbie Harper (tb); Bob Enevoldsen (vtb); Herb Geller, Bernie Fleischer (as); Bob Hardaway (ts); Don Shelton (ts, cl); Dennis Budimir (g); Mel Pollan (b); Jack Davenport (d). 11/58.
(*) Funupmanship Mama MMF 1006 Florence; Larry Ford, Warren Luening, Steve Huffsteter, Wayne Bergeron, Charlie Davis, (t, flhn); Rick Culver, Don Waldrop, Alex Iles (tb); Bob Efford, John Lowe, Dick Mitchell, Lanny Morgan, Kim Richmond, Lee Callett (reeds); Tom Warrington (b); Steve Houghton (d). Rebecca Kilgore (v). 92.
* Earth Mama MMF 1016 As above, except omit Lowe, Morgan, Callet, Warrington, Houghton, Kilgore; add George Graham (t, flhn); Charlie Loper (tb); Trey Henry (b); Gregg Field (d). 4/96.
(*) Serendipity 18 Mama MMF 1025 As above, except omit Davis, Mitchell, Carr, Field; add Rick Baptist, Ron Stout (t); Jeff Driskill (ts, cl, f); Dick Weller (d). 8/98.
Florence has done sterling work as a big-band arranger, leader and performer over 50 years. His bread has been buttered in Los Angeles studio work, but none of these records are compromised by that background: he likes big, swinging, powerful bands, and his charts are stuffed with activity. Soloists seldom get by without counterpoint or some other sort of support, and – unusually for the Californian orchestral tradition – he's as interested in long-form writing as he is in punchy three- and four-minute numbers. His bands are usually staffed by the best executants, with two or three knockout soloists as a bonus, and the Fresh Sound reissue shows that that's been the case from the start. There are marvellous turns by Herb Geller and Bob Enevoldsen here, but the section-work, though filled with unfamiliar names, lacks nothing in polish and attack. The disc is stuffed with alternative takes, but there's plenty of interest throughout.

Florence resumed his recording in the late '70s and his albums for Mama show his skills undimmed. Funupmanship gains an extra ounce of energy from the live recording, and here Florence really puts the band on its mettle: 'Slimehouse' comes out of the stalls ferociously, and 'Come Rain Or Come Shine' is smart enough to have would-be arrangers scratching their heads. Among the soloists, Kim Richmond plays a key role: a modernist with sufficient tradition in him to uphold and transcend his surroundings. Earth finds Florence and team on top form. These are some of his most challenging and head-turning charts, with 'Straight No Chaser' an extraordinary example of a transformation of a jazz standard. As ever, the soloists seem compelled to give of their best, and if Florence perhaps doesn't quite edge out the peerless Bill Holman in creative terms, he's one of the few arrangers fit to walk in Holman's steps.

No real drop in intensity on Serendipity 18, which undergoes a few changes in personnel (Weller is a powerhouse addition to the rhythm section) and finds Florence at his most feisty: 'I haven't simplified anything.' The scores are extravagant with detail and complexity, at times to the point of super-abundance, but the impact of the band in delivering these scores is little short of awesome, and on a more mediated piece such as 'Tres Palabras' the wit of the scoring comes through clearly. A tremendous sequence of big-band records, and it's good that the Mama label has kept them in print.

 Friends Treasures Heroes Summit 430 Florence (p solo). 8/05.
Florence plays more than 'arranger's piano' in the usual sense, but this carefully crafted set of tributes – including one to 'Jools', Ms Andrews – is stitched together into a complex suite by a number of interludes and bridging sections. Some of the material is unexpected in this context, notably 'The Wind Beneath Your Wings', but it all works beautifully and the way he puts together 'On Green Dolphin Street' with 'Invitation' (same composer, admittedly) is extremely clever.

Also, in brief:

 With All The Bells And Whistles Mama MMF 1011. 2/95.
A bit of a pressure drop with this one, but still intriguing.

 Whatever Bubbles Up /  Eternal Licks And Grooves Summit 360 / Mama 1030. 05–06.
Two more great sets from the Limited Edition band. 'Running With Scissors' is a standout track on the second disc, but so's the arrangement of 'Chelsea Bridge', while on the first he goes back to 'Invitation'.

Med Flory (born 1926)

ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, CLARINET, VOICE

A regular West Coast presence, still playing 50 years on.

 Sunday Afternoons At The Lighthouse Café Woofy WPCD 147 Flory; Carl Saunders (t): Tom Ranier (p); Dave Carpenter (b); Frank Capp (d). 8/04.

Flory's a great old stager. This catches him, rising 80, at a regular hangout for West Coasters of his vintage, and while, like much of the Woofy catalogue, it's not much more than another OK gig, it's terrific to hear him stretch out a bit and share a few musical memories. The group's great, though Saunders isn't a characterful soloist, and any band with Capp in the engine room isn't going to go wrong. The songs get full measure, with 'West End Blues' coming in at 13 minutes, so while these are veterans, they aren't shortwinded.

Also, in brief:

 Go West, Young Med! Fresh Sound FSRCD 506. 54–59.

A good compendium of his Californian sessions, featuring the typical revolving-door personnel.

Hubert Fol (born 1925)

ALTO SAXOPHONE

Elder brother of pianist Raymond, with whom he formed the Parker-influenced Be Bop Minstrels in 1947. Worked with some of the greats in Europe, but ill-health foreshortened his active career.

 Saxophones À Saint-Germain Des Prés Emarcy 9842027 Fol; Charles Verstraete (tb); Sonny Criss (as); Maurice Meunier (ts); Michel de Villers (bs); Georges Arvanitas (p, org); André Persiani , Henri Renaud, René Urtreger (p); George Daly (vib); Alix Bret, Michel Gaudry, Pierre Michelot (b); Philippe Combelle, Bernard Planchenault, Jean-Louis Viale (d). 54, 4/63.

Paris was a moveable feast, and here's that old fraud Hemingway in the liner-notes. This consists of sessions almost a decade apart, but all marked by a sunny enthusiasm that one didn't often hear in American bebop. Fol's octet had a nice weight and balance, neither virtuosic nor ponderous. His own playing is competent, witty rather than brilliant. You'd have to exclude Sonny Criss from the cross-Atlantic generalization above: he's on the final few cuts and positively shines alongside Fol on a terrific 'Blues Pour Flirter'. There's a cracking 'You Go To My Head' from the earlier dates and significantly these two tracks are the longest on the set. One feels that Fol took some time to get up a head of steam, both in a solo and in his career. Sad that it should have been cut so short.

Raymond Fol (1928–79)

PIANO, CELESTE

A Parisian who began working in trad groups and played with many distinguished jazz visitors to France.

 Les 4 Saisons Emarcy 548791-2 Fol; Maurice Thomas, Fred Gérard , Roger Guérin , Ivan Jullien, Michel Poli (t); Raymond Katarzynski, Charles Verstraete, Christian Guizen (tb); Camille Verdier (btb); Pierre Dumont (frhn); Denis Fournier (cl, as); Jacques Nourrédine (as, bcl); Johnny Griffin, Dominique Chanson (ts); Georges Grenu (ts, cl); Jean-Louis Chautemps, Pierre Gossez (bs); Fats Sadi (vib, perc); Pierre Cullaz (g); Jimmy Woode (b); Art Taylor (d); Jean-Louis Viale, Georges Larue, Armand Cavallaro (perc). 7/65.

This likeable jazzification of a fairly famous piece by Antonio Vivaldi makes a pleasing memorial to a pianist who died young and left only a scattered legacy of recordings. Fol approached the material in what seems to be a spirit of light-hearted seriousness: while a piece of its time, it sounds like neither kitsch nor Kentonian bombast. The excellent big band assembled for the job has some fine soloists in Griffin, Sadi and others, and there are swinging sections intermingling with passages of Gallic reflection. Excellently remastered for the Jazz In Paris series.

Chuck Folds

PIANO

Brilliant but underrated stride and classic jazz specialist.

* Hitting His Stride Arbors 19117 Folds (p solo). 96.

 Remember Doc Cheatham Arbors 19218 Folds; Spanky Davis, Irving Stokes (t); Frank Tate (b); Jackie Williams (d). 11/98.

Even for students of jazz piano, Folds may be an undiscovered treasure. He's not so much rumbustious as muscularly intelligent, which makes his moments of pathos and episodes of romance all the more effective. Though in different moods he superficially resembles a number of classic players, comparison isn't helpful since Chuck is very much his own man, with a strong, equal-handed approach and a very distinctive approach to rhythmic phrasing. The first album has 21 fine unaccompanied performances, some of them material associated with Fats Waller and James P. Johnson (the latter's 'Mule Walk' and 'Keep Off The Grass') but ranging as far afield as Strayhorn's 'Johnny Come Lately'. There are some nice obscurities lurking in the programme as well. Good sound on the piano.

Folds first worked with Doc Cheatham in 1972 and the association continued for a quarter of a century, most prominently in a regular Sunday gig at Sweet Basil in New York. Here Chuck and his 'Sweet Basil Friends' compile a tribute to Cheatham, who died in 1997. The trumpeters are both seasoned players but even two of them don't make up for Doc's absence, and the best moments are again when Chuck is at the piano alone, as on 'A Kiss To Build A Dream On' and the even better 'Sweet Lorraine'. It's a nice group, though.

Jean-Marc Foltz

CLARINET

Rising star who's played with pianist Stephen Oliva.

 Cette Opacité Clean Feed CF045 Foltz; Bruno Chevillon (b). 11/03.

An unusual instrumentation, and one that requires real empathy and control to pull off. These two have worked together before, and that shows on long tracks like 'Didascalie' and 'This Imbalance And Its Consequences', where the understanding is instantaneous, reciprocal and often genuinely startling.

Joe Fonda

DOUBLE BASS, VOICE

Co-leader with Michael Jefry Stevens of a regular free-bop group.

 Evolution Leo CD LR 260 Fonda; Herb Robertson (t, flhn); Mark Whitecage (as, ss); Michael Jefry Stevens (p); Harvey Sorgen (d). 4–10/97.

 Live At The Bunker Leo CD LR 301 As above, except omit Robertson; add Paul Smoker (t). 00.

These are by the Fonda–Stevens Group, a band of largely 'unfashionable' improvisers exploring the parameters of free bop. Robertson and Whitecage are both conservative radicals whose most splenetic moments wouldn't cause an earthquake. It's their solos and dialogues with different members of the rhythm section that tend to direct the music, even though the writing is all by the leaders. The compositions are either open-ended sketches or Coleman-like melodies counterpointed between the instruments, and if the latter carry less conviction it's because the playing is ragged when it should be pointed.

Evolution sees the group move back and forth in musical time. 'Birdtalk' is a clear reference to the bop roots of most of the players. Robertson's solo is superb, somewhere between Dizzy Gillespie and Booker Little, while 'Song For My Mother' breathes poetry. The balance of voices isn't quite right, perhaps in the interests of group democracy, but the music comes across fine and strong. The replacement of Robertson with the drier-toned and more academic Smoker might seem to threaten a reduction in pace and excitement, but not so. The closing 'Oh Lord, It's Nice To Sit On Your Porch Today', complete with vocals, is a good summing up of the group's strengths and idiosyncrasies.

 Full Circle Suite CIMP 198 Fonda; Taylor Ho Bynum (t, conch); Chris Jonas (ss); Gebhard Ullmann (bcl); Kevin Norton (d). 3/99.

The opening track on Full Circle Suite, 'Next Step' is based in part on a Kevin Norton arrangement of 'Brilliant Corners'; a very fine piece of work, evolving naturally out of its thematic materials into some clear-headed and creative improvising. The opening section sets an Ayler-like slow theme over fast rhythms, before a series of improvisations around a second theme and finally a frantic stop-on-a-dime conclusion. From there, though, the record gets bogged down into the familiar CIMP style of overlong tracks and lack of self-restraint. Fonda gets a coherent sound out of a group of strong-willed players, but even they don't sustain the 27'44" of the title-track.

 Twelve Improvisations Leo CD LR As for Fonda–Stevens Group, except add Daunik Lazro (as). 10/02.

(*) Forever Real 482 Music 1032 As for Fonda–Stevens Group, except add Napoleon Maddox (human beat-box). 2/04.

On Twelve Improvisations, for the first time, everything you hear is freely improvised and not dependent on preset structures. The results are both familiar in approach and unsettlingly different. The addition of Lazro was clever because the saxophonist adds an unpredictable dimension with his quick, tricky lines and curious harmonics. Of the opening sequence 'Ostrich' and 'Electricity' are both stunners, the latter a feature for Robertson and Fonda in feisty conversation.

The later record is better still and the addition of human beat-box Napoleon Maddox again mixes up the chemistry nicely. The opening title-track is deceptively light and swinging, but that changes with 'From The Source', which is basically a drum solo with trumpet scribbles, piano and bass sounds overlaid. Stevens's 'The Stalker' is titanic, one of the most significant statements yet by this group, who're caught beautifully on the studio recording.

* Loaded Basses CIMP 343 Fonda; Claire Daly (bs); Gebhard Ullmann (bcl); Michael Rabinowitz (bsn); Joe Daley (tba); Gerry Hemingway (d). 9/05.

A glorious set, from perhaps the most inventive and well-balanced group Fonda has yet assembled: a lovely chocolatey sound with a distinct edge and bite. Daley is a master in these situations, but it's Fonda who stamps his authority on the music, with a wonderful bass intro to 'Bottoms Out', which develops organically into 'Gone Too Soon', a threnody for Thomas Chapin. Hemingway's hand-drumming has an unusual sonority that suits this music ideally, and the three reed-players combine percussive attack with flowing harmonic development. Exceptional; one of CIMP's finest achievements.

Also, in brief:

(*) Distance Leo Lab 069. 5/99.

This meeting with guzheng player Xu Fengxia is interesting, but there is a sense of two worlds not quite meeting.

 The Healing Leo LR 338. 10–12/00.

The Fonda–Stevens group again, not particularly well-recorded.

 Transforming The Space CIMP 284. 2/03.

FAB is Fonda's trio with Barry Altschul (d) and Billy Bang (vn), a pungent triumvirate who must produce an awesome noise in a live setting. This is a bit dry, but it's great to see Altschul back in the studio. All too rare, now.

Carl Fontana (1928–2003)

TROMBONE

A consummate professional, he started working with his saxophonist father as a teen, then with Woody Herman and other big bands, before spending much of his career as a session-man in Las Vegas.

 The Great Fontana Uptown UP2728 Fontana; Al Cohn (ts); Richard Wyands (p); Ray Drummond (b); Akira Tana (d). 9/85.

Amazingly, Fontana didn't make a record under his own name until he was nearing 60. Like much of what he was to do subsequently, it's good largely because the band is good, but Carl never puts a foot wrong, playing with impeccable accuracy, even on things like 'Expubident'. It's left to Cohn and the wonderful Wyands to give the session some colour and warmth, though.

(*) Complete Phoenix Recordings: Volumes 1–6 Woofy WPCD121–126 Fontana; Conte Candoli (t); Bill Anderson (p); Warren Jones (b); Rob Wainwright (d). 5/93.

 Live At The Royal Palms Inn Woofy WPCD37-2 Fontana; Buddy Childers (t, flhn); Brian O'Rourke (p); Jack Radovitch, John Daly (b); Dave Cook (d). 5/93.

 Live At The Royal Palms Inn Woofy WPCD 37-6 Fontana; Steve Huffsteter (t, flhn); Chuck Marohnic (p); Joel Di Bartolo (b); Dom Moio (d). 7/93.

(*) Live At Capozzoli's: Volumes 1–3 Woofy WPCD 51 / 163 / 167 Fontana; Arno Marsh (ts); Brian O'Rourke (p); John Leitham (b); Dick Berk (d). 8/97.

 Live At Capozzoli's Woofy WPCD 72 Fontana; Brian O'Rourke (p); Tom Warrington (b); Dom Moio (d). 2/98.

(*) Live At Capozzoli's Woofy WPCD 87 Fontana; Andy Martin (tb); Brian O'Rourke (p); Tom Warrington (b); Dom Moio (d). 12/98.

God bless Woofy. These are fans' albums from a fan's label, and only the most devoted 'bone-ophile could possibly want them all. The two-trombone date with Martin, reminiscent of Fontana's early work with Kai Winding, stands out because the younger guy's playing is so good, almost idiosyncratic by the polite standards of this genre, and there's some interesting material on the earlier dates from the Royal Palms, part of a Kenton alumni series. Obviously, any glimpses of the Count are welcome to West Coasters, but the exhaustive documentation of their collaboration is likely to stretch the patience of anyone else. Nothing much when stretched over a career as long as Carl's but pretty amazing in covering less than a decade.

Ricky Ford (born 1954)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Began recording in the '70s and had spells with Mercer Ellington, Charles Mingus and Dannie Richmond, before leading his own dates.

(*) Loxodonta Africana New World 80204 Ford; Oliver Beener, Charles Sullivan (t); Janice Robinson (tb); Jonathan Dorn (tba); James Spaulding (as); Bob Neloms (p); Richard Davis (b); Dannie Richmond (d). 6/77.

An erratic but occasionally brilliant player, Ford is best known for his work with Mingus and Abdullah Ibrahim. His own records – mostly deleted, sadly – are ambitious in extent, covering a range of idioms from bop, modal-to-free harmony, and back to a broad swing style. This was his debut as a leader. There are five strong originals, written for ensembles ranging between orthodox sextet and nonet, plus nice versions of 'My Romance' and Coltrane's 'One Up, One Down'. The subsidiary players are fairly anonymous but the writing and arranging carry it through. The title, by the way, is the taxonomic name for the African bush elephant.

 Manhattan Blues / (*) Ebony Rhapsody Candid CCD 79036 / 79053 Ford; Jaki Byard (p); Milt Hinton (b); Ben Riley (d). 3/89; 6/90.

On the earlier of the pair Ford's breadth of reference is instantaneously answered by the eclectic Byard; Ford's soloing is thoughtful but still curiously uninvolving. Ebony Rhapsody, with the same line-up, irons out the occasional awkwardnesses and finds Ford with a band that seems increasingly responsive to his changes of direction; 'Mirror Man', a duet with Milt 'The Judge' Hinton, has an authority worthy of Coleman Hawkins, and the other originals bespeak a growing compositional talent.

(*) Hot Brass Candid CCD 79518 Ford; Lew Soloff, Claudio Roditi (t); Steve Turre (tb); Danilo Perez (p); Christian McBride (b); Carl Allen (d). 4/91.

The arrangements here are sharp and pungent. 'Banging, Bashing, Bowing And Blowing' is a superb band workout, and '11/15/91' is a chromatic lament for Martin Luther King Jr, written at the time of the Gulf War, while 'Carbon 14' draws its inspiration from Ford's interest in Afro-Americana and the theory that black Africans may have discovered America long before Columbus. Digging ever deeper into those roots, the resulting music is mightily impressive.

(*) Green Note – Live At La Fenêtre Marge 33 Ford; Eddie Henderson (t, flhn); Kirk Lightsey (p); James Lewis (b); Doug Sides (d). 03.

Ford has seemed increasingly comfortable and confident since his move to Paris at the beginning of the '90s. If it has meant somewhat less visibility in the US, that shouldn't trouble him. The tenor tone is increasingly authoritative and manages to convey considerable warmth underneath a hard and slightly abstract edge. Ford always appears to deliver the skeletal essence of a theme, as if he isn't much bothered with its fripperies and grace notes. In Henderson and Lightsey he has precisely like-minded players, clever, crafty musicians both; the pianist is in great form here. As to the section, Lewis and Sides do their stuff with accuracy and enthusiasm; impossible to fault either of them.

Michael Formanek (born 1958)

DOUBLE BASS

A fine group player, confident enough to go out as a solo performer and not fall on his face.

 Loose Cannon Soul Note 121261 Formanek; Tim Berne (as, bs); Jeff Hirshfield (d). 10/92.

 Am I Bothering You? Screwgun 70006 Formanek (b solo). 97.

Formanek is a musician of considerable intelligence and range, with ideas that probably need more extended exposure. Mingus is probably the main source, though Formanek rarely leads from the front, preferring a more unassuming role (Low Profile, title of a later disc, gets it about right). What makes all his records distinctive in their surprisingly different ways is his approach to texture and space, and his ability to give individual voicings a thoroughly idiomatic cast.

Berne is a sourer and more acerbic player than Greg Osby (who played on Formanek's deleted debut set) and occasionally he seems pushed too far forward in the mix. What he brings, though, is a solid, blocky presence around which Formanek's own natural lyricism flows like water round a splintery rock. With the Enja catalogue depleted and in disarray, it was left to Berne to jump in with an opportunity for Michael to record under his own name. The Screwgun performance is amazing, with Formanek working his instrument very hard indeed. Only a fellow bassist, and not all of them, could tell you what was going on on 'Seams'. Brilliant, in every sense.

Jimmy Forrest (1920–80)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

He worked with Jay McShann (alongside Charlie Parker), Andy Kirk and Duke Ellington before establishing himself as a leader.

(*) Night Train Delmark 435 Forrest; Chauncey Locke (t); Bart Dabney (tb); Charles Fox, Bunky Parker (p); Herschel Harris, John Mixon (b); Oscar Oldham (d); Percy James, Bob Reagan (perc). 11/51–9/53.

 All The Gin Is Gone /  Black Forrest Delmark 404 / 427 Forrest; Harold Mabern (p); Grant Green (g); Gene Ramey (b); Elvin Jones (d). 12/59.

Early R&B experience invested his work with a strong, funky sound, which evolved into something richer and more complex, but always straight down the line rhythmically. After leaving the Ellington orchestra, he scored a big hit with the mournful swinger

'Night Train', an R&B classic based on Duke's 'Happy Go Lucky Local'. It's the leading item on the eponymous Delmark, an album packed with short, funky jukebox themes which confirm that even in his pop days Jimmy was never merely a honker and wailer.

The presence of Grant Green on the 1959 sessions has both attracted notice and deflected it away from Jimmy's own melodic hard-bop approach. All The Gin Is Gone predates the better-known sessions for New Jazz and Prestige, but it has great strengths and the version of 'Caravan' is masterly; Black Forrest completes the picture of a notably tough and direct blues and ballad session.

 Forrest Fire Original Jazz Classics OJC 199 Forrest; Larry Young (org); Thornel Schwartz (g); Jimmie Smith (d). 8/60.
 Out Of The Forrest Original Jazz Classics OJC 097 Forrest; Joe Zawinul (p); Tommy Potter (b); Clarence Johnston (d). 4/61.
 Sit Down And Relax With Jimmy Forrest Original Jazz Classics OJC 895 Forrest; Hugh Lawson (p); Calvin Newborn (g); Tommy Potter (b); Clarence Johnston (d). 9/61.
 Most Much! Original Jazz Classics OJC 350 As above, except omit Newborn; add Ray Barretto (perc). 10/61.

Forrest Fire pits Young against the brimstone stomp of Young's Hammond; between them, they roll up the floor. It's the biggest possible contrast to the lighter and more detailed sound of Out Of The Forrest, but in most respects this is the right context for the saxophonist, who had no desire to play delicately detailed changes. Sit Down And Relax sounds like a ballad date, but there is the expected ration of slowly burning groovers, and Detroiter Lawson arrives to underline the group's soulful side.

Most Much! is a fine set, restoring two tracks from the same session previously released only as part of Soul Street on New Jazz. Most Much! demonstrates what a developed time-feel Forrest had. The first three tracks could hardly be more different in emphasis. 'Matilda' is a traditional calypso, given a forceful reading, with the saxophonist closely backed by the unsung Lawson. 'Annie Laurie' is similarly upbeat but seldom departs from the melody. 'Autumn Leaves' is full of glassy harmonies and strangely modernist rhythmic displacements. The closing 'Most Much' is a tough rocker, with strong upper-register effects.

Also, in brief:

 Soul Street Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 897. 61.

A slightly bitty compilation, it's still greater than the sum of the parts. After 'Night Train', 'Soul Street' is the iconic Forrest performance, with King Curtis. Some good things from an Oliver Nelson-led octet.

Arne Forsén (born 1960)

PIANO

Contemporary Swedish pianist, with experience in free music and theatre work as well as post-bop.

 Where Is The Moon? Dragon DRCD 253 Forsén (p solo). 6/00.

Forsén doesn't do anything dramatically personal here, but this is a very likeable and shrewdly collected programme of solos. Three Monk tunes are calmly but insightfully measured out, four improvisations are put down with considerable grace, and two tracks played on a tack piano are a mildly startling change of tone. A reluctance to prepare – or at least a faith in the immediacy of the moment – means that he falls back on familiar kinds of spontaneity here and there. Still, it's sweetly done.

Anat Fort

PIANO

Israeli-born, but now based in New York.

 A Long Story ECM 85050 Fort; Perry Robinson (cl, oc); Ed Schuller (b); Paul Motian (d). 3/04.

As the instrumentation strongly suggests (Motian has his Levantine side, too), there is a strong Middle Eastern thread running through this lovely music. Three variations on 'Just Now' give the best measure of Fort both as composer and as improviser and the only flaw we can find on this, which is doubly welcome for a fresh glimpse of the perennially underemployed Robinson, is that it all seems a bit polite and finished.

Sonny Fortune (born 1939)

ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, FLUTE

Never a prolific composer but a busy player in a style that retains elements of R&B, along with more modernist tinges. Employment with Miles Davis, Elvin Jones, McCoy Tyner, Miles Davis and Buddy Rich broadened his horizons and in the '90s he entered a second period as a leader.

(*) Great Friends Evidence ECD 22225 Fortune; Billy Harper (ts); Stanley Cowell (p); Reggie Workman (b); Billy Hart (d). 86.
(*) In The Spirit Of John Coltrane Shanachie 5063 Fortune; John Hicks (p); Reggie Workman (b); Rashied Ali, Steve Berrios, Ronnie Burrage, Julio Collazo (d). 99.
 You And The Night And The Music 18th And Vine 181053 Fortune; George Cables (p); Chip Jackson (b); Steve Johns (d). 07.

The Fortune discography is very depleted these days; the Konnex records have gone and Great Friends was originally on the French label Black & Blue. It's strictly speaking a collaborative session rather than Fortune's disc, and certainly he's no more significantly featured than anyone else, including Workman and Hart. Inevitably, he's most prominent on his own 'Thoughts' and 'Awakening', and his bright, slightly wavering tone is hugely effective over Cowell's chords and the bassist's rich accompaniment. He's also superb on Harper's 'Insight', with Workman's 'Synapse' the disc's outstanding cut.

Fortune's a Philadelphian and that, plus past contact with both McCoy Tyner and Elvin Jones, may have given him special insight into the Coltrane legacy. Despite superficial similarities of timbre and attack, he has never sounded like a Trane disciple. Significantly, too, this tribute record consists largely of originals. The only Coltrane tunes are 'Olé' and 'Africa', not by any means obvious choices. Two more former associates of Trane's – Reggie Workman and Rashied Ali – turn up on this dark-hued and mostly reflective disc, which has an old-fashioned sound and might well be some lost session from the '60s. Sonny's three main horns are all heard, and there is a nice variation of approach, though almost every track makes some reference to the great man (or to 'Mr Jones'). Ali is in fine form on his appearance, but Ronnie Burrage is the revelation, quoting figures from the classic Quartet records, often against the metre of the song. Fortune's phrasing has become more exact over the years, and there is a stiffness about his delivery on 'Hangin' Out With JC Again' which is at odds with its relaxed, comradely feel. An attractive record, rather than a great one, but certainly different from the usual run of Trane memorials.

The most recent disc is workmanlike enough, but if only Workman and Ali had been on hand to give it some much-needed gravitas. Cables is his usual, slightly insouciant self, but the mostly standards programme doesn't challenge them much and the two rhythm guys treat it like a day at the office.

Frank Foster (born 1928)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Cincinnati-born. He turned to the tenor saxophone to free himself of the all-pervasive influence of Charlie Parker but remains profoundly influenced by bop, even as leader of the Basie band.

 Fearless Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 923 Foster; Virgil Jones (t); Albert Dailey (p); Bob Cunningham (b); Alan Dawson (d). 1/65.

(*) Soul Outing! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 984 Foster; Virgil Jones (t); Pat Rebillot (p); Billy Butler (g); Richard Davis (b); Bob Cunningham (b, d); Alan Dawson (d, perc). 66.

Fearless is one of a couple of dates Foster made for Prestige in the mid-'60s, and it's a solid, if formulaic, example of what the label managed to eke out of its various signings during the period. Foster opts for five originals and a long, joyous version of 'Jitterbug Waltz'. There are signs that he has been listening to John Coltrane, though the disciplined bop of the early records is still the dominant impression. The group sounds rigorously prepared but not so note-perfect that the playing loses freshness.

Soul Outing! was the second release as leader after leaving the Basie camp, and it's a step on in terms of style and conception. This time, Foster keeps it very tight and disciplined, and he modulates his own new material with two songs from the Adams–Strouse musical, Golden Boy, neither of them songs that have otherwise had much place in jazz repertory. His own 'Chiquito Loco' is an engaging swinger and 'Skanaroony' a look back to bebop.

* Well Water Piadrum 0701 Foster; Sinclair Acey, Cecil Bridgewater, Joe Gardner, Charles Sullivan (t); Bill Lowe, Charles Stevens, Kiane Zawadi (tb); Leroy Barton, C. I. Williams (as, f); Bill Saxton (ts); Doug Harris (ts, f); Bill Cody (ts, f, picc); Mickey Tucker (p); Earl May (b); Elvin Jones (d); Babafume Akunyun (perc). 10/77.

For a guy who worked long and hard in some of the most prestigious company in jazz, Foster didn't have much luck with his own recordings. Having been shelved by Blue Note at the end of the '60s, these 1977 recordings by the Loud Minority Big Band were not released until 2007. Mystifying, really, since the idiom is really rather advanced (unless that is the explanation), and there are moments when one might almost be listening to a Coltrane ensemble; the unmistakable presence of Elvin Jones adds to that impression. Foster's saxophone sound is broader, less hard-edged, though, and there are distinctive flourishes on Clifford Brown's 'Joy Spring' and the original 'Cecilia Is Love' which give away the leader's identity. He switches to soprano for the closing track, 'Three Card Molly', a bonus quintet cut, but the abiding impression from the main recording date is of a tenor-player who really ought to be mentioned more often among the successful modernists.

(*) Leo Rising Arabesque 0124 Foster; Derrick Gardner (t); Stephen Scott (p); Christian McBride (b); Lewis Nash (d). 8/96.

Having shrugged off the responsibility of the Basie band, Foster concentrated on an Indian summer as a soloist and small-group leader. His soprano work has never been more individual than on 'Leo Rising' itself, which is a hard track to identify, heard out of context. At nearly 70, Foster sounds poised and mature, and the group is full of wise heads on young shoulders. Scott and McBride trade quips and quotations while keeping a weather eye on the oldtimer. The years have been kind to Foster in that his kind of tenor-playing is a virtual orthodoxy, and yet he always manages to pack a lot of history into his solos, not by quotation, as the younger men do, but rather in sheer range of expression. Gardner joins in for a single track.

(*) We Do It Diff'rent Mapleshade 9532 Foster; Kenyata Beasley, Cecil Bridgewater, Jon Faddis, Derrick Gardner, Frank Greene, Jeremy Pelt (t, flhn); Vince Gardner, Stanford Hunter (tb); Bill Lowe (btb, tba); Bill Saxton, Bruce Williams (as); Joe Ford (ts); James Stewart (bs); Danny Mixon (p); Earl May (b); Sylvia Cuenca (d); Dennis Rowland (v). 6/02.

Credited to Foster's Loud Minority Big Band, this is a rousingly entertaining set that brings a new contemporary edge to the sophisticated minimalism of the Basie band. Arranging is very much Frank's thing now and the charts on things like 'Stella By Starlight' and a magnificent 'Shiny Stockings' are inch-perfect and for once on projects like this the main appeal is the ensemble playing rather than the soloing. None the less, there are fine statements from most of the senior brass-players, from baritonist Stewart and drummer Cuenca. Danny Mixon holds the band together from the keyboard, and if there is an occasional slackness elsewhere in the rhythm section it's of an attractive rather than a troubling sort.

Also, in brief:

 Manhattan Fever Blue Note 85191. 3/68, 69.

Foster's return to Blue Note wasn't the kind of music the fans expected and the follow-up was shelved; not an unusual fate, but slightly harsh for this big-band set.

 The House That Love Built Steeplechase SCCD 31170. 9/82.

Early '80s sessions with Horace Parlan (p), packed with Foster's mighty swing and full-blooded improvising, yet the settings somehow don't demand enough.

 Two For The Blues Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 788. 10/83.

Meetings with Frank Wess (as, ts, f), another Basie colleague with whom Foster seems joined at the hip.

 Swing! Challenge 70051. 98.

Caught live, Foster's quartet delivers an hour of tough, sensitive jazz, signing off with Coltrane's 'Giant Steps'.

George 'Pops' Foster (1892–1969)

DOUBLE BASS

He worked on riverboats and with all the major New Orleans bandleaders, before moving to St Louis and eventually NY. A celebrated figure in the '40s revival, he carried on till the end, always rock-solid.

 George 'Pops' Foster American Music ASMCD-105 Foster; Art Hodes (p). 68.

Pops and Art chat about the bassman's long career, and intersperse the dialogue with whichever tunes come up in this eavesdropped conversation, privately recorded by Hodes. Pops plays in his elemental style, grumbling away with the bow on 'Closer Walk With Thee', slapping on the others; they open and close with 'Mahogany Hall Stomp'. Though only 37 minutes and musically slight, it's a precious survival.

Pete Fountain (born 1930)

CLARINET

Fountain struck huge success when he was a featured artist on Lawrence Welk's TV show in the late '50s, and his brand of Dixieland came to symbolize 'traditional jazz' in the minds of many Americans. He has run his own club for many years and is still playing.

 Do You Know What It Means To Miss New Orleans? GHB 75300 Fountain; Merle Koch (p); Bunky Jones (b); V. J. Bourgeois (d). 91.

Fountain has been marginalized by jazz histories, but, along with Al Hirt, he was the king of American Dixieland in the late '50s and '60s. Television, or rather a spot on the Lawrence Welk Show, was the making of him, and he went on to make some 30 albums for Coral during the '60s: Dixieland re-created as a smooth hi-fi experience, though it doesn't lack for vigour. There have been many, many Fountain albums and compilations around, many of them on the Ranwood label, which is the main outlet for Lawrence Welk's music, but the GHB confusingly with the same title (and much the same repertoire as the round-up below) is a useful sample of the mature artist plodding along with one of the most reliable schticks in American entertainment. It may not be revelatory, but you have to hand it to him for sheer persistence.

Also, in brief:

 The Best Of Dixieland Verve 549365-2. 6/50–7/68.

Starts early, with Santa Pecora's group and the Basin Street Six, and it's not until the '60s that the familiar Fountain style emerges.

 Do You Know What It Means To Miss New Orleans? Verve 658. 50–54.

Another valuable compilation, with better sound, probably.

Lem Fowler

PIANO, VOICE

A Chicagoan pianist working in the local studios during the early and middle '20s.

(*) Complete Recorded Works 1923–1927 RST JPCD-1520-2 Fowler; Sidney De Paris, Seymour Trick, Clarence Wheeler (t); Ernest Elliott (ss, cl); Percy Glascoe (cl, as); Charlie Holmes (as); Stanley Harding, Al Brunson (wbd); Helen Baxter, Mae Scott, George Williams, Helen McDonald (v). 5/23–7/27.

Lemuel Fowler is a shadowy figure about whom almost nothing is known, but he made a fair number of records as accompanist and bandleader, and all of the earlier sides are here. A capable writer – there are three versions of his hit 'You've Got Ev'ry Thing A Sweet Mama Needs But Me' included here – he had a confident and somewhat Mortonesque manner at the piano: interesting to hear a version of 'Jelly Roll Blues' among the band sides. The accompaniments number ten and are the usual somewhat dour lot for the period, but the tracks by Lem's Washboard Wonders have a lot more go in them. A pity, though, that the sidemen – especially Wheeler, Trick and the clownish Glascoe – are an awful lot. Only on the last few tracks, where De Paris and a larger band come in, is everyone playing properly and together. Knockabout stuff, not without appeal, although the transfers are a rum effort.

Billy Fox

DRUMS

A pupil of Jane Ira Bloom, he's come through punk rock, metal, all sorts to get to this.

 Uncle Wiggly Suite Clean Feed CF068 Fox; Percy Pursglove (t); John Savage (as, f); Gary Pickard, Arun Luthra (ss, ts); Paul Faatz (bs, cl, bcl); Deanna Witkowski (p); Skye Steele (vn); Christopher Hoffman (clo); Scott Shaeffer (b); Danny Katz (shamisen); John O'Brien (d). 10/04.

There's never been anything else quite like this. Fox apparently likes to compose in a liminal state halfway between waking and sleep and the free-associating slew of styles that (almost) shapes this suite is a reflection of that; a suite in the strict sense, in that each of the ten pieces has some dance reference, though hip-hop sensibility is as near the surface as Latin forms. The basic current of the music is modern jazz, but with tinges from outside and surreal juxtapositions of harmonic process. The result is cartoonish, wild and somehow grand.

Donal Fox (born 1952)

PIANO

Bostonian, but of Panamanian extraction.

 Ugly Beauty Evidence ECD 22131 Fox; David Murray (ts). 3/93.

(*) Gone City New World NW 80515 Fox; Oliver Lake (as); Eric Thomas (cl); John Lockwood (b); William Brown, Quincy Troupe (v). 11/91–5/94.

The Monk title and the misericord on the cover of the duo record give a fair impression of Fox's dissonant but still idiosyncratically swinging approach. Interesting to observe how different Murray sounds in this context from how he does with, say, Dave Burrell or Georges Arvanitas. 'Round Midnight' is filler, but the live version of the saxophonist's 'Hope Scope' is a real bonus and it's a pity there isn't more concert material on the album, which is slightly stiff.

Much of the material on Gone City is through-written. 'T-Cell Countdown', with tenor William Brown and Lockwood on bass, is a passionate response to the HIV/AIDS crisis. The song picks up on the anguished sounds heard at the beginning of 'River Town Packing House Blues', which is reminiscent of one of Frederic Rzewski's Americana pieces. The title-piece is a concert version of a ballet score, a three-part meditation for piano, clarinet and double bass. The duet with Lake on 'Jazz Sets With T.T.' is an earlier piece, which gives the saxophonist free rein to explore his extended technique. Two items feature poet/performer Troupe.

Joel Frahm

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Vigorous hard-bopper who cut his teeth with a fellow Palmetto star, drummer Matt Wilson.

 Sorry, No Decaf Palmetto 2043 Frahm; David Berkman (p); Doug Weiss (b); Matt Wilson (d). 9/98.

(*) The Navigator Palmetto 2063 Frahm; David Berkman (p); Scott Colley (b); Billy Drummond (d). 3/00.

The debut title is probably the Starbucks generation equivalent of 'No Jamfs Allowed', but Joel delivers on the ironic apology with some strong, high-caffeine playing. He presumably encountered Dewey Redman while working with Matt Wilson and there is a definite touch of Dewey's angular approach on the nicely titled 'Interesting Perhaps, But Hardly Fascinating Rhythm'. The tunes are all originals, except for Berkman's 'Interesting Perhaps ...', Mal Waldron's peerless 'Soul Eyes' and on the standards front a nice revisit with Johnny Mercer's 'Laura' and a trio version of 'Pennies From Heaven' that must be Rollins-inspired.

The strong debut was followed by an even more confident sequel. Having paid off a debt to Wilson, Joel teams up with a rhythm section that actually suits his approach much better, even if Drummond's swing doesn't entirely suit the idiom of 'The Navigator' and 'Fort Wayne'. Significantly, Berkman gets much more of the action this time round and is composer of four tracks, including the fine opener 'White Bear Speaks' and the edgy 'Ants'. The only standard is 'My One And Only Love', but it's an epic performance, with the best saxophone solo on the disc.

 Don't Explain Palmetto 9066 Frahm; Brad Mehldau (p). 12/01.

Old friend Mehldau makes an interesting foil for Frahm's tenor, which is milder and less up-front here than on his previous recordings. The title-ballad comes first and establishes a tone which is preserved throughout. Stronger lines, like Ornette Coleman's much-covered 'Turnaround', provoke a more muscular reaction, but Mehldau's standing as the Chopin of contemporary jazz is the dominant factor here. Everything is milked for lyrical and romantic potential and the result is a very beautiful but slightly soporific album.

(*) We Used To Dance Anzic 928894 Frahm; Kenny Barron (p); Rufus Reid (b); Victor Lewis (d). 05.

Barron was one of his teachers at Rutgers and brings a quiet authority to this. It's a set mostly of originals, including the winding 'Bob's Blues' and the lovely 'Song For Abdullah'. A bossa tune isn't quite so successful. On 'Spring Can Really Hang You Up The Most', Frahm bespeaks a maturity to match the pianist's and the combination lifts the record a couple of notches above the previous one.

Panama Francis (1918–2001)

DRUMS

Teenage prodigy at the kit; made his debut in 1932 with Lucky Millinder and later Cab Calloway. Dropped out in the '60s but made a strong return with his Savoy Sultans.

(*) Gettin' In The Groove Black & Blue 233320 Francis; Francis Williams, Irving Stokes (t); Norris Turney (as, cl); Howard Johnson (as); George Kelly (ts); Red Richards (p); John Smith (g); Bill Pemberton (b). 1 & 2/79.

From his first entrance on 'Song Of The Islands', it's evident how utterly polished a drummer Francis still was. He has the loose-wristed delivery of the great swing players and an ability to inflect apparently simple beats just by altering the dynamics and point of impact. Much of the material on the record is by Al Cooper, after whose band the Savoy Sultans were named. There are a couple of things from the Millinder days and by Turney (better known as an Ellingtonian), who contributes 'Checkered Hat'. The other saxophonist, George Kelly, is responsible for the arrangements. Drum solos are kept to a decent minimum but are full of interest.

Also, in brief:

 All-Stars 1949 Collectables COL 5313. 49.

A nice sampling of the earlier work, with some signs that Francis has adopted a few bebop mannerisms.

Tomas Franck (born 1958)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Swedish saxophonist who studied at Malmö, now living in Copenhagen. Greatly influenced by Dexter Gordon in particular.

 Bewitched Stunt STUCD 18905 Franck; Thomas Clausen (p); Jesper Lundgaard (b); Leroy Lowe (d). 11/88.

 Tomas Franck In New York Criss Cross 1052 Franck; Mulgrew Miller (p); Kenny Washington (b); Billy Drummond (d). 12/90.

 Crystal Ball Stunt STUCD 19408 Franck; Jørgen Emborg (p); Lennart Ginman (b); Jonas Johansen (d). 9/94.

 At The Circus Stunt STUCD 01192 Franck; Carsten Dahl (p); Lennart Ginman (b); Ole Streenberg (d). 5–7/99.

A stalwart of the Danish Radio Big Band, Franck sounds much like many another hard-bop tenorman, heavily in hock to Coltrane, Gordon and so forth. But it must be admitted that he has the style down as well as most. Bewitched was his debut and, though the seven originals are nothing special, the playing has weight and guts to it, with Clausen providing typically inventive accompaniment and the musing version of the title-piece particularly effective. The prospect of recording a quartet date on a first trip to New York seems to have held no terrors for Franck at all. Miller is his usual courteous and thoughtful self, and Washington and Drummond keep good time. The writing is again unremarkable, but Franck knows how to get the best out of himself as an improviser; the long solo on the opening 'Triton' shows no lack of ideas.

Crystal Ball is the pick of the four. Back almost on home turf – Franck may be based in Copenhagen, but he's actually a Swede – the saxophonist plays some of his most intense music. The extended improvisation on 'Fahrenheit 451' is a prodigious display of how commanding he can be on the horn and, if it touches no startling new ground, the authority is impressive by itself. Cut live at Copenhagen's Circus-Building (there is a stray track from a slightly earlier date at the Copenhagen Jazz House), Franck and his team on At The Circus trawl through a standard, some Ellington, a couple of blues themes and a ballad. Coltrane as a big, expansive soul. Nothing fancy, but nothing much wasted.

Bud Freeman (1906–91)

TENOR SAXOPHONE, CLARINET

One of the legendary Austin High School Gang, the elegant Chicagoan was the first significant tenor saxophonist, a lighter but certainly not pallid Coleman Hawkins.

 Bud Freeman, 1928–1938 Classics 781 Freeman; Bobby Hackett (c); Bunny Berigan, Johnny Mendel (t); Joe Bushkin (t, p); Floyd O'Brien (tb); Bud Jacobson, Pee Wee Russell (cl); Dave Matthews (as); Dave North, Jess Stacy, Claude Thornhill (p); Eddie Condon (g); Norman Foster (bj); Grachan Moncur, John Mueller, Artie Shapiro (b); Cozy Cole, Gene Krupa, Marty Marsala, Dave Tough, George Wettling (d); Red McKenzie, Minerva Pious (v). 12/28–11/38.

 Bud Freeman, 1939–1940 Classics 811 Freeman; Max Kaminsky (t); Jack Teagarden (tb, v); Brad Gowans (vtb); Pee Wee Russell (cl); Dave Bowman (p); Eddie Condon (g); Clyde Newcomb, Pete Peterson, Mort Stuhlmaker (b); Danny Alvin, Morey Feld, Al Sidell, Dave Tough (d). 7/39–7/40.

(*) Swingin' With 'The Eel' ASV AJA 5280 As above, except add Muggsy Spanier (c); Joe Bauer, Pee Wee Erwin, Andy Ferretti (t); Les Jenkins, Earle Hagen, Walter Mercurio (tb); Peanuts Hucko (cl); Skeets Hurfurt, Fred Stulce (as, cl); Johnny Mince (ts); Howard Smith (p); Carmen Mastren, Hy White (g); Trigger Alpert, Gene Traxler (b); George Wettling (d). 10/33–7/39.

Freeman was perhaps the first truly significant white tenor-player. If he looked, and chose to behave, like the secretary of some golf club in the Home Counties – episode one of his autobiography was called You Don't Look Like A Musician – his saxophone walked all over the carpets in spikes, a rawer sound than Lester Young's (to which it is often likened) and with a tougher articulation.

Classics 781 includes one astonishing oddity, a piece of ham acting by Freeman and the bizarrely named Minerva Pious; no verbal description will quite suffice ... The 1938 trio with Stacy and Wettling is excellent evidence for Freeman's gifts as a highly focused improviser. His harmonic shifts and deceptively easy chromatic transitions on 'I Got Rhythm' (January of that year and an astonishing performance) and 'Three Little Words' (a later session, in November) have a cut-out-and-keep quality that will endear them to all saxophone-players.

The 1939 recording of 'The Eel' is the final track on the ASV compilation, which, unlike Classics, includes work for other leaders – Eddie Condon, Tommy Dorsey and Muggsy Spanier. The real collectables are Bud's own cuts, though, and the November 1938 trios with Stacy and Wettling are among the best of his small-group statements, stripped down, muscular but still urbane. The sound is much better than on the French label, which further recommends this sampling of half a decade's material.

 Bud Freeman, 1945–1946 Classics 942 Freeman; Yank Lawson (t); Lou McGarity, Bill Mustarde (tb); Edmond Hall, Peanuts Hucko (cl); Gene Schroeder, Buddy Weed (p); Carmen Mastren (g); Herman Alpert, Bob Haggart (b); Ray McKinley (d); Five De Marco Sisters (v); other personnel unidentified. 8/45–46.

Following Freeman's release from the army, he signed up for Majestic, though he made some additional recordings for V-Disc in October 1945. Unlike Lester Young, he didn't re-enter civilian life bearing a sackful of woe, but he was certainly not as sharp as before. Versions of 'I'm Just Wild About Harry' and 'I Got Rhythm', cut in September, have some of the old grace and agility, but almost everything else on the set is stuffy by comparison. The V-Disc material is sourly ironic; 'For Musicians Only (A Musical Treatise On Jazz)' fails to convince, even as satire, and the later tracks, recorded with an unknown band, are drab. The only other curiosity in this set is 'The Atomic Era', a duet with drummer McKinley.

 All Star Swing Sessions Prestige 24286 Freeman; Herman Autrey, Harold 'Shorty' Baker, Bunny Berigan, Pee Wee Erwin (t); Big Chief Russell Moore, Dicky Wells (tb); Herb Hall (cl); Claude Hopkins, Red Richards, Claude Thornhill (p); Eddie Condon (g); George Duvivier, Leonard Gaskin, Grachan Moncur III (b); Cozy Cole, J. C. Heard, Herbie Lovelle (d). 35, 60, 62.

A nice selection of material that spans enough time to confirm that basically Freeman didn't change, just kept doing his own self-confident thing. The best of the set is the 1960 material with Harold 'Shorty' Baker and Claude Hopkins, pungent swing with a sophisticated edge. The remainder is more historically minded, with glimpses of Berigan and Condon, but not much of real substance.

 California Session Jazzology 277 Freeman; Dick Cathcart (t); Betty O'Hara (tb, euph); Bob Reitmeier (cl); Ray Sherman (p); Howard Alden (g); Phil Stephens (b); Nick Fatool (d). 82.

Unreleased until 1997, this remarkable session was supposed to have been a cameo walk-on by the 75-year-old Freeman. But when he turned up at an LA concert put on by the Poor Angel Hot Jazz Society, he decided that it would be entertaining to sit in for the whole set. He sounds a little unprepared, even on the surprisingly brisk version of 'Body And Soul', but Bud sounds in excellent spirits and form, tackling familiar material like 'Just A Closer Walk With Thee' and 'Tea For Two'. Howard Alden was new on the scene, but he immediately establishes himself as a deft and clever soloist, and unintimidated by the great man.

 The Real Bud Freeman Principally Jazz 01 Freeman; Stuart Katz (p); Bob Roberts (g); John Bany (b); Barrett Deems (d). 12/83.

Bud's recorded swansong was made on his return to Chicago after a long stint in Britain. The home band rolls out the carpet for him, and guitarist Roberts is a particularly responsive partner, trading some lovely ideas with the leader on 'I Cover The Waterfront'. Deems is one of the best mainstream drummers located in the Windy City and it's he as much as anyone who gives the set its perky swing, certainly belying the saxophonist's advanced age. There are a couple of fluffs and a few moments when Bud doesn't seem to know quite where he's going with a solo, as on 'My Romance', where he drifts off in another melodic direction entirely, thinks better of it, and then doesn't quite get back in the groove. Otherwise, though, a wholly attractive set and a decent farewell to the studio.

Also, in brief:

(*) Bud Freeman, 1946 Classics 975. 11–12/45, 9/46.

A slightly misleading dateline, but there is quality stuff for Emarcy and Keynote in December.

 Meet Me In San Juan DA Music 104 62.

Another cracking date, and a surprisingly coherent encounter between Bud and Roy Eldridge (t).

 Superbud Jazzology 185. 74, 92.

Originally released on the British 77 label, this has now been enhanced by half a dozen rare Freeman compositions, performed solo by pianist Keith Ingham.

 Jazzmeeting In Holland Circle 10. 5/75.
A good-natured set with some great stuff from Bud and Jimmy McPartland (c).

 The Swaggie Session Swaggie 342. 75.
Recorded in concert at the 30th Australian Jazz Convention, with Bob Barnard's Jazz Band.

 The Dolphin Has A Message JSP CD 882. 5/80.
The old master in relaxed and elegant form with a contingent of capable Brits.

Chico Freeman (born 1949)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, BASS CLARINET, CLARINET, FLUTE

Von Freeman's son is a Coltrane-influenced modernist – advanced harmonics, circular breathing – who none the less remains loyal to the basic principles of Chicago jazz. He has flirted with free jazz and with funk and fusion in his Brainstorm group but sounds at his best in front of a small group playing modern repertory.

 Beyond The Rain Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 479 Freeman; Hilton Ruiz (p); Juni Booth (b); Elvin Jones (d). 6/77.
Freeman's playing always sounds entirely of the moment, technically adroit, rooted in the past but always searching for something beyond. What may seem an ill-matched personnel actually delivers a very responsive ensemble. Freeman himself is hard-edged but lyrical, highly focused but also relaxed and unforced. Jones and Booth sound old-fashioned in this context, and one wonders whether Ruiz was the right piano-player.

(*) No Time Left Black Saint 120036 Freeman; Jay Hoggard (vib); Rick Rozie (b); Famoudou Don Moye (d). 6/79.
The first of the Black Saint albums is little known compared to its predecessors on India Navigation (now deleted) but immediately makes sense of Hoggard's involvement. Without a piano-player, the sound is much more open, more scurrying and complex and also, at this stage, when Chico seemed to be concerned with speeding his delivery on uptempo numbers, much more responsive. Otherwise, it's a tight and accurate little group, and the Italian label's sound-quality is good.

[illegible]

* Destiny's Dance

Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 799 Freeman; Wynton Marsalis (t); Bobby Hutcherson (vib); Dennis Moorman (p); Cecil McBee (b); Ronnie Burrage (d); Paulinho Da Costa (perc). 10/81.

One of the great jazz records of the '80s. The presence of Hutcherson, the premier vibraharpist of the day and a giant of an improviser, is a huge part of it, and Wynton is playing straightforwardly and with all his fire. Once again it seems odd to pitch Hutcherson up against a piano-player, and one of limited if perfectly serviceable talent, except that Moorman respects his space and the sound is so smoothly crafted that there is a lot of room around both, good separation and none of the muddiness that ruins such encounters. The material is all original and all strongly idiomatic, allowing Freeman to air his growing repertoire of circular breathing, extended harmonics and overblown notes; again, though, technique never takes the place of musicality.

(*) Luminous / The Unspoken Word Jazz House JHDE 204 2CD Freeman; Arthur Blythe (as); John Hicks (p, ky); Julian Joseph (p); Curtis Lundy, Don Pate (b); Victor Jones, Idris Muhammad (d); Norman-Hedman (perc). 2/89, 9 & 10/93.
Freeman's association with the erratic Blythe has been a fruitful one for both, and Freeman's occasional sojourns at Ronnie Scott's Club in London have always been the cue for some of his fieriest and most committedly engaged music. Monk's 'Rhythm-A-Ning' is common to both discs, as is Cecil McBee's 'Peacemaker' and an original 'Playpen'. More than four years separate the sessions, and the second features a very different group, anchored by Joseph, but the quality is consistent and consistently high.

(*) Focus Contemporary CCD 14073 Freeman; Arthur Blythe (as); George Cables (p); Santi Debriano (b); Yoron Israel (d). 5/94.
There is an almost magisterial calm to Freeman's (and Blythe's) playing at this period. It is certainly hard to fault his articulation and his shaping of a solo, and at least part of the excitement of this highly accomplished record is hearing how Freeman, even with a very gifted harmonic improviser at his back in the person of George Cables, is able to bring himself back to some point of rest at the end of a solo. But he always does, and it is exhilarating to take to the air with him.

 Out Of Many Comes The One Arabesque AJ0162 Freeman; Jan Pulsford (ky); Bill White (g, v); Alexei Tsiganov (vib, mar); Orlando Marin (b, v); Abe Fogle (d, v); Frankie Valdez (perc); Jennifer Hamady, Athina Kostavara (v). 5/04.
Despite the title, nothing coheres. Chico is still capable of producing some fine, exciting playing, but somewhat like Gato Barbieri his avant-garde side long since gave way to something that can only be characterized as commercial, and while Gato managed to sustain the balance for longer than most, Chico seems increasingly formulaic: sludgy keyboards, over-emphatic bass and percussion, too many indifferent vocals.

Also, in brief:

(*) You'll Know When You Get There Black Saint 120128. 8/88.
Despite the presence of Freeman Sr (ts, p), whistler Joel Brandon and Geri Allen (p), this is a muted disappointment.

 Up And Down Black Saint 120136. 7/89.
Nice interplay between Freeman and Mal Waldron (p), but neither bassist Rocky Knauer nor singer Tiziana Ghiglioni stamp much personality on the music.

 The Emissary Clarity 1015. 11 & 12/95.
A curious encounter with the Josh Jones Latin Jazz Ensemble. Chico plays strongly, though.

 Oh, By the Way Challenge 71027. 8/02.
Again very much in Latin mode, though the presence of rapper Akil Dassan gives the album a voguish sheen which quickly wears off.

George Freeman (born 1927)

GUITAR

Von's brother hasn't enjoyed quite the same resurgence but is once again coming to notice; associated with Gene Ammons and later with Richard Groove Holmes.

 Birth Sign Delmark 424 Freeman; Lester Lashley (tb); Von Freeman, Kalaparusha Maurice McIntyre (ts); Sonny Burke, Robert Pierce (org); Billy Mitchell (d). 3/69.

 At Long Last George Savant 2035 Freeman; Maurice Brown (t); Von Freeman (ts); Gerey Johnson (g); Curtis Prince (d); Kevin Patrick (perc); Rene Marie (v). 10/00.

George's debut was an album of easy-going guitar/tenor/organ jazz, with some funky contributions from brother Von. 'Mama, Papa, Brother' and 'Cough It Up' are generic but great fun. The only variation is the larger ensemble – including McIntyre – which plays on 'Must Be, Must Be'. More from that line-up would have been intriguing. There have been other more recent records but the Savant is the only current survivor. The mix is pretty much as before, though the emphasis falls more squarely on George's licks and fills. 'I've Grown Accustomed To Her Face' and 'Surrey With The Fringe On Top' are two standouts.

Russ Freeman (1926–2002)

PIANO

The Chicagoan was on the West Coast as early as 1946 and worked with Chet Baker and Shelly Manne before moving to TV as an MD.

(*) Safe At Home Just a Memory 1041 Freeman (p solo). 49.

(*) One On One Contemporary 14090-2 Freeman; Shelly Manne (d). 6/82.

The solo piano disc is from home recordings made in Canada. They're musing, lovely things, always anchored on Russ's strong left hand, and sometimes accompanied by gentle singing. A curiosity, but a worthwhile glimpse. Freeman and Manne had cut a duo session 28 years earlier, but this is otherwise a rare later sighting of Russ, when he rarely made jazz sessions. The same strong left hand makes up for the absence of a bassist, and the session has a nice, freewheeling sound to it without straying too far from a cool kind of bop. It's a treat to be reminded of Manne's complete mastery of the kit, the sticks and the brushes, and if Freeman was in any way rusty it seldom shows. A few extra tracks are added on and Russ contributes an affectionate sleeve-note to a reissue which, sadly, emerged only months before his death. There's also a good Mosaic Select.

Von Freeman (born 1922)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

For a long time very much in the shadow of his son, Chico, and he spent a lot of time away from jazz altogether. In his 50s, though, he returned to the fold and since then has created a body of eccentrically clustered but virile Chicago swing.

 Doin' It Right Now Koch 8536 Freeman; John Young (p); Sam Jones (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 72.

 Young And Foolish Challenge 75017 Freeman; John Young (p); David Shipp (b); Wilbur Campbell, Charles Walton (d). 8/77.

While Chico has explored sometimes baffling extremes of free jazz and neo-funk, Von Freeman has stuck with a curious down-home style that occasionally makes his saxophone sound as if it is held together with rubber bands and sealing wax. Von was 50 before he made his debut as leader. Roland Kirk produced it for Atlantic. In some respects, it's an odd set. Kicking off with 'The First Time Ever I Saw Your Face' seems an unlikely stratagem for a Chicago bluesman, but Von makes it sound like something written a stone's throw from Lakeshore Drive. The originals include a 'Portrait' of pianist Young, who is the unsung hero of the date, as well as the title-tune and the enigmatic 'White Sand'.

Young And Foolish consists of just three long tracks, of which the opener, 'I'll Close My Eyes', is positively epic. Von's unusual tone and relaxed phrasing work surprisingly well at this length, but the high-point of the set is the rather shorter take of 'Bye Bye Blackbird', on which Young is heroic, a neglected master of jazz piano.

() Never Let Me Go / () Lester Leaps In /  Dedicated To You Steeplechase SCCD 31310 / 31320 / 31351 Freeman; Jodie Christian (p); Eddie De Haas (b); Wilbur Campbell (d). 5/92.

Any fears that Freeman was going to be turned into an overnight sensation just in time for his bus-pass failed to materialize. His more recent career has been a self-confident demonstration that a recording contract is a spoonful of jam, but not necessarily bread and butter to a jazz musician. However, for his 70th birthday, the old boy treated himself to a Paris trip, where these were recorded with a resolutely old-fashioned air that might date from 1975. This has something to do with the sound of Christian's electric piano, but also the very foursquare beat that Campbell favours. The Rollins accents that Freeman brings to 'The End Of A Love Affair' and 'I'll Remember April' on Never, and still more noticeably to 'A Nightingale Sang In Berkeley Square' on Lester Leaps In, haven't been so much in evidence before. The delicacy that used to be dusted only sparsely over ballads is now a major component of the sound, and there are touches of near-genius on the chestnut 'Alone Together' and the heart-on-sleeve Cole Porter 'I Love You', which alone make this a vintage performance. Dedicated To You is a bit lacking in punch, a further example of Steeplechase's tendency to squeeze every last drop out of a recording session.

 Inside Chicago Volumes 3 & 4 Steeplechase SCCD 31531 / 31532 Freeman; Brad Goode (t); Paul McKee (tb); Ron Perillo (p); Stewart Miller (b); Bob Rummage (d). 1–2/93.

These are out of apparent sequence because volume three is an earlier session than the dates below ('in brief'). Teamed with Goode, one of the livewires of Chicago jazz, Freeman sounds in great shape at the Green Mill club, over by Lawrence Avenue. There's a strong bop feel to the set-list, with 'A Night In Tunisia' and 'Star Eyes' both outstanding on the first album, but it's Von's distinctive timbre and loosely swinging ideas that carry the day. The sound isn't too bad, though some moments are off-mic. The second set is, if anything, better, but only because it features 'Bye Bye Blackbird', a theme that always seems to get the best out of Von. Again, one well-packed album might have sufficed.

(*) 75th Birthday Celebration Half Note Records 4903 2 Freeman; Chico Freeman (ts); Willie Pickens (p); Brian Sandstrom (b); Robert Shy (d); Dianne Reeves (v). 7/98.

(*) Von & Ed Delmark DE 508 As above, except omit Chico Freeman, Reeves; add Ed Petersen (ts). 98.

The 75th birthday album came a year late, but the idea was sparked by an appearance by Von and Chico, with Von's guitarist brother George, at the Chicago Jazz Festival the year before; drummer Bruz Freeman, another brother, stayed home in Hawaii, but remarkably Von's mother, almost 100, is there in spirit, listening to the show go out on radio.

Having honoured the old man back home, Chico's idea was to give him a further party in New York at the Blue Note, and the record is a document of two spring nights with Chico's group there. The material is pretty much out of the book – 'Softly, As In A Morning Sunrise', 'There Is No Greater Love' and 'Lover Man' – but they also do Chico's delightful 'To Hear A Teardrop In The Rain'. It's great to hear the Freemans playing together, as it always is, the lad all fabulous technique and gleaming speed, the dad content with pedal power and guile, but still getting there ahead as often as not. Dianne Reeves does a pretty guest spot on 'Comes Love', but since it's placed early in the set, it doesn't really change its character, which is thoughtful, driving saxophone improvisation, culminating in Newk's 'Tenor Madness'.

A very different second horn on the set with Petersen. The only piece in common in a rather boppish set is 'Lover Man', and this more than anything exposes differences in the respective rhythm sections. Ed and Von have much in common, not least the kind of sweetness that boils dangerously, like overheated caramel. There are touches of that on the opening 'Mr P.C.', which brings a rootsy but exploratory quality to Trane's blues theme. Miles's 'Four' is more straightforwardly interpreted, though Von, coming through the left channel and from left-field, to a large degree ignores the modes. The rest of the set is a dip back into the bop bag, with 'Lover Man' followed by 'A Night In Tunisia' and an explosive closing version of 'Lover'. Studio-recorded, Von sometimes sounds ropey, but Riverside in Chicago is on the back doorstep; Von obviously has a rapport with engineer Paul Serrano and supervising producer Robert Koester, and he treats the gig pretty much as if it were a club set. Not quite as compelling as the birthday party, but possibly of more interest to hardcore Vonskians.

(*) The Improvisor Premonition 90757 Freeman; Jason Moran (p); Mark Helias (b); Michael Raynor, Nasheet Waits (d). 12/01–1/02.

As he approached his 80th birthday, Freeman showed no signs of slowing. These sides were cut in and around Chicago in the months before the big day with a top-drawer young band. The material is fascinatingly varied, from Kenny Dorham's 'Blue Bossa' to Duke Ellington's little-known 'I Like The Sunrise'; Von also includes a couple of originals, 'Ski-Wee' and 'Blues For Billie', both of which are more than just blowing vehicles. Though the tone is as erratic and eccentric as ever, he sounds in great voice and his phrasing and chorus-shaping on 'If I Should Lose You' are impeccable, if deliberately rough-hewn.

 The Great Divide /  Good Forever Premonition/Koch 5743 / Premonition 90768 Freeman; Richard Wyands (p); John Webber (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 5 & 6/03; 4/06.

The concept here seems to be the divide (if such it was) between swing and bebop and Von's attempt to bridge it, or show that it was always more critical artefact than reality in the first place. With a great band behind him and a fantastic set of tunes, he tackles the legacy of Coleman Hawkins, Lester Young and Charlie Parker, without explicitly pastiching any of them. 'Disorder At The Border' and the original 'Never Fear, Jazz Is Here' are probably the two key tracks, the first a swing masterpiece, the second focused on Parker's complex harmonics, but both delivered with the usual idiosyncratic tone and attack. 'Violets For Your Furs' is taken in a different direction from the Coltrane version, though Von seems to quote it in his second chorus. There's some advanced stuff tucked away here, too, solos that border on complete freedom from the changes. The magic continues on the second disc, suggesting that this could turn into a great 'late period' band. Concentrating mostly on ballads and blues, and pitched at 'the ladies', as Von graciously puts it, it lacks some of the dynamism of its predecessor, but the speed of thought and elegance of execution are still impressive.

Also, in brief:

(*) Inside Chicago: Volumes 1 & 2 Steeplechase SCCD 31500 / 31501. 95.

A fairly average club date that really doesn't merit two discs. Judicious editing needed.

 Live At The Dakota Premonition 90750. 4–5/96.

He does 'My Little Brown Book' unaccompanied, includes 'Footprints', a favourite of Chico's, and the group plays a terrific 'Bye Bye Blackbird' too.

(*) You Talkin' To Me? Delmark DE 525. 8/99.

Frank Catalano (ts) is almost two generations younger than Von, but he holds his own magnificently on this hard-blowing session.

 The Best Of Von Freeman On Premonition Koch 5004. 01–06.

Rich pickings from an artist in his pomp.

Free Range Rat

GROUP

Fronted by Either/Orchestra man John Carlson, this outfit mixes up loose-limbed free jazz and funkier lines.

 Free Range Rat CIMP 189 John Carlson (t); Eric Hipp (ts); Shawn McGloin (b); Scott Neumann (d). 10/98.

(*) Nut Club Clean Feed CF053 As above, except omit Neumann; add Douglas Yates (cl, bcl); George Schuller (d, perc). 06.

Originally a Carlson–Hipp duo, FRR has gradually acquired a group identity. The trumpeter likes working with unorthodox and challenging saxophone-players – as witness his work with William Gagliardi – and he thrives in this setting. The original idea was to concentrate somewhat on Sun Ra material, though by the second record that has shrunk to just one track, 'The Satellites Are Spinning'. It's more obviously eclectic than the first, with Blood Ulmer's 'Nut Club Non-Believer' providing the title and a vigorously 'harmolodic' opening, and Bob Marley's 'So Much Trouble In The World' fulfilling a quota of contemporary pop repertoire. There's a single Ellington piece on the first album, but idiosyncratically interpreted. There's a touch more polish to the Clean Feed set, as might be expected, and the textures are nicely varied. Schuller's addition of 'rattly kinds-of-things' brings a funky touch, even if it's irritating to read that, and Yates gives pieces like the lowing 'Below Canal' a rich tonal dimension. Hipp's a consistently underrated player; listen to his feature on the trumpetless 'Hipp-Hopp'. The rhythm players sit it out for 'Horn Trio #2'. Both are worth trying; we'd plump for the Portuguese set.

Paolo Fresu (born 1961)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN, CORNET, ELECTRONICS, PERCUSSION

Grew up in Sardinia and played as a teenager in the town band. Moved towards jazz and began recording in the '80s; he has since become one of the highest-profile new-school Italian players.

 Ostinato Splasc(h) 106-2 Fresu; Tino Tracanna (ss, ts); Roberto Cipelli (p); Attilio Zanchi (b); Ettore Fioravanti (d). 1/85.
 Inner Voices Splasc(h) H 110-2 As above, except add David Liebman (ss, f). 4/86.
(*) Mamut: Music For A Mime Splasc(h) H 127-2 As above, except omit Liebman; add Mimmo Cafiero (perc). 11/85–5/86.
 Quatro /  Live In Montpellier Splasc(h) H 160-2 / 301-2 As above, except omit Cafiero. 4–6/88; 7/88.

An outstanding exponent of the new Italian jazz, Fresu is in much demand as a sideman, but his records as a leader offer some of the best views of his music, if you can find them. Fresu's early quintet included the agile Tracanna and the expert Zanchi, and together they follow an energetic yet introspective jazz that suggests a remote modern echo of a mid-'50s Miles Davis group. The soloists generally have more to say than the compositions do and the records never quite take off. Liebman is soon at home on Inner Voices; the live record from Montpellier is scrappy yet often more exciting than the others; and Quatro has some bright originals. Mamut, though, is the best of these records: although the programme is a collection of fragments for the theatre, the miniatures include some of Fresu's most vivid writing, and the title-piece and 'Pa' are themes which hang in the memory. Fresu even finds something new to say on a solo reading of 'Round Midnight'.

 Evening Song Owl 014733-2 Fresu; Michele Eletto (frhn); Alessandra Giura Longo (f); Mario Nobile (clo); Furio Di Castri (b, elec, perc). 4/91.
(*) Contos EGEA CSA 039 Fresu; John Taylor (p); Furio Di Castri (b). 93.

The Fresu–Di Castri partnership now extends to several records (some under the bassist's name), and while the music has its merely pretty side, there's underlying sinew: the electronics are used with miserly restraint, and though something like 'Una Notte Sul Divano' seems like a bag of effects, it's immediately countered by the noble melody of 'Ossi Di Seppia', one of two tracks where flute, horn and cello join in. This isn't the best of their records, but it's stimulating enough. Contos is a concert recording. Taylor's cultured playing gloves some of the sharper directions which Fresu and Di Castri like to pursue, but the playing wants nothing in the way of steady-going lyricism, and the piano's harmonic weight builds on the originals – try Di Castri's 'Evening Song' to see how much Taylor finds in the material.

 Night On The City Owl 013425-2 Fresu; Tino Tracanna (ss, ts); Roberto Cipelli (p); Attilio Zanchi (b); Ettore Fioravanti (d). 5/94.
(*) Ensalada Mistica Splasc(h) 415 As above, except add Gianluigi Trovesi (as, cl, bcl). 5/94.

A decade of work made this into a very confident, imposing group. Fresu is generous about sharing space, but his is still the most impressive single voice: luxurious brass sound, firm delivery, staunchless flow of ideas. Still, Trovesi and Tracanna make a formidable front line, and the rhythm section continues to grow. Both sets were made at the same sessions; Night On The City was conceived, as Fresu puts it, 'almost as a game': a set of new music by band members, played immediately after one of the sessions for Ensalada Mistica, all done in one two-hour, after-midnight stretch, 'the emotion of a single night in the city', which sounds more like a reading than a performance. The Splasc(h) date brings in Trovesi (no explanation for his absence from the other set), and he typically adds an extra, rumbustious dimension to an already considerable band. Neither record has much of the blowing session in it: speeds rarely get above a mid-tempo stroll, and improvisations are put squarely at the service of the composition.

 Morph Label Bleu LBLC 6669 Fresu; Antonello Salis (p, acc); Furio Di Castri (b). 1/04.

One is tempted to dock them a notch for putting in pretentious space-filling such as the opening and closing tracks, which document their arrival and departure from the studio. But 'South Shout', 'Timbuktu' and the slow tango feel of 'Knock Out' are so effective that the players breeze right past any misgivings. Maybe it's time Fresu went back to a 'proper' band and got a great record out of it. But there still seems to be lovely music in every record he puts his name on.

 Rosso, Verde, Giallo E Blu EMI Blue Note 91252 Fresu; Tino Tracanna (ss, ts); Attilio Zanchi (cbsn); Roberto Cipelli (p, v); Ettore Fioravanti (d). 5/05.

An exquisite quintet recording designed to highlight Fresu's compositions. While it's wonderful to see EMI get behind this music, one has to wonder how much circulation it will have. Fresu's discography is extensive but not easy to pin down and more than two thirds of it is at the moment impossible to find outside Italy. This may join those shadowy ranks all too quickly.

 Mare Nostrum ACT 9466 Fresu; Richard Galliano (acc); Jan Lundgren (p). 1/07.

Sweet harmonies, naggingly familiar tunes (all originals apart from a Jobim, a Trenet, a Ravel from Ma Mère l'Oye, and a traditional folk air arranged by Lundgren), but an overall air of insipid lyricism that does no justice to the formidable musicianship of this trio. Lundgren's a patient man, happy to work his way around the edges, when what's needed is something more of Di Castri's interventionist flair. It's lovely, but slightly empty.

Also, in brief:

(*) Scores! CAM 7758-2. 6–12/02.

Filmscore records are problematic as stand-alone pieces. This, for Il più crudele dei giorni and L'isola, almost works on its own terms, but doesn't stand up to many returns without the images.

 Stanley Music EMI Blue Note 512845. 07.

With the Devil Quartet.

Erik Friedlander (born 1960)

CELLO

A New York new-music session regular, equally happy solo and in ensemble.

 The Watchman Tzadik TZ 7107 Friedlander; Chris Speed (cl); Andrew D'Angelo (bcl); Drew Gress (b). 1/96.

This is the quartet which made its debut on the Japan-only, self-titled Chimera. Issued as part of Tzadik's Radical Jewish Culture series, the music here is grave, stately and ceremonial, with very little resort to extended techniques. The blurb which comes with the CD says that the melody lines are 'reminiscent of cantorial singing', but that rather facile suggestion overlooks Friedlander's carefully weighted ensemble writing, which is the abiding feature. Maybe they say all they have to in the 12 minutes of 'Elisha'.

 Topaz Siam SMD-50003 Friedlander; Andy Laster (as); Stomu Takeishi (b); Satoshi Takeishi (perc). 12/97.

 Skin Siam SMD-50008 As above, except add Alexander Fedoriouk (cimbalom); Atlas Cello Quartet. 6/99.

Friedlander's tunes are abetted in Topaz by two Eric Dolphy numbers and Miles Davis's 'Tout De Suite', all three of which receive quiet transformations into what is essentially a chamber music language. Laster's melodious playing, the incisive but not overbearing thrum of Stomu Takeishi's electric bass and the spare patterns of Satoshi Takeishi's percussion instruments are intermingled with a simple generosity. Since each man is seemingly reluctant to step out, the music comes across as all of a piece, although one occasionally wishes for an outburst to enliven a rather monochromatic palette (a title like 'Three Desperate Men' doesn't live up to its billing). But the improvising has the polish of experience and high craft.

The follow-up opens its viewfinder just a little more. Besides the originals, there are covers of Henry Mancini, Googoosh, Mingus, Hemphill and Carlos Santana, and we have to say that a strong melody (Mancini's 'Susan') does provide an assist. It remains an intriguing instrumentation, but there's an odd pop-fusion feel to some of the music where one expects a deeper intensity. Fedoriouk and the quartet lend exoticism and weight respectively.

(*) Volac: Book Of Angels – Volume 8 Tzadik TZ7363 Friedlander (clo solo). 9/07.

An immensely powerful performance that makes completely idiomatic sense of Zorn's now familiar melodic archaeologies. It's a hard listen over the span of the CD, but track by track Friedlander delivers a vividly intense sound.

Also, in brief:

() Grains Of Paradise Tzadik TZ 7154. 6/01.

A disappointing return to the label's 'Radical' sequence, this feels like anything but, verging on mood music.

 Block Ice And Propane Skipstone 1. 07.

An American road movie, played on cello. Halfway between Kodály and Bill Frisell. Remarkable.

Dave Friedman (born 1944)

VIBRAPHONE, MARIMBA, PERCUSSION

Studied percussion at Juilliard and worked in NY classical circles before moving into jazz with Wayne Shorter and other leaders.

 Other Worlds Intuition 3210-2 Friedman; Jean-Louis Matinier (p acc); Anthony Cox (b); François Verly (perc). 97.

Friedman's methods are unusual among vibes-players in that he seems at least as interested in the percussive and rhythmic qualities of the instrument as he is in harmony and melody. He also uses the marimba as often as he does the vibraphone. There's not much under his own name at present, though a couple of things have appeared on Traumton and Skip; an early ECM is neglected. The most singular voice here is Matinier, who makes light of the accordion's café connotations. Friedman plays a subdued role, working more closely with Cox than in the front line, and the music that results has an ethereal feel which doesn't quite evade the blandness that often troubles the leader's work. The Jobim tune 'O Grande Amor' is typical of the tuneful if slender repast on offer.

Don Friedman (born 1935)

PIANO

Studied classical piano before working in and around San Francisco, in the '50s–'60s; played with Jimmy Giuffre, Herbie Mann, Ornette Coleman and Charles Lloyd, then slipped from view until revived by the Steeplechase label.

 A Day In The City Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1775 Friedman; Chuck Israels (b); Joe Hunt (d). 6/61.

(*) Circle Waltz Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1885 Friedman; Chuck Israels (b); Pete LaRoca (d).

Friedman's experimentalism is of a relaxed, Californian sort. He started out as a relatively orthodox West Coaster, bringing aspects of the Bill Evans style to work with Shorty Rogers, Jimmy Giuffre and others, but increasingly he has incorporated elements of classical composition and 12-tone technique, as well as abstraction, to his playing. The leitmotif that governs A Day In The City is well disguised. Subtitled 'Six Variations On A Theme' and devoted to the hours from dawn through rush hour to the mildly threatening hush of the night, it never quite declares its central subject but toys with several possibilities. Elegantly and atmospherically played, and the nocturne has a Bill Evans feel.

Circle Waltz introduces LaRoca, and his brisk, tuneful cymbal work sets the later date apart. Typically, Friedman sticks to familiar material, a superb rendition of 'I Hear A Rhapsody', which almost conjures up the lyric, and an unsentimental intepretation of Dave Brubeck's 'In Your Own Sweet Way'.

(*) Dreams And Explorations Original Jazz Classics OJC 1907 Friedman; Attila Zoller (g); Dick Kniss (b); Dick Berk (d). 64.

(*) Metamorphosis Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1914 Friedman; Attila Zoller (g); Richard Davis (b); Joe Chambers (d). 2/66.

Zoller's a welcome second lead voice. There are a couple of standards on the first disc; otherwise most of the music is original. With sympathetic rhythm sections, they create a jazz which flirts with freedom, often runs on contrapuntal – even confrontational – lines, hotter than a Tristano school date, but with something of that doctrine. After four unsparing themes on Dreams And Explorations, it comes almost as a relief when they tackle the melody of John Carisi's 'Israel', which isn't a tune to coast on. The later Metamorphosis includes some fascinating pieces – Giuffre's 'Drive' and Zoller's 'Troubadours Groovedour' in particular – but there's a certain fussiness which holds the group back. Don't expect 'forgotten masterpieces', just strong modern records, unjustly overlooked.

(*) Almost Everything Steeplechase SCCD 31468 Friedman; Ron McClure (b); Matt Wilson (d). 4/95.

At 60, Friedman seemed disinclined to ease up on the pace. This is a resilient demonstration of his mature skills. Even 'On Green Dolphin Street' gives up fresh secrets. There is a brief group of originals, most impressively 'Before The Rain' (perhaps a reference to Coltrane) and 'Waltz For Marilyn'. McClure is sterling in support and Wilson goes about his business with assurance.

(*) The Days Of Wine And Roses Soul Note 121277-2 Friedman; Marco Ricci (b); Giampiero Prina (d). 3/95.

The four originals are worked out freely from barely sketched structures ('Hi Low Fast Low Hi') while the five standards depart from convention without departing too dramatically from the originals, the melody rarely far away – and the harmonies never clothed too heavily. Prina and Ricci came to this date unprepared, but they acquit themselves well.

* My Romance Steeplechase SCCD 31403 Friedman (p solo). 11/96.

Friedman works through some favourite songs. Beginning with 'How Deep Is The Ocean', he nails the Evans connection from the off, and then continues with a self-deprecating roster of classics: 'These Foolish Things', 'My Foolish Heart', 'I Can't Get Started', 'My Romance', 'My Funny Valentine', 'Angel Eyes' and 'Darn That Dream'; each of them suffused with ironic intelligence.

(*) Invitation Progressive 7043 Friedman; George Mraz (b); Ronnie Bedford (d). 98.

 Opus D'Amour Sackville SKCD 2-3058 Friedman; Don Thompson (b). 99.

Approaching 70, Don plays with magisterial calm, wit and a constant sense of adventure. Invitation is delicious, graced by the elegant Mraz and driven along by the impressive Bedford. Some of the harmonic elision on 'Little Boat' and 'You Stepped Out Of A Dream' is a reminder that the man once played with Ornette Coleman, when the saxophonist still had a use for piano-players. For the most part, though, Don attends to the dynamic and drama of the song and glides through the changes. There's no self-conscious switch from structure to improvisation. Theme statements sound fresh and spontaneous; solos sound as if they were precision-engineered by someone in love with his materials.

The duets with Thompson are in the same vein, but more spacious and laid-back in delivery. That Friedman once roomed with Scott LaFaro (see 'Memory Of Scotty') perhaps explains his affection for bass-players. There should probably be warning signs round duo recordings of 'Alone Together', but this one manages to coax new ideas from the old groaner, while 'My Funny Valentine' is fragile and wry. Thompson's lovely articulation is rendered in intimate close-up.

 Waltz For Debby /  My Favorite Things 441 Records 26 / 27 Friedman; George Mraz (b); Lewis Nash (d). 5/02; 10/03.

There's no mistaking the influence on the first of these, even if Bill's lovely theme isn't included. Mraz is in great form throughout, but his work on 'The Shadow Of Your Smile' is stunning, a counter-melody working away underneath the familiar line. Nash is also well up to his high standard and sounding very clean and delicate. 'From A To Z' is one of many nods to Zoller down the years. With both the title-tune and 'Giant Steps' on the set-list for the second of these, it might almost have been intended as a Coltrane tribute, except that the really strong tracks are actually Friedman originals. 'Schmooze Blooze' and 'Half And Half' are taxing lines, but the faster stuff is tempered by a magnificent ballad closer, 'Summer's End', one of Don's best performances on record.

(*) Hot House Chiaroscuro 376 Friedman; Tim Armacost (ss, ts); Ron McClure (b); Tony Jefferson (d). 5/03.

This was a busy and productive year for Friedman, yielding a string of inventive albums. The highlight of Hot House isn't a group track at all, but a solo version of 'But Beautiful'. However, the band really cooks and Armacost adds an unexpected element to several of the tracks. 'Soul Eyes' is taken as a duet with McClure.

(*) Scarborough Fair Sony/CBS 18825 SACD Friedman; Ron Carter (b); Omar Hakim (d). 3/05.

Hakim seems an unusual choice but fits into this context well, and plays some delightfully melodic stuff while Carter holds the centre. The old English song is a rare jazz cover, but the outstanding tracks here are a long 'You'd Be So Nice To Come Home To' and the closing solo 'Stella By Starlight'. Immaculate SACD sound.

 Piano Works: From A To Z ACT 9755-2 Friedman (p solo). 11/05.

Friedman seems to devote an inordinate amount of time to tribute situations. This, again, is for Attila Zoller. Another fine solo set, which sounds almost like a summing-up. One hopes Friedman doesn't intend it as a retirement speech. 'Memory Of Scotty' recalls his time with the legendary Scott LaFaro, and has a bittersweet edge as a result. 'I Concentrate On You' keeps the harmonies rotating. He brings a strong rhythmic dimension to the title-track and a fine interpretation of Monk's 'Ask Me Now'. Fine stuff from the old master, who actually sounds much too fired up to be considering pipe and slippers. Time now for one of the younger guys to do a Friedman homage, while he's still around.

(*) Moon River Sony/CBS 18837 SACD Friedman (p solo). 06.

The new contract at Sony is giving Friedman some of the best sound of his career and this hybrid SACD release is a perfect example: limpid sound, every detail audible, with long rich decays on the pedalled notes. That said, the music is slightly anodyne. The Mancini–Mercer tune was an old favourite of Attila Zoller's. It's transposed here to the Hudson as part of what's subtitled a 'New York Monologue'. The theming isn't intrusive but 'Five Spot After Dark' and 'Autumn In New York' pick up the idea nicely and 'Tonight' is saccharine-free.

* Waltz For Marilyn Jazz Excursion 110 Friedman; Peter Bernstein (g); Martin Wind (b); Tony Jefferson (d). 3/07.

Recent claimants to the piano trio crown may be thinking again. With Wind again in top form, Friedman turns in a blue-chip bop set – mostly original material – so smoothly authoritative that Bernstein's hardly needed in his guest role. The title-tune is a beauty, elegantly crafted and ever so subtle. Again, there's an elegiac strain to much of it, though the tempos aren't sleepy, but it's full of wisdom rather than cynicism.

Also, in brief:

 Flashback Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1903. 63.

Courts the inevitable comparison with Bill Evans, but is original enough to survive it.

 Hot Pepper And Knepper Progressive PCD 7036. 6/78.

This has to be co-credited to the hornmen namechecked (Jimmy K. and P. Adams) but Friedman is in strong form, particularly on two very different takes of 'Beautiful Love'.

(*) Attila's Dreams Ephemeris Jazz 023. 99.

Another wonderful memorial to the late Attila Zoller.

 Match Point TBR 109576. 99.

A lot of basic comping to do on this one, but Alyse Levy (v) does some nice songs: 'Time After Time' a highlight.

 Standards In Cagliari Soul Note 121377. 7/99.

Agreeable trio date in the Sardinian heat.

 My Foolish Heart Steeplechase SCCD 31534. 4/00.

Saxophonist Jed Levy isn't quite right for this session, though his soprano work on 'Petite Fleur' is absolutely idiomatic and he comes in with a beautifully constructed solo on 'Memory Of Scotty'. The trio tracks are better.

 Timeless 441 Records 29. 10/03.

The VIP Trio teamed Friedman with John Patitucci (b) and Omar Hakim (d), two players he hadn't previously encountered. It's a very happy chemistry.

 Live At Jazzbaltica Skip 90582. 7/04.
Recorded at Salzau, Germany, with a nice version of his tribute to LaFaro (Martin Wind bows his bass).

David Friesen (born 1942)

DOUBLE BASS

He studied music while with the US Army in Germany and subsequently worked with John Handy and Joe Henderson. A varied output includes New Age projects. He favours the amplified acoustic Oregon bass.

 Paths Beyond Tracing Steeplechase SCCD 31138 Friesen (b solo). 2/80.
 Amber Skies Quicksilver 4005 Friesen; Joe Henderson (ts); Paul Horn (f); Chick Corea (p); Paul Motian (d). 1–4/83.
Much of the bassist's work falls outside the remit of this book. Nevertheless, he has issued some fine jazz recordings. The best of them is Amber Skies, which calls on former employer Henderson (in fine form) and a top-notch group: good jazz flute from Horn, best known as a fusion player. Miles Davis's 'Blue In Green' stands up to a robust examination, a much better direction for Friesen's talents than lame originals like 'In The Place Of Calling'.

The leader's bass style is modelled loosely on Scott LaFaro but without Scottie's rhythmic and harmonic subtleties; the contemporary he most resembles is Glen Moore of Oregon. It isn't always possible to tell when Friesen is playing his amplified instrument, but his tendency is to play loudly and with a lot of vibrato. The unaccompanied solos are lyrical, sometimes grandiose and showy, but always with a strong musical logic. It's a specialist market, but dabblers will find much to enjoy in 'Tender Hearted', 'Song In The Night' and even the little nature snapshots that punctuate the set.

(*) Remembering The Moment Soul Note 121278 Friesen; Julian Priester (tb); Jim Pepper (ts); Mal Waldron (p); Eddie Moore (d). 6/87.
... but unfortunately no one ever remembers this album. It's a dream line-up (and not strictly Friesen's gig) and the live format allows everyone to stretch out over 'Autumn Leaves', 'A Night In Tunisia' and 'All Blues': workhorse material, but lifted by the sheer quality of the playing. Priester and Waldron both in fine form, Pepper possibly a bit subdued, Friesen holding it all together and soloing thoughtfully.

() Returning Burnside 13 Friesen; Glen Moore (b). 95.
 Live At Jazz Bakery Intuition 1999 Friesen; Denny Zeitlin (p). 5/96.
* With You In Mind Summit 290 Friesen; Gary Versace (p). 7/00.
() Made In Berlin / (*) Made In Istanbul ITM 14106 / 14203 Friesen; Uwe Kropinski (g). 5/99.
* Grace Khaeon 200203 Friesen; Jeff Gardner (p). 12/99.
The intimacy of duo conversation clearly appeals more than group performance. The Jazz Bakery dates with Zeitlin are possibly a bit soft centred but are eminently listenable. Material as challenging as Shorter's 'Nefertiti' and Coltrane's 'Equinox' doesn't usually turn up in supper-club jazz. The partnerships with Jeff Gardner and Gary Versace are less evenly balanced. Friesen is clearly a better technician and a faster musical brain than either of his partners, though Gardner writes most of the material on their set, recorded live in Belgium. A similar set-up on the duo album with old associate Kropinski, who's a very good writer indeed.

Favoured items of repertoire include 'All The Things You Are', 'My Funny Valentine' and, above all, Miles Davis's 'Blue In Green', which also turns up on the double bass summit Returning. Moore and Friesen avoid any New Age embarrassments with strong interplay on the self-explanatory 'Free Bowing' and lovely versions of those favourite standards. Standout track from With You In Mind is a lithe 'You And The Night And The Music'.

() The Name Of A Woman / () Midnight Mood Intuition 3334 / 3374 Friesen; Randy Porter (b); Alan Jones (d). 1/99, 1/00; 3 & 4/02.
These are very good indeed. There's a very straightforward concept on the first disc, with every track in some way associated with a woman's name. They range from Sam Rivers's classic 'Beatrice', Lee Morgan's 'Ceora' and Wayne Shorter's 'Delores' to 'Audrey', 'Emily' and Friesen's own 'Kirsten'. Lots of romantic balladry, yet what's striking about the record is not the valentine's heart aspect at all ('M. F. V.' is, of course, included) but the rigour with which the trio interrogate the material. It's strong-minded and often revelatory group work, with Jones's hand-made drums. an important feature. The live Midnight Mood was recorded in Stockholm, with Joe Zawinul's title-piece and Coltrane's 'Equinox' providing a startling opening sequence. 'How Deep Is The Ocean?' and 'Come Rain Or Come Shine' are more conventional fare but Friesen lays into both with abandon.

John Frigo (1916–2007)

VIOLIN, BASS

Frigo grew up in a poor Chicago neighbourhood and started on violin, but he later took up bass and was a regular in city clubs for three decades. Since 1980 he again focused on the violin.

 I Love John Frigo, He Swings Verve 986106-2 Frigo; Cy Touff (b-t); Mike Simpson (ts, f); Vic Val (ts); Dick Marx (p, cel); Herb Ellis (g); Ray Brown (b); Phil Faieta, Norm Jeffries (d). 57.
Chico Marx's sideman, bassist behind just about everyone who played in Chicago at a certain time, Frigo is a mostly unsung stalwart of the music. Mercury offered him this one-off date, playing with local Chicago guys such as Simpson and Val. Frigo was still mainly doing bassman work then, but he plays it only on the closing novelty 'Big Me – Little Me' here. Otherwise there is some show-stopping display in the likes of 'Polka Dots And Moonbeams' and 'Blow Fiddle Blow', and some queasily romantic work on the ballads. Dick Marx, then something of a jazz recording star but now almost forgotten, does the competent piano parts.

(*) Live From Studio A In New York City Chesky 264 Frigo; Bucky Pizzarelli, John Pizzarelli (g); Ron Carter, Michael Moore (b); Butch Miles (d). 11/88.
 Debut Of A Legend Chesky 119 Frigo; Bob Kindred (ts, cl); Joe Vito (p); Gene Bertoncini (g); Michael Moore (b); Bill Goodwin (d). 5/94.
 Live At The Floating Jazz Festival Chiaroscuro 358 Frigo; Joe Vito (p); Rob Thomas (vn); Terry Gibbs (vib); Larry Gray (b); Rick Frigo (d). 11/97.
 Johnny Frigo's DNA Exposed Arbors ARCD 19258 Frigo; Bill Charlap (p); Bucky Pizzarelli, Frank Vignola (g); Nicki Parrott (b); Joe Ascione (d). 4/01.
Frigo launched the Chesky label with the Studio A date (the number's a reissue) and became an international star as a result, still playing festivals in his 70s. It's a strong set, with a great band, though Miles is typically showy. The second title's a bit misleading, and actually it's a more workmanlike group and sound, with Frigo firing off his solos a little glibly. The Floating Jazz date is a lot of fun, and the kind of setting Johnny ate up in later years, but it's all a bit showbizzy even if Thomas's and Gibbs's walk-on are worthwhile. The last of the bunch is a bit more various, not so much in personnel or material, as simply in that Johnny varies his attack more readily and creates a well-seasoned and nicely paced set that's brilliantly engineered by Jim Czak.

The Fringe

GROUP

A long-standing trio of free-boppers, formed in 1978 and still going strong, albeit on an occasional basis.

(*) It's Time For The Fringe Soul Note 121205 George Garzone (sax); John Lockwood (b); Bob Gullotti (d); Nick Racheotes (v). 4/92.

 Live / (*) Live In Israel /  Live At Iseo A.V. Arts ADJ CD 004 / Soul Note 121305 / 121375 As above, except omit Racheotes. 3/93; 97; 8/02.

The Fringe plays a pleasantly old-fashioned variety of free bop. The caveman poses on the cover of It's Time For – a reference to 'Neanderthal Man', recited by guest Racheotes – are doubly ironic, since this is such civilized improvisation, polite even when Garzone is screeching up in the false register. It isn't clear why Live is attributed to the George Garzone Trio, since the personnels are identical and the Fringe is still functioning as a unit. Taped at Catania, it offers the group's sunnier side, as well as a standard, 'My One And Only Love', which is interpreted with just enough eccentricity to save it from tedium.

The Israel set, taped at the Red Sea Jazz Festival, has some fabulous playing and is pretty decently recorded. There is a long version of 'Body And Soul', freely interpreted, and a splendid thing called simply 'Response', but it's the sheer array of sound conjured up by the trio which impresses. The Iseo date consists of a single long suite, ultimately not much more than a few scattered themes knitted into the free-jazz equivalent of a long scarf, fun but impracticable. Garzone's ideas are always entertaining, but sometimes what one craves from The Fringe is music that comes from the heart, without further agenda. Shame there's such an unendearing chill over the most recent set.

Bill Frisell (born 1951)

GUITAR, ELECTRIC GUITAR, BANJO, GUITAR SYNTHESIZER, EFFECTS

Raised in Denver, studied at Berklee and began recording at the beginning of the '80s. Associated with downtown New York jazz of that period, but has since touched numerous other bases. One of the first jazz-based guitarists to build an aesthetic around an electronic-effects system.

 In Line ECM 837019-2 Frisell; Arild Andersen (b). 8/82.

Frisell is the first-call guitar man of the contemporary scene, a countrified Hendrix with robust jazz chops, who's a bricks and mortar simplifier rather than an embellisher, even when his effects are switched on.

In Line was effectively a solo album, with some quiet and unassertive support from the redoubtable Andersen. The basic ideas could be jotted down on a couple of sides of manuscript paper, and yet one feels Frisell could have spun ideas out of this material all day. British composer Gavin Bryars subsequently turned the best track, 'Throughout', into an atmospheric concert piece, Sub Rosa. For the most part, though, Frisell's free modal themes are geared to open-ended improvisation.

 Rambler ECM 825234-2 Frisell; Kenny Wheeler (t, c, flhn); Bob Stewart (tba); Jerome Harris (b); Paul Motian (d). 8/84.

(*) Lookout For Hope ECM 833495-2 Frisell; Hank Roberts (clo, v); Kermit Driscoll (b); Joey Baron (d). 3/87.

Frisell's emergence as a convincing leader was slow in coming. Both of these albums suffer from a certain waywardness of focus and a lack of real drive and centre, though Lookout For Hope is wonderful; Driscoll and Baron are a dream team for a player of Frisell's sensibilities. Rambler certainly doesn't succeed at every level and lacks a real acoustic punch, but it offers a fascinating instrumental blend and a sophisticated sense of structure.

On Lookout he samples a wide variety of styles, including country music. Some of it recalls work by Larry Coryell at a similar stage, or Burton, or even Jarrett; but whereas Coryell was a quick-change artiste, Frisell seems bent on evolving a whole new direction.

 Before We Were Born Elektra Musician 960843 Frisell; Billy Drewes, Julius Hemphill (as); Doug Wieselman (bs); Arto Lindsay (g, v); Peter Scherer (ky); Hank Roberts (clo, v); Kermit Driscoll (b); Joey Baron (d, perc); Cyro Baptista (perc).

Frisell's Elektra debut trades almost too self-consciously on his eclecticism and on the seeming divide between aw-shuck modesty and something more aggressive. The supporting cast is well distributed and each member is allowed to make his mark, though it's a rare session that has Hemphill sounding as anodyne as here. The Driscoll–Baron axis comes up trumps yet again, and Roberts and Lindsay are their usual idiosyncratic selves.

(*) This Land Elektra Nonesuch 79316 Frisell; Curtis Fowlkes (tb); Don Byron (cl, bcl); Billy Drewes (as); Kermit Driscoll (b); Joey Baron (d). 10/92.

On This Land, Frisell experiments further with stylistic hybrids, putting together elements of jazz and country music, abstract shapes and tuneful miniatures that have the resonant familiarity of the melodies in Aaron Copland's Appalachian Spring and Billy The Kid. Sonically, it's a fascinating combination, with Fowlkes and Byron often combining to provide elegant dissonances (as on 'Jimmy Carter, Part 1') that are taken over by accordion master Klucevsek on Have A Little Faith (see below).

RE COLLECTION

* Have A Little Faith

Elektra Nonesuch 79301 As above, except omit Fowlkes, Drewes; add Guy Klucevsek (acc). 3/93.

Frisell's marvellous examination of Americana takes in Stephen Foster, Sousa, Ives, Copland, Sonny Rollins, Bob Dylan and, most controversially, Madonna. There's no attempt to debunk or satirize, and even Madonna's 'Live To Tell', despite a heavily distorted cadenza with all Frisell's switches and pedals on, sticks pretty close to the original. Byron's role is relatively marginal, and it's Klucevsek and Baron one particularly remembers, both enjoying themselves mightily.

* Quartet Elektra Nonesuch 79401 Frisell; Ron Miles (t, picc t); Curtis Fowlkes (tb); Eyvind Kang (vn, tba). 96.

Some of the material derives from a Keaton film, Convict 13 (see below for other Keaton-derived recordings), but the bulk of the themes were written for a Gary 'Far Side' Larson television special, and have a sweetly illogical, uncomplicatedly lyrical slant typical of Larson's own work.

The combination of guitar with two – and sometimes three – brass is irresistible, and the pairing of guitar and violin against trumpet and trombone is hard to argue with. Frisell is playing quite simply but at a high level of invention, and in Miles he has a player of markedly similar temperament: quiet, unassertive, but capable of caustic blasts and sudden dark turns.

The cover reproduces American regionalist Thomas Hart Benton's The Boy, a sentimental but unalloyed image of a farm kid leaving the homestead for the city; hard not to think of this as Frisell himself, and not to believe that he appreciates the irony. This is an album he was born to make.

(*) Gone, Just Like A Train Elektra Nonesuch 79479 Frisell; Viktor Krauss (b); Jim Keltner (d). 97.

Surreal power-trio pop-jazz by a new group, with the experienced Keltner offering a great deal more than the solid backbeat that runs through the record. We are less sanguine about Krauss, certainly as a replacement for Driscoll, although on most of these tracks he makes his presence felt and creates rich counter-lines to the guitar. Odd, but enjoyable.

(*) Good Dog, Happy Man Elektra Nonesuch 79536 Frisell; Ry Cooder, Greg Leisz (g); Wayne Horvitz (ky); Victor Krauss (b); Jim Keltner (d). 99.

Flawlessly executed and almost ridiculously beautiful, this took Frisell nowhere musically but won him new fans. The presence of Cooder on the traditional 'Shenandoah', reshaped much like 'Live To Tell' on Have A Little Faith, will intrigue many who have no interest in 'jazz guitar'. Keltner sounds subtler than before. His work on 'Cadillac 1959' initially sounds at odds with Frisell's concept, but it soon becomes clear that he is the anchorman.

(*) Ghost Town Nonesuch 79583 Frisell (g solo). 99.

It's the choice of material rather than the playing that marks this down immediately as Bill's work. His actual execution has seldom been more varied, from the soft, jazz guitar sound of 'My Man's Gone Now' to authentic Nashville accompaniment to the wacky banjo-picking of 'Fingers Snappin' and Toes Tappin'' which comes in at 50 busy seconds. Frisell plays both acoustic and electric, and includes a bit of bass and sampling as well.

He's in softly elegiac mode for much of the record, though there are odd surreal moments like 'Big Bob', which may be named after David Lynch's monstrous id figure in Twin Peaks. Certainly, Bill's take on country does also verge on the sinister. He programmes Hank Williams's 'I'm So Lonesome I Could Cry' and the Carter classic 'Wildwood Flower' and dabbles in a weird hybrid of Californian rock in 'Variation On A Theme'. A lovely, atmospheric record.

 Blues Dream Nonesuch 79615 Frisell; Ron Miles (t); Greg Leisz (pedal steel). 01.

Frisell and Miles have much common ground. Here, the association is taken a step further with the help of Leisz's unidiomatic pedal steel. The short title-track gives way to a moody tribute to 'Ron Carter', which might just as easily be some lost sketch of Miles Davis's. 'Pretty Stars Were Made To Shine' and 'Like Dreamers Do' are constructed like old jukebox singles, 'Greg Leisz' is another Miles-like dedication to a group member, and 'Blues Dream' is reprised at the end to give the whole set an unexpectedly coherent, suite-like quality.

(*) The Intercontinentals Nonesuch 79661 2 Frisell; Jenny Scheinman (vn); Vinicius Cantuária (g, d, perc, v); Greg Leisz (g, pedal steel); Christos Govetas (oud, bouzouki, v); Sidiki Camara (perc, v). 02.

Brazil, Greece and Mali make contact with the American heartland. Frisell's folk-country improvisations interweave with new rhythms and new harmonic possibilities. Cantuária is the other star, and while it is often difficult to disentangle the guitar parts, the Brazilian's distinctive voice is an effective counterpoint to Frisell's. In many respects, this completes a cycle of activity for Bill, all the way back to Have A Little Faith. If it belongs in any bin at all, it is 'creative world fusion jazz', but set 'Boubacar' alongside the traditional 'The Young Monk' alongside Cantuária's 'Perritos' and you could be dealing with many traditions, or none.

 East/West Nonesuch 7559 798 632 2CD Frisell; Viktor Krauss, Tony Scherr (b); Kenny Wollesen (d). 11/03, 5/04.

He bestrides the continent with these live dates from the Village Vanguard (Scherr, and mostly tougher originals) to Yoshi's (Krauss, and mostly standards). Technically, he's bang on, but there are too many dead spots on this live double set and too many moments when Bill seems to think the sheer incongruity of the material is enough to make 'jazz' of some very straight performances. Someone cracks up when he plays the melody to 'People', prompting a wry riposte. But is he joking when he plays this or 'I Heard It Through the Grapevine'? Is Frisell working a new seam of 'standards' or has he fallen back on 'eclecticism'? Too many protective quote marks there, and that might well be his problem, too.

(*) Bill Frisell/Ron Carter/Paul Motian Nonesuch 79897 Frisell; Ron Carter (b); Paul Motian (d). 2/05.

Unlike the date with Dave Holland and Elvin Jones (see below, 'in brief') this works triumphantly, if rather quietly. There is considerable understanding between Frisell and Motian, who have worked together substantially in a trio setting with Joe Lovano, but here, with Bill as the apparent lead voice, the bets are down slightly different. He sounds as relaxed as ever, laying off bright folkish melody lines to which Carter responds exuberantly, as on the opening 'Eighty One', but for much of the record the real action is between bass and drums. On 'Misterioso', it's clear that the guitarist really is the junior partner; they run rings round him. Elsewhere, on Frisell's 'Monroe' and on the other Monk tune, 'Raise Four', the exchanges are a little more accommodating. Not just a supergroup concept, this one has a rich, organic logic and many gentle satisfactions.

Also, in brief:

 :rarum: Bill Frisell Selected Recordings ECM 014198 2. 81–96.

Though Frisell stopped making records for ECM under his own name, he continued to guest for other leaders: Garbarek, Motian, Wheeler. Also includes composer Gavin Bryars's 'Sub Rosa'.

 Is That You? / (*) Where In The World? Elektra Musician 960596 / Elektra Nonesuch 7559 61181. 8/89, 91.

Country, jazz and free form vie with other idioms. Trumpeter/tubist Dave Hofstra, Wayne Horvitz (ky) and Joey Baron (d) complete the line-up both times.

 Go West: Music For The Films Of Buster Keaton /  The High Sign/One Week: Music For The Films Of Buster Keaton Elektra Nonesuch 79350 / 79351. 95.

The material is pretty tatty, and there isn't much to chew on here beyond a bittersweet kitsch. Frisell sounds wonderful, of course, as do Kermit Driscoll (b) and Joey Baron (d), but only in short bursts.

() Nashville Elektra Nonesuch 79415. 9/95, 10 & 11/96.
A weak and watery collage of country themes. Frisell sounds more faux-naïf than genuinely innocent. It's played freshly enough to keep the mind engaged.

 The Willies Nonesuch 79652. 01.
Virtually a country album, ever more remote from jazz; some wonderful improvised moments, all the same.

* With Dave Holland And Elvin Jones Nonesuch 79624. 01.
The bald title says it all. A dull, sketchy supergroup encounter, and Jones can rarely have sounded so lacklustre.

 Richter 858 Songlines 1551. 7/02.
An intriguing project to 'soundtrack' a book of paintings by Gerhard Richter, whose smeared and layered colour has some connection to Frisell's aesthetic.

David Frishberg (born 1933)

PIANO, VOCAL

Originally a journalist, he worked as an intermission pianist in the '50s, then played in small groups with Bud Freeman and Gene Krupa. His literate songwriting has been more successful than his performing, but he's also an accomplished pianist and a fine no-voice singer.

(*) You're A Lucky Guy Concord CCD 4074-2 Frishberg; Bob Brookmeyer (vtb); Al Cohn (ts); Jim Hughart (b); Nik Ceroli (d). 78.
 Classics Concord CCD 4462 Frishberg; Steve Gilmore (b); Bill Goodwin (d). 12/82–3/83.
(*) Live At Vine Street Original Jazz Classics OJC 832 Frishberg (p, v solo). 10/84.
 Can't Take You Nowhere Fantasy FCD 9651 Frishberg (p solo). 87.
 Double Play Arbors ARCD 19118 Frishberg; Jim Goodwin (c). 10/92.
 Do You Miss New York? /  Retromania Arbors ARCD 19291 / 19334 Frishberg (p, v solo). 12/02; 5/05.
A supply sergeant once told Frishberg that 'Jazz is OK, but it ain't got no words'; Dave has done his best to deliver hip songwriting in a form that fits with his individual brand of mainstream piano. If best known as a cabaret recitalist, he nevertheless has a strong, swinging keyboard style that borrows from the swing masters without making him seem like a slavish copyist. Classics is the best survivor, since it gathers all his best-known songs together on a single CD (which is a reissue of two LPs made for Omnisound). Sparsely but crisply presented by the trio, here are the prototype versions of such Frishberg favourites as 'My Attorney Bernie', 'Dodger Blue' and 'Do You Miss New York?', bittersweet odes which he is very good at investing with both warmth and wryness.

His Concord debut, You're A Lucky Guy, pushes that one very close, though. Nicely balanced between songs and jazz, the music gets a huge fillip from the presence of in-form horns Cohn and Brookmeyer; Frishberg himself purveys a kind of delicate jauntiness on his solo 'That Old Feeling', and as a record it's beautifully programmed. The fine live set for Fantasy has made it to CD. It's a useful souvenir of an evening with Frishberg, featuring some of his smartest songs, a Johnny Hodges medley where he gets to show off his pianism, and the corncrake voice put to work on his wryest lyrics. A special favourite is the opener, 'You Would Rather Have The Blues', but all of them sound good.

Double Play is one where he keeps his voice down and plays alongside the salty cornet of Jim Goodwin. They make a good fist of a fine clutch of old songs ('One, Two, Button My Shoe', an inspired choice) and Goodwin's thick, rasping tone is unfailingly entertaining; however, for once Frishberg's piano parts are very samey.

The problem with Do You Miss New York?, another live solo set, is the feeling that we've heard it all before. The tunes are different in the main, but there's little here – in terms of tone, timing and pianism – that wasn't done better on the Vine Street record, nearly 20 years earlier. Much the same picture with the new one from the Jazz Bakery, except it's even more by-the-numbers and the audience sound as if they might have nodded off.

Tony Fruscella (1927–69)

TRUMPET

Grew up in an orphanage and after military service played a sideman role with Lester Young, Stan Getz and others. Made a modest impact on the late bop scene, but drink and narcotics ruined him, and his last years featured no music.

 The Complete Recordings Jazz Factory JFCD 44401 4CD Fruscella; Chauncey Welsh (tb); Phil Woods, Chick Maures, Herb Geller (as); Phil Urso, Allen Eager, Stan Getz (ts); Gene Allen, Danny Bank (bs); Bill Truglia, Hank Jones, Johnny Williams (p); Bill Keck (g); Red Mitchell, Teddy Kotick, Wendell Marshall, Bill Anthony, Paul Chambers (b); Art Madigan, Shadow Wilson, Frank Isola, Howie Mann, Junior Bradley, Roy Hall (d). 12/48–8/59.
(*) Tony Fruscella Atlantic 8122-75354-2 Fruscella; Chauncey Welsh (tb); Allen Eager (ts); Danny Bank (bs); Bill Triglia (p); Bill Anthony (b); Junior Bradley (d). 3–4/55.
Despite a formidable reputation among collectors, Fruscella has remained an obscure figure. Jazz Factory's set collects absolutely everything that he did: surviving airshots, live tapes and studio sessions. Much of it is desperate. Most of the live music (in mainly indifferent sound) has very little going for it, including a set from New York's Open Door Club where the players wind up drunk, and a high school concert with Woods effortlessly outplaying the trumpeter. The studio session with Maures is a bit better: pale, interesting bebop with a glance towards Tristano, and the two horns play carefully spun improvisations that at least take a different tack from bop convention. But across four CDs, discouragingly slim pickings.

Fruscella's great moment was his 1955 date for Atlantic. All his idiosyncrasies – the undemonstrative tone, laid-back dynamics, penchant for the low register and thin but insistent melodicism – came almost apologetically together on an interesting record which is probably the best sampling of his work.

Also, in brief:

 A Night At The Open Door / () Pernod / () Tony's Blues Jazz Factory JFCD 22802 / 22804 / 22805. 48–59.
Single-volume digipack editions.

 The Unique – Tony's Blues Cool & Blue C&B 107. 48–55.
Again, this simply retreads material in the complete edition.

Fryer–Barnhart International All Star Jazz Band

GROUP

Americans Jim Fryer and Jeff Barnhart first put together this festival favourite in 1999.

 The First Album /  Jubilee /  Live And Kicking! / (*) If We Could Be With You Lake LACD 221 / 174 / 206 / 252 Gordon Whitworth (t, v); Jim Fryer (tb, c, eu, v); George Huxley (cl, ss, as); Jeff Barnhart (p, v); Brian Mellor (bj, g, v); Annie Hawkins (b); Nick Ward (d). 5/00; 5/02; 5/04; 5/05.

Fryer and Barnhart assemble this group – otherwise made up of British-based musicians – only a few times a year, but they sound comfortably played-in on these live sessions from the annual Keswick Jazz Festival. But then, veterans such as Whitworth know the likes of 'Willie The Weeper' and 'Nagasaki' pretty well by now. Some of the brass solos have a case of the shakes here and there and the vocalists have a variable strike-rate, though Barnhart really goes to town on his features. Paul Adams does his usual good job with the location sound; perhaps the two more recent offer more in the way of good music.

Thomas Fryland (born 1969)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

A Dane from near the German border, he's studied in The Hague and now teaches trumpet back home. Busy sideman, formerly with the Danish Radio Big Band.

 Another Song Stunt STUCD 0607 Fryland; Jim McNeely (p); Jesper Lundgaard (b); Aage Tanggaard (d). 3/06.

There's a refreshing quality to Fryland's playing, which doesn't easily fall under any of the usual influences: Dizzy, Brownie (a version of 'I Remember Clifford' notwithstanding) or Miles but has an easy, uncomplicated quality reminiscent of early Donald Byrd. This is by no means his first recording, but it serves notice of a considerable talent, and the addition of McNeely to a quality rhythm section sharpens up the group considerably. Apart from the Golson song and Weill's 'This Is New', everything in the set is Thomas's, though it all pales beside the long title-tune, which opens the set with a truly authoritative statement.

Wolfgang Fuchs (born 1949)

SOPRANINO SAXOPHONE, CLARINETS

From Landau; he works in the further reaches of improvisation.

(*) Binaurality FMP CD 49 Fuchs; Günter Christmann , Radu Malfatti (tb); Peter van Bergen (ts, bcl, cbcl); Luc Houtkamp (as, ts, cl); Philipp Wachsmann (vn, elec); Melvyn Poore (tba); Torsten Müller (b); Paul Lytton (d, elec); Georg Katzer (elec, computer). 6/92

 Bits & Pieces FMP OWN-90004 Fuchs; Evan Parker (ss); Jean-Marc Montera (g). 9/95.

Fuchs is an improviser deeply interested in timbral extremes. He constructs a cruel vocabulary on the sopranino and bass clarinet, phrases diced into the smallest fragments, and, while one can construe subliminal lines, deconstruction is his speciality.

Binaurality is by Fuchs's larger group, King Ubu Orchestra. Big though the ensemble is, Fuchs has clearly thought very carefully about the balance and temperament of the players, and the result is a free group of unusually specific empathies. The cloudy nature of the brass instruments contrasts with the filigree, pecking lines of the reeds, with Wachsmann's elegance and the surprise elements of Lytton and Katzer adding to the flavour without distorting any lines of communication. As always with this kind of music, there are dead ends and disappointments: 'Translation No. 4', for instance, starts rivetingly but peters out into typical free-jazz crescendo and diminuendo. There's enough fine music, though.

Half of Bits & Pieces is solo, with Fuchs putting his reed family through their most extreme paces. John Corbett's suggestion that Fuchs gets a sound akin to an analogue synthesizer out of the contrabass clarinet is about right, and setting these primeval rumbles next to the sharp, splintery chips of the sopranino is an interesting exercise in contrasts. Who wants to listen at length to a technical inquiry? No such issue, though, with the duets which make up the rest of the disc. The two saxophonists strike sparks, while Montera's unpredictable soundboard makes for a satisfying confrontation.

(*) Trigger Zone FMP CD 117 Fuchs; Axel Dörner (t); Radu Malfatti (tb); Peter Van Bergen (ts); Philipp Wachsmann (vn, elec); Jean-Marc Montera (g); Melvyn Poore (tba); Fernando Grillo (b); Paul Lytton (perc, elec). 11/98.

* Live At Total Music Meeting 2003 All 009 As above, except omit Dörner, Montera; add Anne LeBaron (hp); Bertram Turetzky (b); Irena Bart-Greiner, Phil Minton, Boris Aljinovic (v). 11/03.

Peter Niklas Wilson suggests that Trigger Zone was a difficult, argumentative version of King Übü, with Fuchs deliberately avoiding any kind of preordained empathy. Since the record offers what are presumably highlights of two different sets three days apart, the full picture is difficult to follow. 'Area 1' trades almost in subsonics much of the time, and if the dynamics evolve, the volume levels remain parsimoniously low for a ten-piece group. The 2003 TMM concert is three quarters of an hour long with introductory and 'warming up' tracks included to fill out the disc. The languages are much the same as on the earlier encounter, but the addition of voices and the implied harmonies brought in by LeBaron and Turetzky do change the picture somewhat.

* Six Fuchs Rastascan 52 Fuchs; Tom Djll (t, c, balloon, hog caller); John Shiurba (g); Matthew Sperry (b); Gino Robair (perc); Tim Perkis (elec). 5/03.

A stunning collaboration which almost functions as a double or 'ghost' trio, with Fuchs, Djll and the late Matthew Sperry (on one of his last recordings) shadowed by one or more of the three noise-makers who represent the ensemble's more abstract tendency. Robair's use of frictions and what he calls 'energized surfaces' means that he sounds very much like another synth/electronics player in places, certainly far removed from even free drumming. Shiurba uses a range of techniques and registers, but always sounds highly focused and particularly responsive to Fuchs's own changes of voice; both bass clarinet and sopranino here. The long tracks, notably 'Buttery Consort', are better than the short pieces, especially when they are allowed to build and then dissipate their own momentum.

Also, in brief:

(*) FinkFarker FMP CD 26. 6/89.

'Vicious', 'Confrontation'; Fuchs and Georg Katzer (elec), very intense.

 The New Flags All 007. 11/02.
With guzheng player Xu Fengxia and Roger Turner (d), going out as The New Flags.

Satoko Fujii (born 1958)

PIANO

Classically trained Fujii and trumpeter/partner Natsuki Tamura have forged a powerful body of work which combines romantic abandon with free-jazz daring. They divide their time between Japan and New York.

(*) Something About Water Libra 202 101 Fujii; Paul Bley (p). 12/94, 2/95.
Much of Fujii's work is released on Japanese labels. Some were listed in our last edition but are omitted here with a couple of exceptions. The influence of Paul Bley on Fujii's work is unmistakable, though so, too, is the example of classical pianist Koji Taku, who gave up academic work at the age of 60 to play jazz. Stylistically, though, it's Bley who determines much of the language here. His easy transition between quite radical abstraction and the rolling, hypnotic vamps has become a blueprint for Fujii. Here they play a series of duets and four-handed pieces, the latter still a surprisingly rare practice in improvised music and jazz. The illusion of a single voice is obviously enhanced by sharing a keyboard as much as by similarity of style.

(*) South Wind Libra 215 014 Fujii; Dave Ballou, Steven Bernstein, Laurie Frink, Natsuki Tamura (t); Herb Robertson (t, c, soprano hunting horn); Joe Fiedler, Curtis Hasselbring, Joey Sellers (tb); Briggan Krauss (as, cl); Oscar Noriega (as, bcl); David Castiglione (ss, ts, bamboo f); Tony Malaby (ss, ts); Andy Laster (bs); Yuku Yamaoka (p); Stomu Takeishi (b); Aaron Alexander (d). 6/97.
Originally on Leo, this is freshly remastered. It's organized round a four-seasons suite, but it's the harmonic language that drives the record, not a pictorial programme. Fujii's ability to arrange and voice for ensembles of this size is awesome, bespeaking something close to Gil Evans's encyclopaedic musical knowledge: jazz, classical, 'ethnic'. There are chords in the winter section which might well refer distantly to Vivaldi, but all seem to show an understanding of Schumann and Charles Mingus, who used the same effect of juxtaposed 'wrong' pitches to suggest more orchestral texture than is possible even with these forces.

 Kitsune-Bi Tzadik TZ 7220 Fujii; Sachi Hayasaka (ss); Mark Dresser (b); Jim Black (d). 5 & 11/98.
 Toward 'To West' Enja ENJ 9328 As above, except omit Hayasaka. 5/98.
Kitsune-Bi was something of a breakthrough record for Fujii. Divided into two sessions, one of duets with the little-known but impressive Hayasaki (think Jane Ira Bloom on a scholarship to Nagoya), the other a brilliant trio with Dresser and Black. There is also a stunning solo piano piece, 'Sound Of Stone', which in itself is enough to establish Fujii's remarkable pedigree. 'Past Of Life' with the trio follows her usual practice of mixing freedom with some very infectious grooves, leading to a hypnotic, almost trance-like effect that sustains interest all the way through. The trio-only record is, if anything, better still, a thoughtful but by no means pastel record very different from her large-scale pieces. The long title-piece comes first and dominates the rest, to its detriment, but reprogrammed it makes for a compelling, even compulsive listening experience.

 Minerva Jazzprint 128 Fujii; Natsuki Tamura (t); Takeharu Hayakawa (b); Tatsuya Yoshida (d). 4/02.
This group made its record debut on Vulcan and marked a clear shift away from Fujii's earlier romantic avant-gardism with a furious attack and an almost rock feel. This is something of a disappointment. The sound is subdued and poorly balanced, particularly on bass and drums. It's not clear whether Sakoto's four compositions – 'Warp', 'Selvedge', 'Weft' and 'Caught In The Web'; the other piece is by Tamura – are supposed to represent some sort of loosely woven suite. If so, the logic is hazy. Her playing is fine, swinging one moment, moving in the direction of Debussyan impressionism the next, and Tamura is, as ever, a brilliant foil.

(*) In Krakow, In November Not Two MW774 Fujii; Natsuki Tamura (t). 11/05.
It starts with an odd, almost childish thing, 'Strange Village', minimal figures in a mostly empty harmonic landscape. Pretty soon, though, it has plunged into something freer and roiling on 'North Wind' and Fujii's rolling sonorities and Tamura's quite orthodox but strangely deployed trumpet sounds creating a unique sound-world all their own. A touch of perfumed exoticism here and there, but in the main completely absorbing, even if that opening section stretches the patience.

(*) Fujin Raijin Victo 105 Fujii; Natsuki Tamura (t); Curtis Hasselbring (tb); Andrea Parkins (acc). 5/06.
This is Fujii's Min-Yoh Ensemble, a title which implies folk music. There are, indeed, traditional themes at the beginning and end, the last one with a vocal by the pianist herself, but the material in the middle is her own, though obviously influenced by folk idioms. The blend of voices is remarkable, with Parkins taking a strong, atmospheric role throughout. Tamura seems less adept in this setting for some reason and it's the trombone-player who creates some of the most effective wind-lines. An impressive performance by any standard, but at the fringes of our concerns.

Also, in brief:

() Toh-Kichi Victo 83. 5/02.
A curious concert appearance with Ruins drummer Tatsuya Yoshida which doesn't do either player any great favours.

 The Future Of The Past Enja ENJ 9457. 9/01.
A disappointing showing from the Orchestra, though it's hard to pin down what's wrong.

Curtis Fuller (born 1934)

TROMBONE

The Detroiter owes much to Kai Winding's modernization of trombone technique and to J.J.'s demonstration of the instrument's solo potential. However, his main influence was the harmonic language of John Coltrane and Miles Davis.

 New Trombone Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 077 Fuller; Sonny Red (as); Hank Jones (p); Doug Watkins (b); Louis Hayes (d). 5/57.
(*) With Red Garland Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1862 As above, except omit Jones, Watkins; add Red Garland (p); Paul Chambers (b). 5/57.
Curtis Fuller made his mark on one of the most memorable intros in modern jazz, the opening bars of Coltrane's 'Blue Train'. For many the story stops there, ironically so, since the Blue Note session with Trane was hardly representative of what this mellifluous trombonist was about. Possessed of an excellent technique, slightly derivative of J. J. Johnson, he occasionally found it difficult to develop ideas at speed and tended to lapse, as he had on 'Blue Train', into either repetition or sequences of bitten-off phrases that sounded either diffident or aggressive. The saxophone-influenced delivery helped create a tonal ambiguity not accessible to valved or keyed horn-players.

There was some excitement about Fuller in 1957, and the early sessions for Prestige, supervised by the redoubtable Teddy Charles, promised much. Sonny Red was the working name of Sylvester Kyner; a raw player, he none the less acquits himself on both sets with enthusiasm and some ruggedly straightforward ideas. He's better on the later set, kicking off Garland's cleaner-cut blues chords. The rhythm section is much stronger on the latter disc. Chambers comes through powerfully and the mix of material – including a big saxophone feature on 'Slenderella' and a gorgeous original from Fuller, 'Cashmere' – gives Mr P.C. room for some solid, singing lines.

 Curtis Fuller And Hampton Hawes With French Horns Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1942 Fuller; Sahib Shihab (as); Julius Watkins, David Amram (fr hn); Hampton Hawes, Teddy Charles (p); Addison Farmer (b); Jerry Segal (d). 5/57.

Trying to integrate French horns into an otherwise straight-ahead quintet was perhaps ambitious, for the horns tend to parp disconsolately in the background, not quite invited to the party, although Amram's brief piece 'Five Spot' is a neat miniature. Shihab, like Red before him, is tart and biting, and makes a nice contrast to the rest of the tonally bluff setting.

 Boss Of The Soul-Stream Trombone Fresh Sound FSRCD 1609 Fuller; Freddie Hubbard (t); Yusef Lateef (ts, f); Walter Bishop (p); Buddy Catlett (b); Stu Martin (d). 12/60.

This was released on the small Warwick label and then promptly disappeared into obscurity. Fine as it is, Fuller's upstaged on just about every track by young Hubbard, who'd just blown into town, and by the intriguing Lateef. Curtis's writing is impressive, though, and the opening 'The Court' and 'Flutie' are nice lines deserving of wider coverage. Catlett and Martin had been working for Quincy Jones at this period. Both are in solid form. The trombonist probably plays his best stuff on 'If I Were A Bell', an extended version with some interesting touches.

 South American Cookin' / Magnificent Trombone Of Curtis Fuller Collectables COL 6879 Fuller; Zoot Sims (ts); Walter Bishop Jr, Tommy Flanagan (p); Les Spann (g); Buddy Catlett, Jimmy Garrison, Jymie Merritt (b); Dave Bailey, Stu Martin (d). 2 & 8/61.

These largely forgotten records were recorded for Epic. It's hard to see why they were out of the way for so long. Fuller is in great form and his interplay with Sims on a rousing version of J.J.'s 'Wee Dot' is one of the highlights. 'Sometimes I Feel Like A Motherless Child' is the top pick from the later date, which has Fuller as the only horn, but with Les Spann's guitar underpinning Bishop's piano, hence the bluesier, almost R&B feel to parts of the date. The two sets don't quite sit comfortably together, but for Fuller fans, it's an unmissable compilation.

 Up Jumped Spring Delmark 950 Fuller; Brad Goode (t); Karl Montzka (p); Larry Gray, Stewart Miller (b); Tim Davis (d); Jacey Falk (v). 8 & 9/03.

 Keep It Simple Savant SCD 2062 Fuller; Javon Jackson (ts); Doug Carn (p); Rodney Jordan (b); Fritz Wise (d). 9/03.

Rising 70, Fuller had just about been consigned to the footnotes when he popped up, still sounding fluent and full of ideas, even if the lip is less secure. The Delmark set was produced by Falk (who takes a great vocal on 'Black Night'). For some reason, though, it's all standards and repertory. There is a lovely version of 'Canteloupe Island' and some confident work on 'In A Mellow Tone', 'God Bless The Child' and 'Whisper Not', but little sign that Curtis is stretching himself. Goode gives the session its energy.

Keep It Simple is thoroughly enjoyable, and also more individual. 'A La Mode' was a Messengers favourite and prompts strong solos from Jackson and Carn as well as the leader, in nostalgic mode. 'The Maze' is simpler in outline, but the harmonics are subtle enough to generate some thoughtful playing from the horns. 'The Court' is deceptively relaxed, but Carn unlocks it nicely; the pianist also takes a credit with 'Western Sunrise', done as a trio. 'Girl Talk' features in instrumental form. The essence of the record is in the title. A welcome return from a fine veteran.

Stephane Furic

DOUBLE BASS

Ambitious French-born composer originally inspired by Miles Davis.

 Kishinev / (*) The Twitter Machine Soul Note 121215 / 121225 Furic; Chris Cheek (ss, ts); Patrick Goraguer (p); Jim Black (d). 7/90; 5/92.

(*) Crossing Brooklyn Ferry Soul Note 121275 Furic; large ensemble. 4/95.

The debut includes material by Lil Hardin Armstrong ('Two Deuces') and Ornette Coleman ('The Sphinx'), while the ambitious third record draws half its material from Aaron Copland and its programme from the poetry of Walt Whitman, so clearly we are not dealing with a man who merely wants to play bebop licks all night. The second record takes its title from a Paul Klee graphic of a mechanical singing bird, four voices conjoined in a single mechanism, and that's broadly the impact of the music. Cheek solos impressively throughout and contributes the opening 'Could You Be There?'. Furic's own writing is quite muted and complex, suggesting similarities with Franz Koglmann's wry palimpsests on the jazz tradition. The most remarkable of the pieces is the brief 'Harvest Song', a tense and dramatic theme inspired by Coltrane's duets with Rashied Ali, but also by the drones in Pakistani music. Jim Black's 'The Moon Breathed Twice' is full of dramatic simplicities – big, soft gestures that work brilliantly for these players.

Crossing Brooklyn Ferry draws on Appalachian Spring. 'The Song Of The Rolling Earth' is subject to variation, as are 'Song Of The Redwood Tree' and the long suite of dances which spring out of it. There are a closing prayer and benediction that give the set a distinct shape and trajectory. The playing isn't always that exciting and the sheer vernacular brio of Copland's work is often missing, but otherwise a very pleasurable experience.

Also, in brief:

 Music For Three: Volume 1 Soul Note 121415. 97.

With Chris Cheek (ts) and Patrick Goraguer (p) again, but no Black; a chamberish outing.

Furt

ENSEMBLE

Electronics duo who combine free improvisation with sampled sound art.

 Defekt / * Dead Or Alive / * Omnivm Matchless MRCD 50 / Psi 04.09 / 06.09 Richard Barrett, Paul Obermayer (elec). 10/97–11/00; 5/02–6/04; 3/05, 4/06.

Furt is a very important phenomenon indeed, pointing the way forward for improvisation with electronics and exerting a strong reciprocal influence on recent electro-acoustic work by Evan Parker (who released the second and third items and with whom Barrett has recently worked). The Englishman is a distinguished new music composer and some of that influence impinges on the group's practice. However, sampling and plunderphonics are almost equally important. Defekt was by no means Furt's first recording and it's slightly disappointing, consisting of hackneyed manipulations of Schubert on 'Gute Nacht', political speeches, marching songs and Charlie Chaplin (echoes of The Great Dictator) on 'Volksmusik' to satirize the renaissance of the far right in Europe. The most substantial piece, however, is 'Ultimatum'; dedicated to Stockhausen, it's the most effective integration of electronic sound with a free-flowing, real-time improvisatory practice. And at 45 minutes it's a powerful statement.

Dead Or Alive is immediately superior. Two long pieces, one studio, one live at Freedom Of The City in London, allow the group to display its formidably co-ordinated syntax of found sound. Instrumentality is no longer an issue, and though there is an accepted idiom of electronic music, much of it derives from the vocabulary of bleeps and whistles that came in with early computers and synthesizers. Barrett and Obermayer are not in thrall to their machines. It is quite simply no longer possible to tell what or who is producing the sounds, a situation which collapses the dull human/machine, compo/impro binaries which have hamstrung debate in this area.

Omnivm is arguably the best of all. Dedicated to the late Iannis Xenakis, and originally devised for the University of Durham (the recording is a collage of that performance and one in Belfast), the music derives from synthesizer tones, from Evan Parker's sampled trio, from gamelan music, and from speech, the results so 'organically' and coherently blended that source materials quickly seem irrelevant. A magnificent achievement and while at some remove from pre- and post-bop jazz still an essential documentation in improvised music.

Andy Fusco

ALTO SAXOPHONE

Fusco wavered between music and pro football: the sax eventually won. He's an accomplished hard-bopper and a graduate of Buddy Rich's orchestra, which was probably tougher than pro ball.

 Out Of The Dark Criss Cross 1171 Fusco; Joe Magnarelli (t); Joel Weiskopf (p); Peter Washington (b); Billy Drummond (d). 12/98.

More ragged and flaring than the typical Criss Cross date, this has some exciting music, although the mollifying ballad 'Epitaph For Sal Amico' and Walt Weiskopf's chart for 'Lament' lack nothing in finesse. But it's probably the pianoless 'It's You Or No One', on a direct current from Charlie Parker, that sums up Fusco's hearty, amiably aggressive playing. Everyone plays to their strengths.

 Big Man's Blues Double Time 116 Fusco; Walt Weiskopf (ts); Renee Rosnes (p); John Goldsby (b); Billy Drummond (d). 7/96.

Fusco's sophomore outing has him sounding like the offspring of Jackie McLean and Lee Konitz, still pretty boppish but with some cooler elements. 'Little Melonae' and the Rollins line 'Airegin' are the key tracks, though the latter sounds a bit unfinished and lacking in muscle. The change in tone can partly be explained by the group. Rosnes plays pretty and Goldsby offers a less dogmatic pulse than Washington. Fusco seems in no hurry to put out a lot of records.

Joel Futterman

PIANO, SOPRANO SAXOPHONE

Another 'Cecil Taylor disciple', but more individual than that.

(*) Vision In Time Silkheart SHCD 125 Futterman; Joseph Jarman (as); Richard Davis (b); Robert Adkins (d). 89.

 Berlin Images Silkheart SHCD 131 Futterman; Raphe Malik (t); Robert Adkins (d). 90.

() Nickelsdorf Konfrontation / () Qui? Silkheart SHCD 125 / 143 Futterman; Kidd Jordan, Mats Gustafsson (reeds); Barry Guy (b); Alvin Fielder (d). 95.

Joel's earlier records were on Ear-Rational, but these are the survivors of a surprisingly large discography. He's too confrontational a figure to win easy crowds of fans. The first of these is relatively approachable free jazz, by no means accommodating music, but with sufficient map references, including a dedication to Jimmy Lyons. The second has an underlying programme – to do with conflict and peace – but it stands strongly on its own boiling musical logic; it's also the closest in conception and sound to a Taylor trio, with Futterman's seismic rolls and tuned-drum attack functioning very much in that tradition. He's a powerful soprano-player as well, who's obviously listened as closely to Lyons as to the piano giant.

The larger group on Nickelsdorf Konfrontation and Qui? is less unrelieved, though much of the most interesting action takes place between Gustafsson and Guy, unlikely but empathetic sparring partners. Jordan is still almost as little known as Futterman and this adds to his scant but precious discography. Joel has later records out, on IML and Charles Lester, but they aren't readily found and he remains a specialist enthusiasm.

William Gagliardi (born 1947)

ALTO, TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Born in Staten Island, NY. Gagliardi has been working in music since the '60s, mostly in minor sideman or non-jazz situations.

 Music Is The Meditation CIMP 242 Gagliardi; Ken Wessel (g); Dave Hofstra (b); Lou Grassi (d). 2/01.

() Nhlala / () Hear And Now / (*) Memories Of Tomorrow /  Younger Dryas CMP 291 / 297 / 332 / 342 As above, except add John Carlson (t). 7/03; 7/03; 5/05; 5/05.

Gagliardi is one of the more engaging finds among those late-flowering musicians the Cadence/CIMP axis has made it a mission to record in recent years. Having laboured in obscurity and done the usual ancillary jobs (dishwasher, organic farmer, etc.), he came to these sessions with a remarkably clear and unjaded approach. His main horn is the tenor and he gets a big, growly sound out of it; which has picked up on post-Coltrane methods quite organically. The material is in an orthodox post-bop idiom with some freer leanings, and is often more melodic and hooky than might be expected. This comes through most clearly on the quintet records. On Music Is The Meditation, where the leader has only Wessel as a front-line foil, he often falls into rhetoric and solos that have too much gabbling. The blues-balladry of 'Too Dry For Tears' suits him much better.

Nhlala and Hear And Now both came out of the same two-day session. Carlson is an excellent addition to the group, punchy and vibrant in his own playing, and with Hofstra and Grassi sensibly restricted to accompanying roles the music has a shape and purpose often missing in CIMP blowing dates. For a sample, try 'The Loneliest Monk' from Nhlala, which features a free false ending to savour. Wessel uses an FX-free set-up, which is good to hear.

Memories Of Tomorrow and Younger Dryas came out of another two-day marathon and show neither advance nor decline, though we're not persuaded the recording merited two releases; Bob Rusch of CIMP would insist otherwise. Gagliardi still sometimes indulges himself on a solo, but the manners of the group seem to focus the music, and the free ensembles of the likes of 'Coup D'État Follies' (Memories) have a pungent intensity.

Richard Galliano (born 1950)

ACCORDION, PIANO, KEYBOARDS, TROMBONE

A compelling improviser with an expressive sound and a subtle swing, mostly in 3/4 time and tango rhythms.

(*) Spleen Dreyfus Jazz Line FDM 36513 Galliano; Eric Giausserand (flhn); Denis Leloup (tb); Franck Stibon (p, syn, v); Jean-Marc Jafet (b); Luiz Augusto (d, perc). 6/85.

 Solo – A Tribute To Astor Piazzolla Dreyfus FDM 369032 Galliano (acc solo). 92.

 Viaggio Dreyfus FDM 36562 Galliano; Biréli Lagrène (g); Pierre Michelot (b); Charles Bellonzi (d). 6/93.

 Laurita Dreyfus FDM 36572 Galliano; Michel Portal (bcl); Didier Lockwood (vn); Toots Thielemans (hca); Palle Danielsson (b); Joey Baron (d). 11/94.

(*) Blow Up / * Blow Up/Concerts Dreyfus Jazz Line FDM 36589 / 36875 Galliano; Michel Portal (bcl, cl, ss, bandoneon, jazzophone). 5/96.

Astor Piazzolla is the presiding genius of modern accordion. Galliano is by no means in thrall to him, but like any accordion-player he draws heavily on Piazzolla themes, notably 'Libertango' on the wonderful Laurita. This is the only early Galliano album you really need to have – though if you love it as much as we do, the set of duos with the multi-faceted Portal and the Solo set (recorded while Piazzolla lay in a coma), now remastered and reissued, will surely follow. Original material like 'Spleen' and 'Il Viaggio' is increasingly well-trodden, and enthusiasts will soon find their own favourite versions. The early album is something of a collage, pieced together in a ramshackle way, that has distinct charm but lacks an element of finish. The group with Lagrène, on the contrary, is a blowing gig, with plenty of solo space for all concerned.

What we like about Laurita and Blow Up is that they combine spontaneity with polish and a wonderfully rich sound-spectrum. Portal's brooding sound lifts both records immeasurably; Toots Thielemans is mistily beautiful on 'Laurita', and then Lockwood has his moment in the spotlight with 'Decisione', whirling it away like a cross between Grappelli and a New Orleans clarinet-player. On Blow Up, there are once again a couple of Hermeto Pascoal numbers, a retread of 'Libertango' and a number of originals by Galliano and Portal, including the excellent 'Little Tango' and the tiny closing piece, both of them credited to the saxophonist but both absolutely suited to this pairing. This is now available in extended format, as Blow Up/Concerts.

(*) New York Tango Dreyfus 36581 Galliano; Biréli Lagrène (g); George Mraz (b); Al Foster (d). 2/97.

Lagrène and Galliano share a huge amount of musical history, but Mraz's lyrical approach is a vital ingredient and Foster's drumming is delicately nuanced as well as propulsive. Apart from an opening piece by Piazzolla and the closing 'Three Views Of A Secret' by Jaco Pastorius, all the writing is by Galliano. The title-piece and 'Ten Years Ago' are strong ideas, flecked with the blues but with a completely authentic tango feel. Galliano's phrasing is as light and delicately articulated as an acoustic guitar on some tracks, as wheezily brooding as an organ on others. Lagrène and Mraz blend wonderfully behind him when he plays fast lines. 'To Django' is a small masterpiece.

 Concerts Inédits Dreyfus 36606 3CD Galliano; Michel Portal (cl); Jean-François Jenny-Clark (b); Daniel Humair (d). 96–00.

This is a wonderful introduction to Galliano and his art. The solo set is the purest and most straightforward, but to hear what Galliano is capable of as an improviser it is best to start with the duos with Michel Portal and the trio tracks with Humair and Jenny-Clark. These latter were recorded at the Montreux Jazz Festival in 1996 and are amazingly good, telepathically responsive, effortlessly melodic and packed with ideas. The bassist is a brilliant accompanist, harmonically aware and rhythmically complex. Galliano combines horn-like lines with big, orchestral chords and almost percussive figures, and one feels that all three players are doing each other's work at times, not competitively but with a genuine awareness of where the music might go next.

 Tangaria Quartet Milan 36304 Galliano; Alexis Cardenas (vn); Hamilton de Holanda (mand); Philippe Aerts (b); Rafaël Meijas (perc). 06.

A folksier Galliano here for some reason, with a few attractively rough edges in the group. 'Libertango' puts in a welcome appearance, along with another little nugget of Bach. This isn't in the front rank even of recent albums, but fans will fall on it with delight and the live sound from Marciac is good enough for even the most pernickety.

(*) Luz Negra Milan 399078 Galliano; Alexis Cardenas (vn); Hamilton de Holanda (mand); Philippe Aerts (b); Amoy Ribas, Rafaël Meijas (perc). 9/06.

Another stunning set, marred by some muddy – or muddily recorded – percussion, which diminishes the impact of some otherwise glorious tracks. Recorded in São Paolo, Brazil, Galliano seems invigorated and even excited by new sounds and rhythms and some of his exchanges with Cardenas rank among the best playing of his career to date. 'Gnossiene' and the title-track are the outstanding cuts, but there is much to enjoy throughout.

 If You Love Me (L'Hymne De L'Amour) Cam Jazz 5022 Galliano; Gary Burton (vib); George Mraz (b); Clarence Penn (d). 8/06.

Most albums that look this appetizing fail to deliver. It has everything: the Edith Piaf title-tune, lots of Piazzolla, 'Waltz For Debby', some Bach and even the theme from Il Postino. Plus a world-class band. Unbelievably, this exceeds the menu, a record of elegance, craft, some daring and expert musicianship. If the mood is faintly melancholy, it's none the worse for that.

Also, in brief:

 Gallianissimo: The Best Of Richard Galliano Dreyfus 36616. 93–00.
If he were a saxophone-player, he'd be considered a modern great; here's the ideal catch-up aid.

 Passatori Dreyfus 36601. 99.
Two multi-movement works by Galliano and Astor Piazzolla respectively, sandwiching a group of shorter themes by both men; piano, harp and strings add to the loveliness.

 French Touch Dreyfus 36596. 5/99.
Another fine record from Galliano, who in the presence of a strong Gallic ensemble – Portal, Jenny-Clark, Vignolo, Ceccarelli, Humair – has rarely swung with more authority.

 Face To Face Dreyfus 36627. 5/01.
An unusual duo with organist Eddy Louiss, composer of 'Dum Dum Dum'; mostly French song, but a great 'I Remember Clifford'.

 Piazzolla Forever Dreyfus 36642. 8/02.
Recorded in concert at Willisau, this is a graceful homage; the septet format lends the music much formal gravitas.

(*) Ruby, My Dear Dreyfus FDM 36 670-2. 1/04.
Galliano's New York trio, caught live in Italy: the guileful 'L'Insidieuse', the staple 'Spleen', 'Bohemia After Dark', Satie and Monk. Good work from Larry Grenadier (b) and Clarence Penn (d).

Christoph Gallio (born 1957)

SOPRANO AND ALTO SAXOPHONES, ELECTRONICS

The Swiss reedman studied in Basel and later with Steve Lacy, founded the trio Tiegel (with Urs Voerkel and Peter K. Frey) and later the inventive Day & Taxi. He also runs Percaso Records.

(*) Tiegel Atavistic Unheard Music 261 Gallio; Urs Voerkel (p, d); Peter K. Frey (b, tb). 81.
Previously unreleased but resurrected by John Corbett's increasingly essential label, Tiegel represents a highly flexible trio. Gallio's soprano is well in touch with the toneless skitters of radical improv, but he also shows a vividly lyrical touch on 'Improvisation #5', which reaffirms the Lacy influence. Frey switches to trombone on the previous track while Voerkel swaps his piano for a drumkit. '#6' is remarkable, evenly spaced tonguings and long tones over a stride-influenced piano line. '#10' is a tiny thing, with a stop-start theme reminiscent of Ornette. Mostly short and pointed performances, but with a lot to absorb.

 À Gertrude Stein Percaso 16 Gallio; William Parker (b); Rashied Ali (d); Ellen Christi (v). 03.
Neither Parker nor Ali sounds entirely like himself on this, which is eloquent testimony to the power of Gallio's creative personality. A lovely, perverse record devoted to the greatest and most perverse of American writers, it unmistakably works within a jazz/free-jazz idiom but sees Gallio moving in the direction of music-theatre as well. Other works – with Irène Aëbi and others – work this vein to variable effect.

Jim Galloway (born 1936)

SOPRANO, TENOR AND BARITONE SAXOPHONES

Scottish-born, but long based in Canada; his soprano sound is reminiscent of Sidney Bechet's but is cleaner and more correct.

(*) Music Is My Life Sackville SKCD 5006 Galloway; Humphrey Lyttelton (t, cl); Dick Wellstood, Jay McShann (p); Ed Bickert (g); Neil Swainson, Don Thompson (b); Terry Clarke, Pete Magadini (d). 73–78.
 Jim And Jay's Christmas Sackville SKCD 3054 Galloway; Jay McShann (p, v); Neil Swainson (b); Archie Alleyne (d). 11/92.
 Kansas City Nights Sackville SKCD Galloway; Sandy Barter, Arnie Chycoski, Brigham Phillips (t); Laurie Bower, Douglas Gibson (tb); Del Dako, Gordon Evans, Fraser McPherson, Ingrid Stitt (reeds); Jay McShann (p); Martin Loomer (g); Neil Swainson (b); Jake Hanna (d). 93.
 Echoes Of Swing Cornerstone 122 Galloway; Donald Johnston (t); Ian Bargh (p); Dave Fields (b); Don Vickery (d). 03.
For a man born in Ayrshire, Galloway always produces a happy, sunlit sound. His preferred territory is somewhere between Dixieland and swing. Music Is My Life brings together two deleted early LPs, Thou Swell and Three Is Company with a Humphrey Lyttelton date recorded in Canada. Some of it is quite rough and ready, downright crude when Pete Magadini is at the kit, but it's all good amiable swing. The material with Wellstood stands out strongly against the rest.

The Christmas album with McShann is all bonhomie and warm punch, but Hooty's a terrific partner and it goes off as well as any Yuletide jazz disc. The Wee Big Band was an occasional grouping that should have been allowed to record more. There's some raggedness in the ensemble playing, though it isn't unattractive, and inevitably much of the emphasis falls on guests McPherson, McShann and Hanna. Jim's intonation is a bit suspect on the last of the group and his baritone-playing, never his strongest suit, doesn't quite come off in this setting; it needs a bigger group and stronger voicings behind it.

Hal Galper (born 1938)

PIANO, KEYBOARDS

Studied at Berklee in the mid-'50s; a sophisticated soloist and sideman, who's worked with Herb Pomeroy, Chet Baker, Anita O'Day and countless others.

(*) Reach Out Steeplechase CCD 31067 Galper; Randy Brecker (t); Michael Brecker (ts, f); Wayne Dockery (b); Billy Hart (d). 11/76.
(*) Children Of The Night Double Time DTRCD 4006 As above, except omit Hart; add Bob Moses (d). 2/78.
Galper needs a strong group to counterbalance his occasional sugariness. He gets that from the Breckers on Reach Out, and this is one of the brothers' best joint appearances of the period, helped by razor-sharp arrangements. Children Of The Night (originally released as Speak With A Single Voice) sounds ahead of its time, combining a Coltrane-like intensity with the richness of Galper's Tyner-influenced piano.

 Live At Port Townsend '91 Double Time DTRCD 105 Galper; Todd Coolman (b); Steve Ellington (d). 91.
Galper has suffered disproportionately from the decimation of the Enja and Concord catalogues. This was his trio of the time, once generously represented, now down to this single disc. It covers some interesting ground, from 'Giant Steps' to the rarely covered Brubeck–Desmond 'Balcony Rock' and a wonderfully imagined version of 'I'll Remember April'.

 Agents Of Change Fabola 11 Galper; Tony Marino (b); Billy Mintz (d). 4/06.
A renewed flurry of studio activity from the rising 70-year-old, whose playing sounds in good heart. Galper has always ranged imaginatively across contemporary repertoire and here he programmes Wayne Shorter's 'ESP' immediately before 'How Deep Is The Ocean'. Two strong originals – 'Liquid Audio' is outstanding – are tucked away in the middle, and then comes another more familiar sequence: 'On Green Dolphin Street', 'Dear Old Stockholm' and his own 'Sonar'. A hugely entertaining set of piano trio jazz that again confounds the hype that greeted some of the younger pretenders in the form. Sometimes the playing is dense to the point of obscurity, but always with a firm musical logic. Experience tells.

(*) Furious Rubato Origin 82476 Galper; Jeff Johnson (b); John Bishop (d). 6/06.
Galper has always been intrigued by rubato playing, but here he extends it somewhat to cover a whole set of interpretations – the original 'Milestones' and 'Miles Ahead', 'Naima', some Chopin-tinged originals – that are not so much free-form as rhythmically unfettered. This presents fewer challenges to the pianist than it does to his sidemen, but Johnson and Bishop respond intelligently and with considerable imagination. Nice piano sound; not so sure about the drums.

Also, in brief:

(*) Fugue State Clue Chip Jazz 74005. 2/97.
With Jeff Johnson (b), Steve Ellington (d); a super trio disc.

 Let's Call This That Double Time DTRCD 157. 2/99.
Early stuff with the Breckers apart, Galper's groups with horns are never as compelling as his trios; here the Johnson–Ellington axis is augmented by Tim Hagans (t) and Jerry Bergonzi (ts).

Roberta Gambarini

VOICE

Born in Turin, she placed in a broadcast jazz competition and was subsequently sponsored by Benny Carter.

 Easy To Love In + Out 207084 Gambarini; James Moody (ts, v); Gerald Clayton, Tamir Hendelman (p); John Clayton, Chuck Berghofer (b); Willie Jones III, Joe LaBarbera (d). 6/04.
 You Are There Emarcy 1737067 Gambarini; Hank Jones (p). 06.
No mistaking the jazz pedigree in these groups, even if some of the names on Easy To Love aren't familiar. Gambarini made her recorded debut on Splasc(h), so there's already some mileage on the clock. Her scatting has a thoroughly musical confidence, especially when she vocalizes some distinguished solos (Rollins, Dizzy, Sonny Stitt) for 'On The Sunny Side Of The Street'. The title-piece is a duet with Berghofer and she includes some unusual things like Billy Strayhorn's 'Multi-Colored Blue' and Bill Evans's 'The Two Lonely People'. Moody joins her on a couple of songs, always an entertaining singer as well as great player.

The duos with Jones are less well focused, largely because Hank was sounding a bit diffuse by this stage, but her quality is still well-attested. She's not yet broken through to wider recognition, but it can only be a matter of time.

Slava (Vyacheslav) Ganelin (born 1944)

PIANO, KEYBOARDS

Founder of the Ganelin Trio, now living in Israeli exile.

(*) On Stage ... Backstage Leo CD LR 216 Ganelin (ky solo). 4/92, 7/93.

 Trio Alliance Leo Lab CD 042 Ganelin; Petras Vysniauskas (sax); Arkadi Gotesman (d, perc). 10/95.

* Live In Lugano Not Two MW783 As above, except omit Gotesman; add Klaus Kugel (d, perc). 10/06.
He has continued to use the Ganelin Trio name on occasion (see below) but none of the succeeding groups has ever had the magisterial authority of the original. There has been little consensus about the quality of Ganelin's work since he moved to Israel. Some see it as an advance and apotheosis, others as a dilution and diminution; others again felt that it was work that couldn't be assessed without reference to political or wider cultural events. In the event, there was little enough recorded work on which to make a judgement.

On Stage ... Backstage is a remarkable work. Ganelin's 'backstage' set-up of sound modules, synthesizers and multi-track recorders is his version of Scriabin's 'Mysterium' super-instrument. The dense, complex sound he achieves onstage with piano, synthesizer and drums is as nothing compared to the 'orchestral improvisations' conjured out of instrumental voices that are beyond the reach of human performance. It is remarkable work, still with its home-made and rickety moments but genuinely compelling and a real extension of the great work of the '80s.

Opuses (see below, 'in brief') was only a pale approximation of the Ganelin Trio. The group on Trio Alliance is much more compelling. Recorded on tour in Lithuania, it sounds in places like a nostalgic exercise in the old style, except that Vysniauskas is a very powerful player and a natural free improviser who doesn't share Ganelin's need to lean on structures, however vestigial and ironic. Gotesman sounds very much like Tarasov on occasion, but that approach blends less and less well with Ganelin's cooler abstraction.

Kugel, on the Polish disc, is better suited to the task. The sound here is wonderful for a live gig, airy but substantial. The evening, recorded at the 2006 Vision Festival, begins with a slowly unfolding piano solo that slowly gives way to an immense trio performance in which stylistic boundaries collapse one by one into a welter of sound that, like much of the best Ganelin Trio performances of the past (the trio now bears the suffix Priority), combines tragedy and affirmation, disturbance and equilibrium, in precarious balance.

 Falling Into Place Auris Media 007 Ganelin; Ned Rothenberg (as, bcl, shakuhachi). 3/04.
These remarkable duos were recorded live in Jaffa, a sequence of compositions (centrally Ganelin's extraordinary utopical 'The Place With The Space', nearly 35 minutes) followed by a group of improvised pieces. Ganelin has increasingly sounded individual, even idiosyncratic, on synthesizer; there is no mistaking his 'voice' on the instrument, more schematic than his piano-playing but still somehow grand.

Also, in brief:

() Opuses Leo CD LR 171. 12/89.
With Victor Fonarev (clo, b), Mika Markovich (d) and Uri Abramovich (v) along as a guest. Interesting enough, but strictly non-vintage.

 Birds Of Passage Leo CD LR 366. 7/01.
Ganelin, mostly solo but with singer/dancer Esti Kenan Ofri on some pieces. Some moments of grandeur, but the record as a whole is disappointingly diffuse.

Ganelin Trio

GROUP

The Soviet group created a stir in the early '80s, following the release of records made from smuggled tapes and their subsequent appearances outside Russia. Disbanded in 1987 when Ganelin emigrated to Israel. Briefly reunited in 2002.

 Con Anima / Concerto Grosso Leo Golden Years of New Jazz GY 23 Vyacheslav (Slava) Ganelin (p, g, basset, perc); Vladimir Chekasin (as, ts, cl, ob, v); Vladimir Tarasov (d, perc). 76, 78.
 Poco A Poco Leo CD LR 101 As above. 2/78.
 Strictly For Our Friends Leo Golden Years GY 13 As above. 3/78.
 Catalogue: Live In East Germany Leo CD LR 102 As above. 4/79.
♛  Ancora Da Capo Leo CD LR 108 As above. 10–11/80.
(*) Con Affetto Leo Golden Years GY 2 As above. 11/83.
 Ttaango ... In Nickelsdorf Leo Golden Years GY 18/19 2CD As above. 10/85.
 San Francisco Holidays Leo CD LR 208/209 2CD As above, except add Larry Ochs (ts); Bruce Ackley (ss); Jon Raskin (bs); Andrew Voigt (as). 6/86.
The Ganelin Trio made fin de siècle music, a mysterious, provocative collage of jazz, 20th-century composition, primitive technologies and the ironic theatrics of the yurodivy, the Holy Fool. The trio's first recordings had some of the allure of the clandestine, smuggled samizdat documents. In fact, Con Anima, originally released by the official Soviet label Melodiya, is a decent recording, though there are shadow sounds on the second session, the result of print-through or reused tape stock. The whole sequence, and the materials that went to the making of Concerto Grosso as well, have been organized into two huge tracks, without the fades and bridges of the original release. The language is instantly identifiable, eclectic and dramatic, with fragments of jazz, Baroque, folk song and atonal modernism. Ganelin plays a lot of guitar on the second LP, in his own curious idiom.

Strictly For Our Friends is unusual in that it consists of eight short tracks rather than long-form improvisations. The mood is also subtly different, both lyrical and intimate. Tarasov in particular channels his virtuosity into shorter forms with impressive ease.

Catalogue was a key release for Leo, but its history is complicated and its 'crowned' status has been taken over by Ancora Da Capo. This brings together part one of that suite, recorded at the Autumn Rhythms Festival in Leningrad, with a recording of part two, made a few weeks earlier in Berlin. This was a breakthrough occasion. The Ganelin Trio was publicly hailed by Joachim Ernst Berendt, and their reputation in the West began. The exact history of the tapes is complicated, but suffice it to say that the work has a monolithic intensity which condenses everything the group was about: a shining expressiveness, dense, passionate playing, humour and, underlying it all, an ironclad discipline; a masterpiece.

Catalogue alternates quiet, formal sections with occasional explosions of improvisational frenzy in which Chekasin's saxophone is the main voice. The mood is predominantly dark and tragic, but with a redemptive quality. If the idiom seems far removed from the usual theme-and-variations, harmonic approach of jazz, it does play an important role, albeit in reverse.

One of the definitive characteristics of the trio's sound is a dry, unswinging rhythm. Tarasov avoids a settled groove in favour of a light, springy metre that can move in almost any direction or in none. There is no conventional bass, though Ganelin makes distinctive use of the basset, a small keyboard instrument which mimics the sound of a string bass, but in a flat and uninflected way.

After 1980 the Ganelin Trio were able to perform on a world stage; in 1986 a notably relaxed trio played with ROVA in San Francisco. That occasion may now seem like the beginning of the end. Much of the tension has gone out of the music, and Ganelin in particular sounds discursive. There is a long, lifeless version of 'New Wine' and a very long piece called 'Ritardando', which is too persistently evasive and reticent to sustain interest over its 45-minute span. There should be no surprise hearing them do a standard, 'Mack The Knife', but the qualities that made earlier references to the tradition so powerful have gone, and it almost sounds kitsch.

In 2002, Leo Feigin released an important recording of the group on tour in Nickelsdorf, Austria. This was the first time the Trio had been allowed to travel abroad without a KGB minder and the freedom and confidence it gave them is palpable moment to moment. These performances are also the first occasion on which Vyacheslav Ganelin played a Yamaha synthesizer, taking it onstage less than half an hour after first seeing it and producing an astonishing range of sound that prefigures his later work in electronic synthesis. The two suites see the group shifting as before between bop, folk tunes and martial themes, classical structures and completely free elements. It is as exhilarating as anything in the Ganelin Trio discography.

(*) 15-Year Reunion: Live At The Frankfurt Book Fair Leo CD LR 375 As above. 10/02.
For many years, a Ganelin Trio reunion seemed unlikely and perhaps even undesirable given the group's creative dead ends of the mid-'80s. But, in October 2002, Lithuania was honoured at the Frankfurt Book Fair and the three musicians, who had last played together 15 years previously, were persuaded to give a recital. It's a relatively short performance by earlier standards, just 35 minutes with Ganelin's 'Umtza-Umtza' as a brief encore. It all sounds very much like a run-through of old procedures, a typical reunion. Ganelin's synthesizer thrums and thuds most of the way through, providing something like a regular bass-line. Chekasin still likes to play two saxes at once and the energy level would do younger men proud, but there's little here to match the compelling drama of the old records.

Allan Ganley (born 1931)

DRUMS

This consummate professional began his career with John Dankworth, spent a time in the house band at Ronnie Scott's, and studied at Berklee. He also recorded with Mary Lou Williams and worked with Stan Getz and other luminaries.

 Live At The Station Jagz CD 04 Ganley; Geoff Simkins (as); Dave Cliff (g); Dave Green (b). 1/01.

Ganley has anchored so many fine British sessions that one's desire to see him in the spotlight is balanced by the fear that records by reliable sidemen often disappoint. Reassuringly, this one is well up to snuff. Allan's solos are no more prominent than usual but every bit as good. Simkins is the only relatively unknown quantity here, but his line on three Parker (and/or Gillespie) tunes, 'Limehouse Blues', 'How Deep Is The Ocean', 'Just In Time' and Gordon Jenkins's 'Goodbye' is spot-on; there's also an original by the inventive Cliff, who gives the set its freewheeling, energetic quality. Green will have a bent back when he retires, so many fine sessions has he propped up, but it's the boss who takes the laurels, playing like a teenager but with a greybeard's authority.

Jan Garbarek (born 1947)

TENOR, SOPRANO, BARITONE AND BASS SAXOPHONES, FLUTES, KEYBOARD, PERCUSSION

Turned to jazz after hearing Coltrane records in his native Norway. Studied with George Russell in the late '60s and began recording for ECM in 1971, his label ever since. Has gone deeper into native Norwegian music since 1980's Eventyr, and has increasingly turned to material and settings remote from jazz.

(*) Afric Pepperbird ECM 843475-2 Garbarek; Terje Rypdal (g, bugle); Arild Andersen (b); Jon Christensen (d). 9/70.

 Sart ECM 839305-2 As above, except add Bobo Stenson (p). 4/71.

At 60 Garbarek is one of the best-known, and certainly one of the most easily identified, improvising musicians in the world. His high, keening saxophone, with the familiar ECM cathedral echo, has acquired an international resonance. If you know it is Garbarek, it will evoke Nordic landscapes; if not, it suggests nothing more than somewhere far off, desert or tundra, the wastes of Africa or northern steppes. Few artists of his stature have stayed loyal to a single record label throughout their careers, to their mutual benefit. With the release of Officium in the mid-'90s, Garbarek followed another ECM artist, Keith Jarrett, into immense crossover success.

Afric Pepperbird was an astonishing label debut, but see Esoteric Circle, below ('in brief'). It is by far his most 'out' recording, influenced by Coltrane, but also by Ayler's multiphonic intensity and with some elements of Dexter Gordon's phrasing. Garbarek's flute, not much heard in later years, has a thin, folksy timbre that is particularly effective when overblown. The rhythm partnership of Andersen and Christensen was hard to beat at the time and Rypdal's abstract, unmetrical chording is more or less perfect for the gig.

Sart is a typical second album, trying to reduplicate the first and show how much the leader has 'developed' at the same time. Though Stenson is a wonderful player, this is one of his least impressive showings ever. Garbarek again uses flute and, this time out, bass saxophone, though not yet the Wayne Shorter-influenced soprano that was to be such a future trademark.

(*) Triptykon ECM 847321-2 Garbarek; Arild Andersen (b); Edward Vesala (d, perc). 11/72.

Anyone who came on board with or after Dis (see below) would have difficulty recognizing the hard tone and free-form language. There are signs that both saxophonist and drummer are dissatisfied with free music, and Andersen is hesitant, breaking up his rhythm shapes with the deliberateness of a man swearing in a foreign tongue. This is the last real appearance of Garbarek the multi-instrumentalist, doubling on soprano, baritone (a hint of Lars Gullin there, perhaps) and flute. In the final analysis, it's the Finn who wins the day, playing brilliantly from start to finish.

() Witchi-Tai-To / () Dansere ECM 833330-2 / 829193-2 Garbarek; Bobo Stenson (p); Palle Danielsson (b); Jon Christensen (d). 11/73; 11/75.

Witchi-Tai-To is a halfway house, impressionistic and funky, European and jazz-based, characteristic and surprising by turns. The saxophone tone is more relaxed than it would be very often again, with a less pressurized embouchure and more sense of playing in distinct breath-groups or verses. The folk element – admittedly from a source far from home – was not so much a departure as a logical extension; Jim Pepper's surprise hit is a delightfully fresh performance. Dansere was a quieter session, but it plays now almost as a co-led session with the steadily developing Stenson.

[illegible]

* Dis

ECM 827408-2 Garbarek; Ralph Towner (g, 12-string g); wind harp; brass sextet. 12/76.

Few modern jazz records have been as thoroughly plundered for soundtrack cameos as Dis. The copyright kickbacks notwithstanding, it's a beautiful album, quintessential Garbarek pitched against a wind harp (recorded at the top of a fjord, with the winds from the North Sea gusting in), guitar and a softly articulated brass ensemble. It established a style which the saxophonist was to return to many times, spells and riddles on soprano saxophone (and wood flute) and a deep, mourning tone that drifts over the rhythm.

* Places ECM 829195-2 Garbarek; Bill Connors (g); John Taylor (org); Jack DeJohnette (d). 12/77.

 Photo With Blue Sky ... ECM 843168-2 Garbarek; Bill Connors (g); Eberhard Weber (b); Jon Christensen (d). 12/78.

The end of the '70s established a pattern whereby Garbarek went into the studio at each year's end to consolidate and capture what had been learnt in performance and to send out new feelers for the year ahead. It is what a village bard might have done in winter quarters, spin tales about the year past and boast about what would come when the sun returned. Dis was also the first of a group of records with a guitarist, on which Garbarek experimented with more open harmonies and textures. Places has never been as highly regarded, but it is a small masterpiece, dominated by one long track, a pattern that repeats itself throughout Garbarek's output. 'Passing' begins with misterioso organ from Taylor, tense drum rips from DeJohnette, and an unresolved, questioning figure on the guitar. Garbarek's entry picks it up without variation; for much of the record, similar or identical ideas are distributed round the band. There is no linear argument to a Garbarek solo by this stage. Ideas are static and almost sculptural in impact; a signature that would turn into a straitjacket.

 Eventyr ECM 829384-2 Garbarek; John Abercrombie (g, 12-string g, mand); Nana Vasconcelos (talking d, perc, v). 12/80.

 Paths, Prints ECM 829377-2 Garbarek; Bill Frisell (g); Eberhard Weber (b); Jon Christensen (d). 12/81.

 Wayfarer ECM 811968-2 As above, except omit Christensen; add Michael DiPasqua (d, perc). 3/83.

These are formulaic records, clearly intended to capitalize on the success of Dis, but rarely rising to its splendours. Each of the three has its merits, there's a new emphasis on folk forms, and Abercrombie and Frisell are more appropriate players for the context than the unpredictable Connors. Vasconcelos is probably too much of a one-man band to fit into anyone else's concept, but he is a great entertainer and records featuring him are never dull. A word for DiPasqua as well, who has the chops to give Wayfarer much needed energy.

 It's OK To Listen To The Gray Voice ECM 825406-2 Garbarek; David Torn (g); Eberhard Weber (b); Michael DiPasqua (d). 84.

The title reference is to a poem by the great Tomas Tranströmer. It's refreshing to hear Garbarek tackling something new, and this is a departure for him. How the poetry relates to the music is never made entirely explicit and sometimes isn't an entirely convincing source of inspiration, but what one hears is tough and strong, and without a shred of self-indulgence.

 Legend Of The Seven Dreams ECM 837344-2 Garbarek; Rainer Brüninghaus (ky); Eberhard Weber (b); Manu Katché (d); Nana Vasconcelos (perc, v). 7/88.

 Rosensfole ECM 839293-2 Garbarek; Agnes Buen Garnås (v). 88.

 I Took Up The Runes ECM 843850-2 As for Legend Of The Seven Dreams, except add Bugge Wesseltoft (syn); Ingor Ántte Áilu Gaup (v). 8/90.

Rosensfole is really Garnås's album and is none the worse for that, Garbarek limited in the main to providing a shifting, minimal stage for her dramatic singing. The opening 'He Comes From The North' on Legend is based on a Lappish joik, converted into state-of-the-art 'world music' by Vasconcelos's unplaceable percussion and vocal. There are also three brief, unaccompanied tracks, two on soprano saxophone, one on flute, to demonstrate how Garbarek has pared down his playing once again to the barest bones of melody.

Runes is in the same vein, but the experiment of adding a rock drummer and synthesizer-player to the core trio was an inspired one, and the long central track is one of Garberek's most ambitious works. The energy of the live performance doesn't quite come across on record, but there is more than enough of interest to bridge occasional lapses of pace.

(*) Star ECM 849649-2 Garbarek; Miroslav Vitous (b); Peter Erskine (d). 1/91.

This was widely thought to be Garbarek's return to straight jazz playing, but this is confounded at the first fence, a woolly number which is the saxophonist's only composition of the set. What the piece does is lay out an array of tone-colours that are imaginatively deployed by the trio throughout the album, which has a stripped-down and business-like feel. Garbarek's tone is still his unique selling-point and he manages to infuse his tenor-playing with a brittle-edged fragility one would normally associate with the soprano horn. There is still a tendency to place long notes like personal monograms, but the signature is in a new, bolder sans-serif which reads as freshly as Triptykon did 20 years ago. Vitous is purposive and surely grounded; the clouds are in the mountains now, not vice versa. Erskine doesn't seem the clear choice, but the obvious alternative – Christensen – hasn't the simplicity and directness the session seems to call for. The improvised 'Snowman' is indicative of how far Garbarek has progressed during his folksy sabbatical from blowing jazz. In Wallace Stevens's words, it takes a 'mind of winter' to make music like this; that doesn't mean it lacks passion.

(*) Ragas And Sagas ECM 511263-2 Garbarek; Manu Katché (d); Ustad Shaukat Hussain (tabla); Ustad Nazim Ali Khan (sarangi); Ustad Fateh Ali Khan, Deepika Thathaal (v). 5/90.

 Madar ECM 519075-2 Garbarek; Anouar Brahem (oud); Ustad Shaukat Hussain (tabla). 8/92.

These two records are 'world music' in the most positive sense. They demonstrate the essential irreducibility of what Garbarek is about. Karnatic ideas had cropped up in his work before and there are certain raga-like sequences even in the early albums, harmonically static, rhythmically mobile but not conventionally swinging. Ragas And Sagas was a perfectly logical step. It succeeds for the most part a good deal better than the collaboration with oud-player Brahem, but only because Garbarek himself is in better voice. Though the combination of Norwegian and non-European styles is seamless on both, Garbarek simply plays better with Hussain and his colleagues.

* Twelve Moons ECM 519500-2 Garbarek; Rainer Brüninghaus (ky); Eberhard Weber (b); Manu Katché (d); Marilyn Mazur (perc); Mari Boine, Agnes Buen Garnås (v). 9/93.

Appropriately, it was Garbarek who was chosen to front ECM's 500th release. It finds him at an interesting point of development, still exploring folklore but also easing his way back into a more jazz-orientated programme. There's an emphasis on soprano saxophone, perhaps to blend better with the voices, but even here the tone is stronger and heavier than of yore. Katché is essentially a rock drummer, with a crude but immensely vibrant delivery. One thinks occasionally of Ginger Baker, but among previous associates he is closer to Edward Vesala than to Jon Christensen. This time around, in addition to Sami joiks, Garbarek includes an arrangement of national composer Edvard Grieg's gentle 'Arietta', and a new version of the late Jim Pepper's 'Witchi-Tai-To'.

 Visible World ECM 529086-2 Garbarek; Rainer Brüninghaus (p, ky); Eberhard Weber (b); Marilyn Mazur (d, perc); Manu Katché (d); Trilok Gurtu (perc); Mari Boine (v). 6/95.

Officium (see below, 'in brief') was a tough act to follow, and Garbarek wisely chose to go with what was effectively his working group of the moment. The majority of these tracks are for trio, with bass and drums. There are also some searching duos, including the 'The Creek' with Katché, on which Garbarek experiments in a quiet way with new rhythmic ideas. The longest track, 'Aftenlandet', was originally written as a music–video collaboration; featuring Boine and Mazur, it has a delicately mysterious quality. Garbarek briefly plays clarinet, another new sound-colour.

 Rites ECM 559006-2 2CD Garbarek; Bugge Wesseltoft (syn, acc, elec); Rainer Brüninghaus (p, ky); Eberhard Weber (b); Marilyn Mazur (d, perc); Jansug Kakhidze (v); Tbilisi Symphony Orchestra; Sølvguttene Boys' Choir . 3/98.

Rites is over-extended and too busy. It is also curiously programmed. The title-track is an interesting synthesis, influenced by Officium. The rest are the familiar mixture of acoustic jazz and folk themes. Brüninghaus is a secure technician but one who doesn't alter his approach when he plays electronic keyboards, even analogue types, and so he manages to lose his passage-work on 'Vast Plain, Clouds' between idioms. He is closer to the mark on an interesting version of 'It's OK To Listen To The Gray Voice'.

The second disc is a mirror of the first. Wesseltoft's electronics establish the mood for 'It's High Time', and he contributes some effective and moving accordion to a version of Don Cherry's 'Malinye'. Elsewhere, though, it's the interplay of Weber and Mazur which creates the dramatic interest. 'Pan' is solo Garbarek. What follows is both intriguing and slightly enigmatic. First, the saxophonist is joined by a boys' choir in 'We Are The Stars', and then, for no very solid reason, he includes a recording of the 62-year-old Georgian singer and composer Kakhidze performing his own 'The Moon Over Mtatsminda'. Garbarek has no hand whatever in the composition. The album peters out with two further electronics-driven pieces, 'Evenly They Danced' and 'Last Rite'. The second is obviously intended to deliver symmetry and some sense of ending, but most listeners will have flagged by then.

 In Praise Of Dreams ECM 981 1068 Garbarek; Kim Kashkashian (vla); Manu Katché (d). 3–5/03.

Garbarek's first new album for five years saw him enter a new musical landscape, rich with electronic effects, no longer stark and unpeopled. The recruitment of Kashkashian and Katché was a master-stroke, but one feels the drummer in particular isn't effectively used. A player who can deliver anything from hard, rock-influenced lines to a softly propulsive jazz is slightly supernumerary on a number of these tracks, and there are moments when Garbarek seems too involved with his new toys to pay much attention to his collaborators. That said, this is a beautiful record and a sign that as he approaches 60 Garbarek isn't content to stand still but wants to move on and develop as a creative artist.

Also, in brief:

 Esoteric Circle Freedom FCD 7410131. 69.

Early, non-ECM set made while under the influence of George Russell. The tone is already distinctive, even if the production isn't.

* :rarum: Selected Recordings ECM 440 014 165-2 2CD. 11/75–6/95.

Garbarek's choice from 30 years of recording for the label is actually telescoped into the 'middle' 20 years, with, disappointingly, nothing from his vivid, earliest work. There can be no perfect sampler of Garbarek's music, but this is surely close to an ideal introduction.

 Aftenland ECM 839304-2. 12/79.

Saxophone/organ duets with Kjell Johnsen. On a checklist of ECM and Garbarek clichés, this scores highly: 'Nordic', 'moody', 'atmospheric' and resolutely unfunky.

 All Those Born With Wings ECM 831394-2. 8/86.

Solo saxophone and a real disappointment, though a perfectly legitimate and predictable experiment at this stage in Garbarek's career.

() Officium / () Mnemosyne ECM 445369-2 / 465122-2 2CD. 9/93; 4/98.

Welcome to late-night 'eclectic' music hell. Garbarek and the Hilliard Ensemble have sold rafts of these atmospheric discs. Officium may be the big hit, but the return visit to the monastery of St Gerold is a much better record, open-hearted, warm and dramatic.

Russell Garcia (born 1916)

ARRANGER, TRUMPET

He played trumpet in dance bands but made his mark as a composer-arranger in the '50s and '60s, writing both pop scores and jazz, incuding some for Stan Kenton's Neophonic Orchestra.

(*) Russell Garcia And His Four Trombone Band Fresh Sound Jazz City FSR 2208 Garcia; Frank Rosolino, Herbie Harper, Maynard Ferguson, Tommy Pederson (tb); Dick Houlgate (bs); Marty Paich, Gerry Wiggins (p); Al Hendrickson (g); Red Mitchell (b); Stan Levey, Chico Hamilton (d); Frances Faye. 6–11/55.

 Russell Garcia's Wigville Band Fresh Sound Jazz City FSR 2206 Garcia; Conte Candoli, Pete Candoli (t); Russ Cheever (ss); Charlie Mariano (as); Bill Holman (ts); Jimmy Giuffre (bs); Al Hendrickson (g); Max Bennett (b); Stan Levey (d); Peggy Connelly (v). 2/55–1/56.

 Los Angeles River Fresh Sound Jazz City FSR 2203 Garcia; Maynard Ferguson, Don Fagerquist, Buddy Childers, Wes Hensel, Cappy Lewis, Ray Linn (t); Murray McEachern, Harry Betts, Lloyd Ulyate, James Henderson, Milt Bernhart, Tommy Pederson, Frank Howard (tb); Herb Geller, Art Pepper, Bud Shank (as); Ted Nash (ts); Chuck Gentry, Bill Ulyate (bs); John T. Williams, Gerry Wiggins (p); Red Norvo (vib); Howard Roberts (g); Max Bennett, Curtis Counce (b); Alvin Stoller (d); Jack Costanzo (perc). 7–11/56.

Garcia made relatively few discs under his own name and these enterprising revivals bring him into the CD era for the first time. Less distinctive than Shorty Rogers or Bill Holman, he nevertheless handled his various forces with Californian aplomb, and the three different groups here offer programmes of boisterous, sunny and snappily inventive music. The Four Trombone group is agreeable to hear simply for the impeccable unison playing, although the solos, mostly kept to a crisp 32 bars or the occasional chase chorus, are neat and pleasing. This conflation of two albums is based entirely around standards, but the sessions by the Wigville band involved more original writing. After the brass-heavy trombone group, this one has four reeds, two trumpets and no trombones, and the writing is almost Byzantine, setting up a maze of lines for the individual horns to chase down: a piece such as 'Floating' must have had even these studio pros scratching their heads. The second half of the CD is given over to what was actually an LP featuring the strident vocals of Peggy Connelly.

Los Angeles River is a mix of original pieces and standards. The scoring, for two conventional big-band line-ups, is more in the familiar West Coast idiom, each of the first dozen tracks framing a single soloist (Herb Geller foremost). The final five are a steaming round-robin of solos, somewhat in the Rogers manner, though less individual. One wonders if the instrumental session by the Wigville group was a one-off. Someday Verve might get around to reissuing The Warm Feeling, his album of ballad scores which featured Roy Eldridge as the main soloist.

Vincent Gardner (born 1972)

TROMBONE

A Chicagoan, he's recorded with Nicholas Payton and Marcus Roberts and now makes a flying start as leader.

 Elbow Room Steeplechase SCCD 31580 Gardner; Walter Blanding (ts); Aaron Goldberg (p); Greg Williams (b); Quincy Davis (d). 05.

* The Good Book: Chapter One Steeplechase SCCD 31616 As above, except omit Goldberg; add Marc Cary (p). 4/06.

Elbow room is what the energetic Gardner needs. He's a strong, vibrant player, equally at ease with the rapid bebop of 'Relaxin'

At Camarillo' and Monk's 'Four And One' as with Coltrane's 'Liberia' and the standards 'Can You Read My Mind' and 'I Guess I'll Hang My Tears Out To Dry'. He also does a nice trade in original lines; 'DoomZoom' and 'Snake Charming' get the debut album off to an arresting start and immediately establish a player, previously only heard in short snatches on other leaders' projects, as a fine stylist with a big, polished-up tone and rock-solid articulation. Even playing fast 30-second notes, he sounds assured.

The Good Book has two further subtitles which explain the content: The Book Of Foster/The Book Of Silver. With one exception, all the tunes are by Horace and the still under-acknowledged Frank, whose 'The House That Love Built', played beautifully here, should be in every band-book. Gardner seems up to every challenge he's put in his own way so far. Even Silver's deceptive 'African Queen', played out at 11 minutes, is handled with verve. The only non-Foster/Silver composition is Joe Henderson's 'Mo'Joe'. It isn't entirely clear why it was included, but it's a vivid performance. The replacement of Goldberg with Cary seems to give the group a tighter rhythmic feel, though that may simply be born of further experience. Gardner's still definitely a man to watch and with the trombone division still relatively unsubscribed he has a real chance to make a name for himself.

Lou Gare (born 1939)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

A founding member of AMM.

* No Strings Attached Matchless MRCD65 Gare (ts solo). 4/05.

Amazingly, this is the first solo recording from a 40-year career. A dedication to Sonny Rollins provides an unexpected key to one of Gare's great antecedents. The impeccable, if unpredictable, logic of line and iron-hard articulation are similar, but Gare's musical language is all his own. Great improvising.

Red Garland (1923–84)

PIANO

Born in Dallas, he was a minor figure in the first phase of bebop but became eminent through his association with Miles Davis, who admired his light but hip style.

 A Garland Of Red Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 126 Garland; Paul Chambers (b); Art Taylor (d). 8/56.

 Groovy Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 061 As above. 12/56–8/57.

 Red Garland's Piano Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 073 As above. 3/57.

 The 1956 Trio Essential Jazz Records EJC As above. 5, 8 & 12/56.

 The P.C. Blues Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 898 As above, except add Philly Joe Jones (d). 3/56–8/57.

(*) Red Garland Revisited! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 985 As above, except omit Jones; add Kenny Burrell (g). 5/57.

 It's A Blue World Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1028 As above, except omit Burrell. 2/58.

 Manteca Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 428 As above, except add Ray Barretto (perc). 4/58.

 Rediscovered Masters Vol. 1 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 768 As above. 6/58.

 Can't See For Lookin' Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 918 As above, except omit Barretto. 6/58.

 All Kinds Of Weather Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 193 As above. 11/58.

 Red In Bluesville Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 295 As above, except omit Chambers; add Sam Jones (b). 4/59.

 Rojo Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 772 Garland; George Joyner (b); Charli Persip (d); Ray Barretto (perc). 8/58.

 At The Prelude Vol. 1 Prestige 24132-1 Garland; Jimmy Rowser (b); Specs Wright (d). 10/59.

Graceful yet unaffectedly bluesy, Red Garland's manner was flexible enough to accommodate the contrasting styles of both Miles Davis and John Coltrane in the Davis quintet of the mid-'50s. His many records as a leader, beginning at about the same period, display exactly the same qualities. His confessed influences of Tatum, Powell and Nat Cole seem less obvious than his debts to Erroll Garner and Ahmad Jamal, whose hit recording of 'Billy Boy' seems to sum up everything that Garland would later go on to explore.

All of the listed trio sessions feature the same virtues: deftly fingered left-hand runs over bouncy rhythms, coupled with block-chord phrasing which coloured melodies in such a way that Garland saw no need to depart from them. Medium/uptempo treatments alternate with stately ballads, and Chambers and Taylor are unfailingly swinging, if often constrained. The later sessions show more empathy, but it's hard to pick a favourite. The choice may depend on the tunes, some of which are presented thematically (All Kinds Of Weather, for instance, is made up of 'Rain', 'Summertime', and so on). The guest role for Barretto on Manteca is a mostly peripheral one although he's given a couple of lively features with Taylor on the title-tune and 'Lady Be Good'. The remastering is clean, although Chambers is seldom awarded anything better than a dull bass sound. At The Prelude finds Garland at work in a New York club, though he doesn't sound appreciably different away from the studios.

Can't See For Lookin' is a solid workout with a particularly pleasing treatment of the Gershwin standard 'Soon', and It's A Blue World, though it features an interminable arco solo by Chambers on 'This Can't Be Love', is much brighter than its title suggests, with a lightning canter through 'Crazy Rhythm'. The P.C. Blues, originally conceived as a tribute to Chambers, starts with the Miles Davis session 'Ahmad's Blues' and goes through two exemplary ballads before reaching the absurd – though impeccably handled – 'Tweedle Dee Dee': one of our favourite Garlands. Revisited!, though, is our first choice for any who want a single Garland set fom the period. His own version of 'Billy Boy' is here, there are two classic slow-burners in 'Everybody's Somebody's Fool' and 'The Masquerade Is Over', and Burrell shows up to spar on 'Four' and 'Walkin''.

 All Mornin' Long Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 293 Garland; Donald Byrd (t); John Coltrane (ts); George Joyner (b); Art Taylor (d). 11/57.

(*) Soul Junction Prestige 30169 As above. 11/57.

(*) High Pressure Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 349 As above. 11–12/57.

(*) Dig It! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 392 As above, except add Paul Chambers (b). 3/57–2/58.

Garland's recordings with Coltrane are typical of the long, relaxed blowing sessions which Prestige were recording at the time (almost all of these were made on a single day), and some of the tracks are very long indeed: 'All Mornin' Long' runs for 20 minutes, 'Soul Junction' and 'Lazy Mae' from Dig It! for 16 apiece. There are inevitable longueurs, and Byrd lacks the authority which he would bring to his later, Blue Note albums. But there are some solos of immense power from the tenor saxophonist, and the playing on Soul Junction (now in an RVG edition) and High Pressure especially is as purposeful as the format allows. Dig It! patches together lesser stuff from three sessions.

(*) Rediscovered Masters Vol. 2 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 769 Garland; Richard Williams (t); Oliver Nelson (as, ts); Doug Watkins, Peck Morrison (b); Specs Wright, Charli Persip (d). 8/59–3/61.
 Soul Burnin' Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 921 As above, except add Sam Jones (b), Art Taylor (d). 8/59–3/61.
 Red Garland Trio With Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis Vol. 1 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 360 Garland; Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis (ts); Sam Jones (b); Art Taylor (d). 12/59.
 The Nearness Of You Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1003 Garland; Larry Ridley (b); Frank Grant (d). 12/61.
() Solar Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 755 Garland; Les Spann (g, f); Sam Jones (b); Frank Grant (d). 1/62.
() Red's Good Groove Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1064 Garland; Blue Mitchell (t); Pepper Adams (bs); Sam Jones (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 3/62.
 When There Are Grey Skies Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 704 Garland; Wendell Marshall (b); Charli Persip (d). 9/62.

Davis appears on only three tracks of OJC 360, but it's enough to enliven an otherwise somnolent disc of ballads; a stentorian reading of 'When Your Lover Has Gone' works especially well. The second volume of Rediscovered Masters couples a very good session by Red's favourite trio, with Watkins and Wright, strolling through a quickfire 'Blues In The Closet' and a long, languorous 'Mr Wonderful', with a scarce quintet date featuring Williams and Nelson; both men sometimes sound as if they've strolled into the date by accident, but the sombre tenor makes a pleasing foil to Williams's more elegant horn. Two more tracks from this date are on Soul Burnin', including a particularly pretty 'If You Could See Me Now', and four characteristic trio tracks round out an enjoyable disc. Red's Good Groove is a Prestige potboiler, and only Pepper Adams, who didn't like being bored, really makes an effort. Solar returns Garland to a rhythm format, although Les Spann's presence isn't very useful; The Nearness Of You is another enjoyable stroll through eight standards; and When There Are Grey Skies was to be Red's last album for nearly ten years. He delivers one of his most considered interpretations here in the almost painstaking exploration of 'Nobody Knows The Trouble I've Seen', beautifully sustained over some 12 minutes.

 Crossings Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 472 Garland; Ron Carter (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 12/77.
() Red Alert Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 647 Garland; Nat Adderley (c); Harold Land, Ira Sullivan (ts); Ron Carter (b); Frank Butler (d). 12/77.

Garland continued to make records in the '70s and '80s, and those that remain show his style unchanged, although some of the litheness was gone. Red Alert is a decent if impersonal attempt at recapturing one of Red's old Prestige blowing dates. Nice enough cameos by the horns, but the prettiest music is when they sit out and let the pianist play 'It's Impossible'. Crossings features such fine support from the rhythm section that the music gathers its own momentum.

Also, in brief:

() The Best Of The Red Garland Trios / () ... Quintets Prestige 5716-2 / 5702. 57–61; 55–60.
A sensible option for more casual collectors; all the good stuff's there.

 Red's Blues Prestige 11017. 5/56–10/62.
Red, playing the blues.

 Stretchin' Out Prestige 24772. 8 & 10/59.
Brings together Satin Doll and Lil' Darlin'.

Tim Garland (born 1966)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, BASS CLARINET

Born in Ilford, he was making records only a few years after taking up the saxophone. Member of folk-jazz group Lammas.

 Enter The Fire Linn AKD074 Garland; Gerard Presencer (t); Jason Rebello (p); Mick Hutton (b); Jeremy Stacey (d). 97.
() Made By Walking Stretch SCD 98030-2 Garland; Gerard Presencer (t, flhn); Geoff Keezer, Chick Corea (p); Joe Locke (vib, marim); Avishai Cohen (b); Jorge Rossy (d). 2–5/00.
 Storms/Nocturnes Sirocco SJL 1017 Garland; Geoff Keezer (p); Joe Locke (vib, mar). 8/01.
 Rising Tide Sirocco SJL 1022 As above. 12/02.

Garland has worked without starry haste. The Stretch album marks an attempt to pitch him onto a world stage, after years of worthy if unremarkable work with groups such as Lammas, but despite some agreeable music there's little to collar the attention. He may have won some recent spurs in the Chick Corea group, but for all its energy the music here lacks much in the way of striking individuality; if anything, as on the first disc, he's outplayed by the excellent Presencer.

The trio with Keezer and Locke is a kind of internationalized version of what the Lammas group created – English pastoralism toughened by hints of blues and a more robust, worldly outreach. They achieve it some of the time, although for every passage of genuinely assertive music, there's another which sounds introverted and self-conscious. Garland's difficulty is that he doesn't seem able to translate his good-natured delivery into something which commands the attention.

 Change Of Season Sirocco SJL 1029 Garland; Paul Bollenback (g, g syn); John Patitucci (b); Gary Novak (d). 9/03.

Most of this was written in the hot summer of 2003. There's nothing parched about any of the ten themes, which reflect Garland's desire to start playing song forms again, and with a guitar-based group. 'Break In The Weather' immediately highlights Bollenback's role, better here than on his own Challenge recordings. John Patitucci is in stunning form and so is the often suspect Novak, though a lighter touch would surely have been appropriate.

It's not until the third track that Tim gets his tenor out. His soprano-line on 'Break In The Weather' crackles with atmospheric electricity, as opposed to 'Electrocity', the fine penultimate track. On the Coltrane tune, he gets in some moody bass clarinet work. 'Piece In Our Time' and 'To A Discarded Doll' have him back on the soprano, before the mood changes sharply with a thoughtful version of Chick Corea's 'Inner Space', which presumably Patitucci and Novak know very well indeed. 'First Rain' comes along as a sort of benediction. There are obvious references to Coltrane's 'After The Rain', despite the bass clarinet statement and echoey guitar synth shapes of the intro.

There are signs of quick writing, not in sloppy execution but in a certain obviousness to the harmonic variation, which is usually too deliberate when ideas come in batches. That said, the unified tone is one of the most attractive things about Change Of Season.

 If The Sea Replied Sirocco 1031 Garland; Gwilym Simcock (ky); Don Paterson (g); Malcolm Creese (b); Asaf Sirkis (d, perc); Northern Sinfonia Strings. 10/05.
A glorious setting for Garland's increasingly individual and emotive voice, this is probably best heard as an extended suite of pieces organized round his passion for the sea, more as physical reality than as familiar metaphor. The playing – by Garland and Lammas confrere Paterson – is exquisite, but it ultimately lacks drama.

Also, in brief:

 Playing To The Moon Jazz House JHCD47. 8/96.
A night at Ronnie Scott's; neither routine nor revelatory.

 Soho Story DNSTCD 2001. 9/01.
The Monday Night Orchestra, which is the London equivalent of several NY Monday-night bands. Good players and vivid charts with little of the brio that their American counterparts might bring to something similar.

(*) The Mystery Audio-B 5020. 8/07.
Orchestral music, lovely, brooding, often chastely romantic.

Erroll Garner (1926–77)

PIANO, HARPSICHORD

Moved from Pittsburgh to NY in 1944 and got established as a nightclub pianist, working for the rest of his career as a soloist or in trios. After the huge success of the Concert By The Sea album, he became an enduring international star.

 Erroll Garner 1944 Classics 802 Garner (p solo). 11–12/44.
(*) Erroll Garner 1944 Vol. 2 Classics 818 Garner (p); John Simmons (b); Harold 'Doc' West (d). 12/44.
 Erroll Garner 1944 Vol. 3 Classics 850 Garner; Inez Cavanaugh (v). 12/44.
(*) Erroll Garner 1944–1945 Classics 873 Garner; Charlie Shavers (t); Vic Dickenson (tb); Hank D'Amico (cl); Lem Davis (as); Slam Stewart, Eddie Brown (b); Cliff Leeman, Harold 'Doc' West (d). 12/44–3/45.
 Erroll Garner 1945–1946 Classics 924 Garner; John Levy Jr (b); George DeHart (d). 9/45–2/46.
 Erroll Garner 1946–1947 Classics 1004 Garner; Red Callender (b); Nick Fatool, Lou Singer, Harold 'Doc' West (d). 4/46–6/47.
Erroll Garner was one of a kind. He was as outré as the great beboppers, yet bop was alien to him, even though he recorded with Charlie Parker. He swung mightily, yet he stood outside the swing tradition; he played orchestrally, and his style was swooningly romantic, yet he could be as merciless on a tune as Fats Waller. He never read music, and often pianists would be hired to teach him songs, but he could play a piece in any key, and delighted in deceiving his rhythm sections from night to night. His tumbling, percussive, humorous style was entirely his own.

Garner's earliest recordings were done semi-privately, and though issued on Blue Note in the '50s they're in often atrocious sound. Most of his style is in place, and one can hear a debt to Tatum. The first three Classics include what there is of these survivals, and it's a difficult listen. The next two are more interesting. 1944–1945 puts together a session which has been a collectors' piece for many years: a jam with Shavers, Dickenson, D'Amico and Davis which includes extended versions of 'Gaslight' and some impromptu blues. Lovely stuff, with the principals all in good fettle, and a very rare glimpse of Garner with horns. A trio date with Brown and West (for Black And White) and a solo session for Signature fill up the disc. 1945–1946 includes a scruffy-sounding solo date for Disc before a pithy if unmomentous string of solos recorded for Mercury in 1945. Two solos for V-Disc round things off, but the spoken intro by Bob Hope sounds as if he was auditioning for the Chipmunks; there's clearly a speed problem. Classics 1004 includes two trio dates for Mercury and one for Dial, then four solos for Victor and an eight-title solo date for Dial. The Victor coupling of 'Erroll's Bounce' and 'Erroll's Blues' is one of Garner's most characteristic pieces, and it sounds good in this transfer.

 Erroll Garner 1947–1949 Classics 1109 Garner; Howard McGhee (t); Benny Carter (as); Wardell Gray (ts); Ulysses Livingston, Oscar Moore (g); John Simmons, Nelson Boyd (b); Jackie Mills, Teddy Stewart, Alvin Stoller (d). 4/47–3/49.
 Erroll Garner 1949 Classics 1138 Garner; Teddy Edwards (ts); John Simmons (b); Alvin Stoller (d); Dave Lambert (v). 49.
 Erroll Garner 1949 Vol. 2 Classics 1182 Garner; John Simmons, Leonard Gaskin (b); Chuck Thompson, Alvin Stoller, Charlie Smith (d). 6–7/49.
 Erroll Garner 1949–1950 Classics 1205 As above, except omit Thompson; add Harold 'Doc' West (d); Johnny Hartman (v). 8/49–4/50.
These cover sessions for Savoy, Modern, Vogue, Atlantic, Portrait, Mercury, 3 Deuces and Roost, which hints at how prolific Garner already was. Classics 1109 has a couple of jam-session survivals in 'One O'Clock Jump' and 'Blue Lou', with some fine Wardell Gray; the rest is trio music, with four solo titles made on a trip to Paris. Erroll cut 13 titles for Savoy in one session (all on Classics 1138), and though there's a preponderance of slowish tempos, there are some characteristic Garner touches. An airshot of 'Cherokee' from a Just Jazz show (with Teddy Edwards and a scatting Dave Lambert) leads to a couple of solo sessions. He turns Duke's voicings inside out on a fascinating stride-styled 'Take The "A" Train', and 'My Old Kentucky Home' is delicately prised open to a rocking pulse. Classics 1182 begins with a couple of solos, goes into two fuzzy live tracks, then runs through two long trio sessions for Savoy and Atlantic. Although constrained a little by the durations, these are some of the most particular Garner sessions to date, bouncing and bustling through the songs at quicker tempos and luxuriating in the ballad arpeggios. The Atlantic date has an almost impressionistic feel, with titles such as 'Reverie', 'Turquoise' and 'Twilight'. Classics 1205 offers three trio dates, a single solo of 'Love Is The Thing' and a session with Johnny Hartman breezing through four ballads. Slow tempos predominate (even 'Jitterbug Waltz' is played very kindly), although the final session for Roost has more go in it on the likes of 'Tippin' Out With Erroll'. Distinctly average sound, so for Garner nuts only.

 Erroll Garner 1950 Classics 1240 Garner; John Simmons (b); Harold 'Doc' West, Shadow Wilson (d); Florence Wright (v). 5–6/50.
(*) Erroll Garner 1950–1951 Classics 1310 As above, except omit West. 6/50–7/51.
Classics 1240 includes Erroll's last tracks for Atlantic and his first for Columbia, where he immediately gets a much better sound, although there's no concession to LP-length: virtually everything is still around the three-minute mark. But at least we get to hear Erroll in decent sound for the first time, and on Classics 1310 that really comes to the forefront: 'Poor Butterfly', a thrilling 'Honeysuckle Rose', and the mix of gaiety and wistfulness in 'Play

Piano Play' which must be deemed a Garner trademark. The disc ends with three rather mysterious Garner solos for a label named Recorded In Hollywood (though not all that well).

(*) Erroll Garner 1952–1953 Classics 1370 Garner; Wyatt Ruther (b); Eugene 'Fats' Heard (d). 2/52–2/53.
(*) Erroll Garner 1953 Classics 1391 As above. 2–3/53.

All of these titles are drawn from sessions for Columbia, and if that label isn't going to keep them in print, then it's down to Classics to do the job. The earlier one begins with 12 piano solos but the trio takes over for the rest. A solo such as 'Anything Goes' underlines the uniqueness of Garner's genius: no other pianist has ever made Cole Porter's tune so sombre and joyful at the same moment. As the LP era came in, Garner clearly felt less constrained by playing-times, and many of these tracks pass the five- and six-minute mark, which only adds to the sense of exuberant extravagance. The sound is clattery and indifferent on the solos, much better on the trios.

(*) Errol Garner 1954 Classics 1447 As above, except add Candido Camero (perc). 7/54.

Here's Garner on a typical day at the office, knocking off 19 tracks in a single session; untypical in that it was for Mercury this time, and with Candido in for eight mambo tracks. The label may have insisted on somewhat shorter cuts, even for LP release, for only the Latin tunes, including a hefty 'Sweet Sue – Just You', are played out at much over regulation length. Classics mastering has long been such a whipping post that it's pleasing to report that the sound here is pretty respectable, though there's a quaver on Garner's more percussive notes that could easily have been resolved with a little more care.

 Yesterdays Naxos 8.12058 As various discs above. 44–49.
 Standards Naxos 8.120661 As various discs above. 45–49.
(*) Plays Misty Naxos 8.120771 Garner; Wyatt Ruther (b); Eugene 'Fats' Heard (d). 53–54.

As with many of their other editions, Naxos have effected a more careful and truthful remastering of original material than many more fêted and expensive editions. These three Garner collections make up a very attractive buy, the last in particular a fine set of tracks by the early-'50s trio.

(*) Contrasts Verve 558077-2 Garner; Wyatt Ruther (b); Eugene 'Fats' Heard (d). 7/54.

By this period Garner had settled into a format – swashbuckling trios which plundered standards with cavalier abandon. Bass and drums only have to keep up, but they provide a deceptively important anchor. The drummer's role is particularly important. As percussive as the pianist is, he leaves many accents to the man with the traps, and Heard has to concentrate hard to keep up. Garner's heartiness, his fondness for extravagantly arpeggiated ballads and knockabout transformations of standards can grow wearisome. But there are undervalued aspects to these records. He is a quirky but resonant blues player; he keeps the melody sacrosanct, even when mischievous; he always swings. The Original Misty has now been supplanted by a Master Edition version of its original album, Contrasts, in better sound and with the famous track cleaned up effectively.

CORE COLLECTION

(*) Concert By The Sea
Columbia CK 40589 Garner; Eddie Calhoun (b); Denzil Best (d). 9/55.

Garner's most famous album and one of the biggest-selling jazz records ever made, Concert By The Sea is essentially neither more nor less than a characteristic set by the trio in an amenable setting. Moments such as the teasing introduction to 'I'll Remember April', the flippant blues of 'Red Top' and the pell-mell 'Where Or When' find Garner at his most buoyant; but rather more interesting is his well-shaped treatment of 'How Could You Do A Thing Like That To Me'. The recording was never outstanding, but the reissue serves it well enough.

 Close Up In Swing / A New Kind Of Love Telarc CD-83383 Garner; Eddie Calhoun (b); Kelly Martin (d); strings, brass, woodwind; Leith Stevens (cond). 7/61–7/63.
 Dreamstreet / One World Concert Telarc CD-83350 Garner; Eddie Calhoun (b); Kelly Martin (d). 59–8/63.
 That's My Kick / Gemini Telarc CD-83332 Garner; Arthur Ryerson, Wally Richardson (g); Ernest McCarty, Milt Hinton (b); George Jenkins, Herbie Lovelle, Jimmie Smith (d); Johnny Pacheco, Jose Mangual (perc). 66–72.

Telarc has raided a hefty back-catalogue; these are decent value. That said, most of the sessions will only stir much excitement among hardcore devotees. Dreamstreet is nice, the One World show notably lively, That's My Kick has a slightly augmented band with guitar and percussion, and Gemini found Erroll taking a turn at the harpsichord. Garner remains interesting from moment to moment, but over CD length his style's limitations tend to show up on ordinary albums, which is basically what these are.

The exception is Close Up In Swing/A New Kind Of Love. The first album is another regulation trio date, but the second is a film score which Garner, despite his illiteracy, put together via block arrangements that were subsequently orchestrated and left open for him to improvise the piano parts. The results say little that's profound about his music, but it's an interesting diversion to hear him magnified via a full orchestra.

 Erroll Garner: Jazz Masters 7 Verve 518197-2 Garner; Wyatt Ruther (b); Eugene 'Fats' Heard (d); Candido Camero (perc). 54–55.
(*) This Is Jazz Columbia CK 64968 Garner; John Simmons, Wyatt Ruther, Al Hall (b); Shadow Wilson, Specs Powell, Eugene 'Fats' Heard (d). 6/50–2/57.

Many of Garner's albums from the late '50s and '60s are unavailable. The Jazz Masters disc is sound value, a smart choice of solo and trio pieces from the Mercury sessions. This Is Jazz is a pleasing set drawn from Columbia holdings; 'Moonglow' is a particularly fine treatment.

Carlos Garnett (born 1938)

TENOR, ALTO, SOPRANO AND BARITONE SAXOPHONES

Born in Panama and self-taught, he arrived in New York in 1962 and worked with various leaders, including Miles Davis. In the '70s he made a string of albums which fused Panamanian music, jazz and soul, a style he called Universal Black Force.

 Fuego En Mi Alma High Note HCD 7001 Garnett; Carlton Holmes (p); Brad Jones (b); Shingo Okudaira (d); Neil Clarke (perc). 9/96.
(*) Under Nubian Skies High Note HCD 7023 As above, except omit Clarke; add Russell Gunn (t). 9/97.
(*) Moon Shadow Savant 2011 Garnett; Derrick Gardner (t); Robert Trowers (tb); Alvin Flythe (ts); Carlton Holmes (p); George Marshall (b); Shingo Okudaira (d); Neil Clarke (perc). 12/99.

Garnett's Muse albums had a bit of a cult following within the so-called acid jazz movement, but they've once again gone back into limbo. His return to active duty in the late '90s is very welcome, if the excellent Under Nubian Skies in particular is anything to go by. 'I feel I'm doing better soloing than I did back in my earlier days', Garnett says, and he's right, sticking to the tenor and thinning out the verbiage of the old music. Fuego En Mi Alma could have used a little more contrast (supplied by Gunn on the later date), and here and there Garnett sounds just a tad rusty, but it's spirited and generous music. Garnett is coming straight out of classic-period Coltrane for much of Under Nubian Skies and, since again the rhythm section is supportive rather than combative, it throws his sound into a sharper relief. Gunn is happy to be a good-natured foil, and there are some useful, boppish originals for them to work out on. An enjoyable surprise.

As usual, Garnett manages to avoid slavish influence on Moon Shadow. His 'Giant Steps' might well be one of the Neptune's ladders that makes up the Panama Canal. It's a briskly Latin interpretation, harmonically exact, but rhythmically much more supple than the original. The same is true of 'My Favorite Things' and also 'Softly, As In A Morning Sunrise', which hints at the Coltrane of the legendary Village Vanguard sessions. The other horns solo only sparingly, a pity in the case of Robert Trowers, who is always worth hearing, but they do a fine job of articulating Garnett's larger vision of a pan-Afro-American musical language.

Kenny Garrett (born 1960)

ALTO SAXOPHONE, FLUTE, OTHER INSTRUMENTS

Arrived in New York in 1980, and came to notice with Miles Davis. Has since worked prolifically, in hard bop but with an awareness of funk and other forms.

 Introducing Kenny Garrett Criss Cross 1014 Garrett; Woody Shaw (t, flhn); Mulgrew Miller (p); Nat Reeves (b); Tony Reedus (d). 11/84.

Garrett's old boss Miles Davis once accused him of wearing 'Sonny Stitt's dirty drawers', a fair version of the youngster's plangent, bluesy style. The debut is a more than decent effort. Shaw is a far more sympathetic partner than the bustling, somewhat aggressive Roney on a subsequently deleted Paddle Wheel disc. Here, Garrett tackles all the material with a freshness and lack of prejudice that is instantly appealing. His phrasing is very exact, for all its relaxed delivery, and his habit of lingering on low tones just a fraction longer than expected gives the solos the solidity needed when working without a harmony instrument.

* Triology Warner Bros 9 45731 Garrett; Kiyoshi Kitagawa, Charnett Moffett (b); Brian Blade (d). 95.

This is a very special record, made with Garrett's working trio (Moffett's on a couple of tracks). Garrett is still content to play standards and repertoire pieces, and he brings fresh angles to Brubeck's 'In Your Own Sweet Way' and the old warhorse 'Giant Steps', which he plays with a respectful insouciance; his major encounter with Coltrane was still to come. There's refreshingly little ego on show, and Triology suggests the work of a young master musician who knows his place in the tradition. The dedication to Henderson and Rollins was perhaps a sign of where his thinking lay.

* Pursuance Warner Bros 9 46209 Garrett; Pat Metheny (g); Rodney Whitaker (b); Brian Blade (d). 96.

Perhaps, as he worked his way through the 'Giant Steps' changes on Triology, Garrett recognized this album would have to be made sooner or later. Coltrane tributes were ten a penny at this time, but this is one of the best. Having a guitarist on board of Metheny's undersold gifts opened up the song structures, and Garrett's ability to second-guess harmonic progressions makes this a very free interpretation indeed. They kick off with 'Countdown' and 'Equinox', continue with 'Liberia' and 'Dear Lord', and really hit pace with a terse and wonderful version of 'After The Rain'. The title-piece begins a gigantic coda which includes a very brief, almost throwaway version of 'Giant Steps' again. The other Trane compositions included are 'Lonnie's Lament', 'Like Sonny', 'Alabama' and 'Latifa', each of them intelligently rethought and reworked.

(*) Simply Said Warner Bros 9 8759 Garrett; Sheldrick Mitchell (p, org); Mulgrew Miller (p, v); Pat Metheny (g); Marcus Miller, Nat Reeves (b, v); Chris Dave, Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d, v); Bashiri Johnson (d); Raymond Harris (v). 98.

The absent guest here is Kenny Kirkland, who died shortly before the session and whose loss perhaps adds to rather than explains a rather melancholic sound. Even upbeat, Garrett sounds thoughtful and even guarded. Always a player who takes time to process the lessons of the recent past, he can sound repetitive. Here, though, he cheerfully recaps and compresses solos from Triology and Songbook, without seeming to play musical leftovers. Garrett's band is fresh and unaffected. Mitchell is an interesting organ-player and a decent writer as well, claiming a single but valuable credit with 'Words Can't Express'. The only question mark hangs over Dave's unvarying count. Metheny is only in for two tunes and Marcus Miller for three. Big Mulgrew has a guest spot alongside Jeff Watts, helping to keep the sound varied and subtly weighted.

 Happy People Warner Bros 9362 47754-2 Garrett; Michael Stewart (t, flhn); Vernell Brown (p); Randy Razz (g); Bobby Hutcherson (vib); Marcus Miller, Charnett Moffett (b); Chris Dave (d); Jean Norris (v). 9/01.

* Standard Of Language Warners 48404 Garrett; Vernell Brown (p); Charnett Moffett (b); Chris Dave, Eric Harland (d). 9/01, 02.

For all the shadow cast by the World Trade Center attacks, Happy People is a happy, funky recording, almost reminiscent of Carlos Garnett or Grover Washington. The best tracks are, almost inevitably, those that feature Hutcherson, who seems to invest the whole album with his personality. Stewart brings a warm and soulful tone to the two opening tracks and Marcus Miller gives 'Song For DiFang' his usual snappy touch, punching in a wonderfully inventive countermelody. The other guests are less significant, though Randy Razz's guitar does bring an extra dimension to 'Ain't Nothing But The Blues'. Jean Norris's vocals doubtless helped pitch the record towards a club and dance market.

Some of the tracks on the magnificent Standard Of Language were originally intended for the earlier album but were deemed unsuitable in the circumstances. Whatever the reasoning, this is the album that finally clinched Warners' investment. The long, three-part title-track is a virtual summation of all he has learned from the greats of the saxophone – Parker, Coleman, Coltrane – and a strong declaration of independence from them as well. 'XYZ' is stunning neo-bop with an old-fashioned swing. The band performs magnificently throughout and the trimmed-down personnel allows Garrett's luminous alto to shine through. Unmissable.

 Beyond The Wall Nonesuch 79933 Garrett; Pharoah Sanders (ts); Bobby Hutcherson (vib); Mulgrew Miller (p); Robert Hurst (b); Brian Blade (d). 2/06.

The opening finds Garrett trading long drones with Sanders, who's in his best form for years, but the record really takes off with the title-track. Miller puts in a remarkable solo before Garrett makes his own statement in a vigorous hard-bop mode that sounds utterly of the moment. The Eastern theme – it's the Great Wall of China on the cover – is most obvious in the sampled Buddhist chanting on 'Ornament For Clear Realization', but it doesn't get in the way of some fine playing. Hutcherson is typically masterful and clearly enjoys his exchanges with Miller. Garrett remains quietly but firmly in charge and with Blade and Hurst so obviously hip to his needs, he has the perfect foundation for another iconic performance.

Also, in brief:

(*) Black Hope Warner Bros 9362 45017. 92.

The other Warners are deleted, but here Garrett holds his own even alongside the great Joe Henderson (ts).

 Stars And Stripes Jazz Door 1259. 93.

Strong live date with the trio: Charnett Moffett (b), Brian Blade (d).

(*) Songbook Warner Bros 9 4651. 97.

A set of good originals, plainly written but carefully worked through.

Christian Garrick

VIOLIN, VIOLA

Son of Michael and a member of his small group.

 Different Strokes Audio-B ABCD10 Garrick; John Dankworth (cl); David Gordon, Peter James (p); John Etheridge, Dave Kelbie (g); Jeremy Brown (b); Tom Hooper (d). 7/98, 3/99.

(*) Four Spirits Flying Blue Whale FLY1 As above, except omit Dankworth, James, Etheridge, Kelbie. 01.

No surprise to find two Django Reinhardt tunes on a record with this line-up instrumentation, but young Garrick is a venturesome fellow, also programming 'Chelsea Bridge', Bill Evans's 'Very Early' and Michael's 'Judas Kiss'. His own 'Cricklemetal' suggests the composing gene has been passed on intact. Co-producer Dankworth (all but the live 'Shankra', were recorded at Wavendon) turns up on clarinet for Django's 'Del Salle' and the Strayhorn tune, while Etheridge is on hand for four tracks. Not always clear when Christian makes the switch to viola. His fiddle-playing has a warm resonance that sometimes suggests the bigger instrument.

(*) At The Dimming Of The Day Flying Blue Whale FLY4 Garrick; John Etheridge (g). 4/06.

A perfect partnership. The programme could hardly be more imaginative: 'Come Sunday', 'Love Me Tender', the theme to Cinema Paradiso, the 'Londonderry Air', 'Stormy Weather' and the Richard Thompson title-tune. They even make something of 'Tennessee Waltz'. The kind of record that might spoil from over-analysis.

(*) Homage To Grappelli Flying Blue Whale FLY 5 Garrick; John Horler (p); Alec Dankworth (b); Allan Ganley (d). 6/07.

Obvious, really, but no less interesting for being obvious. This is a straighter jazz conception, and it works very well. Chris swings into 'Crazy Rhythm' and then doesn't let up for the duration. There's subtlety too; wrong to harp too much on his father's influence, but you couldn't grow up with Michael Garrick and not know something about chords and melody. Horler, Dankworth and Ganley give him support and nudge him along, but Garrick's in fine voice and going places.

Also, in brief:

 Firewire Flying Blue Whale FLY3 2CD. 05.

There's a rocking intensity to much of this, which comes in a bit long in retrospect. No mistaking his boldness, though.

 Marzipan Flying Blue Whale FLY2. 10/02.

You either like marzipan, or you don't. We found this one over-sweetened by dubbed-in strings and other effects.

Michael Garrick (born 1933)

PIANO, HARPSICHORD, CELESTE

Still perversely best known for his 'Jazz Praises', the Enfield-born composer has taken Duke's 'sacred' music on a step, using jazz as the basis for a body of liturgical music which swings with the gift of tongues.

 October Woman Vocalion CDSML 8420 Garrick; Shake Keane (t); Joe Harriott (as); Coleridge Goode (b); Colin Barnes (d); Elizabethan Singers. 65.

 Black Marigolds Vocalion CDSML 8411 Garrick; Ian Carr (t, flhn); Don Rendell (ss, ts); Joe Harriott (as); Tony Coe (ts); Dave Green (b); Colin Barnes, Trevor Tompkins (d); John Smith (poetry). 1–2/66.

 The Heart Is A Lotus Vocalion CDSML 8400 Garrick; Ian Carr (t, flhn); Art Themen (ss, ts, cl, f); Don Rendell (ss, ts, f); Coleridge Goode, Dave Green (b); Trevor Tomkins (d); Norma Winstone (v). 1/70.

() Mr Smith's Apocalypse Vocalion CDSML 8433 As above, except add Somerford Junior School Choir. 71.

(*) Cold Mountain Vocalion CDSML 8415 Garrick; Dave Green (b); Trevor Tomkins (d). 72.

Garrick's a national treasure, but it's depressing that some of the most exciting British releases of recent years have been reissues of records made 40 years ago. October Woman has reappeared with an additional EP of 'Anthem' and 'Wedding Hymn'. Like John Surman, Garrick is deeply absorbed in English church music and has continued to write for sacred spaces and occasions. This early album is most obviously collectable for the presence of Harriott and Keane, but it is Garrick's writing, and his quiet presence at the keyboard, that makes it special.

Black Marigolds might best be described as experimental. It consists of three fine septet instrumentals, but also collaborations with poet John Smith (Gielgudian on 'Jazz For Five'), two solo harpsichord pieces and one trio, and a brief celeste trio. 'What Are Little Girls?' is too Sugar Plum Fairy for comfort and albeit intricate and technically stretching there's not much mileage on the keyboard tracks. Some of the jazz-and-poetry stuff works: Ian Carr's solo on one of the duets was apparently written for Shake Keane, while the little-known Colin Barnes also impresses. The septets are excellent. Harriot and Coe solo on 'Webster's Mood', a rich swing tribute. Rendell takes the main theme on the waltz 'Ursula' with thoughtful contributions from Carr and Coe again.

Four years on, Norma Winstone is an integral part of the sextet, fulfilling a horn-player's role even as she delivers Garrick's wanly impressionistic texts. This was Themen's first record, all the more surprising when you hear how forcefully he solos alongside Rendell on 'Torrent'. 'Temple Dancer' features a limpid Carr solo and a wailing, shawm-like feature from Themen. Lovely arco bass from Goode on 'Beautiful Thing'. Mr Smith's Apocalypse is an engaging enough cantata and there are fine instrumental moments, but its premisses – musical and thematic – seem relatively slight and the individual themes fail to cohere.

The title track of Cold Mountain is not so much an epic as a monumental slab of music, its dynamism intriguingly static and unswinging. A terrific album that helps complete the early picture.

 Home Stretch Blues / (*) Troppo Vocalion CDSML 8426 / Impressed Repressed 986689 Garrick; Henry Lowther (t, flhn); Don Rendell (ts, f); Art Themen (ss, ts); Dave Green (b); Coleridge Goode (b on Troppo only); Trevor Tomkins (d); Norma Winstone (v). 4/72, 73.
Troppo is another worthy recovery from Universal's all too casually neglected dead-letter office. This is one of the masterpieces of modern jazz in Britain, marked by strong writing and arguably even stronger solo work from the principals, and marred only by a very unnatural sound. But that was the '70s for you. Garrick's achievement on 'Troppo' and 'Overtones Of A Forgotten Music' was to create scores that were both technically astute and emotionally satisfying. The other date has some good things, but lacks the monumental quality; interesting to compare Home Stretch Blues with Mike Westbrook's work of the period.

 A Lady In Waiting Jazz Academy JAZA 1 Garrick; Dave Green (b); Alan Jackson (d). 93.
Though perhaps best understood as a composer in the tradition of Ellington, Garrick is also a formidable small-group player, and this seasoned group plays scaled-down versions of pieces originally conceived for orchestra. Interesting to compare it with the earlier trio above. The most accurate measure of the leader's skills is his approach to repertory material like Hancock's 'Dolphin's Dance' and John Lewis's wonderfully pianistic 'Two Degrees East, Three Degrees West'; exhilarating all the way.

 For Love Of Duke ... And Ronnie Jazz Academy JAZA 4 Garrick; Gabriel Garrick, Ollie Preece, Steve Waterman, Ian Wood (t); Brian Archer, Bill Mee, Mark D'Silva (tb); Mike Hall, Martin Hathaway, Bob McKay, Jim Tomlinson, Matt Wates (sax); Colin Oxley (g); Paul Moylan (b); Alan Jackson (d); Jacqui Dankworth (v). 95, 96.

(*) Down On Your Knees Jazz Academy JAZA 5 Garrick; Mark Armstrong, Gabriel Garrick, Paul Jayasinha, Martin Shaw, Steve Waterman (t); Brian Archer, Matt Coleman, Dave Holt, Bill Mee, Mark Nightingale, Malcolm Earl Smith (tb); Paul Booth, Ben Castle, Mike Hall, Bob McKay, Jim Tomlinson, Matt Wates (sax); Dominic Ashworth (g); Paul Moylan (b); Alan Jackson (d); Anita Wardell (v). 99.
Garrick is gradually assembling a full documentation of his output as a big-band composer. It seems on the face of it perverse that works like 'Jazz Praises' should be recorded piecemeal – another two pieces are recorded on For Love Of – except that they fit perfectly well into the broader context of his work. Equally, more of the Hardy Country material – 'The Storm (Was Its Lover)' – juxtaposes nicely with tunes dedicated to Ellington and written in memory of altoist Joe Harriott, whose free-form writing and playing had such a huge impact on the British scene. The final dedication is, of course, to the late Ronnie Scott, with whom Garrick worked only very rarely but for whom he shares a widespread affection and debt.

The use of Jacqui Dankworth to fill in what would have been a whole choir on the original score is underlined once again in Anita Wardell's work on the recent Down On Your Knees. Anita's ability to inflect songs with apposite and accurate emotion represents an important dramatic resource to Garrick, who can concentrate on leading a band of undoubted technical sophistication and iron-clad swing. The live version of 'Take The "A" Train', recorded at the Vortex club in London, is a joyous curtain-piece, but the mood overall is more thoughtful, even when the pace is intense. As ever, Garrick is mining material that goes back to the Rendell–Carr quintet of the '60s and its reaction to the advanced harmonics of the John Coltrane Quartet, while 'Torrent' is lifted from The Heart Is A Lotus.

() The New Quartet / () Inspirations Jazz Academy JAZA 7 / 14 Garrick; Martin Hathaway (ss, as); Paul Moylan (b); Alan Jackson (d). 10–11/01, 07.
What deliciously surprising records these are, and an interesting change of pace from the big-band projects. Garrick sounds playful and almost skittish, but then delivers a line of such emotional sonority that the heart skips a beat. The range of influences is now so broad-reaching that the idea that he should be influenced by anyone outside his own head almost seems absurd, except that Thelonious Monk is the presiding deity of this record, Monk and the Tatum who would also take a turn at the organ.

Hathaway is rather light-voiced and sometimes awkwardly cool when a little emotion might seem called for, but he plays beautifully on his own 'That-U-Be-A Good Idea', and elsewhere makes effective and poignant entrances. 'Cappuccino Gabrieli' is a small marvel, and Garrick's ballad style is in evidence once again on 'Little Girl'; all of these on the first record, some of which doesn't sound fully rehearsed. That's taken care of second time out; a strong vibrant quartet session with tight ensembles and notably good solos.

 Children Of Time /  Yet Another Spring Jazz Academy JAZA 13 / 12a Garrick; Martin Shaw, Steve Waterman, Gabriel Garrick (t); Mark da Silva, Alistair White, Dave Eaglestone (tb); Martin Hathaway, Matt Wates, Bob McKay, Jamie Anderson, Mick Foster (sax); Dominic Ashworth (g); Paul Moylan (b); Alan Jackson (d); Norma Winstone (v). 05.
The first is sacred music of a notionally ecumenical but in practice rather evanescent sort. The sound-world is strongly reminiscent of Neil Ardley's compositions of the late '60s and early '70s, but without Ardley's idiosyncratic voicings and alien harmonic sequences. But for Norma Winstone, who has rarely sung better in recent years, this would be rather dull and lifeless. She's the focus of the second disc as well, in many ways, but perversely here the absolute turn is composer Stan Tracey, whose 'Starless And Bible Black' is delivered in an arrangement of the deepest indigo; oddly brooding, but with dawn hinted just over the hill – wonderful.

Also, in brief:

 Poetry And Jazz In Concert Vocalion CDSML 8413. 64, 66.
A fashionable conjunction in the mid-'60s. Garrick was a pioneer and tireless exponent. Fine contributions from the group and from poets Dannie Abse, Adrian Mitchell and others.

 Jazz Praises At St Paul's Jazz Academy JAZA 9. 68.
Irrespective of your beliefs, this is a very powerful and moving musical experience.

(*) Meteors Close At Hand Jazz Academy JAZA 2. 6 & 7/94.

A generous studio sampling of material from Garrick's Royal Box (a reaction to tabloid mayhem) and from his Thomas Hardy, J. R. R. Tolkien and jazz character suites.

 Parting Is Such Jazz Academy JAZA 3. 95.

Christin Garrick (vn) and Don Rendell (ts, f) join the Green (b)–Jackson (d) trio: Canteloube, Lennon–McCartney, 'My Funny Valentine'.

 Green And Pleasant Land Jazz Academy JAZA 8. 6 & 7/94.

A beautiful set recorded live in the gentle acoustic of Missenden Church in Buckinghamshire; Chis Garrick (vn) is in the quartet.

(*) Peter Pan – Jazz Dance Suite Jazz Academy JAZA 9. 7/03.

Written as part of his 70th-birthday celebrations, this large-scale piece is wordy and a touch bland in the orchestration and voicing. Nice touches on 'The Lost Boys' and 'Hook' themes.

(*) Big Band Harriott Jazz Academy JAZA 11. 04.

A lavish tribute to an old friend and one of the lost leaders of jazz in Britain. Superb stuff.

George Garzone (born 1950)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

A passionate and articulate educator, still scantily represented on record.

* One Two Three Four Stunt STUCD07012 Garzone; Chris Crocco (g); Dennis Irwin (b); Pete Zimmer (d). 10/06.

Garzone always seems ready to abandon chordal structure altogether, while remaining essentially faithful to it. His '90s discs on the NYC label – Alone, Fours And Twos, Moodiology and The Fringe In New York (which represents his semi-permanent musical group; see also under their entry) – may still be available in small numbers, but it has been some time since there was a new one. This one comes doubly welcome, and there's a Japanese release from around this time as well, on the Venus label. One Two Three Four is familiarly dominated by Coltrane themes ('Giant Steps', 'Central Park West') and tributes. Guitar adds a new dimension to the group, similar in effect to Mainieri's vibes-playing in the past, but without the more conventional tonal centres of a piano. Garzone's solos are curiously anti-virtuosic, almost as if he won't deign to cut loose just because that's what's expected. It's an effective tactic, if it's a conscious one. Great stuff, and good to see him back in circulation.

Geoff Gascoyne (born 1963)

DOUBLE BASS

British bassist with a wide range of stylistic experience. An occasional leader with a number of high-profile associations.

 Voices Of Spring Jazzizit JITCD9605 Gascoyne; Gerard Presencer (flhn); Tim Garland, Andy Panayi (ts); Gareth Williams, John Donaldson (p); Jim Mullen (g); Jeremy Stacey (d); Claire Martin, Iain Shaw (v). 9/95.

 Winter Wonderland Jazzizit JITCD 9710 Gascoyne; Andy Panayi (ss); Pete Churchill (p); Adam Glasser (hca). 3/97.

(*) Autumn Jazzizit JITCD 0026 Gascoyne; Ben Castle (ss, ts); Jim Watson (p); Steve Brown (d). 99.

 Songs Of The Summer Jazzizit JITCD 0229 Gascoyne; Ben Castle (ss, ts); Gareth Williams (p); Anthony Kerr (vib); Malcolm MacFarlane (g); Sebastiaan de Krom (d); Jamie Cullum (v). 8/01.

 Keep It To Yourself Candid CCD 79798 Gascoyne; Martin Shaw (t, flhn); Steve Kaldestad (as, ts); Tom Cawley (p); Sebastiaan de Krom, James Powell (d); Jamie Cullum, Trudy Kerr, Georgie Fame (v); string quartet. 2/05.

If you wanted to sample something of what was going on in British jazz as it stood at the end of the 20th century, you could do a great deal worse than going straight to Autumn. There are nine originals by Geoff and two unexpected choices of cover performed by a top-drawer group. Castle's slippery, unpredictable phrasing and the admirable work done by two rising 'stars' – Watson and Brown – make the most of the opportunities in the writing, which is both catchy and musically substantial. The others in the 'four seasons' sequence are quite various and never quite hit the same standard. Summer benefits from some nicely judged guest spots, including a vocal from Cullum on 'To ...'; Gascoyne had been working in the singer/pianist's trio. Winter Wonderland is, improbably, a Christmas album, though we have a lasting affection for these as a sub-genre and this is as good as many. Spring could have done with more of Presencer, whose playing all suggests growth and fresh possibility, but here the guest appearances aren't so well judged for some reason.

Cullum's back for 'Love Won't Let Me Wait' and a pretty ghastly 'God Only Knows' on the more recent Candid set, which also has turns at the microphone by Trudy Kerr and Georgie Fame. It would be a pity if that distracted from the instrumental pieces, which showcase the core quintet and again suggest that the leader has a knack for writing and delivering hooky and worthwhile material.

Giorgio Gaslini (born 1929)

PIANO, KEYBOARDS

Studied composition in Milan, and composed and conducted into the early '60s, before forming a jazz quartet, which he performed with in factories and hospitals in an effort to bring jazz to a new audience. Has written operas and large-scale works, along with striking revisions of familiar composers. One of the most distinguished players in the Italian jazz lineage.

 L'Integrale: Anthologia Cronologica No. 1, No. 2 Soul Note 121350/1-2 2CD Gaslini; Nino Impallomeni, Giulio Libano (t); Raoul Ceroni (tb); Gino Stefani (cl); Lorenzo Nardini (cl, as); Gianni Bedori (as, bs, f); Marcello Boschi (as); Eraldo Volonté (ts); Gastone Tassinari (f); Mario Loschi (ob); Antonio De Serio, Bruno Crovetto, Alceo Guatelli (b); Gil Cuppini, Ettore Ulivelli, Franco Tonani (d). 48–64.

(*) L'Integrale; Anthologia Cronologica No. 3, No. 4 Soul Note 121352/3-2 2CD Gaslini; Don Cherry, Enrico Rava (t); Dino Piana (tb); Lorenzo Nardini (sno); Steve Lacy (ss); Gianni Bedori (as, ts, bs, f, picc); Gato Barbieri (ts); Eros Ferraresi, Mario Macchio (vn); Enrico Fiorini (vla); Dino Bazzano (clo); Bruno Crovetto, Kent Carter, Jean-François Jenny-Clark (b); Franco Tonani, Gianni Cazzola (d); orchestra, choir. 64–68.

 L'Integrale: Anthologia Cronologica No. 5, No. 6 Soul Note 121354/5 2CD Gaslini; Sergio Fanni, Al Korvin, Umberto Moretti, Emilio Soana, Oscar Valdambrini (t); Beppe Bergamasco, Dino Piana, Giancarlo Romani (tb); Manlio Palumbo (frhn); Gianni Basso, Steve Lacy, Glauco Masetti, Gianni Bedori, Eraldo Volonté,

Sergio Rigon (sax); Alessandro Ferrero (eng hn); Bruno Crovetto, Carlo Milano (b); Gianni Cazzola, Franco Tonani (d). 68–69.
The years roll back for Giorgio Gaslini. In a rare example of a reissue retrospective on Soul Note, the pianist's early chapters are dusted off for this impressive archive, which if it is sustained will eventually amount to a whole shelf of recordings. If the first two discs seem for the most part to be 'prentice work, they're not without interest. As early as 1948, still in his teens, Gaslini was arranging 'Night In Tunisia' and writing his own 'Bop-Bop' and 'Drums Be-Bop' for Gil Cuppini's sextet. From there, it's a jump to 1957 and a five-part piece for octet; then his quartet music for Antonioni's La Notte; and finally the formation of his famous quartet with Gianni Bedori, Bruno Crovetto and Franco Tonani. There are areas of classical atonality, but also foreshadowings of free jazz as well. The entire second disc is given over to his 'Dall'Alba All'Alba' suite for the group. Rather dustily recorded, most of this music is for Gaslini specialists, but even here there's plenty of material for the most elegant kind of crossovers – of jazz with a series of Italian musical traditions.

The third and fourth discs continue the matter. 'Dodici Canzoni D'Amore' sets a dozen Italian love songs to a treatment by Gaslini's group and a small string ensemble. The shabby recording doesn't help, and there are a few curious touches, such as an uncredited organ which makes theremin-like sounds here and there. Gaslini says that he gave the piano the responsibility for pathos, while the others handled the atmosphere. It's a curious but beguiling piece. His score for another film, Un Amore, takes up the rest of disc three: the quartet with orchestra and choir. If the orchestral parts sound very like vintage Morricone, that may be because they're men of like mind; either way, this is lightweight.

The fourth disc revives his most celebrated piece of the period, 'New Feelings', with Cherry, Lacy, Barbieri, Jenny-Clark and some Italian homeboys. As a clash of serialism and free playing, it has its awkward moments and, since Gaslini wrote the basic score only the night before, it's scarcely a well-prepared scenario: but all the players must have embraced the occasion, since the enthusiasm of the playing endures. Back to the quartet for 'La Stagione Incantata', a four-seasons suite: Bedori in particular sounds as if he's been liberated by his work on 'New Feelings', and in long form Gaslini makes increasing use of space, texture and astringent melodic variation. Newcomers should start with some of the later records, but the pianist's admirers will welcome these adventurous reissues.

Volumes five and six take Gaslini into a period where jazz – like most other musical forms in Italy – was inevitably bound up with the social and political events of the day. Grido was recorded live in May 1968, at the very heart of that year's fruitful, sometimes violent unrest. 'Canto Per I Martiri Negri' is a tribute to Dr Martin Luther King, but the piece that most sums up the mood of the time is 'Il Fiume Furore', dedicated to the students of the Paris Spring. The title-piece is a swirling epic, full of urgent and impatient sounds, and with a part for Lacy, who also guests on one other track, while 'Lullaby For All Children In The World' (the title given in English) shares some of the same impatient despair.

The other discs collected here are Newport In Milan, which opens with a version of 'Naima' and then works through a series of more formal 'Makrokosmos' variations (Crumbian rather than Bartókian and marked by an almost violent collision of parts), while the final component brings together the eponymous Africa suite with a series of 'Mikrokosmos' pieces, which probably do have more to do with Bartók, but which are, again, Gaslini originals. Here he attempts to create a complex instrumental dialogue within a very tightly defined musical 'microcosm'. These, not surprisingly, are played by a small group: Gaslini in familiar company with Bedori, Crovetto and Tonani. The strength of his writing and playing are extraordinary at this period and while the work is more radical than in later years it already has a maturity and grace that remains consistent with his political and social agenda.

* Gaslini Plays Monk Soul Note 121020 Gaslini (p solo). 5/81.
 Schumann Reflections Soul Note 121120 Gaslini; Piero Leveratto (b); Paolo Pellegatti (d). 7/84.
Only a performer and composer whose stated aim is 'total music', a grand unified synthesis of jazz, serialism, pop, classical forms and electro-acoustic procedures, could possibly relate with equal ease to Thelonious Monk, Robert Schumann and Albert Ayler. This, though, is what the remarkable Milanese has done. Playing and writing since his early teens, he has combined jazz with orchestral music, and he is an experienced conductor. As the Monk album clearly demonstrates, his sense of form is rock-solid, and what may be surprising about these tracks is how little he attempts to subvert the basic outlines. He remains faithful to the outlines of the piece from first to last but is obviously intrigued by internal consistencies, rhymes and chimes, and he blends individual songs into an elegantly crafted suite which ought to be listened to as a whole if possible.

The Schumann material is less obviously tractable to this kind of performance, and there are moments when one will have the impression of listening to a Bill Evans record put through some strange diffraction grid. The harmonic richness of the original leaves an improviser with less to do than when dealing with the bone and sinew of a Monk tune, but at the same time with an infinity of possibilities that may trip up even a subtle improviser. The trio setting doesn't seem quite right for this material, and Pellegatti is a rather lumpish player for jazz.

 Multipli Soul Note 121220 Gaslini; Roberto Ottaviano (as, ss, sno, bcl); Claudio Fasoli (ts, ss); Bruno Tommaso (b); Giampiero Prina (d). 10/87.
This is an interesting group. Ottaviano is more than just a utility player, but he has certainly traded in soloistic virtuosity in favour of an ability to create a spectrum of sound-textures. Fasoli is more obviously straight-ahead and, as the spearhead of the group with Gaslini, he makes for a convincing front-man. The rhythm section sounds terribly European, not because it doesn't swing but because the swing is so terribly exact and unvaried. A little bend and stretch here and there would improve this session immeasurably, and yet it's a record one goes back to, more out of curiosity than affection, but often enough to suggest that it has its virtues.

(*) Ayler's Wings Soul Note 121270 Gaslini (p solo). 7/90.
An extraordinary undertaking. Transcribing Albert Ayler, seemingly the most anti-pianistic of improvisers, would appear to be an almost absurdly quixotic task. So much of what Ayler was about fell between the conventional pitches that it would seem impossible to render it on a piano, and yet Gaslini converts that fierce microtonality into ripples and arpeggios that are as provocative as they are unexpectedly appealing. There is not as much darkness and passion as one would expect to hear, given the source material, but in its place there is a sort of grandeur that Albert never quite achieved. Superimposing 'Omega Is The Alpha' over 'Bells' is an oddity that works against the odds, and the versions of 'Ghosts' and 'Truth Is Marching In' have a Bachian simplicity. A genuine homage, profoundly felt and wholly successful. Some question marks about the recording; none about the music therein.

* Lampi Soul Note 121290 Gaslini; Daniele Di Gregorio (vib, mar, perc); Roberto Bonati (b); Giampiero Prina (d). 1/94.
One of Gaslini's most characteristic devices is a sudden dead halt over a heavy drum-beat. On Lampi it stands for the shocked pause that comes between a bolt of lightning (which is what the word means) and the rumble of thunder. In that flashbulb silence, nothing but the sound of the heart, and Gaslini plays strange tricks with the pulse rate on this remarkable record, pushing and stretching the beat, setting one instrument against the others, bending time. Never before has he made such imaginative use of percussion; Di Gregorio is a more than able second lead, a player with ideas of his own and a technique that recalls Bobby Hutcherson. Bonati and Prina fulfil their roles more modestly, but neither sounds out of sympathy with this demanding music.

(*) Jelly's Back In Town DDQ 128020 Gaslini; Paolo Fresu, Umberto Marcandalli, Sergio Orlandi (t); Luca Begonia, Pierluigi Salvi (tb); Oscar Gelmi (hn); Tino Tracanna (ts, ss); Gianluigi Trovesi (as, bcl); Guido Bombardieri, Maurizio Moraschini (as, cl); Alberto Nacci (ts); Roger Rota (bs); Maurizio Beltrami (f, picc); Ugo Gelmi (bsn); Adelio Leoni (g); Fabrizio Garofoli (p); Sandro Massazza (b); Vittorio Marinoni (d); Stefano Bertoli (perc); Silvia Infascelli (v). 2/96.
Monk, Schumann, Ayler … and now Jelly Roll Morton. Gaslini's arrangements are embedded into a suite which in the pale, bleached light of the city at dawn – 'La città all'alba' – allows Morton to move freely between past and present, between the roots of jazz and its uncertain future. After 'Billy Goat Stomp', there are three Creole and French songs from Louisiana, tiny and exquisitely played. After that, 'Spanish Swat', 'Wolverine Blues' and 'Freakish', and then a real shock, the 'Miserere' from Trovatore, a shock because it serves as a further reminder of the sheer diversity of Morton's sources. The remainder of the set is less compelling, though Gaslini's original material is superb. The Ensemble Mobile was convened for the festival at Bergamo, and the three guest soloists – Fresu, Tracanna (a revelation) and Trovesi – provide an appealing diversity of approach.

(*) Enigma Soul Note 121390-2 Gaslini; Alberto Mandarini, Mario Cavallaro, Warner Borgia (t); Gianpiero Malfatto, Beppe Caruso (tb); Gavino Mele (frhn); Achille Succi, Alessandro Benassi (as, cl, bcl); Riccardo Luppi (ts, f); Rossano Emili (bs); Daniele Di Gregorio (vib, perc); Erik Zavaroni (tba); Roberto Bonati (b); Giampiero Prina (d). 9/00–3/01.
Gaslini's latest group, Proxima Centauri Orchestra, at work on two new compositions and a theme borrowed from Sun Ra. 'Enigma' itself is three 'sets' and an aria to close. The Ra piece, 'Lanquidity', opens with a beautiful piano solo on the theme, before the rhythm section join in, and some of the horns arrive, sparingly, before the close: a lovely homage to the Saturnian. The big piece is the ten-part 'Planets Promenade Suite', at just over 30 minutes. As ever, the composer introduces all shadings of his musical interests, yet in the main this is Gaslini's most conventional large-scale music: anyone familiar with modern big-band procedure will find nothing intimidating here, just excellent playing by a picked team on imaginative material.

Gaslini admirers may also like to investigate Song Book Vol. 1 (Agora AG 261), a collection of what might be described as his art-song work, performed by three singers with the composer accompanying.

 Sacred Concert/Jazz Te Deum Soul Note 121420-2 Gaslini; Paolo Fresu (t); Orchestra Jazz della Sardegna; Coro Polifonico. 6/00.
Both like and unlike an Ellington Sacred Concert, this is a testing ground for Gaslini. The 'Sacred Concert' itself lasts some 23 minutes and has both text and music by Gaslini; the 'Te Deum' is in three parts (music by Gaslini, Gabriele Verdinelli and Bruno Tommaso) and runs for 50 minutes. Mostly it's a convincing mix of disciplines. The 'Concert' is more of a concert piece, but the solo voices have a freedom of expression which is different from most liturgical music, and the discreet use of a rhythm section adds an alternative pulse. There's the odd echo of something like Jesus Christ Superstar, perhaps, and like Ellington, Gaslini is too urbane to settle for creative humility. The 'Te Deum' uses the orchestra more vividly, although ultimately the piece can't quite transcend its episodic nature (and Tommaso's music is some of the most interesting). The live recording is all right, although a classical producer would most likely find it less than acceptable.

* Urban Griot Soul Note 121470 Gaslini; Warner Borgia (t); Beppe Caruso, Giampiero Malfatto (tb); Gavino Mele (frhn); Achile Succi (as); Riccardo Luppi (ts) Rossano Emili (bs); Alessandro Benassi (bcl); Daniele De Gregorio (vib, mar); Roberto Bonati (b); Vittorio Marinoni (d). 6 & 9/02.
This magnificent poem to la città is dedicated to the spirit of drummer and long-time collaborator Giampiero Prina. Gaslini avoids the usual clichés of urban evocation – speed, fracture, anonymity – and puts in their place a kind of multi-perspectival humanity, in which the cityscape emerges as a prism of different viewpoints. It is a lovingly constructed portrait and the Proxima Centauri Orchestra is, as ever, well equal to it. The soloists are superb, with Bonati particularly strong on a fine arrangement of Bruce Springsteen's and Patti Smith's 'Because The Night'. There is also a fine interpretation of 'Guantanamera' and, as a bonus, a half-hour live recording of 'Odissey' from the Teatro della Società in Lecco, beautifully recorded and bringing a superb record to a flourishing but poignant climax.

 Plays Sun Ra Soul Note 121490 Gaslini (p solo). 03.
Even after a number of these composition-book projects, this isn't the obvious choice. Sun Ra, though, had a particular reputation in Italy and Gaslini had more than most been aware of that. The choice of material is relatively straightforward, with 'Fate In A Pleasant Mood', 'Medicine For A Nightmare' and 'A Quiet Place In The Universe' all strongly featured. Some less-familiar things, as well. The playing is obviously rather more florid than the originals, but there has been too little attention paid to Sun Ra's pianism and this is a valuable corrective as well as a genuinely interesting solo piano recital.

Also, in brief:

(*) Mister O Soul Note 121300. 7/96.
The Othello story reworked as jazz-opera. Arturo Testa is superb as Mister O, Paola Lorenzi convincingly frail as 'Des', but the key performance is Bernardo Lanzetti's as Jago. Also in the mix, three rappers and a magnificent jazz orchestra.

 Ballets Soul Note 121320. 99.
Gaslini with his Globo Quartet, a string quartet and some winds. Short, punchy pieces that stand up very well on their own, especially the Carmen Graffiti selections.

Giacomo Gates

VOICE

Son of a classical musician, he was spotted by Sarah Vaughan.

(*) Fly Rite Sharp Nine 1011 Gates; Jim Rotondi (t, flhn); David Hazeltine (p); Peter Washington (b); Ben Riley (d). 1/98.
 Centerpiece Origin 72428 Gates; Vincent Herring (as); Harold Danko (p); Vic Juris (g); Ray Drummond (b); Greg Bandy (d). 6/04.

He's had an extraordinary career, having spent a decade working in Alaska as a bulldozer operator and as a nightclub bouncer. It was also there, improbably, that Sassie heard him sing. All that said, Gates doesn't overdo the school-of-hard-knocks approach to a jazz lyric. He has a voice that suggests lots of tobacco and days working in the cold, but he's a musician first and foremost and has the deceptive grace you sometimes find in men who work hard with their hands. He's written some fine lyrics, too, including one for Lee Morgan's 'Speedball' (is he related to Bruce Gates?) and for 'Epistrophy', though he wisely uses the Jon Hendricks words for 'Ask Me Now'. The band's great (he even has Monk's drummer on the strength), but Giacomo doesn't need either the flattery or the camouflage. A real jazz guy.

There's an earlier record, but we've only heard this and Centerpiece. Gates's interest in the vocalese period comes through again here (Lambert, Hendricks and Ross, and King Pleasure material), but neither the material nor the group, Danko and Juris notwithstanding, has the same authority and impact.

Gateway

GROUP

Convened for a one-off date, but with obvious longevity.

 Gateway ECM 829192-2 John Abercrombie (g); Dave Holland (b); Jack DeJohnette (d). 3/75.
 Gateway 2 ECM 847323-2 As above. 7/77.
(*) Homecoming ECM 527637-2 As above. 12/94.
(*) In The Moment ECM 529346-2 As above. 12/94.

Abercrombie's gently arpeggiated and almost countrified picking had been one of the definitive sounds of ECM's early years. Holland and DeJohnette came with more baggage than it seemed possible to carry and, predictably, the first album didn't quite gel. The bassist sounds almost pedestrian in places, seemingly not fired by Abercrombie's writing, and it's interesting that, when the group reconvened in 1994, the title-piece of Homecoming was a long Holland composition that addressed exactly the shortcomings of the first disc. Gateway 2 was an engaging enough follow-up, but it has all the hallmarks of an obligatory sequel. Still, the group's early '90s live appearances sent fans scurrying back to the original records; whatever their shortcomings, they retained an engaging freshness. In The Moment is supergroup playing of a high order, three hugely experienced musicians interacting with dazzling ease.

Roberto Gatto (born 1958)

DRUMS

Dabbled in fusion for a time, but now a veteran of the modern Italian scene.

 Plays Rugantino Cam Jazz CAMJ7747 Gatto; Claudio Corvini, Enrico Rava (t); Gianluca Petrella, Massimo Pirone (tb); Stefano Mastrangelo (frhn); Rosario Giuliani (as); Gabriele Mirabassi (cl); Enrico Pieranunzi (p); Luca Bulgarelli (b); Orquesta Roma Sinfonietta. 01.

The name of Armando Trovaioli and his musical Rugantino probably won't ring many bells outside Italy, but purely on its own terms this is a beautiful set. Gatto swings graciously and never overpowers these settings. Rava and Pieranunzi are established marques, but the other horns have quiet authority. A lovely set.

(*) Deep CamJazz CAMJ7760 Gatto; Gianluca Petrella (tb); Javier Girotto (ss, bs); Dado Moroni (p); Rosario Bonaccorso (b). 2/03.

The beautiful grooves Gatto sets up for tracks such as 'The Swinging Cats' and 'Scandalo All'Ombra', the latter a model of making a slow beat swing, encapsulate the feel of this date, recorded after a successful tour by the quintet. The nine tunes were all penned by the leader and they're set up for fruitful solos. A soprano/trombone front line makes a nice shift from the norm and there are some agreeably humorous touches in pieces such as 'Su Lungotevere', lasciviously deconstructed by Petrella.

* Traps Cam Jazz CAMJ7798 Gatto; Daniele Tittarelli (ss, as); Luca Mannutza (p); Umberto Fiorentino, Marco Bonini (g); Luca Bulgarelli (b). 9/06.

This is better still. 'Traps' itself, and 'Catch The Drums' announce this as a percussionist's album but for the most part Gatto plays for the band, setting up a graceful flow (that's the name of another track) that invites lyrical playing from the others. An extract from Weill's Der Silbersee is a surprise, but Gatto's awareness of this kind of repertoire is well enough attested for it to seem a logical choice. Highly recommended.

Stephen Gauci (born 1966)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

He studied with Joe Lovano and George Garzone and has moved from inside to out with ease.

(*) Long Night Waiting Cadence CJR 1180 Gauci; Michael Bisio (b); Jay Rosen (d). 7/04.
 We're Comin' Just One Time Cadence CJR 1190 Gauci; Terence Murren (b); Jeremy Carlstedt (d). 9/04.
 First, Keep Quiet CIMP 326 Gauci; Todd Nicholson (b); Jeremy Carlstedt (d). 3/05.
 Wisps Of An Unknown Face CIMP LTD 351 Gauci; Nate Wooley (tb); Ken Filiano (b); Lou Grassi (d). 06.
 Substratum CIMP 359 Gauci; Michael Bisio (b); Jay Rosen (d). 06.

He started as a straight-ahead player and these discs have an almost rhapsodic tenor sound, broad and luxuriant. The phrasing has the assured momentum of someone more accustomed to swinging in straight time, but he likes to work in stark open space too, and the trio with Bisio and Rosen has a sweeping range for a trio recording: seven improvisations cover many kinds of dynamic, from the accumulating swing of the title-piece to the dark brooding of 'All Cool'. Bisio and Rosen play with great spirit and are generously featured.

The second trio record is by a regular team but doesn't quite have the same spark. It's more tune-orientated ('What's New' shows what he can do on a standard ballad), and even has the blues on 'Blue Gauch', but the leader sounds ruffled and prone to tonal distortion, which doesn't really make the best of his playing. Some of the same thing happens on the first CIMP – when he works in the Rollins-like terrain of 'Otolarynology', Gauci is impressive and his music grips; on the seemingly endless rhetoric of 'Neither Free Nor Bound', he loses the listener. It's too long, and would have benefited from a more rigorous choice of tracks.

Wisps was a useful attempt to develop the approach with another horn. Filiano was also a useful recruit, bringing a richness and intensity to the overall sound (CIMP generally do bass-players proud). It's a limited edition release, though. The return to trio format on Substratum feels like a step back, except that this is a very good trio indeed. Rosen will have a bent back if he ever needs to move his CIMP tapes to another house. He's huge here, but light on his feet. Gauci's best showing from this time was on a Bisio CD for the same label, but this one is good enough.

Billy Gault (born 1941)

PIANO

One of Steeplechase's estimable roster of Americans neglected at home. Once worked with Art Blakey and Jackie McLean.

 When Destiny Calls: The Music Of Billy Gault Steeplechase SCCD 31027 Gault; Billy Skinner (t); Bill Saxton (ts); James Fish Benjamin (b); Michael Carvin (d): Ellen DeLeston, Joe Lee Wilson (v). 10/74.

Who'd remember now that Gault was a Messenger, albeit briefly? He's probably best known for his appearance on McLean's New York Calling, made for Steeplechase at the same time as this and with almost the same line-up. Billy's writing is inventive, leaning towards the modal but with lots of open chords and suspended harmonies. The songs aren't up to much – and the singers don't help – but there's good music on 'Mode For Trane' and 'Portrait Of Joaner (Black Woman)'. He deserves to be (re)discovered.

Jacques Gauthé (born 1939)

CLARINET, SOPRANO SAXOPHONE

He heard Bechet in Paris in the '50s and has been following in those footsteps ever since.

(*) Someday, Sweetheart GHB BCD-299 Gauthé; Scott Black, Chris Tyle (c, v); Tom Ebbert (tb); John Royen (p); Amy Sharpe (bj); Tom Saunders (tba, v); Trevor Richards (d). 7/89.

 Paris Blues Stomp Off 1216 Gauthé; Daniel Barda (tb); Alain Marquet (cl); Louis Mazetier (p); Enzo Mucci (bj, g); Michel Marcheteau (sou). 2/90.

(*) Creole Jazz Stomp Off 1256 Gauthé; Chris Tyle (t); Duke Heitger (c); John Gill (tb, ky, d, v); Tom Ebbert (tb); Steve Pistorius (p); Amy Sharpe (bj); Tom Saunders (tba); Hal Smith (d). 7/92.

(*) Yerba Buena Style GHB BCD-331 Gauthé; Duke Heitger, Chris Tyle (t); John Gill (tb, v); Bob Helm (cl, as); Steve Pistorius (p); Tom Saunders (b, tba); Jeff Hamilton, Kenny Hall (d). 4/94.

 Echoes Of Sidney Bechet Good Time Jazz 15006 Gauthé; Duke Heitger (t); Mike Owen (tb); Steve Pistorius (p); Lars Edegran (g); Tom Saunders (b); Chris Tyle (d). 1/97.

 Bechet Summit GHB BCD-397 Gauthé; Claude Luter (cl, ss); Bob Wilber (cl); Steve Pistorius (p); Lars Edegran (g); Tom Saunders (b); Chris Tyle (d). 5/97.

Gauthé has been leading the Creole Rice Jazz Band in New Orleans for many years. His passionate dedication to Sidney Bechet gets full rein on the Good Time Jazz disc, which sounds as if the old master has walked into the '90s and set down his favourite pieces in modern sound. Gauthé walks an awkward line between homage and pure re-creation, playing soprano almost throughout, but the sheer intensity of his mission is inspiring – in a world full of Coltrane clones, Bechet followers aren't swarming all over the bandstands. The band plays second fiddle – a further step towards authenticity.

On the other discs, Gauthé grants more space all round. Paris Blues, cut on a visit home to France, is a two-clarinet showcase with Marquet, yet the quickfire Mazetier and the barking Barda get in plenty of shots too. Gauthé sticks to clarinet on both this and Creole Jazz, finding as much Dodds as Bechet.

Creole Jazz is about the best of these; it's a cheerful set of crusty antiques – 'Auntie Skinner's Chicken Dinner' – revivalist set-pieces like the Claude Luter tunes and silvery memories of Armstrong, Morton and Oliver. But the earlier Someday, Sweetheart is only a whisker behind – lots of Oliver and Armstrong performed modestly but with skill and warmth. And Yerba Buena Style, on which Bob Helm, the venerable sideman of Lu Watters, joins in, has many roaring moments, especially on the first session with a two-trumpet front line; try the tempestuous assault on 'Flat Foot'. As for the Summit session, the clarinettists have all been playing long enough to assert themselves over Bechet's looming influence. Wilber is only present on the first two tracks, and thereafter Gauthé and Luter perform a gentlemanly joust, with the rhythm team in jolly support.

Jeff Gauthier

VIOLIN

Gifted improviser/composer, always pushing at the stylistic envelope.

 Internal Memo Nine Winds NWCD 0164 Gauthier; David Witham (ky); Eric von Essen(b, hca); Alex Cline (d). 9/93.

 The Present Nine Winds NWCD 0196 As above, except omit von Essen; add Joel Hamilton (b). 5/96.

() Mask / () One And The Same Cryptogramophone 112 / 128 As above, except add Nels Cline (g). 7/01; 4/05.

Gauthier's tone and delivery are often amiable enough to sit comfortably in a QHCF situation. But these are Nine Winds dates, and though abstraction doesn't always suit him, that's what he's involved with here, like the tough closing 'Olivier's Nightmare' on the first disc. When Witham drops out on the tribute to Richard Grossman, 'Seriously Twisted Blues', the trio digs in and finds music of real intensity. 'Astor' is a challenging pastorale and 'Refuge' a kind of brainy mood music. Next time out the group sounds more accomplished in the idiom, and it's not so much the solos by Gauthier or Witham that give the tracks their character as the group textures and ensemble contrasts. Country and tango influences are nicely assimilated.

Mask is a terrific record, eclectic in all the right ways but driven by a strong group aesthetic. The other Cline brother is a key recruitment to the Goatette [sic!] and right from the off, Gauthier's own demanding 5/4 'Clea's Bounce', the record's all about rhythmic daring, harmonic invention (most noticeably on the Eric von Essen composition 'Waltz For KP', which comes next) and a confident blending of styles (as on 'Ephemera', which has a faint ethnomusicological perfume without turning into 'world music'). One And The Same keeps the quality up. Bennie Maupin's 'Water Torture' is a startling piece to find here, but they make it work and they make it their own. Von Essen and the Clines are again represented by strong pieces, but Jeff clinches his leadership with the opening 'Ahfufat – For Wan', a remarkable conception that sounds like a warped violin concerto.

Charles Gayle (born 1939)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, BASS CLARINET, PIANO, VIOLA

Born in Buffalo. He played as a street musician, allegedly homeless and without possessions, until his late-'80s lionization as an heir to Ayler and folkloric savant.

 Always Born /  Homeless /  Spirits Before Silkheart SHCD 115 / 116 / 117 Gayle; John Tchicai (as on Always); Sirone (b); Reggie Nicholson (d). 4/88.

Twenty years on, these stand up only somewhat to renewed acquaintance. Gayle made all this music in a marathon two-day session. It's exhaustive and exhausting, and only rarely reaches the kind of transcendence this kind of playing pursues, the squeals sounding more forced than they would a couple of years further on. While the trios are generally preferable – and 'Lift Ev'ry Voice' (from Homeless) is the best single cut – it's always good to be reminded of Tchicai's skills.

[illegible]

♛  Touchin' On Trane

FMP CD 48 Gayle; William Parker (b); Rashied Ali (d). 10–11/91.

Gayle's records of the '90s still astonish, even in the aftermath of so many kinds of free-jazz outrage, largely because of his starkness and simplicity. He has clearly developed the iron chops that go with playing in the open for hours on end, but the conception and realization of these records is monumental. His holy, holy delivery makes one think of both Coltrane and Ayler at their most consciously spiritual, but there is also Gayle's own superbly harsh lyricism. He is unusually adept at both the highest register of the tenor and control of the most outlandish overblowing. Solos are not so much fashioned as drawn straight from the moment; nothing seems to be created in advance, and a performance might run on seemingly without end. This is the outright masterpiece; and it seems likely to be a central document in the free music of the decade. The three men touch on Coltrane from moment to moment (Ali renews his old relationship in triumph), but this is new, brilliant, eloquent free playing.

 Repent Knitting Factory Works KFWCD 122 Gayle; Vattel Cherry, Hilliard Greene (b); David Pleasant (d). 1–3/92.

 More Live Knitting Factory Works KFWCD 137 2CD As above, except omit Greene, Pleasant; add William Parker (b, cel, vn); Michael Wimberly, Marc Edwards (d). 1–2/93.

 Consecration Black Saint 120138-2 As above, except omit Edwards. 4/93.

(*) Translations Silkheart SHCD 134 As above. 1/93.

(*) Raining Fire Silkheart SHCD 137 As above. 1/93.

 Kingdom Come Knitting Factory Works KFW157 Gayle; William Parker (b); Sunny Murray (d). N.D.

(*) Unto I Am Victo CD032 Gayle (ts, p, bcl, d solo). 9/94.

The rhythm players on the Knitting Factory and Black Saint records are all little known, apart from the admirable Parker, who is as central to events as he is with Cecil Taylor; but they are wonderfully behind Gayle all the way. The opening of 'Deliverance' (More Live) suggests that they would be quite an ensemble even without him. The two records cut live at New York's Knitting Factory are exhausting manifestos which struggle towards ecstasy or chaos. A piece such as 'Sanctification' (More Live) goes further in building on Ayler's legacy than even Brötzmann ever has. Consecration catches them in the studio and shows only the slightest scaling-down, with 'Justified' another tour de force.

Gayle was being documented at every turn, and these records tend to follow similar patterns. The two Silkheart releases feature more by his working quartet, and though two unrelieved sets is probably too much even for addicts, there's still some awesomely powerful interaction here. The only weak spot is when Gayle fiddles away on a viola; no more enlightening than Ornette's violin-playing.

Kingdom Come gets its power from three serene, muscular encounters with Murray and Parker. The drummer isn't quite the force of old but he does well enough, and Gayle marches almost obliviously on. Two piano solos and a trio are less inspiring. The Victo release has a dispensable drum solo and a middling workout on piano again; but the two tenor solos and the bass clarinet item are astoundingly heavyweight, recorded in close-up and with the saxophone terrorizing the microphone. Even in a trance, though, the quality of the thinking is remarkable.

 Berlin Movement From Future Years /  Abiding Variations FMP CD 90 / 100 Gayle; Vattel Cherry (b); Michael Wimberly (d). 8/93.

(*) Testaments Knitting Factory KFW 174 Gayle; Wilber Morris (b); Michael Wimberly (d). 7/95.

 Delivered 2.13.61 21324-2 Gayle; James Jones (p); Gerald Benson (b); Kalil Madi (d). N.D.

(*) Daily Bread Black Saint 120158-2 Gayle; William Parker (clo, p); Wilber Morris (b); Michael Wimberly (d, vn). 10/95.

The Berlin date on FMP is disappointingly cloudy, and for all its sapping length this is a merely middling performance. Abiding Variations offers a second helping from the same period. On Henry Rollins's 2.13.61 label, Delivered is similarly underachieved; Jones, Benson and Madi make an unremarkable crew who won't stay entirely out of Gayle's way. Only a fierce medley of spirituals makes an impression. Testaments is more severe and reaches its apogee in the monolith of 'Faith Evermore', a tenor saxophone outburst that can stand with any of Gayle's great moments. He still defuses the overall impact with bass clarinet and piano, though. Daily Bread is another great one. This time, Gayle's doubling lends context and breadth, and when all four men are playing strings (on 'Our Sins' and 'Offering To Christ') the results turn string quartet music inside out. 'Earthly Things' and 'Shout Merrily' are terrific group performances as well as signature Gayle.

 Time Zones Tompkins Square TSQ 2839-2 Gayle (p solo). 05.

Musing on James P. Johnson and Monk, borrowing from the canon of free-jazz piano, Gayle hardly seems like his own man at the keyboard, at least in comparison with his saxophone-playing. Yet this is a queerly enjoyable set. 'Blues In Mississippi' filters the old form through what might be a free-stride fantasy. The other pieces also mix folkish ruminations with rolling, two-handed melodrama.

(*) Consider The Lilies Clean Feed CF 060 Gayle; Hilliard Greene (b); Jay Rosen (d). 06.

 Live At Glenn Miller Café Ayler AYL015 Gayle; Gerald Benson (b); Michael Wimberly (d). 2/06.

Two live sets with two new – and, in the first case, yet more sophisticated – trios. The first set is shortish. On the first, Gayle concentrates on alto and piano, the keyboard-playing on 'Sanctify' sounding oddly schematic in places. Greene's as sympathetic a bass-player as he's had since Sirone, and Rosen is a veteran of free jazz. The second – just alto, no piano – includes lots of repertory: 'Giant Steps', 'Cherokee', 'Ghosts', 'Softly As In A Morning Sunrise', and, unfortunately, 'What's New'. It's still obviously Gayle, but with water added.

Also, in brief:

 Ancient Of Days Knitting Factory KFW 263. 9/99.
For the first time, what sounds like a repertory record, played within a relatively tractable orbit.

 Jazz Solo Piano Knitting Factory KFCD288. 2/01.
It seemed quite a startling proposition in 2001, but piano has since become a key voice.

 Shout! Clean Feed CF033. 5/03.
The 'new' team of Sirone (b) and Cleaver (d) have a deal more finesse and strength than many of his earlier rhythm sections. Otherwise, business as usual, though 'What's New' was a mistake.

Wilton 'Bogey' Gaynair (1927–95)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Jamaican-born hard-bopper on the British scene, who recorded briefly but disappeared to Europe and relative obscurity.

* Blue Bogey Jasmine JASCD 608 Gaynair; Terry Shannon (p); Kenny Napper (b); Bill Eyden (d). 8/59.
(*) Africa Calling Candid CCD 79552 As above, except omit Napper; add Shake Keane (t, flhn); Jeff Clyne (b). 60.
How can he have so completely disappeared? These are terrific records, if a little one-dimensional. The only slow track on Africa Calling, which was unreleased for more than 40 years, suggests that he wasn't a natural ballad player. All the rest is hurly-burly. Unlike some of the Caribbean players, he made no obvious use of vernacular musics from the islands. Gaynair's sources are the swing/bop and blues of Don Byas and Illinois Jacquet (who's the shadow presence on 'The Way You Look Tonight'; two versions on these records). The originals are straightforward and resolutely unsubtle, but 'Wilton's Mood' and 'Rhythm' from the first album wouldn't disgrace any of the Blue Note stars of the period.

Also, in brief:

 Alpharian Konnex 2031. 82.
Even more of an obscurity, recorded in Germany shortly before the stroke that ended his career.

Gianni Gebbia (born 1961)

SOPRANO, ALTO AND BARITONE SAXOPHONES

Italian exponent of free improvisation in extremis.

 Cappuccini Klang Splasc(h) CDH 383 Gebbia; Peter Kowald (b); Günter Sommer (d). 3/92.
Gebbia won unflagging support from Kowald and his like. Here, the bassist and Sommer give the young man exactly the platform he needs for a programme of fierce improvisations. He errs on the side of abstraction, especially on soprano, where he exploits the treacherous pitching to the full, and there are moments when one hankers after something more songful. The 'Cappuccini Suite', though, is packed with attractively wry pseudo-classical gestures.

(*) Body Limits Splasc(h) CDH 462 Gebbia (as solo). 95.
The spirit of Braxton's pioneering For Alto shouldn't be far away but it's Lee Konitz and Ornette Coleman who battle without much conviction for Gebbia's soul. There are 17 tracks, most of them very short, and Gebbia gets a sound from his 1961 Selmer Mark VI which nicely straddles the idiosyncratic and traditional.

 H Portraits Rastascan 37 Gebbia (as solo). 98.
 People In Motion Rastascan 44 Gebbia; Damon Smith (b); Garth Powell (d, perc). 99.
Intense as he is, Gebbia is also capable of wit and humour, and there is plenty of both here. The earlier record is a series of improvisations, all inspired by someone or something beginning with the letter H: Heisenberg, Humpty Dumpty, Houdini, Hemphill. The delivery is much as usual: cracked, slightly forced but consistently inventive.

The trio record is more conventional, though it is still some way removed from a conventional jazz idiom. The cover shows police restraining anti-war demonstrators, and the wailing themes also suggest, albeit satirically, American jazz of the '60s: hints of Coltrane, Ayler, Coleman and Sanders. Smith and Powell play a supportive but anonymous role, though the percussionist does a nice line in whirlophones.

(*) A Night In Palermo Rastascan BRD 041 Gebbia; Lelio Giannetto, Damon Smith (b); Garth Powell, Gino Robair (perc); Tom Nunn (bug); Miriam Palma (v). 12/98.
(*) Pronto! Intakt 076 Gebbia; Nils Wogram (tb); Xavier Garcia (sampler). 2/01.
Strictly, these are both ensemble discs, but both strongly feature Gebbia. The Palermo recording was done after a festival appearance: seven players in a variety of combinations across 19 short tracks. Palma's vocals are unwelcome, but the others all contribute interesting bits and pieces – although, in the end, that's what this collection is. Pronto! is more engaging. The principal dialogue is between the two horn-players, their interplay deftly commentated on by Garcia's sampled sounds, and though some of these tracks are also excessively short, each of them feels resolved.

George Gee

BANDLEADER

Steers an entertaining and sometimes mildly audacious swing outfit.

 Settin' The Pace G Jazz 3567 Gee; Walt Szymanski, Steve Wiseman (t, flhn); Eddie Bert, Charles Stephens, Robert Trowers (tb); Jack Jeffers (tb, btb); Ed Pazant (as, f); Michael Hashim (as, ts); Lance Bryant (ts, f); Jon Cowherd (p); Joe Cohn (g); Darryl Hall (b); Willard Dyson (d); Carla Cook (v). 4/04.
 If Dreams Come True G Jazz 3568 Gee; Walt Szymanski, Steve Wiseman (t); Brian Bonvissuto (tb); Mark Gross (as, cl); Lance Bryant, Michael Hashim (ts); Daniel Block (cl); Rick Germanson (p); Marcus McLaurine (b); Willard Dyson (d); Carla Cook (v). 1/07.
Frank Foster was on hand to supervise the first of these, which features several of his tunes, including the title-track. It's amiable enough contemporary big-band music, but with a slightly self-conscious retro sound. Carla Cook's vocals actually do the music some favours, but the set peaks early with 'Out Of Nowhere', 'Settin' The Pace' and 'Lover Come Back To Me'. In the CD era, that counts as peaking way too soon. Gee's Jump Jivin' Wailers are credited with the second disc, which shares some of the same strengths (Szymanski delivers some fine charts, though they're hardly of FF standard) but never quite delivers a killer punch.

Jonathan Gee

PIANO, VOICE

Young Briton, working in the homegrown post-bop environment.

(*) Chez Auguste Jazz House JHCD 064 Gee; Steve Rose (b); Winston Clifford (d). 4/00.

 Wishbone 33 Jazz 088 As above. 10/99–7/03.

Gee is a strong and imaginative pianist whose early progress was a pleasure to observe. Recorded over three nights at Ronnie's, the trio gets stronger, smarter and more stylishly inventive every time. Gee's not afraid to keep pieces to astringent durations – 'Catwoman' and 'Velvet Cloud' don't even break the four-minute barrier – and though he's the dominant force, he wants the music to sound like trio music, and a solo philosophy is integrated into a bigger, more outward-looking design. Some passages still aren't inked in, and Gee's use of repetition is sometimes, well, repetitious, but that's the prerogative of musicians with plenty of capacity to develop.

Wishbone has just one excellent track by the trio, from a live gig in Azerbaijan, of all places; then it's solo Gee – as well as singing Gee, which we consider a mixed blessing. Give him his due, he recorded it all before the Jamie Cullum phenomenon took hold, but these Ellington tunes are a tough ask for a singer making his debut. The solo pieces work an effective line between structure and free-thinking solos, but one hankers for more from that trio gig.

(*) Cream Of Mandarins Artesuono ART 026 Gee; Danilo Gallo (b); Alessandro Minetto (d). 03–04.

A terrific band with two other strong writers. The only standard, 'Lullaby Of Birdland', offers some insight into how imaginatively these guys approach a chord structure, but so do the originals. Jonathan met his new colleagues at the Appenine Jazz Festival in 2003 and struck up an immediate and powerful rapport that radiates through every track. 'Three Views Of Rialto' has the individual members tackle an idea separately and then together; oddly placed at the end of the record, but by then the point has been made. 'Cream Of Mandarins', 'Wishbone' and Minetto's 'Diamond': all very strong.

Matthew Gee (1925–79)

TROMBONE

Born in Houston. His most important association was with Duke Ellington, 1959–63, after which he slipped from wider view.

 Jazz By Gee Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1884 Gee; Kenny Dorham (t); Ernie Henry (as); Frank Foster (ts); Cecil Payne (bs); Joe Knight (p); John Simmons, Wilbur Ware (b); Art Taylor (d). 7–8/56.

The notes claim that Gee was one of the best bop-influenced trombonists, but he seems ill-suited to leadership duties on this pair of serviceable but sloppy sessions. He shares the front line with Henry on one and with Dorham, Foster and Payne on the other. Gee's solos veer between a barking delivery and a much more subtle, almost inward-looking manner: listen to his solo on, of all things, 'Sweet Georgia Brown'. There's a rare chance to hear Henry on the quintet titles, but he doesn't impress. The septet titles are more organized, and if nobody shines, at least the music has a certain vividness to it, more interesting than some of the more-efficient records of the period.

Hartmut Geerken

PERCUSSION, PIANO, OTHER INSTUMENTS

Little-known but consistently exploratory writer and improviser.

 Cassava Balls Leo Golden Years GY 4 Geerken; John Tchicai (as, misc.); Famoudou Don Moye (d, perc). 84.

Lest anyone think Geerken can be consigned to some post-AACM, 'little instruments' ghetto, the presence of Parker's 'Mohawk' and Ayler's 'Mothers' in the middle of this busy, restless set is some indication of how much he works in the mainline of modern jazz. He certainly doesn't stick to orthodox 'jazz' instruments, moving here through an extraordinary range of drums, idiophones, rattles and electronic sources. Tchicai's playing exhilarates, but it's Geerken who claims priority.

Also, in brief:

 Zero Sun No Point Leo CD LR 329/330 2CD. 10/96.

A shambolic, ultimately unsatisfactory dedication to Sun Ra and to poet/savant Mynona, undertaken with a fading Art Ensemble Of Chicago.

Herb Geller (born 1928)

ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, FLUTE, VOICE

He has told his own musical life-story of late (see below), but the bare bones of it are an early sojourn in New York, where he met his wife, pianist Lorraine Walsh, and a long stint on the West Coast. Herb and Lorraine co-led a small group, and after her untimely death he has continued to work mostly with young and adventurous bands.

* That Geller Feller Fresh Sound FSR CD 91 Geller; Kenny Dorham (t); Harold Land (ts); Lou Levy (p); Ray Brown (b); Lawrence Marable (d). 3/57.

 Stax Of Sax Fresh Sound FSR CD 75 Geller; Victor Feldman (vib); Walter Norris (p); Leroy Vinnegar (b); Anthony Vazley (d). 58.

Relatively untroubled by fashion, Geller set out as an orthodox, Parker-influenced bopper before turning towards a more broadly based and decidedly cooler style which incorporated elements of Desmond, Hodges and even Benny Goodman, with whom he worked in the later '50s. That Geller Feller is the best of the available sets. The originals – 'S'Pacific View', 'Marable Eyes', 'An Air For The Heir' and 'Melrose And Sam' – are tightly organized and demand considerable inventiveness from a group that frequently sounds much bigger than a sextet. Dorham plays a crackling solo on the opening track but is otherwise rather anonymous. Geller's own introduction to 'Jitterbug Waltz' is wonderfully delicate, with more than a hint of Benny Carter in the tone and phrasing. He also does a fine version of the Arlen–Gershwin rarity 'Here's What I'm Here For'. Amazingly, Stax Of Sax was Geller's last American release before 1993 and his last as a leader for 17 years (though there appear to be a couple of slightly later round-up things on Atco and Josie). It's a situation that borders on the criminal, but he makes the most of an unintended curtain-call with a brisk set of boppy originals.

(*) Birdland Stomp Fresh Sound FSRCD 174 Geller; Kenny Drew (p); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Mark Taylor (d). 5/90.

* The Herb Geller Quartet VSOP 89 Geller; Tom Ranier, Jimmy Rowles (p); John Leitham (b); Louie Bellson (d). 8/93.

At 62, Geller has a beautiful tone and the Ellington–Strayhorn medley with which the Spanish-recorded session ends suggests he has renewed his debt to Hodges. His articulation on Parker's 'Cheryl' isn't all it might be, and even the capable Drew sounds sticky, but both are magnificent on the title-tune and 'Autumn Nocturne'. Recorded with a heavy emphasis on NHØP's bass, this is nevertheless a terrific date.

The later disc neatly trumps it. Of the originals, 'Chromatic Cry' is an exquisite ballad, so dreamily casual it may have popped into his head during a solo or else in the rehearsal room; 'Stand-Up Comic' is a wry look at another group of improvising entertainers – 'Comedy is not the same / social critic is the game' – a vocal tribute topped by a piquant soprano solo. Geller's forte these days is the evocative ballad. 'Isfahan' is totally restructured in the middle section, otherwise played à la mode. Jimmy Rowles guests on his own evergreen 'The Peacocks', with its softly eldritch cries and brooding mystery.

(*) I'll Be Back Hep CD 2074 Geller; Edward Harris (g); Thomas Biller (b); Heinrich Koebberling (d). 8/96.

 You're Looking At Me Fresh Sound FSR 5018 Geller; Jan Lundgren (p); Dave Carpenter (b); Joe LaBarbera (d). 2/97.

The line-up on I'll Be Back was the working group of the mid-'90s, and Herb's communication with his young players is consistently impressive. Unusually, he favours guitar over piano in this line-up, and the more open harmonies suit Herb's strongly melodic approach. Most of the original material comes from a musical he wrote about the great Josephine Baker, La Bakair. 'A Bitter Dream' and 'Too Little Time' are darkly mature compositions; sandwiching Hoagy Carmichael's 'One Morning In May', they bring the album to a wholly satisfying climax. It begins with Porter's 'Dream Dancing', and one can hear how subtly Geller programmes this and, indeed, all his records, modulating keys, rhythms and emotional pitch, constructing a musical drama rather than a procession of song. Three of the Baker tunes appear on You're Looking At Me and the contrast is very striking. It's perhaps overlong, and rather conventional in outlook. Geller uses it as an opportunity to revisit his own musical education and growth – the album even features a photograph of himself at ten, playing his first alto – and to air some favourite melodies, like Strayhorn's 'Orson' and Earle Warren's '9:20 Special'. Herb's tone is tighter and more staccato than usual and his pitching on soprano isn't entirely secure.

(*) Hollywood Portraits Hep CD 2078 Geller; Brian Kellock (p). 10/99.

The real star here is Scottish virtuoso Kellock, who turns what is effectively an abstract session (the naming of tunes after movie sirens seems a slightly arbitrary joke) into a sweeping procession of duets that just gets more inventive as it progresses. In fact, the major distraction comes from working out exactly what private association has inspired a piece on Judy Holliday or Claudette Colbert, Marilyn, Garbo, or any of 16 others. Herb doubles on soprano for about half a dozen tracks, but it's his swinging alto which dominates, and Kellock is right behind him every step of the way, rhythmically solid, harmonically inventive and constantly alert to changes in direction.

* Plays The Arthur Schwarz Songbook HepCD 2089 Geller; John Pearce (p); Len Skeat (b); Bobby Worth (d). 11/04, 3/05.

Not perhaps the best-known name in the Great American Songbook, but this is the guy who wrote 'Alone Together', 'Dancing In The Dark', 'I Guess I'll Have To Change My Plan', 'You And The Night And The Music' and 'A Gal In Calico', all of which plus ten others are represented here, so he's very much part of the prehistory of jazz. And Geller just gets better and better. His articulation is bright and his phrasing immaculately timed. The British rhythm section are relaxed enough to let the songful aspects of the programme shine through, but they don't let Herb dwell too long on the prettier stuff, driving it all along nicely. A couple of cuts are duets with Pearce, including the very nice 'A Shine On My Shoes', and these offer a good opportunity to judge the pianist, who emerges as a very fine accompanist indeed.

 At The Movies Hep CD 2092 Geller; Don Friedman (p); Martien Oster (g); Martin Wind (b); Hans Braber (d). 03/07.

These are brisk and unfussy arrangements of soundtrack themes, many of them little known in a jazz context. Bernard Hermann's Taxi Driver music is medleyed with Marnie, 'Laura' receives a more conventional blowing treatment, and 'Ding Dong, The Witch Is Dead' just about comes off. Friedman seems equally businesslike in his approach to all these and ironically it's only when the Dutch guitarist is featured that the tracks have much improvisational ease. It's a nice set, but could have done with being two tracks shorter and with a bit more playing on the remainder.

Also, in brief:

(*) Plays The Al Cohn Songbook Hep CD 2066. 7/94.

Blessed by Flo Cohn, this is an imaginative sample of Al's capacious catalogue of tunes. Multi-instrumentalist Tom Ranier adds a range of colours and allows a reprise of Cohn's writing for Zoot Sims.

 Playing Jazz: The Musical Autobiography Of Herb Geller Fresh Sound FSR 5011. 1/95.

A stage musical without images, a journey through Herb's life from the day he gets his first saxophone, to playing opposite Lenny Bruce with Lorraine, to her death and his subsequent attempt to 'Pick Up The Pieces'. His own younger self is portrayed by Lothar Atwell, Lorraine by Stephanie Haynes, with other singers taking the other roles, held together with a narration by Chuck Niles.

(*) To Benny And Johnny – With Love From Herb Geller Hep CD 2084. 6/01.

The Hep association continues with this lovely tribute album. Herb probably doesn't have quite the beauty of tone or graceful delivery of either Johnny Hodges or Benny Carter, but he clearly loves playing these familiar themes. 'Isfahan' and 'Warm Valley' stand out.

Lorraine Geller (1928–58)

PIANO

Born Lorraine Walsh. She played with the Sweethearts Of Rhythm, then met and married Herb Geller, with whom she briefly led a small group.

 Two Of A Kind: Complete Recordings 1954–1955 Fresh Sound FSRCD 412 2CD Geller; Conte Candoli (t); Herb Geller (as); Curtis Counce, Red Mitchell, Leroy Vinnegar (b); Roy Harte, Mel Lewis, Larance Marable (d). 7/54–8/55.

With a Fresh Sound Memorial currently unavailable, Lorraine can legitimately claim this one, Inevitably, it strikes one as a might-have-been date, full of breezy promise but not yet delivering anything really major. Lorraine has a nice, correct touch, but she knows how to swing an accompaniment and there are some added notes in a few strategically placed chords that contribute to the overall effect. A painfully short career, but at least these survive.

Leo Genovese

PIANO

Up-and-coming Argentinian pianist making a bright debut.

 Haikus II Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 201 Genovese; Phil Grenadier (t); Nathan Blehar (ts); Demian Cabaud (b); Francisco Mela (d). 03.

Haiku as a jazz form always makes us nervous, but Genovese makes a startlingly good job here. They're hardly 17-syllable miniatures – the first stretches to more than seven minutes – but they do seem to catch something of the limpid stillness and immediacy of Japanese poetry. Oddly, they're interspersed with more familiar fare, like the opening 'I Remember April', a professional enough performance but not the kind of thing that will arrest a busy critic or browser. Perhaps had Genovese or his label had more courage in their convictions we could have had a whole record of originals.

The Georgia Melodians

GROUP

Early example of the 'territory' band.

 Georgia Melodians 1924–1926 Timeless Historical CBC 1-031 Probably: Ernie Intlehouse, Red Nichols (c); Herb Winfield, Abe Lincoln (tb); Merrit Kenworthy (cl, as, bsx); Clarence Hutchins (cl, ts, bs); Oscar Young (p); Elmer Merry (bj, g); Carl Gerrold (d); Vernon Dlahart (v). 7/24–4/26.

They came from Savannah to New York City, where the Edison Company recorded them. Though Joe Moore's notes reveal that the band broke up at the end of 1924, they continued to record until 1926. Players like Intlehouse, Kenworthy and Hutchins are about as obscure as any in recorded jazz, and listening to the music reveals why. This is hot dance music with a generous ration of solos (Edison's vertical-cut discs allowed for much longer playing time than normal 78s) and an honourable intention to swing, but it's poker-stiff at times. The very earliest tracks, once available on a Retrieval LP, are missing from this otherwise complete edition. Staple numbers such as 'Spanish Shawl' and 'Everybody Loves My Baby' can be heard better elsewhere, although they do a respectable job on 'San'. Beautifully clean transfers, though.

The Georgians

GROUP

Early group of white jazzmen, led by trumpeter Frank Guarente.

 The Georgians 1922–23 Retrieval RTR 79003 Frank Guarente (t); Ray Stilwell, Russ Morgan, Archie Jones (tb); Johnny O'Donnell, Frank Smith, Dick Johnson, Harold 'Red' Sailiers (reeds); Arthur Schutt (p); Russell Deppe (bj); Joe Tarto (tba); Chauncey Morehouse (d). 11/22–11/23.

 The Georgians 1923–1924 Retrieval RTR 79036 As above, except add Elwood Boyer (t); Charlie Butterfield (tb); Henry Wade, Al Monquin (reeds); Roy Smeck (bj); Billy Jones, Eddie Cantor, Dolly Kay, Blossom Seeley (v). 6/22–5/24.

The Georgians were originally a contingent from Paul Specht's more strait-laced dance orchestra, working at New York's Hotel Alamac. With the excellent Guarente leading, it stood at a point somewhere between the simple ensemble style of the Original Memphis Five and the looser, more inventive methods of the early black Chicago bands. Guarente, an Italian-American, even took some lessons from Joe Oliver in New Orleans. He was the only improviser of any special merit in the band, but Arthur Schutt, hitherto largely ignored by jazz history, contributed an increasingly sophisticated book of arrangements. The later tracks on the first CD, especially the likes of 'Land Of Cotton Blues' and 'Old Fashioned Love', show real finesse coupled with a proper sense of swing. Most of the tunes have something to commend them, and even novelty pieces like 'Barney Google' are sustained by Guarente's work, although here and there (as in the plodding treatment of 'Farewell Blues') the group fails to make much out of the music.

The second disc takes the story up to Guarente's departure in May 1924. The best of The Georgians' music is here, in such sides as 'Big Boy' (with a great vocal by Dolly Kay) and the pair of titles which turned out to be Guarente's swansong, 'Savannah' and 'Doodle Doo Doo'. Eddie Cantor turns up to sing at one session and the disc is padded with four titles by the full Specht orchestra.

Bill Gerhardt (born 1962)

PIANO

A Missourian, who spent some time in Europe before moving to NY.

* Stained Glass Steeplechase SCCD 31629 Gerhardt; Ron Horton (t, flhn); Marc Mommas (ts); Mike Holstein (b, waterphone); Tim Horner (d); Mark Reboul (waterphone). 10/05.

A record of fresh invention and unflagging beauty from a 45-year-old who hasn't made much more than a local impact as yet, though he's recorded with tenorist Jed Levy. Gerhardt shares out writing chores, but his own weaving 'Visitor' makes for an ideal opener, a bright but ambiguous line that's clinched by Holstein's fine solo. Mommas's 'Little Penny' goes down a gear. The leader's 'Paragraph' and 'Words' prolong the atmosphere of faint mystery, with Horton, contrary to what it suggests on the sleeve, making the first of two appearances on the latter track. Introduced by waterphones, the title-piece is inspired by the pianist's late father, a collector of stained-glass 'bull's eyes'. It's a wonderfully sustained performance, but the pay-off is Mommas's solo on the closing 'Holding Noa', which picks up from the more sardonic tone of Horner's 'Video Tapes And Lies' and ends the record on a romantic high. Immensely impressive, and one of Steeplechase's most inspired signings of recent years.

Rick Germanson

PIANO

In-demand and award-winning player.

 Heights Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 155 Germanson; Brian Lynch (t); John Webber (b); George Fludas (d); Luis Diaz (perc). 01.

 You Tell Me Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 217 Germanson; Gerald Cannon (b); Ralph Peterson (d). 10/04.

Germanson won the jazz Grand Prize in the American Piano Association competition and also caught the eye of Louis Hayes, Slide Hampton and Elvin Jones, all of whom signed him up. The debut release is thoroughly accomplished. There's a hint of superficial cleverness in some of the titles and writing – 'Game Theory' kicks this one off, 'Entropy' the second album – but Germanson has enough technique and basic musicality to make it work. Diaz helps bring a Latin feel to some of the album, but this isn't the leader's strongest idiom and the record works best with a more foursquare approach. 'Susan's Waltz' reveals a line in romance that resurfaces on the second record.

Germanson has worked with Cannon and Peterson often in the past and they have functioned together as a rhythm section many times. As expected, they operate pretty well as a unit on You Tell Me, though there's a feeling that these guys know each other too well. Some of the playing, even on 'Entropy', is slightly too arch. It gets looser and better as the set goes on. Germanson's originals have punch and some subtlety, but he really excels himself on a pair of standards in the middle of the set, 'Angel Eyes' and 'It Was A Very Good Year', and rounds off the set nicely with Mel Tormé's 'Born To Be Blue'.

Bruce Gertz (born 1952)

DOUBLE BASS

Based in Boston, and an admired figure there.

 Third Eye Ram 4509 Gertz: Jerry Bergonzi (ts); Joey Calderazzo (p); John Abercrombie (g); Adam Nussbaum (d). 10/92.

 Discovery Zone Ram 4524 As above. 10/94.

 Blueprint Evidence ECD 22196 As above. 12/95.

(*) Red Handed Double Time DTRCD-155 As above, except omit Calderazzo; add Bruce Barth (p). 10/98.

 Shut Wide Open Double Time DTRCD-189 As above, except omit Nussbaum; add Ken Cervenka (t); Jorge Rossy (d). 98.

There's a dryish quality to the first trio of dates from a long-standing group. The debut is a crisp, lean set of originals driven from the centre by Gertz's hard-to-place bass sound; hard, that is, in stylistic terms, for he's always prominent in the mix. Gertz switches between acoustic and electric instruments and gets a solid sound on the bass guitar. There's possibly a touch of irony to the title of the opening track on Discovery Zone, 'To Boldly Go Where Everyone Has Gone Before'; it's clear that Gertz is trying to get away from idiomatic post-bop; mostly he succeeds, but sometimes it falls flat. A similar feeling applies to the third record, which sometimes sounds like a set of technical exercises. There are even two bookend versions of the blues 'Proton', which don't add much to the picture. Bergonzi enjoys a high reputation among fellow players. He's often the key to these sessions, playing with sophistication and control, but always able to produce a telling phrase or chorus that packs more feeling into a few measures than most players manage in a night.

On Red Handed, Gertz has thought carefully about his materials, his players and his sources, and has come up with a detailed and absorbing set which is rather like an essay on what a skilful and chops-heavy band like this could do in 1998. 'Giant Steps' is refreshingly cast as a reflective bass-and-drums duet. 'Sun Flash' is tough and assertive and full of appropriate heat. The title-track looks south towards New Orleans, and 'Big Heart' is an open modal sketch which men like Bergonzi and Abercrombie were made to fill in and out. The latest of the bunch – Gertz may be tied to the classroom now – is co-led by trumpeter Cervenka. There's more urgency to the overall sound, but the compositions seem a little tired and repetitive. The title-track (by Cervenka) is yet another variation on 'I Got Rhythm'. Lots of mileage there, of course, but this doesn't sound either fresh or new. 'Tenerife', a reflection inspired by a visit to the islands with a Berklee group, is a lovely piece. Overall, though, the earlier groups sounded more focused and inventive, even if they lacked passion.

Stan Getz (1927–91)

TENOR, SOPRANO AND BARITONE SAXOPHONES

He made his name with the Woody Herman Orchestra, 1947–9. A group leader himself thereafter, he won popular acclaim with bossa nova albums, 1962–4, then returned to small groups. He made a peerless sound on the saxophone, in the lineage of Lester Young, with total fluency of phrasing and a lovely way with every melody he played.

 Early Stan Original Jazz Classics OJC 654 Getz; Shorty Rogers (t); Earl Swope (tb); George Wallington, Hall Overton (p); Jimmy Raney (g); Curley Russell, Red Mitchell (b); Shadow Wilson, Frank Isola (d). 3/49–4/53.

(*) The Brothers Original Jazz Classics OJC 008 Getz; Zoot Sims, Al Cohn, Allen Eager, Brew Moore (ts); Walter Bishop Jr (p); Gene Ramey (b); Charlie Perry (d). 4/49.

 Prezervation Original Jazz Classics OJC 706 Getz; Kai Winding (tb); Al Haig (p); Gene Ramey, Tommy Potter (b); Roy Haynes, Stan Levey (d); Junior Parker, Blossom Dearie, Jimmy Raney (v). 6/49–2/50.

 Stan Getz Quartets Original Jazz Classics OJC 121 Getz; Al Haig, Tony Aless (p); Gene Ramey, Tommy Potter, Percy Heath (b); Stan Levey, Roy Haynes, Don Lamond (d). 6/49–4/50.

After starring as one of Herman's 'Four Brothers', and delivering a luminous ballad solo on the 1948 'Early Autumn', Getz went out on his own and at first seemed much like the rest of the Lester Young-influenced tenormen: a fast, cool stylist with a sleek tone and a delivery that soothed nerves jangled by bebop. The 'Brothers' idea was pursued in the session on OJC 008 (the rest of the disc is devoted to a Zoot and Al Cohn date): the five tenors trade punches with panache and it's a fun session, if hardly an important one. Early Stan finds Getz as a sideman with a septet led by Terry Gibbs and a quartet under Jimmy Raney's direction. Bright, appealing cool-bop on the Gibbs date, but the Raney session, from 1953, is more substantial, the quartet whisking through four stretching exercises, including 'Round Midnight'.

Prezervation rounds up some odds and ends, including an improbable alliance with Junior Parker and a Haig sextet date with Winding and two vocal duets by Jimmy Raney and Blossom Dearie! The Quartets set is an attractive dry run for the upcoming Roost sessions, and it features the tenorman in very lithe form. The sound on most of these issues was fairly indifferent to start with, but these latest editions emerge well enough.

♛ * The Complete Roost Recordings Roost 859622-2 3CD Getz; Sanford Gold, Duke Jordan, Horace Silver, Al Haig (p); Jimmy Raney, Johnny Smith (g); Eddie Safranski, Teddy Kotick, Bill Crow, Leonard Gaskin, Bob Carter (b); Frank Isola, Tiny Kahn, Roy Haynes, Don Lamond, Morey Feld (d); Count Basie Orchestra. 5/50–12/54.

So much attention has fallen on Getz's later work that these magnificent sessions are often overlooked. The earliest tracks, from a session in May 1950, catch a young man with his head full of bebop and his heart heavy with swing-era romanticism. Those contrary strains come together on the headily beautiful 'Yesterdays', a marriage of intellect and emotion that is rare not only in Getz's work but in jazz itself. These two early dates, one with Al Haig, one with Horace Silver, are electrifying. By 1951, he already sounds like the more settled, invincible Getz, but the short track-lengths (a relic of the 78 era) give the music considerable point and direction. The live session from Boston's Storyville Club with Jimmy Raney has long been prized, both musicians unreeling one great solo after another. Two studio dates with a similar band are at lower voltage but scarcely less impressive. Eight tracks with Johnny Smith, including the achingly lovely 'Moonlight In Vermont', offer Getz the lyricist in fullest flow, while the three with Basie at Birdland are a bonus. There is so much top-flight jazz in this set that it's quite indispensable; remastered to a consistent standard, it's breathtaking.

 Stan Getz 1951 Classics 1299 Getz; Lars Gullin (bs); Horace Silver, Bengt Hallberg, Al Haig (p); Jimmy Raney (g); Joe Calloway, Gunnar Johnson, Yngve Åkerberg , Leonard Gaskin, Teddy Kotick (b); Walter Bolden, Jack Norén , Kenneth Fagerlund, Roy Haynes, Tiny Kahn (d). 3–10/51.

As usual, Classics go their chronological way with no deference to any other logic, so this mixes up various Roost recordings with eight titles made in Stockholm with the likes of Gullin and Hallberg. As these aren't easily available elsewhere this one merits a listing. That said, they're not terribly exciting pieces, even though Getz doesn't dip below his customary skilfulness, and his first version of 'Ack, Värmeland Du Sköna' is charming. Later Classics issues basically duplicate the early Norgran/Verve recordings listed below.

 Together For The First Time Fresh Sound FSCD-1022 Getz; Chet Baker (t); Russ Freeman, Don Trenner (p); Carson Smith, Joe Mondragon, Gene Englund (b); Larry Bunker, Shelly Manne, Jimmy Pratt (d). 9/52–12/53.

An interesting discovery: the Mulligan quartet at the Haig with Getz subbing for the leader. He sounds perfectly at home with Baker, Smith and Bunker, and there are some forthright variations on six tunes, including 'Half Nelson' and 'Yardbird Suite'. A subsequent quintet version of 'All The Things You Are' is a lot more dispirited, and there are four quartet airshots from 1952 to fill up the disc, which is in surprisingly good sound for the most part, the Haig titles having been apparently recorded by Richard Bock.

(*) Stan Getz Plays Verve 833535-2 Getz; Jimmy Rowles, Duke Jordan (p); Jimmy Raney (g); Bob Whitlock, Bill Crow (b); Frank Isola, Max Roach (d). 12/52–1/54.

* At The Shrine Verve 513753-2 Getz; Bob Brookmeyer (vtb); John Williams (p); Bill Anthony (b); Art Madigan, Frank Isola (d). 11/54.

Getz's long association with Norman Granz starts here. Plays features some of the best recording he was given in the period, and much of the playing is as fine as it is on the Roost dates, with the 1954 quartet session with Rowles particularly pretty. But it's the live sessions from the Shrine in Los Angeles which stand out. Getz plays with unstinting invention, Brookmeyer is witty and unfailingly apposite, and the remastered sound is fine.

* The West Coast Sessions Verve 531935-2 3CD Getz; Conte Candoli (t); Lou Levy (p); Leroy Vinnegar (b); Stan Levey, Shelly Manne (d). 8/55–8/57.

* West Coast Jazz Verve 557549-2 As above, except omit Levey. 8/55.

* The Steamer Verve 547771-2 As above, except omit Candoli, Manne; add Stan Levey (d). 11/56.

(*) Award Winner Verve 543320-2 As above. 8/57.

What a great period for tenor saxophone-playing this was, with Rollins laying down his masterpieces on one coast and Getz on the other. Given that Getz is scarcely the archetypal West Coast player, there's a certain irony in that. With this distinctively Californian group, though, he set down a classic series of sessions, once issued as three LPs, now expanded with alternative takes. Candoli, present on the original West Coast Jazz date, plays handsomely and is an excellent foil, but it's Getz and the rhythm sections who unfurl the most gorgeous colours: stomping on 'Shine', profoundly inventive on the blues in 'Blues For Mary Jane', winsomely beautiful in ballads like 'You're Blasé'. Relatively unprepared, and programmed around tunes they all knew, the records are sax/rhythm dates of intuitive greatness. For those who'd prefer a pocket edition of highlights, Verve also has Best Of The West Coast Sessions (537084-2). It has also brought back the three original albums in its Master Edition series, which makes a handsome substitute since each has the various alternative takes added. Our favourite remains The Steamer, but all three offer great rewards.

 Stan Meets Chet Verve 837436-2 Getz; Chet Baker (t); Jodie Christian (p); Victor Sproles (b); Marshall Thompson (d). 2/57.

 Stan Getz And The Oscar Peterson Trio Verve 827826-2 Getz; Oscar Peterson (p); Herb Ellis (g); Ray Brown (b). 10/57.

 At The Opera House Verve 831272-2 Getz; J. J. Johnson (tb); Oscar Peterson (p); Herb Ellis (g); Ray Brown (b); Connie Kay (d). 10/57.

 Getz Meets Mulligan In Hi-Fi Verve 849392-2 Getz; Gerry Mulligan (bs, ts); Lou Levy (p); Ray Brown (b); Stan Levey (d). 10/57.

 Stan Getz & Dizzy Gillespie: Jazz Masters 25 Verve 521852-2 Getz; Dizzy Gillespie (t); J. J. Johnson (tb); Paul Gonsalves, Coleman Hawkins (ts); John Lewis, Lalo Schifrin, Wynton Kelly (p); Herb Ellis (g); Ray Brown, Art Davis, Wendell Marshall (b); Max Roach, Stan Levey, Chuck Lampkin, J. C. Heard (d); Candido Camero (perc). 12/53–11/60.

Curiously few of these stand out. The meeting with Baker was recorded in Chicago with a local rhythm section and it sounds on-the-hoof. Next to Getz's meetings with Dizzy Gillespie, this is pale stuff. The session with Peterson is as ebullient as expected, and the Opera House concert with J. J. Johnson includes extrovert playing from everyone, especially on a snorting romp through

Bud Powell's 'Blues In The Closet'. Listening to this kind of playing makes one wonder at Getz's reputation for being a featherlight stylist (he preferred 'stomping tenorman'). The session with Mulligan is beautifully dovetailed: although they notoriously chose to swap instruments for part of the session, the sound of the two horns speaks of a tonal fraternity which sounds rare and entrancing. The Jazz Masters disc picks four tracks from two studio dates with Gillespie, plus a JATP piece and a jovial meeting with Gonsalves and Hawkins in 1957.

(*) In Sweden 1958–60 Dragon DRCD 263 2CD Getz; Benny Bailey (t); Åke Persson (tb); Erik Norström , Bjarne Nerem (ts); Lars Gullin (bs); Jan Johansson, Bengt Hallberg (p); Gunnar Johnson, Ray Brown, Torbjørn Hultcrantz , Georg Riedel (b); William Schiöpffe, Sune Spångberg , Joe Harris (d). 8–9/58, 60.
A spell in Stockholm led to some recording with Swedish musicians and these admirable sessions were the result, a Swedish variation on the cool manner with Getz sounding perfectly comfortable in Hallberg's and Johansson's charts. Gullin and Hallberg shine too, and so does the remarkable Johansson, whose status as the lost master of Swedish jazz is further enhanced by his playing here. The previous edition of this music has now been beefed up with some concert and radio material from 1960 and it's a close to indispensable package.

(*) Stan Getz At Large Plus! Volumes 1 & 2 Jazz Unlimited JUCD 2001 / 2002 Getz; Jan Johansson (p); Daniel Jordan (b); William Schiøpffe (d). 1/60.
Two very rare Getz albums, recorded in Copenhagen with a local team, and he sounds in wonderful form throughout. The opening 'Night And Day' on the first disc is delivered with heavenly grace and is sustained over chorus after chorus at a perfect tempo. There are some interesting choices of material – by Johnny Mandel, Al Cohn, Harold Land – and though both albums are weighted towards slow to mid-tempos, Getz stays concentrated and inspired throughout. The rhythm section is capable rather than challenging, and the sound is slightly less than ideal, but the music is terrific.

* Recorded Fall 1961 Verve 549369-2 Getz; Bob Brookmeyer (vtb); Steve Kuhn (p); John Neves (b); Roy Haynes (d). 9/61.
A little-known Getz session by a band which the leader had put together for an American tour, this belongs at least as much to Brookmeyer (who penned three of the six tunes) as to the saxophonist. The similarities between the horns are best heard at the quick tempo of 'Minuet Circa '61', where Getz has to fall back on some of his favourite licks; their contrasts come out on the following ballad, 'Who Could Care', where the tenor is breathily beautiful and the valve trombone hard and choleric. Getz is sublime again on 'A Nightingale Sang In Berkeley Square', but Buck Clayton's 'Love Jumped Out' brings out the best in both. Throughout, Roy Haynes keeps things crisp and swinging, every accent felt as a particular.

CORE COLLECTION

* Focus
Verve 521419-2 Getz; orchestra led by Eddie Sauter. 7–10/61.
Nobody ever arranged for Getz as well as this, and Sauter's luminous and shimmering scores continue to bewitch. This isn't art-jazz scoring: Sauter had little of Gil Evans's misterioso power, and he was shameless about tugging at heartstrings. But within those parameters – and Getz, the most pragmatic of soloists, was only too happy to work within them – he made up the most emotive of frameworks. It doesn't make much sense as a suite, or a concerto; just as a series of episodes with the tenor gliding over and across them. In 'Her', the tune dedicated to Getz's mother, the soloist describes a pattern which is resolved in the most heartstopping of codas. This was surely Getz's finest hour. The latest version is in Verve's Master Edition series, though there's still a degree of tape hiss.

(*) Jazz Samba Verve 521413-2 Getz; Charlie Byrd (g); Keter Betts (b); Gene Byrd (g, b); Buddy Deppenschmidt, Bill Reichenbach (d). 2/62.
 Big Band Bossa Nova Verve 825771-2 Getz; Doc Severinsen, Bernie Glow, Joe Ferrante, Clark Terry (t); Tony Studd, Bob Brookmeyer, Willie Dennis (tb); Ray Alonge (frhn); Jerry Sanfino, Ray Beckenstein (f); Eddie Caine (af); Babe Clark, Walt Levinsky (cl); Romeo Penque (bcl); Hank Jones (p); Jim Hall (g); Tommy Williams (b); Johnny Rae (d); Jose Paulo, Carmen Cossa (perc). 8/62.
(*) Jazz Samba Encore Verve 823613-2 Getz; Antonio Carlos Jobim (g, p); Luiz Bonfa (g); George Duvivier, Tommy Williams, Don Payne (b); Paulo Ferreira, Jose Carlos, Dave Bailey (d); Maria Toledo (v). 2/63.
* Getz/Gilberto Verve 521414-2 Getz; Antonio Carlos Jobim (p); João Gilberto (g, v); Tommy Williams (b); Milton Banana (d); Astrud Gilberto (v). 3/63.
 Getz Au Go Go Verve 821725-2 Getz; Gary Burton (vib); Kenny Burrell (g); Gene Cherico (b); Joe Hunt, Helcio Milito (d); Astrud Gilberto (v). 64.
(*) The Girl From Ipanema Verve 823611-2 4CD As above discs, except add Steve Kuhn (p); Laurindo Almeida (g); Edison Machado, Jose Soorez, Luiz Parga (perc). 62–64.
(*) Round Midnight: Stan Getz Verve 841445 As above. 62–64.
Getz's big commercial break. However much he protested that he played other stuff besides the bossa nova in later years, his most lucrative records – and some of his best playing – were triggered by the hit versions of first 'Desafinado' from the first album and then 'The Girl From Ipanema' with Gilberto, the tune that a thousand wine bar bands have had to play nightly ever since. The original albums still hold up very well. Getz actually plays with as much pungency and alertness as anywhere else, and even though the backings sometimes threaten to slip into a sleepwalk, there's always an interesting tickle from the guitar or the bass to keep the music alive; and the melodies, by Bonfa, Gilberto and Jobim, have stood the test of time. Jazz Samba and Encore are excellent, but the famous Getz/Gilberto, which has hummed seductively round cafés, wine bars and bedrooms for over 30 years, remains peerless.

The big-band set has some clever arrangements by Gary McFarland, but sundering the intimacy of these whispery settings seems a fairly pointless exercise. And Getz Au Go Go, which had the vocals by Astrud Gilberto dubbed in subsequently, sounds just a mite too forceful, as though Getz were hurrying to push on to something else. Gilberto's singing isn't so much an acquired taste as a languid, ghostly sound on the breeze; many will prefer Maria Toledo. The Girl From Ipanema collects all the music plus the session for Stan Getz/Laurindo Almeida. The Round Midnight disc is a functional one-volume sampler with all the hits.

* Nobody Else But Me Verve 521660-2 Getz; Gary Burton (vib); Gene Cherico (b); Joe Hunt (d). 3/64.
Unreleased for 30 years, this one's a marvel. Supposedly put on the shelf so as not to cause any distraction from Getz's bossa nova hit-making, the music here – amazingly, the only studio recording by a group that was a popular concert attraction – is lush and romantic, with the backbone of a master improviser's intelligence. Burton contributes '6-Nix-Pix-Flix' and opens up the harmonic base just enough to give Stan clear, lucid space for his solos. 'Summertime' is a classic, 'Waltz For A Lovely Wife' is rapture, but there's nothing less than great here.

 Live In London Harkit HRKCD 8056 Getz; Stan Tracey (p); Malcolm Cecil (b); Ronnie Stephenson, Allan Ganley, Jackie Dougan (d). 3–4/64.
Getz with the Ronnie Scott club's 'house' rhythm section, though with three different drummers involved. As usual with these releases, the sound-balance is pretty poor, and often it's a struggle to hear the accompanists at all. But the music-making is still often sublime. Getz and Tracey were a combative pair, but much of this is as lyrical and uplifting as anything else in the saxophonist's discography.

 Stan Getz & Bill Evans Verve 833802-2 Getz; Bill Evans (p); Richard Davis (b); Elvin Jones (d). 5/64.
If one expected feathery ballads and lavishly romantic music, the results were the complete opposite. The only real ballad is 'But Beautiful'; the rest go from mid-tempo to stomp, and Davis and Jones break up the beat and harry the two nominal leaders. Both can handle it, but it's disappointing that something on the level of the almost telepathic Evans–Jim Hall records wasn't secured.

 Quartet In Paris Emarcy 517049-2 Getz; Gary Burton (vib); Steve Swallow (b); Roy Haynes (d). 11/66.
The remote concert sound from the Salle Pleyel is a letdown. The music's full of grace and charm, though, especially on a diaphanous-sounding 'When The World Was Young', where Burton's indistinct vibes drift around Getz, who blows a couple of fierce bell-notes as if to disperse them. One for the completist.

(*) Sweet Rain Verve 815054-2 Getz; Chick Corea (p); Ron Carter (b); Grady Tate (d). 3/67.
This was an excellent group, and the youthful Corea proved to be a sympathetic and encouraging partner for the cantankerous leader. Maybe the pianist is too sweet and noodling at times, but 'O Grande Amor' and 'Windows' blend the brightness of Getz's bossa nova years with a spare, precise lyricism, and Carter and Tate have the measure of the situation.

 What The World Needs Now Verve 557450-2 Getz; Chick Corea, Herbie Hancock (p); Jim Hall, Phil Upchurch (g); Walter Booker, Ron Carter (b); Roy Haynes, Curtis Prince, Grady Tate (d); Bill Horwath (cymbalom); Artie Butler, Bobby Rosengarden (perc); strings, brass, choir. 12/66–1/68.
An album of Burt Bacharach tunes, arranged by Richard Evans, which Getz strolls through, sometimes all but overpowered by the surrounding players (the remastering does nothing to diminish their role, either). As if to compensate, he plays more fiercely than usual in places, and there are some surprising stretches of tonal distortion. 'The Look Of Love' finds his sound magnified by studio reverb. A period piece, worth reviving, but hardly a Getzian milestone.

(*) Dynasty Verve 839117-2 2CD Getz; Eddy Louiss (org); René Thomas (g); Bernard Lubat (d). 1–3/71.
Recorded at a live engagement in London, Getz was in happy and swinging form here, and the quartet stretch out as far as they want on the material. Louiss is far more flexible and discreet than most jazz organists and Getz is untroubled by anything the instrument produces, while the reliable Thomas takes some excellent solos.

(*) Captain Marvel Columbia 468412-2 Getz; Chick Corea (p); Stanley Clarke (b); Tony Williams (d); Airto Moreira (perc). 3/72.
 Best Of Two Worlds Columbia CK 33703 Getz; Albert Dailey (p); João Gilberto (g, perc, v); Oscar Castro-Nueves (g); Clint Houston, Steve Swallow (b); Billy Hart, Grady Tate (d); Airto Moreira, Ruben Bassini, Ray Armando, Sonny Carr (perc); Heloísa Buarque De Hollanda (v). 5/75.
 Live At Montmartre Steeplechase SCCD 1073 2CD Getz; JoAnne Brackeen (p); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Billy Hart (d). 1/77.
This wasn't a vintage period for Getz. The Columbia albums range from perfunctory to mildly engaging. Nothing wrong with the settings (aside from Best Of Two Worlds, which is a very pallid rerun of the bossa nova years), but Getz's own playing has taken on a wayward, purposeless quality, and the licks he sometimes fell back on when bored recur frequently enough to be troublesome. Captain Marvel was meant to be an energetic new beginning, but the noise created by Moreira drowns out even Williams at times, and Getz never sounds at ease, despite some of his old gumption breaking through. The Montmartre set suffers from a rhythm section that doesn't really work with him.

 Empty Shells (The Complete Cannes Concert) Universe UV 074 Getz; Andy LaVerne (ky); Chuck Loeb (g); Brian Bromberg (b); Victor Jones (d). 1/80.
This live set sits a little awkwardly between Getz's fusion phase and his return to mainstream values. Electric keyboards, guitar, and Jones here and there switching to – gasp! – a disco hi-hat beat belong to the former, but Stan's clearly on his way back to the hard stuff. Some of the material is unworthy, but by the time they get to Wayne Shorter's 'Lady Day', 'Autumn Leaves' and 'Time After Time' things are looking up. The sound isn't all that good and this is surely one for completists only.

(*) Billy Highstreet Samba Emarcy 838771-2 Getz; Mitchel Forman (ky); Chuck Loeb (g); Mark Egan (b); Victor Lewis (d); Bobby Thomas (perc). 11/81.
(*) My Old Flame Concord CCD 4955-2 Getz; Lou Levy (p); Monty Budwig (b); Victor Lewis (d). 5/81.
* Pure Getz Concord CCD 4188 Getz; Jim McNeely (p); Marc Johnson (b); Victor Lewis (d). 1/82.
(*) Blue Skies Concord CCD 4676 As above. 1/82.
(*) Live In Paris Dreyfus FDM 36577-9 As above. 82.
Not so much a miraculous return to form as an artist reasserting his artistry. Getz passed fusion leanings by and moved back to his greatest strength, tenor and rhythm section, of which the Concord albums are triumphant illustrations. My Old Flame couples the two originals The Dolphin and its companion, Spring Is Here, live sessions with a first-class band. Getz is at his most expansive here, reeling off very long but consistently expressive and well-argued solos, his tone a shade harder but still with a misty elegance that softens phrases at key moments. Pure Getz, recorded in the studio, is perhaps even better. There is a celebrated version of Billy Strayhorn's 'Blood Count', which alternates between harsh cries and soft murmurings and which became a staple part of Getz's live set at the time; but the variations on 'Come Rain Or Come Shine' and a terse 'Sippin' At Bells' are probably even more masterful. Billy Highstreet Samba is by no means a second-rate Getz album; here, for once, he adapted well to what could have been a fusion-led project. The material (by Loeb and Forman) is unusually perspicacious, and Getz responds with bright and committed playing against a group more concerned with playing music than licks. There is also a strong 'Body And Soul' and a couple of rare outings for Getz on soprano.

Blue Skies is a later discovery, dating from the same sessions as Pure Getz, and there is still some transcendent playing, especially on the slower pieces; Getz's gravitas on a ballad was never more perfectly revealed than in the likes of 'How Long Has This Been Going On?'. The live date is a valuable pendant to the studio sessions, and this was clearly a band in top gear. The only slight drawback is some extra reverb added to the remix, with McNeely's piano also sounding imperfect.

 The Stockholm Concerts Verve 537555-2 3CD Getz; Chet Baker (t, v); Jim McNeely (p); George Mraz (b); Victor Lewis (d). 2/83.
(*) Quintessence Vol. 1 Concord CCD 4807-2 As above. 2/83.
Stan meets Chet, again, but in very unfortunate circumstances. The saxophonist at times almost bullies Baker offstage during these concerts, and the trumpeter often responds by literally quaking through his parts. The Verve set is a somewhat gloomy encounter, not helped by McNeely playing almost on autopilot (he had got off a plane from Australia only hours before!). And yet … Getz himself plays some magnificent things, such as the first show's quite wonderful 'We'll Be Together Again' and 'How Long Has This Been Going On?'. The original pair of Sonet LPs has been expanded to a full three-CD set and, a few blemishes aside, Getz's playing alone will prioritize this one. The Concord album sees the group travelling to Norway for the next stop on the tour. Baker sounds considerably happier and in stronger voice, and even Stan thaws a bit.

 Anniversary / * Serenity Emarcy 838769-2 / 838770-2 Getz; Kenny Barron (p); Rufus Reid (b); Victor Lewis (d). 7/87.
Pristine examples of his art. Sometimes it seems as if there is nothing there but his sound, the 'incredibly lovely sound', as he once murmured to himself, and it's possible to find a strange, inward-looking emptiness at the heart of this music. Certainly he had no pretence to playing anything but long, self-regarding lines that had little to do with anything going on around him. Impeccably though both of these rhythm sections play, their function is purely to sketch in as painless a backdrop as possible for the unfurling of Getz's sound. But it is such a breathtaking beauty he creates that these might be the most sheerly pretty jazz albums of their day. These Emarcy sets are splendidly recorded and let the listener bathe in the rapturous sound of the tenor.

(*) Yours And Mine Concord CCD 4740 Getz; Kenny Barron (p); Ray Drummond (b); Ben Riley (d). 6/89.
(*) Soul Eyes Concord CCD 4783 As above, except add Yasuito Mori (b). 6–7/89.
What a trouper. Here's the old man in never-say-die fettle on some of his favourite standards, plus a nice Kenny Barron tune and Thad Jones's title-song. Caught live at Glasgow's Jazz Festival, the sound isn't ideally close, but you can catch most of the nuances and hear enough to tell that Getz was still the man. The rest of the concert appears on Soul Eyes, together with three tracks from a Copenhagen show a week later, with Mori in for Drummond. Getz sounds a bit sour on 'Slow Boat To China', but the following 'Warm Valley' is divine. Two excellent additions to the canon.

 Apasionado A&M 395297-2 Getz; orchestra. 89.
Though already troubled by terminal illness, Getz plays handsomely on this superior mood music. This has been a maligned record in the past, but we prefer it to his adventures in fusion for Columbia. With keyboards substituting for strings and a mélange of soft rhythms and whispering brass in support, this is Stan at his most consoling.

 The Final Concert Recording Eagle EDL EAG 272-2 Getz; Kenny Barron (p); Eddie Del Barrio (ky); unidentified rhythm section. 90.
(*) People Time Emarcy 510134-2 2CD Getz; Kenny Barron (p). 3/91.
 Café Montmartre Emarcy 586755-2 Getz; Kenny Barron (p); Rufus Reid (b); Victor Lewis (d). 7/87–3/91.
Aside from the point that the title's inaccurate, The Final Concert Recording is a mild disappointment, given that the more 'classic' material is interleaved with tunes from the quasi-smooth Apasionado session for A&M. Better to go to the pared-down setting of People Time. This was cut not long before his death, and Getz has his moments of struggle on the imposing, double-length series of duets with Kenny Barron, his last keyboard partner. Some of the butter has run out of his tone, and unlike many valedictory recordings there isn't a compensating ardour of delivery to go with it: he sounds as if he's just trying to be the same old Getz. But knowledge of his impending death still, inevitably, lends a poignancy to this music. Barron's not a mere accompanist but a full-fledged partner and turns in some of the best improvising. Café Montmartre cherrypicks tracks from People Time, Anniversary and Serenity.

Also, in brief:

(*) The Smoothest Operator JSP 943 4CD. 9/46–12/52.
Exhaustive coverage of the early years.

() At Carnegie Hall / () Birdland Sessions Fresh Sound FSCD 1003 / FSR-CD 367. 12/49–11/52; 4–8/52.
There's some excellent Getz on both these discs, but we have to withhold a firm recommendation because of the sound-quality. For addicts only.

(*) Stan Getz And The Cool Sounds Verve 547317-2. 5/53–1/55.
Although the album's packaging suggested this was some kind of new Getz group, it's actually a set of leftovers from various sessions for Granz. Vintage music all the same.

() The Best Of The Verve Years Vol. 2 /  The Very Best Of Stan Getz /  Getz Plays Jobim: The Girl From Ipanema / () Verve Jazz Masters: Stan Getz Verve 517330-2 2CD / 584210-2 / 589361-2 / 519823-2. 52–71; 53–81, 2/62–10/64; 52–64.
… etc., etc. … If ever there were a charge that major labels prefer recycling to fresh initiatives, the Verve Group's relentless repackaging of Getz would rate as prime evidence.

 Complete Studio Master Takes Jazz Beat 519 2CD. 55–57.
The Lou Levy dates.

 Stan Getz With Cal Tjader Original Jazz Classics OJC 275. 2/58.
A one-off session with the vibist which looks forward with some prescience to the bossa nova records that were to come.

 Cool Velvet / Voices Verve 527773-2. 3/60–12/66.
It was inevitable he'd record with strings, and Russ Garcia's arrangements for the Cool Velvet album are a nice foil for the lovely sound; Voices was arranged by Claus Ogerman.

 Reflections Verve 523322-2. 10/63.
Besides the bossa, Stan kept one eye on his with-strings audience, working with Claus Ogerman and Lalo Schifrin.

(*) Mickey One Verve 531232-2. 8/65.
A soundtrack project with Sauter arrangements and a formidable piece of work.

Tiziana Ghiglioni (born 1956)

VOICE

Based in Milan, her dedication to jazz singing begins with the classic style, yet goes much further.

 Yet Time Splasc(h) H 150 Ghiglioni; Roberto Ottaviano (ss); Stefano Battaglia (p); Paolino Dalla Porta (b); Tiziano Tononi (d). 3/88.

 Lyrics Splasc(h) H 348 Ghiglioni; Paul Bley (p). 3/91.

 Something Old, Something New, Something Borrowed, Something Blue Splasc(h) H 370 Ghiglioni; Enrico Rava (t); Giancarlo Schiaffini (tb); Steve Lacy (ss); Umberto Petrin (p); Attilio Zanchi (b); Tiziano Tononi (d, perc). 4–5/92.

Since she works in different settings from record to record, it's hard to focus on the merits of Tiziana Ghiglioni's singing. Her albums for Splasc(h) find her both fronting groups and working as an integral element within them. Yet Time finds her taking a Norma Winstone-like role of alternating pastoral scat with cool readings of lyrics. She has a big, rangy voice which she's reluctant to use in a big way, so many of her vocal improvisations sound restrained; fluency doesn't come easy to her, either. Yet the improvisation on Ornette Coleman's 'Round Trip' on Yet Time is sustained with great skill, and her meeting with Schiaffini, which includes bare-bones readings of 'When I Fall In Love' and 'All Blues' as well as more outré material, shows her unfazed by working alone with an improvising trombonist. Her enunciation always makes one aware that she's not singing in her native language, and her self-written lyrics are awkward, but she's a charismatic performer.

 Somebody Special Soul Note 121156-2 Ghiglioni; Steve Lacy (ss); Franco D'Andrea (p); Jean-Jacques Avenel (b); Oliver Johnson (d). 4/86.

 I'll Be Around Soul Note 121256-2 Ghiglioni; Enrico Rava (t); Mal Waldron (p). 7–8/89.

Ghiglioni's albums for Soul Note seek out a more conservative context, with mixed results. Steve Lacy's iron presence is the dominant feature of Somebody Special and, while Ghiglioni is a better singer than Irène Aëbi, and the quartet are in excellent form, the vocalist doesn't make a strong case for besting Lacy's sometimes intractable forms. I'll Be Around is dedicated to Billie Holiday, an inspiration rather than an influence, and in this collection of deathly slow ballads the singer does surprisingly well with Waldron and Rava, the latter especially at his most hauntingly poignant.

 Sings Gaslini Soul Note 121297-2 Ghiglioni; Renata Geremia (vn); Roberto Bonati (b); Giampiero Prina (d); string ensemble. 1–2/95.

The songs, lyrics and arrangements are all by Giorgio Gaslini, and they elicit Ghiglioni's most measured, thoughtful work. Sometimes one wishes that she'd let go a little, in the manner of some of her less formal records: the singing is beautifully done, and the arrangements are impeccable, but this is a very temperate climate, and across a CD's length it's a little becalmed. The most outré moments are actually provided by the eccentric violin of Geremia.

Also, in brief:

(*) Streams Splasc(h) H 104. 12/84.

A bold start, but it sometimes trips her up.

 Onde Splasc(h) H 133. 6/87.

She takes almost a peripheral role with Actis Dato's Art Studio group, but her singing on 'Rosso Di Sera' and 'Voci' is striking.

(*) Spellbound YVP 3058. 2/96.

A typically uncompromised project from the singer, with music primarily by Attilio Zanchi and her own words.

Sai Ghose

PIANO, DRUMS

Boston-based, he's the son of a New England mother and East Indian father.

 Fingers And Toes Summit 328 Ghose; Jerry Wilfong (b); Mike Connors (d). 10/01.

 E-Motion Summit 399 As above, except add Sean Berry (sax). 03.

 New Blood Summit 447 Ghose; Mark Jodice (b); Jerry Wilfong (b); Craig Fahey (d). 05.

An album themed round the arrival of a new baby might sound like a turn-off, but Fingers And Toes is a lively set of unexpectedly blues-tinged themes (with 'On Green Dolphin Street' dropped in the middle for some reason) that never sounds like an over-personal 'concept album'. Ghose has an expert touch, and sometimes overloads a line as result, but the musicality of his phrasing is insistently attractive. There's a faint bossa nova strain running through the records, though rarely where one would look for it: a 7/4 reworking of 'Black Orpheus' on E-Motion seems to come from another genre altogether. It's passionate, swinging music and the trio readily accommodates other voices, though it's Jodice who works better than the saxophonist in this context. A couple of independent releases feature Ghose as a drummer, but these have not come to hand.

Also, in brief:

 India Looking West Summit 277. 10–12/99.

Despite the title, not an ethnic fusion record at all, but relatively straight-ahead jazz.

Maurizio Giammarco (born 1952)

TENOR SAXOPHONE, FLUTE, ELECTRONICS

Born in Pavia and initially inspired by Duke Ellington. Works in jazz and pop.

 Live At The Big Mama, Rome Soul Note 121343 Giammarco; Dave Liebman (ss); Daniel Humair (b); Furio Di Castri (d). 01.

The strong-toned Giammarco has an impressive roster of session credits and sessions. He's sometimes reminiscent of the late Joe Farrell, using a hard tone in the most lyrical of circumstances, or playing through freer passages with the softest articulation, all in order to throw the line and logic of an improvisation into focus. The group with Liebman has obvious pedigree and the results are great, though the live recording isn't always as pretty as it might have been. The two saxophones find immediate common ground and the rhythm section, without a piano-player to provide a chordal foundation, ranges freely. He deserves wider coverage.

Michael Gibbs (born 1937)

TROMBONE, PIANO, BANDLEADER

Born in Rhodesia, Gibbs studied under Herb Pomeroy at Berklee and Lenox and came to London in 1965, returning for good after 20 years' teaching at Berklee.

* Michael Gibbs / Tanglewood '63 Vocalion CDSML 142 Gibbs; John Wilbraham (picc t); Harry Beckett, Nigel Carter, Ian Hamer, Henry Lowther, Maurice Miller, Derek Watkins, Kenny Wheeler (t, flhn); Malcolm Griffiths, Cliff Hardie, David Horler, Bobby Lambe, Chris Pyne (tb); Maurice Gee, Ken Goldy, Ray Premru (btb); Jim Buck Jr, Nicholas Busch, Alan Civil, Valerie Smith (frhn); Martin Fry, Dick Hart, Alf Reece (tba); Duncan Lamont, Mike Osborne, Tony Roberts, Alan Skidmore, Brian Smith, Stan Sulzmann, John Surman, Barbara Thompson, Ray Warleigh (reeds); Gordon Beck, Bob Cornford, Mike Pyne, John Taylor (ky); Ray Russell, Chris Spedding (g); Roy Babbington, Jack Bruce, Jeff Clyne, Brian Odgers (b); John Marshall, Tony Oxley, Clive Thacker (d); Frank Ricotti (perc, vib). 9 & 12/69; 11 & 12/70.

Few recording careers have got off to such a glorious start as Mike Gibbs's. The opening moments of 'Family Joy, Oh Boy!' on the eponymous debut could split clouds. Gibbs had come to Britain from his native Rhodesia via Berklee. A very few gigs later he was being talked about as the most vibrant new talent on the scene. Gibbs has the gift that all great leaders of big bands seem to require: that of making complex and daring ideas seem natural and inevitable. In these early records he fused advanced harmonic ideas with a groove that drew on Ellington, Gil and Miles, and rock. As he demonstrated on Tanglewood '63, he could move from sun-kissed delight to moonstruck melancholy in a moment. Something about the voicing of the horns – Gibbs was a (reluctant) trombonist – marked him down as an individualist. He rarely asks for stratospheric playing, concentrating on the middle register. 'Sojourn', which follows 'Tanglewood '63' and the appended 'functional' fanfare, is a lonely stroll through a rich musical landscape.

The first album pays some dues – to Stan Getz, John Dankworth, Bob Moses and Gary Burton – but it is utterly individual in conception and execution. Gibbs's charts look challenging, but he has the gift of making difficult passage-work sound coherent and expressive. 'Sweet Rain', 'Throb' and 'And On The Third Day' are classics of British jazz. Surman, Warleigh and Skidmore solo on the first and last, joined on 'Third Day' by Mike Osborne and trombonist Chris Pyne for an exuberant finale that brings a wonderful album to a climax.

The end of Tanglewood '63 is no less joyous, a long feature for guitarist Spedding over a richly textured rhythm, held together by Roy Babbington's bass guitar, a near-perfect marriage of rock and jazz that was to be Gibbs's staple for years to come, even when the idea of fusion was in retreat. A whole generation of British jazz fans cut their teeth on these records.

* Big Music ACT 9231 Gibbs; Ian Carr, Earl Gardner, Alan Rubin, Lew Soloff (t); John Clark (frhn); Dave Bargeron (tb); David Taylor (btb); Julian Argüelles (ss); Jim Odgren (as); Chris Hunter (as, ss, ts, f); Lou Marini (ts, ss, f); Bob Mintzer (ts, f, bcl); Dave Tofani (f, af, picc); Dave Bristow, Brad Hatfield (ky); Django Bates (p); Kevin Eubanks, David Fiuczynski, Bill Frisell, Duke Levine, John Scofield (g); Kai Eckhardt (b); Bob Moses (d, d prog); Bad Bill Martin, Ben Wittman (d prog, perc). 88, 9/90.

Big Music was assembled in a latter-day Teo Macero style, building up heads, solos, intros and overdubs in the studio to produce the rich and multidimensional style which Gibbs's work demands. It is due to the efforts of John L. Walters that the project happened at all, and it took eight years to get it onto CD. Walters explains that he was looking for 'a missing link between Out Of The Cool and Bitches Brew; between Charles Ives and Salif Keita' and he points to Bob Moses' band, Mozamba, as a key moment in determining the actual sound. Moses is certainly the crucial element. His rhythmic brilliance makes 'Wall To Wall' the ideal opening track, a madly brilliant dance floor jam with Jim Odgren's solo an additional bonus. The most obvious nod in the direction of Gil Evans is 'Mopsus', which includes overdubbed solos by Bill Frisell and Dave Bargeron. Gil's spirit is also on hand in 'Almost Ev'ry Day', a feature for Chris Hunter's strong, bluesy alto and a piece that might have been around for ever, so strong a hold does it take on first hearing. 'Pride Aside' is the coda, with an immaculate, Miles-influenced solo from Ian Carr. 'Waterfront' is a bonus track featuring Julian Argüelles on soprano and Django Bates on piano, recorded some time after the main sessions.

(*) Nonsequence Provocateur 82002 Gibbs; very large ensemble. 2–5/01.

One ensemble from the NDR, one from New York's session scene, and Gibbs turning in some sparklingly fresh scores, from an unexpected respray given to 'Moonlight Serenade' to the new African optimism of 'Now Listen Here'. Soloists charge out of these structures with aplomb, but in a sense they're a distraction, since it's the dense yet joyful writing which is the point of this music. Our only reservation is that the New Yorkers can seem almost blasé about their work, certainly next to the Germans. But it's great Gibbs.

Also, in brief:

 Just A Head BGO Records BGOCD 679 2CD. 5 & 6/72.

Fifteen of them, crammed onto the little stage at Ronnie Scott's and making a delightful noise. Charts largely by Gary Burton, Keith Jarrett and Carla Bley.

(*) Europeana ACT 9220. 95.

Though it bears his stamp in every bar, Gibbs is modest about his part in this moody, beautifully evoked 'Jazzphony', in celebration of European unity. Joachim Kühn (p) is the chief soloist, but the ensemble is full of fine feature voices. Difficult to place in the overall schema of Gibbs's work, but beautiful and impeccably tasteful.

Terry Gibbs (born 1924)

VIBRAPHONE, DRUMS, VOICE

Born in Brooklyn, he had a relatively uneventful time in swing bands before settling in LA in 1957 and running a part-time big band. Worked extensively in TV, but was still touring and performing in the '80s and '90s.

 Dream Band Contemporary 7647 Gibbs; Conte Candoli, Al Porcino, Ray Triscari, Stu Williamson (t); Bob Enevoldsen (vtb); Vernon Friley (tb); Joe Cadena, Med Flory, Bill Holman (ts); Joe Maini, Charlie Kennedy (as); Jack Schwartz (bs); Pete Jolly (p); Max Bennett (b); Mel Lewis (d). 3–11/59.

 The Sundown Sessions Contemporary 7562 As above, except add Johnny Audino (t); Bob Burgess (tb). 11/59.

 Flying Home Contemporary 7654 As above, except add Frank Higgins (t); Lou Levy (p); Buddy Clark (b). 3–11/59.

* One More Time Contemporary 7658 As above, except add Irene Kral (v). 3–11/59.

(*) Main Stem /  The Big Cat Contemporary 7656 / 7657 Gibbs; Conte Candoli, Frank Huggins, Al Porcino, Ray Triscari, Stu Williamson (t); Bob Edmondson, Vern Friley, Frank Rosolino (tb); Joe Maini, Charlie Kennedy (as); Richie Kamuca, Bill Perkins (ts); Jack Nimitz (bs); Pat Moran (p); Buddy Clark (b); Mel Lewis (d). 1/61.

The Gibbs bands combined the high-energy swing of Lionel Hampton with the sophistication of the Thad Jones–Mel Lewis outfits. The arrangements, by Marty Paich, Lennie Niehaus and others, are all good, but with a sometimes uneasy emphasis on the higher horns. Gibbs's playing is closer to Hampton's percussive bounce than to any of the competing influences, and he solos with verve; the excellent Main Stem and The Big Cat, the best of this sequence, are still available. It's a style that draws a great deal from bop and it's no less well-adapted to the small-group performances which he has been focusing on more recently, at least on record (he still runs editions of The Dream Band today, but says he won't record them, in order not to spoil the memory of this great outfit).

One More Time arrived as the result of Terry finding another box of tapes at home, and what a fine discovery. It's as loaded with atmosphere as anything in this series, and for sheer zing it sounds like the pick of the sequence to us. Irene Kral takes a couple of vocals, Conte Candoli has a couple of lovely features, and Gibbs himself has the audacity to out-Hamp the master on an 11-minute 'Flying Home'. The sound is amazingly good.

 Chicago Fire Contemporary 14036 Gibbs; Buddy DeFranco (cl); John Campbell II (p); Todd Coolman (b); Gerry Gibbs (d). 7/87.

 Air Mail Special Contemporary 14056 Gibbs; Buddy DeFranco (cl); Frank Collett (p); Andy Simpkins (b); Jimmie Smith (d). 10/81.

 The Latin Connection Contemporary 140222 Gibbs; Frank Morgan (as); Sonny Bravo (p); Bobby Rodriguez, Jose Madera, Tito Puente, Orestes Vilato (perc). 5/86.

(*) Memories Of You Contemporary 14066 Gibbs; Buddy DeFranco (cl); Herb Ellis (g); Larry Novak (p); Milt Hinton (b); Butch Miles (d). 4/91.

 Kings Of Swing Contemporary 14067 As above. 4/91.

Lively latter-day sets which feature him in the company of DeFranco in a series of friendly but competitive sets, also repeated with the clarinettist as (strictly nominal) leader, but what's a credit among friends? Memories Of You is perhaps the best all-round set, with an excellent reading of 'Flying Home' and a romantic but un-schmaltzy 'Poor Butterfly'. Kings Of Swing is the poorer half of the same sessions. Of the remainder, Air Mail Special ('Love For Sale', 'Blues For Brody', 'Body And Soul') is particularly recommended, with Chicago Fire (unexpected versions of 'Giant Steps' and the '52nd Street Theme'). The big-band stuff is the most wholly authentic, but Gibbs's small groups are perhaps more in tune with prevailing tastes. Some great south-of-the-border bop on The Latin Connection, which features great playing from the rehabilitated Frank Morgan and some typically exuberant percussion from Puente. Gibbs is in great form on Parker's 'Scrapple From The Apple', but even if the pace drops off a bit later, the first half will put a smile on anyone's face.

 Play That Song Chiaroscuro 337 Gibbs; Uri Caine (p); Boris Koslov (b); Gerry Gibbs (d). 94.

 Wham Chiaroscuro 356 Gibbs; Buddy DeFranco (cl); Flip Phillips (ts); Aaron Goldberg (p); Darek Oleskiewicz (b); Gerry Gibbs (d). 99.

 Plays Steve Allen Contemporary 14089 Gibbs; Buddy DeFranco (cl); Tom Ranier (p); Dave Carpenter (b); Gerry Gibbs (d). 99.

Allen's comedy songs have always been something of an acquired taste, but here they form the basis of a brightly swinging mainstream session that pairs old friends Gibbs and DeFranco in an entirely simpatico way. Tunes like 'I Used To Think I Was Crazy' and 'Playing The Field' are hardly classics, but they have their charms and the two front-men have a ball with them, doubtless kvetching all sorts of routines in addition when the microphones were off. Ranier is an excellent accompanist who's presumably boned up on his Steve Allen as well. A nice, warm-hearted set with some surprisingly robust material like the boppish 'South Dakota'.

The other session with DeFranco maintains the same warm rapport, and the long versions of 'Take Your Time' (well named), 'Please Let Me Play The Blues' and 'Sweet And Lovely' are beautifully crafted. Gibbs still takes such evident delight in playing that it is hard not to respond to these sessions, even if your idea of jazz is a little more modern and advanced.

Son Gerry has been a great addition to the Gibbs sound, and he really catches the mood on Play That Song, which was recorded live at the 1994 Floating Jazz Festival on board SS Norway. Lots of good feeling on stage and some stunning playing from Terry in the climactic sequence of Artie Shaw's 'Moonray' and the originals 'The Fat Man' and 'The Beautiful People'. Caine has been associated with more serious stuff of late, but he shows here what an inventive swinger he can be.

 From Me To You Mack Avenue MAC 1008 Gibbs; Pete Christlieb (ts); Mike Melvoin (p); Joey DeFrancesco (org); Dave Carpenter (b); Jeff Hamilton (d); Franz Pusch (perc); Barbara Morrison (v). 1/02.

(*) 52nd & Broadway: Songs Of The Bebop Era Mack Avenue MAC 1018 Gibbs; Nicholas Payton, Howie Shear (t); James Moody (ts); Sam Most (f); Tom Ranier (p, as); Dave Carpenter (b); Jeff Hamilton (d); strings. 1/04.

 Feelin' Good Mack Avenue MAC 1022 Gibbs; Eric Alexander (ts); Joey DeFrancesco (org); Dan Faehnle (g); Gerry Gibbs (d); Ray Armando (perc). 05.

Gibbs has struck up a good relationship with Mack Avenue and these sets suggest he's still in great shape in his 80s. The first is a good-natured nod from one master to another, as Terry offers a homage to Lionel Hampton with this set of tunes associated with Hamp. The vibesman still sounds in excellent fettle and can't resist the double-time runs, even on the slower pieces, which were a mark of both men. Professional if not especially exciting support from the others, and Barbara Morrison does Dinah Washington's feature on 'Evil Gal Blues'.

52nd & Broadway is an ambitious programme for an independent label, a stack of bop classics worked over by the Gibbs group – plus guests Payton, Moody and Most – and expansive orchestral charts by Tom Ranier, Phil Kelly (a very effective 'Round Midnight'), Med Flory and Howie Shear. Some of them stray towards easy listening, but it's all handsomely finished, Payton especially contributes some glowing cameos, and the leader sounds like he's loving every minute of it. Feelin' Good goes in completely the other direction, a live-in-the-studio one-off with the sextet swinging through some simple heads, blues and standards.

 Findin' The Groove Jazzed Media 1021 Gibbs; Hubert Laws (f); Tom Ranier (p); Dan Faehnle (g); Hamilton Price (b); Gerry Gibbs (d); Joan Carroll (v). 9/06.
Laws also plays an unfashionable instrument, but when you hear them together on this, it's hard to know why. There are signs of tiredness, with 'Four Brothers' given a rather awkward read, but for the most part it's warmly and skilfully done, and Joan Carroll's vocals are delightful. The closing 'One Minute And Forty Five Seconds To Station Break' is a hoot; guess how long?

Also, in brief:

 Terry Gibbs Quartet Featuring Terry Pollard Fresh Sound FSRCD450. 9/55, 6/56.
Small groups with his pianist partner Pollard, including the Mallets Aplenty date (and how tired these guys must be of that particular pun).

 Swingin' With Terry Gibbs' Orchestra And Quartet Fresh Sound FSRCD2244. 56–58.
Dates from NY ('56) and LA ('57, '58), including the material from Plays The Duke.

David Gibson

TROMBONE

He cites Curtis Fuller and Slide Hampton as influences.

* Maya Nagel Heyer 2018 Gibson; John Sneider (t, flhn); Wayne Escoffery (ts); Jeremy Manasia (p); Dwayne Burno, Peter Hartman (b); Tony Leone (d). 6–11/01.
 The Path To Delphi Nagel Heyer 2052 Gibson; Randy Brecker (t, flhn); Wayne Escoffery (ss); Rick Germanson (p); Dwayne Burno (b); Joe Strasser (d). 11/04.
Maya is an outstanding debut, nine tracks reeled off with punch and élan. Gibson may come out of the more punctilious end of modern trombone, but he has a full and bluesy sound which he spices with unexpected dynamics and the occasional daredevil touch. Sneider has long been reliable, and Escoffery plays meaty tenor. The originals are flavoursome and two standards offer a familiar toehold. It's one of those discs which sound instantly memorable yet unusually fresh. The follow-up will seem relatively disappointing, though only after such a remarkable start. The music represents the leader's 'personal search for truth' and perhaps in consequence is sometimes a bit too portentous. Brecker is routine and Escoffery only plays soprano, though he gets a good sound out of it, and the horn solos offer some intensity.

The Gibson Brass Band

GROUP

Formed in 1946, it worked regularly in New Orleans until the late '60s.

 The Gibson Brass Band Of New Orleans 1963/64 American Music AMCD–96 Eddie Richardson, Johnny Wimberley, John Henry McNeil, Joseph Bentley (t); Cal Blunt, Eddie Noble, Roland Cayette (tb); Robert Davis (as); Alphonse Spears (ts); George Sterling, Dave Bailey (d). 11/63–4/64.
Barry Martyn recorded this group of old-timers 'before they faded into history', setting down the first ten tracks here at an open-air session; five more were subsequently cut in studio. Once past the very shaky warm-up of 'Come Ye Disconsolate', the music goes with a real swing, and though tattered and off-centre, the playing is another worthy survival from the label's deep archive of pre-jazz roots music. Some of the older members of the band were born in the 1880s, and could remember the Buddy Bolden era.

John Gill (born 1954)

PIANO

Born in England, but based in Perth, Australia. He's a stride devotee.

(*) All By Myself /  Sidewalk Blues /  Shakin' The Blues Away Pianomania PM 110 / 121 / 604 Gill (p solo). 93; 93; 06.
Gill specializes in digitally recorded Disclavier recordings of classic stride repertoire. Technically, he's astute and absolutely on the money and there's nothing inherently wrong with hearing this music in pristine sound, though it's a bit like finding a bit of Greek marble painted and clothed, authentic but somehow 'wrong'. The Morton set (Sidewalk Blues) is probably the best of the group, but the recent one romps along, too.

Also, in brief:

(*) Rhythm King Boom Box BBR108. 96.
Waller, Morton, on a Steinway?

John Gill

BANJO, TROMBONE, VOICE

Californian revivalist with multi-thread credentials as trombonist, banjo-strummer, bandleader and arranger. Sometimes he sings too.

(*) Turk Murphy Style GHB 295 Gill; Bob Schulz (c); Charlie Bornemann (tb); Lynn Zimmer (cl, ss); Pete Clute (p); Bill Carroll (tba). 89.
(*) Smile, Darn Ya, Smile Stomp Off CD 1227 Gill; Charles Fardella (t); David Sager (tb, v); Lynn Zimmer (ss, ts, cl); Tom Fischer (as, cl); Steve Pistorius (p, v); Debbie Markow, Elliot Markow (vn); Tom Saunders (tba); Hal Smith (d). 12/90.
 Headin' For Better Times Stomp Off CD 1270 As above, except add Dan Levinson (ts, cl). 7/91–12/92.
* Looking For A Little Bluebird Stomp Off CD 1295 Gill; Chris Tyle, Duke Heitger (t); Frank Powers (cl, v); Steve Pistorius (p); Eddy Davis (bj, v); Vince Giordano (tba); Hal Smith (d). 12/94.
(*) Take Me To The Midnight Cakewalk Ball Stomp Off CD 1304 As above. 8/95.
(*) Listen To That Dixie Band Stomp Off CD 1321 As above, except add Lavay Smith (v). 5/97.
(*) I Must Have It! Stomp Off CD 1401 Gill; Jon-Erik Kellso (c); Brad Shigeta (tb); Orange Kellin (cl); Hank Ross (p); Joe Hanchrow (tba). 04.
Shading between revivalism and a straight and strict re-creation of hot dance music, Gill's outfit sometimes errs on the side of the latter, which will tend to switch off all but the more dedicated archivists. There are two or three tunes on Smile and Headin' that build up a bigger head of steam, and both ride out on a hot one: 'Here Comes The Hot Tamale Man', which Freddie Keppard once blew on, was a good idea for the second record. For the rest, though, it's often re-created schmaltz. Stomp Off have made a speciality out of this, but Gill is actually rather better when he's more uninhibited and less respectful.

Gill plays trombone rather than banjo on the later sets, calls the group The Dixieland Serenaders, and has them play the stuffing out of a repertoire brimful of Oliver, Morton, Dodds – and Lu Watters–Turk Murphy revivalism. Except that this group actually sounds better than the oldtimers of San Franciscan jazz usually did. The two-trumpet front line blows over the rest of the band like a particularly cussed zephyr, and Giordano and Smith give the group a terrific lift even when they're playing a simple two-beat. The result is a shakedown of a lot of mothballed tunes that puts a new lease on almost all of them. We fractionally prefer Looking For A Little Bluebird for its maniacal 'Alligator Hop' and the beautiful extended treatment of 'Farewell To Storyville', and for Richard Bird's sound, which shoves the band right in your face while still giving them a full and clear balance. The subsequent Take Me To The Midnight Cakewalk Ball is barely a step behind, though, with notable treatments of 'Wa Wa Wa' and 'Grandpa's Spells' ... and 16 more.

The fun continues on Listen To That Dixie Band. Quite a ration of blues this time, with four Bessie Smith numbers sung by guest Lavay Smith (on vacation from the Red Hot Skillet Lickers) and the band still sounding in their most flavoursome form. There's not been much of late, but I Must Have It! serves pretty well.

Dizzy Gillespie (1917–93)

TRUMPET, PERCUSSION, PIANO, VOICE

Born in Cheraw, South Carolina, he started on trumpet at 13. Moved to Philadelphia in 1935, joined Teddy Hill, then Cab Calloway. Formed coterie of after-hours players with Parker, Monk and Kenny Clarke in the early '40s, then began leading his own small groups from 1945, playing bebop. Led his own big band, 1946–50, and pioneered the fusion of jazz with Afro-Cuban music. Then returned to small-group work, though he toured with big bands for the State Department, 1956–8. A small group with James Moody was his main vehicle in the early '60s, but occasional big-band work and a campaign to run for the presidency also intervened. In the '70s and '80s, he assumed the role of elder statesman of modern jazz and was the focus of a re-evaluation of bop. Its guiding theoretician, a supreme virtuoso of jazz trumpet, a profound teacher, visionary and great entertainer.

 Dizzy Gillespie 1945 Classics 888 Gillespie; Trummy Young (tb, v); Tony Scott (cl); Charlie Parker, Johnny Bothwell (as); Dexter Gordon, Don Byas (ts); Clyde Hart, Jimmy Jones, Frank Paparelli (p); Mike Bryan, Remo Palmieri (g); Oscar Pettiford, Gene Ramey, Slam Stewart, Al Hall, Murray Shipinski (b); Specs Powell, Ed Nicholson, Cozy Cole, Irv Kluger, Shelly Manne (d); Rubberlegs Williams, Sarah Vaughan (v). 1–2/45.

(*) Dizzy Gillespie 1945–1946 Classics 935 Gillespie; Howard McGhee, Karl George, Snooky Young (t); Vic Dickenson, George Washington, Ralph Bledsoe, Henry Coker (tb); Charlie Parker, Willie Smith, Marvin Johnson (as); Don Byas, Lucky Thompson, Fred Simon (ts); Gene Porter (bs); Al Haig, George Handy, Wilbert Baranco (p); Bill De Arango, Buddy Harper (g); Curley Russell, Charles Mingus, Ray Brown, Al McKibbon (b); Big Sid Catlett, Earl Watkins, Stan Levey, J. C. Heard, Roy Haynes (d); The Three Angels, Sarah Vaughan (v). 5/45–4/46.

♛ * The Complete RCA Victor Recordings Bluebird 66528-2 2CD As above, except add Bill Dillard, Shad Collins, Lamar Wright, Willie Cook, Benny Harris, Miles Davis, Fats Navarro (t); Dicky Wells, Ted Kelly, J. J. Johnson, Kai Winding (tb); Buddy DeFranco (cl); Benny Carter, Russell Procope, Ernie Henry (as); Yusef Lateef, Coleman Hawkins, Ben Webster, Charlie Ventura, Don Byas, Robert Carroll, Teddy Hill (ts); Al Gibson, Ernie Caceres (bs); Lionel Hampton (vib); Lennie Tristano, Sam Allen, James Foreman (p), Charlie Christian, Billy Bauer (g); Milt Hinton, Richard Fulbright, Al McKibbon, Eddie Safranski (b); Bill Beason, Teddy Stewart (d); Vince Guerra, Sabu Martinez, Chano Pozo (perc); Johnny Hartman (v). 5/37–1/49.

(*) Dizzy Gillespie 1947–1949 Classics 1102 As discs above. 12/47–6/49.

(*) Dizzy Gillespie 1949–1950 Classics 1168 Gillespie; Don Slaughter, Elmon Wright, Willie Cook (t); Matthew Gee, Sam Hurt, Charles Greenlee, Henry Coker, Richard Kenny, Harold Smith (tb); Jimmy Heath, John Coltrane (as); Jesse Powell, Paul Gonsalves (ts); Al Gibson (bs); Milt Jackson(vib); Johnny Acea, Paul Smith (p); John Collins, Floyd Smith (g); Al McKibbon, Jack Cascales (b); Specs Wright (d); Carlos Duchesne, Francisco Pozo, Carlos Vidal (perc); Joe Carroll, Tiny Irvin (v); strings, woodwinds. 11/49–9/50.

* The Dizzy Gillespie Story 1939–1950 Proper PROPERBOX 30 4CD As various discs above, plus groups led by Teddy Hill, Cab Calloway, Lionel Hampton, Lucky Millinder, Billy Eckstine and Coleman Hawkins. 5/37–11/50.

John Birks Gillespie had been recording for almost a decade when he made the earliest of these tracks, and in the Cab Calloway and Teddy Hill bands he cut the outline of a promising Roy Eldridge disciple. His associations with Thelonious Monk and Charlie Parker, though, took him into hitherto uncharted realms. While he continued to credit Parker as the real inspirational force behind bebop, Gillespie was the movement's scholar, straw boss, sartorial figurehead and organizer: his love of big-band sound led him into attempts to orchestrate the new music that resulted in some of the most towering jazz records, particularly (among those here) 'Things To Come' and 'Cubana Be'/'Cubana Bop'. But his own playing is at least as powerful a reason to listen to these tracks. Gillespie brought a new virtuosity to jazz trumpet just as Parker created a matchless vocabulary for the alto sax. It scarcely seems possible that the music could have moved on from Louis Armstrong's 'Cornet Chop Suey' to Gillespie's astonishing flight on 'Dizzy Atmosphere' in only 20 years. A dazzling tone, solo construction that was as logical as it was unremittingly daring, and a harmonic grasp which was built out of countless nights of study and experimentation: Gillespie showed the way for every trumpeter in post-war jazz. His Guild and Musicraft recordings include a single sextet track with Dexter Gordon ('Blue 'N' Boogie'), seven with Parker, four with Sonny Stitt and Milt Jackson, and the balance with his big band.

The RCA set sweeps the board as the cream of Gillespie's studio work in the period. The big-band tracks are complete and in good sound, all the Victor small-group sessions are here, there are prehistory tracks with Teddy Hill and Lionel Hampton as a taster of things to come, and four tracks with the Metronome All-Star bebop group, where Dizzy lines up with Miles, Bird, Fats and J.J. Exciting and indispensable.

Classics have rounded up some useful obscurities in their survey. Classics 888 mixes bebop's earliest sounds – a January 1945 date with the first versions of 'Good Bait' and 'Be-Bop' itself – along with dates under the leadership of either Clyde Hart or Trummy Young (who somehow manages to get himself on five of the seven sessions here!). Three dates are almost ruined by the vocals, including the bizarre and inebriated warblings of Rubberlegs Williams; but Gillespie, Byas and Parker (a little restrained) salvage something out of it. Three tracks with Tony Scott and Ben Webster are interesting. Classics 935 includes the first seven titles for Dial (with Parker absent on the second date), adds the first small-band date for Victor, offers four very cloudy and speed-wobbled tracks with a Johnny Richards orchestra and four all-star big-band tracks led by Wilbert Baranco: 'Night And Day' is a great one, even though Gillespie (masquerading as 'John Burk') doesn't solo. This is a scrappy way to hear this music, but diehard Gillespie collectors will want these discs.

Classics 1102 carries on with the Gillespie big-band sides: if you don't have the RCA set, this will fill in gaps such as 'Dizzier And Dizzier' and the immortal 'Cubana Be' and 'Cubana Bop'. Classics 1168 brings this big-band era to a close, adds some sextet sides with Jimmy Heath and Milt Jackson, and then goes into eight titles where Johnny Richards arranged material for strings and woodwinds, with Gillespie firing over the top. The trumpet parts are terrific, even if Richards was scarcely the most daring of arrangers. A few duds in this set, but even here there is sufficient Gillespie to make the disc an attractive buy.

The four-disc Dizzy Gillespie Story is a very appealing set: early appearances as a sideman, then many of the key sides from the '40s. If Proper's presentation is to your liking, this will work well as a Gillespie primer.

(*) Pleyel 48 Arpeggio ARJ017 Gillespie; Dave Burns, Benny Bailey, Lamar Wright, Elmon Wright (t); Ted Kelly, Bill Shepherd (tb); Howard Johnson, John Brown (as); George Gales, Big Nick Nicholas (ts); Cecil Payne (bs); John Lewis (p); Al McKibbon (b); Kenny Clarke (d); Chano Pozo (perc); Kenny Hagood (v). 2/48.
(*) Dizzy Gillespie & His Big Band In Concert GNP Crescendo GNPD 23 As above, except omit Bailey, Lamar Wright, Kelly, Johnson, Nicholas, Lewis, McKibbon, Clarke, Hagood; add Willie Cook (t); Cindy Duryea, Jesse Tarrant (tb); Ernie Henry, James Moody (reeds); James Foreman (p); Nelson Boyd (b); Teddy Stewart (d). 48.

Although the big band made only a small number of studio records, it was caught on the wing at a number of concerts, even if seldom in hi-fi conditions. These, though, are two splendid gigs, and only the exasperatingly imperfect sound holds them back from top ratings. Although much of the material is duplicated across the two concerts, some of it is strikingly different: the Pasadena (GNP) concert has a three-minute 'Round Midnight' while the one from Paris runs to almost nine minutes. Gillespie's interest in Latin rhythms brought semi-legendary percussionist Pozo (killed not long after these concerts) into the fold, and there is typically exciting stuff on 'Manteca'. If the orchestra never moves with the neurotic immediacy of small-group bebop, it's still a remarkable sound. The Paris concert has now been issued in yet another edition, on the Arpeggio label (part of the British Magnum group), and the 'digital remastering' doesn't seem to have made much difference to the sound.

 Cognac Blues Emarcy 014064-2 Gillespie; Don Byas (ts); Art Simmons, Arnold Ross, Wade Legge (p); Jean-Jacques Tilché (g); Joe Benjamin, Lou Hackney (b); Bill Clark, Al Jones (d); Humberto Canto Morales (perc). 3/52–2/53.

When economics required Gillespie to dissolve the big band, he carried on with small groups. Operating at something of a tangent to bop – he still performed with Parker on a few occasions, and there is a superb session for Verve with Monk and Bird, as well as the famous Massey Hall concert of 1953 – his playing began to take on a grandeur that sounded even more ravishing than Parker's alto did when confronted with strings. Made in Paris for the Blue Star label, these sessions have a moth-eaten sound and the groups offer very average rhythm sections and Don Byas at his bleariest and least sensitive. The rough sound on the opening date grants Gillespie's vocal on 'Sabla Y Blu' the quality of a field recording. But this was still a vintage period for Dizzy and he does something worth hearing on each of these tracks, the solos either tightly packed with detail or bursting with grand gestures.

(*) Afro Verve 517052-2 Gillespie; Quincy Jones, Jimmy Nottingham, Ernie Royal (t); Leon Comegys, J. J. Johnson, George Matthews (tb); George Dorsey, Hilton Jefferson (as); Hank Mobley, Lucky Thompson (ts); Danny Bank (bs, f); Gilberto Valdés (f); Ray Conception, Wade Legge, Alejandro Hernandez (p); Lou Hackney, Robert Rodriguez (b); Charli Persip (d); Candido Camero, Mongo Santamaria, José Mangual , Ubaldo Nietes, Rafael Miranda (perc). 5/54.

Split between a four-part 'Manteca Suite', written by Chico O'Farrill for big band, and a session where Gillespie fronts an Afro-Cuban rhythm section, there's some heady stuff here. 'Jungla', which is mostly trumpet over the five-man drum section, practically steams, and while some of the music might not gel as purposefully as the creators intended, the exhilaration of hearing Gillespie in full flight over all this metropolitan hustle and bustle is thrilling. The small-group tracks have a lot of great trumpet too, although flautist Gilberto Valdés is a rather cheesy foil.

 Diz And Getz Verve 549749-2 Gillespie; Stan Getz, Hank Mobley (ts); Oscar Peterson, Wade Legge (p); Herb Ellis (g); Ray Brown, Lou Hackney (b); Max Roach, Charli Persip (d). 12/53–5/54.
(*) For Musicians Only Verve 837435-2 As above, except omit Peterson, Roach; add Sonny Stitt (as); John Lewis (p); Stan Levey (d). 10/56.
 Sonny Side Up Verve 521426-2 Gillespie; Sonny Stitt, Sonny Rollins (ts); Ray Bryant (p); Tommy Potter (b); Charli Persip (d). 12/57.

These all-star encounters are overrated. It's interesting to hear Gillespie on what was effectively mainstream material on Diz And Getz – two Ellington tunes, three standards and a single Latin theme – but the group strike a surprisingly shambolic note in places, seldom managing to play together, and the superfast blues 'Impromptu' is a virtual disaster. Worth salvaging are a lovely trumpet treatment of 'It's The Talk Of The Town', some moments from the otherwise audibly ruffled Getz, and a version of 'It Don't Mean A Thing' in which the tempo is actually matched by the intensity of the playing. The music has never sounded like a great feat of engineering: the latest version is another Verve Master Edition and sounds a good deal better than we remember. There is a stray three-minute track from a later session with Hank Mobley as a somewhat dubious bonus. For Musicians Only is even more of a blow-out, with 'Be-Bop' and 'Dark Eyes' running over 12 minutes each and Stitt treating it as a carving session: the tempos are almost uniformly hell-for-leather. Exhilarating in small doses, but it's hardly as significant a date as it might have been with a little preparation. Sonny Side Up is pretty desultory stuff, too, but with Rollins in his greatest period and Stitt as combative as usual the two long blues tracks strike some sparks, and Rollins's solo on the brief 'I Know That You Know' is prime cut.

(*) Dizzy In South America: Volumes 1 & 2 Consolidated Artists CAP 933 / 934 Gillespie; Quincy Jones, Ermit Perry, Carl Warwick (t); Rod Levitt, Melba Liston, Frank Rehak (tb); Jimmy Powell, Phil Woods (as); Benny Golson, Billy Mitchell (ts); Marty Flax (bs); Walter Davis Jr (p); Nelson Boyd (b); Charli Persip (d); Austin Cromer (v). 7–8/56.

(*) Live, 1957 Jazz Unlimited JUCD 2040 Gillespie; Lee Morgan, Ermit Perry, Carl Warwick, Talib Daawud (t); Melba Liston, Al Grey, Ray Connor (tb); Jimmy Powell, Ernie Henry (as); Benny Golson, Billy Mitchell (ts); Pee Wee Moore (bs); Wynton Kelly (p); Tom Bryant (b); Charli Persip (d). 6/57.

All three of these location recordings are in decent fidelity, and they're valuable survivals of Gillespie's big band, convened in the first instance for a State Department tour of the region. There's no duplication of material across the first two sets; the first, in particular, catches band and leader in close to top form. Besides Gillespie, there are good moments for Woods, Golson and Mitchell in particular. The second volume is a shade less good, if only for the odd dud such as the show-off set-piece, 'The Champ'. But the Jazz Unlimited disc, made in Chesterfield, Pennsylvania, the following year, shouldn't be missed either. There's the opportunity to compare the different versions of 'Jessica's Day' and Melba Liston's feature, 'My Reverie', but there are several pieces not heard on the South America discs: a crackling 'Autumn Leaves', Ernie Henry featured in 'Dizzy's Business', Golson's 'I Remember Clifford' and 'Whisper Not', and the 18-year-old Lee Morgan featured on 'A Night In Tunisia'. But the driving impression throughout is of how good Gillespie was sounding in front of a fiery big band.

* Birks Works
Verve 527900-2 2CD Gillespie; Joe Gordon, Quincy Jones, Ermit Perry, Carl Warwick, Talib Daawud, Lee Morgan (t); Melba Liston, Frank Rehak (tb); Rod Levitt, Ray Connor (btb); Jimmy Powell, Phil Woods, Ernie Henry (as); Billy Mitchell, Benny Golson, Ernie Wilkins (ts); Marty Flax, Billy Root, Pee Wee Moore (bs); Walter Davis Jr, Wynton Kelly (p); Paul West, Nelson Boyd (b); Charli Persip (d); Austin Comer (v). 6/56–7/57.

Long awaited in a comprehensive edition, these tracks cover the work of a band that Gillespie toured with as a cultural ambassador, though this is all studio work. Studded with great players, the orchestra also benefits from some of the most perceptive scoring of the day – by Liston, Wilkins, Jones, Golson and other hands – and, with Gillespie in stratospheric form as soloist, the band could hardly have failed. Yet the three original albums remain comparatively forgotten, or at least neglected, which makes the reissue even more welcome.

 At Newport Verve 513754-2 Gillespie; Lee Morgan, Ermit Perry, Carl Warwick, Talib Daawud (t); Melba Liston, Al Grey, Chuck Connors (tb); Ernie Henry, Jimmy Powell (as); Billy Mitchell, Benny Golson (ts); Pee Wee Moore (bs); Wynton Kelly, Mary Lou Williams (p); Paul West (b); Charli Persip (d). 7/57.

 Have Trumpet, Will Excite! Verve 549744-2 Gillespie; Junior Mance (p); Les Spann (g, f); Sam Jones (b); Lex Humphries (d); Carlos 'Patato' Valdes (perc). 2/59.

* Gillespiana / Carnegie Hall Concert Verve 519809-2 Gillespie; John Frosk, Clark Terry, Nick Travis, Carl Warwick, Ernie Royal, Joe Wilder (t); Urbie Green, Frank Rehak, Britt Woodman, George Matthews, Arnette Sparrow, Paul Faulise (tb); Jimmy Buffington, Al Richman, Gunther Schuller, Julius Watkins, John Barrows, Richard Berg (frhn); Leo Wright (f, as); Lalo Schifrin (p); Don Butterfield (tba); Art Davis (b); Chuck Lampkin (d); Candido Camero, Willie Rodriguez, Ray Barretto, Julio Collazo, José Mangual (perc); Joe Carroll (v). 11/60–3/61.

(*) Ultimate Dizzy Gillespie Verve 557535-2 Gillespie; various groups. 6/54–11/64.

Gillespie's Verve contract produced no single indispensable record. The big- and small-band dates were pot-pourris of dazzling breaks and solos that never quite gelled into the long-playing masterpiece Gillespie surely had in him at this time. Having already outlived many of his key contemporaries in bebop, he was beginning to be a player in search of a context. The best single disc is certainly the one that couples Gillespiana – a marvellous assemblage of orchestral charts by Lalo Schifrin, some of his finest work on record, to which Gillespie rises superbly – and the subsequent Carnegie Hall Concert of a few months later, not quite so memorable, though this 'Manteca' and the extravagant 'Tunisian Fantasy' are exhilarating. The Newport set from 1957 has some great moments – a fine 'I Remember Clifford', the chunks from Mary Lou Williams's 'Zodiac Suite' with the composer sitting in – and some concert schtick.

Have Trumpet, Will Excite! is a recent revival of the rhythm section via the Cannonball Adderley group, who tend to do little more than vamp away behind the maestro and, given that most of the material is made up of standards, with only 'Woody 'N' You' from Gillespie's usual bag, it may disappoint any who expect unfiltered bebop fireworks. But there's a case for saying that this is one of the best of all Gillespie's small-group albums: the playing has a steely refinement that makes the audacious moments stand out even further, the relatively neutral setting puts a more decisive face on the trumpet choruses, and it's a rare chance to hear Gillespie work through what might have been a hard-bop programme of standard tunes. His 'Moonglow' solo can stand with anything the next wave of trumpeters were coming up with.

Roy Hargrove's choice for Ultimate focuses on the small-group Gillespie, from 'Bloomdido' with Monk and Bird onwards.

(*) The Copenhagen Concert Steeplechase SCCD 36024 Gillespie; Leo Wright (as); Junior Mance (p); Art Davis (b); Teddy Stewart (d). 6/59.

Chris Sheridan is absolutely correct in identifying this as an important transition between two of Dizzy's best small groups. Mance and Wright make electrifying partners and the sheer energy and brio of Gillespie's playing on 'Wheatleigh Hall', 'A Night In Tunisia' and even the opening 'I Found A Million Dollar Baby' make it an essential buy.

 An Electrifying Evening With The Dizzy Gillespie Quintet Verve 557544-2 Gillespie; Leo Wright (as, f); Lalo Schifrin (p); Bob Cunningham

Not really electrifying, but there's the odd flash of lightning along the way. Dizzy sounds in good spirits and makes his own play for 'The Famous Trumpet Break' on 'A Night In Tunisia', which is pretty superb. Lampkin is very loud in the mix and perhaps not the greatest drummer ever to sit behind Gillespie. Leo Wright, another name not much spoken of these days, plays some tough, even abrasive alto along the way.

 Something Old – Something New Verve 558079-2 Gillespie; James Moody (ts, as, f); Kenny Barron (p); Chris White (b); Rudy Collins (d). 63.

 Jambo Caribe Verve 557492-2 As above, except add Kansas Fields (perc); Ann Henry (v). 64.

Gillespie's quintet of the early '60s has been largely eclipsed by other, more renowned small groups of the period. It's not so much a miscarriage of justice as a fact of documented jazz life: they didn't do much recording, and what there is is relatively unremarkable. Moody was a splendid presence, garrulous foil or straightman as the occasion required, and with the young Kenny Barron in the rhythm section the group had unusual strength in depth. Something Old – Something New revisits nuggets such as 'Bebop' and 'Good Bait', along with newer pieces such as 'November Afternoon', but the temperature seems low and the playing inexplicably cautious. Jambo Caribe is described as a 'sensuous calypso adventure', but this was one area of world music which Dizzy never conquered, and a lot of it is trivial. Even so, he gets a beautifully considered solo into 'And Then She Stopped', and the closing 'Trinidad, Goodbye' is a fast, attacking piece that Gillespie and Moody plunder very effectively.

(*) The Monterey Festival Jazz Orchestra Blue Note 80370-2 Gillespie; Harry 'Sweets' Edison, Melvin Moore, Fred Hill, Johnny Audino (t); Lester Robinson, Francis Fitzpatrick, Jim Amlotte (tb); Herman Lebow, Sam Cassano, David Burke, Alan Robinson (frhn); Buddy Collette, Gabe Baltazar, Bill Green, Carrington Visor Jr, Jack Nimitz (reeds); Phil Moore (p); Bobby Hutcherson (vib); Dennis Budimir (g); Jimmy Bond (b); Earl Palmer (d). 65.

Gil Fuller's charts for this band miss the freewheeling excitement he gave to the first Gillespie big band in the '40s, but there's real glitter and polish in the playing that the trumpeter responds to with some acrid, pinpoint improvising. It's over too soon.

 Swing Low, Sweet Cadillac Impulse! 051178-2 Gillespie; James Moody (ts, as, f); Mike Longo (p); Frank Schifano (b); Otis Finch (d). 67.

After his Verve and Limelight records, Impulse! had a go at getting a record out of Dizzy. It has its moments, for both Gillespie and Moody, but as before there's a sense that the leader simply wasn't much interested in making records and wanted to get on to the next gig.

 Live At The Village Vanguard Blue Note 80507-2 2CD Gillespie; Garnett Brown (tb); Pepper Adams (bs); Chick Corea (p); Ray Nance (vn); Richard Davis (b); Mel Lewis, Elvin Jones (d). 10/67.

One of the oddest line-ups Gillespie ever figured in – Nance and Brown swap places, Jones sits in on two tunes, but otherwise the band is as listed. These are club jams rather than thought-out situations, and there are the usual dead spots; but Gillespie takes some magisterial solos – his thoughts on the blues in 'Blues For Max' are worth a close listen – and Adams in particular is in tough, no-nonsense form.

(*) Dizzy Gillespie's Big 4 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 443 Gillespie; Joe Pass (g); Ray Brown (b); Mickey Roker (d). 9/74.

() The Trumpet Kings Meet Joe Turner Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 497 Gillespie; Roy Eldridge, Clark Terry, Harry 'Sweets' Edison (t); Connie Crayton (g); Jimmy Robbins (b); Washington Rucker (d); Joe Turner (v). 9/74.

* The Trumpet Kings At Montreux '75 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 445 Gillespie; Roy Eldridge, Clark Terry (t); Oscar Peterson (p); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Louie Bellson (d). 7/75.

() At The Montreux Jazz Festival 1975 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 739 Gillespie; Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis, Johnny Griffin (ts); Milt Jackson (vib); Tommy Flanagan (p); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Mickey Roker (d). 7/75.

 Bahiana Pablo 2625-708 Gillespie; Roger Glenn (f, bf, vib); Al Gafa, Michael Howell (vib); Earl May (b); Mickey Roker (d); Paulinho Da Costa (perc). 11/75.

* Dizzy's Party Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 823 Gillespie; Rodney Jones (g); Benjamin Franklin Brown (b); Mickey Roker (d); Paulinho Da Costa (perc). 9/76.

(*) Montreux '77 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 381 Gillespie; Jon Faddis (t); Milt Jackson (vib); Monty Alexander (p); Ray Brown (b); Jimmie Smith (d). 7/77.

(*) Free Ride Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 740 Gillespie; band arranged by Lalo Schifrin. 2/77.

() The Trumpet Summit Meets The Oscar Peterson Big 4 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 603 Gillespie; Freddie Hubbard, Clark Terry (t); Oscar Peterson (p); Joe Pass (g); Ray Brown (b); Bobby Durham (d). 3/80.

 The Alternate Blues Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 744 As above. 3/80.

() Digital At Montreux 1980 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 882 Gillespie; Toots Thielemans (hca); Bernard Purdie (d). 7/80.

 Musician Composer Raconteur Pablo 2620-116 2CD Gillespie; James Moody (ts, as, f); Milt Jackson (vib); Ed Cherry (g); Michael Howell (b); George Hughes (d). 7/81.

* The Best Of Dizzy Gillespie Pablo 2405-411 As discs above. various dates.

Gillespie's Pablo period marked a return to regular recording after some years of neglect in the studios. The Big 4 album was the first session he did, and it remains perhaps the best. There is a superb display of trumpet chops in 'Be Bop', a very good ballad in 'Hurry Home' and an intriguing revision of 'Jitterbug Waltz' in which Pass and Gillespie push each other into their best form. Bahiana rambles on a bit and the supporting group are unworthy, but Gillespie plays with fire and decision and he elevates his surroundings with some distinction. The other records seem to betray Norman Granz's indecision as to how best to employ Dizzy's talents. The four Trumpet Kings/Summit encounters are typical of their kind: brilliant flashes of virtuosity interspersed with rhetoric and mere showing-off. The best is probably the Joe Turner meeting, where the great R&B singer puts everyone through their paces. Montreux '77 is Gillespie featuring his young protégé, Jon Faddis, who xeroxes the young Gillespie style but comes up with a remark or two of his own. The earlier set, from 1975, includes some righteous jousting with Davis and Griffin, though it tends to go the way of all such festival showdowns. The best-of set is weak, picking some tracks off records that have thankfully disappeared. Free Ride is a hopeless collaboration with Lalo Schifrin that comes as a nasty shock after the great Gillespiana from 25 years earlier. Dizzy's Party is another one where there's no need to weep over a lost invite. Musician Composer Raconteur is a further Montreux appearance and, although Jackson and Moody are made into somewhat hapless guest stars, the grand good humour of the occasion will please those who remember Gillespie's latter-day concerts, and he plays some fine trumpet at various points. Digital At Montreux 1980 is even more of a one-man show, Thielemans and Purdie excepting. There is something to enjoy on all these records, but they stretch Gillespie's legend very thin at times.

() To Bird With Love Telarc CD-83316 Gillespie; Paquito D'Rivera (as, cl); Jackie McLean, Antonio Hart (as); Clifford Jordan, David Sanchez, Benny Golson (ts); Danilo Perez (p); George Mraz (b); Lewis Nash (d); Bobby McFerrin (v). 1/92.

() Bird Songs Telarc CD-83421 As above, except add Kenny Washington (d). 1/92.

 To Diz With Love Telarc CD-83307 Gillespie; Wynton Marsalis, Charlie Sepulveda, Claudio Roditi, Red Rodney, Wallace Roney, Jon Faddis, Doc Cheatham, Lew Soloff (t); Junior Mance (p); Peter Washington (b); Kenny Washington (d). 1–2/92.

From the concerts which were meant to inaugurate a year of celebration for Dizzy's 75th birthday and which instead turned out to be his final appearances. The trumpet feast on the third disc has the edge, with a hint of a cutting contest in the air, whereas some of the sax-players burn each other out on the first two records. Diz sounds frail but unprepared to admit it.

Also, in brief:

(*) Dizzy Gillespie 1951–1952 Classics 1286. 3/51–2/52.
This mostly covers Dizzy's small-group recordings for his own Dee Gee label, perhaps the most disappointing period of his career.

 The Cool World / Dizzy Goes Hollywood Verve 531230-2. 9/63–4/64.
Mal Waldron's score for a Shirley Clarke film, plus the self-explanatory Hollywood: rather predigested.

 The Giant Emarcy 159734-2. 4/73.
With Griff, NHØP and an overpoweringly loud Kenny Clarke. Disappointing and droopy.

() Closer To The Source Atlantic 7567-80776-2. 84.
Either the industry failed to provide meaningful contexts for him or Dizzy was so road-weary he didn't want to record. Either way, this is a hopeless bit of softcore fusion, almost an insult to Gillespie.

Joe Gilman (born 1962)

PIANO

The Californian holds a chair in the Brubeck Institute at the University of the Pacific.

 Time Again: Brubeck Revisited – Volumes 1 & 2 Sunnyside SCCD 1129 / 1140 Gilman; Joe Sanders (b); Justin Brown (d). 5/03.
 View So Tender: Wonder Revisited – Volumes 1 & 2 Capri 74076 / 74086 As above. 6/04.
Given where he works, the first of these was inevitable and seems to have the composer's blessing. The two young sidemen actually played with Brubeck himself on one occasion and were much admired for their sympathetic accompaniment, so there seems no reason to think that this isn't a quality performance. The only issue is why one would listen to these performances rather than a set of Dave's own. The short answer is that little of Brubeck (except 'In Your Own Sweet Way') has made it into the repertory and it's quite refreshing to hear things like 'Recuerdo' and the very personal 'For Iola' (both on Volume 1) tackled by another piano-player, or 'Take Five' given a more resonantly lyrical performance than usual (on 2). Gilman has a nice, firm touch, and he doesn't sound much like the master, which is all to the good.

Stevie Wonder's music just about creeps into the repertory these days. 'Sir Duke' is a favourite for improvisers, and Gilman gives it due prominence on the first, but otherwise he pretty much avoids obvious fare, going for the most musical of Stevie's songs and getting inside their admittedly sophisticated structure with some insight. There's something more impressive than genuinely likeable about these records, but Gilman will appeal to jazz piano fans as a serious technician with a highly approachable style.

George Girard (1930–57)

TRUMPET, VOICE

New Orleans revivalist who enjoyed a short career.

 George Girard Storyville STCD 6013 Girard; Santo Pecora, Bob Havens (tb); Raymond Burke, Harry Shields (cl); Lester Bouchon (ts); Jeff Riddick (p, v); Bob Discon (p); Emil Christian, Chink Martin (b); Monk Hazel, Paul Edwards (d). 9/54–7/56.
Girard died young after contracting cancer. A fine player, he made his name in the Basin Street Six with Pete Fountain, but these recordings – one from the Municipal Auditorium in 1954, the other at the Parisian Room in 1956, months before his death – offer formidable evidence of a great, idiosyncratic New Orleans hornman, somewhat in the manner (if not the style) of Henry Allen. Girard's firm lead is countered by his unpredictable solos, which may suddenly flare up into wild high notes or stay in a sober middle range: he's hard to second-guess, even on warhorse material such as the tunes played at the 1956 session, which also has excellent work from Havens and Shields. The earlier date is marred by the recording, which is poorly balanced and muffled, and by the feeble tenor work of Bouchon; but Girard and Pecora are both very good: the trumpeter's brilliant solo on 'A Good Man Is Hard To Find' is a small masterpiece of controlled tension. The 1956 recordings are more than adequate, though George was battling terminal illness when they were made.

Javier Girotto (born 1965)

SOPRANO AND BARITONE SAXOPHONES

Argentinian, following in the footsteps of Gato Barbieri and working in Italy.

 Escenas Argentinas Cam Jazz 7766 Girotto; Alessandro Gwis (p); Marco Siniscalco (b); Michele Rabbia (perc). 04.
(*) New York Sessions Cam Jazz 7776 Girotto; Ed Simon (p); Ben Street (b); Jeff Ballard (d). 5/04.
Girotto certainly has other records out, but these are the most likely to be found. The homeland evocations of Escenas Argentinas are not so much nostalgic as marked by a strain of chastened anger, noticeable on both 'San Telmo Hora Cero' and more obviously on 'Av. Corrientes Y 9 De Julio'. This group is known as Aires Tango and that music is the most obvious influence. When he presents similar material with an American band, the results, intriguingly, are no less 'authentic', suggesting that the strength of these compositions carries them rather than specific performance. Girotto is a fine exponent of both his main horns and has his Andean flute on hand for additional colour. The American date doesn't get the higher rating simply because it's a better-known band, but because it seems like a more coherent and less driven performance.

Also, in brief:

 En Vivo: Live In Rome 2002 Cam Jazz 77532. 02.
A good trio date that somehow lacks shape.

Greg Gisbert (born 1966)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

He spent some years playing lead with Buddy Rich and Woody Herman; later freelanced in NY.

 Harcology Criss Cross Criss 1084 Gisbert; Chris Potter (ts, ss); John Campbell (p); Dwayne Burno (b); Gregory Hutchinson (d). 12/92.

 On Second Thought Criss Cross 1116 Gisbert; Steve Wilson (as); Chris Potter (ts); Peter Washington (b); Billy Drummond (d). 95.

 The Court Jester Criss Cross 1161 Gisbert; Conrad Herwig (tb); Jon Gordon (ss, as); Tim Ries (ss, ts, f); Janice Friedman (p); Jay Anderson (b); Gregory Hutchinson (d). 12/96.

The Criss Cross debut is a bright, unfussy date, strongly marked by the example and influence of Clark Terry, Thad Jones and Tom Harrell. He plays clean, uncomplicated lines in a frankly old-fashioned style. Over almost exactly an hour there is nothing that will frighten the horses, and nothing that is not resolutely tasteful and coherent. His big solos are on the title-piece (a solitary Gisbert original), Campbell's 'Turning Point' and the standard 'Autumn In New York'. For much of the remainder he is happy to sit back and let colleagues take front stage. A nice strong consolidation on the second album. Potter is once again a full sharer in proceedings, and his composition 'The Green Dress' is one of the highlights of the set. Gisbert's tone has lost some of its old-fashioned quality and now sounds resolutely contemporary. The closing sequence of Tyner's 'Effendi', Parker's 'Segment' and Monk's 'Played Twice' is particularly well judged. Gisbert solos with authority but doesn't outstay his welcome pontificating, preferring to keep his choruses fairly neat and tidy. The Court Jester is a trifle more ambitious than its predecessors, with the neatly orchestrated 'Robyn Song' getting it off to a coolly impressive start. Friedman is a strong presence, contributing a couple of originals, and the ensemble play is pretty much step-perfect, although again it's a set marked more by consistency than daring. Gisbert comes into his own on a clear-eyed treatment of 'My Ideal'.

Jimmy Giuffre (1921–2008)

CLARINET, TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, FLUTE, BASS FLUTE

Born in Dallas, he played in an army band and then worked with a series of West Coast big bands. Later, he formed the first of his folk-jazz trios, first with Jim Hall and Ralph Pena, then with Bob Brookmeyer; later, with Paul Bley and Steve Swallow, he took a more abstract route. Later years saw him concentrate on arranging and teaching, but in the late '80s his playing career revived.

 The Complete 1947–1953 Small Group Sessions Blue Moon 99951 4CD Giuffre; groups led by Red Norvo, Jesse Price, Shorty Rogers, Shelly Manne, Teddy Charles, Howard Rumsey, John Graas, Leith Stevens, Boots Brown. 47–53.

 Complete 1947–1952 Master Takes Definitive DRCD 11212 As above. 47–52.

These are the 'prentice years, when the 26-year-old was working as sideman, occasional composer and arranger, with a variety of West Coast bands. Like most such 'early years' recordings, there's an element of bad faith about the issue, since there is precious little identifiable Giuffre to be heard, though even the ensembles tell you something about the musician he was going to turn into. For the record, the set includes 'I'll Follow You' and 'Bop' with Red Norvo, two tunes with Jesse Price and his band, performances by Shorty Rogers And His Giants (including 'Four Mothers' and, from later, 'The Pesky Serpent'), the Shelly Manne Sextet ('Deep Purple' and 'The Princess Of Evil' among others), the Teddy Charles Quintet, Howard Rumsey and the Lighthouse All-Stars (familiar enough material), John Graas's Octet and arranger Leith Stevens's All Stars (less so), and some very un-Giuffre work with Boots Brown and his Blockbusters. Sixty-two tracks: a feast for anyone who enjoys the byways of West Coast music or who wants more detailed understanding of Jimmy's roots.

(*) New Forms In Jazz: Complete Capitol Recordings, 1954–1955 Fresh Sound Jazz City 2224 Giuffre; Jack Sheldon (t); Shorty Rogers (flhn); Bob Enevoldsen (vtb); Bud Shank (as); Russ Freeman (p); Curtis Counce, Ralph Pena (b); Artie Anton, Shelly Manne (d). 2/54–6/55.

(*) The Cool One Giant Steps 017 As above. 2/54–6/55.

Giuffre's first recordings as leader are an interesting mix of cool swing and some more abstract ideas. These compilations bring together Jimmy Giuffre with Tangents In Jazz, and Tangents with Four Brothers respectively, so there is both a substantial overlap but also some variation. 'Scintilla One/Two' are the most avant-garde things on either set, but only in the sense that they are difficult to categorize relative to anything else that was happening at the time. Giuffre's immense musical competence perhaps ultimately led him into more pragmatic situations, as both player and arranger, but here is the best possible evidence for a reassessment as a major composer.

Apart from 'I Only Have Eyes For You', 'This Is My Beloved' and 'Someone To Watch Over Me', all the cuts are originals and Giuffre has the ability to make quirky harmonic ideas sound accessible and entertaining rather than 'difficult'. There are some nice touches from the other horns, with Rogers in limpid form on flugelhorn, and the rhythm sections are pleasantly adventurous, with Manne in typically inventive form.

* The Jimmy Giuffre Clarinet Collectables COL 6162 Giuffre; Harry 'Sweets' Edison, Short Rogers, Jack Sheldon (t); Bob Cooper (ts, ob); Dave Pell (ts, eng hn); Buddy Collette (acl, f); Harry Klee (bcl, bf); Bud Shank (af); Jimmy Rowles (p, cel); Ralph Pena (b); Shelly Manne (d). 3/56.

(*) The Jimmy Giuffre 3 Atlantic 90981 Giuffre; Jim Hall (g); Jim Atlas, Ralph Pena (b). 12/56.

 The Original Trio Gambit 69201 As above. 12/56–57.

 The Jimmy Giuffre 3 / The Music Man Collectables COL 6248 As above. 12/56, 1/58.

(*) Hollywood & Newport, 1957–1958 Fresh Sound FSCD 1026 Giuffre; Bob Brookmeyer (vtb); Jim Hall (g); Ralph Pena (b). 1/57–10/58.

* Western Suite Warners 80777 As above, except omit Pena. 12/58.

Cultivating a brown chalumeau register on his clarinet and defending the aesthetic benefits of simple quietness, Giuffre created what he liked to call 'folk-jazz'. The Jimmy Giuffre Clarinet and The Music Man, recorded for Atlantic in the '50s, evoked a middle America which had hitherto played little part in jazz. Giuffre's soft meditations and homely foot-tapping on the earlier album suggested a man playing out on his front porch, sufficiently solitary and unselfconscious to forget the rules and try out unfamiliar tonalities.

Clarinet is a delightful experience. For a sample of Giuffre unaccompanied and in that mellifluous lower register, spin to 'So Low'. At the opposite extreme, there's a nonet track, the closing 'Down Home', which is so-so. In between, lots of unusual duos and trios, including a bandful of clarinets and a pairing with Rowles on celeste for 'Deep Purple'. 'The Side Pipers' is almost Third Stream in its flirtation with atonality, but there's also a stunning 'My Funny Valentine' which makes use of all those unusual woodwinds.

The Jimmy Giuffre 3 contains essential early material: a fine version of 'The Train And The River', on which Giuffre moves between baritone and tenor saxophones and clarinet; and the long 'Crawdad Suite', which combines blues and folk materials. Giuffre's out-of-tempo playing recalls the great jazz singers. Jim Hall was his longest-standing and most sympathetic confrère; they were partnered either by Brookmeyer or by a bassist, most successfully Pena or Clark (Atlas only plays on two bonus tracks on the Atlantic CD). The Collectables option adds the 1958 The Music Man featuring the nonet.

With Giuffre's early recordings now out of copyright, there is a confusing flurry of reissues. The Gambit set is essentially available elsewhere, though it includes some nice live things from Sounds Of Jazz and Stars Of Jazz: three versions of 'The Train And The River'! The sound is perfectly acceptable, but the packaging is dull.

The Giuffre–Brookmeyer–Hall trio appears behind the credits on the great movie Jazz On A Summer's Day, playing 'The Train And The River'. The Fresh Sound captures that whole set, together with earlier and later material from the West Coast, where this kind of jazz seemed to have a more natural home. Brookmeyer's slightly lazy, wall-eyed delivery was an ideal foil for Giuffre. He kept to the same end of the tonal spectrum and shared a love of easy tempos. Giuffre wrote Western Suite (a hybrid of cool jazz and Aaron Copland) with the group players in mind. It's a phenomenal piece of work, with Hall sounding almost rootsy and Brookmeyer often acting as the 'orchestral' accompaniment to the others, though taking strong lead lines of his own. The impact of the set is slightly diluted by the inclusion of two unnecessary 'bonus' tracks. However interesting it is to have 'Topsy' (which 'growed' to 11½ minutes) and 'Blue Monk', they're not essential here. The final movement, 'Big Pow Wow', is masterful. Hall is superb on it, low and almost threatening in places, while the two horns chaff and trade ideas.

 Live In 1960 Jazz Beat 503 Giuffre; Don Friedman (p); Jim Hall (g); Buell Neidlinger, Barre Phillips (b); Jimmy Osborne, Wilfred Middlebrooks (d). 2 & 8/60.
 Olympia 23 Février 1960–27 Février 1965 Laserlight 710586 As above, except omit Neidlinger, Osborne, Middlebrooks. 2/60, 2/65.
Much of Live In 1960 comes from the 23 February date, but there is some interesting stuff recorded at the Five Spot from later in the year with Neidlinger and Osborne and without the piano. The earlier set on Laserlight is all standards material, with a typically brilliant interpretation of 'Mack The Knife' and 'The Boy Next Door'. Friedman is prominent, though badly recorded. The familiar Giuffre trio format works superbly on Jimmy's own compositions and the closing version of Carla Bley's 'Ictus' is worth the price of the record, which makes the best of a very average source tape.

* 1961 ECM 849644-2 2CD Giuffre; Paul Bley (p); Steve Swallow (b). 3 & 8/61.
* Emphasis & Flight 1961 hatOLOGY 2-595 2CD As above. 11/61.
♛ * Free Fall Columbia CK 65446 As above. 62.
Giuffre's subsequent drummerless trios and cool, almost abstract tonality created nearly as much controversy as Gerry Mulligan's pianoless groups and probably with more reason. Nothing that had come along before quite prepares us for the astonishing work that Giuffre created with Paul Bley and Steve Swallow in two 1961 albums called Fusion (a term which hadn't yet taken on its '70s associations) and Thesis. Paired and remastered as 1961, they constitute ECM's first-ever reissue, still sounding 'modern' after 40 years. Herb Snitzer's session photographs are in deeply shadowed black-and-white. It's arguable that Giuffre's playing is equally monochrome and its basic orientation uncomfortably abstract; but it's also often driven by an urgent swing. Fusion is perhaps the more daring of the two sets, balancing starkly simple ideas, as on 'Jesus Maria' and 'Scootin' About', with some complex harmonic conceptions. Thesis is tighter and more fully realized, and tunes like 'Ictus' and 'Carla' have been an inexhaustible element of the pianist's concert improvisations ever since.

Free Fall is a trickier and more insidious sound altogether. A mixture of Giuffre solos with duos and trios, it catches the group late on in its brief initial history. Remarkable to think of Columbia taking on a project like this in 1962, but, whatever the exact intention of the title, it was clear that the studiousness and philosophical calm which overlaid the previous discs was no longer to be expected. What you're hearing is something that has almost run its course in practical terms but which creatively is far from exhausted. Swallow's fiery scrabbles and sharply plucked single-note runs lend the music a new momentum and the sort of energy to be found in free jazz. Bley may be the least comfortable of the three by this stage, but he has always been a restless experimenter and by 1962 his eye was probably on the next step. Giuffre often sounds as if he is in a world of his own, intensely focused, totally aware, but communicating ideas for which there was no ready-made language or critical rhetoric.

The live dates that make up Emphasis & Flight were recorded a couple of weeks apart in Stuttgart and Bremen. It's interesting to note near-identical durations for the repeated tracks 'Cry, Want', 'Sonic' and 'Stretching Out', though the Stuttgart version of 'Whirrr', which starts the set, is double the length of the Bremen take, which ends it. In each case, though, what's done with a theme varies dramatically. These are essential documents of modern jazz.

(*) The Train And The River Candid Choice CHCD 1011 Giuffre; Kiyoshi Tokunaga (b); Randy Kaye (perc). 4/75.
Giuffre throws himself 'lovingly' into the 'river' of this music (Herman Hesse is the man to blame) but does so without undue self-consciousness. Kicking off with 'The Train And The River' after so many years is an indication that he hasn't overthrown his folk-jazz loyalties. However, tunes like 'Elephant', 'Tibetan Sun', 'The Listening' and 'Om' which follow do suggest other dimensions. Increased use of flute and bass flute invests some of these tunes with a fugitive, misterioso quality. Tokunaga and Kaye have unusual playing backgrounds, but for the most part they are solid, responsive partners, completely in tune with what Giuffre is doing.

Also, in brief:

 Jimmy Giuffre /  Tangents In Jazz /  Four Brothers Membran 222970 / 222971 / 222972.
Nicely put together reissue of the original LPs. Great cover design.

 Trav'lin' Light / Merely Marvellous Collectables 6248. 1/58.
The Brookmeyer–Hall trio in folksy mood, but teamed with a Mabel Mercer album on this compilation.

 Night Dance Choice 71001. 11/71.
Originally entitled Music For People, Birds, Butterflies And Mosquitos, this is an impressionistic oddity, collaging dance miniatures.

 Quasar /  Liquid Dancers Soul Note 121108 / 121158. 5/85, 4/89.
Randy Kaye (d) was a loyal supporter during Giuffre's teaching years, and an ideal foil on these quartet dates.

() Eiffel / () River Station /  Momentum: Willisau, 1988 CELP C 6 / 26 / hatOLOGY 508. 11/87, 9/91.
Playing as an honoured elder in Europe, with Joe McPhee (tb on River) and André Jaume (ts, bcl).

 Fly Away Little Bird Owl 3504. 6/92.
The Giuffre–Bley (p)–Swallow (b) trio reconvened in 1992, still radical and free-flowing, though Jimmy's playing often sounded as uncertain as his health.

Rosario Giuliani (born 1967)

ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Poll-winning young talent who saw early action with Giovani Talenti Del Jazz Europa before striking out on his own.

 Luggage Dreyfus FDM 36618 Giuliani; Pietro Lussu (p); Pietro Ciancaglini (b); Lorenzo Tucci (d). 9/00.
(*) Mr. Dodo Dreyfus FDM 36636 Giuliani; Pietro Lussu (p); Dario Rosciglioni (b); Marcello Di Leonardo (d). 3/02.
 More Than Ever Dreyfus FDM 36669 Giuliani; Jean-Michael Pilc (p); Richard Galliano (acc); Rémi Vignolo (b); Benjamin Henocq (d). 4/04.
 Anything Else Dreyfus FDM 36698 Giuliani; Flavio Boltro (t); Dado Moroni (p); Rémi Vignolo (b); Benjamin Henocq (d).
Whoo! Though he had made a couple of earlier records back home in Italy, Giuliani exploded on the scene with Luggage, but without carrying any undue baggage from his influences. One of them is hinted at in Wayne Shorter's 'Oriental Folk Song', but while the angular attack and severe minimalism of line might come from Shorter, the rest of the sound emphatically does not. He kicks off with the fine title-track and then switches mood with a lovely reading of 'Portrait Of Jennie', another sure sign that this young man has listened deeply in the jazz literature rather than merely follow current trends. Wes Montgomery's 'Road Song' is the other surprise inclusion.

The second album prompted yet more head-scratching about Giuliani's models on the alto with everyone from Eric Dolphy to Charles MacPherson (both Mingus acolytes but with little else in common) getting a mention. Fact is, he emerged pretty fully formed and has already devised his own idiom, which is eclectic, slightly mysterious in tonality, and inherently dramatic. The follow-up album seemed to lose pace slightly, as sophomore dates often do, but there are imaginative things on it: Ornette's 'The Blessing' and Michel Petrucciani's 'Home'. No sign that these are included for the cachet of playing unusual material. Rosario gets right inside both of them.

The new band oozes with confidence on More Than Ever. The first quarter of an hour zings with energy – and a good deal of carefully marshalled abstraction – before Giuliani wheels on Galliano for two lovely compositions by the accordionist, a tribute to Astor Piazzolla and the equally effective 'J.F.'. Thus softened up, we're prepared for 'Suite Et Poursuite', a three-part idea that suggests the saxophonist's ambitions may take him in ever newer directions. The writing's certainly ambitious on Anything Else, and that means improvisation seems at something of a discount here; this must be a phenomenal group live, though that doesn't mean there's anything scamped or unachieved about these studio versions – quite the reverse. Ornette's 'Invisible' and a couple of Moroni numbers (tacked on at the end) are the only non-Giuliani pieces. The saxophonist seems to be working on long lines, perhaps an extension of things he's heard in Shorter's work, and on 'Conversation' he makes some fairly specific references to Shorter harmonics. It's great stuff, whatever the provenance, and with 'Danae' and 'Backfire' he's added two more potentially great blowing tunes to his armoury.

Frode Gjerstad

ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, CLARINET

Norwegian improviser who came to prominence with a John Stevens group in the '80s.

(*) Hello, Goodbye Emanem 4065 Gjerstad; Derek Bailey (g); John Stevens (t, perc). 10/92.
Gjerstad made a DAT recording of one of three gigs with Bailey and Stevens in Norway during the autumn of 1992. Although Stevens plays a full-size kit rather than his smaller one, the music still has the scuttling animation of intense chamber music. Gjerstad and Stevens work lightly and quickly, never upsetting any balance, while Bailey sounds more aggressive: he ends 'Three Two Three Two One' with one of the longest notes on record. An excellent survival.

(*) Seeing New York From The Ear Cadence CJR 1069 Gjerstad; William Parker (b); Rashid Bakr (d). 3/96.
 Ikosa Mura Cadence CJR 1089 Gjerstad; Bobby Bradford (t); Borah Bergman (p); Pheeroan akLaff (d). 9/97.
 Through The Woods CIMP 159 Gjerstad; Bobby Bradford (t); Wilber Morris (b); Newman Baker (d). 9/97.
 Ultima Cadence CJR 1108 Gjerstad; William Parker (b); Hamid Drake (d). 10/97.
 Remember To Forget Circulasione 199710 As above. 10/97.
 Borealis Cadence CJR 1091 Gjerstad; Didrik Ingvaldsen (t); Oyvind Torvund (g); Oyvind Storesund, John Lilja (b); Endre Landsnes, Paal Nilssen-Love (d). 2/98.
(*) Invisible Touch Cadence CJR 1099 Gjerstad; Peter Brötzmann (ts, cl, tarogato). 7/98.
Gjerstad will be remembered by British audiences for his work in the band Detail, with John Stevens and John Dyani, in the mid-'80s. After a quieter spell, he re-emerged with a flurry of recordings. Spending roughly equal time on alto and tenor (with some clarinet as well), he's a blustery, energy-filled improviser whose playing rarely makes a profound impact but whose ideas thrive on sheer momentum and intensity; he's carried exultantly along by a thunderous groove or a dense stew of voices. Seeing New York From The Ear is much like a vintage Jimmy Lyons performance, Gjerstad's alto borne aloft on Bakr's splendid tumult, with Parker's ferocious lines binding it together. It may be music in a familiar mould, but the playing has staunch self-belief and inventiveness.

The two quartet records with Bradford are something of a reunion, since the trumpeter had previously played with Detail. Ikosa Mura is at times so dense and clotted with sound that the music all but congeals. If there's a culprit, it's Bergman, who overplays; even so, the group often fuses into an exhilarating and rumbustious collective roar. The no-frills Through The Woods is very different; Bradford falls back on a kind of pattern-playing, but on this lighter stage his songful bent emerges. Morris and Baker create a softer, more scuffling rhythmic base. Lyrical moments such as the opening section of 'Frodiodi' are worth waiting for, but there's plenty of little consequence and Gjerstad is often the least impressive player.

Ultima is an hour-long festival set; Drake doesn't make the same impression as Bakr, so this comes in as an also-ran, though the playing still has its momentous passages. The other disc comes from the same tour and is worth having but is not a priority item; same reservations apply. Borealis is by Gjerstad's Norwegian crew, the Circulasione Totale Orchestra. Though a studio recording, it's thin and stringy in sonic terms, which mitigates the sense of 'the wind blowing from the north', and the squalls are diminished more than they might be. Nevertheless, a welcome change of pace from the other records, with Torvund's electric whine howling through the core.

The meeting with Brötzmann is from a club gig in Stavanger. Gjerstad is far from overawed by his great contemporary, and if anything is the more ferocious competitor, sticking to alto on this occasion. The final movements are rather peaceable, resolute and collaborative while still in the raw.

 The Blessing Light Cadence CJR 1126 Gjerstad; Oyvind Storesund (b); Paal Nilssen-Love. 9/00.
 St Louis FMR CD 122 As above. 9/00.
 Sharp Knives Cut Deeper Splasc(h) 850 As above, except add Peter Brötzmann (ts, cl, tarogato). 12/01.
Slimming the Circulasione Totale group down to three, the live three-part dedication to John Stevens, makes an interesting sequel, in a way, to the Emanem disc above. Nilssen-Love often follows the fundamentalist paths suggested by Stevens, and Gjerstad builds on the deferential alto style of the earlier date with a more forceful and expressionist bent – the final part digs in very hard. He plays some clarinet, too, though this is less impressive. Some occasional dryness takes a bit of the edge off the record's impact. St Louis comes from the same period; not quite as strongly done, perhaps.

The follow-up disc benefits immeasurably from Brötz's rugged presence. As well as throwing down his usual gauntlet, the guest turns in some passages of real beauty, reminiscent (as is the album title) of his FMP masterpieces of the '70s. Gjerstad raises his game in response, but for once the remaining members of the trio seem lacklustre.

(*) The Welsh Chapel Cadence Jazz CJR1 161 Gjerstad; John Edwards (b); Mark Sanders (d). 8/02.
The London rhythm section offers Gjerstad a whole new range of possibilities. Where Nilssen-Love is a Stevens soundalike, Sanders is a busy, intricate drummer, while Edwards matches the energy of a funkster with a brilliant grasp of line and harmonics. The chemistry makes for one of Gjerstad's most impressive performances on record: keening, intense, still full of grief for the vanished Stevens, but affirmative, too.

(*) May Day FMR CD 144 Gjerstad; Paul Hession (d). 5/03.
(*) Live At The Termite Club Loose Torque LT 009 As above, except add Nick Stephens (b). 9/03.
The rating is as much for the percussionist, who is in spanking form on these and in some respects leads the way musically. Gjerstad has got so used to duo performance that he does sometimes get lost in private conversation with his partners. Here, though, he's open and responsive, a public interlocutor rather than a secret inquisitor. That's evident, too, on the Leeds date, released on Stephens's own label. The set consists of two large improvisations, with a smaller one interposed. One can hear Gjerstand negotiating a space in the music, much more democratically than on some of his other recordings. It's a fruitful direction.

* No Definitive FMR CD150 Gjerstad; Kevin Norton (vib). N.D.
They know how to record percussion at FMR and this (undated, but presumably recent) encounter with America's most inventive drummer/vibist is a perfect illustration. Norton and Gjerstad don't immediately find common ground on the first of these mostly quite short improvs, but by the middle of the set they've devised a modus operandi sufficient to deliver two quarter-hour performances that a generation ago would have been enough for a riveting LP. The shorter things have character but they're add-ons.

(*) The Shortest Night FMR CD 155 Gjerstad; Nils Henrik Asheim (org). 6/04.
Recorded in the Vardnesetkirke on midsummer night, this is another glorious performance from the saxophonist, who sounds exalted and fiercely concentrated by turns. Improvising with an organist presents all manner of technical difficulties, but brass-players have been doing it for centuries and Gjerstad seems to determine his own solutions as the programme advances. Lovely sound, atmospheric and rich.

Also, in brief:

 Nearly A D Emanem 4087. 8/02.
Gjerstad hadn't worked with Derek Bailey for a decade when he rolled up at the guitarist's London flat to record this cheerfully informal, bantering session.

 TOU FMR CD 110. 11/02.
Duos with electronics man Lasse Marhaug at the old Stavanger brewery. Fizzy.

 Good Question FMR CD 175. 04.
Paired with Sabir Mateen (sax) in one of the least impressive of his duo recordings.

Don Glanden

PIANO

A protégé of Kenny Barron, and a fine mainstream player, who also works as division head of jazz studies at the University of the Arts, Philadelphia.

 Sudden Life Encounter EAR 1019 Glanden; Larry McKenna (ts); Kevin MacConnell (b); Jim Miller (d). N.D.
(*) Only Believe Cadence CJR 1093 Glanden; Ernie Watts (ts); Tom Lawton (p); Tom Giacabetti (g); Ken Filiano, Paul Klinefelter, Kevin MacConnell (d); Fred Biondi, Tom Palmer (d). 2/95–4/97.
Glanden isn't the kind of player to set the world alight, but he has a fine, liquid touch and his chordal playing is a consistent delight. Sudden Life is distinguished by the presence of McKenna, something of a local legend in Philly, though not so well-known further afield and significantly under-recorded. 'April Showers' is the keynote track, bookending a set of mostly original themes that highlight Glanden's skills as a composer of intricate but accessible melodies.

The other disc both gains in substance and loses a certain consistency by using a variety of line-ups. Perhaps expectedly, the best of them are those that feature Watts, who fires off an excellent solo on the opening 'Inception', and again on 'Only Believe'. The former track also underlines how valuable an accompanist MacConnell is. There are three solo tracks, a set of miniatures headed 'Points Of View', which seem like exercises rather than finished compositions, a notably thoughtful 'Misty' and the closing 'Angel Eyes', which has Debussy touches in the intro.

Glanden is also joined by Lawton for a duo on 'Homage To Bernard Peiffer'. The rest are trios, with Filiano and Klinefelter, Biondi and Palmer sharing duties in different combinations. The spread of dates suggests that this isn't an artist who's interested in throwing together a set just in order to get a record out. The abiding impression is measured attention to detail; not the most exciting quality, but rare enough to be agreeable when it turns up.

Glasgow Improvisers Orchestra

ENSEMBLE

Improv collective, exploring high-profile collaborations.

(*) With Evan Parker: Munich And Glasgow FMR 139 Robert Henderson (t); Matthew Cairns (c); Richard Craig, Emma Roche, Matthew Studdert-Kennedy (f); Daniel Padden (cl, perc); Christoph Reiserer (ss); Peter Dowling (as); Raymond MacDonald (ss, as); Evan Parker (ss, ts); Kenneth Broom, Graeme Wilson (ts); Nick Fells (shakuhachi); Giles Lamb (p); George Burt, Tom Crossley, Neil Davidson (g); Peter Nicholson (clo); George Lyle, Una MacGlone (b); Stuart Brown, Alexander Neilson (d). 04.

* Which Way Did He Go FMR CD 158 As above, except omit Parker, Reiserer, Craig, Crossley; add John Burgess (ts, bcl); Maggie Nicols (v). 05.

(*) Falkirk FMR CD 168 As above, except add Barry Guy (b); Maya Homburger (baroque vn). 10/05.

GIO's strike-rate for ambitious collaborations is already second to none, with strong projects involving Evan Parker, Barry Guy, Maggie Nicols, Harry Beckett, Keith Tippett, Keith Rowe and Günter Sommer already notched up. The ensemble's basic procedures vary from entirely open-form pieces to workshopped ideas realized in performance to conduction pieces led by straw-boss Raymond MacDonald. The record with Parker is vividly different from the run of large-scale improvisations. There's considerable detail in the sound, rather than the usual muddied roar, and instrumentalists as vivid and exceptional as Burt and Padden make their presence felt without disrupting the collective language. Parker is foregrounded to some degree but also responsive to the ensemble and plays in a manner closer to his recent electro-acoustic projects than to the virtuosic solo work.

Maggie Nicols is a superb improviser. Her language ranges from homely mutters to huge bel canto swoops, raw, almost toneless sounds to chirps and whistles. Her Scots accent sounds undimmed by most of a lifetime in the south and she brings a rare, dry humour to improv, as well as moments of deep and believable pathos.

The encounter with Guy was centred on work from his Witch Gong Game, a piece inspired by the work of painter and jazz musician Alan Davie, who was born in Grangemouth, not far from Callender House, Falkirk, where the workshops were held and the piece recorded. It's another confidently conceived and elegantly executed collaboration. GIO deliver consistently, even on record, which is a rare measure of quality in large-scale improv of this kind.

Robert Glasper

PIANO

A native of Houston, Texas, and briskly out of the starting gate on a promising recording career.

 Mood Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 153 Glasper; Bob Hurst (b); John Ellis, Marcus Strickland (ts); Mike Moreno (g); Damion Reed (d); Bilal (v). 02.

* Canvas Blue Note 77130 Glasper; Mark Turner (ts); Vincente Archer (b); Damion Reed (d); Bilal (v). 5/05.

(*) In My Element Blue Note 78111 As above, except omit Turner, Bilal; add Rev. Joe Ratliff (v). 9–11/06.

It's encouraging to find Blue Note still signing artists like Robert Glasper. Canvas is a fine record, basically an orthodox, but by no means dull, piano trio with some guest spots. Glasper has a close, at moments almost uncanny understanding with Archer and Reid that allows the group to move efficiently, sometimes startlingly, as on the well-named 'Rise And Shine', but above all as a unit. Archer often takes a strong initiative and pulls the line away from the piano; Reed responds in kind, giving the whole a centrifugal – or just plain fugal – character that is highly appealing. The title-track has a rich palette as well but the surprises come later, in the tiny 'Centelude' and on 'Chant', where Bilal's wordless vocalizing serves as a horn part. Turner also thickens up the mix, but while the variety is welcome, there's nothing wrong with what Glasper and his two stalwarts are doing. The only non-original is Herbie Hancock's 'Riot'.

Canvas pretty much follows the pattern laid down by the debut disc. 'Maiden Voyage' kicks off Mood, which probably suggests an influence, but then it ends with 'Pannonica', but without much Monk in the equation. The originals aren't quite as forthright as on the second record, but sometimes the mix doesn't help carry through their subtleties; the sound is a bit thick and clotted.

The Hancock theme reappears on In My Element, medleyed with 'Everything In Its Right Place'. It's the turning-point of the record, though not for the better, following as it does a string of strong, if relatively conventional originals and an excellent reading of Sam Rivers's 'Beatrice'. The gospel-tinged 'Y'Outta Praise Him', with its long intro, stands out clear of the rest. Thereafter, though, there are more eccentric touches, an answering service message on 'Silly Rabbit' and a sample from his mother's funeral eulogy on 'Tribute'. Neither adds anything and merely points to flagging invention.

Dave Glasser

ALTO SAXOPHONE

An unreconstructed bebopper who's worked successfully with Clark Terry.

 Begin Again Chiaroscuro 373 Glasser; Tardo Hammer (p); Lee Hudson (b); Tony Jefferson (d). 6/03.

(*) Above The Clouds Arbors ARCD 19337 Glasser; Larry Ham (p); Dennis Irwin (b); Carl Allen (d). 2/06.

Though he plays bop repertoire, he hardly sounds like the usual Bird or Jackie copyist, with a nerve-tingling tone and restless line in improvisation. Hammer to some extent keeps things on course on the first of these – earlier records have gone – but it's Dave's approach to a theme like 'Salt Peanuts' one wants to hear, so normalizing chords aren't always the point. The second disc marks a step forward in terms of group sound, though neither of these quite matches up to the Artemis release Dreams Askew, Dreams Anew, which was the best of his records so far.

Hans Glawischnig

DOUBLE BASS

Part of the community of young players working in New York's contemporary clubland, the Austrian-born bassist has taken plenty of sideman gigs and makes his leadership debut here.

 Common Ground Fresh Sound FSNT 162 Glawischnig; Miguel Zenon (as); David Sanchez, Donnie McCaslin (ts); Luis Perdomo (p); Dan Weiss (d). 4/01.

(*) Panorama Sunnyside 281179 Glawischnig; David Binney, Miguel Zenon (as); Rich Perry (ts); Chick Corea, Luis Perdomo (p); Ben Monder (g); Marcus Gilmore, Antonio Sanchez (d). 11/06.

The one-two punch of saxophonists Sanchez and Zenon on the opening 'Windy City' gets this off to a great start, but thereafter Glawischnig uses only one horn on each track and the excitement recedes. It's an enjoyable set of contemporary post-bop which the leader does his best to characterize via eight originals, a respectable if finally unmemorable lot. The sequel is stronger. The two-horn formula is revived to good effect, Perdomo is revealed as a fine comper and soloist, and when he cedes his chair to Corea for a couple of trio numbers ('Oceanography' – aka 'How Deep Is The Ocean' – and the title-piece), Glawischnig's unexpected Latin vision is firmly clinched. 'Barretto's Way' – the percussionist is a former boss – and 'Rabbit Race' bring an excellent album to a tempting conclusion.

Tyree Glenn (1912–74)

TROMBONE, VIBES

The Texan worked for Cab Calloway 1940–46, then with Ellington and latterly with the Louis Armstrong All-Stars. Based in Europe for a time.

 Tyree Glenn 1947–1952 Classics 1420 Glenn; Peanuts Holland (t); Nat Peck (tb); Johnny Hodges, Hubert Rostaing (as); Don Byas (ts); Harry Carney (bs); Åke Hasselgård , Jimmy Hamilton (cl); Hank Jones, Charles Norman, Billy Strayhorn, Thore Swanerud, Billy Taylor (p); Bill Doggett (org); Sten Carlberg, Jerome Darr, Jean-Jacques Tilché (g); Jean Bouchety, Simon Brehm, Milt Hinton, Wendell Marshall (b); Anders Burman, Sonny Greer, Jo Jones (d). 1/47–52.

Glenn started recording on his own account for Blue Star in Paris, easy bop discs with a warm and enveloping sound and with Byas in excellent heart. Glenn and the saxophonist recorded further sides in the Netherlands the following year, another four-horn front line, though with Peck in for the alto saxophonist. Glenn shows his facility on the vibes with 'My Melancholy Baby', but it's the interpretation of Dvořák's 'Humoresque' that takes the prizes. Subsequently, Glenn recorded in Sweden with the Brehm Kvintett, then back in America in the spring of 1949 with Strayhorn and a group of Ellingtonians. Finally here, at the start of the new decade, some sides with organist Doggett and a piano-led small group with Jones. It doesn't add up to a paradigm-shifting body of work, but one wonders why these sides aren't better. Glenn's a fluid technician and has more to say than what's to be read off a section-chart. Plaudits to Classics for making him better known.

Globe Unity Orchestra

GROUP

Formed in 1966 by Alex von Schlippenbach to perform his 'Globe Unity' composition, a pan-European group with occasional American recruitments.

* Globe Unity 67 & 70 Atavistic Unheard Music Series 223 Manfred Schoof (c, t, flhn); Kenny Wheeler (t, flhn); Jürg Grau , Claude Deron, Tomasz Stańko , Bernard Vitet (t); Paul Rutherford (tb, thn); Jiggs Wigham, Albert Mangelsdorff, Malcolm Griffiths (tb); Kris Wanders (as, bcl); Gerd Dudek (ts, ss, cl, f); Evan Parker (ts, ss); Michel Pilz (ss, bcl, f); Peter Brötzmann (ts, as, bs); Heinz Sauer (bs, ts, as); Willem Breuker (bs, cl); Alexander von Schlippenbach (p, perc); Karl Berger (vib); Derek Bailey (g); Willy Lietzmann (tba); Buschi Niebergall (b, btb); Peter Kowald (b, tba); Han Bennink (d, perc, shellhorn); Jaki Liebezeit, Mani Neumeier, Sven-Åke Johansson , Paul Lovens (d). 10/67–11/70.

(*) Hamburg '74 Atavistic Unheard Music UMS/ALP248 Kenny Wheeler, Manfred Schoof (t); Günter Christmann , Paul Rutherford (tb); Peter Brötzmann , Rüdiger Carl , Evan Parker, Michel Pilz (reeds); Alexander von Schlippenbach (g); Derek Bailey (g); Peter Kowald (b, tba); Han Bennink, Paul Lovens (d, perc); choir of NDR-Broadcast. 11/74.

(*) Rumbling FMP CD 40 Manfred Schoof, Kenny Wheeler (t); Günter Christmann , Paul Rutherford (tb); Peter Brötzmann , Rüdiger Carl , Gerd Dudek, Evan Parker, Michel Pilz (reeds); Alexander von Schlippenbach (p); Derek Bailey (g); Peter Kowald (b, tba); Han Bennink (d, perc, cl); Paul Lovens (d). 3/75.

* 20th Anniversary FMP CD 45 Kenny Wheeler (t); Paul Rutherford, Albert Mangelsdorff (tb); Evan Parker (ss, ts); Steve Lacy (ss); Gerd Dudek (bs, bcl, f); Alexander von Schlippenbach (p); Peter Kowald (b); Paul Lovens (d). 11/86.

* Globe Unity Orchestra 2002 Intakt 086 Manfred Schoof (t, flhn); Paul Rutherford, Hannes Bauer (tb); Ernst-Ludwig Petrowsky (as, cl, f); Peter Brötzmann (ts, cl, tarogato); Evan Parker (ss, ts); Alexander von Schlippenbach (p); Paul Lovens, Paul Lytton (d). 1/02.

(*) Globe Unity – 40 Years Intakt CD 133 As above, except omit Brötzmann; add Axel Dörner (t); Jean Luc Capozzo (t, flhn); Jeb Bishop, George Lewis (tb); Gerd Dudek (ss, ts, cl, f); Rudi Mahall (bcl). 11/06.

Formed in 1966, the Globe Unity Orchestra has sustained itself with rare concerts and even rarer records. Although there has been a revolving cast of players throughout the group's existence, a few hardy spirits act as points of reference. What a great find 67/70 is, two sets by huge editions of the Orchestra, one from Donaueschingen, the other from Berlin, both recorded by German radio. 'Globe Unity 67', which runs for 34 minutes, is one of the most pandemonious pieces of free music we can recall hearing, the 19-strong group making a magnificent racket which scarcely lets up – and which, on careful listening, revolves around a relatively harmonious structure. The 1970 performance seems tamer in comparison, yet in formal terms this is the more freewheeling and radical piece. The 1974 material is a fascinating recovery that helps to fill in this classic period. Consisting of two long improvisations, of which the shorter 'Kontraste Und Synthesen' is the better, it's a trimmer ensemble again, though the additional voices make a striking contribution. The Rumbling CD is again by a contingent from the orchestra. There is Monk's 'Evidence', a march by Misha Mengelberg and a tune by Lacy, while 'Into The Valley' is a nearly continuous 38-minute piece:

solo and duet passages between the horns leading to thunderous all-in tussles.

To celebrate its 20th anniversary, the Orchestra held a Berlin concert. While a shade below their 1977 masterpiece, Pearls, this is still a vivid, bristling assemblage of ideas and individual spontaneities: Schlippenbach's hand is on the tiller, but each man asserts his individual mastery in his personal way.

Intensely vivid, yet at the same time ghostly and poignant, the 2002 performance makes a hard listen. The Orchestra had not convened for 15 years but came together in Aachen as a memorial for a dedicated fan, Robert Wenseler. Time has wrought changes on GUO, as with everything else: reduced to only nine members, with spirits such as Niebergall and Kowald gone in the interim, there is a palpable sense of raging against the dying of the light. When playing at full tilt, it seems barely credible that only nine men are responsible for this superb cacophony. Distinctions between the players have become more specific and cogent: the lilting, lyrical sound of Schoof against the fuming uproar of Brötzmann, the unfathomable strangeness of Rutherford next to the simple melodies essayed by Bauer. As the world has grown smaller and even less likely to achieve unity, in its queer way the GUO has become an ever more truthful depiction of an idea whose time may never come. If the recording has some shortcomings – what engineer could ever capture an unblemished picture? – they hardly detract from a deeply moving, uplifting experience.

The 40th-anniversary celebration – astonishing in itself that an orchestra convened on these radical principles can have such longevity – is both familiar and subtly changed. The arrival of Dörner adds a striking new sonority and the two American trombonists, Lewis and his rising heir Bishop, powerfully strengthen the brasses. The absence of Brötzmann is immediately noted. And yet the sense of musical adventure in the moment, of a collective expedition into the aural unknown, is still there and still affirmative.

Michel Godard (born 1960)

TUBA, SERPENT

A deep background in many musics, with experience in the Orchestre National de France and Pierre Boulez's Ensemble Intercontemporain as well as many jazz situations.

(*) Tuba Tuba Enja 9148 Godard; Dave Bargeron (tba, sackbut); Luciano Biondini (acc); Kenwood Dennard (d). 03.

 Cousins Germains Camjazz 7770 2 Godard; Herbert Joos (t); Wolfgang Puschnig (as, f); Christof Lauer (ss, ts); Franck Tortiller (vib, mar); Wolfgang Reisinger (d). 05.

(*) Deep Intuition INT 3415 Godard; Gavino Murgia (ss, v); Walter Quintus (fx). 10/07.

And the winner of the Down Beat serpent category … Godard is no novelty musician, however. Like his movie namesake, he has a dark and brooding vision, overlaid with humour and expressed in the most virtuosic way on both his horns. The decimation of the Enja catalogue means some of his best work is unavailable, but the more recent Tuba Tuba is certainly around. Godard and Bargeron worked together on Rabih Abou-Khalil's The Cactus Of Knowledge and discovered considerable common ground, which is exploited here. Bargeron's R&B sensibility and Godard's more classical side work together surprisingly well and one suspects the other two simply hang on and go along for the ride.

The 2005 band was astonishing live and almost as powerful on record. The sound more than anything recalls some lost Mingus group, filtered through a European/classical lens. There are classical touches, as on 'Visite', but when the group starts to groove, as they do on 'Nutty's Cousin' with Tortiller and Lauer, there's a dirty intensity that belies the instrumentation and the superficial character of each player. Godard is necessarily less prominent here than on some of his projects, though on 'Sur L'Echelle Des Sphères', with Puschnig's flute and Joos's breathy flugelhorn behind, he shows again just how flexible and expressive an instrument the big tuba is.

In lower-case, Deep reads like a palindrome, and one is tempted to search each of the 11 alternately credited tracks for some internal key and code that might unlock their structure. In reality, they're more straightforwardly songful than that, and Quintus – a genius at the desk – provides a wonderful sound for the two wind-players. Even so, one's left at the end feeling curiously unsatisfied, as if an obscure point has been made, but not openly revealed.

Also, in brief:

 Sous Les Voûtes, Le Serpent /  Le Chant Du Serpent M.A. 482 / La Lichere 37. 6/89.

The first is similar to 1995's Loose Wires, with contributions from Linda Bsiri (v) and Mark Nauseef (perc), so Godard is on sure and familiar ground. The other explores the amazing woody tonality of his second horn.

Victor Goines (born 1961)

SAXOPHONES, CLARINETS

One of a New Orleans generation mentored by Ellis Marsalis, he's often found on Marsalis and similarly traditionalist dates.

(*) New Adventures Criss Cross 1274 Goines; Peter Martin (p); Carlos Henriquez (b); Greg Hutchinson (d). 5/05.

(*) Love Dance Criss Cross 1291 As above, except omit Henriquez; add Reuben Rodgers (b). 1/07.

The earlier discs on Rosemary Joseph Records are now quite hard to find. The superior punch and impact of the Criss Cross studio sound immediately puts them in the shade, and this is a good comeback for Goines. If the set-list suggests that he doesn't find it easy as a writer – of six originals, three at least are remakes from the earlier albums – the quartet get inside the skin of the music, and Goines sounds happier and more fluent than before. He's not a glib player – the superfast pace of the new treatment of 'Stop 'N' Go' nearly trips him up at times – but he sounds assured and convincing. It's also a pleasure to hear the clarinet on a Criss Cross session, and it's delightful on both 'Pres' New Clarinet', set to a New Orleans-lite groove, and 'Petite Fleur'. Martin is exemplary again, and Henriquez and Hutchinson add metropolitan muscle.

The new one has more authority and confidence, but a certain loss of freshness, and you sense that these themes aren't as securely written or played in as before. Noticeably, he puts the covers up top, with the exception of Parker's 'Confirmation', which is a nice change of pace in the latter half of the set. Beautifully played, but just lacking a sprinkle of magic.

Harry Gold (1907–2005)

BASS AND TENOR SAXOPHONES

Born in Dublin, raised in the East End of London and thereafter a fixture with his Pieces Of Eight. He bought his first bass horn from Adrian Rollini.

 Bouncing Back Lake LACD 225 Gold; Nick Stevenson (t); Derek Wadsworth (tb); Ron Findon (cl, ts, v); Randy Colville (cl); Austin Malcolm, Jack Honeybourne (p); Gerry Ingram (b); Stan Daly, Mickey Brooks (d). 88, 91.

Gold heard the Original Dixieland Jazz Band on their post-(First World) war visit to London and was hooked. London fans came to know him as a fond presence, in later years perched on a stool to accommodate the height of his favoured horn, on which he had a remarkably nimble sound. The Pieces Of Eight band was formed in the '30s, while he was working with Oscar Rabin's dance band, and enjoyed extraordinary longevity, playing a mixture of hot dance music and surprisingly tough swing. Taken from two dates in 1988 and 1991 (just three tracks), this posthumous release catches Harry in typical form on things like 'Since My Best Gal Turned Me Down' and 'Birth Of The Blues'. Harry was still touring in his 90s.

Also, in brief:

 Live In Leipzig Lake LACD 3. 00.

A bread-and-butter gig among one of British trad and swing's most reliable demographics.

Ben Goldberg (born 1959)

CLARINET, BASS CLARINET

Denver-raised, California-educated, NY-based, klezmer-loving improviser.

(*) Eight Phrases For Jefferson Rubin Victo 057 Goldberg; Larry Ochs (sno, ts); John Schott (g); Trevor Dunn, Lisle Ellis (b); Michael Sarin (d). 11/96.

Goldberg is an experienced voice in and out of jazz. He plays somewhat proper clarinet, unwilling to make much out of tonal adventures. Eight Phrases For Jefferson Rubin, in dedication to a childhood friend killed in an accident, is his most personal and effective record. Some of the 'phrases' are rather ponderously long, such as 'Plain Of Jars', but the intriguing instrumentation and pensive, slightly ominous feel of the music are surprisingly powerful, often recalling the feel of Dave Holland's Conference Of The Birds. Goldberg often defers to his fellow players, and the result is a democratic but powerfully realized group record of some moment.

* Almost Never Nuscope 1007 Goldberg; John Schott (g); Trevor Dunn (b). 4/99.

Some reviewers commented on the oddity of the instrumentation. Had they never heard of Jimmy Giuffre? Goldberg doesn't necessarily work in quite that tradition – he's less abstract and less folkish – but the precedent is there and on 'Secret Longway' the comparison seems very apt indeed. It follows the curious 'Pitchblend', which has less to do with fissile materials than with establishing a language of gently warped tonalities and unsuspected timbres. Nothing else surprises quite so much as these, though the rest just gets better and better.

* The Door, The Hat, The Chair, The Fact Cryptogramophone 126 Goldberg; Devin Hoff (b); Carla Kihlstedt (vn); Rob Sudduth (ts); Ches Smith (d). 04.

After 2000, Goldberg seemed to look around and take stock. His return comes freighted with emotion following the death of his inspiration, Steve Lacy. The great man's personality is woven through these mournfully effervescent tracks. The most explicit tribute is Lacy's own 'Blinks', which then informs much of the writing. The playing is outwardly chaotic, with the three leads vying for space, as if explicitly rejecting the usual round of choruses and fours. This seems to be the album's subtext. There is 'Cortège', but there is also 'Song And Dance', though not in the expected order. It's a record full of complex messages and stunning play. Hoff and Smith create an intricate web of rhythm patterns, leaving the front three, with Kihlstedt doubling on vocals, to create a rich, ambiguous drama.

Also, in brief:

 Here By Now Music & Arts 1004. 3/96.

Unelaborate delivery of Goldberg themes by his trio: Trevor Dunn (b), Elliot Humberto Kavee (d).

 Twelve Minor Avant 35. 3/97.

Rather abstract exercises, including a tour de force on contra-alto clarinet.

Larry Goldings (born 1968)

ORGAN, PIANO, HARMONIUM, ACCORDION, GLOCKENSPIEL

Born in Massachusetts, he established a presence on the NY scene in the early '90s, working with John Scofield and others. A Hammond specialist who also returned to piano now and then.

() Moonbird / () As One / (*) Sweet Science Palmetto PM 2045 / 2068 / 2084 Goldings; Peter Bernstein (g); Bill Stewart (d). 2/99; 5/00; 2/02.

These records sit comfortably in the genre, but are clearly the work of a musician who's moved on some way from the classic Smith–McDuff–McGriff axis, and the trio has developed into a group of high if self-effacing skill. With earlier discs in limbo, these make an excellent introduction to the trio's approach. Goldings doesn't want a jam band, and he's always looking for a melodious, even a mellifluous result: even the up-tempo originals, such as 'Mixed Message' and 'Going To Meet The Man' on As One, have an innate delicacy to them, as if Goldings were unconvinced by the static histrionics of many organ band records. On the first record, Joni Mitchell's 'Woodstock' is given a long, brooding, slightly mysterious performance, with Stewart's small cymbals playing a cowbell-like role. Bernstein and Goldings treat each session as an almost continuous dialogue, melodically and harmonically, while Stewart – another player who can make an urgent delivery into something deft and light – is very, very good. No change, really, with Sweet Science – same almost pure organ/guitar/drums trinity, same smart pacing, comparable bag of clever and persuasive originals. If none of the records leaps out as a classic, maybe that's just not their style – they'd rather you just came along for the ride, in good-natured appreciation.

(*) Quartet Palmetto PM 2115 Goldings; John Sneider (c, t); Ben Allison (b); Matt Wilson (d); Madeleine Peyroux (v). 05.

A departure, of sorts. The new band features an interesting musician in Sneider, a puckish, unpredictable player whose clean playing masks a thoughtful interaction with the music. Goldings brings in several other keyboards to add to the organ and there are a couple of Monk and Abdullah Ibrahim themes as well as some pieces that seem to have developed out of group improvisations. Goldings played on Madeleine Peyroux's hit album, and she returns the favour with a cameo on 'St Louis Blues'.

John Goldsby

DOUBLE BASS

Born in Kentucky, he came to the bass quite late but made a name for himself performing Pettiford recitals. Author of two books on his instrument, he's now based (!) in Europe.

 Viewpoint Nagel Heyer 2014 Goldsby; John Marshall (t, flhn); Olivier Peters (ss, ts); Hayden Chisholm (as); Frank Chastenier (p); Hans Dekker (d). 12/00.

A trio version of Pettiford's 'Bohemia After Dark' points to Goldsby's strongest single influence. Since relocating to Europe, though, the bassist seems to have worked out a new, if not exactly earth-shaking, idiom which cuts off the ties with classic bop and hard bop. Credit for this must go to his mostly European colleagues, who steer the set in some interesting directions. Chisholm is a revelation and Chastenier has an ability to give familiar chords an unusual colouration. A lively improvement on John's now deleted Concord debut.

Per Goldschmidt

BARITONE AND TENOR SAXOPHONES

Danish saxophonist with international experience.

 Frankly Milestone MCD-9224-2 Goldschmidt; Tom Harrell (t, flhn), Niels Lan Doky (p); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b), Alvin Queen (d). 12/93.

(*) Loneliness Stunt STUCD 0042 Goldschmidt; Carsten Dahl (p); Thomas Ovesen (b); Frands Rifbjerg (d). 10–12/99.

Goldschmidt is no romantic fool. He loves the baritone's weight and impact and makes few concessions to its size. Even on ballads he prefers to take a terser line than Mulligan or Chaloff ever would. Structurally, he's a hard-bopper who can't abide the clichés of the genre. Unfortunately, there's not much available at present. Lan Doky produces the Milestone session, which sounds terrific: 'Theme For Eve', for baritone, bass and drums only, is exquisitely modulated, and Goldschmidt plays with extra swagger and resilience on the uptempo tracks. But the concept – playing songs associated with Frank Sinatra – seems intended to tame the leader's most adventurous side, and Harrell, though dependable, is a notch below his best. The Stunt album marks a comeback after an illness, and Goldschmidt seems to have lost some of his old fire, even if this is an all-ballad programme. On tenor, a first return for many years, he sounds quavery, and even the baritone features have lost some of their vigour. Yet the leader makes no concessions to sentimentality, and there's a leathery poignancy about the music.

Gil Goldstein (born 1950)

PIANO, KEYBOARDS, ACCORDION

Started out as an accordion-player and still gets it out on occasion. A respected arranger and orchestrator, but his own work has been perhaps too various to establish a recognizable 'style'.

 Under Rousseau's Moon Half Note 4527 Goldstein; Randy Brecker (t); Chris Potter (ts, bcl); Mike Mainieri (vib); Richard Bona (b, v); Don Alias (perc); Zebra Coast String Trio. 1/06.

Earlier Goldstein records, including City Of Dreams for Blue Note and the rather better Zebra Coast for Capitol/World Pacific, were disappointingly vapid for a player of his obvious talents. Until the release of this live date, his jazz sessions as small-group leader have mostly only been issued in Japan, where he has a sizeable following. The title refers to the Douanier rather than Jean-Jacques Rousseau and the famous picture of the lion sniffing a sleeping Egyptian is on the cover. Thematically, it seems to lend a certain moonstruck atmosphere to the date, which begins with Robbie Robertson's 'The Moon Struck One' and concludes with 'The Camel's Lament', 'Moondreams' and Bona's 'Suninga'. The bassist, something of a star in his own right, is the set's main liability. He doesn't swing, and when he's expected to play Jaco Pastorius material, four tracks in all, the shortcomings are unfortunately revealing. There's an awkward mix of bebop material – 'Donna Lee', wrongly attributed to Charlie Parker, and 'Boplicity' – with more contemporary styles. It doesn't quite come off, though Goldstein himself seems to make the switch with ease. One senses Brecker's frustration here and there. He seems to want to cut loose from the ensembles but needs stronger accompaniment than he gets in the solos. If this all sounds negative, it's still a bold release, with convincing live atmosphere, nice integration of the strings with the main group and some fine episodes from Goldstein, Brecker and Potter.

Malcolm Goldstein (born 1936)

VIOLIN

A classical background, but a fiery improviser, too.

 Live At Fire In The Valley Eremite MTE16 Goldstein (vn solo). 7/67.

(*) Soil Emanem 4124 Goldstein; Masashi Harada (p, v). 3/02.

Remarkably, Goldstein seems to admire Ornette Coleman's scratching at the violin, which has always seemed to us approximate at best. A central piece in this beautifully sustained solo performance is dedicated to the saxophonist. It doesn't flag, even in the later stages, and the whole performance has a rich consistency and presence. The duets with Harada are sui generis – there isn't much precedent for this kind of thing – but richly fascinating, 14 improvisations of absolute concentration.

Vinny Golia (born 1946)

CLARINETS, FLUTES, SAXOPHONES, SHAKUHACHI, ETC.

Based in the LA area, the one-time painter, his Nine Winds label and his many, many horns are at the heart of the Californian free-playing community.

 Worldwide And Portable Nine Winds NWCD 0143 Golia; Wayne Peet (p); Ken Filiano (b). 2/86.

* Regards From Norma Desmond Fresh Sound FSNT 008 Golia; John Fumo (t); Wayne Peet (p); Ken Filiano (b); Alex Cline (d). 10/86.

(*) Against The Grain Nine Winds NWCD 0159 Golia; Rob Blakeslee (t); Nels Cline (g); Ken Filiano (b); Billy Mintz (d). 10/93.

Vinny Golia's one-man documentation of the improvising underground of California has been far less 'fashionable' than anything out of New York, but no less significant in the grain of American free jazz. By himself, in the small-group context, he reveals an obsession with doubling on numerous instruments: he plays 11 different woodwinds on Worldwide And Portable, changing the weave with each different reed. He calls this group The Chamber Trio, and the mood is assuredly sober, the ambitions of the group seemingly based around texture rather than individual lines. The most swinging piece, peculiarly enough, is a dedication to Kafka! But Golia, Peet and Filiano know each other's work very well, and there is much subtlety of interaction. Against The Grain is another admirable quintet outing: Golia's fascination with long form comes out in the 24-minute 'Presents To Savages/Alternation', and there is some superb contrapuntalism in 'SBB-CFF'.

It might seem perverse to pick out a rare record for another label as one of Golia's best. But the belatedly issued 1986 session for Fresh Sound is a corker. Golia sticks to baritone sax throughout, and with one of his favourite line-ups they blaze through 50 minutes of free bop that's gripping from first to last, with the outstanding threnody for Booker Little, 'The Cry', particularly fine.

(*) Razor Nine Winds NWCD 0169 Golia; Michael Vlatkovich (tb); Nels Cline (g); Joel Hamilton (b); Billy Mintz (d). 4/95.
(*) Nation Of Laws Nine Winds NWCD 0189 Golia; Rob Blakeslee (c, t, flhn); Nels Cline (g); Joel Hamilton (b); Alex Cline (d). 7/96.

Because Golia himself is partial to such a wide range of horns, the textural possibilities of his groups seem limitless but, just to make sure, there are crucial changes in line-up. Vlatkovich uses plenty of variation by himself, mutes and open tones constantly under review, and with Cline changing his own set-up and Mintz and Hamilton booting the group along this is a restless occasion, provocatively delivered. Nation Of Laws carries on the sequence in good style. The Cline brothers bring their own strengths, and in some ways Nels is the star of the date: listen to his contrasting solos on 'Not Very Pleasance' (crazily mercurial) and 'Perfect In The Pocket' (quickfire post-bop). Golia and Blakeslee push their way forward with a constant exploratory air, as if trying out their front-line sounds and changing their tone and dynamic just to see what new wrinkles they can negotiate. All three, even with their occasional blind turnings, objectify the ways this kind of free-ish but already formulated language can be kept fresh.

* Sfumato Clean Feed CF036 Golia; Bobby Bradford (t); Ken Filiano (b); Alex Cline (d). 8/98.
(*) Lineage Nine Winds NWCD 0214 As above. 8/98.

Along with some astonishing group improvisations – check out Golia on flute tussling with Bradford on a tribute to Albert Ayler – the Clean Feed also features some terrific pre-composed material, with 'All Together Now' an especially good outing for Vinny's bass clarinet. As ever, when Bradford is involved, or when one hears this kind of line-up, the classic Ornette Coleman quartet is conjured up. These guys have taken the language on a generation, though. Recorded in Portugal, where the players were working at a festival.

Lineage is an encounter with that distinguished West Coast eminence Bobby Bradford. They know each other's playing well and, with Filiano and Cline veterans of this music too, the record is a generous conversation among old friends. The cadences of the playing have a well-worn and settled quality: it's a music not of surprise but of supportive empathy. The pleasures come in the skill and grace which these experts use as they go into free space.

(*) Pilgrimage To Obscurity Nine Winds NWCD 0130 Golia; John Fumo, Ralf Rickert, Sal Cracchiolo (t, flhn); Michael Vlatkovich, Doug Wintz, John Rapson (tb); David Stout (btb); Mike Acosta, Steve Fowler, Wynell Montgomery, David Ocker (reeds); David Johnson (vib, mar); Eric Messerschmidt (tba); Ken Filiano, Roberto Miranda (b); Billy Mintz (d); Alex Cline (perc). 12/85.
(*) Decennium Dans Axlan Nine Winds NWCD 0140 Golia; Mark Underwood, John Fumo, Rob Blakeslee (t, flhn); Bruce Fowler, George McMullen (tb); Phil Teele (btb); Emily Hay, Steve Fowler, Bill Plake, David Ocker (reeds); Wayne Peet (ky); Jeff Gauthier (vn); Jonathan Golove, Dion Sorell (clo); Ken Filiano, Joel Hamilton (b); Alex Cline (d); Brad Dutz (perc). 4/92.
(*) Commemoration Nine Winds NWCD 0150/0160 2CD As above, except add Marissa Benedict (t); Michael Vlatkovich (tb); Kim Richmond (reeds); Harry Scorzo (vn); Greg Adamson, Matt Cooker (clo); William Roper (tba); David Johnson (perc). 91–92.
 Tutto Contare Nine Winds NWCD 0170 As above, except omit Bruce Fowler, Hay, Gauthier, Benedict, Golove, Adamson, Sorell; add Eric Jorgensen, Joey Sellars (tb); Charles Fernandez (bsn); Steve Adams (reeds); Michael Jacobsen (clo). 11/95.
(*) Portland 1996 Nine Winds NWCD 0180 As above, except omit Jorgensen, Sellars, Jacobsen, Ocker; add Sal Cracchiolo (t, flhn); Robie Hioki (btb); Kim Richmond (reeds); Jeff Gauthier (vn); Jonathan Golove, Peggy Lee (clo). 2/96.
(*) The Other Bridge (Oakland 1999) Nine Winds NWCD 0210/0220 2CD Golia; John Fumo, Jeff Kaiser, Rob Blakeslee (t); Mike Vlatkovich, Danny Hemwall, Scott Ray (tb); Kim Richmond, Paul Sherman, Bill Plake, Eric Barber, Steve Adams, Alan Lechusza, Tara Speiser, Sarah Shoenbeck (woodwind); Wayne Peet (ky); Harry Scorzo, Jeff Gauthier (vn); Jonathan Golove, Guenevere Measham, Colin Pearson (clo); Bill Roper (tba); Ken Filiano (b); David Johnson, Brad Dutz, Alex Cline (perc); Stephanie Henry (cond). 8/99.

Golia's Large Ensemble stands apart from his small-group work. The records are fragments from ten years of work with this vast orchestra which Golia apparently keeps going out of his own pocket; but at least now there is a fair showing on record. The group moves like some sea-going leviathan: ponderous, sluggish at times, but suddenly raising itself and achieving grace and beauty. Golia always insists on the weight and thick sonority of the orchestra: sections call and respond to one another in the big-band tradition, but there is little that one can call swinging, more the contrast of great blocks of sound, the emergence of a soloist to say their piece, the chattering of brass or lowering of a bass reed section. Pilgrimage To Obscurity – self-effacing to be sure – alternates between rousing all-hands-on pieces and thinned-out, dirge-like textures. Decennium Dans Axlan starts even more slowly, with the gradually accumulating power of 'Tapestry Of Things Before', and ends on the similarly inclined 'Man In A Bottle'; in between, there are some beautiful solos by Rob Blakeslee, Bruce Fowler and Steve Fowler from the round-robin of improvisers. Commemoration, though a more recent release, was in part recorded prior to Decennium Dans Axlan. Again, Golia marshals his forces around key points, waving in some instruments, keeping others under wraps, and only rarely going for the big climax – though when he does, as on the towering 'Tumulus Or Griffin', it's mightily impressive. Tutto Contare is for some reason just slightly less involving: 'Chromazoid', with a superb solo by Rob Blakeslee, is exceptional, but the other pieces just seem like the interesting repertory of an imposing orchestra. Their set from Portland finds them back to form immediately in the beautiful 'Surrounded By Assassins', which has some ingenious textural points to make even before the gripping solos by Fernandez (bassoon) and Gauthier (violin). This leads into the mighty sprawl of 'Blue Hawk', a homage to Hawkins, Young and Webster. Golia has long since been using the Ensemble to explore a world that lies somewhere between jazz, improvisation and formal composition: in some of this music, especially, he seems close to alighting on a unique world. But the problem which troubles the earlier discs seems just as intrusive on these later ones: the recording quality simply isn't good enough for a group with two bassists and three percussionists, playing scores of this much complexity.

The Other Bridge offers another two and a half hours of music. He may have written and scored all the music, but it's scarcely a setting for personal grandstanding: just one Golia solo across the entire two discs. The bustling, ebullient 'Thread For Fred' should silence any who feel that jazz is only a modest part of the Large Ensemble's direction, and the soloists – Richmond, Kaiser and Fumo merit a particular huzzah – honour the composer's intentions, though the sound's still not good enough.

 Music For Electronics And Woodwinds Nine Winds NWCD 243 Golia; Mark Trayle (elec). N.D.

 Nine Pieces For Solo B♭ Clarinet Meniscus MNSCS 080 Golia (cl solo). 11/00.

Less studied and more mercurial than, say, Braxton's work with Richard Teitelbaum, Golia's duets with electronics man Trayle have a sense of fun to go with the inevitable sonic questing. The woodwinder takes along some of his fun horns (piccolo, for instance) to the date and has a high old time when both sides start twittering. Trayle also plays Vinny back to himself via a direct-processing input. It doesn't feel very profound, but it rarely palls.

In a heroic act of self-denial, Golia was obliged to play the solo record on only one horn, an 'ordinary' clarinet. There is a deleted solo album in the Nine Winds back-catalogue, but that was cut 20 years earlier and it's a departure for Golia. Impressive though the playing is, it feels as if it's in search of a context: several of the pieces sound either like exercises or the corralling of a certain idea. The free play of a genuine improvisation can be elusive, even in this open space.

 Music For Like Instruments: The E♭ Saxophones Nine Winds NWCD 2049 Golia; Beth Schenck, Jason Mears, Nathan Herrera (as). 12/02.

Episode one in an 'ongoing project' – music by woodwind ensemble groups which have a common characteristic. Golia here enlists three alto-players while he picks up the baritone, the stritch, the sopranino and the contrabass sax (the latter sounding especially good against the brooding altos on 'Chronos'). Some pieces are barely a minute long, others run for seven or eight, and there's an inconsistent success rate. The deliberate vagaries of pitch in 'Would It Bother You?' bother us a lot. The attention on timbral and harmonic matters does leave some of the pieces a bit bereft from a rhythmical standpoint. Vinny has, though, come up with some of his best titles (we especially like 'Trilled To Be Here'!).

 A Gift For The Unusual Nine Winds NWCD 0239 Golia; Michael Vlatkovich (tb); Bill Barrett (hca); Wayne Peet (ky, theremin); Jessica Catron (clo); Bill Casale (b). N.D.

 The Entire Time Nine Winds NWCD 0259 Golia; Nels Cline (g). 2/03.

 Fancy Meeting You Here Nine Winds NWCD 0224 Golia; Rick Helzer (p). 11/03.

A Gift For The Unusual is designed to show off the possibilities of the tubax, apparently a new version of the contrabass sax, which is more responsive and portable than its sibling. There are solos and group pieces, one of which, a trio with Peet and Barrett, is quite fascinating – good enough to eclipse much of the rest, in fact, since 'The Mozart Of Vice' is a wearisome trudge and some of the other pieces sound at times like lung therapy. The duets with Cline are all improvisations, although they find their way to relatively tuneful areas. Vinny brought the xiao, dzi, bass clarinet, alto flute, two sorts of soprano sax, the stritch and the tenor sax to the date. Nels just plays guitar. The meeting with Helzer is pretty fancy. Golia uses the soprillo saxophone (one octave above soprano) and even overdubs five of them on one track; he also brings out his beloved bass sax on two pieces. Helzer tends to work more as an accompanist than full-on duettist, but faced with Golia's arsenal a piano-player might be forgiven for taking a subsidiary role.

 Music For Like Instruments: The Flutes Nine Winds NWCD 0269 Golia; Ellen Burr, Jennifer Roth (picc, f, af); Fawntice McCain (f). 5/04.

(*) Music For Like Instruments: The Clarinets Nine Winds NWCD 0279 Golia; Andrew Pask, Cory Wright, Jim Sullivan, Brian Walsh (cl, bcl). 6/05.

Even Braxton hasn't explored the possibilities of multiple and 'exotic' reeds and woodwinds with the diligence and thoroughness that Golia has employed in his Nine Winds releases. The flutes record will most likely appeal mainly to specialists, which might seem a foolish remark given that nothing in this entry is exactly mainstream: but the flute, of whatever pitch, has never enjoyed much jazz prestige, and a disc of nothing but is a tough call indeed. Wayne Peet's exemplary engineering work on both of these releases ensures that at least every line and texture and nuance are there to be savoured or pondered. We prefer the clarinet record, in part because the other players have a more proactive and less 'supportive' role in the music. It's also a better instance of Golia's puckish humour: flutes are more serious.

Also, in brief:

 The Art Of Negotiation CIMP 111. 3/96.

A rare stance of aggressive virtuosity in these duets with Ken Filiano (b).

 Halloween '96 CIMP 129. 10/96.

Cut as a long, loud quartet blow, this kind of situation and recording does Paul Smoker (t) no favours.

 Duets Nine Winds NWCD 0204. 5/98.

Harpist Susan Allen is a classical player and these duets – Vinny does the lot from piccolo to contrabassoon – get stuck into a repetitious pattern.

(*) Feeding Frenzy Nine Winds NWCD 229. 1–7/02.

A project which grew out of Golia's ongoing association with Harry Scorzo (vn), this is a dense and often lovely record, with string group blending beautifully with clarinets and flutes; no saxophones this time.

(*) Birdology Leo CDLR 389. 3/03.

An appetizing feast of reed and woodwind sound, with Peter A. Schmid vying for extremity: sopranino! tubax! contrabass clarinet!

Mac Gollehon

TRUMPET

Contemporary American brassman, playing in and around New York and New Jersey.

 Live At The Blue Note Half Note 4902 Gollehon; Ronnie Cuber (bs); John Hicks (p); Jeff Golub (g); Ron McClure (b); Victor Jones (d). 4/98.

(*) In The Spirit Of Fats Navarro Half Note 4206 Gollehon; Frank Lacy (tb); Bill Holloman (ts, org); Ronnie Cuber (bs); James Hurt (p); Lonnie Plaxico (b); Ronnie Burrage (d); Tamm E. Hunt (v). 00.

Navarro is a tough act to follow, either as homage or as inspiration, and Gollehon may not have the young master's most scintillating chops, but he's not bad, and his rowdy, rambunctious tribute is a splendid and genuine effort. By having Burrage play with thumping, thunderous abandon and encouraging the likes of Cuber and Lacy into their most blustering form, it's a bebop party. There's nothing trim or polite about it, and if the shirt-tails aren't quite hanging out, they're not tucked in tight. Navarro's tunes are rarely called these days, even on bop-oriented bandstands, and it's interesting to hear the likes of 'EB-POB', 'Fats Blows' and 'Nostalgia' alongside the more expected 'Our Delight' and 'Dance Of The Infidels', as well as a few functional Gollehon originals. With Tamm E. Hunt's jive monologue the closing 'Bebop Revolution' is, er, in the spirit.

The earlier date has a smashing line-up, known as the Smokin' Section, but Gollehon throws it away to a degree with trendy covers of Hendrix and Cream songs ('Sunshine Of Your Love' is called even less often than Navarro tunes), though the quality of playing and the interchanges between Mac, Cuber and guest Golub are always of interest.

Benny Golson (born 1929)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

A Philadelphian, he went from jazz and R&B combos in the early '50s to arranging for Dizzy Gillespie in 1956; then a stint with Art Blakey, and the formation of the Jazztet with Art Farmer in 1959. In the '60s and '70s, he worked in film and TV, but in the '80s he returned to regular jazz. His book of jazz compositions is one of the most enduring of its kind.

 Benny Golson's New York Scene Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 164 Golson; Art Farmer (t); Jimmy Cleveland (tb); Julius Watkins (frhn); Gigi Gryce (as); Sahib Shihab (bs); Wynton Kelly (p); Paul Chambers (b); Charli Persip (d). 10/57.

 The Modern Touch Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1797 Golson; Kenny Dorham (t); J. J. Johnson (tb); Wynton Kelly (p); Paul Chambers (b); Max Roach (d). 12/57.

 Benny Golson And The Philadelphians Blue Note 494104-2 Golson; Lee Morgan, Roger Guerin (t); Ray Bryant, Bobby Timmons (p); Percy Heath, Pierre Michelot (b); Philly Joe Jones, Christian Garros (d). 11–12/58.

(*) Gone With Golson Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1850 Golson; Curtis Fuller (tb); Ray Bryant (p); Tom Bryant (b); Al Harewood (d). 6/59.

* Groovin' With Golson Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 226 Golson; Curtis Fuller (tb); Ray Bryant (p); Paul Chambers (b); Art Blakey (d). 8/59.

 Gettin' With It Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1873 Golson; Curtis Fuller (tb); Tommy Flanagan (p); Doug Watkins (b); Art Taylor (d). 12/59.

Golson will always be considered, primarily, as a composer and arranger, producing such standards as 'I Remember Clifford', 'Whisper Not' and 'Stablemates'. His powers as a saxophonist have tended to be overshadowed, although his still-growing discography has reasserted the stature of his own playing. Despite contributing several hard-bop staples, his own playing style originally owed rather more to such swing masters as Hawkins and Lucky Thompson; a big, crusty tone and a fierce momentum sustain his solos, and they can take surprising and exciting turns, even if the unpredictability sometimes leads to a loss of focus. The earlier of the two 1957 sessions concentrates on the more reflective side of his work, with three tracks by a nonet, three by a quintet with Farmer, and a ballad interpretation of 'You're Mine You' with the rhythm section alone; all well played but comparatively reserved. The Modern Touch is impeccably tailored hard bop, bedecked with good writing by the leader and suave playing by the sextet, but it's uneventful rather than exciting.

The later discs contain the seeds of the group which would, when joined full-time by Farmer, become the Jazztet. The best is Groovin', titled appropriately since the band hit a splendid pace from the start, and Golson and Fuller turn in inspired solos. Gone With Golson is only a notch behind; Golson fashions a catchy arrangement of Bryant's 'Staccato Swing', takes an impassioned course through 'Autumn Leaves' and turns in a fine 'Blues After Dark'. Gettin' With It is rather too casual here and there, starting with a 'Baubles, Bangles And Beads' which is so relaxed it scarcely comes off the starting blocks. There's consolation in 'Tippin' On Thru' and a very slow and consummately controlled 'April In Paris'. Benny Golson And The Philadelphians was originally a United Artists LP. The original album is a fine and characteristic set of hard bop, with 'Thursday's Theme' one of the best of Golson's less-remembered tunes, and he and Morgan hit it off as well as they ever did. Four tracks made in France with a local group a few weeks later are less involving and water down the programme somewhat, though Golson's playing is as committed as always.

(*) Quartets Gambit 69250 Golson; Wynton Kelly, Tommy Flanagan, Cedar Walton (p); Ron Carter, Paul Chambers, Tommy Williams (b); Jimmy Cobb, Arthur Taylor, Albert Tootie Heath (d). 12/60, 10, 11 & 12/62.

Golson insisted there was absolutely no relation between what he did with a pen in his hand and when he was blowing a horn. The December 1962 quartets with Flanagan, Carter and Taylor that yielded Free were his attempt to get away from an over-arranged and over-written situation and simply to let his saxophone express itself. It's largely successful, though with just two so-so Golson originals one doesn't necessarily feel it's the best of him. The slightly earlier Turning Point session with Kelly, Chambers and Cobb is perhaps a first draft of this direction: mostly standards, though 'Dear Kathy' and the title-track are his own. A single quartet from a December 1960 date called Take A Number From One To Ten (featuring Benny playing in every context from solo to dectet) is also included as a bonus.

(*) Three Little Words Jazz House JHAS 609 Golson; Stan Tracey (p); Rick Laird (b); Ronnie Stephenson, Billy Hart (d). 11/65.

A rare example of Golson captured live in his prime, during a residency at Ronnie Scott's club. Seven long pieces chronicle a gripping evening at work. The intensities which Golson finds in his favourite 'Stablemates' or in a marathon 'Stella By Starlight' are almost shocking. When the former is followed by a caressing treatment of the melody of 'My Foolish Heart' it's a disturbing change of mood. Golson always insists that Coltrane never really influenced his methods and it's intriguing to hear how he is both like and unlike his illustrious contemporary. This is tenor-playing of controlled but formidable power. The disc also affords a chance to hear Tracey at length, and splendid he is too; Hart replaces Stephenson on the final three numbers. A scruffy recording, but fine music.

 Up Jumped Benny Arkadia 70741 Golson; Kevin Hays (p); Dwayne Burno (b); Carl Allen (d). 5/86.
(*) Live Dreyfus 191057-2 Golson; Mulgrew Miller (p); Peter Washington (b); Tony Reedus (d). 2/89.
(*) Domingo Dreyfus 191132-2 Golson; Jean-Loup Longnon (t); Curtis Fuller (tb); Kevin Hays (p); James Genus (b); Tony Reedus (d). 11/91.
(*) I Remember Miles Evidence ECD 22121 Golson; Eddie Henderson (t); Curtis Fuller (tb); Mulgrew Miller (p); Ray Drummond (b); Tony Reedus (b). 10/92.
Back in a playing milieu after many years in studio work, Golson cut an interesting figure. Though his tone had taken on a querulous edge, his playing hasn't so much declined in stature as changed its impact. He had traded his swing influences for Coltrane 20 years earlier, and by the '80s it had resulted in the kind of introspective passion which marks out some of Coltrane's music, even if Golson chose a more conservative set of aims. He sounds in wonderful voice on Live, captured on a European stopover. There's a feathery, rippling treatment of 'I Remember Clifford' which makes it clear that, although there have been countless versions of this ballad, the composer himself still has fresh things to say about it. 'Jam The Avenue' is the kind of blow-out that demands good chops, and Golson has no trouble there. 'Sweet And Lovely' shows that he is still learning from Coltrane. The studio date, Domingo, features an impressive quintet (Longnon's on 'Blues March' only) and continues the long and intriguing partnership between Golson and Fuller, a dialogue seldom remarked on but as productive as any in the post-bop era. The title-track was originally arranged for Lee Morgan in the '50s and has hardly been heard since, but Golson comes up with a fine new arrangement, and it's a pity that he otherwise contributes only one new piece, 'Thinking Mode'; the rest are staples from his book, as well as Fuller's spirited 'À La Mode' and Brubeck's 'In Your Own Sweet Way'.

Up Jumped Benny is an appearance with a young rhythm section, recently issued, in which Golson again makes the running on some of his favourites, along with the nice touch of including Clifford Brown's 'Tiny Capers'. The Swiss audience is noisy, but Golson impresses with his no-nonsense approach. I Remember Miles was a doomed attempt to emulate 'I Remember Clifford'. Henderson offers a few authentic moments, and the Trane-tinged saxophone sounds fine in context.

 Remembering Clifford Milestone MCD 9728-2 Golson; John Swana (t); Ron Blake (ts); Mike LeDonne (p); Peter Washington (b); Joe Farnsworth (d); Tito Puente, Carlos 'Patato' Valdes (perc). 2/97.
(*) That's Funky Arkadia 70743 Golson; Nat Adderley (t); Monty Alexander (p); Ray Drummond (b); Marvin 'Smitty' Smith (d). 9/99.
On Remembering Clifford Golson leads a team of youngish boppers through some new originals, a couple of old favourites and a surprising take on 'Lullaby Of Birdland'. Pushing 70, the maestro still sounds in great nick: compared to Ron Blake, he has a chestier and less mobile sound, but he surrenders nothing in expressiveness on the ballad 'You're The First To Know'. The pick of the others, perhaps surprisingly, is LeDonne, jaunty and quick-witted.

Old friends revisited old friends on That's Funky. Nat and Benny were in great heart, taking a fresh look at 'The Sidewinder', 'Moritat', and a few others. Golson calls it his Funky Quintet, but he's taken the trouble to rethink the tunes as well, so we get to hear 'Blues March' at its original thumping Blakey tempo, but with the theme played slower than usual; the reverse happens on 'Moanin''. Nat has them do 'Work Song' – maybe his final recorded version, and he still sounds like he loves it.

Also, in brief:

 Walkin' Fresh Sound FSRCD 302. 57, 62.
Golson the arranger, giving bebop an intriguing gloss with a starry cast.

 The Other Side Of Benny Golson Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1750. 11/58.
A near-contemporary of Groovin' but lower in temperature.

 Stockholm Sojourn Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1894. 64.
With the emphasis on Golson the arranger, but slightly restricted in scope, though Benny Bailey (t) makes a lovely statement on 'I Remember Clifford'.

 Tune In, Turn On Verve 55793. 4/67.
Subtitled To The Hippest Commercials Of The 60s (Polaroid, B&H, Marlboro). Weird, but Art Farmer's on it.

 Terminal 1 Concord CCD 2259-2. 2/04.
A good band, although Golson is losing some of his old strength and even Eddie Henderson (t, flhn) sounds like a veteran.

Eddie Gomez (born 1944)

DOUBLE BASS

Puerto Rican-born; studied at Juilliard and then worked with an array of artists, including Paul Bley and Bill Evans.

 Dedication Evidence ECD 22208 Gomez; Jeremy Steig (f); Stefan Karlsson (p); Jimmy Cobb (d). 7/97.
Though Gomez was prolific, few of his records remain in print. Dedication is among the best of them, though. A fine technician, who always hits his notes dead-centre, Gomez hasn't the most appealing tone when playing pizzicato. His arco work on 'Spartacus Love Theme' is exemplary and he is wonderful on 'Nardis', which he must have played many times with Bill Evans; Steig features on the same tune. There's a very fine arrangement of 'Footprints', which counts as one of the best interpretations of the blues-based Shorter tune.

 Art Of The Heart Art of Life AL1019 2 Gomez; Mark Kramer (p). 2/04.
Kramer is a dogged jazz fixer. His lush orchestrations of Bock's music for Fiddler On The Roof appeared on a contemporaneous record. A bit much, but it set up some good Gomez solos. The duos, recorded on Valentine's Day, if you can believe it, are a bit syrupy and again Gomez's rather ugly tone doesn't endear them to the listener. Kramer's no Bill Evans, but he holds his own on this repertoire, which is a tribute to Sinatra, Johnny Mathis and other singers. 'They Say It's Wonderful' and 'Call Me Irresponsible' conjure some great playing from both.

Nat Gonella (1908–98)

TRUMPET, VOICE

Began playing in minor dance bands before joining Billy Cotton in 1929. In the '30s, with his Georgians, he became a star performer, broadcaster and recording artist. Tried bop briefly after the war, then worked in music hall and variety, with a career revival in 1959, subsequently eclipsed by rock. An honoured elder statesman, he was still singing in the last year of his life.

 Nat Gonella And His Georgians Flapper PAST CD 9750 Gonella; Bruts Gonella, Johnny Morrison, Chas Oughton, Jack Wallace (t); Miff King (tb); Jack Bonser, Jock Middleton, Joe Moore, Ernest Morris, Mickey Seidman, Albert Torrance (cl, as, bs); Pat Smuts, Don Barigo (ts); Harold Hood, Monia Liter, Norman Stenfalt (p); Roy Dexter, Jimmy Mesene (g); Will Hemmings (b); Bob Dryden, Johnny Roland (d). 1/35–10/40.

* Georgia On My Mind ASV/Living Era 5300 Similar to above. 12/31–1/41.

Nat's Georgians – in which brother Bruts played Joe Oliver to his Pops – was one of the most successful British hot bands of the pre-war years. There have been various 'Georgian' revivals (the title was taken from his big hit, 'Georgia On My Mind', centrepiece of the ASV compilation) since that time and in the '80s Nat was still singing, though no longer playing his horn. The Armstrong influence is so overt as to be unarguable, and yet Gonella brought something of his own as well, a wry, philosophical shrug as he threw off neat aphoristic solos with the biting tone and earthy humour his fans loved. The Flapper disc is a very good selection of early material. Nat spent a little time in America at the end of the decade, and its influence can be heard in the bluesier and more relaxedly rhythmic swing of the later cuts. The New Georgians stuff from 1940 is – heretical though it may be – superior to the original band's output. There's a novelty edge to many of the tracks, but Nat's vocal on 'The Flat Foot Floogie' and even 'Ol' Man River' is never less than musical and in the latter case quite moving. A bit of an institution, who will be fondly remembered by anyone over the age of 60 and who may prove mystifying to anyone under.

Also, in brief:

 A Jazz Legend: Through The Years 1930 To 1998 Avid 634. 10/30–2/98.

Proof that Nat kept going to the very end. A valuable career survey in 25 strong cuts.

 How'm I Doing? Sounds of Yesteryear 717. 1–12/36.

A good selection of tracks from a vintage year.

Paul Gonsalves (1920–74)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

A Bostonian, 'Mex' started with Basie but joined Ellington in 1950 and stayed for the rest of his life. Addiction troubled his career, but Ellington stood by him and coaxed out countless great performances: Newport 1956 was his apotheosis.

 Cookin' Fresh Sound FSRCD 472 Gonsalves; Clark Terry (t); Porter Kilbert (as, bs); Mike Simpson (f); Junior Mance, Willie Jones, Ramsey Lewis (p); Chubby Jackson, Jimmy Woode (b); Eugene Miller, Sam Woodyard (d). 56, 57.

 Ellingtonia Moods And Blues RCA Victor 7432 147793-2 Gonsalves; Ray Nance (t); Booty Wood (tb); Johnny Hodges (as); Jimmy Jones (p); Al Hall (b); Oliver Jackson (d). 2/60.

* Gettin' Together Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 203 Gonsalves; Nat Adderley (t); Wynton Kelly (p); Sam Jones (p); Jimmy Cobb (d). 12/60.

(*) Tell It The Way It Is Impulse! 547 960-2 Gonsalves; Rolf Ericson (t); Ray Nance (c, vn); Johnny Hodges (as); Walter Bishop Jr (p); Dick Hyman (org); Kenny Burrell (g); George Duvivier (b); Ernie Shepard (b, v); Roy Haynes, Osie Johnson (d); Manny Albam (bell tree). 5 & 9/63.

 Jazz Till Midnight Storyville STCD 4123 Gonsalves; Jan Johansson (p, org); Bob Cranshaw (b); Albert 'Tootie' Heath (d). 1/67.

(*) Humming Bird Vocalion CDSML 6404 Gonsalves; Kenny Wheeler (t); Dave Horler (tb); Alan Branscombe, Stan Tracey (p); Dave Green, Kenny Napper (b); Benny Goodman (d). 70.

(*) Mexican Bandit Meets Pittsburgh Pirate Original Jazz Classics OJC 751 Gonsalves; Roy Eldridge (t, v); Cliff Smalls (p); Sam Jones (b); Eddie Locke (d). 8/73.

Gonsalves stands in a direct line with earlier masters like Chu Berry and Don Byas, and leads to Frank Lowe and David Murray. It would be absurd to compare his influence with Coltrane's, but it's now clear that he was experimenting early with tonalities remarkably similar to Trane's famous 'sheets of sound'. It's also probable that more people heard Gonsalves. His fabled 27 choruses on 'Diminuendo And Crescendo In Blue' at the Newport Jazz Festival in 1956 can be considered the first important extended saxophone solo in modern jazz.

The early material on Fresh Sound is interesting enough and illuminated by the proximity of that astonishing Newport moment. The '60s Ellingtonia session is hijacked by Hodges, who claims composer or co-composer credits on four of the tracks, including the closing 'D A Blues'. The tenorman is listed as author of 'Chocataw' and 'The Line-Up', but his main feature is 'Daydreams', a solo statement worthy of Coleman Hawkins but also anticipating something of Sonny Rollins's later melodic style. The scaled-down ensemble is weak, but that was the price Duke exacted of all his sidemen's groups. Had he been present, instead of the workmanlike but pedestrian Jones, a rather ordinary session might have been raised a notch, but Ducal spin-offs were somehow always contrived to sound like second-division affairs.

Hodges dominates on Tell It The Way It Is, which is now repackaged with the slightly earlier Cleopatra – Feelin' Jazzy, a slightly odd concept album inspired by Elizabeth Taylor's pyramidal epic. Hodges' arrangements on Tell It are more subtly crafted than any he ever recorded on his own account, and Bob Thiele's production gives the individual horns generous space while allowing the sound to meld and blend. Gettin' Together is a remarkable album, beautifully played and recorded. Kelly's work on 'Walkin'' and 'I Cover The Waterfront' is blue-chip, and Adderley's fragile, over-confident tone fits in perfectly.

The last pair can't match up to some of the great occasions. Gonsalves was living in London and sounds frail and tentative, often fading away before the end of a phrase, let alone chorus. That said, the real value of these unusual dates is to show how confidently Tracey, Wheeler, Green and the others coped in the company of legendary Americans. Wheeler's soloing on 'Body

And Soul' is exemplary, and the pianist has some characteristically strong Duke Monkton moments along the way.

By the time of Mexican Bandit Meets Pittsburgh Pirate Gonsalves had less than a year to live and, while a meeting with the incendiary trumpeter might have been marvellous 15 years earlier, the tenor-playing sounds fractious and tired. Eldridge has a few characteristic squalls to deliver, but seam out the other discs first.

Also, in brief:

 Boom-Jackie-Boom-Chick Universal 9242. 64.
Recorded in London with a British trio led by Pat Smythe (p), during union troubles, and a bright, freewheeling set.

(*) Encuentro – Jazz In Buenos Aires Fresh Sound FSRCD 72. 68.
Made while the Ellington orchestra was in town, but Paul sounds tired and ill at ease with the local group. Originally on Catalyst.

Virgil Gonsalves (born 1931)

BARITONE SAXOPHONE

He never made the impact of a Chaloff or a Mulligan but he has his merits.

(*) Jazz In Hollywood Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1889 Gonsalves; Bob Enevoldsen, Herbie Harper (tb); Buddy Wise (ts); Steve White (ts, v); Lou Levy, Jimmy Rowles (p); Harry Babasin (b); Larry Bunker, Roy Harte (d). 9/54.
 Jazz At Monterey Omega 47 Gonsalves; Bill Catalano, John David Coppola, Mike Downs (t); Leo Wright (as); Danny Patiris, Chuck Peterson (ts); Merrill Hoover, Junior Mance (p); Eddie Khan (b); Benny Barth, Eddie Randall (d). 59.
The Hollywood set pairs two 10-inch LPs featuring Gonsalves's gently lumbering style on a sextet date alongside a disc by off-beat saxophonist White, who also merits rediscovery. Virgil's playing is far from revelatory, but his robust delivery, often played in tenor range, is always attractive and the combo partnership with Enevoldsen and Wise is expertly and often expressively done, with the trombonist in top form. White's material is mostly out of whack, but entertaining enough. The later date, made for VSOP, features a big band doing some interesting fare, including Golson's 'Stablemates' and an all-too-short version of Trane's 'Moment's Notice', plus more sextet cuts with Downs and Patiris (whose 'Sharon' is featured) in the front line. Interesting, rather than major.

Babs Gonzales (1919–80)

VOICE

Irrepressibly hip and a fine musician, the man from Newark was among the first to give bebop a vocal dimension. Partly because of his colourful autobiographies, he became a cult figure.

 Babs Gonzales, 1947–1949 Classics 1124 Gonzales; Dave Burns (t); Bennie Green, J. J. Johnson (tb); Julius Watkins (frhn); Tony Scott (cl); Jordan Fordin, Art Pepper, Don Redman, Rudy Williams (as); James Moody, Sonny Rollins, Herbie Steward (ts); Alberto Socarras (f); Tadd Dameron, Linton Garner, Wynton Kelly, Bobby Tucker (p); Ray Nance (vn); Pee Wee Tinney (g); Nelson Boyd, Bruce Lawrence (b); Roy Haynes, Jack Parker, Charles Simmons, Jackie Mills (d). 47–49.
 Real Crazy Proper Intro CD 2052 As above, except add Hal Mitchell, Gil Askey (t); Bob Range, Don Cole (tb); Johnny Griffin, Buddy Tate (ts); Maurice Simon, Pee Wee Moore (bs); Sadik Hakim, Hank Jones (p); Larry Goins, Curley Russell (b); Chink Williams, Osie Johnson (d). 2/47–10/53.
 Voilà Fresh Sound FSRCD340 Gonzales; Clark Terry (t); Johnny Griffin (ts); Charlie Rouse (cl); Les Spann (f); Hank Jones, Horace Parlan (p); Ray Crawford (g); Ray Nance (vn); Buddy Catlett, Milt Hinton, Peck Morrison (b); Roy Haynes (d); The Modern Sounds. 58.
 Sunday Afternoon At Small's Paradise Dauntless DC Gonzales; Clark Terry (t, flhn); Johnny Griffin (ts); Horace Parlan (p); Buddy Catlett (b); Ben Riley (d). 62.
 Tales Of Manhattan: The Cool Philosophy Of Babs Gonzales Fresh Sound FSRCD1602 Gonzales; Kenny Burrell (g); Peck Morrison (b); Roy Haynes (d). 63.
Corny as some of the work here doubtless now seems, what Babs did was colonize the rapid transitions and complex harmonies of bebop for singers. The sessions are variable in quality, but there are some delightful cuts and some intriguing experiments as well. The early work with Three Bips And A Bop is probably among the best. 'Oop-Pop-A-Da' and 'Professor Bop' are both good representations of Babs's vocalese. 'Weird Lullaby' was another of his hits and became a kind of signature tune after its Capitol release. Proper's entry in their attractively packaged Intro series cherrypicks the same sessions and adds seven from the early '50s, including a session which was Johnny Griffin's debut. 'Cool Whalin'' (sic) and 'Still Wailin'' appear to be much the same tune. 'Shuckin' And Jivin'', 'Ornithology' and 'For Dancers Only' find Gonzales still in good shape.

Griff collectors will enjoy the sessions on Voilà. The saxophonist is well featured on the first seven tracks (arranged by Melba Liston) and on an obscure single item from the same year at the Insane Asylum cabaret with Clark Terry. By the start of the '60s, Gonzales was a personality, more mannered and self-aware, but his urban tall tales and easy delivery make The Cool Philosophy and the Small's date worth having; more excellent Griff, too.

Dennis González (born 1954)

TRUMPET, POCKET-TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN, OTHER INSTRUMENTS

He arrived in Dallas in 1977, where he started the Daagnim label, broadcast and acted as a focus for the new-music community.

* Stefan Silkheart SHCD 101 González; John Purcell (bcl, bf, eng hn, syn, v); Henry Franklin (b, v); W. A. Richardson (d). 4/86.
(*) Namesake Silkheart SHCD 106 González; Ahmed Abdullah (t, flhn, balafon); Charles Brackeen (ts, perc); Douglas Ewart (bcl, as, f); Malachi Favors (b); Alvin Fielder (d). 2/87.
* Debenge, Debenge Silkheart SHCD 112 González; Marlon Jordan (t); Charles Brackeen (ts); Kidd Jordan (sno, as, bcl); Malachi Favors, Henry Franklin (b); Alvin Fielder, W. A. Richardson (d). 2/88.
González's recordings for the Silkheart label were part of a determined effort to wrest creative initiative back from New York and the West Coast. The band assembled for Debenge, Debenge goes under the name New Dallasorleanssippi, which is more awkward than the music, wonderfully coherent and direct.

González's other great achievement is to have tempted the great tenor-player Charles Brackeen out of a self-imposed semi-retirement.

Stefan is a minor masterpiece. The opening 'Enrico', dedicated to a fellow trumpeter, opens a path for magnificent flugelhorn figurations over a bass/bass clarinet accompaniment. 'Fortuity' is calm and enigmatic, like the title-track (a dedication to González's son) a simple theme on open chords, but with a dramatic interlude for voices. 'Hymn For Don Cherry' is based on 'At The Cross'. 'Boi Fuba' less successfully explores Brazilian materials, while John Purcell's closing 'Deacon John Ray' features his Dolphy-ish alto, and the trumpeter flirts with total harmonic abstraction.

Namesake suffers only slightly by comparison. The long title-piece is a complex 7/4 figure that sounds as if it were being played by a larger band. 'Separation Of Stones' is tranced and dreamy, and the solos are softly enunciated, with González muted and the Armstrong-influenced Abdullah on flugelhorn. A percussion overture sets up a mood of combined grief and triumph in anticipation of 'Hymn For Mbizo' but is interrupted by the lightweight 'Four Pigs And A Bird's Nest', on which González plays his pocket-trumpet, muted on this occasion.

On Debenge, Debenge Jordan builds a bridge between González's ringing, sometimes slightly sharp-toned trumpet and Brackeen's powerful tenor; his son, Marlon Jordan, is a fresh new voice and the Art Ensemble Of Chicago veteran Favors shows more of his formidable technique than for some time.

() NY Quartet / () Dance Of The Soothsayer's Tongue
Clean Feed CF020 / 094 González; Ellery Eskelin (ts); Mark Helias (b); Mike Thompson (d). 8/03.

Having been lured out of retirement, González was approached by Dave Douglas to take part in a trumpet festival at Tonic in New York. Some of his performance is included on the first of these alongside the studio piece 'NY Midnight Suite'; the rest appears on Dance. Eskelin is an ideal foil, with his fiery tone and unstaunchable flow of ideas, but it's bass and drums that make these records. Helias is in fine form, floating in and out of the horn-lines, laying off delicate countermelodies and sharp interrogations of the main line; Thompson is less well-known but impresses. Of the live cuts, 'Hymn For The Elders' is the highlight, a robust and cheerfully muscular workout that brings out the best in all the group.

The other record is most extraordinary, spare, almost ritualized, and with heavy emphasis on unaccompanied playing for quite long periods. It begins with González blowing lonely, stark figures on 'Reaching Through The Skin'. What follows is testimony to Helias's superb foundation work, a propulsive line for the horns on 'The Matter At Hand', with Thompson playing boppish cymbals. The title-piece and the following 'Soundrhythium' is a showcase for the percussionist's remarkable set-up, tuned, timbrally rich and vividly exciting, even if González himself seems to be elsewhere, perhaps still not confident of his lip. The group's more together on 'Afrikanu Suite' and 'Archipelago Of Days', but this was an unusual set, not your average club date at all.

* Idle Wild Clean Feed CF035 González; Oliver Lake (as); Ken Filiano (b); Michael T. A. Thomson (d). 8/04.

The instrumentation immediately recalls Ornette Coleman's classic quartet and there are strong echoes of those pioneering records dotted through Idle Wild. Sleeve-note writer Ken Shimamoto wisely points out the similarity between 'Document For Toshinori Kondo' (which González has previously recorded with his sons as Yells At Eels) and different phases of his fellow Texan's long career. That's starting at the end of this fine album. It begins in a sacred space, with soft percussion, and low, mourning tones from the trumpet. 'Elechi – Elegy For Malachi Favors' turns a mourning song for the Art Ensemble into the basis of a second-line celebration, built slowly from minimal beginnings into a grand processional. 'Bush Medicine' has a political background, counter-magic by one Texan against another. It's not so much an angry piece as a defiant one, casting darkly playful spells. 'Idle Wild' itself is a free improvisation that allows each of the players to develop an idiosyncratic identity, and not necessarily in the role you'd expect for each.

Lake is in majestic form, strong-toned and agile. Thompson's teasing exchanges with the leader on 'Elechi', Filiano's rapid lines behind, suggest the strong chemistry that exists between the group members. González himself is back in superb form, playing as if he had never been away and carving out resonant new musical territory.

(*) No Photograph Available Clean Feed CF056 González; Charlie Kohlhase (as, ts, bs); Nate McBride, Joe Morris (b); Croix Galipault (d). 06.

Can it really be 'Old MacDonald's Farm' he adapts near the beginning of 'Primate'? It certainly sets the tone for an album that is brighter and more affirmative than any we've had from González for some time. It's credited to his Boston Project. Playing both C and B flat trumpets, he sounds in great lip and with Kohlhase offering strong support, particularly on baritone, the front line is rich in brisk ideas. The two-bassist formula can sound a bit clichéd and needs good engineering to pull it off. It's nicely done here, with Morris's simpler lines thudding out of the left channel and McBride doing more of the intricate stuff; they play a long unaccompanied opening to 'The Matter At Hand', plucked and arco in superb counterpoint. Between them they create a time so solid and resonant that the splendidly named Galipault is able to embellish with some highly musical, light-toned stuff. It's Dennis, though, who commands most of the attention, as he should.

Also, in brief:

 Catechism Music & Arts CD913. 7/87.

Recorded in London with British and Afro-British free players. Flat sound, but great playing. Formerly on Daagnim.

Jerry Gonzalez (born 1949)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN, PERCUSSION

Though he turns up as a big-band percussionist and percussion teacher, he's at his best fronting Afro-Cuban outfits.

(*) Ya Yo Me Cure American Clave/Pangaea PAN 6242 Gonzalez; Steve Turre (tb, conch, perc); Mario Rivera (ts, v); Hilton Ruiz (p); Edgardo Miranda (g, cuatro); Andy Gonzalez (b, v); Don Alias (d); Nicky Marrero (perc); Gene Golden (perc, v); Milton Cardona, Frankie Rodriguez (v, perc). 7 & 8/79.
(*) Earthdance Sunnyside SSCD 1050 Gonzalez; Joe Ford (as); Carter Jefferson (ts); Larry Willis (p); Andy Gonzalez (b); Steve Berrios (d). 10/90.
(*) Moliendo Café: To Wisdom The Prize Sunnyside SSCD 1061 As above. 9/91.
 Fire Dance Milestone MCD 9258 As above, except omit Jefferson; add John Stubblefield (ts). 2/96.

Earlier Enja discs and a couple more Milestones are currently unavailable, which is a pity because Gonzalez seems to have drifted from view. His Fort Apache Band was always a guarantee of excitement. It's a relatively unusual Latin-based player who programmes a lot of Monk and Wayne Shorter, and alludes to them elsewhere, as on 'El Toro' from the Moliendo Café disc. Gonzalez also flirts with kitsch, covering both 'Summertime' and 'Corcovado' on that same record and just about pulling it off. The arrival of Stubblefield tightened up the sound and seemed to set Ford free, particularly when he moves to soprano.

The debut record seems to have a charmed life, still available after nearly 30 years. In many respects, it's the best of the lot, fresh, authentic but with the quirky stamp of a Kip Hanrahan production on it. Don't be put off by the superfluity of percussion and vocals. It's all done with taste and precision: charmed, and charming.

Brad Goode (born 1963)

TRUMPET

Able Chicagoan, who also plays bass and drums.

 Toy Trumpet Steeplechase SCCD 31491 Goode; Ira Sullivan (ss, t); Jodie Christian (p); Larry Kohut (b); Dana Hall (d). 8/94.
 By Myself Steeplechase SCCD 31506 Goode; Ted Rosenthal (p); Steve LaSpina (b); Matt Wilson (d). 12/00.
Raymond Scott's title-piece and Coltrane's 'Resolution' seem unlikely picks for a relatively straight-ahead session, but Goode makes sense of them both within his own idiom, and in Sullivan and Christian he has colleagues who know how to balance the abstract and the earthy. Nine-minute versions of 'Invitation' and 'Alone Together' fail to wrest anything new from the old theme, a sign that there isn't quite enough in the session to deliver more than a generous LP's-worth.

Though Sullivan offered both terse soprano and an intriguingly muted trumpet sound on the first Steeplechase, Goode has generally preferred to work in trumpet and rhythm sections. On By Myself he's probably left with too much to do to save the day. Again, a couple of tracks pall long before they're over; his own 'Four-Note Blues' is clever enough, but doesn't have the substance to sustain a nearly 11-minute reading. 'The End Of A Love Affair' is better, not least because it seems to have an emotional narrative running through it. LaSpina is the key player on this, particularly when he wields his bow. The Benny Goodman theme 'Goodbye' is an unusual and effective blowing line for the trumpeter.

 Hypnotic Suggestion Delmark DE567 Goode; Adrean Farrugia (p); Kerry Sill (b); Dana Hall (d). 2/05.
Unlike most of his contemporaries, Goode has never felt the need to move to New York. Living in Colorado seems to suit his self-determined approach, and though he returns to Chicago to record this, he's not playing unambiguously in a hometown style, either. The self-penned title-track is his strongest statement yet, a sweeping, dreamy idea that has no obvious antecedent. He follows, typically, with 'Once Upon A Summertime' and a brisk 'Bemsha Swing' and manages for a change to deliver a consistent quality throughout the album. The band isn't well-known – Hall's the exception – but they do him proud.

 Nature Boy Delmark DE 578 Goode; Jeff Jenkins (p); Johannes Weidenmueller (b); Todd Reid (d). 2/06.
He's still a quietly daring fellow. Compare the plangent lyricism of 'Nature Boy', the notes delicately strained with emotion, with the stop-time bugling effects of 'Nightmare Of The Mechanized World'. Then 'Sealed With A Kiss' receives a poppy treatment over a back-beat, Brad playing with his mute in. The set goes on in something like this vein, though none of the other juxtapositions are quite so stark. Eddie Harris's 'Infrapolations' is an interesting inclusion, again muted, and the closing 'All Through The Night' bustles along unexpectedly. Intriguing and enigmatic.

Also, in brief:

 Shock Of The New Delmark DE 440. 92.
The debut disc is still around, but Brad's outclassed by his sidemen.

 Inside Chicago: Volumes 1–4 Steeplechase SCCD 31500 / 31501 / 31531 / 31532. 92–98.
Club dates with Von Freeman (ts), extensively documented.

Benny Goodman (1909–86)

CLARINET, VOICE

Studied clarinet from age of 11, began working two years later, and joined the Ben Pollack band in Chicago. Studio work in New York followed until he began bandleading in 1934, becoming one of the most popular in America. Survived the big-band decline and toyed with bebop, as well as occasionally playing the classical repertoire. Continued to tour with small groups and occasional big bands in the '70s and '80s. Despite a martinet reputation, he was a hugely successful leader. The early hot style matured into a calmer manner, marked by unflinching dedication to his instrument.

 Benny Goodman 1928–1931 Classics 693 Goodman; Wingy Manone (t); Jimmy McPartland (c); Tommy Dorsey, Glenn Miller (tb); Fud Livingston, Larry Binyon (cl, ts); Sid Stoneburn (cl, as); Bud Freeman (ts); Vic Breidis, Joe Sullivan, Mel Stitzel (p); Eddie Lang, Dick Morgan (g); Herman Foster (bj); Harry Goodman (b); Bob Conselman, Gene Krupa (d); Harold Arlen, Grace Johnston, Scrappy Lambert, Paul Small (v). 1/28–2/31.
 Benny Goodman 1931–1933 Classics 719 Goodman; Charlie Teagarden, Manny Klein, Shirley Clay, Bunny Berigan (t); Jack Teagarden, Tommy Dorsey, Glenn Miller (tb); Sid Stoneburn (cl, as); Larry Binyon (cl, ts, f); Art Karle (ts); Irving Brodsky, Joe Sullivan (p); Eddie Lang, Dick McDonough (g); Artie Bernstein (b); Gene Krupa, Ray Bauduc, Johnny Williams (d); Billie Holiday, Smith Ballew, Paul Small, Dick Robertson (v). 3/31–12/33.
 The Young Benny Goodman 1928–1931 Timeless CBC 1-088 Similar to above, plus orchestras led by Herb Gordon, Carl Fenton and Ben Pollack. 1/28–10/31.
Goodman's earliest dates as a leader are rough-and-ready New York jazz, with McPartland's gruff lead adding to the grit and Benny doubling on alto and baritone. The notorious 'Shirt Tail Stomp', in which the group lampooned the jazz clichés of the time, became a minor hit. Goodman's two solos, 'That's A Plenty' and 'Clarinetitis', are virtuosic, and a subsequent date in Chicago yielded two more gutsy small-group titles with Manone and Freeman. After that, the rest of Classics 693 and all of 719 are polite, inconsequential dance music. Elements of swing start to creep in, but the often stellar personnel doesn't play much jazz, and the most notable thing is the arrival of young Billie Holiday on two of the final tracks.

The Timeless collection is a very mixed batch, a lot of it pretty ordinary dance music, but Goodman collectors will welcome such a beautifully prepared issue: typically superb transfers and exemplary documentation.

(*) Benny Goodman 1934–1935 Classics 744 Goodman; Manny Klein, Charles Margulis, Charlie Teagarden, George Thow, Russ Case, Jerry Neary, Sam Shapiro, Pee Wee Irwin, Art Sylvester, Ralph Muzillo (t); Sonny Lee, Jack Teagarden, Red Ballard, Jack Lacey (tb); Hymie Schertzer, Ben Kantor, Toots Mondello (as); Coleman Hawkins, Hank Ross, Arthur Rollini, Dick Clark (ts); Claude Thornhill, Arthur Schutt, Frank Froeba, Teddy Wilson (p); Dick McDonough, George Van Eps, Benny Martel (g); Artie Bernstein, Harry Goodman, Hank Wayland (b); Ray McKinley, Sammy Weiss, Gene Krupa (d); Mildred Bailey, Ann Graham, Helen Ward, Buddy Clark (v). 2/34–1/35.

 Benny Goodman 1935 Classics 769 Goodman; Jerry Neary, Pee Wee Irwin, Bunny Berigan, Nate Kazebier, Ralph Muzillo (t); Red Ballard, Jack Lacey, Jack Teagarden, Joe Harris (tb); Toots Mondello, Hymie Schertzer (as); Arthur Rollini, Dick Clark (ts); Frank Froeba (p); Allan Reuss, George Van Eps (g); Harry Goodman (b); Gene Krupa (d); Helen Ward, Ray Hendricks, Buddy Clark (v). 1–7/35.

 Benny Goodman 1935–1936 Classics 789 As above, except omit Neary, Lacey, Teagarden, Van Eps, Hendricks, Clark; add Harry Geller (t); Bill De Pew (as); Teddy Wilson, Jess Stacy (p). 7/35–4/36.

 Benny Goodman 1936 Classics 817 As above, except omit Mondello, Froeba; add Chris Griffin, Manny Klein (t); Murray McEachern (tb). 4–8/36.

(*) Benny Goodman 1936 Vol. 2 Classics 836 As above, except omit Klein, Geller; add Sterling Bose, Zeke Zarchy, Ziggy Elman (t); Vido Musso (ts); Lionel Hampton (vib). 8–11/36.

(*) Benny Goodman 1936–1937 Classics 858 As above, except omit Bose, Zarchy; add Irving Goodman, Harry James (t); George Koenig (as); Margaret McCrae, Jimmy Rushing, Frances Hunt (v). 12/36–7/37.

Goodman was struggling as a bandleader until the mystical night of 21 August 1935 that inaugurated the swing era with his broadcast from Los Angeles. He already had a good band: the reed section was skilful, the trumpets – boosted by the brief recruitment of Berigan – strong, and the book bulging with material. Fletcher Henderson's arrangements would help to make Goodman's fortune – 'Blue Skies', 'King Porter Stomp', 'Basin Street Blues' – with Jimmy Mundy and Edgar Sampson charts of a similar calibre.

At this stage, though, Goodman played more of an ensemble role than that of star leader – at least in terms of the sound of his clarinet and its place on the records. Solos are usually quite short and pithy, but he rightly takes the lion's share. What one notes about the records is their smooth, almost ineluctable power and fleetness. Krupa's drumming energized the orchestra, but its brass and reed sections were such fine executants (matched only by Lunceford's band) that they generated their own inner swing. Henderson, Mundy and Sampson, in a gesture that has dominated big-band writing to this day, pointed up those strengths without looking for fancy textures or subtleties.

The Classics series, moving chronologically through the Columbia and Victor sessions, offers a comprehensive overview. Classics 744 finds the band still in an awkward, transitory phase, more or less resolved by the end of Classics 769, which has the first Henderson arrangements, the classic reading of 'King Porter Stomp' and the big hit 'Blue Skies'. The sound of the band, comparatively muffled on the Columbia sessions, is smoother, bigger and more sophisticated by the time the Victor dates were properly under way. Classics 789 also includes the first tracks by the trio, and though this disc also marks Berigan's departure – leaving a gap until Harry James arrived – one can hear the orchestra growing in stature. Classics 817 and 836 see Mundy coming on board as arranger; Ziggy Elman's arrival in the trumpet section in October 1936 adds some extra firepower. Classics 858 sees James coming into the band, and the record ends on the studio version of 'Sing, Sing, Sing', one of the most familiar set-pieces of the whole swing era.

(*) Benny Goodman 1937 Classics 879 Goodman; Harry James, Ziggy Elman, Gordon Griffin (t); Red Ballard, Murray McEachern, Vernon Brown (tb); Hymie Schertzer, Bill De Pew, George Koenig (as); Babe Russin, Arthur Rollini, Vido Musso (ts); Jess Stacy (p); Allan Reuss (g); Harry Goodman (b); Gene Krupa (d). 7–11/37.

(*) Benny Goodman 1937–1938 Classics 899 Similar to above. 11/37–3/38.

 Benny Goodman 1938 Classics 925 As above, except omit McEachern, Koenig; add Irving Goodman, Corky Cornelius (t); Bruce Squires (tb); Noni Bernardi, Dave Matthews, Milt Yaner (as); Lester Young, Jerry Jerome, Bud Freeman (ts); Freddie Green, Ben Heller (g); Walter Page (b); Dave Tough, Buddy Shutz (d); Martha Tilton (v). 3–8/38.

 Benny Goodman 1938 Vol. 2 Classics 961 Similar to above. 11/38.

Goodman took charts from many hands: Henderson, Mundy, James, Sampson, Basie and even Mary Lou Williams. The drawback here is that the refusal to cherrypick means that Goodman's more routine material is included. Still, the quality on both Classics 879 and 899 is consistently high; the two 1938 CDs just slip back a notch for inconsistent sound.

CORE COLLECTION

* At Carnegie Hall 1938 – Complete

Columbia C2K 65143 2CD Goodman; Ziggy Elman, Buck Clayton, Harry James, Gordon Griffin (t); Bobby Hackett (c); Red Ballard, Vernon Brown (tb); Hymie Schertzer, George Koenig, Johnny Hodges (as); Arthur Rollini, Lester Young, Babe Russin (ts); Harry Carney (bs); Jess Stacy, Teddy Wilson, Count Basie (p); Lionel Hampton (vib); Allan Reuss, Freddie Green (g); Harry Goodman, Walter Page (b); Gene Krupa (d). 1/38.

A famous occasion, and the music still stands up extraordinarily well. This was one of those events – like Ellington at Newport 1956 – when jazz history is spontaneously changed, even if Goodman had clearly planned the whole thing as a crowning manoeuvre. Unmissable points: Krupa's fantastically energetic drumming throughout, leading to the roof coming off on 'Sing, Sing, Sing'; an Ellington tribute and a jam on 'Honeysuckle Rose' with various guests from other bands (George Simon called it 'ineffectual', but it's very exciting); Ziggy Elman powering through 'Swingtime In The Rockies'; and the original quartet going through its best paces. But the whole affair is atmospheric with the sense of a man and a band taking hold of their moment. Columbia's new edition is a model effort, masterminded by Phil Schapp, whose indomitable detective work finally tracked down the original acetates and gave us the music in the best sound we'll ever get; with powerful, even thrilling, ambience.

(*) Benny Goodman 1938–1939 Classics 990 Goodman; Harry James, Ziggy Elman, Gordon Griffin, Charlie Spivak, Bunny

Berigan, Sonny Dunham, Irving Goodman (t); Red Ballard, Vernon Brown, Jack Teagarden, Tommy Dorsey (tb); Dave Matthews, Noni Bernardi, Hymie Schertzer (as); Arthur Rollini, Jerry Jerome, Eddie Miller (ts); Jess Stacy, Teddy Wilson, Bob Zurke (p); Lionel Hampton (vib, d); Ben Heller, Carmen Mastren (g); John Kirby, Bob Haggart, Harry Goodman (b); Buddy Schutz; Ray Bauduc (d); Martha Tilton, Johnny Mercer (v). 12/38–4/49.

(*) Benny Goodman 1939 Classics 1025 As above, except omit James, Spivak, Dunham, Irving Goodman, Teagarden, Dorsey, Miller, Wilson, Zurke, Hampton, Mastren, Kirby, Haggart, Bauduc; add Corky Cornelius, Jimmy Maxwell, Johnny Martell (t); Bruce Squires, Ted Vesly (tb); Toots Mondello, Buff Estes (as); Bus Bassey (ts); Fletcher Henderson (p); Arnold Covey, Charlie Christian (g); Artie Bernstein (b); Nick Fatool (d); Louis Tobin (v). 4–9/39.

(*) Benny Goodman 1939 Vol. 2 Classics 1064 As above, except omit Cornelius, Griffin, Rollini, Stacey, Covey, Tilton, Mercer; add Johnny Guarnieri (p); Lionel Hampton (vib); Mildred Bailey (v). 9–12/39.

The band sounds invincibly handsome and powerful in spite of some personnel fluctuations. James departs halfway through Classics 990, as does Jess Stacy, with Fletcher Henderson taking over at the piano and adding several more arrangements to the book. Christian's arrival is also a matter of celebration. Goodman had his share of indifferent material, but he seemed to get less ephemera than, say, the Dorseys had to handle, and every session has at least one good opportunity for band and soloist. Among the highlights are 'Blue Lou' and 'The Blues', made by an all-star Victor entourage at a one-off session (Classics 990); 'The Kingdom Of Swing' and 'Jumpin' At The Woodside' (Classics 1025, the latter title from Goodman's first session for Columbia); and Christian's first small-group date and Goodman's theme 'Let's Dance' (Classics 1064). The Victor tracks are in excellent sound, but the Columbia sessions are less predictable in transfer quality.

* Plays Fletcher Henderson Hep 1038 As appropriate discs above. 4/35–4/39.

* Plays Jimmy Mundy Hep 1039 As appropriate discs above. 9/35–11/37.

These two excellently remastered discs offer a good way of exploring the key points of Benny's music in the '30s. It was Henderson's arrangements, still rooted in his favourite call-and-response patterns, that gave Goodman's band its first real identity. Mundy's charts follow on from Henderson's and are scarcely more subtle. His favourite riff devices occur again and again, and only in some of his saxophone writing is there any genuine freshness. Nevertheless, the band's superb craftsmanship makes the arrangements fit snugly into what Goodman wanted. None of this music challenges the best of Ellington, Basie or Lunceford, but the particular crispness of Goodman's band is undeniable.

CORE COLLECTION

* The Complete Small Group Sessions

RCA Victor 68764 3CD Goodman; Lionel Hampton (vib); Teddy Wilson, Jess Stacy (p); John Kirby (b); Buddy Schutz, Dave Tough, Gene Krupa (d). 7/35–4/39.

Goodman's small groups set a new standard for 'chamber-jazz', the kind of thing Red Nichols had tried in the '20s, but informed with a more disciplined – and blacker – sensibility. That said, Goodman's own playing, for all its fineness of line and tonal elegance, could be blisteringly hot, and he is by far the strongest personality on all their records, even with Hampton and Krupa present. These tracks have been out many times over the years, but this is a notably handsome and comprehensive presentation. Perhaps the trio sessions, made before Hampton's arrival, are the most satisfying, since the brilliant empathy between Goodman and Wilson is allowed its clearest expression. Certainly the likes of 'After You've Gone' and 'Body And Soul' express a smooth yet spontaneously refined kind of improvisation. Hampton made the music swing a little more obtrusively, yet he often plays a rather contained ensemble role, the vibes shimmering alongside Wilson's playing, and it created a fascinating platform for Goodman's lithest playing. Soon to be formulaic, but it was a very good formula.

(*) Benny Goodman 1939–1940 Classics 1098 Goodman; Ziggy Elman, Jimmy Maxwell, Johnny Martel, Irving Goodman (t); Red Ballard, Vernon Brown, Ted Vesley (tb): Toots Mondello, Buff Estes, Les Robinson (as); Bus Bassey, Jerry Jerome (ts); Count Basie, Johnny Guarnieri (p); Arnold Covey, Charlie Christian (g); Artie Bernstein (b); Nick Fatool (d); Helen Forrest (v). 12/39–4/40.

(*) Benny Goodman 1940 Classics 1131 As above, except add Cootie Williams (t); Dudley Brooks (p); Lionel Hampton (vib), Fred Astaire (v). 4–11/40.

(*) Benny Goodman 1940–1941 Classics 1154 Basically as above. 12/40–1/41

(*) Benny Goodman 1941 Classics 1202 Goodman; Alec Fila, Jimmy Maxwell, Cootie Williams, Irving Goodman (t); Lou McGarity, Cutty Cutshall (tb); Skippy Martin, Gus Bivona, Bob Snyder, Les Robinson (as); Georgie Auld, Jack Henderson, Pete Mondello (ts) Teddy Wilson, Count Basie (p); Mike Bryan, Charlie Christian (g); Artie Bernstein (b); Dave Tough, Jo Jones (d); Helen Forrest (v). 1–3/41.

Goodman's orchestral recordings were evolving subtly. Eddie Sauter began introducing all kinds of interest in the scores. His charts for 'Zaggin' With Zig' (for Elman) and a particularly fine 'How High The Moon' (both on Classics 1098) brought new refinements, and even more telling were his many settings for Goodman's new vocalist, Helen Forrest, clearly one of the best big-band singers. Even seemingly unpromising material such as 'The Fable Of The Rose' and 'Perfidia' were turned into excellent records. Fans of the sextet with Williams, Basie and Christian are catered for by such tunes as 'Till Tom Special' (Classics 1098) and a personal favourite of ours, 'Breakfast Feud' (Classics 1202). The loyal Henderson was still much involved; 'Henderson Stomp' (Classics 1131) is outstanding, with superb Williams. In short, even when the band was paying its commercial dues, there was always something interesting going on, and Goodman's own mastery of his horn was complete. High marks for the music, not the remastering, which isn't so much plain bad as annoyingly inconsistent.

* Sextet Featuring Charlie Christian Columbia CK 40379 Goodman; Cootie Williams (t); Georgie Auld (ts); Fletcher Henderson, Johnny Guarnieri, Count Basie (p); Lionel Hampton (vib); Charlie Christian (g); Artie Bernstein (b); Nick Fatool, Jo Jones, Dave Tough (d). 39–41.

 The Rehearsal Sessions 1940–1941 Jazz Unlimited JUCD 2013 As above, except omit Henderson, Guarnieri, Hampton, Fatool, Tough; add Ken Kersey (p); Harry Jaeger (d). 11/40–1/41.

 Small Groups 1941–1945 Columbia CK 44437 Goodman; Lou McGarity, Cutty Cutshall (tb); Red Norvo (vib); Teddy Wilson, Mel Powell (p); Tom Morgan, Mike Bryan (g); Slam Stewart, Sid

Weiss (b); Morey Feld, Ralph Collier (d); Peggy Lee (v). 10/41–2/45.

Christian was a once-in-a-lifetime collaborator with Goodman, who had bad luck with some of his best sidemen (Christian, Berigan, Hasselgård all came to untimely ends). The first Sextet compilation is full of finely pointed small-group jazz, hinting every now and then at bop. Equally interesting is the mixture of personalities – Williams, Goodman, Auld, Basie – which gives the sextet performances a blend of coolness and resilience that seems to be a direct extension of the leader's own ambitions. Goodman had led a nearly perfect double-life with the small groups and the big band, balancing dance material and 'listening' jazz and making both commercially and artistically successful records; part of the small groups' freshness may be due to the fact that several participants – Wilson, Hampton, Christian – weren't regular members of the big band. But after a reorganization in 1941 he started using regular band members, who turn up on the Small Groups 1941–1945 compilation. While this is a less impressive set than the earlier small-band discs – Cutshall and McGarity being curious choices and the timbre of most of the tracks sounding like a slightly paler echo of what had gone before – Goodman still plays very well. The Rehearsal Sessions brings together multiple takes on four tunes plus a remarkable 27-minute track that details the sextet working towards a finished version of 'Benny's Bugle' (where Cootie Williams eventually has to play the intro 23 times). For Goodman scholars rather than the general collector, but intriguing stuff.

(*) Benny Goodman 1941 Vol. 2 Classics 1236 Goodman; Cootie Williams, Billy Butterfield, Jimmy Maxwell, Irving Goodman, Gordon Griffin (t) Lou McGarity, Cutty Cutshall (tb); Les Robinson, Gus Bivona, Gene Kinsey, Clint Neagley (as); Georgie Auld, Pete Mondello, Vido Musso, George Berg (ts); Skippy Martin (bs); Johnny Guarnieri, Teddy Wilson, Mel Powell (p); Charlie Christian, Mike Bryan, Tom Morgan (g); Artie Bernstein, Walter Looss, John Simmons (b); Dave Tough, Jo Jones, J. C. Heard, Sid Catlett (d); Helen Forrest, Tommy Taylor (v). 3–8/41.

(*) Benny Goodman 1941 Vol. 3 Classics 1271 As above, except omit Irving Goodman, Griffin, Robinson, Bivona, Auld, Mondello, Guarnieri, Wilson, Bryan, Bernstein, Looss, Tough, Jones, Heard, Forrest; add Al Davis (t); Chuck Gentry (bs); Mort Stuhlmaker, Sid Weiss (b); Ralph Collier (d); Peggy Lee (v). 8–10/41.

(*) Benny Goodman 1941–1942 Classics 1303 As above, except omit Stuhlmaker, Taylor; add Johnny Ferrante, Bernie Privin (t); Julie Schwartz (as); Art Lund, Tommy Dix (v). 10/41–1/42.

The quality of Goodman's material, his arrangers and his refusal to let his vocalists dominate recording sessions helped set his band aside from the other white swing orchestras. The occasional bit of fluff slips through, but there isn't a single session without at least one outstanding performance. Among the highlights: the unrehearsed warm-up 'Waitin' For Benny' by the sextet (minus Goodman!) and Jimmy Mundy's charts for 'Fiesta In Blue' and 'Air Mail Special' (Classics 1236); the first two takes of Sauter's astonishing 'Clarinet A La King', Mel Powell's thrilling 'The Earl' and the arrival of Peggy Lee (Classics 1271); the sextet doing 'If I Had You' and 'Limehouse Blues', Lee on 'Blues In The Night' and a scruffy V-Disc of 'Jersey Bounce'.

 Benny Goodman 1942 Classics 1324 Goodman; Bernie Privin, Jimmy Maxwell, Al Davis, John Napton (t); Lou McGarity, Cutty Cutshall, Charlie Castaldo (tb); Clint Neagley, Sol Kane, Bud Shiffman (as); Vido Musso, George Berg (ts); Chuck Gentry, Art Ralston (bs); Mel Powell (p); Tom Morgan (g); Sid Weiss (b); Ralph Collier, Alvin Stoller (d); Peggy Lee, Art Lund (v). 1–5/42.

(*) Benny Goodman 1942–1944 Classics 1335 Goodman; Bernie Privin, Cootie Williams, Tony Faso, Lawrence Stearns, Lee Castle, Charlie Frankhauser, Frank Berardi, Johnny Dee, Billy Butterfield, Charlie Shavers, Mickey McMickle (t); Lou McGarity, Charlie Castaldo, H. Collins, Bill Harris, Al Mastren, Vernon Brown, Jack Satterfield (tb); Hymie Schertzer, Bud Shiffman, Clint Neagley, Leonard Kaye, Heinie Beau, Eddie Rosa, Jules Rubin (as); Jerry Jerome, George Berg, Jon Walton, Leonard Sims, Al Klink, Zoot Sims, Jack Simms, Art Rollini, Don Byas (ts); Johnny McAfee, Bob Poland, Eddie Beau, Ernie Caceres (bs); Mel Powell, Jess Stacy, Teddy Wilson (p); Dave Barbour, Allan Reuss (g); Sid Weiss, Cliff Hill (b); Alvin Stoller, Howard Daviesa, Gene Krupa, Morey Feld, Cozy Cole, Specs Powell (d); Dick Haymes, Peggy Lee, Buzz Alston (v). 2/42–7/44.

It's interesting to hear Goodman tackle 'A String Of Pearls' (Classics 1324), and it underscores how his band was much more of a jazz orchestra than Glenn Miller's tame dance band was – even if there's nothing as individual about that performance as Bobby Hackett's solo for Miller. On the same disc there's a quartet/sextet date with BG at his best on 'St Louis Blues', and another host of Peggy Lee features. Classics 1335 features three sessions squeezed in before the recording ban and most of the rest is V-Disc material. Dick Haymes gets his first features with the band and the studio sides for Columbia close on Mel Powell's fizzing chart for 'Mission To Moscow'. The V-Discs are nearly all instrumental (though Benny does sing on 'Dinah'!) and have a good share of clarinet. There are also quartet and trio sides which mark a reunion with Teddy Wilson.

 Benny Goodman 1945 Classics 1355 Goodman; Vincent Badale, Sonny Berman, Tony Faso, Alex Cuozzo, Stan Fishelson, Frank Lo Pinto (t); Trummy Young, Bill Pritchard, Don Matthew, Sy Shaeffer, Eddie Aulino, Chauncey Welsch (tb); Bill Shine, Aaron Sachs, Ray Beller, Hymie Schertzer, Ray Ekstrand (as); Al Epstein, Stan Kosow (ts); Danny Bank (bs); Charlie Queener, Teddy Wilson (p); Red Norvo (vib); Mike Bryan (g); Clyde Lombardi, Slam Stewart (b); Morey Feld (d); Jane Harvey, Bob Hayden, Kay Penton, Dottie Reid (v). 2–6/45.

 Benny Goodman 1945 Vol. 2 Classics 1366 Goodman; Chris Griffin, Vince Badale, Tony Faso, Frank Lo Pinto, Bernie Privin, John Best, Conrad Gozzo, Louis Mucci, Billy Butterfield (t); Trummy Young, Chauncey Welsch, Eddie Aulino, Tommy Reo, Sy Shaeffer, Dick LeFave (tb); Hymie Schertzer, Gerald Sanfino, Bill Shine (as); Peanuts Hucko, Stan Getz, Emmet Carls, Al Epstein (ts); Danny Bank (bs); Charlie Queener, Mel Powell (p); Red Norvo (vib); Mike Bryan (g); Clyde Lombardi, Slam Stewart, Barney Spieler (b); Morey Feld, Buddy Rich (d); Liza Morrow (v). 8–12/45.

(*) Benny Goodman 1946 Classics 1375 Goodman; John Best, Bernie Privin, Brodie Schroff, Mannie Klein, Nate Kazebier, Jimmy Blake, Dick Mains, Mickey McMickle (t); Kai Winding, Chauncey Welsch, Lou McGarity, Hoyt Bohannon, Eddie Benson, Dick LeFave, Cutty Cutshall (tb); Addison Collins, Leon Cox (frhn); Gerald Sanfino, Bill Shine, John Prager, Hymie Schertzer, Larry Molinelli (as); Lester Clark, Cliff Strickland, Stan Getz, Gish Gilbertson (ts); Danny Bank, Ralph Lo Polla, Al Klink (bs); Mel Powell, Joe Bushkin (p); Mike Bryan (g); Barney Spieler, Jack Lesberg (b); Johnny DeSoto, Ralph Collier, Louie Bellson (d); Lena Horne, Liza Morrow, Art Lund, Johnny White (v). 1–8/46.

 Benny Goodman 1946–1947 Classics 1385 Goodman; Mickey McMickle, Nate Kazebier, John Best, Dick Mains, Dale Pierce, Zeke Zarchy, Joe Triscari, George Wendt (t); Cutty Cutshall, Leon Cox, Red Ballard, Lou McGarity, Bill Schefer (tb); Addison [illegible]

Collins (frhn); Hymie Schertzer, Les Clarke, Larry Molinelli, Skeets Herfurt, Heinie Beau, Clint Bellew (as); Cliff Strickland, Zoot Sims, Babe Russin, Jack Chaney (ts); Al Klink, John Rotella, Chuck Gentry (bs); Joe Bushkin, Jess Stacy, Tommy Todd (p); Ernie Felice (acc); Johnny White (vib); Mike Bryan, Allan Reuss, Dave Barbour, Barney Kessel (g); Barney Spieler, Larry Breen, Harry Babasin (b); Louie Bellson, Sammy Weiss, Lou Fromm, Tommy Romersa (d); Eve Young, Art Lund, Johnny Mercer, Peggy Lee, Matt Dennis (v); strings. 8/46–3/47.

 Benny Goodman 1947 Classics 1396 Goodman; John Best, Nate Kazebier, George Seaburg, Frank Beach, Charlie Shavers, Irving Goodman (t); Lou McGarity, Ray Sims, Tommy Pederson, Hoyt Bohannon (tb); Gus Bivona, Heinie Beau, Benny Carter (as); Babe Russin, Zoot Sims, Dave Cavanaugh, Herbie Haymer, Stan Getz (ts); Chuck Gentry, Joe Koch (bs); Jimmy Rowles, Tommy Todd (p); Ernie Felice (acc); Red Norvo (vib, xy); Al Hendrickson, Irving Ashby (g); Harry Babasin, Red Callender (b); Don Lamond, Tommy Romersa, Lee Young (d); Lillian Lane, Stan Kenton (v). 4–6/47.

(*) Benny Goodman 1947 Vol. 2 Classics 1407 Goodman; Jake Porter, Irving Goodman, George Seaburg, Frank Beach, John Best (t); Herbie Harper, Lou McGarity, Tommy Pederson, Ed Kuzborski (tb); Jack Cave (frhn); George Smith, Nick Murmollo, Gus Bivona, Jack Dumont (as); Babe Russin, Bumps Myers (ts); Chuck Gentry (bs); Mel Powell, Teddy Wilson (p); Red Norvo (vib); Virginia Majewski (vla); Al Hendrickson (g, v); Harry Babasin, Artie Shapiro, Joe Mondragon (b); Dick Cornell, Louie Bellson, Tommy Romersa, Jimmy Crawford (d); Emma Lou Welch, Johnny Mercer, Peggy Lee, Margaret Whiting, The Pied Pipers (v). 8–11/47.

 Benny Goodman 1947–1948 Classics 1418 Goodman; John Best, Jake Porter, Irving Goodman, Ray Linn (t); Hoyt Bohannon, Herbie Harper, Tommy Pederson, Ed Kusby (tb); Sinclair Lott (frhn); Jackie Kelso, Nick Mumolo, Paul McLarand, Jack Dumont (as); Wardell Gray, Bumps Myers, Pete Pumiglio (ts); Chuck Gentry (bs, bsx); Mary Lou Williams, Mel Powell, (p); Red Norvo (vib); Louis Kievman (vla); Al Hendrickson, Allan Reuss, Billy Bauer (g); Clyde Lombardi, Red Callender, Artie Shapiro (b); Tommy Romersa, Bill Douglass, Lee Young, Mel Zelnick (d); Jackie Searle, Emma Lou Welch, Peggy Lee, Jackie Searle, The Sportsmen (v). 2/47–8/48.

Goodman's professionalism means that the music never drops below a certain level, and even if there's little else to listen to, the clarinet is always worthwhile. Classics 1355 includes four different versions of 'Gotta Be This Or That' and has some tiresome Slam Stewart contributions, but there are two fine sextet titles and some exuberant vocals by Jane Harvey. Classics 1366 mixes small-group and orchestral titles. Stewart is again a blight, but there is some beautiful interplay between Goodman and Mel Powell. This disc features a number of scarce titles, Liza Morrow, the band's then-new vocalist, has some appealing features, and there is a neat Fletcher Henderson chart for 'Fascinating Rhythm'. The 1946 disc opens with a string of V-Disc titles and there is again some tingling dialogue between Goodman and Powell on the likes of 'Exactly Like You'. Lena Horne turns up to sing on 'Come To Baby, Do' and sounds terrific. Thereafter the studio sessions are somewhat plainer, with Goodman indulging his curious penchant for singing on three tracks.

Classics 1385 opens with nine final titles for Columbia, three of which have a string section somewhat uncomfortably lined up alongside the band. 'Hora Staccato' isn't far off klezmer music. But then Goodman signed to Capitol and began one of his most controversial periods, leading towards his flirtation with bebop. This has been over-dramatized by Goodman scholars – it's not so very different from what went before – but there are certainly fresh challenges set by the two Mary Lou Williams charts which Goodman cut at his first Capitol date, the eerie 'Lonely Moments' and 'Whistle Blues'. But much of the disc is filled with small-group tracks where Goodman hired Ernie Felice to play accordion: an interesting departure, though not like having Lionel Hampton on hand.

The first 1947 disc commences with nine more small-group titles, four of which are basically duets with Jimmy Rowles. The orchestral sides suggest Goodman perhaps slowly turning his mind towards the new developments, though charts such as 'Tattletale' and Ralph Burns's 'Eight, Nine And Ten' are hardly shocking, and 'Dizzy Fingers' is a clarinet feature that is close to novelty music. The final sextet date has 'The Maids Of Cadiz', later appropriated by Gil Evans for Miles Davis.

Track for track, the next two discs are the strongest in this series. Sextet tracks such as 'Hi'ya Sophia' and 'Nagasaki' show his old style still secure and full of energy, the full band is still working over Fletcher Henderson arrangements, and there are ten trio titles which offer a reunion with Teddy Wilson and some typically gorgeous and high-flying playing. Classics 1418 has some peerless singing from Peggy Lee, and a series of studio dates that were packed into a single month because of the oncoming recording ban of early 1948. 'Shirley Steps Out', 'Henderson Stomp' and other pieces are among Goodman's fiercest sextet titles, but there's hardly a dud track on this disc, ending as it does with a V-Disc session where Wardell Gray shares the front line and Goodman finally throws down the gauntlet with 'Benny's Bop'.

(*) Plays Mel Powell Hep 1055 As various discs above. 1/41–5/46.

A strong selection from a relatively unconsidered period. Besides Mel Powell's arrangements, there are charts by Jimmy Mundy (an excellent feature for Cootie Williams on 'Fiesta In Blue'), Edgar Sampson, Margie Gibson, Skip Martin and Buster Harding, although Powell's scores are arguably the most interesting – 'Jersey Bounce', 'Mission To Moscow', 'Clarinade' and, above all, his early pieces 'The Count' and 'The Earl'. As well as Williams, there are one or two surprise soloists, including Stan Getz on 'Lucky'.

(*) Benny's Bop Hep CD 36 Goodman; Howard Reich, Doug Mettome, Al Stewart, Nick Travis (t); Milt Bernhart, Eddie Bert, George Monte (tb); Åke 'Stan' Hasselgård (cl); Mitch Goldberg, Angelo Cicalese (as); Wardell Gray, Eddie Wasserman (ts); Larry Molinelli (bs); Mary Lou Williams, Buddy Greco, Barbara Carroll (p); Billy Bauer, Francis Beecher (g); Clyde Lombardi (b); Mel Zelnick, Sonny Igoe (d); Louis Martinez (perc); Jackie Searle, Terry Swope (v). 7/48–3/49.

Goodman was interested by the new music but he never felt very comfortable with it, and Hasselgård, present on three tracks here, was much more at home in bop's surroundings. There isn't anything here that would have troubled Parker and Gillespie. More involving is some superb playing from Wardell Gray. This is V-Disc and broadcast material, conscientiously remastered, and the leader plays imperturbably well.

(*) Live Swing Sessions 1943–1949 Jazz Unlimited 203 2092 2CD As various discs above. 43–49.

One disc of big-band titles and one of small groups, and a thoroughly enjoyable cross-section of Goodman's music during the decade, as it was captured on various airshot recordings.

Challenging pieces such as 'Lonely Moments' are here as well as more familiar staples from the Goodman book. Mixed sound, but it has good presence.

* B.G. In Hi-Fi Capitol 92684-2 Goodman; Ruby Braff, Charlie Shavers, Chris Griffin, Carl Poole, Bernie Privin (t); Will Bradley, Vernon Brown, Cutty Cutshall (tb); Al Klink, Paul Ricci, Boomie Richman, Hymie Schertzer, Sol Schlinger (saxes); Mel Powell (p); Steve Jordan (g); George Duvivier (b); Bobby Donaldson, Jo Jones (d). 11/54.

Goodman left the big-band era with his finances and his technique intact, and although this was a more or less anachronistic programme of trio, quintet and big-band sides in 1954, the playing is so good that it's a resounding success. A few Goodman staples are mixed with Basie material such as 'Jumpin' At The Woodside', and Benny's readings match the originals. Shavers, Braff, Richman and Powell have fine moments; Goodman is peerless. The sound is dry but excellent, and the CD reissue adds four tracks, including a beautiful trio version of 'Rose Room'.

* The Complete Capitol Trios Capitol 521225-2 Goodman; Teddy Wilson, Jimmy Rowles, Mel Powell (p); Jimmy Crawford, Tom Romersa, Eddie Grady, Bobby Donaldson (d). 11/47–11/54.

Ten tracks from 1947, with Wilson and Crawford, then ten more from 1954, four with Rowles and six with Powell. No evidence that Goodman saw the LP format as an excuse to stretch out; only two of the later pieces break the 3½-minute barrier. Throughout all these sessions, he plays marvellously, often in ways he wasn't supposed to be so good at; try the blues solo on 'After Hours'. Wilson, Rowles and Powell are all excellent in their different ways, Powell arguably taking the honours.

(*) Basel 1959 TCB 43032 Goodman; Jack Sheldon (t); Bill Harris (tb); Jerry Dodgion (as, f); Flip Phillips (ts); Red Norvo (vib); Russ Freeman (p); Jimmy Wyble (g); Red Wootten (b); John Marksham (d). 10/59.

 An Airmail Special From Berlin Jasmine JASCD 402 2CD As above, except add Anita O'Day (v). 10/59.

Benny is clearly in good heart in Basel, with a pellucid clarinet treatment of 'Memories Of You', and with Sheldon and the inimitable Harris both in top fettle this set generates some real heat. The sound is a bit fusty in parts, but not too bad. The Jasmine set offers the Berlin date from the same tour and spreads the whole concert over two CDs (some 95 minutes of music). Anita O'Day is on four tunes. The sound wavers like a recalcitrant radio dial, and the drums suffer a bit, but it hardly spoils the music.

(*) Benny In Brussels Volumes 1 & 2 Collectables COL-CD-6897 Goodman; Taft Jordan, John Frosk, Billy Hodges, E. V. Perry (t); Vernon Brown, Rex Peer, Willie Dennis (tb); Al Block (as); Zoot Sims, Seldon Powell (ts); Gene Allen (bs); Roland Hanna (p); Arvell Shaw (b); Roy Burnes (d); Jimmy Rushing (v). 5/58.

Two Columbia albums on one disc. Goodman played this gig at the Brussels World's Fair and the reception was rapturous. This was Roland Hanna's 'big-time debut' and Goodman seems to like his playing on 'Hallelujah'. Jimmy Rushing was on the tour but he gets only two miserly appearances on a blues and a 'Mr Five By Five' which lasts barely a minute and a half.

 Together Again RCA Victor 68593-2 Goodman; Lionel Hampton (vib); Teddy Wilson (p); Gene Krupa (d). 2–8/63.

Although the quartet was together again, most of the tunes it played didn't come from its original book. The result is rather placid and amiable, lacking nothing in finesse but considerably short on the kind of cumulative power which the original sessions touched on.

 Jazz Masters 33 Verve 844410-2 Goodman; Warren Vaché (t); George Young (as); Scott Hamilton, Zoot Sims, Buddy Tate, Frank Wess (ts); Mary Lou Williams (p); Lionel Hampton (vib); Percy Heath (b); Connie Kay (d). 70–78.

 40th Anniversary Concert – Live At Carnegie Hall London 820349-2 2CD Goodman; Victor Paz, Warren Vaché, Jack Sheldon (t); Wayne Andre, George Masso, John Messner (tb); George Young, Mel Rodnon (as); Buddy Tate, Frank Wess (ts); Sol Schlinger (bs); Mary Lou Williams, Jimmy Rowles, John Bunch (p); Lionel Hampton (vib); Cal Collins, Wayne Wright (g); Michael Moore (b); Connie Kay (d); Martha Tilton, Debi Craig (v). 1/78.

LP-era Goodman is still poorly represented in the catalogues, which means that as far as reissue programmes go, he's squarely an artist of the swing era. A pity, since there is much of his 'senior' work which is well worth hearing. Goodman's enduring facility as a clarinettist is the most absorbing thing about these sessions. The Jazz Masters disc collates material from various appearances during the '70s, including a number of different generations involved, and makes a worthwhile sampler of Goodman's final period. At Carnegie Hall the band played a functional rather than challenging role, the job being to replicate standard scores as flawlessly as the leader wished, and although there are many fine players involved, Goodman's iron hand stifles anything freewheeling and he drives himself as hard as the others, the clarinet still august, refined, imperious.

Also, in brief:

* Plays Eddie Sauter Hep CD 1053. 9/39–1/46.

This collects 23 of Sauter's best charts in exemplary sound and documentation.

 New Sextet Sessions Ocium OCM 0042. 10/50–10/52.

Goodman dissolved his big band in 1949. These sextet sessions are smoothly effective, but never quite rekindle the spark.

(*) The Benny Goodman Story Capitol 833569-2. 12/55.

Occasioned by his film life-story, this remodelling of some old favourites was well done.

(*) Bangkok 1956 TCB 43042. 12/56.

With two numbers by the King of Thailand, this sounds like a group on its best behaviour rather than playing to strength.

 Live In The Sixties Jasmine JASCD 394. 9/60–4/62.

A sextet broadcast with Bobby Hackett and gruesome vocalist Charles DeForrest; a few big-band tracks, including BG sitting in with Ed Sullivan's house band.

 Hello Benny! / Made In Japan Capitol 581345-2. 65.

Hello Benny! put Goodman with a studio orchestra and some then-current tunes, including the Pink Panther theme. Pro that he was, he gives it his best shot. The quartet sounds more enthusiastic on the Japanese concert.

Andy Goodrich

ALTO SAXOPHONE

Born in Memphis, he worked for years in a Bird-inspired style before recording on his own account.

 Motherless Child Delmark DE495 Goodrich; Eddie Henderson (t, flhn); Harold Mabern, James Williams (p); Buster Williams (b); Billy Hart (d). 1/96.
Goodrich had been round for years, mostly working in education, when this was made, so there are no revelations. He's an old-school bopper (Parker's 'Quasimodo', Gryce's 'Reminiscing', Golson's 'Stablemates') who occasionally stretches out, as he does on 'Stranger In Paradise', and sometimes surprises mildly with a more modernist flourish, as on the recast title-tune. It's a great band, of course, and fittingly for someone who's worked so selflessly for the culture.

Alain Goraguer

PIANO

A Niçois, he was a leading French player of the early '50s

 Go-Go-Goraguer Emarcy 016563-2 Goraguer; Paul Rovère (b); Christian Garros (d). 56.
Boris Vian's accompanist and later Serge Gainsbourg's MD, Goraguer was much in debt to Bud Powell (as were so many of the French musicians of his era) but with plenty of interesting ideas of his own. His only featured recordings were a scarce Philips LP and an even rarer EP and here are all 16 of the tracks on this excellent entry in the Jazz In Paris series. The clattery sound gives an uptempo original such as 'Gogo's Goggles' the feel of some undiscovered Savoy session, but mostly these are French and American standards, which Goraguer embroiders with an elaborate, imaginative style that leans on bop's most rococo elements.

Bob Gordon (1928–55)

BARITONE SAXOPHONE

Killed in his car on the way to a concert, Gordon enjoyed only a brief career as the other great baritone man on the West Coast besides Gerry Mulligan.

 Moods In Jazz VSOP 14/15 Gordon; Herbie Harper (tb); Maurey Dell (p); Don Prell (b); George Redman (d). 12/53.
(*) Quintet/Sextet With Herbie Harper And Jack Montrose Lone Hill Jazz LHJ 10126 2CD As above, except add Conte Candoli (t); Jack Montrose (ts); Jimmy Rowles, Paul Moer (p); Harry Babasin, Joe Mondragon, Red Mitchell, Don Prell (b); Roy Harte, Shelly Manne, Bill Schneider (d). 12/53–6/55.
 Memorial Fresh Sound FSRCD 108 2CD Much as above. 54–55.
Gordon spent his early years in St Louis but went West in 1948. He did dance band and small-group work, and Harper and Montrose became close musical associates. These sessions were originally released under either Harper's, Montrose's or Gordon's names – the 10-inch LP Meet Mr. Gordon, made for Richard Bock's Pacific Jazz, was the only release under the saxophonist's banner in his own lifetime – and they are a valuable recovery. The date with Harper is less effective – much more like a rote West Coast studio blow, and in what sounds like a remastering from flawed vinyl – but the sessions with Montrose are another matter. Montrose is responsible for all of the original writing and he clearly had a very simpatico relationship with Gordon's style: 'After a while, when he'd play things I had written, it sounded like he was making them up.' Even simple lines such as 'Paradox' are made irresistible by the affinity between the tenor and baritone: Montrose has a more careful improvising manner, but it fits perfectly with Gordon's limber, more volatile sound. If he doesn't have quite the distinction that Mulligan could claim, the baritonist plays with great flair and intensity. The final date has Candoli arriving in the front line and the music is more soberly arranged for the three voices. There's now something of an embarrassment of riches, but the Lone Hill set does the job fine. Bob was killed on his way to a Pete Rugolo gig; another might-have-been in jazz history.

Bobby Gordon (born 1941)

CLARINET, VOICE

Studied with Joe Marsala, then was a regular at Eddie Condon's in the late '70s, followed by mainstream work. Now based in San Diego.

 Bobby Gordon/Keith Ingham/Hal Smith Trio Jump JCD12-17 Gordon; Keith Ingham (p); Hal Smith (d). 8/90.
 Don't Let It End Arbors ARCD 19112 Gordon; Adele Girard Marsala (hp); Ray Sherman (p); Morty Corb (b); Gene Estes (d). 7/92.
 Pee Wee's Song: The Music Of Pee Wee Russell Arbors ARCD 19130 Gordon; Jon-Erik Kellso (t); Dan Barrett (tb); Rick Fay (ts); Johnny Varro (p); Marty Grosz (g); Bob Haggart (b); Gene Estes (d). 9/93.
 Sextet Jazzology 323 Gordon; Vinnie Armstrong (p); Katie Cavera (g); Ken Ebert (vib); Mike Earls (b); Hal Smith (d). 03.
 Plays The Music Of Joe Marsala Arbors ARCD 19352 Gordon; Randy Reinhart (t); James Chirillo (g); Russell George (vn); Vince Giordano (b); Arnie Kinsella, Steve Little (d). 4/07.
A veteran mainstreamer of mellow fruitfulness, Gordon was once a pupil of Joe Marsala, so it was a nice idea to have him record the charming Don't Let It End with Adele Girard Marsala. Quiet tempos and gentle embellishments characterize the date. The tunes are all museum-pieces of the order of 'Love Nest' and 'Emaline'. It's done with enough mannerly grace to make it work. The Russell date, equally obvious given Gordon's background and style, consists of a dozen Pee Wee (actually, Russell–Cary) compositions, with a couple of nice originals thrown in. The group's up for the job, but it's Bobby's attractively vocalized clarinet that carries these tracks.

The trio session with Ingham and Smith benefits from the pianist's canny playing and deep knowledge of old or sidelined standards. As sole horn, Gordon sometimes sounds reluctant to play a leading role, and Ingham has to josh him along at times. Even so, there are some rare pleasures in the song-list.

An exceptional rhythm section gives the swing a lot more substance on Sextet. There are a couple of nice vocals, particularly 'I Cried For You', but the emphasis, as ever, is on Bobby's smoothly lyrical clarinet. Even so, you sometimes look to him for something more, or more extended. The tribute to old mentor Marsala is disappointing; Gordon never gets to serious grips with any of the songs, delivering a neat chorus or two before backing off. He does seem to have added material to 'Little Sir Echo', but this is generally too respectful even as repertory goes.

Also, in brief:

 Bobby Gordon Plays Bing Arbors ARCD 19172. 6/96.
A stack of early Crosby songs, neatly arranged by Ingham, but Bobby's something of a bystander in the group.

 Clarinet Blue Arbors ARCD 19223. 5/99.
The Russell influence is evident again. Dave McKenna (p) soft-pedals the music.

 Yearnings Arbors ARCD 19277. 03.
A meeting with Bob Wilber (cl, ss). 'Doodle Doo Doo', 'Yearnings', 'In A Little Spanish Town' and 'Song Of The Islands' don't get called much on bandstands any more.

Dexter Gordon (1923–89)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

He attained mythical proportions when he appeared in Bernard Tavernier's Round Midnight, playing a hybrid of himself and Bud Powell. Originally influenced by Lester Young, he favoured easy, behind-the-beat phrasing which could be turned to more confrontational use when required. In 1962, after drug-related problems, he moved to Europe and stayed for the next decade and a half.

 Dexter Gordon 1943–1947 Classics 999 Gordon; Harry 'Sweets' Edison, Leonard Hawkins (t); Melba Liston (tb); Wardell Gray (ts); Bud Powell, Jimmy Rowles, Argonne Thornton (p); Jimmy Bunn (g); Red Callender, Gene Ramey (b); Johnny Miller, Ed Nicholson, Roy Porter, Chuck Thompson (d). 43–7.
One of the giants (literally) of modern jazz, Gordon made an impact on players as dissimilar as Sonny Rollins and John Coltrane but himself remained comparatively unrecognized until a comeback in the '60s, by which time many of the post-Lester Young stylistic devices he had introduced were firmly in place under others' patents.

Classics now have a foot in the bebop era, and this first Gordon volume picks up the story while he is working with Fletcher Henderson and just beginning to strike out on his own account. Most of the later material is available in other, mostly better-quality configurations, but for early material like 'I've Found A New Baby' and 'Rosetta', recorded when the saxophonist was just 20, it's a useful insight. To a degree, Gordon had outgrown his strength; his solo spots sound strained and overblown, and the microphones don't capture much of the breathy resonance that defined his mature style. The other personnel are, of course, fascinating, but many of these associations can be picked up again later in the story.

* Dexter Gordon On Dial: The Complete Sessions Spotlite SPJ CD 130 Gordon; Melba Liston (tb); Teddy Edwards, Wardell Gray (ts); Jimmy Bunn, Charles Fox, Jimmy Rowles (p); Red Callender (b); Roy Porter, Chuck Thompson (d). 6/47.
Gordon's on–off partnership with fellow tenorist Wardell Gray was consistently productive, pairing him for much of the late '40s with another Lester Young disciple who had taken on board most of the modernist idiom without abandoning Young's mellifluously extended solo style. The Dial sessions – with Gray and, at Christmas 1947, Teddy Edwards – are definitive of West Coast idiom of the time. Spotlite brings together all the material, including a track with just Edwards up front. 'The Chase' was a studio version of the saxophone contests that Dexter and Gray had been conducting night after night in LA's Little Harlem. The earliest session features Melba Liston, who was presumably recruited for her arranging. The charts to 'Mischievous Lady' and 'Lullaby In Rhythm' sound tight and well-organized, more coherent than the tiresome 'Chase'. On the same day, Gordon also laid down three tracks with just rhythm, of which 'Chromatic Aberration' is perhaps the most interesting vis-à-vis the development of bebop, but 'It's The Talk Of The Town' is the occasion for one of his most expressive ballad solos of these years. The final Dial session, with Rowles at the piano, was made just before the AFM recording ban.

 Bopland: The Legendary Elks Club Concert, LA, 1947 Savoy 17441 Gordon; Howard McGhee (t); Trummy Young (tb); Sonny Criss (as); Wardell Gray (ts); Hampton Hawes (p); Barney Kessel (g); Red Callender, Leroy Gray (b); Ken Kennedy, Roy Porter (d). 7/47.
This date has been issued, reissued and bootlegged so many times, most collectors will already have it. However, this seems like the cleanest and most legitimate version of a legendary moment in the development of bebop on the West Coast. Members of the Howard McGhee band were present and the less-familiar names came from the Al Killian orchestra. It's basically a sequence of cutting sessions on fairly well-known themes, most of which go under aliases ('Bopland' is 'Byas A Drink', 'Geronimo' is 'Cherrykoke' is 'Cherokee', 'Bopera' is 'Disorder At The Border', and so on). Gordon is quite extensively featured, but the importance of the discs lies in the snapshot of a moment in jazz history.

 Dexter Gordon, 1947–1952 Classics 1295 Gordon; Teddy Edwards (ts); Jimmy Rowles (p); Red Callender (b); Roy Porter (d). 12/47–6/52.
This opens with heavy artillery, Dexter outgunning the more laid-back Teddy Edwards on 'The Duel', part of a session for Dial. A week later, he was back in the studio with Leo Parker making sides for Savoy, with whom he made a further four relatively bland and generic cuts just before Christmas 1947. There's then (and this makes the chronology slightly misleading) a substantial jump to February 1952 and 'The Chase' with Wardell Gray.

 The Bethlehem Years Fresh Sound FSR 154 Gordon; Conte Candoli (t); Frank Rosolino (tb); Kenny Drew (p); Leroy Vinnegar (b); Lawrence Marable (d). 9/55.
Not normally thought of as a West Coast man, Gordon enjoyed his sojourn in California during 1955. Charlie Parker's death in March created a vacuum at the head of the saxophone rankings and Gordon looked a contender. This is a good-value compilation. Neither Candoli nor Rosolino is a charismatic soloist, but they spur Gordon on and lend 'Ruby My Dear' a beefy resonance. Drew and Vinnegar play exceptionally well, and the CD transfer is generally good. In 1955 Gordon had already cemented the style he was to utilize virtually to the end of his career. It's easy, but never shallow, expressiveness and light, springy time-feel were directly related to Lester Young. He was, though, playing in the interval between two drug-related prison sentences that more or less wound up the '50s, which should have been his decade.

* Doin' Alright Blue Note 784077 Gordon; Freddie Hubbard (t); Horace Parlan (p); George Tucker (b); Al Harewood (d). 5/61.
Gordon's first recording after a long and painful break is one of his best. Critics divide on whether Gordon was influenced by Coltrane at this period or whether it was simply a case of the original being obscured by his followers. Gordon's phrasing on Doin' Alright certainly suggests a connection of some sort, but the opening statement of 'I Was Doin' Alright' is completely individual and quite distinct, and Gordon's solo development is nothing like the younger man's. Not to be missed.

 Dexter Calling Blue Note 46544 Gordon; Kenny Drew (p); Paul Chambers (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 5/61.
Recorded three days later and reflecting the same virtues. With a better-drilled but more conventional band, Gordon is pushed a little wider on the solos, ranging much further away from the stated key (as on a memorable mid-chorus break on 'Ernie's Tune') and varying his timbre much more than he used to. As indicators of how his harmonic language and distinctive accent were to develop, these two 1961 Blue Notes are particularly valuable.

 Go! /  A Swingin' Affair Blue Note 98794 / 84133 Gordon; Sonny Clark (p); Butch Warren (b); Billy Higgins (d). 8/62.
Typically good husbandry on the part of Blue Note to get two albums from this not altogether riveting date. Swingin' Affair stands and falls on a lovely version of 'You Stepped Out Of A Dream'. Go! includes Gordon's simplest and finest reading of 'Where Are You', a relatively little-used standard with interesting changes and a strong turn in the middle. Gordon was to play better, but rarely with such directness, and it's not entirely idle to ask whether he felt himself hampered by a rhythm section that was not always responsive. 'I Guess I'll Hang My Tears Out To Dry' has him soaring away on his own, almost out of touch with the rest of the band.

CORE COLLECTION

* Our Man In Paris
Blue Note 746394 Gordon; Bud Powell (p); Pierre Michelot (b); Kenny Clarke (d). 5/63.
Gordon's 'purest' bebop album since the early '50s, Our Man also shows how much he had continued to absorb of the pre-bop sound of Lester Young and Johnny Hodges. There are hints of both in his ballad playing and in the winding, almost incantatory solo on 'Night In Tunisia', which is one of his finest performances on record. A classic.

 One Flight Up Blue Note 84176 Gordon; Donald Byrd (t); Kenny Drew (p); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Art Taylor (d). 6/64.
Recorded in Paris and produced by Frank Wolff, who kept them at it over many, many takes, this consists of four extended performances, dominated by 'Darn That Dream' (see also Ballads, below) and the turned-sideways 'Coppin' The Haven' theme. Byrd was still an impressive player at this period, though he's rarely as adventurous as Hubbard, and Drew is a brilliant accompanist. It's easy to see, particularly on 'Darn', how Gordon continued to influence John Coltrane's harmonic development.

(*) Cheese Cake /  King Neptune Steeplechase SCCD 36008 / 36012 Gordon; Tete Montoliu (p); Benny Nielsen, Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Alex Riel (d). 6/64.
 I Want More /  Love For Sale Steeplechase SCCD 36015 / 36018 As above. 7/64.
() It's You Or No One / () Billie's Bounce Steeplechase SCCD 36022 / 36028 As above. 8/64.
Newly settled in Scandinavia, Gordon turns the tap on full. There's still the emotional equivalent of an airlock, slightly spluttering hesitations alternating with sudden, scalding flows, but it all starts to fit together as this fascinating if very spotty sequence of albums progresses. A different pianist might have varied the structures a little, but Montoliu is sympathetic and very lyrical.

The touchstone 'Body And Soul' is beautifully enunciated on King Neptune and the band gels in the ensemble passages with little of the slightly mechanical pulse of the earlier Cheese Cake session. I Want More and Love For Sale are the best of this group. Gordon's understanding with the players seems increasingly telepathic and his approach to themes correspondingly inventive. It's You Or No One and Billie's Bounce suffer from inevitable longueurs.

(*) Gettin' Around Blue Note 46681 Gordon; Bobby Hutcherson (vib); Barry Harris (p); Bob Cranshaw (b); Billy Higgins (d). 5/65.
One of the most engaging of Gordon's Blue Note recordings, Gettin' Around is also a showcase for the burgeoning talent of Bobby Hutcherson. Though the charts are relatively scant and unchallenging, the standard of performance is very high; Bobby's starburst patterns, executed round Harris's quiet and definite comping, are full of detail and excitement. The material is fairly basic and familiar, with just three Gordon blowing themes tucked away at the end of the album. 'Manhã De Carnaval' gets the record off to a breezy start, and the ensembles here are worthy of study: clean-lined, joyous and absolutely exact, with the spontaneity of a first take. 'Shiny Stockings' was a tenor favourite of the time, and Dexter milks it enthusiastically.

(*) Clubhouse Blue Note 84445 Gordon; Freddie Hubbard (t); Barry Harris (p); Bob Cranshaw, Ben Tucker (b); Billy Higgins (d). 5/65.
Two pointers that all might not be well here. According to the sessionographies, the last few tracks on this, which admittedly included a couple of quite obscure themes, seemed to take longer and longer to pin down. The issued version of 'Lady Iris B', a very unusual inclusion indeed, is take 22, while even 'I'm A Fool To Want You' took 17. Also, Ben Tucker seems to have come in for Cranshaw on the second recorded number, placed third on the disc after the standard. It might simply be that Dexter or Rudy Van Gelder (under whose special imprint this reissue appears) wanted to get the music down as fine as possible, but Blue Note didn't issue this date until the mid-'70s, which given Gordon's relative bankability is telling in itself. It's an awkward-sounding set. Hubbard sits out 'Jodi' and the quartet plays better as a result, but it's an unhappy album and one rarely cited even by staunch Dexter fans.

 Loose Walk / Misty / Heartaches / Ladybird / Stella By Starlight Steeplechase SCCD 36032/35 Gordon; Kenny Drew (p); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Alex Riel (d). 6/65.
These unedited sessions from the Jazzhus Montmartre aren't quite vintage. There are frailties in the great man's playing, but there's some strong playing all the same, notably on a fine version of 'Shiny Stockings' on Misty, which is (marginally) the best of the five sets. We can't finesse the recommendation more than that.

 Stella By Starlight Steeplechase SCCD 36036 Gordon; Pony Poindexter (as, v); Kenny Drew (p); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Makaya Ntshoko (d). 66.
Another that managed to elude the sessionographers, but which fills in another otherwise unrecorded year. Poindexter has always seemed an intriguingly marginal figure but there's nothing that he does here, either with the horn or during his vocal spot, that makes him seem any more essential. Ntshoko is a superb drummer, superficially out of the Tootie Heath bag but with a penchant for extra accents in otherwise unproblematic metres that gives the rhythm on a long 'Satin Doll' an intriguing twist.

(*) The Squirrel – Live At Montmartre Blue Note 57032 Gordon; Kenny Drew (p); Bo Stief (b); Art Taylor (d). 6/67.
We've become used to forgotten or overlooked Gordon club dates appearing on Steeplechase or Black Lion. His other important label released these tracks 30 years after they were recorded and shelved. The qualitative difference between this and some of the more slavish Danish CDs is that this is a record that should have seen the light of day sooner. What's immediately fascinating is the interplay between saxophone and drums, reminiscent of what Coltrane, who died that year, had long done with Elvin Jones or Rashied Ali. There is certainly something of that on the closing 'You've Changed', though the hurly-burly of 'Sonnymoon For Two' seems to conceal references to Wardell Gray and Sonny Rollins.

 Body And Soul /  Take The 'A' Train / (*) Live At The Montmartre Jazzhus DA Black Lion 760018 / 760133 / 760006 3CD Gordon; Kenny Drew (p); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Albert Tootie Heath (d). 7/67.

These used to be available on Black Lion as The Montmartre Collection in two volumes. There has also been a set called Both Sides Of Midnight, which may not currently be available separately; fortunately the music from both dates – 20–21 July – is available on a three-CD set, which is the recommended option if you're a genuine Dexter fan. These find the group working a mostly standards vein on something like auto-pilot. There's plenty of energy being expended, but if you're looking for something more venturesome and stretching, it won't be found here.

 The Tower Of Power! / (*) More Power Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 299 / 815 Gordon; James Moody (ts); Barry Harris (p); Buster Williams (b); Albert 'Tootie' Heath (d). 4/69.

Dexter was beginning to visit the USA slightly more frequently again, and this was made on one of his trips. He still sounds tentative on American soil, and not even the presence of James Moody on 'Montmartre' sets things alight, partly because the two tenors manage to cancel one another out. Beware the use of exclamation marks in jazz album titles. It usually indicates that the contents are less exciting than the label would have you believe. As if to prove the point, the sequel turns out to be more interesting than the original release, with a strong version of 'Lady Bird' (which again features Moody) and a brisk dispatch of Dexter's own 'Fried Bananas', part of his staple diet at this period. With hindsight, these sound like diplomatic soundings, preparatory to a triumphal return.

 LTD Live At The Left Bank /  XXL ... Prestige 11018 / 11023 Gordon; Bobby Timmons (p); Victor Gaskin (b); Percy Brice (d). 5/69.

There is some stunning saxophone work on these live dates from Baltimore. Much of the excitement on LTD rests with the opening track, a steaming version of 'Broadway', which Dexter had previously recorded on Our Man In Paris. It's a bold and in some respects radical performance that suggests some rethinking of Gordon's position vis-à-vis Coltrane might be in order.

The other three performances are less compelling. 'Boston Bernie' is an original based on quite orthodox bebop changes ('All The Things You Are', it sounds like) but spun out to inordinate length, and it's the only number where the unfamiliarity of the pick-up band has an impact on the music. 'In A Sentimental Mood' is taken slow, and quite briefly, before a rousing interpretation of 'Blues Up And Down' takes the set down and out.

The sound is poor, and worse on the second set. It begins with a huge reading of 'Rhythm-A-Ning' on which Gordon solos strongly and gives the little-known Brice a moment of solo glory. 'Misty' is fascinating, a muscular and deliberately unromantic interpretation which also seems to toy with another, unstated theme. 'Love For Sale' is also a hefty performance, but the energy seems dissipated and the sense of climax is slightly forced.

 At Montreux Prestige PCD 7861 2 Gordon; Junior Mance (p); Martin Rivera (b); Oliver Jackson (d). 7/70.
(*) The Panther! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 770 Gordon; Tommy Flanagan (p); Larry Ridley (b); Alan Dawson (d). 7/70.
 Jumpin' Blues Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 899 Gordon; Wynton Kelly (p); Sam Jones (b); Roy Brooks (d). 8/70.

Dexter's visit to the USA in 1970 confirmed his growing critical stature. He played at Newport, an appearance documented on At Montreux, and managed to sound accommodating and almost deferential. For once, a guest player might have lent the proceedings some edge and bite, but as it stands Dexter doesn't sound willing to rock the boat.

Following the modest success of The Tower Of Power!, Dex recorded The Panther! and, a little later, Jumpin' Blues in the USA. It is generally thought that one of the panther's most effective characteristics is its silence, which makes the exclamation mark slightly redundant. In point of fact, the 1970 record marks a stage in Gordon's development in which he was able and willing to play more quietly, using fewer notes, a greater dynamic range and a willingness to dwell on effective phrases rather than rush them past like trolleybuses. 'Body And Soul' is the touchstone here again, a delicate, almost kaleidoscopic reading, with Flanagan's immaculate accompaniment using altered chords. 'Mrs Miniver' is an original and is one of the saxophonist's most interesting and little-known tunes; medium tempo and song-like, it has a brilliantly simple bridge and coda.

The August session is notable for one of the last recorded performances by Kelly, who gives a solid blues foundation to originals 'Evergreenish' and the title-track, as well as a group of standard and bebop themes. Dexter is in fine form and plays exquisitely on 'For Sentimental Reasons'. A worthy batch, but only serious collectors will find room for all three.

 Live at the Both/And Club, San Francisco Bizarre Planet 6101 Gordon; George Duke (p); Donald Rafael Garret (b); Oliver Johnson (d). 8/70.

There is confusion around this one, because two tracks – 'Wee Dot' and 'Rainbow People' – have confidently been provenanced to the California club in 1970, while the remainder, with the same group, have been issued on Chiaroscuro as Jive Fernando (an apparent mishearing of 'Fried Bananas', which is based on 'It Could Happen To You') and dated to 1981, with the same group. But we can't shed any further light than that. There are some nice things – including a 13-minute 'Blue Monk' – and it's interesting to hear Duke, normally associated with rock and fusion, playing in a straight jazz vein.

(*) Ça'Purange Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1005 Gordon; Thad Jones (c, t); James Moody (ts); Barry Harris (p); Stanley Clarke, Buster Williams (b); Louis Hayes, Albert 'Tootie' Heath (d). 6/72.

The partnership with Thad Jones was a gift from the gods, and it is surprising that none of Thad's compositions made it to the record. It is a rare jazz disc that includes a Ewan MacColl song, but 'The First Time Ever I Saw Your Face' is exquisitely shaped and Dexter's solo is intense and formally perfect. Always a brief album, it has been boosted by a second take of Sonny Rollins's 'Airegin', but we are disinclined to dismiss it for short measure.

 Generation Original Jazz Classics OJC 836 Gordon; Freddie Hubbard (t); Cedar Walton (p); Buster Williams (b); Billy Higgins (d). 7/72.

Cut for Prestige on one of Gordon's occasional visits home, this and those like it were reminders to the jazz audience that the old lion was still out there. There's an obvious lack of specific preparation, and despite the self-evident quality of the band a turn-up-and-play attitude, so not in any way a meaningful statement.

 Generation Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 836 Gordon; Freddie Hubbard (t); Cedar Walton (p); Buster Williams (b); Billy Higgins (d). 7/72.

 Tangerine Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1041 Gordon; Thad Jones (t, flhn); Hank Jones, Cedar Walton (p); Stanley Clarke, Buster Williams (b); Louis Hayes, Billy Higgins (d). 72.

Two CDs originally recorded for Prestige. Generation keeps up the quality of the early-'70s albums. Hubbard imparts urgency and snap; he cheekily ups the ante on 'Milestones' with a brisk and rhythmic statement that is as different as possible from the composer's sanctified version. The CD reissue includes an alternative take of the same tune with, if anything, a better Hubbard feature, though Dexter's solo is flat and off-balance. Monk's 'We See' was a favourite of Dexter's and is sensitively handled; but the surprise hit of the album is André Previn's 'Scared To Be Alone', which sits perfectly for the saxophone.

Tangerine marks an interesting change of pace, a faster delivery and a more pungent attack. Fuelled by two very different rhythm sections, Dexter declines to veer very far from his usual delivery, but it's interesting to hear how differently he phrases in front of Walton and the more lyrical but less challenging Jones.

 Parisian Concert Futura 41 Gordon; Sonny Grey (t); Georges Arvanitas (p); Jacki Samson (b); Charles Saudrais (d). 2/73.

This helps to fill in a relatively quiet year. Dexter was at the Café Montmartre with Jackie McLean in July and made a fine appearance at Montreux with Gene Ammons, but there wasn't much else. He coasts through four numbers, doing his usual thing of ignoring a static rhythm section, often even ignoring Arvanitas's florid chords. Grey has some nice moments.

(*) Round Midnight /  Revelation /  Rainbow People Steeplechase SCCD 31290 Gordon; Benny Bailey (t); Lars Sjøsten (p); Torbjørn Hultcrantz (b); Jual Curtis (d). 11/74.

Bailey was a terrific partner: tight, energetic and unfailingly lyrical. To a large extent they ignore the well-intentioned accompaniment of the Swedish trio (Sjøsten is an able player, the others not) and head off on a companionable jaunt round a set of themes that fall easily under their respective approaches. Gordon is completely at home on 'Round About Midnight' and 'Stella By Starlight'; Bailey takes the initiative on 'Blue 'N' Boogie' and 'What's New', and fans of the little trumpeter (one wonders what they must have looked like, side by side on the stand) will find this one of the most profitable of his live recordings. The two subsequent records help to fill out the picture, but, once again, there really isn't enough first-rate material here to merit this depth of coverage.

 Stable Mable Steeplechase SCCD 31040 Gordon; Tete Montoliu, Horace Parlan (p); Benny Nielsen, Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Alex Riel, Tony Inzalaco (d). 11/74.

 Bouncin' With Dex Steeplechase SCCD 31060 Gordon; Tete Montoliu (p); Benny Nielsen, Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Alex Riel, Billy Higgins (d). 3/75–9/75.

 Something Different Steeplechase SCCD 31136 Gordon; Philip Catherine (g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Billy Higgins (d). 9/75.

Bouncin' With Dex takes essentially the same band forward a decade. By the time of Swiss Nights (see below), the act is consummately polished. Montoliu sounds relaxed and confident and plays with considerable authority. The addition of guitarist Catherine adds a new band of the spectrum on Something Different. From the opening 'Freddie Freeloader' till it closes with 'Polka Dots And Moonbeams' and 'Yesterday's Mood', it exudes bonhomie and relaxed invention.

* More Than You Know Steeplechase SCCD 31030 Gordon; Palle Mikkelborg, Allan Botschinsky, Benny Rosenfeld, Idrees Sulieman (t, flhn); Richard Boone, Vincent Nilsson (tb); Axel Windfeld (btb); Ole Molin (g); Thomas Clausen (p, electric p); Kenneth Knudsen (syn); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Alex Riel, Ed Thigpen (d); Klaus Nordsoe (perc); chamber winds and strings. 2–3/75.

Beautifully arranged and orchestrated by Mikkelborg, More Than You Know sets Gordon in the middle of a richly textured ensemble. 'Naima' rarely works with a large band, but this is near perfect and Gordon responds with considerable emotion and inventiveness.

 Swiss Nights – Volume 1 /  ... Volume 2 / (*) ... Volume 3 Steeplechase SCCD 31050 / 31090 / 31110 Gordon; Kenny Drew (p); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Alex Riel (d). 8/75.

These are vigorous, pumped-up and highly coherent. There probably wasn't enough material for three albums, though the last is just about justified by 'Sophisticated Lady'. Together, they make a good summation of what this quartet was about.

 Something Different Steeplechase SCCD 31136 Gordon; Philip Catherine (g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Billy Hart (d). 9/75.

Gordon rarely played with a guitarist, but Catherine was an inspired choice for the September 1975 session, alternating warm, flowing lines with more staccato, accented figures towards the top of his range. NHØP responds with firmly plucked and strummed figures and Gordon rides on top in a relatively unfamiliar programme for him – Miles's 'Freddie Freeloader', 'When Sunny Gets Blue', 'Polka Dots And Moonbeams'.

(*) Biting The Apple Steeplechase SCCD 31080 Gordon; Barry Harris (p); Sam Jones (b); Al Foster (d). 11/76.

Prodigal comes home. In 1976, Gordon made a rare return visit to the States. The response was so overwhelmingly positive that he decided to end his exile permanently. 'Apple Jump' is a joyous homecoming and 'I'll Remember April' one of his loveliest performances. Harris, Jones and Foster fit in comfortably, and the sound is good.

 Manhattan Symphonie Sony 77633 Gordon; George Cables (p); Rufus Reid (b); Eddie Gladden (d). 5/78.

Now available on enhanced CD-Rom and with extras, this is a neglected masterpiece in the Gordon canon and by one of his least celebrated bands. Much of the credit has to go to Cables, who seems to lay out all the harmonic possibilities of a number in just a few sumptuous chords. 'Body And Soul' is titanic, a solo that relies less than usual on Dexter's associative tic and simply gets to the roots of the song. The bonus take of 'Secret Love' is less polished but none the less compelling.

 Live At Carnegie Hall: Complete Sony CK 65312 Gordon; Johnny Griffin (ts); George Cables (p); Rufus Reid (b); Eddie Gladden (d). 9/78.

A prestigious venue, but a drab blowing session that has Dex and Griff vying for the limelight. The material is a mixture of the old-fashioned themes – 'Blues Up And Down' – and pop tunes, and Dexter makes sure that he is the leading voice on all tracks, though Griffin, playing as fast and furious as he had a decade earlier, holds his own. We've found this a pretty unsatisfying set, diffuse and unfocused, but Gordon fanatics will treasure some elongated solos and able sparring with a fellow tenorman.

 Round Midnight Sony 40464 Gordon; Chet Baker, Freddie Hubbard, Palle Mikkelborg (t); Wayne Shorter (ts); Herbie Hancock (p); Bobby Hutcherson (vib); John McLaughlin (g); Ron Carter, Pierre Michelot, Mads Vinding (b); Billy Higgins, Tony Williams (d); Lonette McKee (v). 7–8/86.
Freshly remastered, but still sounding full of period charm and authentic Gallic atmosphere. Strictly speaking, this is a Herbie Hancock record, with Gordon as a guest star, but since he was the star of the film, who's quibbling?

Also, in brief:

 Complete Savoy & Dial Master Takes Definitive 11155. 45–47.
Early stuff with Dizzy Gillespie, Tadd Dameron, Fats Navarro but mostly under the saxophonist's leadership and featuring his compositions, including 'LTD' and 'Dexter Digs In'.

 Settin' The Pace Proper 2016 4CD. 40s.
The sound-quality won't exactly have you quivering in your chair, but 55 tracks of classic Gordon material spread over four discs at a budget price can't be bad.

 Complete Kenny Drew & Carl Perkins Sessions Lone Hill Jazz LHJ10153. 9 & 11/55.
Another cheerfully misleading title from Lone Hill; 'complete' fails to take account of Gordon's May 1961 Blue Note session with Drew, for Landslide and Dexter Calling, though it does restore the obscure Dootone Blows Hot And Cool.

(*) The Resurgence Of Dexter Gordon Original Jazz Classics OJC 929. 10/60.
Sometimes known as Pulsation, this is a little-known Jazzland date which didn't quite live up to either title.

 Cry Me A River Steeplechase SCCD 36004. 11/62, 6/64.
A dismal date with pianist Atli Bjørn's group.

 The Complete Blue Note Sessions Blue Note 834200 6CD. 61–65.
A worthy entry in the boxed-set constituency, although exposure at length does tend to show up his vulnerabilities at least as much as his strengths.

 Strings And Things Steeplechase SCCD 31145. 2/65, 5/76.
A diffident, rather shapeless compilation of material with little of arranger Palle Mikkelborg's usual bite.

(*) Wee Dot Steeplechase SCCD 36035. 65.
Frankly average session from the Jazzhus with a second-string band.

* The Complete Prestige Recordings Prestige 11412 11CD. 65–73.
The ultimate box set, though arguably there's better music pound for pound among the Blue Notes; 15 previously unissued cuts.

 Jazz At Highschool Storyville 8356. 8/67.
Another one from the vaults. This unissued Italian radio date with Drew, NHØP and Heath was only released in 2003.

 Blue Dex Prestige 11003. 69–72.
A playable compilation of Gordon blowing; alternative takes of 'Sticky Wicket' and 'The Jumpin' Blues'.

 Tenor Titans Storyville 8288. 69, 72.
A sometimes uneasy, certainly unyielding confrontation with Ben Webster, though they're only together for part of it.

 The Art Of The Ballad Prestige 11009. 4/69–7/73.
Ditto, in a more lyrical vein.

 The Shadow Of Your Smile / (*) After Hours Steeplechase SCCD 31206 / 31226. 4/71.
Two of the weakest Steeplechases, albeit with Lars Sjøsten (p), the fine Fredrik Norén (d) and a spot on After Hours for Rolf Ericson (t).

* The Complete Trio And Quartet Studio Recordings, 1974–1976 Steeplechase SCCD 30010-30017 8 CD. 74–76.
Magnificent; 73 tracks, beautifully packaged; indispensable for the true – and well-heeled – Gordon fan.

 The Apartment Steeplechase SCCD 31025. 8/75.
Not one of his best records; it sounds curiously timebound now, and there's a flatness to the solos.

(*) Lullaby For A Monster Steeplechase SCCD 31156. 6/76.
Unusually, a pianoless trio, which sees Gordon struggling to bridge the gaps Drew's absence leaves.

(*) Featuring Joe Newman Monad 806. 11/76.
A terrible source tape but a rare and valuable recovery from the homecoming year.

(*) Sophisticated Giant Columbia CK 65295. 6/77.
An energetic but occasionally oblique and over-produced album that shows off more of Gordon's Coltrane mannerisms. Arrangements by Slide Hampton.

 Backstairs E.J. 603. 5/81.
A decent enough recording, though it finds Dex coasting through familiar material and retreading his solos with no attempt to hide the joins.

(*) Swedish Nights Steeplechase SCCD 37017/18 2CD. 86.
Mid-price; but more than mid-career and in only middling form, Dexter waffles and meanders far more than usual on seven stretched-out themes and never gets to the knock-out.

Joe Gordon (1928–63)

TRUMPET

Impeccable credentials from the New England Conservatory and an extended apprenticeship with Georgie Auld, Lionel Hampton and Charlie Parker; he was a Jazz Messenger for a short time but failed to manage his solo career or his life; he burned to death in a rooming-house fire apparently started by a cigarette.

(*) Early Sessions Fresh Sound FSRCD 380 Gordon; Gigi Gryce (as); Charlie Rouse (ts); Junior Mance, Walter Bishop (p); Jimmy Schenck, Bernie Griggs (b); Art Blakey (d); Sabu Martinez (perc). 5–9/54.

(*) West Coast Days Fresh Sound FSCRCD 370 Gordon; Richie Kamuca (ts); Russ Freeman (p); Monty Budwig (b); Shelly Manne (d). 7–9/58.

 Lookin' Good Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1934 Gordon; Jimmy Woods (as); Dick Whittington (p); Jimmy Bond (b); Milt Turner (d). 61.

A brittle tone, always pitched a little sharp, but affectingly vocalized and never less than individual. The recorded legacy is thin but impressive. The first disc consists of two routine hard-bop dates, on which both Gordon and Charlie Rouse sound very raw and short of ideas. In the scrappy West Coast Days (shared with Scott LaFaro material) Gordon takes second place to Kamuca and Freeman and never quite settles to the task. The recordings are average for the time (1958) and place (the Lighthouse), though 'Poinciana' finds him well off-mic. There is better sound and music on the OJC, which was obviously an attempt to market Gordon as the new cool cat on the block. All the tracks are originals, including such unlikely compositions as 'Terra Firma Irma' and 'Non-Viennese Waltz Blues'. Altoist Woods, though little known, plays well and the rhythm section stays tight without crowding the front-men. Nicely put together, but not much more than a footnote to a sadly short life. Joe was dead less than two years later.

Jon Gordon (born 1966)

ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

A talented stylist who studied with Phil Woods and won the Thelonious Monk Competition.

 The Jon Gordon Quartet Chiaroscuro CR (D) 316 Gordon; Phil Woods (as); Kevin Hays (p); Scott Holley (b); Bill Stewart (d). 3/92.

 Spark Chiaroscuro CR (D) 330 Gordon; Benny Carter, Phil Woods (as); Bill Charlap (p); Sean Smith (b); Tim Horner (d). 4/94.

When Benny Carter and Phil Woods are lining up to play on your record and Joe Lovano writes an enthusiastic liner-note, it's pretty clear that something is happening. Gordon is young, bright and effortlessly accomplished, with none of the brashness and over-confidence that often come with 'effortless' talent. He handles tricky material with a naturalness born of considerable application, as when he negotiates the curves of Lovano's 'Land Of Ephysus' on the first record.

The Chiaroscuros were sold largely on the strength of the guest artists; but, excellent as Woods and Carter are, they never quite steal the show. Gordon's actually closer to Jackie McLean; not so much in terms of sound, but for sheer joyous involvement in the music. 'Spark' clinches it: a strong, simple idea that is both robust enough for the road and delicate enough to lay claims to real beauty.

(*) Ask Me Now Criss Cross 1099 Gordon; Tim Hagans (t); Bill Charlap (p); Larry Grenadier (b); Billy Drummond (d). 12/94.

(*) Witness Criss Cross 1121 Gordon; Tim Hagans (t); Mark Turner (ts); Bill Charlap (p); Sean Smith (b); Tim Horner (d). 12/95.

The move to Criss Cross was beneficial, putting him in the way of a growing pool of young, like-minded musicians unconstrained by fashion, or retro ideologies, but simply dedicated to mainstream jazz. Gordon makes an early statement of intent with an effortless (that word again!) ride through the 'Giant Steps' changes and a showing for his own (Lovano-inspired) 'Joe Said So', as well as the Monk tune that gives Ask Me Now its title. The follow-up record is more ambitious. 'Individuation' is an exercise in group counterpoint that slightly outstays its welcome, though it does establish the parameters of the group. 'Interlude' and 'Waking Dream' are a linked pair, the latter a study in complex harmonic organization. 'House Of Mirrors' is by the bassist and features Smith in a solo outing that plucks some of its ideas straight out of Gordon's soprano improvisation, in itself a strong reminder that he has this second voice in reserve.

* Along The Way Criss Cross 1138 Gordon; Mark Turner (ts); Kevin Hays (p); Joe Martin (b); Billy Drummond (d). 6/97.

(*) Currents Double Time DTRCD 136 Gordon; Ed Simon (p); Ben Monder (g); Larry Grenadier (b); Bill Stewart (d); Adam Cruz (perc). 2/98.

Gordon continues to consolidate. The final Criss Cross album is a delightfully confident combination of original material and standards. As a winner of the Thelonious Monk Competition, Gordon has every right to tackle 'Friday The 13th' with the insouciant confidence he brings to the jagged theme. He also understands the internal rhythms of a tune like Joe Henderson's 'Inner Urge' and he has incorporated much of that thinking into his own writing. A richly textured 'Body And Soul' sounds like an attempt to write himself into a long saxophone tradition.

On Currents, Jon is more concerned to let his own voice come through as a writer. Apart from a couple of repertory pieces, all the compositions are by the saxophonist and they suggest an artist on the brink of great things, though not yet with the maturity to execute his ideas convincingly. 'Twilight Soul' is profoundly influenced by Wayne Shorter, while 'Intention' draws in elements of reggae and ska as well as jazz. The real eye-opener, though, is 'Shape Up', a dense and complex piece which requires many hearings to unravel, and even then resists analysis. Though the band doesn't quite pull it off, Jon is absolutely assured and convincing.

(*) Possibilities Double Time 171 Gordon; John Scofield (g); Kevin Hays (p); Peter Washingon (b); Bill Stewart (d). 00.

This is a return to form, with a strong line-up, often without piano (Sco's 'Camp-Out' is the opening number) and driven solidly by drummer Stewart, who has an edgier approach than Kenny Washington; Stewart also chips in with the closing 'Soul's Harbor', which merits wider exposure. A trio of originals – 'Paradox', 'Riddle' and 'Contemplation' – mark a partial reprise of Gordon's exploratory style. Monk is again represented, this time by 'Misterioso', and there is a version of 'Moment's Notice', intriguingly without bass.

* The Things You Are ArtistShare 56 Gordon; Ben Monder (g); Joe Martin (b); Billy Drummond, Bill Campbell (d). 2/05.

It looks as if Jon might have had to hawk this round for a couple of years before it was picked up by the estimable ArtistShare. It's an intriguingly chastened record, the opening 'I Should Care' almost fustian in mood, though the soprano solo on 'Arco', a terse original, is anything but. Monder again brings a fascinating ambiguity to the music, but it's Gordon's day. As good as you'll get in contemporary jazz but only available in relatively limited numbers direct from the label.

Also, in brief:

 Contrasts Double Time DTRCD 185. 5/98, 5/00.

A duo date with Bill Charlap (p), sympathetic and nuanced.

 The Things We Need Double Time 156. 1–2/99.

The edges have been softened a bit, as Jon turns towards the mainstream. Still impressive.

Wycliffe Gordon (born 1967)

TROMBONE, TUBA, PIANO, DIDJERIDU, VOCAL

From Waynesboro, Georgia, and now based in Michigan, he's a Marsalis associate and Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra stalwart.

 Slidin' Home Nagel Heyer 2001 Gordon; Randy Sandke (t); Victor Goines (ts, cl); Joe Temperley (ss, bs); Eric Reed (p); Rodney Whitaker (b); Herlin Riley (d); Milt Grayson (v). 12/98.
(*) The Joy Ride Nagel Heyer 2032 Gordon; Victor Goines (ss, ts, cl); Farid Barron (p); Rodney Whitaker (b); Herlin Riley (d). 12/00.
* What You Dealin' With Criss Cross 1212 Gordon; Ryan Kisor (t); Victor Goines (ss, ts); Herb Harris (ts); Zach Pride (b); Rodney Green (d). 1/01.
Gordon's albums help restore the trombone to contemporary prominence. Slidin' Home perhaps touches too many bases a little too rapidly – New Orleans, blues, Monk, Ellington, gospel – but already the ebullient transformation of 'Mood Indigo' into an extravagant trombone feature suggests what Gordon can do.

The Joyride is an impressive work-out but also admirable for Gordon's organization of the band, who play as one but with undoubted individuality. Goines is in splendid shape on his features, and contributes some nice clarinet. Gordon perhaps overdoes the multi-instrumentalism, but he is across every parameter of this music and entitled to his moment.

What You Dealin' With is the most freewheeling of the Nagel Heyers, the least yoked to context, and it's packed with great playing. The programme of Ellington, Gillespie, 'Cherokee', 'Mr P.C.' and originals is slyly set up to subvert expectations. 'Blue 'N' Boogie' uproots bebop slickness by nonchalantly strolling in and out of double-time on the theme. 'Cotton Tail' shows that Wycliffe's scatting chops are in pretty good order, too. 'Cherokee' is sheer virtuoso high spirits – after they've hoodwinked us with a stately beginning. 'Bone Abstractions' lets you know just what the man can do with his unruly slide horn, a phantasmagoric throw of the dice. And he has another go at 'Mood Indigo', this time a harmonious mix of sharp improvising and daring high-jinks. Gordon not only leads from the front; he imparts heroic good humour to go with the crackling invention of the playing.

(*) We Nagel Heyer 2023 Gordon; Eric Reed (p). 10/01.
A very powerful and moving set of duets. Gordon's solo (with mute) on 'Embraceable You' is one of his best, but also one of the more striking statements on the instrument in recent times. 'The Lord's Prayer' and the original 'He Cares' bracket a deeply felt set.

(*) United Soul Experience Criss Cross 1224 Gordon; Seamus Blake (ts); David Kikoski (p); Larry Grenadier (b); Bill Stewart (d). 12/01.
(*) Dig This! Criss Cross 1238 Gordon; Seamus Blake (ts); Sam Yahel (org); Peter Bernstein (g); Bill Stewart (d). 12/02.
United Soul Experience pitched Gordon into the thick of an unfamiliar team at more or less a moment's notice, and it's a tribute to his chutzpah that he still got a great result out of it. He and Blake make a handsome front line, the thicker, more expressive sound of the trombonist matched with the lean agility of the tenor. Kikoski colours in the harmonies, rapidly and unstintingly. The closing steal from Ellington's Anatomy Of A Murder, 'Low Key Lightly', is a delicious trombone/bass duet.

Dig This! rings a few changes, with Blake and Stewart retained but Yahel and Bernstein coming in. It's still a repertory act, but none the worse for it. 'Limehouse Blues', 'Lonnie's Lament' and 'I Can't Get Started' (a duo with Bernstein) are the core repertoire; the rest are originals. If it feels more like a settling-in for this talented musician, he's already setting the pace.

* In The Cross Criss Cross 1253 Gordon; Marcus Printup (t, v); Victor Goines (ss, ts, cl); Eric Reed (p); Damien Sneed (org); Reginald Veal (b); Alvin Atkinson (d, v); Garden City Gospel Choir (v). 12/03–1/04.
Cyrus Chestnut and Wynton Marsalis have both had a try, but nobody has gone as far as this in integrating a classic pop-gospel feel – Gordon cites the Dixie Hummingbirds, The Soul Stirrers and the Mighty Clouds Of Joy as his sources – with a top-drawer American jazz ensemble of today. The material mixes traditional pieces with in-the-spirit originals and the personnel all but speaks for itself in terms of what they can deliver. The result, in tracks such as 'I'm Glad', is jubilation of an almost ecstatic order, although there are sombre passages to balance it. The Choir gives its all. The record's probably too long and no doubt Gordon might have wished for more studio time; but what a triumph.

 Cone's Coup Criss Cross 1278 Gordon; Johnny O'Neal (p); Reginald Veal (b); Herlin Riley (d); Stacy Dillard (v). 5/05.
This gets off breezily with 'Shhh! The Band Is Trying To Play' and 'Yaht Doo Daht Ditt' but then falls back on repertory themes, including 'Speak Low', 'Mr P.C.' and the hybrid 'Blues For Alice's Freight Train', before checking out with 'Hush Yo Mouf!'. It seems that Gordon can't quite settle to a direction. His playing and singing are fine, even exciting, but his albums always seem to be reaching after something that rarely makes it through a scamped production.

Also, in brief:

 Standards Only Nagel Heyer 2071. 12/98–10/01.
Culled from his albums for the label, plus six unissued tracks.

 The Search Nagel Heyer 2007. 11–12/99.
The trombone 'choir' is used deftly on 'Frantic Flight' and 'Stardust', but a Monk tune is rendered silly and the overall effect is rushed and incomplete.

 The Gospel Truth Criss Cross 1192. 5/00.
It's an interesting premiss, but Gordon doesn't manage the jazz/gospel synthesis with enough care.

Frank Goudie (1899–1964)

CLARINET, VOICE

He started on trumpet and worked in New Orleans in the 1910s and early '20s, before spending 15 years in Europe with many bandleaders. Worked in France and Berlin after the war and returned to San Francisco in the late '50s.

(*) Frank 'Big Boy' Goudie With Amos White American Music AMCD-50 Goudie; Amos White (t); J. D. Banton (ts); Jimmy Simpson, Burt Bales (p, v); Al Levy (g); Al Conger (b); James Carter (d). 9/60–3/61.
Goudie is an obscure figure, even among New Orleans musicians, but he was much admired by Albert Nicholas, and these grimy recordings reveal an idiosyncratic musician, whose other spell in the limelight came with a date in Paris in 1937 with Bill Coleman and Django Reinhardt. Five sextet tracks are unexceptional New Orleans dance hall music (albeit recorded in San Francisco), but the four duets and three trios with Bales and Conger are more substantial. Goudie chews over the melody lines rather than elaborating on them, and there's a folkish lilt to some of his ideas.

Jimmy Gourley (born 1926)

GUITAR

Son of a distinguished music educator, he began playing in the bebop era and has carved an individual path ever since, working largely in France.

 And The Paris Heavyweights Elabeth ELA621030 Gourley; René Urtreger (p); Eddy Louiss (org); Luigi Trussardi (b); André Ceccarelli , Kenny Clarke (d); Humberto Canto (perc). 72.
(*) Repetition Elabeth ELA621026 Gourley; Stan Getz (ts); Lou Levy (p); Marc Johnson (b); Victor Lewis (d). 81.
(*) Double Action Elabeth ELA621032 Gourley; Barney Wilen (ts); Dominic Lemerle (b); Philippe Combelle (d). 87.
 Our Delight Elabeth ELA621021 As above, except omit Wilen; add André Villeger (ts). 1/95.
A fixture at the Tabou club in Paris, Gourley's a successful ex-pat who's become an admired figure on the European scene. His brisk, boppish chording is unexpectedly distinctive, though he's certainly not a charismatic soloist, and if Christian is the obvious influence, there's a wider musicality at work on most of these. The 1972 session is typical of many of the time, an enthusiastic meeting between French and American musicians. There are two groups at work here, obviously; both have strengths and Louiss coaxes out some of Jimmy's R&B side. The date with Getz (moonlighting on the occasion as 'Dju Berry', hilariously) is a good one, though it's Lou Levy's trio which makes the date special. The association with Wilen went back to the late '50s and there's real warmth to this latter-day collaboration. The most recent date with Villeger has some good points, but Gourley himself seems to be riffing rather aimlessly in places and going through the motions mechanically in others; the saxophonist is rather good, though.

Dusko Goykovich (born 1931)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

The Bosnian trumpeter is a disciple of Miles Davis, but the infusion of folk forms adds an extra dimension.

(*) Swinging Macedonia Enja 4048 Goykovich; Eddie Busnello (as); Nathan Davis (ts, ss, f); Mal Waldron (p); Peter Trunk (b); Cees See (d). 8/66.
One of the most convincing attempts to synthesize jazz and the curious scalar progressions of Balkan folk music. Born in the former Yugoslavia, Goykovich studied at Berklee and saw action with Maynard Ferguson, Woody Herman and with the Clarke–Boland Big Band. His most characteristic work, though, has been with smaller groups. He is a bright, rhythmic player, who draws on bop trumpet somewhat selectively. Swinging Macedonia was a bold stroke, with an impact akin to that of Ivo Papasov's much-hyped Bulgarian Wedding Band. Goykovich, though, is more purely a jazz player, and a more adventurous improviser. He's ably supported by an international line-up that hinges on the two American exiles. Waldron deals splendidly with some unfamiliar chord changes, Davis sounds authentically Slavonic (indeed, much like Papasov) and the little-known Busnello makes three or four very effective interventions

 In My Dreams Enja ENJ 9408 Goykovich; Bob Degen (p); Isla Eckinger (b); Jarrod Cagwin (d). 9/00.
Essentially a ballad album, this is as laid-back and lyrical as Goykovich has ever sounded on record. As he approaches 70, he has acquired a philosophical stance that comes through strongly and emphatically here on tracks like 'St Germain Des Prés' (a near-perfect tone poem) and 'Skylark', which has rarely sounded so gently melancholy. Degen is an astonishing musician, still largely overlooked, but responsible for the lovely 'Sequoia Song', which provides the album with its high-point, as measured and expressive a performance as you'd hope to find.

* Portrait Enja ENJ 9427 Goykovich; Steve Gut (t); Abraham Burton (as); Jimmy Heath, Tony Lakatos, Lucky Thompson (ts); Ferdinand Povel (ts, f); Kenny Barron, Tommy Flanagan, Hans Hammerschmid, Bora Rokovic, Larry Vuckovich (p); Oscar Pettiford (b, clo); Ray Drummond, Fred Dutton, Isla Eckinger, Eddie Gomez, Branko Pejakovic (b); Hartwig Bartz, Clarence Becton, Alvin Queen, Mickey Roker, Dejan Terzic (d); Monica Zetterlund (v). 59–99.
Released on the occasion of his 70th birthday, this lovely set is an ideal career summary for someone who wants a quick appraisal of who Dusko is and where he's come from musically. It goes back to 1959 and Goykovich's return from the Newport Festival to record with Oscar Pettiford (a fine duet on 'But Not For Me') and with Lucky Thompson and Monica Zetterlund ('Love For Sale', which also features Pettiford on cello). 'I Remember Clifford' and a couple of other tracks were taped live in 1970 at Domicile in Munich with his working group: still under the spell of Miles Davis but with his own ideas at work.

 Samba Do Mar Enja ENJ 9473 Goykovich; Ferenc Snétberger (g); Martin Gjakonovski (b); Jarrod Cagwin (d). 00.
An attractive take on Brazilian music by a trumpeter who's always had an authentic Latin swing whenever he's taken on south-of-the-border material. Snétberger is an ideal accompanist for this repertoire, loose-limbed, easy, but hitting his notes dead-centre every time. Lovely stuff.

Also, in brief:

(*) Belgrade Blues Cosmic Sounds 16. 61, 66.
An intriguing early reissue of International Jazz Octet and other material.

(*) East Of Montenegro Cosmic Sounds 17. 75.
The quintet live at the Belgrade Jazz Festival and in excellent, sparkling form.

 Five Horns And Rhythm Cosmic Sounds 18. 83.
Previously available as Blues In The Gutter and Snap Shot.

 Ten To Two Blues Ensayo 9773. 11/71.
With the Tete Montoliu trio.

 Handful O'Soul Enja ENJ 9482. 01.
Goykovich fronts his International Jazz Orchestra with aplomb.

 Samba Tzigane Enja ENJ 9489. 10/06.
Unaccountably dull.

John Graas (1917–62)

FRENCH HORN

He worked in the Indianapolis Symphony before joining Stan Kenton and then becoming a studio regular in the '50s

Californian scene. He also did much writing in Hollywood but died young from a heart attack.

 Jazz Studio 1 / 2 Lone Hill Jazz LHJ 10145 Graas; Joe Newman, Don Fagerquist (t); Bennie Green, Milt Bernhart (tb); Herb Geller (as); Jimmy Giuffre (cl, ts, bs); Frank Foster, Paul Quinichette (ts); Hank Jones, Marty Paich (p); Johnny Smith, Howard Roberts (g); Eddie Jones, Curtis Counce (b); Kenny Clarke, Larry Bunker (d). 10/53–6/54.
(*) Jazz Studio 3 / 4 Lone Hill Jazz LHJ 10146 Graas; Don Fagerquist, Conte Candoli, Shorty Rogers (t); Jack Millman (flhn); Maynard Ferguson, Bob Enevoldsen (vtb); Buddy Collette (as, f); Charlie Mariano, Herb Geller (as); Zoot Sims, Jack Montrose, Lin Halliday (ts); Bob Gordon, Gerry Mulligan, Jimmy Giuffre, Ray Vasquez (bs); Claude Williamson, Marty Paich, André Previn , Russ Freeman (p); Frank Flynn, Don Anderson, Red Norvo (vib); Howard Roberts, Don Overberg (g); Red Mitchell, Curtis Counce, Ralph Pena (b); Garry Frommer, Larry Bunker, Chico Hamilton, Shelly Manne (d); Mike Pacheco, Fred Aguirre, Artie Anton, Jack Costanzo (perc). 12/54–6/55.
(*) Jazz-Lab 1 & 2 Lone Hill Jazz LHJ 10148 Graas; Don Fagerquist (t); Bob Enevoldsen (vtb); Herb Geller (as); Jack Montrose, Dave Pell, Bill Perkins (ts); Jimmy Giuffre (bs, cl); Claude Williamson, Marty Paich, Gerald Wiggins, Paul Moer (p); Red Norvo (vib); Howard Robert (g); Curtis Counce, Buddy Clark, Paul Chambers (b); Larry Bunker, Philly Joe Jones (d). 11/55–1/57.
* Jazzmantics Lone Hill Jazz LHJ 10149 Graas; Conte Candoli, Jack Sheldon, Pete Candoli (t); Buddy Collette (cl, bs, f); Art Pepper (as, ts); Herb Geller (as); Bob Cooper (ts, ob); Jack Montrose (ts); Paul Moer, Gerald Wiggins (p); Red Callender (tba); Red Mitchell, Buddy Clark (b); Shelly Manne, Larry Bunker (d). 6/56–9/57.
(*) Westlake Bounce Fresh Sound FSR-CD 508 Graas; Jack Montrose, Bill Perkins (ts); Paul Moer (p); Paul Chambers, Philly Joe Jones (d). 1/57.
Graas was a fixture on the West Coast studio scene of the later '50s, and these records bring back most of the music recorded under his leadership, even if Lone Hill offer a somewhat confusing picture. The Jazz Studio LPs were issued without a nominal leader: the first is a blowing date and does not feature Graas at all; instead, a mostly black, New York group jams on 'Tenderly' and a blues; the fourth was led by Jack Millman, who wrote all the tunes and had them played by a cast of Californian studio guys; and the fifth and sixth, not listed here, also didn't involve Graas. The second does offer a pair of Graas tunes, 'Here Come The Lions' and 'Graas Point', but the important set is the third, which is a showcase for his writing and playing. 'Mulliganesque' is a witty feature for Gerry Mulligan; there is a searching quartet treatment of 'My Buddy'; the Dixieland tunes 'Charleston' and '12th Street Rag' are made to sound nothing like themselves; and there are two 'Jazz Sections' from a Symphony in F Minor which Graas had been commissioned to write, later recorded in full on a small-label issue.

The two Jazz-Lab LPs feature two more excerpts from the symphony, and the rest is played by a mix of five-, seven- and nine-piece bands. Tune titles like 'Mozartesque' and 'Canon Ball' hint at what Graas was trying to do, and the use of fugue, canon and counterpoint take the music some distance from the conventions of the time, and from critical approval: a Down Beat reviewer suggested that the 'value of the LP lies largely in the solos' – so much for Graas's efforts. His own playing shows an unselfconscious mastery of the instrument: the concluding tracks on the disc, lifted from the French Horn Jazz LP, show how he could fit into more familiar small-group settings.

The masterpiece here is Jazzmantics, which doubles up the LP of that title with another called Coup De Graas and a further track from French Horn Jazz. This involves some of Graas's most imaginative writing, in pieces such as 'I.D.' (with a modal interlude), 'Development', the wry 'Will Success Spoil Rock'N'Roll?' and 'Swing Nicely', though there are also two intriguing pieces by Dick Grove, 'Blues Street' being especially haunting. With splendid playing by Graas, Pepper and the neglected Moer among the soloists, this is a consistently engrossing collection.

Westlake Bounce is an addendum. Graas actually plays only on the first three tracks: the remainder are by various combinations of the other musicians, although they work on Graas tunes such as 'Mulliganesque' and 'Canon Ball'. Fine stuff, though it marks the effective end of Graas's jazz discography

Christoph Grab (born 1967)

ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES

Studied at the Swiss Jazz School in Bern and now a well-seasoned session-player with a developing career as leader.

(*) Personal /  Cryptic Blues Unit UTR 4156 / 4166 Grab; Nils Wogram (tb on Cryptic Blues only); Flo Stoffner (g); Christoph Sprenger (b); Dieter Ulrich (d). 10/04–2/05.
An able technician who hasn't yet found a convincing idiom, Grab brings to the table a lot of ideas derived from Arab music and from Kurt Weill, as well as influences as far apart as Joe Lovano and Sal Nistico. The only merit in having influences that sit far apart is when they are blended into something individual and that doesn't happen on the first record. That the second is a signal improvement is largely down to Wogram's presence. A fine technician in the Albert Mangelsdorff mould, the trombonist brings heat and presence to 'Afrodite' and a certain something to 'Melancholeriker' as well. Grab has previously worked with Ray Anderson and clearly recognizes that his larger horns sits OK with a trombone. It's a formula, and this is a line-up that should develop, but it needs much stronger material to work from.

Teddy Grace (1905–92)

VOICE

Her dates don't suggest the premature end to a career, but she strained her vocal cords while singing for troops and bond rallies during the Second World War and irretrievably lost her voice.

(*) Turn On That Red Hot Heat Hep 1054 Grace; Mal Hallett Orchestra; Bob Crosby Orchestra; Lou Holden Orchestra. 2 & 3/40–9/40.
(*) Teddy Grace, 1937–1940 Timeless CBC 1-016 Grace; Charlie Shavers, Max Kaminsky (t); Bobby Hackett (c); Jack Teagarden, Sonny Lee, Moe Zudecoff (tb); Brad Gowans (vtb); Milt Yaner, Sal Franzella, Don Watt (cl, as); Buster Bailey, Pee Wee Russell (cl); John Sadola, Bud Freeman (ts); Frankie Froeba, Billy Kyle, Dave Bowman (p); Dave Barbour, Eddie Condon (g); Haig Stephens, Delmar Kaplan, Pete Peterson (b); Al Sidell, O'Neil Spencer, Morey Feld (d). 10/37–9/40.
Teddy worked for Hallett and Crosby as a band singer, but the sides under her own name show a surprisingly commanding vocalist capable of striking improvisation. The band material on the Hep is historically interesting, but it's generic stuff alongside Teddy's work under her own name, which only sneaks in at the end. There's one rarity, a cut with Lou Holden's band, which will be of interest to collectors. They'll also like that there is only one overlap with the other CD, a nice 'I'll Never Let You Cry'. The six sessions compiled by Timeless include some outstanding accompaniments. Jack Teagarden (who had passed out drunk by the end of the date) is on one, which includes a stunning 'Love Me Or Leave Me', and Bud Freeman leads his Summa Cum Laude group through the last. But the centrepiece is three 1939 sessions of blues material with Shavers, Bailey and Kyle. Grace tackles it with no trace of the affectation that sinks the blues pretensions of some white singers of the period. This remastering is mostly very good, and the CD has a fine essay by David McCain, who located Grace almost at the end of her life.

Georg Graewe (born 1956)

PIANO, BANDLEADER, COMPOSER

Mixes classical form with free improvisation, without strain.

* Sonic Fiction / () The View From Points West / () Flex 27 hatOLOGY 638 / Music & Arts 620 / Random Acoustics RA 007 Graewe; Ernst Reijseger (clo); Gerry Hemingway (d, perc). 3/89, 6/91, 12/93.

These are players of markedly different temperaments, united by a resistance to the fixed resolutions of both 'jazz' and 'New Music'. They play undogmatically and with great exactness, as if they have been rehearsing these pieces for years. Like Eddie Prévost, Hemingway manages to swing even when playing completely free, and his range of articulation is quite extraordinary. Graewe, one of the most enterprising of the post-Schlippenbach pianists, is apt to dissolve his own most acute observations in a flood of repetitions and curious evasions, but the ideas are strong enough to resist corrosion. Reijseger, by contrast, knows how to enjoy an idea and when to dispense with it. The Random Acoustics set is immensely detailed, full of exactitudes and tiny, outwardly meaningless gestures that seem to propel things forward to the next crux. The earlier discs are even better, with pungent playing from Hemingway and some deliciously sardonic interplay between cello and piano on the live Music & Arts from Vancouver, and, best of all, throughout the hat ART disc, which is the pick of Graewe's discography.

 Concert In Berlin 1996 Wobbly Rail WOB007 Graewe; Sebi Tramontana (tb); Mats Gustafsson (ts, fluteophone); Marcio Mattos (clo); Mark Sanders (d). 12/96.

Another remarkable group that works according to Graewe's orderly but liberating procedures. There are places where it palpably fails to cohere, as in the opening section, but for the most part it's riveting music.

 Melodie Und Rhythmus Okkadisk 02124 Graewe; Frank Gratkowski (reeds); Kent Kessler (b); Hamid Drake (d). 5/97.

This feels more like a free-jazz date, which somehow doesn't suit Graewe's indefinable but highly individual aesthetic. The playing's fine, but for a few excrescences by the saxophonist, and the sound remarkably good, but it doesn't amount to much over the long haul and the Chicago studio ambience is very flat.

(*) Counterfactuals Nuscope 1010 As for Sonic Fiction, etc. 11/99

A welcome return for the trio, playing in Ann Arbor and in top form. Graewe has rarely sounded more secure and inventive in a group situation, implacable and studied but with a real frisson of danger.

* Fantasiestücke I – XIII Nuscope 1014 Graewe (p solo). 10/00.

Fred Van Hove says: 'George's fantasy pieces – one seven minutes long, the others between two and five minutes – all seem to end abruptly. They could stop there; they could have been longer or shorter; their length is indefinite. Like life itself, which stops unexpectedly most of the time, it is always unfinished.

(*) Continuum Winter & Winter 910 118 Graewe; Ernst Reijseger (clo); Gerry Hemingway (d). 4/05.

Impeccably recorded, this is a delightful record by an established trio which explores a unique sound-world. Three brilliant improvising composers who might have cancelled one another out, but who conspire to create a session of real beauty. It's less focused, arguably, than Graewe's solo work, but no less accessible and appealing.

Also, in brief:

 Chamber Works Random Acoustics 003. 91–92.

Graewe's day in court on his own imprint, drawing on two of his favourite trio associations, and others.

 Saturn Cycle Music & Arts 958. 11/94.

A less successful date (albeit from the iconic Loft in Cologne) by the Graewe–Reijseger–Hemingway trio.

 Subsymbolism / (*) Impressions Of Monk Nuscope 1002 / 1006. 3/95.

Graewe's Monk is, predictably, not like anyone else's. Brilliantly done, though it will infuriate as many as it delights. The same trio – Marcio Mattos (b), Michael Vatcher (d) – made the other disc at the same time.

 Concert San Francisco 1995 Music & Arts 968. 7/95.

Seven solo works. Impeccably done.

 Other Songs Nuscope 1008. 6/99.

With Peter van Bergen (ts, cbcl) and Barre Phillips (b), and full of unexpected sonorities and intriguing irresolution.

Bob Graf

TENOR SAXOPHONE

From St Louis, and a colleague of his friend Clark Terry in the postwar Basie band.

 The Bob Graf Sessions Fresh Sound FSRCD 1616 Graf; Ron Ruff (ts, f); Jimmy Williams (p); Bob Maisel, Johnny Mixon (b); Al St James (d). 1 & 2/58.

Fresh Sound are doing remarkable work in rescuing figures like Graf from jazz oblivion. These days were recorded in Fulton, Missouri, and back home in St Louis in the early weeks of 1958. Graf's not a charismatic soloist – Lester Young-influenced but with a tighter attack – but he's more interesting on the second date, when there's no other horn to get in the way of his thoughtful development. If these seem like obscurities, they're more listenable than many a more celebrated date.

Grand Dominion Jazz Band

GROUP

Together since the early '80s, the GDJB's members are based in the Pacific North-West and include British emigrants and Americans.

 Half And Half Stomp Off CD3989 Bob Jackson (t); Jim Armstrong (tb, v); Gerry Green (cl, as); Bob Pelland (p); Mike Cox (bj, v); Mike Duffy (b); Stephen Joseph (d). 3/86–6/88.
 San Jacinto Stomp Stomp Off CD1268 As above, except omit Joseph; add Mike McCombe (d). 1/93.
 The Spiritual Album Stomp Off CD1291 As above. 10/94.
 Smiles Stomp Off CD1330 As above, except omit Cox; add Jim Marsh (bj). 8/97.
 Daddy's Little Girl Stomp Off CD1337 As above. 8/97.
Somewhat in the style of Ken Colyer's revivalism, this is a sturdy and impressive group of (mainly) trad veterans. Two of their earlier LPs were reissued on Half And Half: a bit livelier and more, er, virile than their later CDs, this has an interestingly catholic choice of material, with music hall tunes such as Joe O'Gorman's 'Bedelia' rubbing shoulders with Wally Fawkes's 'Trog's Blues' and Joe Oliver's 'Snag It'. San Jacinto Stomp brought them into the CD era. With most of the tracks rolling expansively past the six- and seven-minute mark, they generate a steadily building momentum that's very effective on the likes of 'Bugle Boy March' and Adrian Rollini's 'Old Fashioned Swing'. Jackson is a rather wiry, short-breathed soloist, but Green's wide-bodied alto is nice and the rhythm section play with great heart.

The Spiritual Album is played with respect rather than any deep feeling and will appeal most to dedicated fans. Smiles brings in newcomer Jim Marsh on banjo (he has more hair than the others, but it's just as grey) and it wobbles between the sacred ('Oh Lord, Is It I?') and the secular (Ma Rainey's 'Oh My Babe Blues'), though there's nothing that could qualify as the profane. This is the point at which to mention that their vocals are in the trad band disaster area.

Daddy's Little Girl keeps up the old tradition. 'Spanish Shawl' is a favourite that will never go stale. 'Shout 'Em Aunt Tillie' has a lot more life in it (her?) than when Marcus Roberts played it. They end with Joe Jordan and his 'Teasin' Rag'. The singing is, alas, as before, but there is, hooray, not too much of it. Good show!

Jerry Granelli (born 1940)

DRUMS, SOUND SCULPTURES, BASS

He has a knack for finding new fresh fusions of jazz with other styles of improvisation. Also a distinguished educator in the US and Europe.

(*) A Song I Thought I Heard Buddy Sing Evidence ECD 22057 Granelli; Julian Priester (tb); Kenny Garrett (as); Bill Frisell (g, bj); Robben Ford (g); Anthony Cox (b). 1 & 2/92.
* Broken Circle Songlines/Tonefield INT 3501 Granelli; Kai Bruckner, Christian Kogel (g); Andreas Walter (b). 96.
Granelli caught the attention of Ralph Towner, who at one point (so it is rumoured) considered him to replace Collin Walcott in Oregon. Some of the earlier records are now gone, but Granelli's epic reconstruction/homage to the legendary Buddy Bolden is still around. It's as worth hearing as the line-up might suggest. Priester and Garrett play mostly in a modernized Dixieland way, while the guitarists, Frisell especially, explore a folksy idiom.

At the heart of Broken Circle is an original suite called 'Song Of A Good Name' inspired by the history of Native Americans, but also included are Prince's 'Sign O' The Times', Peter Gabriel's 'Washing Of The Water', Mingus's 'Boogie Stop Shuffle' and Coltrane's 'Lonnie's Lament'. The two-guitar sound is reminiscent of Prime Time, but more often of Pat Metheny's pastel-and-wash collaborations with Lyle Mays, particularly when Bruckner and Kogel are required to add slide, 'textural' or 'atmospheric' guitar.

() Enter, A Dragon / () Crowd Theory Songlines SGL 1521-2 / 1526-2 Granelli; Curtis Hasselbring (tb); Peter Epstein (ss, as); Briggan Krauss (as); Chris Speed (cl, ts); Jamie Saft (ky, acc, g); J. Anthony Granelli (b). 9/97; 9/98.
The titles and so-called 'haikus' on Enter, A Dragon suggest an Eastern concept, but the only real line to that is in Granelli's own exotica of bells, cymbals and chimes. It's otherwise an ensemble of New Yorkers creating a sound that seeks to be hard-hitting but sensuous and big on texture – swells of percussion, accordion, fat electric bass and scratchy slide guitar. It's pretty, pictorial music from which episodes like the disjointed funk of 'Sting Thing' emerge as surprise packages. A very entertaining show. Crowd Theory has a heftier ensemble sound. A broader range of material brings in such as Wayne Horvitz's 'The Front', but Granelli's own themes, including the raddled terpsichore of 'Tango', still have much to captivate.

 Sandhills Reunion Songlines 1553 CD/SACD. Granelli; François Houle (cl); Jeff Reilly (bcl); David Mott (bs); J. Anthony Granelli (g, lap steel); Christian Both (clo); Christian Kogel (g); Rinde Eckert (v). 7/03–1/04.
As a youngster, Granelli drummed in some of San Francisco's jazz-and-poetry Beat bars. This revives some of that spirit, though no more literally than the Buddy Bolden record tries to capture turn of the century New Orleans. Eckert weaves together a dreamlike collage of impressions, recollections and fantasies, centred on the persona of Billy the Kid but narrated by an American Everyman. The tracks are mostly short and not too obviously connected one to the other, with Houle's 'Nolan' and the Granellis' 'Your Voice' the two outstanding cuts.

 The Sonic Temple Songlines 1564-2 2CD Granelli; Christian Kogel, David Tronzo (g); Anthony Granelli (b). 7/06.
Granelli and the now well-established V16 band expand their intriguing concept of free rock in an interesting double set that offers different versions of the same eight songs. The material is also intriguingly varied, with Kogel's 'Riddim' and 'The Old Neighbourhood' receiving hefty readings alongside a fascinating version of the James Brown classic 'It's A Man's World'. The twinned guitars, with Tronzo often playing slide, again suggest Prime Time, but with a different rhythmic feel.

Also, in brief:

 Another Place Intuition 2130. 9 & 10/92.
Quieter but only superficially subtler than some of the later albums, this one seems a touch undercooked now.

 The V16 Project Songlines 1544. 4/03.
A fascinating mixture of composed pieces and apparently spontaneous improvisations from another of Granelli's guitar bands.

Darrell Grant (born 1962)

PIANO

The Philadelphian worked with Betty Carter and Tony Williams, and is an admired teacher and a talented fiction writer.

 Black Art Criss Cross 1087 Grant; Wallace Roney (t); Christian McBride (b); Brian Blade (d). 93.

(*) New Bop Criss Cross 1106 Grant; Scott Wendholt (t); Seamus Blake (ts); Calvin Jones (b); Brian Blade (d). 12/94.

The debut is relatively conventional in idiom and might seem retro were it not for Roney's brightly contemporary sound and McBride's now familiar bass work. Grant shines on the opening 'Freedom Dance' but tends to replicate a smallish roster of ideas thereafter. The second disc has a similar spectrum, but it's better largely because of his guests. Blake and Wendholt, both label veterans, are at ease with Grant's modern hard bop. The model here is Horace Silver, who writes a liner-note, but the swing is tauter and Grant's quotations tend to be more camouflaged than the old namedropper's. 'Don't Stray' and 'Struttin' To Tangiers' are excellent, but the highlight is a soulful, gospelly reading of 'Come Sunday'.

(*) Smokin' Java Lair Hill 1 Grant; Donald Harrison (as); Joe Locke (vib); Bob Stata (b); Brian Blade (d). 00.

This is how he should be heard, live and with a thoughtfully soulful group. Apart from 'Spring Skylight' and the title-track, all the tunes are by other hands. Gordon Jenkins's 'Goodbye' is magnificent and Joe Locke's intro to the classic 'If I Should Lose You' takes it into a different realm. Locke's own 'Slander' has a nice rhythmic and harmonic twist. The opening 'Little Jimmy Fiddler' establishes the kind of groove you'd expect from a Horace Silver record and Grant and Harrison establish a rapport that lasts for the whole album.

 Truth And Reconciliation Origin 82477 Grant; Steve Wilson (ss, as); Bill Frisell, Adam Rogers (g); Joe Locke (vib); John Patitucci (b); Brian Blade (d). 11 & 12/05.

This is too long, and Grant's move into a kind of pop/soul/jazz crossover isn't entirely easy. However, one senses the passion behind the opening 'Reconciliation', which is enough to forgive him the Sheryl Crow cover later. A perfect example of a single album struggling to get away from a pointless double.

Also, in brief:

 Spirit Lair Hill 005. 8/04.

A bold attempt at something new, but it stumbles on pointless eclecticism.

Stéphane Grappelli (1908–97)

VIOLIN

Born in Paris and largely self-taught; his approach to jazz violin was both idiomatic and idiosyncratic. Not so much the opposite to Django Reinhardt as his milder twin; Stéphane's affability masked an iron will and torrid personality. A typical Grappelli line is fast, fleet and accurate, but with darker overtones.

* Grappelli Story Verve 515807-2 2CD Grappelli; Django Reinhardt, Philip Catherine, Larry Coryell, Pierre Cavalli, Diz Disley, Leo Petit, Roger Chaput, René Duchaussoir , Joe Deniz, Dave Wilkins, Alan Hodgkiss, Ike Isaacs, Eugène Vées , Jack Llewellyn, Sid Jacobson, Chappie D'Amato (g); Stan Andrews (t, vn); Bill Shakespeare (t); Frank Weir (cl); Dennis Moonan (cl, ts, vla); Stanley Andrews (vn); Harry Chapman (hp); Reg Conroy, Roy Marsh, Michel Hausser (vib); Frank Baron, Raymond Fol, Charlie Pude, George Shearing, Yorke De Sousa, Marc Hemmeler, Maurice Vander (p); George Gibbs, Hank Hobson, Joe Nussbaum, George Senior, Louis Vola, Benoît Quersin , Guy Pedersen, Lennie Bush, Coleridge Goode, Pierre Michelot, Isla Eckinger, Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen , Eberhard Weber (b); Arthur Young (novachord); Tony Spurgin, Dave Fullerton, Kenny Clarke, Rusty Jones, Alan Levitt, Jack Jacobson, Daniel Humair, Jean-Baptiste Reilles, Jean-Louis Viale, John Spooner (d); Beryl Davis (v); orchestra conducted by Michel Legrand. 1/38–5/92.

 Stéphane Grappelli 1935–1940 Classics 708 Similar to above. 35–40.

 Stéphane's Tune: Original Recordings, 1938–1942 Naxos Jazz Legends 8.120570 Similar to above. 38–42.

(*) Stéphane Grappelli 1941–1943 Classics 779 Similar to above. 41–43.

(*) Special Stéphane Grappelli, 1947–1961 Jazz Time 794481 Grappelli; Joseph Reinhardt, Roger Chaput, Henri Crolla, Jimmy Gourley, Georges Megalos (g); Jack Dieval (p); Pierre Spiers (hp); Pierre Michelot, Benoît Quersin , Emmanuel Soudieux (b); Armand Molinetti, Baptiste Reilles (d). 10/47–3/61.

(*) Jazz Masters 11: Stéphane Grappelli Verve 516758-2 As above, except add Alex Riel (d). 9/66–5/92.

Grappelli's association with Django Reinhardt and the Quintet Du Hot Club De France is one of the legendary stories of jazz. It was Grappelli's pleasure and burden to carry that legend forward into one decade after another, linked by a mystical bond to a man who, by all accounts, made his life extremely difficult; Stéphane talked often about Django's 'monkey business'. Grappelli's limber, graceful style is so familiar that it hardly needs to be described. The Classics volumes do their usual good job of dotting i's and crossing t's without worrying too much about the quality of recording or transfer, and there can be no better way of familiarizing oneself with that legacy than the Verve double-CD set, which covers everything from the prewar years to a high-budget recording session with Michel Legrand in 1992, Grappelli's 85th year. It's almost pointless to rehearse the treasures within: 'Nuages', 'Body And Soul', 'Fascinating Rhythm', the 'Nocturne' with Django. There is nothing that will disappoint.

The Jazz Masters compilation is a quicker fix, but an acceptable one, with the label's usual scrupulous detailing of sessions. The Jazz Time Special is an excellent and well-transferred sampler of non-Django material, covering the period from their postwar reunion to the guitarist's death in 1953 and beyond. Half a dozen tracks locate Grappelli in harpist Spiers's fine, standards-based quartet. Earlier sets find him alongside the excellent pianist Dieval, yielding a lovely 'The World Is Waiting For The Sunrise', and the guitarist Henri Crolla, who plays in an idiom intriguingly removed from Django's. A single track from the immediately postwar Hot Four, which included Hot Club veterans Chaput and Django's brother, Joseph Reinhardt, marks it unmistakably as Grappelli's band, with a less ambitious improvisatory focus than the great original. 'Tea For Two' is a charmingly slight piano solo from Grappelli.

(*) Jazz In Paris: Improvisations Emarcy 549 242 2 Grappelli; Maurice Vander (p, hpd); Pierre Michelot (b); Baptiste Reilles (d). 2 & 4/56.

No one belongs more securely in Emarcy's Jazz In Paris series than Stéphane, and this lively set, originally released on Barclay, is textbook Grappelli. Right from the opening 'The Lady Is A Tramp' you suspect he's going to stick very closely to the melody and show his stuff merely by playing it very fast. Once he's into his solo, though, it's a very different matter: daring harmonic modulations, whole countermelodies and endless grace notes – typical post-Hot Club stuff. He does the same thing on 'A Nightingale Sang In Berkeley Square'. Michelot and Vander (who doubles harpsichord on 'Someone To Watch Over Me') keep the accompaniment from becoming too obvious, and a word for the colourful Mac Kac Reilles, not the greatest drummer in the world – or even Paris – but a character and practical joker who would have put even that arch-trickster violinist Joe Venuti in the shade.

(*) Violins No End Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 890 Grappelli; Stuff Smith (vn); Oscar Peterson (p); Herb Ellis (g); Ray Brown (b); Jo Jones (d). 5/57.
How different they sound, these two masters of jazz fiddle. Grappelli is all stratocirrus and clear skies; Smith always carries within his line a hint of storms to come. They don't break out on this occasion, but the hint of friendly threat and the insouciance that greets it from the other side of the stage is what makes this such an appealing record. Peterson gets less than his usual due of the limelight and seems happy to do accompanying duties, firing off fewer notes than usual and digging into his memories of stride and blues playing here and there with a procession of mischievous quotes that piano fans can have fun identifying.

 I Hear Music RCA Victor 74321 79624 2 Grappelli; Marc Hemmeler (p, hpd); Jack Sewing (b); Kenny Clarke (d, p). 12/70.
The interesting thing about this one is that Grappelli, Hemmeler and Kenny Clarke all take a turn at the piano. The drummer shows himself to be no mean accompanist on 'Body And Soul' and Stéphane spells the useful Hemmeler on a couple of other cuts, including 'Flower For Kenny', where the pianist shifts to organ. It's a curious set in other ways, faintly mournful for all the affability and quite dark in tonality. 'Danny Boy' (strictly the 'Londonderry Air') and the original 'Coltrane' put that mood in context, but you hear it too on 'Smoke Gets In Your Eyes' and 'Body And Soul'. The recording levels are quite high and the remastering very good, so there's a lot of detail in the sound and a real sense of four men communicating intuitively and intimately.

 Live At Carnegie Hall / June Night Collectables 6658 Grappelli; Diz Disley, John Etheridge (g); Brian Torff (b). 4/78.
Originally on Sony, this has been picked up by Collectables, who've so far been restrained where Grappelli is concerned. Disley and Etheridge gave him a mellow but still propulsive accompaniment and Stéphane sounds in very good form for this blue-chip gig. The other album is by fellow fiddler Svend Asmussen.

 London Meeting Black & Blue 852 Grappelli; Sir Roland Hanna, Hank Jones (p); Bucky Pizzarelli (g); George Duvivier, Jimmy Woode (b); Alan Dawson, Oliver Jackson (d). 7/78, 7/79.
 Sweet Chorus Black & Blue 900 As above. N.D.
The main event here is Grappelli's London encounter with Hank Jones, as elegant a piano accompanist as he ever found, and one of the most challenging as well. It's interesting to hear how Jones cranks up the speed of his delivery to suit Grappelli's normal onrush, building up 16th and 32nd notes in places where you'd normally expect him to play much more spaciously. The other material is good, and the second disc fills out the Hanna session, but it's Stéphane and Hank who carry the day here and fully merit their joint billing.

(*) Young Django MPS 815672 Grappelli; Philip Catherine, Larry Coryell (g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b). 1/79.
This is such a gift of a pairing that it's almost a surprise it works so well. Coryell is mannered and rather pretentious in places, but Catherine has this repertoire in his bloodstream and responds to the situation with alacrity, purring beautiful streams of notes and soft, chiming chords. The recording is very good indeed, but it might have been better expended on a slightly more adventurous programme of material.

 Duet Black & Blue 916 Grappelli; Bucky Pizzarelli (g). 7/79.
Pizzarelli was one of Stéphane's most loyal accompanists, able to do what Martin Taylor did later and find space for himself round the violin. There are lots of alternate takes on this reissue, and they're all very different and inventive, but it would require a devoted Grappelli fan to wade through them more than once in a while.

[illegible]

* Tivoli Gardens, Copenhagen, Denmark
Original Jazz Classics OJC 441 Grappelli; Joe Pass (g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b). 7/79.
A superb set, marred only slightly by variable sound. Grappelli's interpretations of 'Paper Moon', 'I Can't Get Started', 'I'll Remember April', 'Crazy Rhythm', 'How Deep Is The Ocean?', 'Let's Fall In Love' and 'I Get A Kick Out Of You' reaffirm his genius as an improviser and also his ability to counter slightly saccharine themes with the right hint of tartness. Pass, who occasionally errs on the side of sweetness, plays beautifully, and NHOP is, as always, both monumental and delicate.

(*) Vintage Grappelli Concord CCD 4977 2CD Grappelli; John Etheridge, Mike Gari, Martin Taylor (g); Jack Sewing (b). 9/80, 7/81.
Taylor has been Grappelli's most sympathetic latter-day collaborator, and they complement each other near-perfectly on these live sets, originally separately issued in 1981 as At The Winery and Vintage 1981. Taylor's amplified sound adds a little sting to Grappelli's playing, which is always more robust live than in an acoustically 'dead' and feedback-free studio situation. Though perhaps better known as a jazz-rock player, Etheridge also fits in well on At The Winery, with a different time-feel.

 Live At The Cambridge Folk Festival: The BBC Sessions Varese 061059 Grappelli; Diz Disley, Marc Fosset, Martin Taylor (g); Patrice Caratini, Dave Etheridge (b). 83, 73.
This valuable set consists mainly of a group performance from 1983 with Taylor on guitar. The rest comes from a decade earlier and is at best not much more than filler: the tape runs out during 'I Can't Give You Anything But Love'!

The Cambridge sound is pretty good. Taylor is well recorded, though there are a few glitches in the registration of Stéphane, which may be why these tapes have not surfaced before now. Oddly, the label misidentifies Django's 'Are You In The Mood?' as the quite different and unrelated 'I'm In The Mood For Love'. Stéphane announces the song to the audience, so maybe someone at Varese wasn't listening. The songs are mostly brief, the tempos brisk and sometimes hurried. 'Them There Eyes' and 'Honeysuckle Rose' are excellent, but it's Taylor's deft work on the opening 'Cheek To Cheek' and an extended 'Love For Sale' that really catches the ear.

 One On One Milestone M 9181 Grappelli; McCoy Tyner (p). 4/90.
The outwardly improbable duo with McCoy Tyner works astonishingly well, including Coltrane's 'Mr P.C.' and the Coltrane-associated 'I Want To Talk About You', alongside more familiar repertoire like 'I Got Rhythm' and 'St Louis Blues'. Ever the romantic stylist, Tyner plays with impeccable taste, never losing contact with the basic structure of a tune. Recommended.

(*) Stéphane Grappelli: 1992 Live Birdology FDM 370062 Grappelli; Philip Catherine, Marc Fosset (g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b). 3/92.

And so it went on, seemingly unstoppable. Grappelli's association with Catherine became, remarkably, of longer standing than that with Reinhardt and, as one might expect, their understanding is considerable. This is a joyous disc, recorded in concert at Colombes. 'Oh, Lady Be Good' has the light bounce and unaffected grace that you'd expect, but there are unprecedented depths to 'Blues For Django And Stéphane', which Catherine brought forward for the session. For a live recording, the sound is very good indeed, though there are moments when Grappelli almost sounds detuned: a tape problem? Heat?

* Reunion Linn AKH 022 Grappelli; Martin Taylor (g). 1/93.
One of the happiest new partnerships of more recent years was with the brilliant young British guitarist Taylor, whose solo career was taking off at the time of this utterly enjoyable record. It has the relaxed feel of something put down between lunch and dinner, but there is a steely precision behind the guitarist's relaxed mien and Grappelli is, of course, no pushover. 'Drop Me Off At Harlem' and 'La Dame Du Lac' are the most taxing workouts, but 'Paper Moon' takes the biscuit for sheer charm, if charm is indeed rewarded with biscuits.

* Flamingo Dreyfus FDM 36580 Grappelli; Michel Petrucciani (p); George Mraz (b); Roy Haynes (d). 6/95.
If at first glance it seems a startling engagement, it is immediately clear that these are players ideally suited to his light, swinging approach. Haynes has the most delicate touch of all the bebop drummers and in recent years has shown how much he responds to song-settings. Mraz almost defines modern swing bass, adding his own counterlines under Petrucciani, who seems to be enjoying himself hugely. Rightly, for the most part they stick to standard material. 'Misty' is the closest it all comes to hokiness, but it is done with such open-hearted delight and lack of self-consciousness that it runs no very serious risks. 'I Can't Get Started' and 'I Got Rhythm' between them demonstrate a good change of pace, with Haynes and Petrucciani seeming to dictate the rhythmic course within each track, so that the former has an almost symphonic logic and structure.

 Live At The Blue Note Telarc CD 83397 Grappelli; Bucky Pizzarelli, John Pizzarelli (g); Jon Burr (b). 10/95.
Two years away from the end, Grappelli was as much institution as he was musician. Or at least that's what many people thought when they went to see him. Once they heard him, though, any such distinction collapsed. He plays here with the same clamped-jaw concentration and 'effortless' agility he'd brought to his work for more than 50 years. The material is predictable enough: 'All God's Chillun Got Rhythm', 'I Got Rhythm', 'Nuages', and then, when Bucky's son joins them on stage for the final three numbers, they indulge in some fancy work on 'Lady Be Good', 'Sweet Georgia Brown' and a whole medley of well-loved standards. It's a lovely night for Grappelli collectors.

(*) Celebrating Grappelli Linn AKD 094 Grappelli; Gerard Presencer (t, flhn); Jack Emblow (acc); John Goldie, Martin Taylor (g); Terry Gregory (b); Claire Martin (v). 93, 96.
A posthumous tribute drawn from Reunion and from Martin Taylor's Spirit Of Django record, Years Apart. As a souvenir of the guitarist's long and happy association with Grappelli, it's hard to beat: a relaxed, swinging 50 minutes that manage to seem very much shorter. Anyone who has the original albums won't find it very useful, but it's a nicely judged selection of the best of both. Grappelli's technique stands out all the more for the miracle that it was in younger company like this. There is even a moment on 'Jive At Five', when he makes a mistake and instantly turns the improvised mend to advantage. The celebration closes with 'Manoir De Mes Rêves'.

Also, in brief:

(*) Le Toit De Paris RCA 88717. 69.
A so-so date from when Stéphane was being groomed for stardom, with the cachet of having worked with the legendary Django.

 Live At Corby Festival Hall Storyville 8345. 5/75.
'Not jazz,' the promoters muttered; and Grappelli's ultimately successful British tour made a round of folk clubs and small theatres.

 Jazz In Paris: Plays Cole Porter Emarcy 014 061 2. 5/75, 2/76.
Like Porter, Grappelli balanced a surface amiability with an iron will and a volcanic temperament. Some of the nastiness and amoral chill of these songs comes across on this set.

 Live In Dublin, Ohio Starburst 1014. N.D.
A most unexpected line-up, but a thoroughly entertaining set, and interesting to hear Stéphane in the company of men like Louie Bellson (d) and Phil Woods (as).

 Live In San Francisco / (*) Live Storyville 8297 / Warner Brothers 3550. 82.
This group featured two mandolinists, who make a pretty wretched sound. But Disley and Taylor are there on the first to see fair play done.

(*) Live Justin Time 8469. 94.
A disappointing issue, largely because the sound is so uninviting and boxy.

 Cosmopolite Concert Hot Club 101. 96.
Attractive trio set with a completely predictable set-list.

Lou Grassi (born 1947)

DRUMS

He runs multiple projects in freebop and beyond.

 POgressions Cadence CJR 1062 Grassi; Herb Robertson (c); Steve Swell (tb); Perry Robinson (cl); Burton Greene (p); Wilber Morris (b). N.D.
 Mo' Po CIMP 155 Grassi; Herb Robertson (c, t); Steve Swell (tb); Perry Robinson (cl, oc); Wilber Morris (b). 7/97.
 PoZest CIMP 207 Grassi; Paul Smoker (t); Steve Swell (tb); Perry Robinson (cl, oc); Marshall Allen (as); Wilber Morris (b). 5/99.
 The Joy Of Being CIMP 227 As above, except omit Allen; add Joseph Jarman (as, f). 6/00.
 ComPOsed CIMP 262 Grassi; Paul Smoker (t); Art Baron (tb, f, oc, didjeridu); Perry Robinson (cl, oc); John Tchicai (ts, bcl, f); Wilber Morris (b). 1/02.
 Avanti Galoppi CIMP 313 Grassi; Herb Robertson (t, c, flhn); Ron Brown (as); Ken Filiano (b). 6/04.
(*) Infinite Potential CIMP 344 Grassi; Herb Robertson (t, flhn); David Taylor (btb); Perry Robinson (cl, oc); Adam Lane (b). 9/05.
Grassi's various groups – Saxtet, PoBand and quartet – play with great spirit, but the results are mixed, right from he inaugural POgressions, which now seems a historical document. The PoBand fares better than the Saxtet debut (see 'in brief', below), and while the two sessions with star guests Allen and Jarman have their moments, the best of the three might be Mo' Po. 'Air Play' and 'Train Ride' are inventive long-form improvisations which mix well around the three-horn front line. While we always enjoy Smoker's playing, it's a pity that Robertson has moved on for the moment.

Allen has amazing energy for a 75-year-old, but the problem with both PoZest and The Joy Of Being is the over-abundance of horns. The two sextets throw out too many lines, and the music can be tiring to follow in a piece like the enormous 'Bird Symphony' (PoZest, almost 33 minutes). The blues which follows is welcome relief, but you feel that the band's merely guying the form. Jarman arrives like an honoured guest, and when he gets some space on alto ('Airplay') his old mastery is soon manifest.

The slightly reshuffled PoBand for ComPOsed brings in Baron for Swell and this time the star cameo is from Tchicai, who also contributed all of the material bar two free pieces. His alfresco melodies and sober presence (Smoker's the most imposing soloist) confer a certain dignity on what still sounds like a ragtag band; too much time noodling on didjeridu and ocarina.

Avanti Galoppi unveils another line-up, the first time Robertson and Brown had played together. They trade sour-sweet lines, and though the tunes are mostly just props for the improvising, their interaction is a pleasure. Filiano is as hard to hear as ever on a CIMP date; Grassi makes his customary noise. Infinite Potential is more arresting. Taylor's big sound is as welcome as sunshine and Robinson, who was slightly eclipsed by Tchicai on the earlier record, gets more room to shine here as the sole reed. Grassi's been doing this for a while: what's he after?

Also, in brief:

() Quick Wits CIMP 123. 8/96.
An unpromising start: long and shapeless.

() Neo Neo CIMP 201. 4/99.
Subdued for much of the way, interesting writing getting an underbaked reading.

Frank Gratkowski (born 1963)

ALTO SAXOPHONE, CLARINET, BASS AND CONTRABASS CLARINETS

Born in Hamburg, he's a composer who's also explored fiery free improvisation.

 Gestalten Jazz Haus Musik 83 Gratkowski; Dieter Manderscheid (b); Gerry Hemingway (d). 95.
 Quicksand Meniscus 007 Gratkowski; George Graewe (p); Paul Lovens (d, perc). 11/00.
Though Gratkowski has done some of his most effective work in an entirely improvised context, he is best considered a free-jazz composer. The earlier of these albums places the emphasis squarely on group interplay and it is the four collective pieces which stand out most strongly. Hemingway's typically detailed approach, halfway between timekeeping and a lead voice, gives the music its dynamism. By contrast, Manderscheid is less compelling but he is a strong instrumentalist who delivers interesting ideas at a steadier pace. Gratkowski's raw alto sound is reminiscent of Dolphy and, in freer sections, of Peter Brötzmann as well. The group that made Quicksand is more obviously melodic and one striking dimension of the music here is its obvious structure. 'Second Coming' is a mournful theme that explores dissonance very carefully.

 Kollaps Red Toucan 9317 Gratkowski; Wolter Wierbos (tb); Dieter Manderscheid (b); Gerry Hemingway (d). 5/01.
One of the best free-jazz records of recent times. 'Annaherungen' has to reappear on record a little later, a boiling, joyous idea that fizzes with thoughtful procedures and some delightfully unfettered playing. 'De Profundis' again casts the saxophonist as a grievous angel, full of lament and some bitterness. The addition of Wierbos, who has a great empathy with Hemingway in particular, was a master-stroke. His full, vocalized sound is a strong foil to Gratkowski's eldritch wailing.

(*) GratHovOx Nuscope 1012 Gratkowski; Fred Van Hove (p); Tony Oxley (d, elec). 11/00.
Gratkowski continued to experiment with his favourite and most successful format. The radio broadcast preserved on GratHovOx is one of his best appearances on record. Oxley's pioneering integration of electronics is strongly but subtly in evidence here, while Van Hove is an undersung master. Where Graewe continually hints at jazz themes, even occasionally standards, Van Hove seems to fire off instant compositions at quantum speed. He also brings his accordion along and deploys it brilliantly on 'Vorspiel/Foreplay'. Gratkowski has switched his loyalties very largely to the clarinets, even finding room for some of the more subterranean accents of the contrabass clarinet. His alto makes only a single appearance, on 'Tranches/Trenches'.

(*) Facio Leo CD LR 398 Gratkowski; Wolter Wierbos (tb); Dieter Manderschied (b); Gerry Hemingway (d). 5/03.
 Loft Exile V Leo CD LR 410/411 2CD As above, except add Herb Robertson (t); Tobias Delius (ts, cl); Wilbert De Joode (b); Michael Vatcher (d). 6/03.
This represents a consolidation of two Gratkowski groups. Facio's probably the more satisfying all round, a tensely lyrical performance that's more free jazz than free music. Loft Exile V has something of both line-ups, though Delius only appears on the second of the two discs. The first consists of a single performance called 'The Morning Beckons', which touches on an impressive range of musical idioms in its hour-plus duration. The music was recorded at Moers and in Cologne to celebrate Gratkowski's 40th birthday and it sees him confirming a growing reputation as one of the most vivid and effortlessly eclectic musicians on the free-jazz scene. His own playing is crisply adventurous. There are no throwaway gestures and there is no pointless grandstanding. Where the two brass-players tend to favour more or less conventional intonation, the reedmen are more radical in their deconstructions and it is often difficult to tell precisely what is being played. No problem with that, though, when the resulting music is so sharply focused. 'And The Mystery Sang Alive', one of the two long improvisations on the second disc, is almost good enough to lead off a separate release. Fantastic musicianship all round and sharp concert recording that preserves the atmosphere without interrupting the flow.

(*) Triskaidekaphonia Leo CD LR 461 Gratkowski; Melvyn Poore (tba, euph); Thomas Lehn (syn). 2/04.
A wonderful record that explores a rich palette of sound. Gratkowski sticks to clarinets and their woody timbre, splintering here and there, reduced to aural matchwood on occasion, blends with Poore's brass emulsions and Lehn's increasingly individual work on analogue synthesizer. The opening piece is unrelievedly long – perhaps they were just getting the measure of the Loft in Cologne – but the rest are deeply satisfying.

(*) Celebrations Leo CD LR 485 Gratkowski; Herb Robertson (t, c); Simon Nabatov (p, e-bow, cracklebox); Dieter Manderschied (b). 1/06.

From the same venue, this emerges out of near-silence – nothing much happens for the first two minutes – to develop into a deliriously busy but never overcooked group improvisation that finds Robertson at his most controlled and thoughtful and Nabatov a Buddha-like master of space and tiny gestures.

Also, in brief:

 Arrears Cactus RT9320. 01.
With George Graewe (p) and John Lindberg (b). This would be fine were the agenda not so shrouded.

(*) Spectral Reflections Leo CDLR 374. 02.
The same line-up as Kollaps, this only fails to live up to its predecessor in that the element of surprise has been lost.

 The Voice Imitator Balance Point Acoustics bpa 006. 10/02.
With a West Coast group and a fine example of his free playing.

Mel Graves

DOUBLE BASS

A stalwart of the little-documented Californian post-bop scene, he teaches at Sonoma State University.

(*) Ear Shot Mutable 17510-2 Graves; Pete Estabrook (t); Al Bent (tb); Harvey Wainapel (ts); Bob Afifi (f); Randy Vincent (g); George Marsh (d). 6/02.
Graves expresses his thanks to the musicians who performed 'this rather difficult music', but compared to some of the avant-garde stuff Mutable puts out this is an easy-going tonic. The bassist writes abstruse but often fetchingly melodious structures that these unfamiliar players approach with zest and competence, unbeholden to cliché. A piece such as the swinging 'Revisiting Higgins' has a Warne Marsh-like astringency, and the ballad 'Missing You' is comparably tight and wasteless while touching on a streak of unsentimental lyricism. Fine evidence that players working away from any jazz limelight can prove the durability of the idiom.

Milford Graves (born 1941)

DRUMS, PERCUSSION

He studied Indian percussion and pioneered solo improvised performance in the avant-garde of the '60s. Derek Bailey identified him as one of the very few musicians really playing 'free jazz'.

(*) Meditation Among Us Kitty 9022 Graves; Toshinori Kondo (t); Kaoru Abe (as); Motoharu Yoshizawa (b); Toshio Tsuchitori (d, p). 77.
Some legendary names here, but the music scarcely stands up to the billing. Again very short – almost as short as the ESP below – which might be accounted a mercy, as Kondo and Abe squall round Graves's tom-tom mottos. His time-feel is extraordinary, but this strongly suggests why he fares better in solo situations, though you do see what Bailey meant about Graves's free-jazz aesthetic.

 Grand Unification Tzadik TZ7030 Graves (d, perc, v solo). 2/98.
(*) Stories Tzadik TZ7062 As above. 10/00.
Graves has recently been taken up by John Zorn's eclectic label and for almost the first time in a long career can be heard clearly and with definition. The eight items on Grand Unification range from epic statements that combine percussion with chanting to relatively brief improvisations which all, curiously, come in at almost exactly the same duration, as if Graves had set himself a certain time-frame.These are much more effective than 'Gathering', 'Decisive Moments' and 'Intuitive Transformations', which may temper nostalgia for the good old days with the feeling that the good old days might have been a tad self-indulgent.

The second Tzadik release culminates in a half-hour performance – 'Evolving Pathways' – which is one of the most powerful statements the drummer has yet to make on record. Here, and throughout this fine record, he seems beyond genre, working in an area that transcends jazz percussion. Again, he chants, murmurs spells and moves between a bewildering array of percussion instruments. The rest of the record is very good and very well recorded again, but it is that last track (as long as the whole ESP LP!) which makes it. Graves has at last created a work the equal of his colossal talent.

Also, in brief:

 Milford Graves Percussion Ensemble ESP 1015. 7/65.
A disappointing reissue of a very brief duo set with Sonny Morgan.

(*) 50² Tzadik 5002. 9/03.
Duos with John Zorn (as) to mark the label boss's 50th birthday.

Wardell Gray (1921–55)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Born in Oklahoma but grew up in Detroit. His professional breakthrough was with Earl Hines, but he is best remembered for The Chase with Dexter Gordon. He maintained a foot in pre-bop idiom but died young, in controversial circumstances.

* Memorial: Volume 1 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 050 Gray; Frank Morgan (as); Sonny Clark, Al Haig, Phil Hill (p); Teddy Charles (vib); Dick Nivison, Tommy Potter, Johnny Richardson (b); Roy Haynes, Lawrence Marable, Art Mardigan (d). 11/49, 4/50, 2/53.
* Memorial: Volume 2 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 051 Gray; Art Farmer, Clark Terry (t); Sonny Criss (as); Dexter Gordon (ts); Jimmy Bunn, Hampton Hawes (p); Harper Crosby, Billy Hadnott (b); Lawrence Marable, Chuck Thompson (d); Robert Collier (perc). 8/50, 1/52.
 The Chase And The Steeplechase Universal 9061 Gray; Conte Candoli (t); Dexter Gordon (ts); Tony Scott (cl); Bobby Tucker (p); Dick Katz (p); Don Bagley, Milt Hinton (b); Sid Bulkin, Chico Hamilton (d). 2/52, 7/53.
Like his friend and collaborator Dexter Gordon, Wardell Gray often had to look to Europe for recognition. His first postwar recordings were not released in the United States. There were not to be very many more, for Gray died in 1955, perhaps killed by drug-dealers, perhaps not. The shadow cast by Bird's passing, three months before, largely shrouded Gray's untimely departure. Unlike Gordon, Gray was less than wholly convinced by orthodox bebop, and he continued to explore the late-swing style of Lester Young.

The two-volume Memorial remains the best representation of his gifts. The earliest of the sessions is a quartet consisting of Haig, Potter and Haynes, and it includes 'Twisted', a wry blues later vocalized by Annie Ross, whose version has tended to overshadow the original. It's a perfect place to gauge Gray's Prez-influenced style and his softly angular approach to the changes. The CDs include some irrelevant alternative takes. Too often Gray tries to duplicate what he feels are successful ideas rather than wiping the slate clean and trying again from scratch. The best of the rest is a 1952 session with Hawes and Farmer, who do interesting things with 'Farmer's Market' and that Parker shibboleth, 'Lover Man'. The second volume is also notable for the first recorded performances by Frank Morgan, who copied not just Bird's articulation but also some of his offstage habits and found himself in San Quentin for his pains.

